fin five feet long. He fights the seal and chases him along the land, which permits the sedentary fishing of seal which would pass at a distance, were he not pursued by the meniques. To the north and south of this bay are islands and islets along the land, and we anchored between these islands and the land in twenty fathoms of water. We then put a boat to sea, and many of our crew landed on a steep island at the summit of which they kindled a fire with peat. Having seen Esquimaux approaching in six canoes and three boats, our men jumped into the boat and came on board crying out to us to weigh anchor and to moor further from the shore so as to be out of reach of the arrows of the Esquimaux. Having shifted our anchorage, we then put our artillery in readiness and prepared our arms in order to be always on the defensive in case of an attack, and to avoid being taken by surprise during the night. Not venturing to board us, the said Esquimaux landed on a neighbouring island where they uttered cries, raising their oars and saying in their jargon, Tout Camara Troquo balena, non Characo, which means. No war, I am your comrade, let us trade whale. As we had a speaking-trumpet on board, we took it to answer them in the same terms. Three Esquimaux then jumped into their canoes and came on aboard where they showed us great affection. I remarked that the

Et de nos armes Les intimidoit jusqu'a trembler de tout Leur corps par la peur qu'ils en avoient. Et jusqu'a saigner du nez naturellement Sans se donner aucun coup, ce qui m'a paru fort singulier. Je leur ay fait quelques présens dont ils ont paru flattés, Et en retour ils m'ont donné quelques barbes de baleine, avec de Leurs habillemens de Loup marin qui ne sont d'aucun prix, Et que J'ay accepté seulement pour ne pas paroistre rebuter Leurs presens apres quoy ils ont descendus dans leurs Canots; Comme ils s'Eloignoient du bord Je leur ay fait tirer quelques coups de fusils, ce qui auroit parus le allarmer, Et Leur auroit fait faire des cris comme pour nous demander grace.

5 JUILLET 1743.

Après être sorti de La baye des Meniques nous aurions fait environ Sept Lieues de Caps Le Long de la d^e Coste des Eskimaux. Ensuite Les vents contraires s'étant déclaré nous aurions été contraints de Chercher havre dans une autre baye d'Environ un Lieue de Large dans son Entrée Sur plusieurs Lieues de profondeur, dans laquelle baye de gros navires peuvent havrer à l'abri de tous les vents ; au Nord Et au Sud de Laquelle baye il y a des Isles et Ilots avant de mouiller les vents s'étant rangés à L'est nous avons essayé de Courir La bordée pour sortir de La d^e baye. Et en même tems que les vents nous refusoient, nous aurions aperçus neuf Canots Eskimaux, Et une Chaloupe ou il ne nous a paru que des femmes, Et des enfans pour la manoeuvrer : de Crainte de Surprise nous aurions préparé nos armes neuf canots Eskimaux ayant gagné Le bord. L'un d'entre eux nous auroit fait Entendre qu'il se nommait Le Capitaine hapé, Lequel voyant que nous ne pouvions sortir de La Baye à cause des vents contraires, s'offrit de nous presence of our small artillery and of our arms frightened them to such a degree that all their bodies were trembling for fear of them and to such an extent that they naturally bled from the nose without striking themselves, which I found very queer. I had some gifts distributed to them, which seemed to please them, and in return they gave me whale fins, together with some of their seal clothing which is valueless, and which I accepted only to avoid appearing to refuse their gifts. They then embarked in their canoes. As they were leaving, I had a few rifle shots fired, which appeared to frighten them and caused them to cry as if asking for mercy.

5 JULY, 1743.

Having left baye des meniques, we sailed about seven leagues along the Esquimaux coast. Then contrary winds having set in, we were compelled to seek shelter in another bay about one league wide at its entrance by several leagues long, in which large vessels can obtain shelter from all winds ; To the north and south of it are islands and islets. Before anchoring, the wind having veered to the east, we tried to tack about to leave this bay. And, at the same time, as the wind decreased, we saw nine canoes of Esquimaux and a boat which appeared to us to be paddled by only women and children. Fearing an attack, we had our arms in readiness, nine canoes of Esquimaux having reached the vessel. One of them gave us to understand that his name was Captain Hapé, and, seeing that we could not leave the bay on account of a contrary wind, he montrer un mouillage pour cela s'etant mis dans son canot, Et ayant marché devant nous pour nous montrer la route, il nous auroit conduit dans le fond de la baye pour nous montrer Le mouillage ou nous aurions resté jusqu'au Lendemain. Ensuite Le Capitaine hapé étant monté a bord pour rejoindre les liens, En reconnoissance du bon servi ce qu'il nous auroit rendu, je luy auroit fait quelques presens Et aux autres Sauvages de sa troupe, qui nous, ont témoigné bien de L'amitié, Et nous ont donné quelques barbes de baleine, nous avons nommé la baye d'hapé du nom de ce Capitaine Eskimaux.

Les vents etant de la part du sud-ouest nous avons apareillé sur Les quatre heures du matin. Comme nous etions à la voile on a vû trois Chaloupes d'Eskimaux avec quelques canots de ces barbares dont il n'y a eu qu'un seul canot qui ait pû Le bord, Les autres n'ayant pu nous joindre ayant fait conoitre a cet Eskimaux notre route, il c'est offert de nous conduire. pour cet effet ayant pris le gouvernail, il lions a piloté fort bien pendant plus de deux heures au Sortir de la baye d'hapé, Et il nous a ainsy conduit pendant quatre Lieues de Caps escarpés jusqu'a L'Entrée d'une autre baye qui a une Lieue d'ouverture à son entrée Et plusieurs lieues de profondeur, dans laquelle baye il nous auroit fait Entendre que Le Capitaine Araby etoit mouillé, Et que c'estoit la ou demeuroit Le Capitaine Amargo autre chef des Eskimaux, ce qui nous auroit fait porter son nom a cette baye. Le d' Eskimaux notre Pilote seroit retourné à terre, Et nous auroit abandonné voyant que nous ne voulions pas Entrer jusqu'au fond de la have ou il voulait nous conduire. au mesme tems offered to show us an anchorage. Having embarked in his canoe and proceeded ahead to indicate the course, he led us to the bottom of the bay to show us the anchorage. There we remained until the day after. Captain Hapé having then gone on board to join his companions, as an acknowledgment of the good service he had rendered us, I gave him a few gifts, and some to the other Indians of his troop, who expressed great friendship for us and gave us whale fins. We named this bay after the name of this Esquimaux captain.

The wind blowing from south-west, we sailed about four o'clock in the morning. As we were under sail, we saw three Esquimaux boats and a few canoes of these barbarians, only one canoe of which could reach our vessel. The others having been unable to do so and having indicated our course to that Esquimaux, he offered to pilot us. Having taken the helm, he piloted us very well for more than two hours after leaving Hapé bay, and he piloted us for a distance of four leagues past steep bluffs to the entrance of another bay of one league width at its entrance by many leagues in depth, in which bay he gave us to understand that Captain Araby was anchored and that there lived Captain Amargo, another Esquimaux chief, which caused us to name this bay after him. Our Esquimaux pilot, returned to shore and left us, seeing that we would not proceed to the bottom of the bay where he had intended to lead us. At the same time, we recognized the vessel of the said Araby, which was sailing to leave the bay. And having waited for him, to speak to him, he

nous aurions reconnu Le bâtiment du d^t Araby qui faisoit voile pour sortir de la baye, Et L'ayant attendu pour luy parler, il nous auroit dit que dans la nuit il Seroit venu à Son bord neuf Canots Eskimaux, Et qu'il auroit vû vingt-deux Chaloupes mais que Le grand nombre de ces barbares L'auroit Empesché de traiter : ce qui est contraire à ce que nous auroit fait Entendre L'Eskimaux notre Pilote, En disant que Le Capitaine Araby avoit traité de La baleine avec Le Capitaine Amargo. Le d^t Araby auroit ajouté que dans cette baye etoit La troupe d'Amargo Capitaine Eskimaux, que ces barbares etoient en grand nombre, Et qu'il ne nous conseilloit pas d'aler plus loin, vu que nous trouverions à qui parler Le Long de la Coste à quoy je luy aurois fait reponse que nous avions des armes pour nous deffendre. Comme Le d^t bâtiment en société appartenant aux S^{rs} Martel de Brouague et Desaulnier négociant de Québec aprochoit de nous, nous aurions reconnu un Prestre Recolet parti de Québec avec le S^r Desaulnier Commis a la baye Philipeaux pour Les d^{ts} S^{rs} Brouague et Desaulnier Son frere. Ensuite ayant demandé au d^t Araby ce qu'il auroit fait des Sauvages qu'on s'avoit qu'il avoit Embarqué pour luy servir de guide, il auroit repondu que la pour des Eskimaux leur auroit fait prendre la fuite, apres nous etre separé ayant voulu observer la route qu'il tenoit nous l'aurions vû s'en retourner du Costé de Bel Isle n'osant pas Sans doute aler plus loin faute de passeport qu'il n'auroit obtenu que pour la baye de Philipeaux.

Notre Equipage intimidé de ce que nous auroit dit le d^t Araby se seroit revolté disant qu'on les mesnoit à la boucherie, Et qu'ils vouloient s'en retourner, apres leur avoir remontré avec Le Capitaine que notre vie nous etoit aussy chere que La Leur, Et que le d^t Araby n'auroit tenu ce langage que dans la seule veue de les decouragor, Et de faire echouer cette decouverte, je les ay menacé Leur disant quo j'alloys faire mettre à terre les poltrons pour told us that, at night, he had been boarded by nine Esquimaux canoes and had seen twenty-two boats, but that the great number of these barbarians had prevented him from trading : which is in contradiction with the statement of our Esquimaux pilot, who said that Captain Araby had traded in whales with Captain Amargo. The said Araby added that the land of Amargo, the Esquimaux captain, was in this bay ; that these barbarians were great numbers, and that he advised us not to proceed any further, as we would find opposition along the coast. I answered him that we were armed and could defend ourselves. As this vessel, which is owned by the partners, the Sieurs Martel de Brouage and Desaulnier, merchant of Quebec, was approaching us, we recognized a Recollet priest who had left Quebec with the Sr. Desaulnier, clerk at Philippaux bay for the said Srs. Brouage and Desaulnier, his brother. Having then asked the said Araby what had become of the Indians whom it was known he had taken on board to serve as his guides, he answered that the fear of the Esquimaux had caused them to flee. Having separated, and having waited to ascertain his course, we saw him return toward Belle isle, undoubtedly not daring to proceed any further for want of a passport further than Philipeaux bay.

Frightened by Araby's statement, our crew mutinied, saying that they were being led to slaughter, and wanted to return. Having been shown by the Captain and myself that we prized life as much as they did, and that Araby had made that statement for the sole purpose of discouraging them and causing the discovery to voyage to come to naught, I threatened them, saying ne garder que les gens de bonne volonté. Ce qui parut d'abord Les Intimider, Et les calmer, Cependant comme ils persistoient dans leur revolte, je les aurois menacé de dresser avec Le Capitaine un procès verbal contre eux Leur declarant qu'ils perdrieroient Leurs gages, Et qu'ils seroient puni sur la plainte que je porterois contre eux, ce qui auroit achever de les calmer. Ensuite ayant mis le Cap en route, nous Sommes Sorti de la baye d'amargo, Et après avoir fait quatre à cinq lieues de Caps, nous avons vû à une heure apres midy de La fumée dans une autre baye, dont L'Entrée n'a qu'une demie Lieue Et Laquelle en dedans s'Elargit de plus en plus, Et peut avoir deux Lieues de profondeur avec des Isles, Et Ilots, et grande Eau par toute son Entrée. Etant Entré dans la d^{te} baye nous avons tiré quelques coups de fusil, Et notre Surprise a été de voir qu'on nous repondroit à terre par d'autres coups de fusil, ce qui nous auroit fait comprendre que c'etoient d'autres Sauvages que des Eskimaux, parce que ces derniers n'ont pas L'usage des armes a feu, nous aurions mis Le Cap sur la fumée, Et Les vents contraires nous auroient obligé de mouiller Entre les Isles, Et terre a dix brasses d'eau. apres avoir de nouveau fait tirer d'autres coups de fusil ausquels en nous auroit repondu, sur les huit heures du soir, il seroit venu à notre bord des Sauvages Lesquels nous auroient dit avoir été Embarqués sur Le batiment d'Araby. Comme plusieurs de ces Sauvages parloient françois, je leur aurois demandé pourquoi ils etoient restés, a quoy ils m'auroient repondu qu'ils devoient conduire le d^t Araby jusqu'a La baye Kessessakiou, mail que le d^t Araby ayant eu peur des Eskimaux, il Les avoit laissé, Et qu'il s'en retournoit. Leur ayant ensuite demandé s'ils connoissoient la d^e Baye, ils m'auroient repondu que ouy, Et que si je voulois les embarquer avec Leurs femmes, et Leurs enfans, ils nous montreroient La route, Et nous y conduiraient, à quoi j'aurais consenti et pour avoir rencontré des Sauvages en ce lieu, nous lui aurions donné le nom de baie des Sauvages.

that I would send the cowards ashore and keep only those of good will. That, first, seemed to frighten, and to quiet them. However, as they persisted in their mutiny, I threatened them, saying that they would lose their wages, and be punished on the complaint I would make against them. That, finally, appeased them. Then, standing on our course, we sailed out of Amargo bay, and, after travelling four or five leagues, we saw, at one o'clock in the afternoon, smoke in another bay, the entrance of which is only one league and which widens gradually, and may have two leagues in depth, with islands and islets and deep water everywhere in its entrance. Having entered the said bay we fired a few gun shots, and were surprised by being answered from land by other gun shots, and we perceived that they were natives other than Esquimaux, because the latter do not use fire-arms. We steered our course towards the smoke, but a contrary wind forced us to anchor between the islands and land in ten fathoms of water. Having ordered other gun shots to be fired, they were answered About eight o'clock in the evening, Indians came on board and told us that they had been taken on board of Araby's vessel. As many of these Indians spoke French, I asked them why they had remained. They told us that they were to pilot Captain Araby to Kessessakiou bay, but that the said Araby, fearing the Esquimaux, had abandoned them and was returning. Having then asked them whether they knew the said bay, they answered that they did, and if we would take them on board with their wives and children, they would show us the way and pilot us there. I agreed to these terms, and meeting the Indians in that place caused us to name it baye des Sauvages.

7 JUILLET 1743.

Sur les quatre heures de relevée Les vents s'etant rangés de la part du Sud, et Sud, Sud-Ouest, nous aurions appareillé pour sortir de la d^e baye des Sauvages, Et en passant levant L'endroit ou etoient Cabanés Les Sauvages on Leur a tiré quelques coups de fusil pour Les faire venir a bord, ou ils Seroient versus avec armes, Et bagages, femmes, Et Enfans, apres avoir fait Environ deux Lieues de Chemin Le Long de La Coste des Eskimaux qui court nord, Et Sud depuis La baye St. Alexis, nous Serions Entrés dans une Chaine d'Isles Et Ilots tres hauts Et Escarpés qu'on voit jusqu'a huit, Et dix Lieues dans Le large, Et apres fait route au milieu des d^{tes} Isles jusqu'a dix heures du Soir, nous aurions mouillé dans les d^{tes} Isles que nous avons apelé Isles des Eskimaux, ou mille Isles. Il y a quantité de gibier, Et ce que nous aurions remarqué dans ces Isles, c'est un grand nombre de monceaux de pierre En forme humaine, qui sont l'ouvrage des Eskimaux qui rôdent toujours dans ces Isles ou qui y font Leur residence.

8 JUILLET 1743.

Les vents an sud ouest, Et Le Cap au nord-ouest quart de nord nous avons Levé L'ancre a trois heures du matin, Et sur Les huit heures nous avons découvert dans la profondeur des terres En une distance tres Eloignée une grosse montagne Et tres haute que Les Sauvages nous ont dit Estre celle de Kessessakiou. sur le midy un gros vent du nord s'etant Elevé avec de la pluye Et de la brume, il nous a fallu Encore mouiller dans les d^{tes} mille Isles.

About four o'clock in the afternoon, the wind having veered from south, and south-south-west, we set sail out of baye des Sauvages, and, when passing in front of the place where the Indians lived in their cabins, we fired a few gun shots to cause them to come on board, which they did, bringing their arms, luggage, women and children. Having travelled about two leagues along the Esquimaux coast, which runs north and south from bay St. Alexis, we entered a chain of very high and steep islands and islets to be seen at a distance of eight or ten leagues off. Having travelled through these islands until ten o'clock in the evening, we anchored among the Esquimaux Islands or Mille Isles (Thousand islands). The game is abundant there. We noticed in these islands big heaps of stone having the form of a human being, the work of the Esquimaux, who are always roving in these islands or making their residence there.

With southwest winds, and steering north-west quarter north, we weighed anchor at three o'clock in the morning, and, about eight o'clock we discovered in the interior, at a very great distance a big and very high mountain¹ which the Indians told us to be that of Kessessakiou. About noon, a heavy north wind having risen, with rain and fog, we were still compelled to remain at anchor in the said Mille isles.

Les vents S'etant rangés au Sud-Est quart de Sud sur les deux heures de relevé nous avons continué route pour sortir des d^{tes} mille Isles, dont L'Etendu nous a paru Estre d'Environ vingt cinq Lieues de route tres difficile, d'ou nous ne sommes sortis que par Le secours de nos Sauvages, Et nous sommes Entrés dans L'ance de La riviére [sic.] au Sable, ainsy nommé par Les Sauvages à cause de La quantité de sable qu'il y a : au fon de Laquelle ance est une riviére [sic.] du mesme nom dont nous avons entendu en passant le bruit de la chute. Cette riviere suivant le rapport des Sauvages est poissonneuse : Et abondante en Saumons. depuis cette riviere le terrain est bas Et couvert de bois de sapin, et autres bois gommeux, En allant au Nord Le tour de l'ance est rempli d'un grand nombre d'Isles qui sont Le Long de la terre, ce qui forme cette ance qu'on pourroit nommer baye est une presqu'Isle : du Costé du Sud, Laquelle avance beaucoup dans Le Large, Et joint par l'autre bout à la terre ferme. c'est par cette pointe que Les Eskimaux font le portage de Leurs canots. cette presqu'Isle fait une pointe avancée dans Le Large Laquelle est fort difficile à doubler.

9 JULY, 1743.

The wind having veered to south-west quarter south, at about two o'clock in the afternoon, we pursued our course to emerge from the Mille isles, which seemed to us to be about twenty-five leagues of very difficult navigation. It was only with the assistance of our Indians that we left them, and we entered Rivière au Sable inlet¹, so called by the Indians because of the quantity of sand found in it. At the end of that inlet, lies a river of the same name, the falls,² of which we heard in passing. This river, according to the report of the Indians, is full of fish and abounds with salmon. From this river, the land is low and covered with pines (spruce) and other resinous woods. Sailing northwardly, there are a great number of islands along the shore of the inlet. This inlet, which we might call a bay, is formed by a peninsula on the south side, which juts out a long way and connects at the other end with the mainland. The Esquimaux avoid that point by portaging their canoes. This peninsula projects into the open sea and is very difficult to double.

10 JULY, 1743.

Although the wind was still strong, nevertheless, we made headway, and, about eleven o'clock, we saw ahead of us a point of land which, the Indians told us, formed the entrance of Esquimaux

Eskimaux que Les Les Sauvages nomment Kessessakiou, apres avoir passé L'ance de La riviere aux Sables dont nos Pilotes ont Estimé la longueur d'Environ vingt Lieues, sur les deux heures apres midy nous aurions doublé la d^e pointe dont les terres sont basses Et nous serions entré dans la d^e Baye des Eskimaux, dont L'Embouchure d'une pointe à l'autre nous a paru estre d'Environ douze Lieue de Large, Laquelle baye retracit dans la suite a huit Et neuf Lieues Et va en diminuant peu a peu, au Large de laquelle pointe d'Entrée au sud sont deux Isles tres hautes, L'une grande, L'autre mediocre, apres avoir examiné L'embouchure de la d^e baye cy devant nomée des Eskimaux, Et par Les Sauvages Kessessakiou, nous Luy avons donné Le nom de baye St. Louis : Et nous avons nommé St. frederic Les deux grandes Isles d'entrée. nous avons apelé pointe de Beauharnois celle qui forme au Sud L'Entrée de La d^e baye dont L'autre pointe du Costé du nord a été nommé pointe de St. Gilles.

Ensuite nous avons fait route pour Entrer dans la d^e baye, qui court dans les terres ouest-nord-ouest, au sud de laquelle à quelque distance de terre nous avons trouvé douze et quinze brasses d'eau ainsy cette baye peut estre utile pour donner havre a de tres gros vaisseaux. Nous sommes Entrés dix Lieues avant dans cette baye a la faveur des vents de Sud-Est quart d'Est Et Sur Les dix heures du soir qui est L'heure à laquelle Le soleil se couche, Les vents s'etant jettés au Nord-Nord-Quest il nous a fallu mouiller à six brasses d'eau Entre Les Isles, Et terre au Nord Et au Sud de La d^e baye depuis Son Entrée il y a des Isles Et Ilots Le Long de la terre qui continue d'etre boisée a L'Egard de La Latitude n'ayant point de Pilote pour prendre hauteur nous ne la pouvons pas donner juste. suivant Le Coucher du Soleil qui est a dix heures du soir au Commencement de Juillet, L'on Estime que cette baye doit bay, or Kessessakiou, as they call it. Having passed Rivière aux Sables inlet—the length of which our pilots estimated at approximately twenty leagues—about two o'clock in the afternoon, we doubled the said point of low-lying land and entered Esquimaux bay. The entrance to it, from one point to the other, seemed to be about twelve leagues in width, afterwards, narrowing to eight or nine leagues, and gradually decreasing. South of this point at the entrance, lie two very high islands, one large, and the other rather small. Having explored the mouth of the said bay, heretofore called Esquimaux, and, by the Indians. Pessessakiou, we called it St. Louis bay ; we gave the name of St. Frederic to the two large islands at the entrance. The one forming the southern entrance of the bay we called pointe de Beauharnois, the other point, on the north side, has been called St. Gilles point.

We then steered the course to enter the said bay, which runs inland west-north-west. In the southern part of it, at some distance from land, we found twelve and fifteen fathoms of water, so this bay may harbour very large vessels. We sailed ten leagues into this bay with the help of south-east quarter east winds, arriving at about ten o'clock in the evening, the hour of sun-set. The wind having veered to the north-north-west, we had to anchor in six fathoms of water between the islands and shore. Northwest and south of the said bay from its entrance are islands and islets along the land which is forested. As regards the latitude, not having a pilot to take observations, we cannot give it exactly. According to sun-set, which is at ten o'clock in the evening at the beginning of July, it is estimated that this bay must be between 55 and 56 degrees of north

Les mesmes Sauvages nous ont assuré qu'au Nord de La pointe St. Gilles, sans pouvoir nous en marquer La distance, Etoit Le grand village des Eskimaux qu'ils disent Etre en grand nombre à L'Embouchure de La riviere blanche, qu'ils disent etre un bras de cello de Kessessakiou que nous nommons Riviere St Louis du nom de La baye ou Elle se decharge, Et ils assurent que cette mesme riviere St. Louis a une autre branche à la hauteur des terres qui va tomber dans la baye d'HUDSON par laquelle Les Sauvages descendent En Canot pour aller traiter avec Les Anglois.

Etant resté tout Le jour mouillé à cause des Vents contraires nous serions descendu a terre ; Et sur une Eminence nous aurions planté deux grandes Croix aux pieds desquelles étant à genoux nous aurions chanté plusieurs cantiques, Et hymnes en action de graces de notre heureuse arrivée Et au mesme Lieu nous aurions arboré Le Pavillon françois En criant à diverses reprises Vive Le Roy pour marquer de La prise de possession que nous faisons au nom du Roy, Et de la nation française d'une terre qui n'auroit Encore jamais été habitée par aucune nation, Et dont nous sommes Les premiers qui en prenons possession.

latitude. The Indians whom I took away told us that, two years ago, two English vessels entered that bay. These must be the two English vessels which go every year to Hudson bay. The same Indians assured us that north of St. Gilles point, without being able to give us the distance, was the big village of Esquimaux, who, they say, are in great numbers at the mouth of river Blanche.¹ They say that this river is a branch of the Kessessakiou river, which we called St. Louis river after the name of the bay into which it discharges, and they assured that this same river St. Louis has another branch at the height-of-land, which falls into Hudson bay, and which the Indians descend in canoes to trade with the English.

Being anchored all day on account of contrary winds, we landed and erected two large crosses on a hill at the foot of which we knelt down and sung many psalms and hymns thanking God for our successful arrival. At the same time, we raised the French flag, shouting repeatedly "Long live the King," to demonstrate that we were taking possession in the name of the King and of the French nation, of a land never before occupied by any nation, and of which we were the first to take possession.

J'aurois souhaité n'ayant plus aucun danger à Essuyer penetrer jusqu'au fond de La baye St Louis afin d'etre en Etat d'en rendre compte, Et de voir La decharge de la Riviere St Louis, Mais comme Le temps nous pressoit de nous en retourner nous voyant d'ailleurs contrariés par les vents, J'aurois proposé au nommé Pilote, Et à son fils de rester avec Les Sauvages dont il entend La Langue, Et avec Lesquels il est accoutumé d'hyverner dans les bois pour aller reconnoître Le fond de la d^e baye St-Louis, comme aussy pour aller decouvrir Les deux bras de La d^e Riviere St. Louis, L'un qui va à la baie d'HUDSON, Et L'autre au grand Village des Eskimaux suivant Le report des Sauvages qui ne mettent que douze Lieues de distance de La pointe St. Gilles. Etant convenu avec Le d^t Pilote Et son fils d'une somme pour Leur hyvernement je leur aurois fourni un Canot d'Ecorce, des Vivres, des armes, des munitions de guerre, de Chasse. Et autres effets necessaires.

Les Sauvages au Nombre de cinq à six familles ayant consenti de rester avec Le d^t Pilote je leur aurois fait Les mesmes fournitures, Et Leur aurois donné En present des habillemens des Couvertures Et autres effets tant pour. La Chasse que pour La pesche. En quittant Le d^t Pilote Et son fils je leur aurois recommandé de ne pas S'exposer Le Long de la mer à cause des Eskimaux, Et je leur aurois promis sous le bon plaisir de M. Le Gouverneur General et de M. L'Intendant de Leur envoyer du secours dès cet automne.

Ensuite nous étant rembarqués nous aurions fait voile le d^t jour douze Juillet à une heure apres midy pour nous en retourner au detroit de Bel Isle. Les vents s'etant rangés à L'Est nous aurions courru bord sur bord pour sortir de la d^e baye St Louis. Comme Les courans nous jettoient en Coste nous aurions touché deux fois En dedans de la pointe Beauharnois, d'ou nous nous

12 July, 1743.

Having no more perils to encounter, I would have preferred to penetrate to the end of the bay St. Louis, so as to be able to describe it, and see the inlet of the river St. Louis. But, as the time for our return was pressing, and as the winds were contrary, I proposed that a man named Pilote and his son remain with the Indians whose language he understands, and with whom he is accustomed to winter in the forest, in order to explore the end of bay St. Louis, as well as discover the two branches of said river St. Louis, the one going to Hudson bay, and the other to the big village of Esquimaux, according to the report of Indians who estimate that it is only twelve leagues distant from St. Gilles point. Having agreed with the said Pilote and his son for the payment of a certain sum for their wintering, I supplied them with a birch-bark canoe, provisions, arms, munitions of war, for hunting, and other necessary goods.

The Indians, to the number of five or six families, agreed to remain with Pilote. I left them the same supplies and gave them clothing, blankets, and other articles for fishing and hunting. When I left Pilote and his son, I recommended them not to expose themselves on the sea-shore for fear of the Esquimaux, and, subject to the approval of the Governor General and the Intendant, I promised to send them assistance in the fall.

Having then re-embarked, we sailed on the twelveth of July, at one o'clock in the afternoon, to return to Belleisle strait. The wind having veered to the east, we made tack for tack to leave

Et apres avoir heureusement traversé La grande anse de La riviere au sable avec les Vents de Nord-Ouest malgré La brume Et La pluye apres avoir doublé La pointe de La presqu'Isle nous Sommes Entrés dans Les mille Isles à minuit Les vents étant contraires nous avons jetté L'ancre.

Nous avons mis à la voile avec Les vents de sud-ouest Et ouest-Sud-ouest, Et après avoir courru plusieurs bords avec Les vents qui ont été variables à midy avant les vents debout nous avons mouillé dans les d^{tes} Isles à huit brasses d'eau. Le reste du jour nous avons Eu de la pluye et du calme toute la nuit.

Nous avons apareillé avec Les vents au sud-ouest, nous avons fait plusieurs bordées dans les d^{tes} Isles, Enfin nous avons jetté L'ancre à midy. Une heure après Les vents au Nord-Ouest nous avons Continué route, Et nous Sommes the said bay St. Louis. As the current drove us ashore, we grounded twice within Beauharnois point, but happily righted the vessel by means of an anchor carried out, and, at about ten o'clock in the evening, we anchored at Beauharnois point between the islands and shore.

At seven o'clock in the morning, we weighed anchor, and, with the assistance of a north wind, we passed Beauharnois point, and, having successfully passed the big riviere au Sable inlet, with a north-west wind, in spite of fog and rain, and having doubled the point of the peninsula, we entered the Mille isles (Thousand islands) at midnight. Contrary winds compelled us to anchor.

14 JULY, 1743.

We set sail with south-west and west-south-west winds, and, after many tacks, with variable winds at noon and a head-wind we anchored in the said islands in eight fathoms of water. We had rain the remainder of the day and calm all night.

15 JULY, 1743.

We sailed with a south-west wind, made many tacks among the islands, and, finally, anchored at noon. One hour later, the wind being north-west, we pursued our course and emerged from sortis des mille Isles. Les vents ayant changé nous avons Soutenu dans le large Le Calme nous a pris qui a duré toute la nuit, ce qui nous a Empesché de pouvoir Entrer dans aucun havre : Le rouli a été fort gros, nous apprehendions de demâter.

Les vents du Nord, Et Nord-Est nous mettant En route nous avons passé trois bayes Le Long des Caps. Les vents de sud, Et de sud-Est nous ont obligé de ranger La terre pour y chercher un havre, Et a la faveur du vent de sud nous Sommes Entrés dans la haye des Meniques et en y Entrant nous avons vû un feu Eloigné. Enfin sur les deux heures de relevée nous avons mouillé à vingt brasses d'eau près des Isles. Une heure après il a paru à la pointe huit Canots Eskimaux qui ont débarqué sur une Isle faisant Leurs cris ordinaires auxquels nous ayons répondu, ce qui est comme Le Signal pour leur marquer qu'ils peuvent venir. Lest d^{ts} Eskimaux s'etant rembarqués dans Leurs Canots sont versus a notre bord Les voyant s'approcher nous avons pris Les armes. Ils sont montés à bord et nous ont aporté huit barbes de baleine que j'ay traité avec eux. Une heure apres qu'ils se sont retirés il est venu a bord six autres Canots Eskimaux qui nous ont traité quatre barbes de baleine. Un de ces Eskimaux nous a fait Entendre qu'il etoit Le Capitaine Amargo Et que Le Capitaine Araby Luy avoit fait tirer un Coup de fusil Sur les Loups marins sans doute pour Luy apprendre L'usage des armes, avant de nous quitter il nous a aussy fait Entendre qu'il alloit dormir, Et que le Lendemain il Emmemeroit d'autres Sauvages de sa Nation pour traiter avec nous. J'ay fait donner à ce chef et à sa troupe de la viande cuite qu'ils ont mangé, ils ont bû de L'eau douce qu'on leur a donné ; ce qui detruit La fable de ceux qui disent que ces barbares ne mangent que des viandes crues Et qu'ils boivent L'eau the Mille isles. The wind having shifted, we stood out to sea. The calm which set in lasted all night, and prevented us from entering any harbour. The ship rolled heavily, and we feared we would lose our masts.

The wind was from the north and north-east and, holding our course, we passed three bays along the capes. The south and south-eastern winds compelled us to sail along the coast seeking a harbour. and, with the assistance of a south wind, we entered the bay of Meniques, and, on entering, we saw a distant fire. Finally, at about two o'clock in the afternoon, we anchored in twenty fathoms of water near the islands. One hour later, eight canoes of Esquimaux appeared at the point. They landed on an island, uttering their usual cries, which we answered, which is equivalent to inviting them to approach. The Esquimaux having re-embarked in their canoes came on board. As we saw them approaching, we armed ourselves. They hoarded us and brought aboard eight whale this which I bartered with them.

One hour after their departure. six other canoes of Esquimaux hoarded us, and they traded four whale fins. One of them gave us to understand that he was Captain Amargo, and that Captain Araby had ordered him to fire a gun shot at a seal to teach him the use of arms. Before leaving us, he also gave us to understand that he was going to sleep and, in the morning would bring his other Indians of his nation to trade with us. I ordered that this chief and his band be given cooked meat, which they ate. They drank fresh water that we gave them. This disproves the story that these barbarians eat only raw meat and drink salt salée ce qui paroist impossible de croire. mais ils nous ont refusé du pain, du vin. Et de L'eau de vie dont ils ne connoissent point L'usage Il seroit a souhaiter qu'il en fut de mesme de nos autres Sauvages. Il est a craindre seulement que si cette Coste des Eskimaux est Etablie par un trop grand nombre de françois on ne mette ces barbares dans le goust d'user de boissons, comme on a fait aux autres Sauvages, j'ay remarqué que plusieurs d'entre eux saignoient du nez naturellement Et qu'ils buvoient leur sang, nos gens pretendoient que La pour en etoit la Seule cause, j'ay peine a la croire par ce que ces barbares ne nous ont point paru timides, peut-etre vouloient ils nous faire Entendre qu'ils desireroient ainsy boire notre sang, c'est pourquoy taut qu'ils out resté a bord nous avons toujours été sur nos gardes.

Les vents contraires nous Empesehant de sortir de La d^e baye des Meniques Sur les Sept heures du matin il seroit venu a notre bord vingt-quatre Canots d'Eskimaux qui avoient a Leur Suite dix huit Chaloupes, ou il ne nous a paru que des femmes, Et des enfans aver du bagage. Les d^{tes} Chaloupes se seroient tenus un peu au loin n'osant Sans doute aprocher. Les Eskimaux des vingt-quatre Canots apres avoir fait Leurs cris ordinaires ausquels nous aurions repondu En nous tenant sur la deffensive, sont montés à notre bord, ou ils ont traité avec nous Environ un quintal de baleine, trois Canots, des habillemens de Loup-marin, Et quelqu'un de Leurs armes ; car voila tout le profit que j'ay retité de ma découverte pour Les grosses depenses qu'il m'a fallu faire. Les d^{ts} Eskimaux nous voyant appareiller à midy à cause des vents du nord-ouest Seroient descendus, dans leurs canots pour s'en retourner à terre Nous n'avons pas plus tôt été sortis de La d^e baye que Les vents contraires nous ont contraint de Courir La bordée La reste du jour, Et toute La nuit.

water, which seemed incredible, but they refused bread, wine and whisky, the use of which was unknown to them. It would be desirable that it be the same with our other Indians. It is only to be feared that, if the Esquimaux coast is settled by too many Frenchmen, the liquor habit will be acquired by these barbarians, as has been the case with other Indians. I noticed that many of them were bleeding naturally from the nose, were drinking it. Our men pretended that fear was the only cause of it. I doubt it, because these barbarians did not seem frightened. Their intention was perhaps to let us understand that they likewise wished to drink our blood. Therefore, as long as they remained on board, we were on our guard.

Contrary winds prevented us from leaving the Bay of Meniques. About seven o'clock in the morning, twenty-four canoes of Esquimaux boarded us, followed by eighteen boats which seemed loaded only with women, children and luggage. The boats kept at a distance, undoubtedly fearing to approach. Having uttered their usual cries, which we answered while keeping on the alert, the Esquimaux of the twenty-four canoes came on board where they traded with us about one quintal (hundredweight) of whalebone, three canoes, seal clothing and some of their weapons. That is the only profit I made during my exploration in return for the heavy expense I incurred. The Esquimaux, seeing that we were setting sail at noon on account of the north-west winds, returned to their canoes and went ashore. We had hardly left the bay when contrary winds compelled us to tack about for the remainder of the day and during the night.

The south and south-west winds which blew all day and all night caused us to keep tacking about in the open sea.

The wind being from the south-west, we saw cape Charles while tacking about. The wind increased, and the sea became very rough. At about seven o'clock in the evening, seeing we were near baie des Chateaux, we fired three gun shots. They immediately sent us a boat which helped us, in spite of the night and fog, to enter the anchorage. Upon our arrival, the ushermen told us that since our departure they had suffered continuous fog and rain with winds so fierce that they believed we were assuredly lost. What seemed to make it a certainty was that this Araby, on his return, had reported it along the coast and at Tierpon, as well as at other harbours of the Petit Nord. The very day after my arrival, my first care was to send back to Tierpon the schooner I had chartered, where it arrived on the 21st day. As it was necessary to hasten my return, I only remained three days at the baie des Chateaux, and on the 24th of July, I sailed for Quebec at five o'clock in the morning on the same vessel that had carried me thence. At last, after a long, wearisome and perilous voyage, we arrived at Quebec on the 25th of August, day of St. Louis' day, about nine o'clock in the evening. The second day after, on the 27th of August, we fulfilled the vow we had made during our voyage.

REMARQUES.

J'ai a faire remarquer que dans La decouverte que j'ay fait de La baye des Eskimaux aujourd'hui baye St Louis, nous n'avons pû observer Le Long de La Coste ny dans les bayes Les passe-a-Loup-marins, d'autant qu'il estoit trop tard, Et que Le poisson estoit desjà passé pour retourner au Nord. Comme Le Loup-marin est abondant Le Long de cette Coste qui est bordée d'une Infinité d'Isles, Et Ilots, Il est à croire qu'il y a un grand nombre de passes, ou L'on peut faire La pesche sedentaire de ce poisson, mais on ne peut Les désigner autrement que par Conjecture, pour Les conoitre avec certitude il faudroit frequenter cette Coste. Comme Le froid doit Commencer plus tôt a la baye St Louis Et le Long de la Coste des Eskimaux que dans les postes de Labrador. Il est incertain si La pesche d'automne pourra avoir Lieu, Laquelle se fait à Labrador au mois de Decembre jusqu'aux Roys, il paroist bien tard pour la pouvoir faire dans ce mesme tems. toute La ressource sera la pesche du printemps.

Ce qui est a observer pour Le Loup-marin, c'est que ce poisson Se retire du grand Nord au Commencement du froid, et va En cotoyant la terre Le Long de La Coste des Eskimaux, et de celle de Labrador, il passe L'hyver dans le golfe sans remonter Le fleuve St Laurent. Le printemps de L'année suivante au mois de Juin Lorsque les Glaces Sortent du nord, ce poisson se mesle parmy Les glaces, descend Le Long de La Coste, il va jusqu'au detroit d'hudson : mais il est incertain s'il va passer L'Esté dans la baye d'hudson, S'il passe Le detroit de Davis pour aller dans la mer Christiane, ou si il va jusqu'aux terres du nouveau groenland. Ce poisson qui est tres abondant est Environ trois semaines à passer dans chaque Endroit, ce qui fait une pesehe Successive d'un poste à un autre.

I must remark that, during the exploration I made of Esquintaux bay—now St. Louis bay—we were unable to discover the seal-passes either along the coast or in the bays, as it was too late: the seals had already passed on their return to the north. As seals are numerous along this coast which is bordered with innumerable islands and islets, it is believed that there are a great number of passes where sedentary seal fisheries may be established, but they cannot be indicated other than by conjecture. To determine them with certainty would require repeated visits to this coast. As the winter must set in earlier at St. Louis and along the Coste des Esquimaux than in the posts of Labrador, it is uncertain whether the fall fishery could be made, which takes place at Labrador in the month of December until the Twelfth Day. It seems as if it would be very late if made at the same time. The only resource will be the spring-fishery.

What has been observed respecting the seal is that it leaves the Grand Nord when the cold weather sets in, and follows the shore along the Esquimaux coast and the coast of Labrador. In the spring of the year following, it takes to the ice, which is carried along the coast [by the Arctic current], and proceeds to Hudson strait, but it is uncertain whether it remains in Hudson bay during the summer, or whether it passes Davis strait to go into “ la mer Christiane ” or goes to the shores of New Greenland. This fish, which is very abundant, takes about three weeks to pass each place, and that permits a successful fishery in one post after another.

La Carte qui est jointe à la presente relation est une Carte dressée Sur les observations de nos deux Pilotes Costiers, mais j'Espere dans la Suite En donner une plus exacte ou les degrés de Latitude seront observés, afin de Servir aux vaisseaux Du Long cours qui cherchent des havres ; Et si tost que je seray Etabli En la d^t baye St Louis, cela me mettra En Etat de decouvrir plus facilement Le reste de La Coste du Nord jusqu'au detroit d'HUDSON.

Le grand nombre d'Esquimaux que nous avons trouvé dans la baye des Meniques donnent lieu de croire qu'ils y Etaient comme en rendez-vous, d'où ils se dispoient d'aller faire Leur pillage Le Long de La Coste de Labrador, ils attendoient que les pescheurs fussent partis, or s'ils se faisoit des Etablissements pour la pesche sedentaire du Loup-marin dans les bayes et Isles qui sont Le Long de la coste des Esquimaux on empescherait Leurs brigandages, car ces barbares ne trouvant de havre pour se refugier, Et pour y estre en Sureté, S'Eloigneroient de plus en plus, Et n'oseroient aprocher du detroit de Bel Isle, ce qui mettroit Les pescheurs, Et toute La Coste ensuretée. autrefois Les Esquimaux montoient jusqu'a Mingan, mais Les Etablissements qui se sont fait Le Long de La Coste Les ont obligé de s'Eloigner, il en seroit de mesme. ces barbares sont agiles Et habiles a manœuvrer dans Leurs Chaloupes, Les femmes comme Les hommes. Ce sont d'insignes voleurs Et des piratessa redouter Le Long de La Coste plusieurs fois en s'aprochant de nous pour nous donner des marques d'amitié ils ont par subtilité mis les mains dans nos poches pour nous voler. nos françois qui les ont surpris en flagrant delit ne Leur out point épargné la bastonade, ny Les coups de poing pour leur faire rendre ce qu'ils avoient volé, jusqu'aux ustensiles de navires qu'ils vouloient emporter. toute Leur ruse de guerre est de prendre par Surprise ou d'attaquer Lorsqu'ils se sentent les plus forts. ainsy connu on n'est pas toujours sur ses

(Translation.)

The chart attached to this narrative is based upon the observations of our two coast pilots, but I hope, later on, to give a more correct one on which the degrees of latitude will be indicated, that it may be useful to other sea-going vessels looking for harbours. As soon as I am established in St. Louis bay, it will facilitate my exploration of the remainder of the Coste du Nord to Hudson strait.

The great number of Esquimaux we found in the bay of Meniques induce me to believe that they were there as at a meeting place, from whence they intended to go plundering along the coast of Labrador. They waited for the departure of the fishermen. So, if sedentary seal-fishing establishments were erected in the bays and islands along the Esquimaux coast they would prevent their brigandages, because these barbarians, finding no harbour in which they could take cover, and be in safety, would move farther and farther away, and would not dare come near Belleisle strait. This would assure the safety of the fishermen and of all the coast. Formerly, the Esquimaux ascended to Mingan, but the establishments made along the coast compelled them to move away. Here, the result would be the same. These barbarians are quick and skilful in the handling of their boats, the woman as well as the men. They are notorious plunderers and are pirates to be feared. Along the coast, many times, as they approached us to express their signs of friendship, they cleverly put their hands in our pockets to rob us. Having caught them red-handed, our Frenchmen did not spare them the club nor the fist to make them return what they had stolen. They would even garde Et comme il ne reste pas toujours dans Les postes la mesme quantité de monde c'est ce qui Les rendra toujours redoutables dans La Coste du nord.

Cependant il sera aussy dangeureux que differents concessionnaires fassent des Etablissements Le Long de la Coste des Eskimaux parce que si les uns pour Les rendre traitables veulent essayer de Les attirer, Et de Lier commerce, d'autres pour Les Eloigner de Leurs postes feront sur eux des actes d'hostilité, d'ou il arrivera que ces barbares pour se venger mettront a feu et a sang, Et ravegeront toute la Coste. on n'a vû que trop d'exemples jusqu'a ce jour de Leur barbarie. Le Sr Marsal on fournit un Exemple tout recent dans cette année. Il seroit facile de les humaniser comme les autres Sauvages. ils en ont donné La preuve année derniere à la baye des Chateaux ou ils ont travaillé comme nos matelots à charger Le batiment que j'avois Envoyé En Société; après avoir traité dans le Cour de L'Esté au d^t poste, ils y sont revenus L'automne, Et ont reste jusqu'aux glaces sans faire du mal aux quâtre hommes qui ont gardé le poste pendant l'hyver.

à L'Egard du nombre de ces Sauvages Eskimaux on n'en peut rien scavoir : ils sont répandus depuis le detroit de Belle-Isle Le Long de la mer juspu'au detroit d'HUDSON, de sorte qu'ils occupent plus de deux cent Lieues de pays. Nos Sauvages disent que Le grand village des Eskimaux est Environ à douze Lieues de la baye St Louis, Et que de la ils se repandent Le Long de la Coste. M. de Laraguy de Bayonne actuelement en cette ville vient de me rapporter qu'en 1737 Etant allé faire la pesche de la baleine vers le detroit d'HUDSON, il fit rencontre dans le large une glace, ou il y avoit plus de quatre cent cadavres, qu'il reconnut etre des hollandois, Et des Eskimaux qui attempt to carry naval equipment away. Their stratagem of war is to take us by surprise or to attack us when in superior numbers. As one is not always on his guard, and as the same number of men do not always remain in the posts, they will always be a source of danger on the Côte du Nord.

It will be dangerous if various grantees make establishments along the Esquimaux coast, because if some to render them tractable try to attract them and trade with them, others, to keep them away from their posts, will commit acts of hostility. In consequence, these barbarians, to avenge themselves, will put everything to fire and sword, and will devastate the whole coast. We have, in the past, seen too many instances of their cruelty. The Sr. Marsal recently informed us of one that occurred this very year. It would be as easy to civilize them as the other natives. They proved it last year at baie des Chateaux where they worked as our seamen in the loading of the ship I had sent in partnership. After having traded at the same post during the summer, they returned in the autumn and remained until frost set in, without injuring the four men who kept the post during winter.

With regard to the numbers of these savage Esquimaux, nothing could be ascertained. They are scattered from Belleisle strait along the sea to Hudson strait, so that they occupy more than two hundred leagues of land. Our Indians say that the big village of Esquimaux lies at about twelve leagues from St.Louis Bay, and that, from there, they spread along the coast. Mr. de Laraguy de Bayonne, now in this town, stated to me that, in 1737, while on a whaling expedition toward Hudson strait, he discovered in the open sea, ice on S'etoient Sans doute battu Les uns contre Les autres. Cela fait conoitre qu'il ne faut frequenter cette coste qu'avec beaucoup de précaution à cause du grand nombre. Et de la férocité de ces barbares.

On ne scait rien de Leur vie, Et moeurs non plus que du Lieu de Leur habitation dans L'hyver, car dans L'Esté ils Sont errans, et vagabons, on ignore d'ou ils tirent Les barbes de baleine dont ils font un grand usage, Et qu'ils trafiquent avec nous. On ne scait s'ils font la pesche de la baleine ou bien ce sont des baleines qu'ils trouvent Echouées Le Long de la Coste: Le dernier me paroist plus probable d'autant que les barbes qu'ils nous ont trafiqué ne paroissoit pas fraîchement arrachées, mais vieilles et batues de la mer. Cependant je leur ay vu des dards Et des harpons Semblables a ceux dont nous nous servons pour cette pesche. pour Leur nourriture ils vivent de toutes sortes de poissons, Et Oiseaux de mer qu'ils tuent avec des flesches et des dards a plusieurs branches de fer amanchés au bout d'un Long baton qu'ils lancent adroitement, et d'une maniere Singuliere ; car les flesches Et les dards sont toutes Leurs armes Ils cabanent En rang comme les autres Sauvages, avec cette difference que leurs Cabanes sont couvertes de peaux de Loup-marin, Et que les autres se servent d'Ecorce d'arbres. Leur Chasse est Le Long de La mer, Et non dans les bois, ou ils n'osent penetrer par la Crainte qu'ils ont des Sauvages des terres. Pour leur habillement ils sont vetus de peaux de Loup-marin qu'ils sçavent passer, Et coudre fort artistement avec du serf. Les Hommes ont un Capot ou pourpoint cousu devant, Et derriere qui leur descend à la ceinture, avec un capuchon cousu avec l'habit pour se couvrir La Teste. ils ont des culotes, des bottes ou brodequins ausquels est attaché Le soulier. Les femmes portent un pourpoint de mesme avec un capuchon fort grand dans lequel Elles mettent leurs Enfans a la mamelle: avec cette difference que Leur pourpoint a une longue queue fought one another. This shows that this coast must not be frequented without the utmost precaution, in view of the great number and ferocity of these barbarians.

Nothing is known of their life and manners or of their dwelling place in winter time, because during the summer, they wander and rove. We are ignorant as to where they obtain the whale fins which they use so much and trade with us. We do not know whether they kill the whale or find it ashore on the coast. The latter seems to me more probable, all the more that the fins they traded with us did not appear freshly taken, but old and sea-beaten. I saw, however, in their hands spears and harpoons similar to those we use for that fishing. They feed on all kinds of fish and sea-birds they kill with arrows and with harpoons with many barbs fastened to a long stick, which they throw in a skilful and peculiar way. But arrows are their weapons. They live in cabins arranged in rows like other aborigines, with this difference that their cabins are covered with seal skins and that the others use tree-bark.

They hunt along the sea, and not in the woods, which they dare not penetrate owing to their fear of the Indians of the interior. For their clothing, they use seal skins which they know how to dress and to sew very cleverly with sinew. The men wear a coat or doublet sewed before and behind, which reaches to the waist, with a hood to cover the head, which is sewn to the clothing. They wear breeches, boots or brodequins to which the shoe is fastened. The women wear a like doublet with a very large hood in which they carry their infants qu'Elles se passent Entre les cuisses pour L'attacher par devant avec deux boutons, au lieu de culotes elles ont des brodequins ou bottes qui leur montent à la ceinture avec un soulier joint à la botte. Les hommes, Et Les femmes ont un Casque de Bois sur le front attaché derriere la teste a cause du soleil pour se conserver La veue. A L'Egard de Leur navigation ils se servent de canots dans chacun desquels il n'y a que la place d'un homme. Les femmes avec, les enfans vont dans Les chaloupes qui leur servent à porter leur bagage, Et dans lesquels Elles manoeuvrent fort bien. Leurs Canots sont pointus par les deux Extremités, Et sont revestus de peaux de Loup-marins si bien cousus ensemble avec de la baleine qu'ils ne prennent point L'eau. pour leurs Chaloupes ils Les volent aux pescheurs Le long de La Coste de Labrador, et au Petit Nord, ils en font quelques-unes mais au lieu de Bordages, ils les couvrent en dehors de peaux de Loup-marins. Ils Les garnissent de voiles commes Les notres pour en sçavoir davantage il faudroit pouvoir Les frequenter, Et apprendre Leur langue. Si je n'avois apprehendé faire un acte d'hostilité j'aurois assayé de prendre un Jeune homme de quinze à seize ans afin d'apprendre sa langue. Et de luy apprendre La notre. mais cela pourra avoir Lieu dans la Suite.

Si j'ay laissé deux hommes a la d^e baye St Louis j'ay cru le devoir faire pour avoir une juste connoissance de La profondeur des terres, Et pour Examiner Les passes à Loup-marins. je me suis flatté que M. Le Gouverneur general, et M. L'Intendant auroient pour agreable mon zele, ainsy comme il importe de partir cet automne pour porter du Secours aux deux francois Et aux Sauvages que j'ay laissé au d^e Lieu, Et comme il est nécessaire a cause de la distance des Lieux, et de La rigueur du froid qui Commence de at the breast. with this difference that their doublet has a long tail which they pass between their thighs to attach it in front with two buttons. Instead of breeches, they have brodequins or boots as high as the waist with a shoe fastened to the boot. The men and women wear a wooden shade on the forehead and attached to the head, to protect their eyes from the sun.

As regards navigation, they use canoes in which there is room for only one man. Women and children travel in boats in which they carry their luggage and which they handle quite cleverly. The canoes are tapered at both ends and covered with seal skins so well sewed with baleine that they do not leak. They steal boats from fishermen along the coast of Labrador and at Petit Nord. They construct a few, but instead of planks, they cover the outside with seal skins. They equip them with sails as we do ours. To know more, we must visit them frequently and learn their language. Had I not feared an act of hostility, I would have tried to take a young man of about fifteen or sixteen years of age, in order to learn his language and to teach him ours. But that can be done in the future.

I left two men at St. Louis bay, as I believed it my duty to have an exact knowledge of the interior, and to examine seal-passes. I prided myself on the fact that the Governor General and the Intendant would be pleased with my zeal. So, as it is important to leave this fall to carry assistance to the two Frenchmen and to the Indians whom I left at the said place, and, as it is necessary, on account of the distance of the place and of the severity of the winter which sets in trade in His Majesty's domain, in connection with the expedition made by the Sieur Furnel under pretence of forming a fishery establishment in the bay of Kitchechatchou, concerning which his sole aim appears to be no other than that of attracting to himself the trade of the greater number of the northern Indians (Sauvages du Nord) to the prejudice of posts of the Domaine as well of all other posts established on the north shore of the river St. Lawrence. The lessee of the post of Mingan and the grantee of that of Labrador [Bradore Bay] have made similar representations to him in respect to which they are respectfully waiting, as well as myself, upon whatever may be determined by Mrs. De Beauharnois and Hocquart in conformity with such orders as they may receive from Your Grace.

I have the honour to be with the deepest respect, Monseigneur, Nosseigneurs,

Francois Etienne Cugnet, Directeur de Domaine d'Occident, lessee of the trades depending from the said Domaine and commonly known as the Trade of Tadoussac, begs to represent most humbly to Your Graces that he has been informed, in the last few days, that the sieur Fornel, merchant of this city, has, under the pretense of a seal fishery establishment which he intends to form in the bay of Kitehechatchou, obtained the permission to make the discovery of the said bay in order to secure the concession thereof and that, in virtue of this permission, he has despatched to the north shore of the river St.
Lawrence, a vessel under the command of Charles Le Cour. This vessel did not get to the bay of Kitchechatchou, but remained at the place called Pichonoustekoüen in Indian and Teste de loup-cervier [Lynx-head] in French, and which the sieur Fornel named the bay de St. Louis. He has not yet made the discovery of the bay of Kitchechatchou which was the

Il n'a Jesquà Jusquà prèsent auoune concession, ni de la Baïe de Kitchechatchou, ni de la pretendüe Baïe de St. Louïs ; Il a cependant laissè dans cette derniere Baïe lw [sic.] nomme Jean Pilotte et son fils avec des vivres et de l'Eau de vie. Ces deux Engagez ont arrestè avec Eux Sept a huit familles de sauvages resident ordinairement sur lit concession du St. De Broüague a Labrador, quatre sauvages du Poste de Mingan et trois du Poste des Sept Isles dependant des Traittes du Domaine du Roy, Et le S. fornèl vient de Renvoïer a la Baïe St. Louis le même Bâtiment conduit par Jean Le Cour Le Remontrant n'auroit aucune opposition a former a l'Entreprise du S. fornèl si Effectivement Elle pouvoit tendre a un Etablissement de Pêche, mais il est aisè de juger qu'il n'a d'autre vus clue de faire la Traitte non seulement avec les sauvages des Postes de Mingan, Labrador, Riviere St. Augustin, St. Modet, Baïe des châteaux, Mecatina, Cap St. Charles et autres Postes Etablis avant lui sur la Coste du Nord du fleuve St. Laurent mais aussi avec les sauvages des Postes du Domaine tint au bord de la Mar que dans la profondeur des Terres. sole object of the permission requested and obtained by him. So far, he has no concession, either of the bay of Kitchechatchou, or of the so-called bay of St. Louis; nevertheless, he left at this latter bay, one Jean Pilotte and his son with provisions and some brandy. These two engagés have induced to stay with them seven or eight Indian families who ordinarily reside on the Sieur De Brouages concession at Labrador [Bradore Bay], four Indians of the post of Mingan and three from the post of Sept Isles depending upon [an outpost] the trades of the King's Domaine, and the Sieur Fornel has just despatched back to the bay of St. Louis the same vessel under the direction of Jean Le Cour. The petitioner would have no objection to the Sieur Fornel forming his establishment if he were really establishing a fishery, but it is obvious that he has no other end in view than that of trading, not only with the Indians of the posts of Mingan, Labrador, river St. Augustin, St. Modet, Baye des Chateaux, Mecatina, Cap St. Charles and other posts established before him on the north shore of the river St. Lawrence, but also with the Indians of the posts of the Domaine, both on the sea shore and in the interior. In fact, he took no step whatever towards fulfilling his chief and sole objective, which was to make the discovery of the bay of Kitchechatchou. He did not go there, and therefore does not know yet whether it is possible or not to form thereat a fishery for seal or other oil-producing fish, such being nevertheless the reason advanced for the concession he is requesting. He fixes himself at a bay which he calls bay St. Louis, situated a great distance from the bay of Kitchechatchou, the coast of which is lined with elevated islets constantly swept by the sea in all kinds of weather, and whereon one could not cast any net for a seal-fishery nor form any establishment for the fishery of other oil-producing fish. Jean n'est point un sujet propres a ces Pesches. Le S. fornèl ne l'a choisi que par ce qu'aïant ête Emploïe pendant bien des annèes dans les Traitte du Domaine en qualité d'Engagè, JI [sic.] l'a crû plus capable qu'aucun autre de faire la Traitte, et d'attirer a lui les sauvages du Domaine des Lacs des Naskapis, Atchouanipi, Mankougan, Mistassins et Choburonchouane, par ce qu'il peut les connoitre, qu'il soit lours Langucs, et peut les persuader qu'il leur sera plus aisè de venir en traitte avec lui dans la Baïe St. Louïs que d'aller a leur ordinaire chercher les francois que le Remontrant Envoie dans les Lacs cy dessus nonnez Dans quelle autre vüe auroit il dèja arrestè avec lui les sept ou huit familles sauvages de Labrador, les quatre sauvages de Mingan, et les trois Sauvages des Sept Isles ? Pourquoi le S. fornèl auroit il chargè sur le Bâtiment qu'il vient de faire partir plus de marchandises de Traitte qu'il n'en Est Envoïe pour L'Equipement des deux Postes des Sept Isles et de Mingan, S'il Etoir vrai qu'il pensât seulement a un Etablissement de Pêches, et qu'il n'Eut pas en vue de se rendre naitre de la Traitte aver tons les sauvages du Nord. En tel prejet ne pent s'Exècuter que par la Ruine des Postes du Domaine ainsi que des autres Postes Etablis actuellement sur la Coste du Nord depuis les bornes du Domaine jusqu'au cap St. Charles ; Le Remontrant de peut se dispense d'y former opposition pour prevenir la dimution du produit ordinaire de la Traitte et la Ruine du fonds du Domaine de Sa Majestè JI [sic.] y est fondè sur des ordonnances de Monseigneur L'Intendant des doune et vingt trois mai 1733. Concernant les privileges de la Traitte de Tadounac [sic.] JI [sic.] y est olbigè par devoir en qualité de Directeur du Domaine, et JI [sic.] y a Interest [sic.] comme formier de lad. Traitte.

(Translation.)

Pilote, whose aid he has enlisted for his establishment, is not competent to carry on such fisheries. The Sieur Fornel selected him because the latter having spent several years in the trades of the Domaine as an engagé, he considered him to be in a better position than anyone else, to carry on trading and to attract to him the Indians of the Domaine from the lakes of Naskapis, Atchouanipi, Manikoagan, Mistassins and Cheburonchouane, as he can get acquainted with them, speaks their language and can convince them that they will find it more convenient to trade with him in the bay St. Louis than to go, as they usually do, in search of the Frenchmen whom the petitioner sends to the above mentioned lakes. To what other end would he have retained with him the seven or eight families of Indians of Labrador [Bradore Bay], the four Mingan Indians and the three Sept-Isles Indians ? Why would the Sieur Fornel have loaded on board of the vessel which he has just despatched a larger quantity of trailing goods than is being sent for the equipment of the two posts of Sept isles and Mingan, if he really only intended to form a fishery establishment and did not him to acquire the control of the trade with all the Indians in the north. Such an undertaking can only be carried out through the destruction of the posts of the Domaine as well as of the other posts established on the north shore from the limits of the Domaine as far as cape St. Charles. The petitioner cannot but record his opposition to the same in order to prevent the decrease of the customary produce of the trade and the ruin of the property of His Majesty's

Domaine. He is justified in so doing by the ordinances of Mousigneur the Intendant, under date of the twelfth and twenty-third of May respectively, 1733, concerning the rights of trading at Tadoussac, as to which he is duty bound as Directeur of the Domaine and in which he is interested as lessee of the said trade

Deffences, et le Remonstrant continuera ses Voeux pour la prospèritè.

Therefore, Nosseigneurs, the petitioner is justified in requesting most humbly that you do not grant the concession asked for by the Sieur Fornel, and should you deem fit to grant the same to him for the establishment of seal or other oil producing fishery in the bay of Kitchechatchou, that he be prohibited from settling, stopping or allowing any engagé in any other place than at the said bay of Kitchechatchou, and from carrying on, in the extent of the Domaine lands, directly or indirectly, any trade, with the Indians of the Domaine in any manner whatsoever, either in attracting them or in admitting them in whatever place he may establish himself, or in despatching into the interior Frenchmen or Indians in his service for the purpose of trading there : from making or causing to be made by his engagés or Indians allied with him any present or feasts to the Domaine Indians nor from sending any message to them, the whole under pain of a fine of three thousand livres payable one third to His Majesty and the remaining two thirds to the petitioner, and of confiscation, for the profit of the petitioner, of any goods, canoes and effects generally whatsoever which the said Sieur Fournel might, in violation of the said prohibition, send into the interior and of the pelts he may have traded there, and that the petitioner be given permission to search and inspect the vessels of the Sieur Fornel upon their arrival in the city and to have, through declaration from his engagés or members of his crews, information laid respecting such violations as may have been made of the said prohibition, and the petitioner shall not cease to pray for the prosperity of Your Graces.

Proposal of an Establishment in the bay of Kischatson for the promotion of trade between Frenchmen and Indians not yet acquainted with the former.

The Sieur Fornel, merchant of Quebec, obtained two years ago, permission to form a seal fishery establishment in the bay of Kitchechatsou.

The real objective of his project was to form in the interior above this bay a trading establishment where he hoped to attract the Indians who are trading at, the posts established on the north shore of the St. Lawrence river, and particularly those who resort to the posts of the Domaine, and thus secure for himself, to the exclusion of the lessees of the Domaine and the grantees of the posts on the Coste du Nord, the track with the Indians scattered in this part of Canada.

The Montagnais Indians, divided in several nations under the respective names of Mistassins, Chichertigaux. Papinachois, Nascapis, &c., residing in the interior of the Domaine lands, can only dans la profondeur des Terres du Domain ne peuvent se rendre dans les Postes qu'avec beaucoup de difficultés. Les Rivières qui peuvent les conduire des Lacs sur lesquels ils sont habitués aux postes françois et anglois sont d'une difficile navigation, pleines de sauts et de rapides qui les obligent a des portages presque continuels et très longs. D'ailleurs il ne se trouve point dans ces Pais d'Ecorces propres à faire des canots. En sorte que ces Sauvages n'ont que les Canots qu'ils peuvent avoir des françois et des anglois. En petite quantité, Et que la plus part sont obligés de faire presque tout le chemin a pied. Ils auraient au contraire beaucoup de facilité a se rendre à l'Etahissement que le S^r fornel se proposoit par la Rivière de Kitchechatson aussi large et aussi profonde que le Saguenau pourvu qu'on leur portat des Ecorces pour faire des les Canots qui leur seroient nécessaires.

Ceux de ces Sauvages qui occupent toute l'Etendue de Pais depuis le lac dit des Naskapis Jusqu'au détroit de Bellyse tant du costé de la Baie d'HUDSON que du costé du fleuve S^t Laurent S'attachent Seulement a la Chasse des animaux qui peuvent les nourrir et ne tuent que le Caribou Et les ours blancs. Ils ne connoissent les françois et les anglois que par relation des autres Sauvages qui traitient avec les uns et les autres ; lorsqu'ils tuent des martes et des Renards qu'on y Etre abondans et plus beaux que ceux de Mingan et de toute la coste du Labrador, Et dont ces sauvages négligent la Chasse, ils en consomment les peaux a leur habiliment et a ceux de leurs enfans.

Le S. Cugnet fermier des Traittes de Tadoussa a Eu ces Connoissances par le rapport de ses commis qu'il avoit chargés depuis plusieurs années de suite à l'en instruire avec les Sauvages memes, Et par les informations qu'il reach the posts with great difficulties. The Rivers through which, from the lakes frequented by them, they reach the French and English posts, are not easily navigable, have numerous falls and rapids compelling them to portage continually and to make very long portages. Moreover in these regions there is no bark suitable for the manufacture of canoes, so that the only canoes which these Indians have, are such as they can get from the French and English and in small numbers, and most of them must cover practically the whole distance on foot. On the contrary, it would be much easier for them to proceed to the establishment contemplated by the sieur Fornel on the river of Kitchechatsou is as broad and as deep as the Saguenay, provided they be given bark with which to make whatever canoes they would require.

Those amongst the Indians who occupy the whole extent of country from the lake called des Naskapis to the strait of Belleisle, both on the Hudson bay side and in the direction of the St. Lawrence, only hunt such animals as may provide them with food and only kill caribou and white bears. They only know the French and the English from what is told them by the other Indians who trade with either of them ; when they kill martens and foxes, which it is assured are there in abundance and finer than those of Mingan and of the whole coast of Labrador, the hunting of which these Indians neglect : they use the skills for clothing themselves and their children.

The Sieur Cugnet, lessee of the Traitte du Tadoussac, got such information through the reports of his clerks whom he had entrusted for seven consecutive years with the gathering of the same amongst the Indians themselves, and through the reports of several voyageurs of the Coste du Nord who had en prises de plusieurs voyageurs de la Coste du nord qui ont eu occasion de voir plusieurs fois les Sauvages des Terres. on lui a meme rapporté une Carte de Toute l'Etendue de ce Pais tracée par les Sauvages mêmes.

Le préjudice que l'Etablissement du S. Fornel causeroit a l'Exploitation des Traittes du domaine a déterminé, Monseigneur, a Expliquer a M^{rs} De Beauharnois et hocuquart les Intentions de Sa Majesté sur l'Entreprise du S^r Fornel. Les ordres qu'ils reçus a cet Egard ne Sont point encor connus.

Le Bien du Service de Sa Majesté Et l'augmentation de son domaine de Tadoussac En Canada sont des motifs suffisans de rendre compte à Monseigneur, des avantages que la Baie de Kitchechatsou petit procurer et des moyens de s'assurer de la possibilité ou, impossibilité du succès.

On peut former a quarante lieues dans la profondeur de la Baie de Kitchechatsou sur une rivière venant du Nord ouest qui s'y décharge un Etablissement de Traitte qui deviendroit en quelques années avantageux par ce que non seulement on attireroit les Sauvages accoutumés à Traitter avec les françois, mais que l'on parviendroit par la suite à accoutumer les Sauvages qui ne connoissent point encor les marchandises françoises à En faire usage par ou on les Engageroit à faire plus de Pelleteries, Et a les ménager mieux pour se procurer le secours de ces marchandises, on pourroit aussy y attirer les Sauvages qui vont a la Baie d'hudson parcequ'ils trouveroient la même facilité que les autres a venir a l'Etablissement de Kitchechatsou.

Cet établissement se faisant à quarante lieues dans la profondeur des Terres seroit hors de portée des Eskimaux qui Se tiennent ordinairement a l'Entree de la Baie Et ne remontent jamais dans la profondeur ni ne vont dans les bois par la crainte qu'ils ont des autres Sauvages avec lesquels ils sont toujours en Guerre.

had an opportunity to meet the Indians of the interior. He was even given a map of the whole extent of this country drawn by the Indians themselves.

Seeing the prejudice which the establishment of the Sieur Fornel might cause to the working of the Trades of the Domaine, Monseigneur, it has been decided to inform Mrs. de Beauharnois and Hocquart of His Majesty's intentions in connection with the Sieur Fornel's undertaking. The orders they have received in regard to this are not known, as yet.

The welfare of the service of His Majesty and the expansion of his Domaine de Tadoussac in Canada are sufficient reasons why Monseigneur should be made acquainted with the advantages the bay of Kitchechatsou may bring and with the means of ascertaining any chance of success or failure.

Forty leagues in the upper portion of the bay of Kitchechatsou, on a river flowing from the north west and emptying therein, an establishment for trading could be formed and, in the course of a few years, it would prove remunerative, as not only would it attract the Indians accustomed to deal with the French, but, later on, one would succeed in getting the Indians who are not yet familiar with French goods to use the same, thus inducing them to secure more pelts and take greater care of them in order that they might obtain the benefit of such goods ; the Indians who go to Hudson bay would also be drawn there as it would be just as easy for them as for the others to come to the establishment of Kitchechatsou.

This establishment would be formed forty leagues inland and would thus be out of reach of the Eskimaux who generally stop at the entrance to the bay and never venture in the bay nor in the woods for fear of the other Indians with whom they continually are at war.

Quatre ou cinq hommes suffiroient pour garder ce Poste et y faire la Traitte, il seroit Seulement nécessaire de les y transporter avec leurs vivres Et les Marchandises de Traitte dans un batiment de Soixante tonneaux au moins. Ce batiment serviroit tous les ans à apporter les Pelleteries de la Traitte, Et porter les Vivres Et les marchandises de l'Equipement.

Le Bâtiment Seroit obligé de passer devant les Endroits ou les Eskimaux Se tiennent ; mais ils seroient point à craindre, pourvû que personne de l'Equipage n'y descende a terre, que l'on Evite avec Soin de les harceler, Et que l'on s'attache au contraire a leur donner toutes les démonstrations d'amitié qui pourront les rassurer, en se tenant cependant très Exactly sur ses gardes, pourquoi ce batiment doit être armé de dix à douze hommes avec quatre Pierriers les fusils et autres munitions Suffisantes pour leur défense en cas d'attaque.

Les Eskimaux paroissent naturellement plus ouverts et plus Gais que les Sauvages montagnais et naskapis, mais l'envie qu'ils ont de s'emparer impunément des Ustancils françois qu'ils sont anxieux d'avoir les rend voleurs et Traitres. it Est moralement certain que l'on les affranchiroit En leur fournissant les Ustancils Et les marchandises qu'ils souhaitent, et leur faisant Connoître qu'ils peuvent s'assurer de les avoir de bonne de Volonté. On ne doute point de trouver dans la baie de Kitchechatsou des Endroits propres a la Pêche du loup marin, de la Baleine et de la Vache marin, il y a des isles vis a vis les deux pointes qui en forment l'Entree. Le batiment en feroit la decouverte en allant a l'Etablissement de la Traitte Et a son retour, Lorsqu'on aura un endroit certain pour un Etablissement de Peche, il sera nécessaire d'y construire un fort a l'Epreuve des Surprises des Eskimaux. Garny de six pierriers, armes et munitions avec vint hommes pour le garder

Four or five would be enough to man this post and carry on the trade ; to take them there with their foodstuffs and trading goods it would be absolutely necessary to have a vessel of sixty tons at least. This vessel would be used every year for the conveyance of the traded pelts and to carry the food and merchandise of the equipment.

The vessel would have to pass opposite the places where the Eskimaux reside ; but there would be nothing to apprehend from them, so long no member of the crew landed. Any interference with them is to be carefully avoided, and, on the contrary, they should be made the object of friendly demonstrations in order to allay their fears, although at the same time, constant watch will have to be kept, and for this reason the vessel must be provided with ten or twelve men and fitted with four swivel-guns, muskets and ammunition necessary for their defence in the event of an attack.

The Eskimaux seem to be naturally more open and candid than the Montagnais Indians, but their great inclination to seize with impunity whatever French utensils they are most anxious to have makes thieves and traitors of them. It is probably sure that they could be tamed if they were supplied with the utensils and the goods they want and were informed that they could procure them readily. There is no doubt but that in the bay of Kitchechatsou could be found suitable places for seal, whale and porpoise fishery ; there being some islands and islets opposite the two points forming the entrance to the bay. The vessel would make the discovery of them either on its way to the establishment or on the return trip. When a safe place has been found for a fishery establishment, a fort will have to be erected strong enough to resist the attacks by the Eskimaux, commandés par un maitre sage et habile, Capable d'Empêcher Son monde de s'Exposer Indiscretement aux attaques imprévues des Eskimaux En l'Ecartant soit pour la chasse ou la pêche, Et de prevenir en même tems toutes les insultes que l'on pourroit faire imprudemment a ces Sauvages, les recevant au contraire humainement lorsqu'ils se présenteroient pour de demander ce qu'ils voudroient avoir Par ce moien on les affranchiroit Seurement En quelques annees au point de S'en Servir utilement pour les pêches. Les nommes Augustin Baby et Charles Le Cour navigateurs canadiens les ont vus plusieurs fois, ont Ete plus d'une Journée de suite au milieu d'Eux, et ont traité avec Eux amiablement. Ces Sauvages les Connoissent et paroissent flattés de les entendre nommer l'un ou L'autre.

En réunissant au Domaine du Roi Et a la Traitte de Tadoussac La Baie de Kitchechatsou Et les Rivières qui S'y déchargent, les Etablissements de Traitte que L'on pourroit y faire ne porteroient aucun préjudice a la Traitte de Tadoussac des qu'ils en feront partie.

Le Succès de l'Etablissement de Traitte dans la profondeur de la Baie peut être regardé presque comme indubitable. La réussite de ceux de Peche est tres vraisemblable. Les uns et les autres par conséquent sont un moien d'augmenter de beaucoup les fonds du Domaine vulgairement appelé La Traitte de Tadoussac. Mais comme le Succes n'est en pas encor connu, qu'il Est indispensable d'y hazarder des dépenses Tant pour la découverte que pour les Etablissements La Traitte de Tadoussac jointe pour neuf annees ; à l'Enterprise de ces Etablissements au prix actuel du Bail de cette Traitte facilitent les moiens d'y prevenir et dédommageroit En partie des dépenses à provided with six swivel-guns, arms and ammunition, along with twenty men to guard it under the command of a master wise and skilful who could prevent his people from carelessly leaving themselves open to the sudden onslaughts of the Eskimaux who would be kept at a distance either for the fishing or the hunting, and prevent at the same time any insults that might be unwisely offered to these aborigines ; on the contrary they would have to be made welcome when they would ask what they might require, thus they could surely be tamed in a few years to the extent of profitably employing them at the fisheries. One Augustin Raby and one Charles Le Cour, Canadian navigators, saw them on several occasions, stopped with them more than a day at a time, and traded with them in a friendly way. The natives knew them and were evidently pleased at the very mention of their respective names.

By the reunion, to the King's Domaine and to the Trade of Tadoussac, of the bay of Kitchechatsou and the rivers emptying therein, whatever establishments for trading could be formed there would not prejudice the trade of Tadoussac so long as they form part thereof.

The success of the establishment of trading in the interior of the bay may be considered as practically unquestionable. The success of the fishery establishments is also most likely. Therefore, both area means whereby the property of the Domaine commonly known as the Trade of Tadoussac could be increased. But, as the success is not yet known, and as it is necessary to incur expenditures both for the discovery and the establishments, reuniting the trade of Tadoussac for nine years to the undertaking of such establishments at the present price of this trade's lease offers the way to success and would compensate for part of the costs to be incurred, supposing that it does not meet with the success anticipated.

Should the trading and fishery establishments prove successful, His Majesty would derive therefrom the advantage of forming, in nine years, with no expense, and even without any decrease in his present income, an establishment which would materially increase the value of his domain of Tadoussac and which, upon the expiration of the nine years lease, would bring him a rental price greater than that which could be obtained from the trade of Tadoussac by itself.

Sieur Cugnet, present lessee of the Trade of Tadoussac, and Sieur Estebe, in charge of His Majesty's stores at Quebec, propose to undertake the establishments hereinbefore submitted in the bay of Kitchechatsou and rivers emptying therein and to advance the costs thereof, should Monseigneur be pleased to grant them for the space of nine consecutive years beginning on the first of October, 1747, and ending on the same day in the year 1756, the lease of the Trade of Tadoussac, reuniting to and including in the same the bay of Kitchechatsou together with the neighbouring islands and islets, lakes and rivers emptying therein, and all the lands not conceded contained in the whole extent of country from the said bay of Kitchechatsou, the point of Belleisle to the bay of HUDSON for the price and sum of 4,500 livres, annual rent, and on the condition that they shall form within the first year of the lease the sedentary trading establishment in the river and in the interior of the bay of Kitchechatsou of which they shall be held to forward a plan to Monseigneur in the second Le Sr Fornel avait expédié l'année dernière sur l'arrière saison un petit bâtiment pour Labrador dans la vue de continuer les découvertes de la Baye des Esquimaux 3 ou 4 engagés devoient y rester pour hyverner ; nous avons appris ce printems par le retour de l'équipage que le batteau avait fait naufrage à la Coste de Terre neuve Il a cependant envoyé ce printemps encor un batteau de 50 tonneaux qui est de retour et qui a raporté 4 a 500^l de fanons qui ont esté traitor avec quelques Esquimaux, il sera peut estre convenable dans le nouveau bail de la ferme de Tadoussac, qui sera fait après l'expiration de l'ancien, de comprendre cette Baye dans les limites du Domaine ; cette circonstance pourroit faire trouver un prix plus avantageux de la ferme, Monsieur Hoc quart l'estime ainsy, it examinera ce qui en pout estre.

Canada, October 12th, 1744.

Monseigneur,

. . . The Sieur Fornel despatched last year [1743], in the last days of the season, a small vessel for Labrador with a view to continuing the discoveries of the bay des Esquimaux ; two or three engages were to winter there. We have been told this spring by the returned crew that the vessel had been wrecked on the coast of Newfoundland. Nevertheless, he despatched another vessel this spring, of 50 tons, which vessel has returned and brought back some 4 or 500^l. of whale fins that had been traded with the Esquimaux ; it may be expedient, in the new lease of the ferme de Tadoussac to be drawn up upon the expiration of the former one, to include this bay in the limits of the Domaine; this fact might tend to secure a better price for the lease; Monsieur Hocquart is of this opinion ; he will consider what there may be in it.

C'est dans cette vue qu'en l'année 1744, j'ai pris la liberté de proposer au Ministre d'entreprendre l'établissement de la Baie de Kitchichatsou es Rivières y affluentes s'il lui plaisoit n'accorder pour neuf années consécutives. à commencer au premier octobre 1746, et finir à pareil jour de l'année 1755. It was in this view that in the year 1744, I took the liberty of proposing to the Minister to undertake the establishment of the Baie de Kitchichatsou and the rivers emptying thereinto, that he would be pleased to grant to me for nine consecutive years, commencing October 1st, 1746, and ending on the same day of the year 1755, the lease of the Tadoussac Trade uniting to it the Baie de Kitchichatsou with the islands and islets adjacent, the lakes and rivers which empty therein and all the unconceded lands contained in the extent of territory, from the said Baie de Kitchichatsou, taking in the limits of the concession of Cape Charles, for four thousand five hundred livres a year, on condition of forming during the first year of the lease the sedentary trading establishment in the river and interior of the Baie de Kitchichatsou, and to furnish the second year a plan and proces-verbal of this establishment drawn up by the clerk who will be stationed there for trade, and also to construct there during the course of the lease establishments practicable for the seal, whale and walrus fishery, of which an exact account should be equally rendered during the year, in which par procès verbaux de visite et d'Etablissement dans l'année qu'ils pourroient être faits et en outre aux autres charges clauses et conditions du Bail qui n'a été fait de la Traite de Tadoussac le 21 août 1737.

Ou pent former a quarante lieues dans la profondeur de la Baie de Kitchechatsou sur une Rivière venant du nord Ouest qui s'y Dècharge un Etablissement de Traitte ou l'on peut non seulement attirer les sauvages accoutunès à traitter aver les francois, mais aussi ceux qui vent à la baie d'Hudson parce que les uns les autres trouverciant la meme facilitè a venir à l'Etablissement de Kitchechatsou au lieu qu'il leur est difficile de se rendre à la Baïe d'Hudson et aux postes francois ètablis le long de la coste du nord du fleuve de Saint Laurent ; on peut meme accoutuner dans la suite les Sauvages qui ne connoissent point encor la Traitte avec les Francois ni avec les anglois a faire plus d'usage des marchandises francoises par ou on les engageroit a faire plus de pelleteries, et a les mènager mieux pour se procurer le secours de ces marchandises.

On assure que les martres et les renards sont plus shondanrs dans cette ètendue de païs, et plus beaux, que dans toute la coste de la Brador, mais que les Sauvages en nègligent la chasse ou en consonnent les peaux à leur habillement et celui do leurs enfans parce qu'ils ne connoissent les frabcois et les anglois que par la relation des autres sauvages qui traittent avec les uns et les autres ainsi le succès de cet etablissement pour la Traitte pout être regardè comme certain.

Ceux qui seront destinès a le faire en y allant et venant dècouvrir dans la Baïe des endroits propres à la pesche du loup marin, de la baleine et de la vache marine et on ne doute presque point d'y en trouver parsequ'il y a des isles vis à vis les deux pointes qui forment l'entrèe de cette Bäie si l'en they are formed ; also in addition, to the other burdens, clauses and conditions of the lease, which was made with him for the Tadoussac Trade, on August 21st, 1737.

There may be made at forty leagues within the Baie de Kitchechatsou on a river coming from the north west, which empties in it, a trading post, where one might attract not only the Indians accustomed to deal with the French, but also those who go Hudson bay, since both will find the same facility to come to the establishment at Kitchechatsou, instead of which it is difficult for them to go to Hudson bay or to the French posts established along the North Shore of the river St. Lawrence. One may even eventually accustom the Indians who do not know the trade of either French or English goods, by which they would be incited to obtain more pelts, and more induced to procure for themselves the benefit of these goods.

It is certain that the martens and the foxes are more abundant and of finer quality in this extent of territory than in all the coast of Brador, but that the Indians neglect to hunt them or use the skins for their clothing and that of their children, because they know the French and the English only by what has been told them by the other Indians who trade with both, and thus the success of this establishment for the trade may be regarded as certain.

Those who will have the undertaking of same may, when going and coming, discover within the bay proper places for the fishing of seal, whale and walrus, and it is almost certain that these will be found there because there are islands opposite the two points which form the mouth of the said

permettoit à d'autres qu'au fermier de Tadoussac de former cet Etablissement ce seroit leur donner les noïens d'y attirer les sauvages qui commercent dans les postes du Domaine et de causer un très grand prèjudice à la traitte de Tadoussac.

Le projet du Sieur Fornel dans la permission qu'il avoit obtenue d'ètablie la Baïe de Kitchechatsou avoit ètè de s'attirer la Traitte avec les sauvages des postes du Domaine tant du bord de ka mer que des profondeurs, et ceux des postes francois ètablis sur la coste du nord du fleuve Saint Laurent depuis la Traitte Tadoussac jusqu'su cap Saint Charles.

La rèunion de la Baie de Kitchechatson a la Traitte de Tadoussac remédie a cet inconvenient et supposè que le succès ne rèponde pas a ce qu'on en espère, on en tirera du moms l'utilitè d'ètre dèabusè des idèes avantageuses qu'on s'est formèes de ces etablissemens depuis quelques annèes et de ne plus penser a cette entreprise qui peut toujours servir de prètèxte au dessein d'y attirer lcs sauvages de tout le nord an prèjudice des postes etablis.

Si au contraire la rèussite la est telle qu'on a lieu d'espèrer Sa Majestè en retireroit l'avantage de se former un ètablissement qui amèlioreroit de beaucoup le fonde de Son Domaine duquel elle pourroit avoit après le premier bail un prix de fermes plus fort qu'elle ne pourra jamais l'avoir de la Traitte de Tadoussac, et cola sans ausune dèpense, sans meme rein diminuer de son revenu actual, puisqu'on ne pourroit demander aucun prix de ferme de la concession qu'en pourroit faire de la Bäie de Kitchechatson à tout autre qu'au fermier de Tadoussac attendu les dèpenses a faire pour la dècouverte et les Etablissemens.

bay. If others than the lessee of Tadoussac were permitted to form this establishment, they would be given the means to attract there the Indians who trade in the posts of the Domaine and to cause a very great prejudice to the Tadoussac Trade.

The proposal of the Sieur Fornel in the concession which has been granted unto him to establish the Baie de Kitchechatsou, was to attract to himself the trade with the Indians of the Domaine posts both from the sea shore and from the interior, and those of the French posts established on the north shore of the river St-Lawrence from the Tadoussac Trade as far as cape Saint-Charles.

The reuniting of the Baie de Kitchechatsou to the Tadoussac Trade remedies this inconvenience and supposing the success would not be that which is expected from same, one will find it at least useful to be disabused of the ideas of the advantages which one has conceived with reference to these establishments since several years and to think no more of this undertaking which may always serve as a pretext for the scheme of attracting there the Indians of the whole North to the prejudice of the posts already established.

If, on the contrary, the success is such as one can conceive it will be, His Majesty would gain from it the advantage of forming an establishment which would increase a great deal the value of his Domaine for which he could obtain, at the end of the first lease, a price of location much higher than that he could ever obtain for the Tadoussac Trade only, and this without any disbursement and without even affecting his present revenue, as one could not ask any price for the lease of the concession that might be granted of the Baie de Kitchechatsou except from the lessee of Tadoussac because of the expenses to be incurred for the discovery and the establishments.

La situation malheureuse ou n'ont rèduit l'exploitation des forges de Saint Maurice, et les suites des engagemens que j'ai ètè forcè de prendre pour soutenir cette entreprise n'ont mis dans la nècessitè de demander au Ministre la continuation du Bail de la Traitte de Tadoussac en y rèunissant la Bäie de

Kitchechatson aux conditions vy dessus exprimées, et en m'accordant la pain leveè du sequestre des effets provenans de la Traitte pour ne laisser la libre disposition tant de l'exploitation que des effets en provenans, à la charge outre le prix du Bail de remettre entre les mains du Trèsoirier de la Marine à Quebec la somme de dix mille livres chaque a pendre sur les castors provenans de la dite Traitte.

Il y a quatre ans que je travaille à obtenir les moiens d'acquitter les dettes des forges et eviter na ruine totale, les graces que Monsieur l'Intendant conformèmment aux dècisions du Ministre a bien voulu ne procurer pour n'en faciliter les moiens n'ont pu encor me conduire qu'a asseurer aux creanciers sur le poste de Temiscaming une somme de 31 oo pendant neuf annèes a commencer du nois d'aoust 1747. Les deux autres postes de Michipicoton et de Gamanistigoiq qui n'ont ètè accordès par le meme notif ne sont point encor affermes je ne puis en jouir que dans l'annèe prochaine. Je ne scai point ce qu'ils me pourrent produire, mais je ne puis en espèror plus du double de ce que j'en paë à Sa Majestè, comme j'ai àffermè Temiscaming ainsi tout le secours que je puis tirer des Trois postes en neuf ans peut aller au plus à soixante sept mille cinq cens livres qui ne suffisent pas a beaucoup près a acquitter plus de cinquante mille ecus dont je ne trouve aujourd'ay chargè pour les Dettes des forges sans espèrance d'aucun recours sur mes

(Translation.)

The unfortunate position which I was put into by the development of the Forges of the Saint Maurice, and by the results of the engagements I was forced to contract in order to support this undertaking, have compelled me to ask the Minister to continue the lease of the Tadoussac Trade, reuniting unto it the Baie de Kitchechatsou according to the conditions hereabove mentioned, and in granting unto me the withdrawal of the sequestration of the effects proceeding from the Trade and leaving unto me the free disposal either for the development as of the effects proceeding from same, under the condition to remit, besides the rental of the lease, into the hands of the Treasurer of Marine at Quebec, the sum of ten thousand livres each year to be taken in the beaver skins obtained from the said trade.

For four years, I have been struggling to find the means to pay the debts of the Forges and to prevent my complete ruin, The favours which Mr. the Intendant, according to the decisions of the Minister, has willingly procured unto me in order to facilitate the settlement of same have only enabled me, up to now, to assure to the creditors, upon the post of Temiscaming, the payment of a sum of 31 00 during nine years to begin from the month of August 1747, as the two other posts of Michipicoton and of Gamanistigoia, which were granted unto me by the same agreement, are not as yet leased, I shall not enjoy same before next year. I do not know what they will pay me, but I cannot expect more than the double of what I pay to His Majesty. As I have also leased Temiscaming, all that I can draw from the three posts in nine years is liable to amount at the utmost to sixty seven thousand five hundred livres, which is hardly sufficient for the payment of the fifty thousand écus, the burden of which I have to-day to support in connection with the debts of the Forges without any hopes of a right of action against my associates, as they have nothing, associès parcequ'ils n'ont rein et sans que l'on puisse dire que j'aie rein profitè dans cette entreprise laquelle j'ai sacrifiè pendant sept annèes de suite gratuitement mes soins je suis seul poursuivi pour les remplacer.

Je n'ai pu amener les Crèamciers des forges a des arrangemens convenables pour fixer leur paiemens et arreter les interests. Je n'ai pas meme osè les leur demander n'aïant a leur prèsender de certain que la somme de 37500. et ne pouvant leur assurer le produit des deux autres postes tant que la guerre durera, les intèrêts a'accoumulent d'annèe en annèe et non sort devient chaque annèe plus dèplorable.

Si j'avois pu obtenir en 1742. la libre administration de ferme de Tadoussac en me chargeant de paier chaque annèe entre les mains du Trèsorier de la marine 10000' sur les Castors provenans de Tadoussac, qu'il ètoit ègalement sur et simple d'arrester entre les mains de l'agent de la Compagnie des Indes, il y auroit actuellement 40000' de paie sur les dettes de la compagnie des forges, le sequestre n'a liè les mains. Je n'ai pu disposer d'un sol pour des occasions avantageuses prèsentés et certaines que les retours de Tadoussac auroient pu faciliter.

Il n'y a eu ausun profit sur la Traitte de Tadoussac dans les deux deraières annèes, il y a jusqu'è prèsent 3333³ 18. 6. de perte rèelle sur l'annèe 1745 qui ne peut etre rèparèe que par l'augmentation du prix du Castor, si cite peut avoir lieu pour celui que j'ai fourni a la Compagnie des Indes, J'ai tout lieu de craindre d'en essüier une encore plus considèrable. Cette annèe la chasse de loup marin devoit produire plus qu'elle n'a fair depuis longtems par l'abondanee extraordinaire de ce poisson, il y a en moms d'huiles quo dams and it cannot be said that this undertaking has been in any way profitable to me to which I have sacrificed freely during seven years my cares, my work and I might also say, my money, as I am the only one to be prosecuted for the repayment of same.

I have been unable to induce the creditors of the Forges to agree to proper arrangements for the fixing of payments and interest. I did not even dare to ask them as I could only promise as certain the sum of 375000 livres, and being unable to assure unto them the proceeds of the two other posts so long as the war will last. The interest accrues from year to year and my position becomes, each year, more and more deplorable.

In 1742, if I could have obtained the free administration. of the lease of Tadoussac in endeavouring to pay each year into the hands of the Treasurer of Marine 10000 livres out of the beaver obtained from Tadoussac, this sum being as easily and as certainly collected in the hands of the agent of the Compagnie des Indes, 40000 livres would be paid at present on the debts of the Forges company, but the sequestration has tied my hands. I did not find the opportunity of paying one sol for advantageous occasions, present and certain, which might have been facilitated by the returns of Tadoussac.

In the two last years, there was no profit whatever on the Tadoussac Trade. Up to the present, there is 3333.³ 18s. 6d. in actual loss for the year 1745 and same cannot be covered unless the price of beaver is increased, if said increase can be made on the beaver that I have transferred to the Compagnie des Indes. Everything leads me to believe that I shall experience still greater loss.

This year the seal hunting should have yielded more than it did since a long time because of the extraordinary abundance of this fish, but there has been less oil than in the preceding years on les années précédentes parce que la poudre a manqué dans les postes. La Traite des Pelleteries peut être également diminuée par la même raison. Les Sauvages ayant manqué de munitions pendant tout l'hiver les huiles et les pelleteries ne se vendront pas vraisemblablement avec plus d'avantage que l'année dernière, surtout si elles sont vendues par adjudication.

Les marchandises qui sont trouvées restantes dans les magasins des postes l'automne dernier suivant les inventaires que les commis en ont envoyés montent à 19438^l 1^s. 11. Elles sont vraisemblablement consommées à présent d'autant que je n'ai pas pu en envoyer ce printemps ainsi je ne dois pas compter que cet article fasse à la fin de mon Bail un objet de remboursement il ne me reste en magasin à Québec que quelques marchandises très désassorties qui ne font pareillement qu'un très petit objet.

Je n'ai par conséquent pour satisfaire aux dettes des forges que les deux Batimens de mer qui n'ont servi à l'exploitation pendant mon Bail, et ce qui restera du produit de la vente des retours après avoir payé ce qui est dû pour munitions et vivres achetées pour l'exploitation dont il me reste une grande partie en magasin à Québec pour l'envoi du mois d'août le produit de ces retours est très incertain. J'ai moins d'huile que l'année dernière tout n'annonce qu'il y aura beaucoup moins de martres parce que j'ai été informé que dans les postes de Mingan et au dessous on en a fait très peu.

Par le retour du Batteau le Saint François des sept îles et de la Golette je suis certain que dans les deux postes des sept îles et des îlots de Jérémie il y aura sept cents martres de moins que l'année dernière le Commis de Checoutimy par sa dernière lettre n'annonce également une diminution considérable sur les martres il y aura aussi moins de castors. l'hiver-account of a lack of gun-powder at the posts. The fur trade may also show a decrease for the same reason. The Indians having been short of ammunition during the whole winter, the oil and the furs will not likely sell to more advantage than last year, especially if they are sold by auction.

The goods which were found to remain in the stores of the posts last fall according to the inventories furnished by the clerks amount to 19,438^l 1^s 11^d. Probably they are disposed of now as I have been unable to send any this spring, so I cannot rely upon this article as being, at the termination of my lease, a subject of reimbursement, and I have in store at Québec only some badly assorted goods which constitute also a very small asset.

In consequence, to pay the debts of the Forges, I have only the two sea-going vessels with which I carried on business during the term of my lease, and that which will remain of the proceeds of the sale of the returns after I have paid what I owe for ammunition and supplies bought for the development. A large portion of same I have in my possession in store at Québec for the shipment of the month of August, the proceeds of these returns being most uncertain. I have less oil than last year, everything tells me that there will be much fewer martens as I have been informed that at the posts of Mingan and below a small number of same has been traded.

By the return of the vessel the " Saint-François " from the Seven Islands and of the schooner, I have the assurance that in the two posts of the Seven Islands and of the Jérémie Islets, there will be seven hundred martens less than last year ; in his latest letter the clerk at Checoutimy reports a considerable decrease in the number of marten ; there will also be fewer beaver. The wintering ment de Choïanupï n'a pas rëussi quoiqu'il y soit venu plus de sauvages qu'il n'en vient d'ordinaire. les martres ont manque gënëralement dans tout le nord les Sauvages n'ont pu chasser au Caribou ils ont ètè obligès de vivre au poisson et aux vivres françois presque tous ont souffert beaucoup, et quelques uns sont morts de fain dans le Bois.

Toutes les apparences sont que ce qui me resters à la fin de mon bail ne pourra païer plus du tiers des dettes des forges, si mem il pent y suffire j'ai desja exposè cy dessus ce quien sera païe par les trois postes de Temiscaming, Michipicoton et Gamanistigoïa et dans quels détails il est certain que dëpouillè des traittes de Tadoussac les crëamciers des forges ne ne voiant plus aucumes ressources feront vendre mes meubles et immeubles, et me conduiront moi et ma famille à la dernière misère.

La vente de tout ce que je possède en meubles et en immeubles dans les circonstances prësentes ne suffira pas avec le produit de la ferme de Tadoussac à la fin du Bail, et celui des trois postes d'en haut a païer tout ce qui est dû aujourduy en principal et intèrets qui augmentent tous les jours.

Il me restera mes appointemens pour subsister tant que je vivroi : mais he puis mourir d'un jour à l'autre il me faut meme que la duretè de ma situation pour avancer me mort. dès que j'aurai les yeux fermès mes appointemens cessant, il ne rests pour ressource à ma femme et a mes enfans que de se mettre en service ou demander l'aumône.

Aujourduy meme quand je resterois dans la situation ou je suis actuellement quand j'aurais l'exploitation des Traittes pendant plusieurs annès le sequestre subsistant je me trouve dans l'affreuse impossibilitè de pouvoir procurer aucun Etablissement a ma famille qu'un de mes enfans eut ètè at Chouanipi has not been successful although many more Indians came there than usual. The martens were scarce generally in the whole of the North ; the Indians have not been able to hunt the caribou ; they have been compelled to live on fish and on French supplies ; nearly all of them have suffered much, and some of them died from starvation in the woods.

It appears that the amount I will have on hand at the expiration of my lease will not cover more than one third of the Forges debts, and I am not even sure it will do that ; I have already explained hereabove what shall be paid on same by the three posts of Temiscaming, Michipicoton and Gamanistigoia and in which way ; it is certain that being deprived of the Tadoussac Trades and the creditors of the Forges, seeing that I have no pecuniary means whatever, will cause my movables and immovables to be sold, and will reduce myself and family to the direst poverty.

In the present circumstances, the sale of all that I possess in movables and immovables will not be sufficient, together with the proceeds of the lease of Tadoussac at the termination of the lease and with the proceeds of the three posts above [Quebec] to pay all that is now outstanding in capital and the interest which accrue, each day.

There will remain my salary to support me up to my last moment ; but I may die any day and the hardships I am struggling against can only accelerate my death. When my eyes are closed for ever, my salary being discontinued, the only means of support for my wife and my children will be to lure themselves or to live on charity.

Even to-day, if I were to remain in the position I am at present, if I were to develop the Trades for several years to come, as the sequestration is being maintained, I find myself in the frightful impossibility of providing any establishment for my family, and, if one of my children were appelé à l'état eslesiastique que je ne puis pas lui assurer un titre clèrical. Je ne puis disposer de rien. Je ne pense pas qu'il y ait de situation plus accablante pour qui que ce soit dans le plus has ordre. C'est ou me reduit aujourduy la malheureuse facilitè que j'ai eue de me livrer au soutien de l'exploitation des forges.

Je touche au moment de ma ruine absolue les malheures que je viens d'exposer et que je prévois me sont inèvibales ; il ne me rests d'espèrance que clans la boutè de Monsieur l'Intendant. C'est de lui seul je puis en attendre la fin, si j'obtiens ce que je demande au Ministre, et qu'il a renvoie à sa decision en me marquant qu'il est persuade que Monsieur l'Intendant aura ègard à mes propositions si elles peuvent le conciliar avec les interets du Roy.

Ces propositions ont ètè de suplier le Ministre de n'accorder la continuation du bail de la Traitte de tadoussac en y rèunissant la Bale de Kitchechatzou avec les isles et islets adjacents, lacs et Rivières qui s'y dèchargent et toutes les terres non concedèes contenues en l'etendus de païs depuis la dite Bäie de Kitehechatson et pointe de Bellisle a pendre des limites de la concession du Cap Charles jusqu'a la Baie d'Hudson pendant neuf annèes consècutives à commencer du premier octobre prochain et finit a pareil jour 175 moiennant le prix et somme de 4500. par chacune des dites neuf annèes, moiennant qu'il me soit fait main levèe du sèquestre stabli sur les effets de la dite Traitte et que la librrre administration de la ferme me soit laissèe a la charge de paier chaque annèe entre les mains du Trèsorier de la Marine pout servir à l'acquittement des dettes des forges, outre le prix du bail la somme de 10000/ sur les castors provenans de la traitte de Tadoussac laquelle somme de 10000/ pourra estre arrestèe entre les mains de l'agent de la Compagnie des Indes called to enter the ecclesiastical orders, I would be unable to secure for him a clerical title. I cannot dispose of anything. I do not think there exists a more crushing situation for anybody of the lowest condition. This is where I have been driven to-day by the unfortunate readiness with which I undertook to support the development of the Forges.

I am on the verge of absolute ruin : the hardships related hereabove and those I foresee are unavoidable ; my only hope rests upon the kindness of M. the Intendant. He alone can put an end to all these evils, if I am granted the favours asked for to the Minister and if the latter appeals to the decision of the former in telling me that he is persuaded M. the Intendant will take my proposals into consideration if they can be reconciled with the interests of the King.

These proposals have been to request the Minister to grant unto me the renewal of the lease of the Tadoussac Trade uniting to it the Baie de Kitchechatsou with the islands and islets adjacent, the lakes and rivers which empty therein and all the unconceded lands contained in the extent of territory, from the said Baie de Kitchechatsou and point of Belleisle, taking in the limits of the concession of Cape Charles as far as Hudson bay for nine consecutive years, commencing October first next and ending on the same day in the year 1755, for the price and sum of 4500'' for each of the said nine years, provided withdrawal is made of the sequestration established on the effects of the said Trade and that the free administration of the lease be left to me at the condition to pay each year into the hands of the Trésorier de la Marine as a means of paying the debts of the Forges, besides the price of the lease, the sum of 10000''. out of the beaver obtained from the Tadoussac Trade, the said sum of 10,000''. may be collected from the hands of the agent of the Compagnie des Indes and as to the establishment of the sedentary trade on the bay and in the et quant a L'Etablissement de la Baïe sedentaire de Traitte dans la rivière et profondeur de la Baïe de Kitchechatson, et d'en rapporter dans la seconde année un plan avec un procès verbal du dit Etablissement dressèpar le commis qui t sera etabli pour la traitte et d'y faire pareillement dans le cours du Bail les Etablissements possibles de pesche de loup marin baleine et vache marine dont sera pareillement rendu compte par procès verbaux de visite et d'Etablissement dans l'année qu'ils pourront etre fairs, et en outre aux autres charges clauses et conditions du Bail qui m'a ètè fait de la Traitte de Tadoussac le 21 aoust 1737.

Monsieur l'Intendant pourra reconnoître clans de que j'ai eu l'honneur de lui exposer pa le prèsent Memoire que la Traitte de Tadoussac me peut pas porter un prix de ferme tel qu'on le persuader et que dans les circonstances prèsentes le fermier n'y qu'un très mediocre profit au prix memo de mon Bail. Je na suit pas capable de lui imposer sur cela et je crois en avoir donne la demonstration, D'ou il suit que mes propositios ne s'écartert en rien des intèrets du Roy.

Sa Majestè y trouve l' Etablissement d'un nouveau poste qui peut augmenter le fonds de son Domaine sans aucune dèpense et sans ausune diminution de son revenu j'ose dire que par la Règie que j'ai toujours tenüe et que je continuerai clans l'exploitation de la Traitte de Tadoussac parce que je le crois la plus convenable Sa Majestè y trouvera aussi la conservation du fonds de son Domaine de Tadoussac qui court risque d'etre ruinè au premier bail qui pourrait etre fait à d'autres, comm' il l'a ètè par les sous fermiers qui ont precèdè na Regie.

river and interior of the Baie de Kitchechatsou and to furnish the second year a plan with a report of this establishment drawn up by the clerk who will be stationed there for trade, and also to construct there during the course of the lease establishments practicable for the fishing of seal, whale and walrus of which an exact account shall be also rendered in reports of inspection and of establishment during the year in which they are built, and all, in addition to the other burdens, clauses and conditions of the lease, which was made with me for the Tadoussac Trade on the 21st of August 1737.

By the explanations contained in this present memoir, M. the Intendant will admit that the Tadoussac Trade cannot be leased for the price mentioned to him and that in the present circumstances the lessee will find in it only a very small profit even at the price of my lease. I am unable to impose my views to him upon that, but I think I have sufficiently demonstrated same. And it thus follows that my proposals are in perfect accordance with the

His Majesty finds there the establishment of a new post which can increase the value of his Domaine without any expenses being incurred and without any decrease of his present revenue.

I venture to say that, by the management I have always kept and which I will continue, in developing the Tadoussac Trade, because I find it to be the most convenient, His Majesty will also find in same the conservation of the value of his Domaine de Tadoussac which runs the risk of being ruined through the first lease which might be made to others, as has been the case by the sublessees who preceded my management.

La graxe que je demande n'etant accordée, je puis proposer aux Crèanciers des forges un païement assure de ce qui leur est du dans le cours des dix annèes en commençant à remettre des l'annèe a la Caisse du Trèsor dix mille livres sur les castors de Tadoussac, ce qui produiroit en dix ans la somme de cent mille livres laquelle jointe au produit des trois postes de Tèmiscaming, Michipicoton et Gamanistigoia donnera envrion cent soixante mille livres qui assurecient le païement entier de tout ce qui est dû en principal et intèrêts suivant le privilège et préfèrence de chacun des crèamciers, au noïen de quoi je pourrois espèrer qu'ils voudroient bien arrester les demeures et consentir la main levée des saisies faites sur moi, ce que je ne puis pas meme proposer si je n'obtiens pas est arrangement de la bontè de Monsieur l'Intendant.

J'espère trouver clans la libre disposition des effets de Tadoussac tant pour la vente des effets que pour l'achat des marchandises nècessaires à l'exploitation et autres nègotiations qu'elle pourroit me procurer la facilitè de remettre par annèe la somme de 10000^l. Suivant non offre.

Je n'attache a demander cette grace préfèrablement à tout autre parceque c'est l'affaire de commerce que je connois mieux depuis vint sept ans que j'en fais la règie et par consequent celle que j'espère avec plus de raison de pouvoir encor par la suite bonifier de plus en plus à l'avantage meme de Sa Majestè en y tenant la memo conduite que j'ai suivie jusqu'a present pour retablir, conserver et amèliorer le fonds de cette partie du Domaine que^l j'ai trouvè presque dètraite en 1719.

Quant aux Etablissements proposes de la Baie de Kitcheatsou je ne trouve en ètet de satisfaire à l'offre que je fais àcet ègard au moien deux

(Translation.)

The favour I am asking for being granted unto me, I shall then be in a position to propose to the creditors of the Forges a sure payment of what I owe them in the course of the ten years next ensuing to remit this present year unto the Treasury ten thousand livres upon the beaver of Tadoussac, which would yield within ten years the sum of one hundred thousand livres. This added to the proceeds of the three posts of Temiscaming, Michipicoton and Gamanistigoia will yield in the neighbourhood of one hundred and sixty thousand livres which will ensure the payment in full of all that is due, capital and interest, according to the privilege and preference of each of the creditors, by means of which I could hope they will be willing to stop the arrears and withdraw the seizures made against me, a proposal I cannot even dare suggest if I do not obtain this arrangement through the kindness of Mr. the Intendant.

I hope that the free disposal of the effects of Tadoussac, either by the sale of the effects or by the purchase of the goods necessary to the development and other transactions which it could procure unto me, will enable me to remit each year the sum of 10000'' according to my offer.

I insist upon asking this favour preferably to all others because I am more familiar with this commercial affair, since, for twenty-seven years [1719-1746] I have been dealing with same and consequently that which I hope with greater reason to be able once more in future to improve more and more to the advantage of His Majesty, continuing the same conduct as that which I have followed up to now to reestablish, preserve and improve the properties of this portion of the Domaine which t found almost destroyed in 1719.

With regards to the proposed establishments of the Baie de Kitchechatsou, I find myself in a position to comply with the offer I am making in this respect by means of two associates who, associes qui sans aucun intèrêt dans la Traitte de Tadoussac, que je me rèsèrve, veulent se joindre a moi pour les faire ; l'un pour y fournir un Batiment a lui appartenant et l'avance des marchandises vivres et munitions nécessaires et l'autre y aller luimême pour les exploiter aux conditions de reprendre les avances sur les retours, et ensuite partager les profits et pertes par tiers entre eux et moié.

Nous avons eu l'honneur de vous demander en commun la concession de la baye des eskimaux située au bas du fleuve a cent lieues du détroit de belisle, pour la veuve fornél dont le mari avoit fait la decouverte.

les Srs avi et le fevre negotiants de rouen établis ici depuis longtems associés de cette veuve m'ont priés depuis quelques jours, de leurs doner la ferme de Tadoussac sur le pié de 4500' comme elle etoit avant la guerre. ils seront les plus interessés dans les établissements que fera la veuve fornél a la baye des eskimaux, étant persuadé qu'elle n'y aura qu'une part. Cet offre me paroît convenir de toute façon aux interets du roy. cette baye sétablirait sans que la ferme de Tadoussac diminuât, et a l'expiration du tems de la concession je serois d'avis que sa majesté la reunît à cette ferme.

Monseigneur,

We had the honour of requesting of you jointly the concession of the bay des Eskimaux, situate below the river, one hundred leagues from the strait of Belleisle, for the widow Fornel whose husband made the discovery of the same.

The Sieurs Havy and Le Fevre, merchants of Rouen, established here for many years and partners of the said widow have requested, a few days ago, a lease of the Ferme de Tadoussac at the rate of 4,500^l. as fixed before the war. They will have the chief interest in such establishments as the widow Fornel may form at the bay des Eskimaux, she being satisfied with only a share in them. This proposal appears to me to be in line with the King's interests. This post would be established without diminishing the [returns] of the Ferme de Tadoussac and, at the expiration of the term of the concession, I would advise that His Majesty reunite it to this ferme.

Monseigneur,

Nous avons eu l'honneur de vous marquer en commun que nous avons expédié la concession de la baie des Esquimaux à la veuve Fornel Il est heureux qu'elle ait voulu continuer cette découverte qui ne peut qu'être tres avantageuse à la colonie, étant important pour nous d'occuper cette baie dont les Anglois se seroient emparés par la suite, elle y a envoyé cette année. Cette même veuve m'a demandé la ferme de Tadoussac à raison de sept mille livres. J'ai trouvé ce prix si avantageux pour le Roy que je n'ai pas hésité un moment à la lui donner pour six ans aux mêmes conditions de l'ancien bail.

J'ai agi en conséquence des ordres et de la permission que M. le Comte de Maurepas avait donnés à M. Hocquart en 1745, 46 et 48 de passer un nouveau bail pour cette forme et qu'il le laissait le maitre des conditions.

Il était temps d'en ôter la régie à M. Cugnet, le Roy ne s'en serait pas trouvé. bien. Il n'a pas encore rendu son compte de régie de 1747.

(Translation.)

Monseigneur,

We have the honour to inform you that we have drawn up the concession of the Baye des Esquimaux in favour of the widow Fornel. It is fortunate that she was willing to continue this discovery which can only benefit the colony, it being important that we should occupy this bay which the British would certainly have taken hold of eventually ; she is sending an expedition there this year. The same widow has requested of me the Ferme de Tadoussac for seven thousand livres. I considered this price so advantageous for the King that I did not hesitate a single moment to grant it to her for six years under the same conditions as set forth in the former lease.

I have acted according to the orders and the permission given in 1745, 1746 and 1748 by the Count de Maurepas to M. Hocquart, to grant a new lease for this ferme, the conditions being left to his discretion.

The time had come to take the management of the same from Mr. Cugnet, as it would have

p. 3333

Il a toujours quelques raisons qui l'en empêchent et insensiblement ses dettes s'accumuleraient envers sa Majesté. Il a retiré considérablement de la poste je le sais à n'en pas douter et il ne paie aucun de ses créanciers, et il n'est pas possible qu'il n'ait pas fait passer ses fonds en France.

Après l'expiration de la concession de la baie des Esquimaux que la dite veuve a pour douze ans, il conviendra de la joindre au domaine du Roy, elle sera pour lors établie et sa Majesté pourra y envoyer au lieu que si elle l'eut été à ses dépens, il lui en aurait couté des sommes et on n'y aurait peut-être pas réussi.

La veuve Fournel a une compagnie et c'est ce qui convient le mieux pour les nouveaux établissements, étant plus en état de faire les avances et je suis persuadé qu'il ne manquera de quoi que ce soit au poste de Tadoussac et que le Roy sera bien payé chaque année.

Elle se prépare à faire les envois nécessaires pour l'année prochaine ; je n'en ai pas encore averti le Sr Cugnet voulant voir ce que je pourrai faire saisir dans ce poste et dans le produit pour la sûreté des deniers du Roy.

J'ai l'honneur d'être avec un profond respect, Monseigneur, votre très-humble et très obéissant serviteur.

prejudiced the King. He has not, as yet, given an account of the management for 1747. He always has reasons preventing from so doing and his debts to His Majesty gradually would accumulate. He has drawn a good deal from the post, and that I know positively and he pays none of his creditors, and he surely must have transferred his funds in France.

Upon the expiration of the concession of the Baye des Esquimaux which the said widow holds for twelve years, it will be expedient to reunite the same to the Domaine du Roy ; it would then be established and His Majesty could send thereto : while, should it have been settled at his expense, it would have entailed heavy expenditures ; besides the venture might have met with failure.

The widow Fornel has a company and this is the most suitable for the new establishments, they being in a position to make all advances and I am satisfied that there will be nothing lacking at the post of Tadoussac and that the King will be paid regularly every year.

She is getting ready to make the necessary shipments for the coming year; I have not yet advised the Sieur Cugnet, as I wish to ascertain what may be seized in this post and from its returns as security for the King's dues.

I have the honour to be, with the deepest respect, Monseigneur, your most humble and obedient servant,

Je ne doute point que ce soit la concession de la baie des Esquimaux qu's eue la veuve Fournel, qui l'ait engagé à demander la traite de Tadoussac pour éviter toute dispute avec le fermier et si elle ont tombè entre les mains du St. Cugnet, il y aurait en des plaintes continualles de sa part, ayant desirè la rèunion de cette baie au domaine dans l'espèrance que le Roy aurait pu faire travailler à son ètablissement et qu'il en aurait retirè le profit. Et ces plaintes auraient à la suite du temps, degoutè la dite veuve de faire cet ètablissement qui est des plus essentiels, comme vous l'avez vu par les comptes que nous avons eu l'honneur do vous rendre, et j'ai ètè fort aise qu'elle me fait demandè.

At Quebec, 11th October, 1749.

I have no doubt that it was the concession of Esquimaux Bay to the widow Fornel which induced her to apply for the Traité de Tadoussac in order to avoid all disputes with the lessee, and, if it had fallen into the hands of sieur Cugnet, there would have been continual complaints on his part, he having desired the union of this bay to the Domaine in the hope that the King would have made improvements at his establishment of which he [Cugnet] would have derived the benefit. And these complaints would, in the course of time, have disgusted Madame Fornel, and prevented her from setting up this establishment, which is most essential, as you have seen from the accounts which we have had the honour to send you, and I was highly pleased that she requested it of me.

Kitchechatchou and river Blanche. (By Cugnet ?)

In the year 1743, the Sieur Fornel, merchant of Quebec, obtained from Mrs. the Marquis de Beauharnois, Governor General, and Hocquart, Intendant in Canada, permission to make the discovery of the bay of Kitchechatchou under the pretense of forming a seal fishery establishment and. upon the discovery being made, of obtaining the concession thereof.

By virtue of this permission the Sieur Fornel despatched a vessel to the north shore of the river St. Lawrence under the command of one Charles le Cour, navigator. This vessel did not reach the bay of Kitchechatebou, but remained at the place called Pitchou ouste Kouéne in Indian and Tête de loup-cervier in French, and to which the sieur Fornel gave the name of bay of St. Louis. And, without having either made the discovery of the bay of Kitchechatchou or obtained the concession of the baie de St. Louis, he left in the latter place one Jean Pilotte and his son with These two men, with an Indian of the baye des Chateaux erected on the river, forty leagues in the upper portion of the baie St. Louis, a winter post for the establishment of which the sieur Fornel despatched again, in the year 1744, the same vessel that had proceeded there the previous year under the command of the one Jean Le Cour. The first vessel did not get as far as the bay of Kitchechatchou and was wrecked before reaching there. This last one did not get there and Pilotte and his son returned by an overland route as far as Mekatina where they brought the martens from their wintering. They had left at their wintering quarters the beaver they had traded.

The director of the Domaine, then lessee of the trade of Tadoussac, being informed of the great prejudice such an establishment would cause, not only to the posts of Mingan, Phelippeaux Bay, River St. Augustin, St. Modet, Baie-des-Chateaux, Mekatina and other posts established on the north shore of the river St. Lawrence several years previous to the establishment contemplated by the Sieur Fornel, but also and to a greater extent to the posts of the Domaine du Roy, took the liberty of submitting his representations, both as director of the Domaine and as lessee of the trade of Tadoussac, to M. de Beauharnois, and agreeably to them he had the honour to address the same representations to the count de Maurepas who was kind enough to inform him, in his reply of the 24th of April, 1744, that, since the Sieur Fornel's establishment seemed to prejudice the operation of the Domaine, he had been well advised in making representations to that effect to Mrs. de Beauharnois and Hocquart and that, the latter having written to him themselves in this connection, he was explaining to them the King's intentions concerning this undertaking.

Le véritable But du projet du Sr. Fournel avoit Etè de former d'ans la profondeur des Terres au dessus de la Baïe St. Louis un Etablissement de Traitte pour y attirer les Sauvages qui commercent d'ans les Postes sur la Coste du Nord du fleuve St. Laurent, et Encore plus ceux qui vont d'ans les Postes du Domaine, Et par le S'approprier a l'Exclusion des fermiers du Domaine et des Concessionnaires des Postes de la Coste du Nord la Traitte avec les Sauvages Repeudus dans cette partie du Canada.

(Translation.)

Mrs. De Beauharnois and Hocquart have not communicated to the director of the Domaine what the Minister has told them, about the King's intentions in this connection. He merely presumes that His Majesty was opposed to the granting of the concession applied for by the Sieur Fournel, and the undertaking of this merchant, who died in 1746,¹ not having been carried out, the director of the Domaine took the liberty of addressing, in the year 1744, another memoir to the count de Maurepas, giving the latter the reasons on which were based the representations he had made the previous year ; he has the honour to reiterate the same herewith to Monseigneur so that he may transmit them to His Grace.

The actual aim of the project of the Sieur Fournel had been the forming, in the depth of the interior, above the bay de St. Louis, of a trading establishment to which he would draw the Indians who now trade in the posts of the north shore of the St. Lawrence river, and to a greater extent those who resort to the posts of the Domaine, and thereby obtain control, to the exclusion of the lessee of the Domaine and of the grantees of the posts of the north shore, of the trade with the Indians scattered in this section of Canada.

The working of the trades of the Domaine is far more at stake than that of the grantees of the other posts on the North Shore. The latter are only allowed to trade within the limits of their concessions, every one of which is limited to five or six leagues in depth, and they have no right to despatch any one beyond the limits of their concessions ; the Domaine du Roy spreads its boundaries from the St. Lawrence river as far as Hudson bay and into the lakes and rivers emptying in the rivers Saguenay, Manikouagan and river Moizy. The Domaine lessee was at all times entitled to establish trading posts, and in fact has actually established such posts on the lakes of Naskapis, Atchouanipi, Manikouagan, Mistassins and Chobnouchouiane.

The Montagnais Indians, divided into several nations under the respective names of Grands and Petits Mistassins, Kichestigaux, Papinachois, Naskapis, &c., settled in the interior of the Domaine lands cannot reach the posts established there but with great difficulty, as the rivers through which they could proceed to the French posts from the lakes which they frequent are hard to navigate, full of obstacles and rapids that compel them to make practically continuous portages, equally very long, there being in this country no bark suitable for making canoes, so that these Indians only have such canoes as they can get from the French and in limited numbers, and the greater number of them are compelled to walk all the way, as a result of which the lessee of the Domaine has to despatch every spring into the interior as far as the lakes of the Naskapia, Atchouanipi, Manikouagan, Mistassins and Chobnonchouane, and at considerable expense, goods and ammunition required by the Indians for their subsistence and clothing, in exchange for the pelts from their hunting, the produce of which consists specially of martens and caribou skins ; on the contrary, the Indians could travel much easier by the river of Kitchechatchou and from one lake to another through other rivers leading to the establishment which the Sieur Fornel intends to form.

Should such an establishment be formed there is no question but that the trade built up by the lessee of the Domaine on the lakes hereinbefore mentioned would be completely destroyed, and this for two reasons which would both appeal to the minds to the Indians.

*Grands.

La première Jls [sic.] voudront Essaièr s'ils ne trouveront pas plus d'avantage d'ans un nouveau Posts, que dans ceux cu jls [sic.] vont ordinairement. les sauvages aiment la nouveauté autant et plus que tous les autres hommes. La seconde pour S'Exemter de payer ce qu'ils doivent d'ans les Postes du Domaine. Jls [sic.] de rendencient a l'Etablissement du Sr. fornèl d'ans l'Espérance de ce procurer de nouveaux Credits sans Entre obligès d'acquitter les anciens et d'obtenir par ce moien le Double des narogabdises qu'ils veulent avoir, ceux qui ont qu'elque connoissance du Commerce des Traires d'ans tout le Canada savent qu'il est Judispensable d'avancer aux sauvages les armes, munitions, et hardes nécessaires a leur hivernement. Jls [sic.] ne payent ces avances qu'au printems de l'annèe suivante du Produit de la Chasse qu'ils ont faite pendant l'hiver. Jls [sic.] se feroient denner comptant le paiement de leurs Pelleteries en Eaudevie et Parures a leur usage, et prendroient a Crèdit les Armes Et munitions dont Jls [sic.] auroient Besoin pour leur hivernement.

L'unique moien d'Eviter ces Inconvèniens [sic.] très prèjudiciables au Domaine Le St. fornèl aiant commencè de nettre au jour un projet que personne n'avoit Encor formè de Reünir au Domaine du Roy, et a la traitte de Tadoussac la Baïe de Kitchechatchou et Rivieres y affluentes avec la Profondeur des Terres depuis lad. Baïe Jusqu'a la Mer du Coste de la Baïe D'hudson, afin que personne ne pût d'avantage former le même projet. L'Etablissement de Traitte que l'on pourroit y faire ne porteroient aucun prèjudice à la Traitte de Tadoussac, des qu'ils En feroient partie.

Sur ce principe qui paroist n'Etre susceptible d'aucume difficultè le Dirceteur du Domaine En Continuant de demander a Monsieur Le Comte de Maurepas le Renouvellement du Bail qui luy avoit Ete fait de la Traitte

(Translation.)

Firstly, they will wish to try and find out whether they would not fare better by trading in another post than in those where they usually go. The Indians are fond of novelty as much as, and even more, than the rest of mankind. Secondly, in order to avoid paying for what they owe in the Domain posts, they would proceed to the Sieur Fornel's establishment in the hope of obtaining further credits without having to settle the former ones and of obtaining thereby twice the merchandise they require. Any one familiar with the business of the [fur] trade in the whole of Canada, is aware that one must advance the Indians the arms, ammunition, and clothing they need for their wintering. They only pay for such advances in the spring of the ensuing year out of the produce of their winter chase. They would get paid in ready money for their pelts with brandy and trinkets for their own use, and would then buy on credit such arms and ammunition as they would require for their wintering.

The only way to avoid such disadvantages, most harmful to the Domaine, the sieur Fornel having commenced the execution of a project which no one else had ever conceived as yet, is to reunite to the Domaine Du Roy, and to the trade of Tadoussac, the baits of Kitchechatchou and the rivers flowing therein, together with the interior from the said bay to the sea-coast of Hudson bay, so as to prevent anyone from forming a similar project. The establishment of the trade that might be made there would in no way affect the trade of Tadoussac, the moment they formed part thereof.

According to this principle which seems in no way likely to offer any inconvenience, the director of the Domaine, reiterating his request to the count de Maurepas for the renewal of the lease

For the past two years the director of the Domaine has been praying for the extension of the lease of the Tadoussac trade as being the only source of aid that could enable him to meet the liabilities he was compelled to assume in connection with the St. Maurice iron-works undertaking as a result of which he and his family were liable to become reduced to dire want in consequence of the mismanagement of the partners that had been assigned to him, and without anyone being able to reproach him with any squandering of the money invested in the undertaking.

He had annexed to his request another for the reunion of the bay of Kitchechatchou in order to do away with the prejudice liable to be caused unfailingly to the trade of Tadoussac by the sieur Fornel's project. The latter had been made public and others could follow his example and carry it out. He was endeavoring to prevent the inconvenience which he even then foresaw. He was convinced that his proposal would be considered acceptable, not only for the sake of the conservation of the trades of Tadoussac, but also on account of the benefit that accrue to His Majesty's through the success of the establishment he proposed to form at his own expense, thus profiting by an improvement of His Domaine from which he would draw, upon the expiration of the nine years, a rental price higher than could be the case from the Ferme de Tadoussac alone, and this without His Majesty incurring any expense nor any decrease in his present revenue ; on the other hand, should such establishment be formed by individuals, the Ferme de Tadousac could not carry on at the price it was then quoted and His Majesty was liable to lose the income from this part of his Domaine and at the same time would derive no profit from the establishment at the bay of Kitchechatchou.

The war which was declared between France and England has left in abeyance the Minister's decision on the proposals submitted by the director of the Domaine who continued the working of the trade of Tadoussac at his own expense and at a loss during the last three years of the war.

The news brought here in the month of August by the frigate Zephir, of the truce between France and England, gave a new life to the plans of the widow Fornel and her partners concerning the project formed five or six years previously by her husband. Under pretense of the expenses incurred by her husband for the discovery of the baye de St. Louis, she asked [1748] for the Le Directeur du Domaine En a Eu Connoissance par Mr. Le Marquis de la Jonquière même qui luy dit le jour de ja Reception au Conseil qu'il avoit ordre d'Expedier la d. concession apres qu'il luy auroit communiqué la demande de la veuve fornel et Examinè les observations qu'il y auroit a y faire le Directeur du Domaine Eut l'honneur de lui rèpondre qu'aussi tôt qu'il aurait la bontè de luy faire savoir le projet de la veuve fornel les observations feroient prestes le jour même.

Suposè que la Concession ait Etè Rècellement Expèdièe les notifs de l'accorder ont pû être.

Premièrement qu'il convient au bien de la Colonic que la Baie de Kitehechatchou fut Etablie solidement non soudement pour Empecher les Anglois de S'en emparer a la premiere Guerre mais Ecce pour se mettre plus aportèe d'observer ce que l'on pourroit Entrepandre du Côte du Canada sur les Etablissements Anglous de la Baïe d'hudson d'ans le même Cas de Guerre on ne peut guère attendre cette vtilitè d'vn Etablissement fait par des nègotians qui S'occupent bien plus de leur Intèrest [sic.] que de celui de l'Etat concession forever of the same and at her request Mrs. the Governor General and the Intendant of Canada were instructed by Monseigneur to grant her this concession, should they consider that it would not prejudice the interests of the Domaine.

The director of the Domaine was informed of the same by the Marquis de la Jonquière himself who, on the day of its receipt at the Council, stated that he had been ordered to draw up the said concession after he had transmitted the request of the widow Fornel and had considered such remarks as the director of the Domaine might have to make on the matter. The latter had the honour of replying that as soon as he would be kind enough to acquaint him with the prject of the widow Fornel, his observations would be ready the same day.

He heard no more about it since and he would have considered himself as committing an indiscretion to ask from the Marquis de la Jonquière a further explanation on what he had first meant to say he would tell him. He is not, as yet, aware whether the concession has been drawn up. He only knows that in the month of September last [1749 ?]

the widow Fornel despatched a vessel to go and carry out the establishment of the bay de St. Louis. On the supposition that the grant has been actually made, the reasons for such a grant may have been—

Firstly, it is in the interest of the colony that the bay of Kitchechatchou be firmly established not only in order to prevent the English from taking it at the outbreak of war but also in order to be in a better position to observe what could be undertaken from Canada against the English establishments on Hudson bay also, in case of war. One can hardly expect such benefits from an establishment formed by merchants who consider their own interest before that of the state and et du bien public, Il [sic.] seroit moins a Graindre que les Anglois pensassent a s'ètablir d'ans cette baïe, si Elle leur demeuroit Inconnüe [sic.] Ils [sic.] n'y penseroient pas alors. on Scait qu'avant la derniers Guerre Ils [sic.] negligoient Extremement leura Etablissements de Terre neuve.

Secondement, qu'il Etoit plus convenable aux Interests [sic.] dy Roy de laisser faire ces Etablissent par des particuliers que d'Engager sa Majestè d'ans Dèpenses considerables qui peut etre ne produiroient aucun Etablissent solide.

La proposition du Directeur du Domaine ne tondoit point à Engager Sa Majesté d'ans ancume Dèpense puis qu'il offroit de faire l'Etablissement a ses frais, et Il [sic.] proposait de le faire Serieusement et solidement puisqu'il offroit de rendre Compte annuellement du progrè pour Justifier au Ministre du succès de l'Entreprise, ou du peu d'Espérance du reüssir.

Enfin ou a pû penser que le projet de la veuve fornol seroit domains avantageux au Commerce de la Colonie par l'augmentation tant des huiles que des Pelletries, qu'il produiroit. Il [sic.] y sur de notif quelques observations a faire Il [sic.] est donteux qu'il soit de l'avantage de la Colonie de multiplier les pêches de Loup marin dans le bas du fleuve St. Laurent autant qu'on se l'Est persuadè Il [sic.] est naturel de penser au Contraire qu'on multipliant trop, ou détruira En moins d'annèes l'Espace de ces animaux Jls [sic.] ne produisent qu'un petit chaque année. Il [sic.] est rare qu'ils En anement deux, les Pêches se sont ou dans le Printems, qui est la saison du fray, ou d'ans l'automne qui est le tems ou les fennelles Sont plaines par consèquent on ne peut an prendre une plus grande quantité Sans détruire l'espèce, et Sans courir risque de tarir en peu the public welfare. Should it remain unknown to them, there would be less cause to apprehend any establishment being formed there by the English. They would not even think about it, as it is known that, before the last war, they entirely neglected their Newfoundland posts.

Secondly, it was more advisable in the King's interest to leave the formation of such establishments to private individuals than to involve His Majesty in a considerable outlay which might not lead to any firm establishment.

The proposal of the director of the Domaine did not commit His Majesty to any expense since he offered to form the establishment at his own expense, and proposed to do so in an earnest and permanent manner since he was willing to report every year on the progress accomplished in order to convince the Minister as to the success of the undertaking, or as to the likelihood of failure.

Lastly, it may have been thought that the widow Fornel's project would at least be profitable to the trade of the Colony as a result of the increased output of oils as well as pelts. A few remarks are in order on this argument. It is questionable whether it would be in the interest of the Colony to multiply the seal fisheries in the lower St. Lawrence river, as was primarily thought to be the case ; on the contrary, it is logical to conclude that too great a number of the same would lead in a shorter space of time to the destruction of this species of animals. They only produce one cub a year and very rarely two ; the fishing takes place in the springtime which is the season of breeding or in the autumn at which time the females are pregnant, and, in consequence, a large number could not be caught without destroying the species of such animals, and risking the d'années la source de ces Pêches, en S'apperscoit d'année En année que la quantité de Loup marine diminuè et que les Pêches produisent moins Quand même Elles produiroient toujours la même quantité d'hailes La Colonie n'y trouveroit pas un plus grand avantage Le Prix de cette marchandise ainsy que tous autre depend du plus ou moins nècessairement d'abondance Il [sic.] Est Egal a la Colonie d'avoit pour ses retours En france deux mille Barriques d'huile lorsqu'elle les vendrs 80' la Barrique ou d'En avoir quatre mille Barriques lors qu'elle ne pourra les vendre que 40' on ne sauroit douter que la quantite des huiles doublant le prix n'en diminüe de moitié ; cependant Il [sic.] En coute les mêmes Dèpenses pour chacun des Etablissemens tant anciens que nouveaux ces Depenses augmentent même a proportion qu'il Se fait plus d'Etablissemens les Engages devieient plus Rares parce qu'il En faut un bien plus grand nombre et par consèquent plus plus chers, les autres depenses augment a proportion en même tems que Le prix du Produit diminüe nècessairement.

Chaque particulier ne fait point ces Reflexions, jl [sic.] pense seulement a l'esperance du gain qu'il pourra tirer d'une Entreprise qu'il vent former. La sagesse du Gouvernement va plus loin Elle ne se preste point a Multiplier des Etablissemens nouveaux qui Sans Etre d'un profit certain pour seux qui veulent les former peuvent d'Etruire ceux de meme nature, qui sont Etablis et Subsistent depuis plusieurs années.

Le Directeur du Domaine croit alabry du reproche de deonner dans le même jneonvenient [sic.] qu'il veut faire craindre de la part des autres. Il [sic.] n'a proposè le nouvel Etablissement de Kitchechatchou que pour prèvenir le tort que celuy projecttè par le Sr. fornèl aujourd'hui Suivi par Sa vele ou pour mieux exhaustion in a few years of this source of fisheries. It is noticed from year to year that the number of seals is decreasing and that the fisheries are not so productive even though the output of oil might be the same. The colony would not profit any more by it, the price of this commodity as well as of any other being dependent more or less necessarily upon the supply ; it is the same thing for the colony to have, for the returns in France, two thousand barrels of oil that sells at £80 a barrel or to have four thousand barrels which could be sold at only £40 a barrel ; it is beyond doubt that the quantity of oil being increased twofold the price of the same decreases by one half; at the same time the expense incurred for both the old and the new establishments are the same and they increase as more establishments are formed ; the engagés become scarcer as a result of the greater demand for them and consequently ask for more pay, and other expenses are increased with a resulting decrease in price.

The average man does not stop to consider these various points and merely thinks of the expected gain to be drawn from the undertaking he is about to launch. In its wisdom the Government, looks further ahead and is reluctant to multiply the new establishments which, besides the fact that they imply no guarantee of profit to their promoters, often ruin those of the same kind established and in existence for several years.

The director of the Domaine could not be charged with the same mistake which he endeavours to have others deterred from. His sole aim, in proposing the new establishment of Kitchochatchou is to prevent the injury that might result from the project of the sieur Fornel, now carried out

It was reported at Quebec that the Sieur Desauniers Beaubien, merchant of this city, evidently supported by partners, whose identity is concealed similarly to those of the widow Fornel, has sent a memoir to the Governor General requesting that he be given a deed of concession from the river of Kitchechatchou as far as the river Blanche of nine leagues in front towards Hudson bay. Should this concession be granted, it would equally prejudice the very one which has just been granted to the widow fornèl and the other concessions established for twenty-four years and, to a greater extent, the Domaine posts than the others, as it would be further in the interior in the direction of the lakes on which the lessee of the Domaine has the right of forming establishments for trading purposes ; the stretch of country between the bay of Kitchechatchou and the river Blanche is the place where all the Indians of the north gather for the hunt of the caribou and, should an establishment be formed there, they will not return to pay what they owe the lessee of the Domaine or to the concessionaires of the older establishments long organised and existing for several years.
They would also resort to the widow Fornel's post if it is in operation. The former concessionaires [Cugnet & Estebe] submit, on these two new establishments, the same representations as those of the director of the Domaine every time the opportunity is afforded to them of being heard.

Since the writing of the present memoir, the trade of Tadoussac has been leased under cover of the name of the widow Fornel without the director of the Domaine being plus Intèressè [sic.] en qualité de fernier de la Traitte ; mais JI [sic.] n'est pau moins de jon [sic.] Devoir En Qualité de Directeur du Domaine de faire valoir autant qu'il Est En luy Les mêmes raisons sur Lesqu'elles JI [sic.] a fondè few Premieres remontrances, soit que la veuve fornèl ètablisse sa nouvelle Concession de Kitchechatchou ou qu'elle L'abandonne L'Interest [sic.] du Roy y est Egalement Lenè si elle ne fait pas son Etablissement de Kitchechatchou ja [sic.] Majestè sera Privèe de cet Etablissement pour l'augmentation de son Domaine. ji [sic.] la veuve fornèl l'Etablie La Domaine des Traittes de Tadoussac sera Totalement ruinè. therefore, is no longer interested as lessee of the trade ; but, as director of the Domaine, he is none the less in duty bound to show, as much as he can, the same reasons upon which his representations were based in the first instance, namely that the widow Fornel should either organise her new concession or relinquish the same. His Majesty's interest is similarly affected if she does not form her establishment of Kitchechatchou ; His Majesty will be deprived of this establishment for the development of his Domaine. In the event of it being made by the widow Fornel the trade of Tadoussac in the Domaine will be entirely ruined. He presumes that she will prefer to form that of Kitchechatchou in order to divert to it all the trade from the privately owned posts. One way or another, the director of the Domaine makes bold to predict that, at the expiration of the lease of the widow Fornel, the trade of Tadoussac will be ruined and in the same condition as he found it in 1720. The accuracy of such an assertion will be confirmed by the turn of events when it will be too late to remedy the same.

Memoire presentè a Monseigneur Le Intendant de la nouvelle france par la Ve. fornèl et compagnie fermiers des traittes de Tadoyssac Domaine du Roy en consequence du Bail qui Leur a Etè fait par Mond Seigneur L8Intendant [sic.] presence de Mr Breard controlleur Et passè par Lanouiller et Sanguinet notaires Royaux en datte du neuf Septembre de l'année derniere 1749.

Monseigneur

Plus il ya a de Securità et plus la surprise est Grande, Elle n'a pu estre qu'Extreme Lorsque vous avès prevenu Les fermiers du Domaine du Roy que Sa Majestè n'ayant pas approuvè Le Bail passè par Lanouiller Et Sanguinet notaires en datte du neuf Septembre 1749 en notre presence et en celle de Mr. Breard Controlleur de la marine ; vous avies recudes ordres du ministre de faire tun nouveau Bail par Voye d' adjudication, par consequent que le Bail actuel ne pouvoit subsister ; Sur quoy La ve fornèl et compagnie prennent La Libertè de vous faire Les Representations cy apres.

(Translation.)

Memoir presented to Monseigneur the Intendant of New France by the widow Fornel and company, lessees of the trades of Tadoussac, in the King's domain, in consequence of the Lease granted to them by Monseigneur the Intendant, before M. Bréard, comptroller and executed by Lanouiller and Sanguinet, royal notaries, under date of the ninth of September of last year 1749.

Monseigneur,

The greater the security the greater the disappointment, and ours could not but be extreme when you advised the lessees of the Domaine du Roy that, His Majesty having disapproved of the lease passed by Lanouiller and Sanguinet, notaries, under date of the ninth of September, 1749, in our presence and in that of M. Bréard, Comptroller of the Marine, you had been instructed by the Minister to have a new lease sold by auction, and accordingly that the present lease could not subsist ; whereupon Veuve Fornel and Company take the liberty of submitting to you the following representations.

p. 3350

Les fermiers Exposit Respectueusement qui si avec un titre aussy autentique que L8est [sic.] un Bail ou autre acte, Bail et contract de pareille nature, revètu de toutes les formes requises et prescrites par les loix, Les Contracteurs ne sont pas en Suretè sur Leur Etat, Jl [sic.] n'y aura plus a compter sur rein ; Le tout étant fondé sur les Loix du Royaume par une Suite de la Sagesse de nos Rois, ces mêmes Loix doivent Subsister aitant que Le Royaume afin que personne ne puis Estre dans L'Incertitude [sic.] de son sort.

On purra dire pour toute Raison que La Ve fornèl Et Compagnie ont contracts avec le Roy et que Sa Majeste ayant le pouvoir Suprême, Elle est amitresse d'approuver ou de desaprouver ce qui pourroit avoir Etè fait a L'jnscu [sic.] de Ses ordres, ou contre des regles qu'Elle auroit prescrit.

Pour respondre a cette objection, les fermiers qui ont contractè avec Monseigneur L'jntendant [sic.], ont ignorè jusqu'a present qu'jl [sic.] ne fût pas revètu des ordres et pouvoirs necessaires ; jls [sic.] n'ont pu my du prévoir qu'jl [sic.] auroit fallu que La ferme du Domaine du Roy se fût donnèe par voye d'adjucation, par consequent jls [sic.] sont dans la bonne foy, et jle [sic.] ont contractè de même, rien ne peut prouver Le contraire, et s'jl [sic.] y a quelque manque de formalitè dans le bail dont est question ; jls [sic.] n'en sont pas responsables ; Dailleurs Le prix de la ferme a Etè asses longtems defendu ou disputè Et s'est Enfin trouvè Exceder de La somme de 1.2500^l celuy de M. Cugnet ancien fermier Lequel a toujours dit et S'est attachè a vouloir faire connoistre qu'jl [sic.] perdoit annuellement Sur L'Exploitation dead traittes. Le ve fornèl et Compagnie se seroient aisement Laissè Seduire aux Raisons susdittes dud . . . Cugnet n'Etoit L'hnterest particulier qu'jls [sic.] avoient de poursuivre L'obtention du bail en question, a cause des difficultès que led S. pretendoit former à L'Etablissement

(Translation.)

The lessees respectfully submit that, if a title deed as authentic as a lease or other deed, lease and contract of like nature, drawn up with every form prescribed and determined by the statutes, does not guarantee to the contracting parties the security of their position, then one can not rely on anything whatsoever ; the whole being based on the laws of Kingdom as a result of the wisdom of our king, such laws ought to endure as long as the Kingdom itself so that no one may have cause to feel uncertain as to the future.

It may be alleged as a general argument that Veuve Fornel and Company having contracted with the King, and, that His Majesty being the supreme authority, the latter is free to approve or disapprove whatever may have been done without his instructions or contrary to such regulations as have been passed by him.

In reply to such an objection, the lessees who have contracted with Monseigneur the Intendant, were not aware until now that he was not invested with the necessary orders and powers ; they could not, nor should they, foresee that the lease of the Domaine du Roy should have been sold by auction, and therefore they are in good faith and they have contracted likewise, and, if there is any lack of form in the lease referred to, they are not responsible for the same ; Moreover the price of the lease has been long enough discussed and argued and finally was fixed at the sum of 2500 livres, that is the price paid by Mr. Cugnet, previous lessee, who always said and was insistent in declaring openly that he was losing money every year on the working of the said trades. Veuve Fornel and Company would have readily given in before the above reasons but for the fact that they were particularly interested in obtaining the lease in question, owing to the obstacles which the said Sieur d'accorder La concession a La Ve. fornèl. Disant que cet Etablissement feroit un grand tort aux traittes du Domaine du Roy, et demandoit en consequence qu'il [sic.] fût defendu aux concessionnaires de La Baye St. Louis de faire aucune traite avec les Sauvages. Cependant La distance D'un Endroit a L'autre est si grande qu'il [sic.] ny avoit pour des personnes Desinterressées [sic.] aucune apparence que cela pût Estre. La Ve fornèl qui se voyoit en avance d'une Somme considerable qu'il [sic.] luy en a coûté, pour la découverte de cet Endroit a encor augmente cette Somme d'Environ vingt cinq nil livres par L'armement [sic.] d'un bâtiment qu'Elle et ses associez ont Expediè L'automne dernier 1749. Ce Bâtiment n'ayant pu se rendre Se rendre aud. Lieu a cause des glaces ; L'Equipage a Etè obligè d'hiverner en chemin, et ne S'est rendu au poste que dans le mois de juillet, on y a laissè quatre hommes et Led. Bastiment est arrivè en cette ville vers la fin du mois d'Aou a rapportè pour retour Environ quatre cent peaux de martres provenant de la chasse des Engagès, et dailleurs Ils [sic.] N'ont pas vu dans tout Le voyage un seul Sauvage, si ce n'est des Eskimaux. Lad. veuve fornèl et compagnie viennent Encor de faire partir un bâtiment par le même Endroit dans L'Esprance qu'ils [sic.] auront un plus heureux Succès.

Ce qui augmente La Somme de Sept mil Livres du prix du Bail est que depuis qu'il [sic.] est passè, Monseigneur a imposè aux fermiers actuels, de donner aux Sauvages, Les Marchandises munitions et Vivres, a un prix Beaucoup audessous de celuy que l'ancien fermier Les donnoit, tout cela forme une Difference considerable La quelle produit cette annèe une perte Bien relie a La Ve. fornèl et compagnie. Laquelle perte se Leve a La Bomme de Soixante intended to raise against the establishment of the post of the Bay St. Louis the concession of which the Court was good enough to grant to the widow Fornel, he alleging that this establishment would cause great prejudice to the trades in the Domaine du Roy, and therefore was asking that the grantees of the Bay St. Louis be prohibited from carrying on any trading with the Indians. However the distance between one place and the other is so great that, in the eyes of impartial persons, there was no likelihood of such being the case. The widow Fornel who found she had already advanced a large sum for expenses connected with the discovery of this place still increased that sum by about twenty-five thousand livres for the outfitting of a vessel which she and her partners sent in the autumn of 1749. This vessel, having been unable to reach the said place owing to ice conditions, was compelled to winter [1749-50] on the way and only reached the post in the month of July, leaving there four men and the said vessel arriving in this city at the end of August, has brought back in return about four hundred marten skins from the engagés hunt, and moreover they did not meet a single Indian during the whole trip except some Eskimaux. The said Veuve Fornel and Company have just sent another vessel to the same place in the hope of meeting with greater success.

The sum of seven thousand livres as the price of the lease is further increased by the fact that it was drawn up two years ago and that Monseigneur has ordered the present lessees to give to the Indians, goods, ammunition and food at a far lower price than that at which they were being given by the former lessee, all of which makes quite a difference, as a result of which Veuve Fornel and Company are incurring an actual loss, amounting this year to the sum of seventy-five thousand three hundred and thirty livres seventeen sols, according to the statement of receipts and expenditure we had the honour of submitting, and which is certified by the shipping invoices made by Mr. Cugnet for the last shipment (with no certificate of the prices appearing on his invoices) the latter not being determined as yet, as well as Veuve Fornel and Company in all the various posts of the Domaine and the returns produced by them, by the statements under the signature of the clerks and of the master of the vessel which went to the said trades. It is true that, for years, these have never produced so little oils and pelts as they did in the present year, but one may perhaps hope for better results during the coming year as there is nothing more uncertain than fishery and the hunt. Taking it for granted that the lease is terminated Veuve Fornel and Company cannot even hope to make up for the loss they suffered as a result of the operations of the present year.

The lease referred to having been passed for ten years and drawn up according to the form prescribed, Veuve Fornel and Company cannot be denied the right to be reimbursed the said sum of seventy-five thousand three hundred and thirty-seven livres, 17*s.* which is the amount of the loss arising from the working of the said trades for the present year ; furthermore, one could not deny Veuve Fornel and Company an indemnity for the non-enjoyment of the period of their lease. Such an indemnity can hardly be any less than the price of two years of the lease, which makes up the sum of fourteen thousand livres.

This sum in itself is not very large if one takes into consideration the expenses that had to be incurred to go and take possession of this leasehold, as well as to be prepared for the working of the saine ; stores had to be rented for the housing of the food and other sea-going vessels had to be purchased and lastly, Veuve Fornel and Company had to undertake the whole expenditure, considering the vessels and goods ordered from France, as if she had been to enjoy her lease for the six years . . . one must also take into account the trouble and labour involved in the management of these trades. It takes even more than a year to become familiar with the interests of these various posts, together with those of the natives and their inclinations; they are of too unsteady a disposition to be relied on : the Indians who are settled on the lands of the Domaine consider themselves as free as any of their own race of the vicinity, and therefore they go and trade where they please, either at Three Rivers, at Batiscan, at Temiseaming, or at Hudson bay ; those of the river Moisy and trade at the various posts of Mingan, and moreover the proprietors of those places send traders as far as within the limits of the Domaine du Roy ; it takes therefore several years to get acquainted with the Indians and also to win their friendship, as the one is as important as the other. It was at this very thing that the widow Fornel and her partners first employed themselves last summer, going to the place in order to give them presents, to visit them and to entertain them, thus making themselves known to them ; the one who went there could only see the aborigines of the sea-shore [Eskimo], and, as to those of the interior, he sent them presents and had them informed that he would be at Chicoutimi next year to visit them and to treat them with affection as his own children.

We had the honour to represent to Monseigneur the Intendant that a sudden change of lessee would only lead to a great disturbance in the trades of the Domaine; the clerks, the engagés and the Indians accustomed for such a long time to obey the same master, would be at a loss, upon seeing this change, as to whom to deal with, and each one will go and defraud, each in bis own way.

nouveau, ne Scauront plus a qui jls [sic.] auront a faire, châcum tirera et pourra fauder de son côté, Les Sauvages s'alieneront de Leur affection et se retireront dans les autres postes Ecartès ou L'abondance de l'Eau de vie Les attire dejâ que trop. Et enfin Les traittes de Tadoussac autres fois si vantées se reduiront a rien, et ces contrées autres fois si populées deviendront desertes, Car jl [sic.] faut observer que depuis plusieurs années les Sauvages des terres ont diminuè tant par la mortalitè que par le nombre de ceux qui se sont Retirès a La Baye D'HUDSON a cause de La chèrte des Marchandises.

Les jnconveniens [sic.] qui peuvent rèsulter de tout cecy, point de sauvages, point de chasse, point de credits payès, ny par consequent de traitte a Esperer.

Autre article que Monseigneur L'jntendant [sic.] est suppliè d'observer, c'est que dans le fait en question, supposant que le bail ne subsiste plus, toute rests en suspens, quel derangement cela ne causera t jl [sic.] pas dans les comptes, Le mois de juin dernier et apres Les jnventaires [sic.] faits jl [sic.] se trouve, que Les marchandises, ustencils, Vivres etc. appartiennent tant au S. (Translation.)

The Indians will be estranged in their affection and withdraw to other distant posts where brandy is already too much of an attraction for them. Lastly, the trades of Tadoussac, once so famous, would be reduced to nothing, and these countries, formerly so densely settled, shall become deserted. In fact, it must be pointed out that for several years the number of inland Indians has decreased both as a result of deaths and through a great many of them having withdrawn to Hudson bay on account of the high price of goods.

Moreover, the wild animals are almost entirely destroyed and, in consequence, these same Indians experience great difficulty in finding their maintenance in the forests; every year, some of them die of starvation, especially during last winter which was a very severe one and when several families perished ; as to those of the sea-shore they were supplied with food by the lessee.

The disadvantages likely to arise from all this would be : No Indians, no hunting, no debts paid and, in consequence, no trade to be expected.

Another point which Monseigneur the Entendant is requested to note, is that under the circumstances alluded to, should the lease no longer subsist, everything is held in suspense ; what a disturbance would not this cause in the accounts. In the month of June last and after the inventories have been made, it happens that the goods, utensils, provisions, &c., belong to the Sieur Cugnet, former lessee, as well as to the new one ; in the event of there being a new lessee next year, all the effects would belong to three different lessees. What a mess and what a confusion would this not give rise to and when could one expect to see the end of it all.

Every one of the foregoing facts as alleged by Veuve Fornel and Company are only recited in order to point out the harm which all such sudden changes are likely to cause to their interests and to those of the King, as, instead of improving the leasehold it could only tend to impair it. Therefore Veuve Fornel and Company respectfully submit that they uphold the validity of the lease which was granted to them by the said Monseigneur the Intendant and executed by the notaries Lanouillet and Kauguinet in the presence of the Comptroller of the Marine on the ninth of September, one thousand seven hundred and forty-nine, and pray that the enjoyment thereof be continued to them until the expiration of the six years, in default of which they persist in their request for the reimbursement and payment to them, next year 1751, of the sum of 75,337 livres 17s. in consideration of the expenditure and Losses incurred by them during the year's enjoyment of the lease, and further of the sum of fourteen thousand livres for the non-enjoyment of the remaining five years to run of the said lease. The above being what Veuve Fornel and Company expect from Monseigneur the Intendant's sense of justice and fairness.

M^r Jacques Perrault Marcht. a Québec.

Monsieur tout est changé présentement comme vous pouvez le voir par la présente. Je ne sais ce que le Capt^{ne} Lebreun prétend faire je crois qu'il veut se jouer de moi jusqu'a la fin. Samedi le 9 du courant lorsque je suis arrivé a son poste, lui et son frere son venu a bord me sommer d'une chose que je ne leur ai jamais refusé ni ne pouvoit leur avoir refusé ne m'en ayant pas touché un mot de l'hiver. pour quelques loup-marins de glaces qui ont passés dans les Isles du large on a fait beaucoup plus de bruit que l'on fera de profit l'on a mit opposition a mes entreprises pour la baie et défendu de toucher une Epingle dans le poste avant qu'ils eussent fait leur pesche d'été. Je ne me suis opposé a rien et les ai laissés faire. Mardi au matin le 12 ma Goelette étant chargée, leurs rets a l'eau le Capt^{ne} Lebreun est venu me dire que si j'avois quelque objection a le laisser pescher il alloit mettre tout son grément a terre—je lui ai dit que le vin étoit versé qu'il falloit le boir et que tout étoit sur ses charges qu'il pouvoit mettre son grément a terre ou le laisser

Seal Islands, 16 June, 1787.

JASQUES PERRAULT, Esquire, Merch^t at Quebec,

Sir, as you may judge by the present letter, everything is changed at the present time. I hardly know what Cap^t Lebreun intends to do; I think he means to deceive me to the very end. Saturday, on the 8th instant, when I arrived at his post, he and his brother came on board and commanded me to do a thing which I never had refused them nor would have refused inasmuch as they did not mention the matter once to me in the course of the winter. In connection with a few winter seals that traveled through the islands off the shores there was made much more ado than will be profitable; they objected to my undertakings on the bay and forbade me to even touch a pin in the post until they would be through with their summer fishing. I did not offer any resistance and I let them alone. On Tuesday morning, the 12th, my schooner being laden, and their nets being sunk, Cap^{tn} Lebreun came to tell me that if I had any objection to his fishing he would draw his fishing gear on land. I replied that "now the ale was drawn, it had to be drunk," and the whole responsibility lay upon him and that it was immaterial to me whether he pulled his

suis parti que le Sept S'il avoit envie de pescher il pouvoit fort bien me le demander dans ce tems je ne l'aurois pas plus empeché que j'ai fait dans ce moment mais je crois que c'est un tour fait a la main pour garder son poste dans le quel il se soucie fort peu de faire le proffit de la Comp^{ie} pourvu qu'il y vive. mon Eskimau dit que ce n'est pas autre chose que les glaces que le vent a brisé et fait jeter le loup marin a l'eau que dans deux ou trois jours il n'en passera plus. quand même il feroit quelque chose cette été je ne crois pas que ça vous engage a garder le poste car vous devez etre certain que nous n'y ferons jamais pour payer nos dépenses. J'attends la goelette dans la Baie cet automne que vous gardiez son poste ou non. vous ferez attention que je suis tres cour de provision je ne sais ce qu'il a fait des Siennes. J'a vois 8 B/ques de biscuit dont deux ont été entierement perdu et 4 p. M^r Carthright qu'heureusement je n'ai pu lui faire tenir l'automne dernier. Je reste comme vous voyez avec Six B/ques de Biscuit lui en ayez laissé 4 j'avois un tierçon de farine de reste au poste que j'ai été obligé de lui laisser. Si vous gardez son poste Goupille prendra possession de la goelette aussitot qu'il aura mis ses effets a terre et viendra hiverner dans la Baie. Si vous m'envoyez Lebreun dans la baie vous pouvez être certain que quelqu'avancée que puisse être la Saison j'arme l'Eskimau et monte a Québec. je lui ai laissé plusieurs articles des effets de Goupille en cas que vous tentiez encore cet automne a son poste et emporte le reste avec moi dans la baie. je n'entends pas qu'une fois a terre personne ait aucun commandement que celui que je voudrai lui donner. il me faudra presentement quantité de futailles je faisoit compte d'emporter toutes celles qui étoient ici. vous avez cy inclus un certificat, la note de ce fishing gear on shore or left it under water. I came here on the 3rd of the month and only left in September. Had he wanted to do any fishing he could very well have asked me during that time and I would not have objected any more than I do at the present time, but I think this is a trick attempted in order to retain his post in which he cares little for the interest of the Company so long as he gets his living out of it. My Eskimau tells me that the only thing that caused the seals to take to the water was the breaking up of the ice by the wind and that, after two or three days, no more seals will be passing through. Even though he should make anything out of it this summer, I do not think this a sufficient reason for you to keep the post, for you may be sure that we will never make our expenses there. I am waiting for the arrival of the schooner in the Bay this autumn, whether you keep his post or not. You may note that I am very short of provisions. I do not know what he did with his. I had 8 barrels of biscuit two of which were totally lost and four were for Mr. Cartwright, but, fortunately, I could not deliver them to him last fall. As you may see, I still have six barrels of biscuit, having left 4 with him ; I had a tierce of flour left at the post but I was compelled to leave this to Should you decide to keep his post, Goupille will take possession of the schooner and will come and winter in the Bay. If you send Lebreun to me in the Bay, you may be sure that, no matter how advanced the season may be, I shall outfit the Eskimau and go back to Quebec. I left with him several articles out of Goupille's effects, in case you should make another attempt this fall at his post and I am taking the remainder with me to the Bay, once landed I do not want any one to take any order except such as I am agreeable to give. I will presently require a number of casks as I intended to take along with me all those that were que j'ai laissé au Capt^{ne} Lebreun et la copie d'une lettre que je lui ai laissé a mon départ. vous m'enverrez 3 chassis de 12 carreaux de 7/8 . le Capt^{ne} Lebreun a 11 ou 12 renards Blanc a vous remettre que l'Eskimau qui a hiverné a son poste a pris pendant l'hiver un fusil pour faire raccommoder 4 haches et 1 pioche. vous en enverrez Six grosses et avertirez toupin de les faire meilleures que l'année dernière. 3 Echevaux de fil a voile 6 Equilles a voile il vous remettra l'ancre de la chaloupe qu'il a cassé l'automne dernier. Si vous ne pouvez trouver un homme a Québec qui sache arranger le Saumon vous pourrez donner ordre au Capt^{ne} Goupille d'arreter a la Baie des Chateaux et écrire a M^r Dormer pour qu'il vous en procure un. je fais voile demain pour la Baie si les vents ne me sont pas contraires ou j'espere être tranquille et n'avoir personne qui veuille être plus maitre que moi.

SESSIONS OF THE PEACE.

GEORGE PLANTE Informant.

PIERRE MARCOUX, Merchant Accused.

STATEMENT BY THE INFORMANT.

On the 1st of September, 1788, the Informant preferred an information on three contraventions 1st having settled himself in Eskimaux bay, in the Indian country, without licence 2^{ly} having taken and sent into the said country not conceded by His Majesty, sundry merchandize, also without licence and 3^{ly}, having distributed and given rum and other strong liquors to the Indians.

On the 11th September following, the accused presented a peremptory exception, pleading that the place where the alleged contraventions supposedly had taken place were outside the limits of the Province and consequently do not fall under the jurisdiction of this Court

La cour par son Jugement Interlocutoire du deboutta l'accusé de cette exception et ordonna de plaider au mérite.

En conséquence il fut procédé à l'audition des témoins sur les dépositions desquels le dénonciateur, pour se conformer au Jugement interlocutoire du 20 aoust présent, fait les observations suivantes

Il parroit évidemment par les dépositions des deux témoins. Charles Trahan et Jean B. Vachon, 1^o que M^r Marcoux avoit une maison, un établissement sur une presqu'île dans la baie des Eskimaux au delà du détroit de Belile 2^o qu'il y a fait la traite avec les Eskimaux dans les mois de Fevrier, Mars et Avril 1788 ; qu'il donnoit des Eguilles, harpons, couvertes et qu'il en recevoit de la graisse et des peaux de loup-marin qu'il a trafiqué un canot pour un fusil &^{ca} &^{ca} ainsi les deux premiers chefs sont clairement constatés.

A regard du troisieme les témoins s'accordent à dire que pendant la traite M^r Marcoux donnoit régulièrement un coup d'eau-de-vie à chaque Eskimau qui venoit chez lui ; qu'il a même enivré un montagnais qui a hyverné chez lui.

L'accusé croit peut être avoir une sorte d'excuse sur ce qu'il ne donnoit qu'un coup d'eau de vie aux Esquimaux et cela par gracieuseté.

M^r Marcoux est fort gracieux ; mais l'ord^{ce} ne se soucie guères qu'il le soit ; elle n'à point d'égard aux Gracieusetés et quand au nombre, un seul coup en vaut mille puisque sa prohibition est générale reserve. Si on pouvoit tolerer un coup nonobstant la générosité de ses termes, pourquoi n'en pas tolerer deux, pourquoi pas trois et ainsi de suite ; à quel nombre plaira-t-il à l'accusé de s'arrêter ? dira-t-il qu'on peut aller Jusqu'à l'ivresse. L'ord^{ce} ne donne point une si large mesure, ubi lex non distinguit, non est distinguendum.

By an Interlocutory Judgment the court, on the [20 August last] dismissed that exception of the accused and ordered the action to be pleaded on its merits.

In consequence followed the hearing of the witnesses on whose evidence the informant, in compliance with the Interlocutory Judgment of the 20th August instant, submits the following comments :

From the depositions of the two witnesses, Charles Trahan and Jean B. Vachon, it is obvious, 1st that Mr. Marcoux had a house, an establishment on a peninsula in Esquimaux bay beyond the strait of Belleisle 2^{ly} that he traded with the Eskimaux in the months of February, March and April, 1755 : that he would give needles, harpoons, blankets in exchange of which he received grease and seal skins ; that he traded a canoe for a musket, &c., &c., and, therefore, the first two contraventions are clearly established.

As to the third one the witness are unanimous in their statement that during the trading reason Mr. Marcoux regularly gave a drink of brandy to every Eskimau that came to his house and that he even intoxicated a Montagnais who was wintering with him.

The accused may consider himself as having an excuse in the fact that he only gave one drink of brandy to the Eskimaux and that out of kindness.

Mr. Marcoux is indeed very kind ; but the ordinance cares but little about his being so ; it does not consider acts of kindness and as far as the number is concerned, one drink is as much as a thousand it being general and unqualified in its prohibition. If one were to tolerate one drink, notwithstanding the liberality of its terms, there is no reason why two should not be tolerated, or three or and so on : what number would the accused stop at ? Would he argue that he could go as far as drunkenness ? The ordinance does not give such a wide latitude : ubi lex non distinguit, non est n'eut-il fait que leur en donner une larme, la contravention est consommée, parce que le danger est d'en donner le gout. D'ailleurs il parroit que ces coups gracieux ont été distribués très régulièrement.

Dans les réponses sur les questions de l'accusé on voit “ qu'il est d'usage là de nommer les Eskimaux Eskimaux et non Sauvages, les Sauvages montagnois.” On y voit une description très scrupuleuse du genre de vie des uns et des autres ; et tout est si bien distingué qu'on y voit, clair comme le Jour, que les Montagnais vivent dans les montagnes et les Esquimaux dans la baie des Eskimaux. Il va sans doute s'élever la dessus une question délicate et curieuse Savoir Si les Eskimaux sont des Sauvages et d'après les efforts qu'on a fait pour démontrer qu'un Eskimau ne vit pas dans les montagnes et qu'un montagnois n'est pas un gibier de grève, il est à présumer que l'Achille de l'accusé va être, que puisqu'un eskimau n'est pas un montagnois et qu'un montagnois est un sauvage, il s'ensuit évidemment qu'un Eskimau n'est pas un sauvage.

Si une loi défendoit de tracer aucune figure sur un certain plan que le public auroit interet de conserver ; celui qui auroit tracé des quarrés sur ce plan. auroit-il lieu de bien se réjouir et de se flatter d'avoir trouvé une défense bien solide et bien sensée, s'il venoit à découvrir qu'un quarré n'est pas un cercle ? un quarré n'est pas un cercle, un Eskimau n'est pas un Montagnois, mais un quarré est une figure et un Eskimau est un Sauvage. Si l'accusé avoit goûté aux universaux il se seroit épargné les frais de son histoire naturelle de la baie des Eskimaux. Il auroit vu qu'un montagnois n'est pas un Sauteu, qu'un Sauteu, n'est pas un Iroquois et que cependant un montagnois un Sauteu et un Iroquois sont trois sauvages.

distinguendum. Even if he had only given a drop, the offence is consummated, because the danger lies in their acquiring a liking for it. Moreover, it appears that these drinks thus kindly given were distributed regularly indeed.

In their answers to the questions asked by the accused it is seen that “ it is the custom out there to call the Esquimaux ' Esquimaux ' and not Indians the Montagnais Indians.” There is also a very precise description of the manner of life of the ones and the others ; and every thing is so clearly distinguished that it appears as plain as daylight that the Montagnais live in the mountains and the Esquimaux in the bay of the Esquimaux. No doubt this will give rise to the rather delicate and curious question of ascertaining whether the Esquimaux are Indians and from the attempts made to show that an Esquimaux does not live in the mountains and that a Montagnais is not a frequenter of strands, it is to be supposed as a refutation of his argument that since an Eskimau is not a Montagnais and a Montagnais is an Indian, it follows necessarily that an Eskimau is not an Indian.

Supposing that a statute made it an offence to trace any figure on a certain plan that should be preserved intact in the public interest, would any one having traced squares on that plan have cause to be pleased and flatter himself with having worked out a strong and sensible plea on discovering that a square is not a circle ? a square is not a circle, an Esquimau is not a Montagnais, but a square is a figure and an Esquimau is an Indian. If the accused had even a slight notion of the universals he would have spared himself the trouble his natural history of the bay of the Esquimaux gave him. He would have seen that a

Il est d'usage là d'appeller les Eskimaux, Eskimaux. Il est d'usage partout d'appeller les choses par leurs noms, ainsi pour continuer la comparaison il est d'usage en Geometrie d'appeller un triangle, un triangle ; mais cela nempêche pas qu'un triangle ne soit une figure et qu'un Eskimau ne soit un Sauvage.

D'ailleurs qu'importe comment ceux qui traitent à la baie des Eskimaux appellent les Eskimaux les termes d'une loi ne sont pas sujets à ne signifier que ce que ceux-ci et ceux-là veulent qu'ils signifient ; Sans cela pour la transgresser en sureté, le transgresseur n'auroit qu'à nommer les choses autrement qu'elle ne les nomme, Les voleurs de grand chemin par exemple n'auroient qu'à donner au vol, au pillage et au meurtre, le nom de chasse. Au reste s'il faut avoir enivré un sauvage et qu'il n'y ait que les Montagnois qui soient des Sauvages. M^r Marcoux à enivré un Montagnois. Mais laissons ces petitesesses et concluons que l'informant ayant prouvé clairement les trois chefs de sa déclaration il peut avec confiance supplier cette cour de lui en accorder les conclusions avec dépens.

It is the custom out there to call the Eskimaux Eskirnaux. It is customary everywhere to call every thing by its name, therefore to go on with the comparison it is usual in geometry to call a triangle a triangle : but that does not hinder a triangle from being a figure and an Esquimau from being an Indian.

Besides it matters little what these who trade at the bay of the Eskimaux may call the Esquimaux, the terms of a statute are not supposed to mean just what this or that one may wish them to mean : otherwise any one violating the same could do so with impunity simply by calling things differently from what it is customary to call them. For instance, the highwaymen would simply call robbery, pillaging and murder by the name of chase. Moreover, if the person to have been intoxicated must be an Indian, and if the Montagnais alone are Indians, then Mr. Marcoux intoxicated a Montagnais. But let us have no more of these trifles and move that the Informant having clearly established the three contraventions of his declaration he may confidently pray that the court may be pleased to grant him his demands with costs.

PLEA.

The declaration contains three contraventions of the legislative ordinance of the Province of Quebec, of the year 1777, chapter 7.

1. Having, contrary to section I, in the bay of Kischachoux or Great Bay of the Esquimaux, distributed or disposed of rum or other strong liquors to the Indians of this Province, without licence, a penalty of £5 and not more than one month of imprisonment for the first offence.

2. Having, contrary to section III, settled in an Indian country of this Province, without licence, a penalty of £10 for the first offence.

3.—Et pour avoir, contre le 5e. article, porté et envoyé dans le païs Sauvage en cette Province sur des terres non concédées par Sa Majesté des effets, marchandises et provisions, sans licence, l'amende de £50.

Les dites amendes à poursuivre dans les délais fixés moitié à Sa Majesté, et l'autre moitié au Dénonciateur suivant l'article 7e.

VOICI LE FAIT

Avant la conquête comme depuis, la Province de Québec n'avoit fait aucun commerce de pelleteries, ni loi pour la Grande Baie des Eskimaux, qui est sur les côtes de la Nouvelle Bretagne par les 55. degrés de latitude, excepté quelques reglemens pour la pêche de laBrador.

Le 31. juillet 1784. Mr. Pierre Marcoux dans le doute sur ces reglemens autrefois faits à Terreneuve seulement pour la pêche, qui n'avoient été publiés à Quebec, obtint de Son Excellence Frederic Haldimand. alors Gouverneur de cette Province la première licence de traiter avec les Sauvages et autres dans la Grande Baie des Eskimaux, en cas qu'il y eut des pelleteries. Mais avant été informé que George Plante étoit réellement parti au commencement d'Août de la même année pour y aller, sans licence, Monsieur Marcoux ne voulut y aller, pour éviter à difficulté ni le poursuivre sur ladite ordonnance de 1777. parcequ'il n'aime à faire le métier de Dénonciateur, et que cette ordonnance n'a jamais eu en vue les greves, la mer, les glaces, ni la pêche du loup marin de la Grande Baie des Eskimaux, ni les peuples pêcheurs qui y viennent faire la pêche de la Baie d'Hudson, du Groenland et de toutes parts,

3. And, having, contrary to section V, carried and sent into the Indian country of this Province. on lands not conceded by His Majesty, wares, merchandize and provisions, without licence, a penalty of £50.

The said fines te be sued for within the time prescribed, one half for His Majesty and one half for the Informant pursuant to section VII.

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

Before the conquest, as well as since that time, the Province of Quebec had no trading in furs, nor any legislation in connection the Great Bay of the Eskimaux, which is situate on the coasts of New Britain, in latitude 55 degrees, excepting a few regulations for the Labrador fisheries.

On the 31st July, 1784, Mr. Pierre Marcoux being dubious as to these regulations formerly made at Newfoundland for the fisheries only, and which had not been published at Quebec, secured from His Excellency Frederick Haldimand, then Governor of this Province the first licence for trading with the Indians and others in the Great Bay of the Esquimaux, should there be any pelts. But, being informed that George Plante had actually left at the beginning of August in the same year, to go there, without licence, Mr. Marcoux decided not to go himself in order to avoid trouble and prosecuting him according to the said

Ordinance of 1777, as he was loath to act as Informant, and as that ordinance never was intended to cover the shores, the sea, the ice, nor the seal fisheries in the Great Bay of the Eskimaux, nor the people who come there for fishing purposes from Hudson sans empêchement, notamment en ce qui ne concerne que la pêche, qui seule peut y attirer les Savants et braves navigateurs et pêcheurs.

George Plante etant revenu de ladite Baie à Québec, Monsieur Marcoux obtint le 16. Août 1785. de l'Honorable Henry Hamilton lieutenant Gouverneur la seconde licence d'aller traiter avec les Sauvages et autres dans ladite Grande Baie des Eskimaux. Cela en cas qu'il y eut quelques pelleteries à traiter avec les vrais Sauvages ou chasseurs des forêts, s'il y en avoit.

Le 23. Août même année 1785. un des associés de M. Marcoux informé que George Plante avoit été en 1784. et retournoit en Août 1785, sans licence à ladite Baie pour y faire la traite qui s'entend des pelleteries, s'en assura par les déclarations sous serment de Jean le Brun et de Joseph Goupil devant un Juge de Paix alors ; mais il ne voulut, ni Mr. Marcoux, dénoncer ni l'empêcher de partir voulant bien laisser à chacun la chance du commerce dans ces parages périlleux. Ils ne troublèrent point Plante

En Eté 1786. Monsieur Marcoux revint à Québec, y amena le premier Eskimaux qui fut présenté avec sa famille à l'Honorable Henry Hope lieutenant Gouverneur au Chateau St. Louis à Québec et montré dans la ville au peuple par curiosité et comme une découverte nouvelle avec son canot et ses ustensiles de pêche. Et le 15. Septembre de la même année 1786. Monsieur Marcoux obtint de Son Honneur le lieutenant Gouverneur une licence pour établir des pêches à Indian's Island, qui est à la côte Est de la côte de laBrador et de la Grande Baie des Eskimaux, durant le plaisir de Sa Majesté, avec préférence de la concession de ladite Isle et d'une étendue de terre sur ladite côte sous les reglemens qui pourront être faits à l'avenir dans cette bay, Greenland, and anywhere else, without being disturbed, particularly in so far as fisheries are concerned exclusively, such being the only thing to draw the scientists and the bold navigators and fishermen.

George Plante having returned from the said bay to Quebec, Mr. Marcoux obtained, on the 16th August, 1785, from the Honorable Henry Hamilton, lieutenant-governor, the second licence to go and trade with the Indians and others in the said Great Bay of the Eskimaux. And that, in case there were pelts to be traded with the actual natives or forest hunters, if there were any.

On the 23rd August in the same year, one of Mr. Marcoux's partners, being informed that George Plante had gone, in 1784, and was returning in August, 1785, without licence, to the said Bay for the purpose of trading in what is known as the fur trade, ascertained himself by the declarations under oath made before a Justice of the Peace by Jean le Brun and Joseph Goupil ; but neither he nor Mr. Marcoux would lay an information nor prevent his departure as they wanted to let every one have his chance to trade in that dangerous region. They did not interfere with Plante.

In the summer of 1786, Mr. Marcoux returned to Quebec, and brought back with him the first Eskimau who was introduced, with his family, to the Honourable Henry Hope, Lieutenant-Governor at Castle St. Louis and exhibited to the people as a curiosity and a new discovery with his canoe and fishing utensils. And, on the 15th September of the same year, 1786, Mr. Marcoux obtained from His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, a licence to form establishments in connection with fisheries at Indian is'and, situated on the east coast of Labrador and of the Great Bay of the Eskimaux, during His Majesty's pleasure, with preference as to the concession of the said island and an extent partie du nouveau monde, pourvu que Monsieur Marcoux ne s'immisçat point dans la limite des terres accordées à la société d'Unitas Fratrum, ni dans celle du commerce accordé à la compagnie de Hudson.

M. Marcoux muni de cette licence de 1786. duement enrégistrée, repartit pour laBradador avec des planches des gremens de pêche à loup marin, y ramena l'Eskimaux et sa famille, mais ne put se rendre qu'aux Isles à loup marins sur les côtes de laBradador, ou il fut contraint d'hiverner.

Le 18. juin 1787. qui est le printems de ces endroits sans Été, Monsieur Marcoux écrivit des Isles à loup marin à Mons. Perrault Négociant à Québec par la goelétte la Résolution Capitaine le Brun, une lettre ou après avoir fait le récit de son malheureux hivernement, il le prioit en ces mots : “ N'oubliez pas de m'envoyer un permis pour la traite avec les deux nations.”

Monsieur Marcoux croyoit alors comme il le croit encore qu'il falloit une licence de traiter des pelleteries avec les Sauvages des forêts quand il y en a audessus du long Sault.

L'Honorable Lord Gouverneur étant parti de Québec le 3. Septembre 1787. pour Montréal, la saison pressant le Capitaine Goupil qui s'en alloit à laBradador de partir le 9. du même mois ; ne s'agissant d'aucune traite de pelleteries avec les Sauvages des forêts en cet endroit, enfin Monsieur Perrault ne put envoyer et n'envoya point la licence que Monsieur Marcoux ne lui avoit demandé qu'en cas de traite de pelleteries avec les Sauvages s'il y en avoit des forêts de cette Province.

Selon le témoignage de Baptiste Vachon, Mons Marcoux ne put partir de l'Isle aux loups marins que le 24. Juin 1787. et se rendit à la fin de Juillet à la Baie des Eskimaux, où il se mit en sureté, attendant la licence pour of land en the said coast ululer such regulations as may be made in future in that part of the New World, provided that Mr. Marcoux should not venture within the limits granted to the Society of Unitas Fratrum nor in those of the trade granted to the Hudson's Bay Company.

Mr. Marcoux, armed with the licence of 1786, duly registered, left again for Labrador, with lumber and seal-fishing gear, and took back with him the Eskimaux and his family, but could only get as far as the Seal island, on the coast of Labrador, where he was compelled to winter.

On the 18th June, 1787, which is spring time in these summerless places, Mr. Marcoux wrote, from Seal island, a letter to Monsieur .Jos. Perrault, merchant at Quebec, through the schooner Resolution, captain le Brun. a letter in which, after giving an account of his unfortunate wintering, he made a request in the following terms : “ Do not forget to send me a licence to trade with the two nations ” [of aborigines].

Mr. Marcoux thought then. as he still thinks, that it licence was required to have fur trading with the Indians of the forests when there are auiv above the Long Sault.

The Honourable Lord Governor having left Quebec on the 3rd September, 1787, for Montreal, and the season being late, Captain Goupil was forced to leave for Labrador on the 9th of the same month : as no trading in furs with the Indians of the forests was contemplated, finally Mr. Perrault could not and did let send the licence which Mr. Marcoux had only asked for in case any fur trade might he had with the Indians, if any in the forests of this Province.

According to the evidence of Baptiste Vachon, Mr. Marcoux could not leave Seal island until the 24th of June, 1787, and, on the last days of July, proceeded for the bay of the Esquimaux where he stayed, without apprehension, pending the arrival of the licence and of his fishing gear."

traiter et ses gremens de pêche. Il avoit quelques provisions qu'il avoit emportés selon sa licence de 1785. Il trouva de vrais Sauvages Montagnois dans le fond de la Baie, auxquels il ne distribua aucune liqueur forte ni marchandises de traite, quoiqu'ils en désiroient, et ces Sauvages se retirèrent dans les forêts.

La déposition de Charles Trahan prouve qu'il partit de Québec le 7. Septembre 1787. à bord du Capitaine Goupil chargé de planches provisions. Qu'étant arrivé le 31. Octobre à la Baie de Katchatchoux, il y trouva Monsieur Marcoux, avec treize personnes lui compris et par charité un montagnois et sa soeur que le Capitaine Goupil avoit sauvé de bonne Esperance, n'ayant aucun moyen de cabaner, Que Monsieur Marcoux avoit des gremens de pêche à loup marins et Saumons ; que son expédition étoit pour la pêche ; mais que le batiment arriva trop tard l'automne, et que ne pouvant revenir, ils furent obligés d'hiverner à quarante lieues dans la Baie des Eskimaux, d'où ils sont revenus ce printemps 1788.

La déposition de Jean Bte. Vachon prouve encore que vers le 1er. d'Octobre 1787. lorsque M. Marcoux attendoit le Capitaine Goupil, Plante vint avec Dumontier faire défense à M. Marcoux de bâtir dans l'endroit qui est une presque ile de sable. Que M. Marcoux lui demanda s'il avoit une concession de l'endroit, que Plante répondit que non ; et s'il avoit des limites connues ; que Plante lui dit que non. Que Plante ne dit point à Mons. Marcoux qu'il eut une licence de traite. Qu'ensuite Plante, M. Marcoux et Dumontier s'accordèrent et convinrent qu'ils n'iroient point au devant des Sauvages pour les attirer et que chacun profiteroient de ceux qui viendroient chez lui.

(Translation.)

He had some provisions which he had brought with him under his licence of 1785. He found some real Montagnais Indians in the bottom of the bay, and he distributed to them no strong liquors nor any trailing goods, although they were desirous for some, and these Indians withdrew into the forests.

The evidence of Charles Trahan shows that he left Quebec on the 7th of September, on board Captain Goupil's vessel with a cargo of hoards and provisions. That, reaching the bay of Katchatchoux on the 31st of October, he found Mr. Marcoux there, with thirteen men, himself included, and, out of charity, a Montagnais and his sister whom Captain Goupil had saved from Bonne Espérance, the said Indian not having the means of erecting a hut. That Mr. Marcoux had seal and salmon fishing gear : that his expedition was for the purpose of forming a fishing establishment ; but that the vessel arrived too late in the fall, and, as he could not return, they were compelled to winter forty leagues in the bay of the Esquimaux, whence they returned this spring, 1788.

The deposition of Jean Bte. Vachon further shows that about the 1st of October, 1787, while Mr. Marcoux was waiting for Captain Goupil, Plante came along with Dumontier and prohibited Mr. Marcoux from building at the place which is a sand peninsula. That, upon being asked by Mr. Marcoux whether he held a concession of the place, Plante replied in the negative ; and whether he had any known limits, Plante also replied in the negative. That Plante did not tell Mr. Marcoux that he had a trading licence. That, subsequently, Mr. Marcoux and Dumontier came to terms and agreed that they would not go to meet the Indians in order to attract them and that each one would profit by such of them as would come to him.

Les dépositions de tous les témoins s'accordent à prouver que l'on ne connoit à laBrador que les vrais Sauvages des forêts et des Eskimaux qui vivent à la mer et ne s'occupent que de la pêche au loup marin Que les vrais Sauvages qui sont les Montagnois vivent, courent, cabanent et chassent la pelleterie dans les forêts, et que les Eskimaux ne vivent, ne courent, ne cabanent et ne font que la pêche au loup marin en mer, dans des canots, même des chaloupes; qu'ils ne vont que sur les greves, d'îles en îles en Eté et que l'hiver ils cabanent sur les glaces qui prennent en Décembre et se dissolvent en Juin dans la Grande Baie des Eskimaux ; qu'ils ne vont point à la chasse des pelleteries dans les forêts comme font les vrais Sauvages, et que ce n'est qu'un peuple du Nord, peuple pêcheur à la mer.

Enfin ces témoignages se réduisent quant à l'accusation à prouver qu'après l'accord fait entre Plante et M. Marcoux ce dernier a refusé des liqueurs aux vrais Sauvages ; qu'il n'a point traité avec eux ; qu'il n'a suivi que son entreprise de pêche autant que la rigueur des circonstances lui ont pu permettre, et que contraint dans cette partie du nouveau monde de passer un long et rigoureux d'hiverner avec ce peuple pêcheur qui ne lui offroit que de la graisse de loup marin, il a accepté d'eux en présent et pour des ustensiles propres à la pêche, le loup marin pour lequel il avoit fait son expedition légale. Il est vrai qu'il a donné avec prudence un seul coup de rum à chacun de ces gens pêcheurs mouillés et transis de froid l'hiver et à manger lorsqu'ils avoient grand faim, plus pour accomplir la loi de Dieu et de la charité que pour traiter ou vendre ces vivres contre la loi des hommes, et dans la nécessité et l'embaras où il étoit M. Marcoux devoit s'assurer la protection ou les bons égards des Eskimaux et de tous les pêcheurs de la

(Translation.)

The evidence as taken from all the witnesses concurs in proving that, at Labrador, the only Indians known are those from the forests and the Eskimaux who live by the sea and are exclusively engaged in seal fishing. That the real Indians, that is, the Montagnais, live, roam, camp and hunt for furs in the forests, and that the Eskimaux do not roam, do not camp and only carry on seal fishing on the sea, in canoes, as well as in shallops ; that they only frequent the shores, going from one island to another in summer and that in winter time they camp on the ice which is formed in December and melts away in June in the Great bay of the Esquimaux ; that they do not hunt for furs in the forests as the real Indians do, and that they are a people from the North, fishing on the seas.

Lastly, these depositions, in so far as the charge to be proven is concerned, simply tend to show that, after the agreement made between Plante and Mr. Marcoux, the latter refused [to give] any liquor to the real Indians ; that he had no trade with them, and that compelled to spend a long and hard winter in that part of the New World with this nation of fishermen who only had seal oil to offer him, he accepted from them as a gift and in exchange for fishing gear, the seal oil which was the objective of his lawful expedition. It is true, that he reservedly gave each of these people a drink of rum, as they were wet and trembling with cold, and that he gave them something to eat when they were very hungry, more to comply with the divine law and out of charity than to trade with these people or sell them wares contrary to the laws of men, and owing to the need and difficulty for him, Mr. Marcoux, to make sure of the protection or the good will of the Eskimaux and of the côte ; en quoi il a réussi, en les informant de la bonté et des l'avantage du Gouvernement Britannique et évitant toute querelle, et tout excès. Il n'en est arrivé ni prouvé aucun.

SUR LE 1ER. CHEF D'ACCUSATION.

OU 1ER ARTICLE DE L'ORDONNANCE.

1.—Pour convaincre l'accusé le Dénonciateur aurait dû, mais n'a pu prouver que le lieu indiqué par l'accusation, soit dans les limites au Nord de la Province. Au contraire l'accusé offre actuellement d'exhiber la chartre ou concession de la Baie d'Hudson du 2. May. 1669. que le Statut de la 14. année ch. 83. reserve en pleine force et vertu et la proclamation de 1763. que ledit Statut reserve en force pour la côte de laBradador, qui n'est jointe à la Province de Québec que pour la pêche et la mer sous les directions seulement du Gouverneur.

2.—L'ordonnance A.D. 1777. dont est question ne défend pas la pêche ni d'équiper les Eskimaux qui ne sont pas des chasseurs de pelleteries dans les bois mais bien des gens de mer des pêcheurs de loup marin et baleine et qui sont toujours à l'eau froide ou sur les glaces de la mer. L'Accusé leur a fourni des harpons et des choses nécessaires à la pêche ; il les a équipé pour faire la pêche des poissons à ses risques, la loi ne le défend point, donc il n'y a point de contravention, dont même sa licence permanente du 15. Septembre 1786. le garantit, et quoiqu'il ait donné gratuitement un coup d'eau de vie modéré à boire dans sa maison sur les territoires ou terres véritablement and the merits of the British Government and avoiding any dispute or abuse. Nothing of the kind developed nor is there any evidence of the same having taken place.

ON THE 1ST CONVENTION OR 1ST ARTICLE OF THE ORDINANCE.

1. In order to convict the accused, the Informant should have—but could not—proved that the place mentioned in the accusation, is within the northern limits of the Province. On the contrary the accused actually volunteers to produce the charter or deed of concession of the Hudson's Bay Co. under date of 2nd May, 1669, as maintained in full force and effect by the Statute of the 14th year, chapter 83, and the Proclamation of 1763 maintained in force by the said statute for the coast of Labrador which is only united to the Province of Quebec in respect of the fisheries and the sea under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Governor.

2. The Ordinance. A.D. 1777, referred to, does not prohibit fishing nor the equipment of the Eskimaux who are not fur hunters in the forests but are really seafaring men, seal and whale fishermen who are constantly plying in the cold water and on the frozen seas. The accused supplied them with harpoons and other articles suitable for the fisheries ; he equipped them at his own risk, which is not contrary to the law, and therefore not a contravention, but even authorised under his standing licence of the 15th September, conçédées à la Compagnie de Hudson hors cette Province, qu'il ne leur en a point laissé abuser ni emporter sur l'eau ni sur les glaces dans les limites de la pêche de cette Province, il ne peut être constaté aucune contravention à la loi faite pour les véritables Sauvages chasseurs ou traitteurs de pelleteries des bois non concédés en cette Province. Quand au seul Montagnois mentionné par les dépositions, il est prouvé qu'il étoit sédentaire à la maison de l'accusé, sujet aux règles du maître auquel il étoit au service, et que s'il en a abusé ce n'a été que vers Noël 1787. de sorte que l'information a été égard ne peut avoir d'effet, n'ayant pas été faite dans les six mois ordonnés.

SUR LE 2. CHEF.

L'Accusé ne s'est point établi sur la côte de laBrador sans licence, il en a plusieurs, notamment celle du 15. Septembre 1786. qui dure durant plaisir, et la loi défendant de s'établir sur des terres non concédées par Sa Majesté n'est pas applicable, parceque cette partie est concédée à la Compagnie d'Hudson ou à la société d'Unitas Fratrum, ; et parceque la bâtisse qui est la prétendue contravention, étant évidemment faite il y a plusieurs années, l'information n'a pas été faite dans le délai requis par lad. Ordonnance.

SUR LE 3. ET DERNIER CHEF.

L'Accusé étoit autorisé d'emporter ou recevoir les effets et les grements de pêche en question, parceque la pêche est libre parceque l'ordonnance ne la défend pas ; la permission de faire un établissement de pêche à laBrador of brandy in his house on the territories or lands actually conceded to the Hudson's Bay Co., he did not allow them to abuse the same nor to carry away any on the water or on the ice within the fishery limits of this Province ; There is no evidence of any contravention of the law enacted in connection with the real Indian hunters or fur traders of the forests not yet conceded in this Province. As for the one Montagnais mentioned in the depositions, it is proven that he was permanently settled in the house of the accused, subject to the orders of the master by whom he was employed, and that, if he made a bad use of it it was only around Christmas, 1787, so that, in this respect, the Information is null and void, as it was not laid within the six months required.

ON THE 2ND AND CONTRAVENTION.

The Accused did not settle on the coast of Labrador without licence ; he holds several permits, particularly that under date of the 15th September, 1786, granted during pleasure, and the law prohibiting any one from settling on lands not conceded by His Majesty is not applicable, as that region is conceded to the Hudson's Bay Company or to the Society of Unitas Fratrum, and as the building which is the basis of the alleged contravention, was evidently erected many years ago, the Information was not laid within the time specified by the said Ordinance.

The Accused was authorized to take with him or accept the fishing utensils referred to, since the fisheries are free, there being no prohibition to that effect in the Ordinance; under the datée du 15. Septembre 1786. l'autorisoit alors et l'autorise encore à la faire parcequ'elle dure encore avec le plaisir de Sa Majesté. Enfin ces effets et grements n'ont point été portés sur des terres non concédées mais bien sur les greves libres à la pêche seulement qui dépend de cette Province ; s'il y en a eu de mis sur les terres en cette partie, elles sont concédées à la Compagnie d'Hudson à qui le proviso de Statut de la 14. année ch. 83 les reserve expressement hors les limites de cette Province.

1.—Enfin le Dénonciateur n'est plus recevable à informer parcequ'il ne l'a jamais régulièrement, n'ayant pas fait authentifier son information devant aucun juge à Paix dans la forme d'une information dont le Dictionnaire de loi par Jacob, donne le modèle, et n'ayant obtenu aucun ordre ni prise de corps signé d'un Juge à paix dans le délai requis l'ordre seulement signé du Greffier qui ne porte qu'une peine de dix livres ne pouvant suffire ou ne devant avoir plus de force que ne porte sa forme et teneur.

2.—Le Dénonciateur avant cessé de comparoitre le Septembre dernier quoique la cour eut ordonné de reparoitre ayant été appelé et n'ayant point comparu alors, aucontraire ayant été en Mer depuis ce tems et ayant exposé l'accusé à être privé de faire entendre alors et depuis d'autres preuves et d'avoir son secours pour ses frais et retardations en ce procès, l'accusation doit être déboutée, parceque l'accusateur devoit continuer alors a poursuivre ; il ne le pouvoit le faire par agent ni par le pouvoir qu'il avoit donné alors de poursuivre en son absence, et ne pouvant poursuivre qu'en six mois, la peremption est acquise de droit par six mois après faute de poursuite : car permission, dated 15th September, 1786, to form a fishery establishment at Labrador, he was authorized, and he is still authorized, to form the same during His Majesty's pleasure. Lastly, these effects and gear were not taken to unconceded lands but actually to the beaches open to the fisheries depending exclusively upon this Province ; if any were included in the lands in that region, they were conceded to the Hudson's Bay Company in whose behalf they are expressly reserved as being outside the limits of this Province, under the proviso contained in the Statute of the 14th year, chapter 83.

Lastly the informant is no longer allowed to prefer an information as he did not do so in the proper manner, not having had the same declared before a Justice of the Peace in the form of an Information as called for by Jacob's Dictionnaire de loi, and not having either secured any order nor a writ of arrest under the hand of a Justice of the Peace within the time required, the writ being only signed by the clerk and setting forth only a penalty of ten pounds, the same being insufficient or having no further force than is conveyed by the form and tenor thereof.

2. The Informant not having appeared in court since the of September, although summoned by the Court to appear again, having been called again and not having then appeared, on the contrary, being on the seas since that time and having exposed the accused to be prevented from being heard then and since to adduce further evidence and from obtaining relief for his costs and delays in this action, the Information should be dismissed, because the Informant was bound to proceed then with the suit ; he could not do so through an agent nor by means of the authorization he had at the time to take action while he was absent, limitation is acquired as a right in six une action annale est perie par le même tems de sa durée d'une année, et ainsi de toute action.

3.—L'accord prouvé avoir été fait entre le Dénonciateur et l'accusé selon les témoignages suffit pour le faire débouter de son information irregulière et l'exclut d'obtenir sa part des sommes imposées aux contraventions en supposant même qu'elles auroient été prouvées avoir été commises dans les limites connues et certaines de cette Province.

Pourquoi l'accusé conclud à ce que le Dénonciateur soit entièrement débouté de sa requête irregulière et injuste avec dépens. Et ferez Justice.—

months after failure to prosecute : for an annual action becomes extinct at the end of the said term of a year, and the same applies to any action.

3. The agreement proved to have taken place between the Informant and the Accused, according to the evidence adduced, is sufficient to cause the court to reject his irregular information and bar him from obtaining his share of the fines fixed for the contraventions, even supposing that they had been established as having been committed within the known and determined limits of this Province.

Wherefore, the accused prays that the irregular and unfair petition of the Informant be completely dismissed with costs. According to Justice.

chiefly consist in trading with the Indians at the bay of the Esquimaux or elsewhere should the said partners see fit and in the interest of the society.

The establishments respectively owned by the two parties at the bay of the Esquimaux aforesaid shall be wholly or in part for the use of the society and as may be determined by the said partners and the costs of maintaining the said establishments thus used shall be borne by the society.

As to the rigging, tools and utensils which are found by inventory in the said establishments, the said partnership shall use them and, at the end thereof, shall return the same in like quantity and condition.

Such goods, food and trading effects as may be found in the said establishments shall be estimated in January next and the society shall account for the same to the respective parties concerned.

Such food, goods and other articles as it shall be necessary to buy at Quebec each year shall be purchased by and supplied by each of the two parties and in so far as possible in equal shares.

The society takes over and shall take over for their own account at the price of one hundred and eighty livres in currency of the Province, the schooner called the Sainte-Anne, belonging to the said Dumontier and Belliveau, together with her two anchors, sail, rope, shallop and all rigging depending from the same.

The returns from the trade of the said society shall, as they arrive in this city of Quebec, be sold wholly or divided in kind as may be agreed upon by the said parties concerned.

In the event of any or either of the four parties concerned dying, his widow shall be free to carry on the interests of her late husband in the said society upon the condition that she shall supply her share as well as receive her share.

Dans les cas de difficulté entre les sus dits associés pour raison de la sus dite société les dite associés s'obligent l'un envers l'autre de les soumettre à la décision de trois arbitres dont deux choisis par les parties et la troisième par les deux autres la décision desquels trois arbitres sera finale.

29 April, 1676.

Louis, by the Grace of God, King of France and Navarre, to all to whom these presents may come, greeting, our dear and beloved Medard Chouart, Sieur Desgroseliers, and Pierre Esprit Radisson have humbly represented to us that having made several journeys in foreign countries, they have acquired particular information in connection With commerce and especially as to the white porpoise fishery which the seamen of our Kingdom

Sur les contestations mues entre les heritiers des feus Srs. Joliet et Lalande proprietaires des isles et islets Mingan en vertu de la concession faite a eux ou leurs auteurs le dix neuf mars mil six cent soixante dix neuf par M. Ducheneau cy devant intendant en ce pais, et les proprietaires de diverses concessions en terre ferme vis a vis desd. isles et islets, a l'occasion des pesches de loup marin qui ont esté etablies par ces derniers nous aurions rendu des le trente septembre mil sept cent trente neuf un reglement, qui entre autres dispositions fixe les redevances dont les concessionnaires en terre ferme seroient tenus envers lesd. Joliet et Lalande pour les isles situées vis a vis de leur concession dont ils auront besoin pour l'exploitation de leurs pesches mais le reglement cy dessus n'ayant eû lieu, nous aurions rendu compte a Sa Majesté

CHARLES MARQUIS DE BEAUHARNOIS ETC.

GILLES HOQUART, &C.

Upon the differences existing between the heirs of the late Sieurs Joliet and Lalande, proprietors of the Islands and Islets of Mingan, in virtue of the grant made to them, or to their predecessors, on the 19th March 1679, by Mr. Duchesneau, formerly Intendant in this country ; and the owners of several concessions on the mainland opposite to the said islands and islets, with respect to the seal fisheries which have been established by the latter, we did, as far back as the 30th September 1739, make a regulation which, among other provisions therein contained, fixes the rents to be paid by the said grantees to the said Sieurs Joliet and Lalande, for the use of the islands situated in front of their lands and which they required to carry on the fisheries aforesaid.

But the said regulation not having been carried into effect, we have communicated to His Majesty the new representations made by the heirs of the said Sieurs Joliet and Lalande, upon des nouvelles representations qui ont esté faites par lesd. heritiers Joliet et Lalande, sur lesquelles elle nous a envoyé ses ordres contenus dans la depesche que Mr. le Comte de Maurepas nous a ecrite le 12 : avril der. en exécution de laquelle. Nous sans avoir egard au reglement dud. jour trente septembre mil sept cent trente neuf que nous avons revoqué et annullé, et em maintenant en tant que de besoin lesd. heritiers Joliet et Lalande dans la propriété desd. isles et islets en question ; avons réglé ce qui suit.

Les propriétaires des isles et islets seront tenus a la premiere requisition qui leur en sera faite par les propriétaires de la Terre Ferme, de leur conceder les isles et islets sizes vis a vis et le long de leurs concessions en Terre Ferme et dont ils auront besoin pour l'etablissement et le succez de leurs pesches sedentaires et ce pour le temps dont ils jouiront de leurs concessions en Terre Ferme ; a la charge de payer auxd. propriétaires des isles un et demi pour cent du produit total de la pesche de chaque année en huiles et peaux de loup marin.

La redevance d'un et demi pour cent cy dessus sera payée en nature a Quebec aux propriétaires desd. isles, a l'arrivée des batiments des lieux de la pesche.

Pourront les propriétaires desd. isles et islets faire comme cy devant la chasse du loup marin au fusil concurrement avec les concessionnaires en Terre Ferme dans lesd. isles et islets après le temps expiré de la pesche sedentaire ; sans qu'il leur soit permis de faire aucun etablissement de pesche sedentaire which His Majesty has sent us his orders contained in the despatch which the Count de Maurepas has written to us, on the 18th April last, and in execution thereof.

We, not regarding the regulation of the 30th September 1739, which we have revoked and annulled, and maintaining the said heirs Joliet and Lalande in their right of property, have ordained as follows, to wit :

The proprietors of the islands and islets will be required, on the first application to that effect by the tenants on the mainland, to grant to them the islands and islets situated opposite to and along their grants on the mainland, and which they require for the establishment of their sedentary fisheries the said grant to be for and during the time they are in possession of their grants on the mainland, subject, in favour of the proprietors of the islands and islets aforesaid, to the payment of one and a half per cent of the annual produce of the said fisheries, in oil and seal skins.

The said rent shall be paid to the proprietors of the said islands in kind, at Quebec, on the arrival of the vessels from the fishing grounds.

The proprietors of the said islands and islets shall, as heretofore, be allowed to hunt the seals with gulls, concurrently with the grantees of the mainland, upon the said islands and islets, at the expiration of the sedentary fishery season ; they shall not, however, be allowed to establish any attendu la redevance cy dessus réglée, et que deux pesches trop voisines ne peuvent que se nuire l'une a l'autre.

S'il est expédié par la suite des concessions en Terre Ferme a d'autres particuliers qu'a ceux qui en ont cy devant obtenu ; les propriétaires des isles seront obligez de leur concéder les isles et les islets aux termes, aux charges des articles premier et second du present reglement ; et faute par ceux cy de le faire, il leur en sera expédié des titres au nom du Roy.

A l'égard des redevances dues jusques a ce jour par le s. Pommereau pour la jouissance qu'il a eue des isles qui sont vis-a-vis sa concession ; nous les avons réglées sur le pied porté au per. article du present reglement et ordonné qu'il les payera en argent aux d. heritiers Joliet et Lalande a compter de l'année mil sept cent quarante datte du brevet de ratification de la concession en Terre Ferme ; et ce au prix que les huiles et peaux de loup marin ont esté vendues ez années mil sept cent quarante, mil sept cent quarante un, et mil sept cent quarante deux, par led. s. Pommereau, ce qu'il sera tenu de declarer et affirmer.

Ordonnons que le present reglement sera exécuté entre les parties selon sa forme et teneur. Fait a Quebec le vingt sept aoust mil sept cent quarante deux.

sedentary fishery, in consideration of the above rent, inasmuch as two fisheries can only injure each other by being too close.

Should any grant of land on the mainland be made hereafter to other individuals besides the present grantees, the owners of the said islands will be required to grant to them the islands and islets upon the terms mentioned in the first and second articles of this ordinance; and, in default of so doing, deeds shall be granted to them in the name of His Majesty.

As to the arrears due by the Sieur Pommereau up to this day, we have fixed them at the rate mentioned in the said first article, and order that he shall pay them, in money, to the said heirs Joliet and Lalande, from the year 1740 (the date of the certificate of ratification of his grant on the mainland), according to the prices at which seal oil and seal skins were sold in the year 1742 by him, the said Sieur Pommereau, who will be bound to declare and attest it.

We order that the present regulation be executed between the parties, according to its tenor and effect.

Done at Quebec, on the twenty-seventh day of August one thousand seven hundred and forty-two.

affermé la dite seigneurie pour y faire la pêche du loup-marin et la traite avec les sauvages et nous ont représenté pour titres de leurs possessions et jouissance.

Primo : Un contrat passé devant Panet et son confrère, Notaires, à Québec, le 13 août 1761, de bail à ferme du poste de Mingan, par ordre de Son Excellence le Général Murray, par Monsieur Maître Jacques Belcour De la Fontaine et Monsieur Jean Taché, tous deux propriétaires en partie du dit poste de Mingan, tant en leur noms qu'en ceux des copropriétaires absents pour le terme et espace de neuf années consécutifs et entières à Monsieur Joseph Isbister, négociant le poste de Mingan, dans l'étendue qu'il peut avoir en terre ferme du côté du Nord, et tel qu'en a joui, ou dû jouir Monsieur Bissot, beau-père de mon dit Sieur De la Fontaine et Messieurs Anticosty et Mingan, pour, par le dit fermier, faire les pêches, chasse et traite qu'il jugera à propos dans l'étendue du dit poste, sans en rien réserver ni excepter pour et moyennant la somme de cinquante livres sterling, par chaque année ;

Secundo : Un extrait des Régistres de la Cour des Plaidoyers communs du District de Québec, en date du 21 de ce mois signé David Lyn, Greffier de la dite Cour, contenant un verdict rendu en la dite Cour, le 16 octobre 1770, qu'en assurant la propriété du dit poste de Mingan, aux héritiers Bissot et Jolliet, condamne le dit Sieur Isbister à payer à François Cugnet, représentant Bissot sur sa requête présentée à la dite Cour, une somme de cinquante livres sterling ;

Tertio : Un acte sous seing privé passé entre Etienne Charest, Catherine Bissot, Louis Jolliet et Claire François Bissot, en date du 26 août 1683, par lequel il assert que Louis Jolliet et Claire Bissot, ont cédé pour toujours à Etienne Charest et Catherine Bissot, son épouse, la part qu'ils auraient dû prétendre de la succession de feu Sieur François Bissot, dans la moitié, terres, moulins et cuais de la Pointe de Livy, moyennant quoi le dit Etienne Charest et Catherine Bissot, abandonnent à Louis Jolliet tout ce qui aurait pu leur revenir en quelque manière que ce soit du côté des Sept Isles, depuis l'Isle aux Oeufs et jusque dans la Baie aux Espagnols, pour les terres et autres choses qui sont tous les titres que les dits comparans ont dit avoir à nous représenter demandant souffrante pour François Belcour De la Fontaine, absent de cette ville, demeurant sur un établissement qu'il a fait au Grand Bots dans la Baie des Chaleurs, nous supplians qu'il nous plaise les recevoir à la foy et hommage des dits trois Fiefs et Seigneuries des Isles et Islets de Mingan, vulgairement appelé le Poste de Mingan, relevans en plein, Fief de Sa Majesté, et à l'instant s'étant mis en devoir de vassaux, têtes nus, sans épés, et éperons et un genoux en terre auraient dit a haute et intelligible voix qu'ils portaient et rendaient entre nos mains la foi et hommage qu'ils sont tenus de rendre et porter au Roy au Château St. Louis de Québec, à cause des dits fiefs et seigneuries, à laquelle foi et hommage nous les avons reçus et recevons par ces présentes, sauf des droits du Roy en autres choses et de l'autrui en toutes et les dits comparans ont fait et souscrit entre nos mains le serment de bien et fidèlement servir Sa Majesté et de nous avertir et nos successeurs s'ils apprennent qu'il se fasse quelque chose contre son service et se sont obligés de fournir leurs aveux et dénombrements dans le temps prescrit par les lois, coutumes et usages de cette province ; dont et du tout ils nous ont requis acte que nous leur avons accordé et ont signé avec nous.

Par ordre de Son Excellence.

N.B.—Remis à la demande de Messieurs Cugnet, Nicholas, Joseph et François De la Fontaine, Grant et Dunn, un certificat de leur presentation à Foi et hommage, ce matin à 4 h. ½ dans l'après diner, le 28 Mai 1781.

SHERIFF'S DEED TO JOHN RICHARDSON OF 15/32nds OF ISLES ET ISLETS DE MINGAN, 22 FEBRUARY, 1808.

IN THE PRIVY COUNCIL. ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF THE QUEEN'S BENCH FOR LOWER CANADA. THE LABRADOR COMPANY AND THE QUEEN, 1891, pp. 424-425.

THIS Indenture, made the twenty-second day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eight, between James Shepherd, Sheriff of the District of Quebec, in the Province of Lower Canada, of the one part, and John Richardson, Esquire, of the City and District of Montreal, in the said Province, Curator, to the vacant succession of William Grant, late of Quebec, Esquire, deceased, of the other part. Whereas His Majesty's writ of execution bearing date 13 March, one thousand eight hundred and five, issued out of the Court of King's Bench, for the said District of Quebec, at the suit of Ralph Rosslewin and Archange Baby, his wife, against the lands and tenements of Mathew Lymburner and of the late John Crawford, deceased, in the hands of John William Woolsey, Curator to the vacant succession of the said John Crawford, directed to the Sheriff of the District of Quebec, which writ was on the said 13th day of March, 1805, delivered to the said James Shepherd, Sheriff, as aforesaid, to be executed, in virtue whereof the said Sheriff did seize into his hands and take in execution as belonging to the said Mathew Lymburner and the late John Crawford, deceased, fifteen thirty-second parts undivided in the Fief and Seigniorie of the Isles and Islands of Mingan, situated on the Coast of Labrador, in the District of Quebec, said Seigniorie consisting of the Isles and Islands which being on the North Shore follow in continuation to the Bay called L'anse aux Espagnols, in such manner as the said Seigniorie, with its rights, is more amply conceded and designated by the title of Concession, granted to Jacques de Lalande and Louis Jolliet, of date the tenth of March, 1679, also with all the right in the Seigniorie of the mainland of Mingan, to the north of and opposite to the said Isles and Islands such as Joseph La Fontaine as descendants of the deceased François Bissot de la Rivière, might have possessed and did sell the same to the said Mathew Lymburner, by contract passed before Mr. Jacques Pinguet, Notary of Quebec, the 15th May, 1788, with the rights, honors and prerogatives annexed to the said Isles and Islands and mainland without reserves. And whereas the said Sheriff, having so seized into his hands and taken the said premises in execution, did cause the same to be advertised and proclaimed in the Quebec Gazette and at the Church door of the parish of Quebec, according to law, to be sold and adjudged to the highest bidder, at the Court House in the City of Quebec, on Thursday the eighth day of August, 1805, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon and the same premises being then put up to sale in the usual manner at the place aforesaid, the said William Grant, deceased, being the last and highest bidder, became the purchaser thereof at the price of three hundred and sixty-six pounds, currency of the Province of Lower Canada. Now in order to convey the said premises and to confirm the purchase thereof to the said John Richardson, as curator to the vacant succession of the said William Grant, deceased, his heirs and assigns.

This Indenture witnesseth that the said Sheriff, by virtue of the said writ of execution and of his said office of Sheriff, for and in consideration of the said sum of three hundred and sixty-six pounds, to him by the said John Richardson, in his quality aforesaid, at or before the execution of these presents in hand paid, the receipt whereof the said Sheriff doth hereby acknowledge and thereof acquit and discharge the said John Richardson, in his said quality, his heirs and assigns, hath granted, bargained and sold and by virtue of the said writ of execution and these presents doth as much as in him is and he lawfully may grant, bargain and sell to the said John Richardson, as curator to the vacant succession of the said William Grant, deceased, the said premises hereinbefore described and of the appurtenances thereunto belonging, and also all and singular the right, title, interest, property, claim and demand whatsoever, of him, the said Sheriff, of, in and to the same and every part and parcel thereof. To have and to hold the said premises and appurtenances unto the said John Richardson, in his said quality, his heirs and assigns to the only proper use and benefit and behoof of him, the said John Richardson, in his said quality of curator to the vacant succession of the said William Grant, deceased, his heirs and assigns forever under such rents, duties, and services as the said premises are subject to. In witness whereof the said parties have hereunto interchangeably set their hands and seals, at the City of Quebec aforesaid, on the day and year first above written.

Were present the Honourable John Richardson, Esquire, one of the members of His Majesty's Executive Council in this Province, usually residing at Montreal, and at the present time, at Quebec, Patrick Langan, Esquire, residing at Quebec, Messrs. William Burns, John William Woolsey and Mathew Lymburner, merchant, also residing at Quebec.

The above-named parties stated that, under two agreements executed this day before the undersigned notaries, the said Patrick Langan, William Burns, John William Woolsey and Mathew Lymburner, had acquired from the said Honourable John Richardson, in the name of and as curator of the vacant succession of the late William Grant, Esquire, the fief and seigniory of the Isles et Islets de Mingan, together with five forty-eighths undivided of the fief and seigniory of St. Paul, both situate on the coast of Labrador, in the district of Quebec, and also from the said Honourable John Richardson, in his said quality of curator, and from Charles William Grant, Esquire, all the fishing posts and establishments which are on the coast of Labrador, together with two schooners, divers effects and goods for the operating of the said posts, the whole as more fully dans les dits deux contrats auxquels les parties auront recours en ces de besoin, ainsi qu'aux titres de la vente et adjudication par décret, que le sheriff doit leur en délivrer. Que par autre contrat passé cejour'hui aussi devant les mêmes notaires le dit Patrick Langan Ecuyer l'un des dits acquéreurs, aurait retrocédé et vendu au dit honorable John Richardson certaines portions des parts par lui acquises en vertu des actes susmentionnés au moyen de quoi les susdites parties sont maintenant propriétaires du total des biens et effets batiments, marchandises, expliqués et désignés aux susdits actes, chacun pour les parts et portions indivises ci-après déclarées, savoir, le dit honorable John Richardson de trois huitièmes ; le dit Patrick Langan Ecuyer, d'un huitièmes ; les dits William Burns, John William Woolsey et Mathew Lymburner chacun d'un sixième.

Et les susdites parties reconnaissent en outre par ces présentes, s'être associés dès le quinze septembre dernier comme il s'associent pour l'espace de sept années entières et consécutives qui ont commencées le dit jour quinze septembre dernier, pour faire conjointement entr'eux pendant le dit temps et chacun selon les parts et portions ci dessus mentionnées l'exploitation de la pêche à Loup marin et à saumon, ainsi que la chasse &c. sur la dite côte de Labrador à telles postes et places et en telle manière et étendu qu'ils jugeront à propos, et chacun d'eux dans la même part et portion qu'il y est intéressé er qu'il possède dans les propriétés sus dites tel que ci dessus expliqué. Et pout cet effet les sus dites parts et portions indivises dans les sus dites propriétés mobilières et immobilières formeront un fond pour la société dont chaque associé contribuera à fournir et payer sa part de toutes les avances dépensés armements faite ou à faire, et recevra ensuite sa part et portion du gain ou set forth and described in the said two agreements to which the parties shall refer when need shall be, as well as to the deeds of the titles of sale and adjudication by writ, to be delivered by the Sheriff to them. That, by another instrument executed this day also before the same notaries, the said Patrick Langan, Esquire, one of the said purchasers, had retroceded and sold to the said Honourable John Richardson certain portions of his share acquired by him under the hereinbefore mentioned acts whereby the aforesaid parties are now owners of the whole of the property, and effects. vessels, goods as detailed and described in the hereinbefore mentioned acts, each for the undivided shares and portions hereinafter set forth, to wit : the said Honourable John Richardson, of the three eighths ; the said Patrick Langan, of one eighth ; the said William Burns, John William Woolsey and Mathew Lymburner, each of one sixth.

And, further, the aforesaid parties hereby acknowledge having formed a partnership from the fifteenth day of September last as an association for the space of seven full and consecutive years which began the said day of the fifteenth September last, to carry on jointly between themselves during the said time and each one according to the shares and portions above mentioned, the seal and salmon fishing operations, as well as the chase, &c., on the said coast of Labrador, at such posts and places and in such manner and extent as they may deem proper, and each of them in the same share and portion of his interest therein and which he may have in the above mentioned properties as hereinbefore recited. And, therefore, the aforesaid shares and undivided portions in the above properties, real and personal, shall form a stock for the society in which each partner shall contribute, providing bénifice des retours et produits du dit commerce et exploitation, et sera tenu de supporter aussi les pertes qui en pourront résulter chacun selon sa part et portion sus mentionnée.

Secondement. Et pour mieux gérer et conduire les exploitations et les intérêts de la dite société les dites parties nomment et appointent par le présent le dit Sr. Mathew Lymburner, ce acceptant auquel ils donnent l'agence et gestion des affaires de la société, à l'effet de faire tous les achats, armements, équipements, de la dite société, faire les engagements d'équipages ouvriers ou autres employés, faire les ventes et embarquements des produits et effets, tenir les livres et comptes écrire les lettres de correspondance et généralement faire tout ce qui sera nécessaire pour le plus grand intérêt de la sus dite société, et du tout sera tenu de donner communication à tous et chacun des intéressés, dont il sera en outre tenu et obligé de demander et suivre les instructions dans les choses et importances et principalement quant à l'étendue des armements à faire annuellement, comme aussi sera tenu de faire, dans le cours du mois de janvier ou de février de chaque année un état général de toutes les affaires de l'année précédentes et un compte de toutes les recettes et dépenses afin qu'il soit examiné et signé par les parties qui examineront en même temps les livres de la société et signeront la ballance sheet. Et en considération des peines et soins que le dit Sieur Mathew Lymburner aura dans la dite gestion les dits associés lui allouent par ces présentes une commission de deux et demi par cent qu'il aura le droit de charger et de recevoir sur le montant de toutes les dépenses et armements aussi bien que sur le montant de tous les produits et retours annuels. En outre il lui est alloué par ces présentes une somme de soixante livres du cours actuel de cette Province chaque année pour frais made, and shall receive his share and portion of the profit or gain in the returns and produce from the said trade and operations, and shall be held to bear also the losses which may result therefrom, each proportionately to his share and portion as aforesaid.

Secondly. And, in order to ensure the better management and direction of the operations and interests of the said society the said parties designate and appoint hereby the said sieur Mathew Lymburner, hereto accepting, to whom they give the agency and management of the affairs of the said society, in order to look after all the purchases, rigging, equipments, of the said society, hire the crews, workmen and other employees, keep the accounts, attend to the correspondence and, generally, to do whatever may be necessary in the best interest of the aforesaid society, and the whole of which he shall be held to communicate to each and every party concerned; he shall further be held and bound to ask for and follow instructions in matters of importance, particularly in connection with the equipments to be made yearly, and will also be held to submit, in the course of the month of January or February of every year, a general statement of all the business transacted in the previous year and a statement of receipts and expenditures in order that it be inspected and signed by the parties who, at the same time, examine the books of the company and sign the balance sheet. And, in consideration of the labour and attention which the said Sieur Mathew Lymburner will give to the said management, the said partners hereby allow him a commission at the rate of two and one half per centum which he shall be entitled to charge and collect on the sum total of all expenditures and equipments, as well as on the total of all the yearly produce and returns. Furthermore, he is hereby granted a sum of sixty livres, present currency of

SEIGNIORY TO RICHARDSON et al, 30 APRIL, 1808.

[30 April, 1808.]

IN THE PRIVY COUNCIL. ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF THE QUEEN'S BENCH FOR LOWER CANADA. 1891. THE LABRADOR COMPANY AND
THE QUEEN, pp. 426-428.

THIS INDENTURE, made the thirtieth day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eight, between James Shepherd, Esq., Sheriff of the District of Quebec, in the Province of Lower Canada, of the one part, and the Honorable John Richardson, residing in Montreal, Patrick Langan, William Burns, John William Woolsey and Mathew Lymburner, residing in Quebec, both in the said province of Lower Canada, of the other part. Whereas His Majesty's writ of execution, bearing date the fifth day of November, in the year one thousand eight hundred and seven, issued out of the Court of King's Bench, holding civil pleas for the said district at the suit of Patrick Langan, Esq., of Quebec. against the lands and tenements of William Grant, late of Quebec, Esq., deceased, in the hands of the Honorable John Richardson, Esq., curator to the vacant succession of the said William Grant, directed to the Sheriff of the said District, which writ was on the sixth day of November, one thousand eight hundred and seven, delivered to the said James Shepherd, Sheriff, as aforesaid, to be executed, in virtue whereof the said Sheriff did seize into his hands and take in execution, as belonging to the said William Grant, deceased, the whole and entire Fief and Seigniorie of the Isles and Islands of Mingan, situated in the coast of Labrador, in the said District of Quebec, said Seigniorie consisting of the Isles and Islands which, being on the north shore, follow in continuation to the Bay called L'Anse aux Espagnols, in such manner as the said Seigniorie, with its rights, is more amply conceded and designated by the title of concession granted to Jacques de Lalande and Louis Jolliet, of date the tenth day of March, in the year one thousand six hundred and seventy-nine, with the rights, honours and prerogatives annexed to the said Isles and Islands without reserve, subject to the exploitations of the fisheries ; agreeable to the ancient regulations and usages of the Province. And whereas the said Sheriff having so seized into his hands and taken the said premises in execution did cause the same to be advertized and proclaimed in the Quebec Gazette and at the church door of the parish of Quebec, according to law, to be sold and adjudged to the highest bidder at the Court House, in the City of Quebec, on Wednesday, the sixteenth day of March, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eight, at ten o'clock, in the forenoon, and the said premises being there put up to sale in the usual manner at the place aforesaid, the said John Richardson, Patrick Langan, William Burns, John William Woolsey and Mathew Lymburner, being the last and highest bidder became the purchasers thereof at the price of one hundred and fifty pounds current money of the Province of Lower Canada. Now in order to convey the said premises and to confirm the purchase thereof to the said John Richardson, Patrick Langan, William Burns, John William Woolsey and Mathew Lymburner, their heirs and assigns, This indenture witnesseth that the said Sheriff, by virtue of the said writ of execution and of his said office and for and in consideration of the said sum of one hundred and fifty pounds to him by the said John Richardson, Patrick Langan, William Burns, John William Woolsey and Mathew Lymburner, at or before the execution hereof in hand paid, the receipt whereof the said Sheriff does hereby acknowledge, and therefore doth acquit and discharge the said John Richardson, Patrick Langan, William Burns, John William Woolsey and Mathew Lymburner, their heirs and assigns, hath granted, bargained, and sold, and by virtue of the said writ of execution and of these presents, doth as much as in him is, and he lawfully may, grant, bargain and sell to the said John Richardson, Patrick Langan, William Burns, John William Woolsey and Mathew Lymburner, the said fief and Seignior, and also all and singular the rights, titles, interest, property, claim and demand whatsoever of him the said Sheriff in and to the same and every part and parcel thereof.

To have and to hold the said premises and appurtenances unto the said John Richardson, Patrick Langan, William Burns, John William Woolsey, and Mathew Lymburner, their heirs and assigns, to the only proper use, benefit and behoof of them, the said John Richardson, Patrick Langan, William Burns, John William Woolsey and Mathew Lymburner, their heirs and assigns for ever, under such rents, duties and services as the said premises are subject to.

In witness whereof the said parties have hereunto interchangeably set their hands and seals, on the day and year first above written.

SHERIFF'S DEED OF FISHING POSTS BETWEEN ITAMAMIOU AND ANSE STE. CLAIRE, TO RICHARDSON, et al,

30 APRIL, 1808.

IN THE PRIVY COUNCIL. ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF THE QUEEN'S BENCH FOR LOWER CANADA, 1892, pp. 429-431.

THIS INDENTURE made the thirtieth day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eight, between James Shepherd, Esquire, Sheriff of the District of Quebec, in the Province of Lower Canada, of the one part, and the Honourable John Richardson, residing at Montreal, Patrick Langan, William Burns, John William Woolsey, and Matthew Lymburner, residing in Quebec, both in the said Province of Lower Canada, of the other part.

Whereas His Majesty's writ of execution bearing date the fifth day of November, one thousand eight hundred and seven, issued out of the Court of Queen's Bench holding Civil Pleas for the said District, at the suit of Lawrence Brickwood, John Brickwood, the younger, James Daniels, Joseph Todhunter and Edward Colson of the City of London, merchants, and co-partners against the Estate and Succession of William Grant, late of Quebec, Esquire, deceased, in the hands and possession of the Honourable John Richardson, Esquire, curator to the vacant succession of the said William Grant, and also of Charles William Grant, of Quebec, Esquire, the said William Grant in his lifetime and the said Charles William Grant being co-partners in the Labrador Fisheries, directed to the Sheriff of the said District, which writ was on the seventeenth day of November, one thousand eight hundred and seven, delivered to the said James Shepherd, Sheriff, as aforesaid, to be executed ; in virtue whereof the said Sheriff did seize into his hands and take into execution as belonging to the said William Grant, deceased, and the said Charles William Grant, all such rights, estate, title, interest, property, claim, and demand whatsoever as the said William Grant and the said Charles William Grant, or either of them, had or have or ought to have in and to all the fishing posts and establishments on the Coast of Labrador, district of Quebec, Province of Lower Canada, occupied and possessed by the said William Grant, and Charles William Grant, for the purpose of carrying on Sedentary Seal and Salmon fisheries and other exploitations extending along the said coast, at and from the river and Posts of Itamamioux, inclusive down to the Post and Bay of Lance St. Clair and dependencies, inclusive in the Straits of Belleisle, particularly all such rights, estate, title, interest, property, claim and demand whatsoever as the said William Grant and Charles William Grant, or either of them, had or have or ought to have in and to the Posts of Little Mecatina, Great Mecatina, with large island, Kecaponi, St. Augustin and Chicataca, with all their dependencies which are sedentary seal fisheries, and which together with their sedentary salmon fishing posts of Lake Sally and Big Island, adjoining the River St. Augustin, all situated within the bounds of the seigniority of the Isles and Islets of Mingan. Also in and to the sedentary seal fishing posts of Mutton Bay, with Mutton Harbour, and of Tabatiere, with their dependencies, which are situate partly on the seigniority aforesaid and partly on the main land. Also in and to the sedentary salmon fishing posts of Itamamioux and St. Augustin, on the respective rivers so called, with all their dependencies which are situated on the mainland. Also and lastly, in and to the following posts situated at or near the Straits of Belleisle, that is to say the establishment and Posts of Brador or LaBrador, with Bay and harbour of that name, and islands, in such manner and with all the rights as now held by said William Grant and Charles William Grant, or as has been held heretofore by those from whom they derive with the seal fishery carried on there and all its dependencies, likewise the sedentary seal fishing posts at Lance aux Dunes, Blanc Sablons, and Lance St. Clair, with all their several dependencies, all which sedentary seal and salmon fishing posts are now held and have been held for a long series of years by past uninterruptedly by constant and exclusive right of possession and occupancy by the said William Grant and Charles William Grant, and their predecessors in the fisheries as well of the particular posts as of a space of sundry leagues around each post requisite for their due exploitation, agreeable to the ancient regulations and usages of the province, free of all rent and burthens saving a rent of three per cent. due to the Seigniors of the Seigniority of the Isles and Islands of Mingan, on the gross produce of the seal fisheries, situated within the bounds of that Seigniority. And further all such rights, estate, title, interest, property, claim and demand whatsoever, as the said William Grant and Charles William Grant, or either of them, had or have or ought to have in and to all other posts and places not enumerated within the aforesaid limits on the said coasts, where the said William Grant and Charles William Grant may have possession or effects, as well as in and to all the houses, stores, and buildings erected on and at all and each of the aforesaid posts and places, with all the fixtures, utensils, effects, and implements thereunto appertaining.

And whereas the said Sheriff having so seized into his hands and taken the said premises in execution, did cause the same to be advertised and proclaimed in the Quebec Gazette, and at the Church Door of the Parish of Quebec, according to law to be sold and adjudged to the highest bidder, at the Court house, in the City of Quebec, on Tuesday, the twenty-second day of March, one thousand eight hundred and eight, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

p. 3483

And the said premises being there put up to sale in the usual manner, at the place aforesaid, the said John Richardson, Patrick Langan, William Burns, John William Woolsey, and Matthew Lymburner, being the last and highest bidders, became the purchasers thereof at the price of two hundred pounds, current money of the Provnice [sic.] of Lower Canada. Now in order to convey the said premises and to confirm the purchase thereof to the said John Richardson, Patrick Langan, William Burns, John William Woolsey, and Matthew Lymburner, at or before the execution hereof in hand paid, the receipt whereof the said Sheriff does hereby acknowledge, and thereof doth acquit and discharge the said John Richardson, Peter Langan, William Burns, John William Woolsey and Matthew Lymburner, their heirs and assigns, hath granted, bargained and sold, and by virtue of the said writ of execution and of these presents doth as much as in him is and he lawfully may grant, bargain and sell to the said John Richardson, Patrick Langan, William Burns, John William Woolsey and Matthew Lymburner, all such rights, estate, title, interest, property, claim or demand, whatsoever as the said William Grant and the said Charles William Grant, or either of them had, have or ought to have in and to the fishing posts, establishments, houses, buildings and premises aforesaid, or in or to any part or parcel of them, or either of them together with their appurtenances, and each and every of them. To have and to hold unto the said John Richardson, Patrick Langan, William Burns, John William Woolsey and Matthew Lymburner, their heirs and assigns to the only proper use, benefit and behoof of them the said John Richardson, Patrick Langan, William Burns, John William Woolsey and Matthew Lymburner, their heirs and assigns forever, under such rent, duties and services as the said premises are subject to.

In witness whereof the said parties have hereunto interchangeably set their hands and seals on the day and year first above written.

ROSE AND RITCHIE TO HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY, REPORTING re TITLE OF LATTER TO PROPERTY IN THE LABRADOR PENINSULA, 27 DECEMBER, 1866.

HUDSON BAY COMPANY'S RECORDS.

Montreal, 27th December 1866.

Sir,

We have carefully investigated the titles to the various properties and rights claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company on the North shore of the River St. Lawrence, and the Labrador coast, and now beg to report the result of that investigation.

We would premise that the absence of proper maps and the very general definition of the boundaries, have interposed much difficulty in the way of forming accurate conclusions ; while the age of the various documents, the number of them, and the irregular manner in which many of those of earlier date have been executed, have made the task more than ordinarily tedious.

The properties or rights would appear to be three in number, viz :

1st. The Seigniory of the Isles and Islets of Mingan.

2nd. The fishing and other rights along the Coast, in front of and extending beyond the Northeasterly limits of the Seigniory.

3rd. The property at Esquimaux Bay on the Labrador Coast.

1. The Seigniory of the Isles and Islets of Mingan.

This was originally conceded on the tenth of March, 1679, by the Intendant representing the Crown of France to two persons named Jacques De la Lande and Louis Jolliet, and the grant is in the following terms :

“ The said Isles and Islands of Mingan, which are on the North shore, and which continue as far as the Bay called L'Ance aux Espagnols, to enjoy by themselves their heirs and assigns for the future, en titre di fief, Seigneurie Haute Moyenne et Basse Justice, with the charge of faith and homage which they, the said Sieurs De la Lande and Jolliet, their said heirs and assigns shall be obliged to render at the Castle of St. Lewis at Quebec, which they shall perform according to the rights and services customary and in accordance with the Coutume de la prevote et vicomte de Paris, which shall be followed in this respect until otherwise ordained by His Majesty. ”

We have traced the intermediate titles from this grant down to the Hudson's Bay Company, who acquired it on the eighth of February, 1836, from the heirs of the late John Richardson and others by deed executed on that day before Griffin, Notary Public at Montreal. This title is acknowledged by the Crown, and is enregistered in Newfoundland, and we think no reasonable doubt can be thrown on the validity of the Company's rights to the property. The only difficulty which arises is as regards the Boundaries & extent. It will be observed that there is no point of departure at the Westerly limit, but we think the grant includes all the islands in front of the Seigniory of the same name on the Mainland. The Westerly boundary of which begins at the Eastern limits of the King's Posts or Cape Cormorant. The Eastern boundary of the Seigniory is by no means so clear. According to the maps and reports of Mr. Bouchette the Surveyor General the Easterly limit is at Natasliquin¹ harbour in the Longitude while the Proprietors claim that it extends to Salmon Bay on Esquimaux

River now Anse a Blanc Sablon, near longitude

The description by which the Company acquired it is :

“ The whole and entire Fief and Seigniory of the Isles et Islets of Mingan, situated and being on the Coast of Labrador in the said district of Quebec and Province aforesaid, the said Fief and Seigniory consisting of the Isles and Islets which belong on the North shore, follow in continuation to the Bay called “ L'Anse aux Espagnols ” in such manner as the said Seigniory with its rights is more amply conceded and designated by the title of Concession granted to Jacques De la Lande and Louis Jolliet, of date the tenth day of March in the year 1679, with the rights, honors and prerogatives annexed to the said Isles et Islets hereby sold without reserve, subject to the exploitations of the fisheries agreeably to the ancient regulations and usages of the Province and as the same are now held and possessed by the said vendors.”

2nd. Fishing posts or establishments, and the rights of fishing or Royalty on Fishing Rights on the Coast of Labrador.

The original claim in respect of these rights or properties would seem to have arisen from the mere possession of William Grant and Charles William Grant, anterior to 1808— at least we can find no deed or trace of writing conferring on them any of the rights which are hereinafter recited. Having been taken in execution as belonging to the two Grants, they were sold on the thirtieth of April, 1808, by Sheriff's sale, to John Richardson, Patrick Langan, and others, and in the Indenture executed by the Sheriff they are described as follows :—

“ All such Right, estate, title interest, property, claim and demand whatsoever, as the said William Grant and the said Charles William Grant or either of them had or have or ought to have in and to all the Fishing posts and Establishments on the Coast of Labrador, District of Quebec, Province of Lower Canada, occupied and possessed by the said William Grant and Charles William Grant for the purpose of carrying on Sedentary Seal and Salmon fisheries and other exploitations extending along the said coast at and from the River and Post of Itamamionx inclusive, down to the Post and Bay of L'Anse St. Clair and dependencies inclusive in the straits of Belleisle, particularly all such right, estate, title, interest, property, claim and demand whatsoever, as the said William Grant and Charles William Grant or either of them had or have or ought to have in and to the posts of Little Mecatina, Great Mecatina with large Island Kecapoui, St. Augustin, and Chicataca with all their dependencies, which are sedentary Seal fisheries, and which together with their Sedentary Salmon Fishing Posts of Lake Sally and Big Island, adjoining the River St. Augustin all situated within the Bounds of the Seigniorship of the Isles and Islands of Mingan. Also in and to the Sedentary Salmon Fishing Posts of Itamamioux and St. Augustin on the respective Rivers so called with all their dependencies which are situated on the Main Land. Also and lastly in and at the following posts situated at or near the Straits of Belleisle, that is to say the Establishment of Posts of Brador or Labrador with Bay and harbour of that name, and Islands in such manner and with all the rights as now held by said William Grant and Charles William Grant or as have been held heretofore by those from whom they derive, with the Seal fishing carried on there and all its dependencies likewise the sedentary seal Fishing Posts at L'Anse aux Dunes Blanc Sablons and L'Anse St. Clair, with all their several dependencies. All which sedentary Seal and Salmon Fishing Posts are now held and have been held for a long series of years by past uninterruptedly by constant and exclusive right of possession and occupancy by the said William Grant and Charles William Grant and their predecessors in the fisheries as well of the particular posts as of a space of sundry leagues around each post requisite for their due exploitation, agreeable to the ancient regulations and usages of the Province, free of all rents and burthens, saving a rent of three per cent due to the Seigniors of the Seigniorship of the Isles and Islands of Mongan on the gross produce of the Seal Fisheries situated within the bounds of that Seigniorship. And further all such Right, estate, title, interest, property, claim and demand whatsoever of the said William Grant and Charles William Grant or either of them had or have or ought to have in and to all other posts and places not enumerated within the aforesaid limits on the said coast, where the said William Grant and Charles William Grant may have possession or effect as well as in and to all the Houses, stores and buildings erected on and at all and each of the aforesaid Posts and Places with all the fixtures, utensils, effects and implements thereunto appertaining.”

We can find no conveyances from the purchaser under this deed to the Hudson's Bay Company, but we are informed that they may be in the possession of the Company in England. We cannot however trace to any better foundation than the interests which the several partners seem to have as between themselves, assumed they possessed the various rights in or incidental to the different properties described in the Sheriff's Sale. And under these Circumstances we do not think the Hudson's Bay Company could validly enforce them.

3. The third property would appear to be at Esquimaux Bay or as it is more properly known—Hamilton Inlet or Ivocoke, on the Easterly coast of Labrador. We have traced the titles bearing on this as far back as 1823 to one Jacob Pozer. We can find no valid conveyance to him nor are we inclined to think that his rights rested on any better foundation than that of many years possession. On the 9th September, 1823, Pozer's representative (one Claude Duchesneau) sells to one Flavien Dufresne. The seller declares that he owned the property in virtue of Titles (without specifying them as is customary), and by actual possession and enjoyment during fifty years and upwards. On the 28th of March, 1828, Dufresne sells to J. O. Brunet—and on the 3rd of February 1829 Brunet sells to Mr. W. Lampson. The Property is thus described :—

“ All the estate, right, title, interest, property, possession, rights of possession, enjoyment, jouissance, benefit, claim and demand, and all other rights of what kind or description soever at Law and in Equity which he the said David Ramsay Stewart now hath, can, or ought to have or claim in and to all the large tract of land and premises, fisheries with fishing, and hunting establishments situate lying and being in the Bay commonly called La Baie Des Esquimaux, Esquimaux Bay, together with the stock in trade, implements, commodities, appurtenances and premises thereunto belonging consisting of fishing and hunting establishments, houses, buildings, stores, hangards, boats, chaloupes, nets and other fishing apparatus, furniture and hunting materials and articles belonging or in any wise appertaining ; with all the estate, right, title, interest, property, claim, and demand whatsoever of him the said David Ramsay Stewart, of, in and unto the said premises or any part thereof, as heretofore possessed and enjoyed by William Lampson of Quebec, merchant, under the title derived by him from Jean Olivier Brunet, by deed bearing date the third day of February one thousand eight hundred and twenty nine and as subsequently enjoyed by Nathaniel Jones of the City of Montreal in the district of Montreal in the said Province Esquire under and by virtue of a certain transfer and assignment from the said William Lampson to the said Nathaniel Jones at Quebec aforesaid, bearing date the seventh day of January one thousand eight hundred and thirty two and as now enjoyed by the said David Ramsay Stewart in virtue of a transfer or assignment from him the said Nathaniel Jones to him the said David Ramsay Stewart bearing date at Quebec aforesaid the

We have caused diligent examination to be made in the Public Archives, and have exhausted all the other information accessible to us, but can find no trace of any direct grants from the Crown of France or England of these two properties (nos. 1 & 2) or of the rights purporting to be conveyed other than that of the Isles and Islands of Mingan under date of the tenth of March 1679.

Though recited in the various deeds to which we have referred we fear the rights rest on no legal foundation and that the various conveyances were only operative to settle the interests of the different copartners or adventures among themselves.

LABRADOR COMPANY Defendants:
AND THE QUEEN Plaintiff.

AND THE CROSS-APPEAL.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH FOR LOWER CANADA, PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

Action of Ejectment—Effect of Act (18 Vict. c. 3) as to Defendant's title—Prescription—Immemorial Possession—Disclosure of Title with its Infirmities.

In an action of ejectment by the Crown, it appeared that the appellant company derived title through a grant made in 1661 by the French Government, which gave no seigneurie over the land in suit, but only a right to make establishments for hunting and fishing within certain limits ; that an Ordonnance in 1733, together with the action of the French Crown thereunder, did not create or recognise any title in the heirs of the grantee to such seigneurie ; that down to 1854 there was no evidence of either its creation or recognition by the British Crown ; but that in 1854 the Canadian Act, 18 Vict. c. 3 (amended by subsequent Acts), recognised that there was a seigneurie of Mingan, being part of the disputed land the boundaries whereof were conclusively established by a schedule authorized by the Acts :—

Held that the High Court was right in dismissing the suit as regards the scheduled lands. If a mistake had been made the legislature alone could correct it ; a court of law must give effect to the enactment as it stands :

Held, further, with regard to the claim of the company to hold the whole of the land in suit by prescription and immemorial possession, that inasmuch as it had disclosed the true root of its title, the law of prescription did not apply.

CONSOLIDATED CROSS-APPEALS from a decree of the Court of Queen's Bench (Feb. 6, 1891), affirming by a majority a decree of the Superior Court (Sept. 18, 1888).

The question at issue was as to the title of the Crown to a large tract of territory within the Province of Quebec, forming the northern sea coast of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and extending [105] from Cape Cormorant at the mouth of the River St. Lawrence to the eastern boundary of the province near Brador Bay by Belle Isle Straits. The tract of land in dispute is about 450 miles long, and is of a uniform width throughout of six miles inland from the sea coast.

The facts and proceedings are stated in the judgment of their Lordships.

The Judge of the Superior Court decided that the Company had satisfactorily proved the grant of the seigneurie in question ; that they had not surrendered any portion of it except the district from the Île aux Œufs to the River Moisy in the proceedings in 1733, and that the result of such proceedings left the rights of the predecessors of the company untouched except in respect of the district surrendered. He further decided that the company and their predecessors in title had been in practically undisturbed possession of the seigneurie for more than two centuries, that there had repeatedly been a recognition of the rights of their predecessors by the Crown, both in the Maurepas correspondence, by the receipt of dues, which were only owing to the Crown on the hypothesis that a seigneurie existed, and finally by the schedule of 1864. He left open and undecided the point raised by the company that their immemorial possession and their possession for over 100 years amounted to a title. But while thus in favour of the company on the main point, that of the existence of the seigneurie, the judge was in favour of the Crown as to what constituted its eastern boundary.

The Court of Queen's Bench affirmed the judgment of the Superior Court, but solely upon the ground that the Crown was bound by the recognition of the existence of the seigneurie contained in the seigneurial Acts, and that as against the company the schedule of 1864 was binding as to the eastern boundary of the seigneurie.

Rigby, Q.C., Abbott, Q.C. (of the Canadian Bar), and Tyrrell T. Paine, for the Labrador Company, contended that the Courts below were right, so far as they held upon the evidence that the company had proved the existence of the seigneurie in question. They referred to the evidence as shewing an original grant [106] thereof by the French Government to the appellant's predecessor—a subsequent recognition of its existence first by the French and afterwards by the British authorities, and that the rights thereunder, so far as they were asserted in the present suit, had not been surrendered.

With regard to the points of law involved, they contended that the majority of the Court of Queen's Bench were right in holding that the statutory recognition of the existence of the seigneurie, by the Acts of 1854, 1855, and 1856, related to the terra firma of Mingan, and bound the Crown. The error was in holding that the schedule of 1864 definitely settled the question of the eastern boundary. In the case of an unsettled seigneurie, which the terra firma of Mingan was, such schedule had no effect whatever except to fix the amount of the difference in value of the dues occasioned by the change from seigneurial tenure to that of franc aleu roturier.

Two classes of seigneuries are dealt with by the Acts, unsettled ; in other words, seigneuries in which there had been subinfeudation, and those in which there had not. In regard to settled seigneuries it would be necessary to ascertain the difference in value of the dues not only between the Crown and the seignior, but also as between the seigneur and his censitaires, to whom the land was conceded and by whom it was settled (see sect. 7, sub-sect. 4, of the Consolidated Statutes of 1861, c. 41). A “ censitaire ” is defined by sect. 8 to be “ every person occupying or possessing any land in any seigneurie with the permission of the seigneur or from whom the seigneur has received rents or other seigneurial dues in respect of such lands.” In the case of lands held by censitaires, but only in such case, the Commissioners were directed to ascertain the extent and nature of the lands held by them (see sect 7, sub-sect. 5). No such direction was given in the case of seigneuries : indeed it was by sect. 9 expressly enacted that for the purpose “ of making the schedule of any seigneurie the boundaries thereof shall be deemed to be those actually possessed by the seigneur although all or any part thereof may be in “ dispute.” Neither as between seigneur and censitaire, nor as between Crown and seigneur, nor as between seigneur and adjoining seigneur, was any jurisdiction [107] as to boundaries given to the Commissioners, and it is expressly stated in sect. 9 that for the purpose of making the schedule of any seigneurie “ the boundaries ” of a seigneurie are to “ be deemed to be those actually possessed by the seigneur although all or any part thereof may be in dispute.”

Further than that, as regards unsettled seigneuries, the change of tenure was effected eo instanti by the passing of the Act of 1856, and there was no necessity for settling boundaries by a subsequent schedule. Consequently, those who prepared the schedule of 1864 acted without jurisdiction in fixing the eastern boundary of Mingan at the River Goynish, and disregarded the direction of the Act to adopt the boundaries actually possessed by the proprietors ; and a schedule so drawn is not binding on the appellants. [LORD WATSON :—How can a court of law go behind what has been done by the Legislature ?]

It was also contended that the company and its predecessors in title had been in possession, in good faith, for more than 100 years, of the lands in suit, with the knowledge of, and without the interference of, the Crown. Such possession is equivalent to, or is sufficient evidence of, a title even against the Crown; especially in the case of wild and unsettled lands, which under the feudal law were alienable, although forming part of the domain of the Crown. Such possession is evidence of a grant by the Crown of the whole of the property in dispute. [LORD WATSON :—Is there any evidence of possession which is inconsistent with a licence ? Can you use possession for any other purpose than to explain the original grant ? Can you prescribe contrary to the title which you produce and rely on ?]

See also sect. 2213 of the Civil Code, on which it may be said that a prescriptive censitaire is not covered by it, and also that prescription, having begun to run while the old law was in force, was governed thereby.

Sir Horace Davey, Q.C., Laflamme, Q.C., and Belleau, Q.C. (both of the Canadian Bar), and Gore, for the Crown, contended that under the grant of 1661, the company's predecessors did not derive title to any territory upon the mainland, but only a right to establish stations thereon within the limits and for the purpose stated therein. The effect of the judgment in 1733 was that the grant was held not to be binding on the Crown, and in the proceedings the grantee surrendered to the French Crown all claims thereunder. Upon the cession of French Canada to England the claims of the grantee were considered and rejected, and nothing has happened since to preclude the present claim of the Crown. The evidence entirely negatives any possession or occupation of the lands in dispute except for the limited purposes mentioned in the grant. Nor were there any acts of ownership exercised by the appellants' predecessors which were not referable to the terms of the grant.

As regards the two points of law raised by the appellants, it was contended, first, that no title to any part of the territory in dispute had been obtained under the Act of 1856 and the schedule of 1864. Reference was made to the three Acts of 1854, 1855, and 1856, and to c. 41 of the Consolidated Statutes, 1861, which consolidated them. In the Act of 1856 there was nothing to shew what seigneurie was referred to in sect. 10 under the name of Mingan. At that time the seigneurie of the mainland of Mingan had, as was held by all the judges of the Court of Appeal, no existence. The only seigneurie known by that name was that of the Isles of Mingan, which latter seigneurie had never been settled or conceded, and, therefore, did not come within the terms of sect. 10. The evidence shewed that the schedule had [109] been prepared by the chief clerk to the Commissioners, who acted on erroneous information, and had been signed by the Commissioners without any steps being taken to verify either the title or extent of the seigneurie. Neither the Crown nor any of the parties interested had any notice of the contents of the schedule nor any opportunity of being heard before it was published. An erroneous statement in an Act, a reference to a non-existing state of things, does not give existence thereto, unless it appears from some part of the Act that the object was to settle the point in a particular way. Reference was made to Municipal Corporation

Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 6, to Schedule A, where Gateshead is mentioned. But in *Rex v. Greene, it was held that Gateshead was not a municipal corporation, and that its mention in the schedule was a mistake. See also Rex v. Haughton.† The Act cannot create a seigneurie contrary to the fact, there not being any intention so to do.

With regard to the other point, viz., the claim of title by prescription or immemorial possession, it was contended that no title as against the Crown could be acquired in that way. Art. 2213 of the Code is not new ; see Pothier, Bugnet's ed. vol. 9, pp. 416, 421, sects. 278-288. See also art. 2208 of the Civil Code, according to which no one can prescribe against his title. The title relied upon by the company binds it, and cannot be altered by any length of possession under it unless it is shewn that acts were done with the intention of altering the rights as conferred by the grant. Reference was made to Dunod, Traité de Prescription, part i., c. 8 ; Merlin's Répertoire, Title Prescription, vol. 24, pp. 142, 145. The title explains the possession ; the quality of the latter will not be changed in the absence of a clear proof of intention so to do : Troplong, Prescription, vol. ii., p. 47. The title adduced by the defendants being manifestly insufficient, no new title has been created either by possession or by recognition by the Crown. Reference was also made to art. 2203 of the Civil Code, which specifies numerous restrictions upon the power of prescribing.

Rigby, Q.C., replied [110].

1892. Nov. 19. The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by

LORD HANNEN :—

The subject-matter of these appeals is a tract of country on the northern shore of the Gulf of the St. Lawrence, extending from Cape Cormorant to the Strait of Belle Isle, a distance of more than 400 miles, with a depth of six miles.

The Labrador Company is in possession of this territory. The Attorney-General for the province of Quebec, on behalf of Her Majesty, seeks to recover it from the company, who claim title to the whole of the land in question under a grant alleged to have been made in 1661 to one François Bissot by “ the Company of New France,” deriving its powers from the Crown of France. The Labrador Company also claimed a title by prescription and immemorial possession. In answer to this claim the Attorney-General denies that the alleged grant of 1661 gave a title to the land in question, or that a title by prescription can be acquired against the Crown. He also alleges that the grant to Bissot was revoked by the French Crown and abandoned by Bissot's successors in title. The company further rely on certain alleged acts of recognition by the Crown, which they contend preclude the Crown from setting up the said revocation and abandonment of the grant, or from denying its validity.

The judgment of the Superior Court affirmed the title of the Crown to the larger portion (about 250 miles) of the tract in dispute, leaving the company in possession of the rest. The River Agwanus or Goynish was taken as the dividing line, the Crown recovering all that lies to the east of that river, and the company keeping all that lies to the west.

Both parties appealed from the judgment, and the Court of Queen's Bench dismissed both appeals.

The basis of the company's claim is the alleged grant of the 25th of February, 1661. It is necessary therefore, in the first place, to examine the nature and extent of this grant. In 1627 a company, called the Company of New France (or of the Cent Associés) was formed, to which the King of France conceded the pays de la Nouvelle France, including the land in question, “ en [111] toute propriété, justice et seigneurie,” with the right to distribute the lands. The rights of this company were subsequently surrendered to the King, and by him ceded to a fresh company, called “ the Company of the West Indies ; ” but in 1661, while the Company of New France retained its original powers, it made, on the 25th of February of that year, a grant to François Bissot, under whom the Labrador Company claim as successors in title.

This grant is no longer in existence, the original document, as well as the copy supplied to Bissot, having been destroyed by fire. Before their destruction, however, François Bissot, on the 11th of February, 1668, made an aveu, or declaration, to the Company of the West Indies, the successors of the Company of New France, setting forth the grant made to him by the last-named company in 1661. This aveu has been preserved, and it has been treated throughout these proceedings as containing a correct statement of the original grant.

This aveu is in the following terms :—

Compagnie, et les droits accoutumés pour la traite à la communauté de ce pays, au bas duquel titre est écrit

p. 3517

Dubois Davaugour, ratifié le don que dessus de laquelle dite déclaration il nous a requis acte et a signé. Ainsi signé, Bissot, avec paraphe.

“ Sur quoy, oüy le procureur fiscal, nous avons accordé acte au [112] dit sieur Bissot de son dit aveu et déclaration, et iceley condamné payer la dite redevance, tant pour le passé que pour ladvenir, suivant et conformément au dit titre de concession, sans néantmoins que le dit acte puisse être tiré à conséquence n'y préjudice, remettant au Roy ou à la Compagne de faire valoir le dit titre ou point. Mandons; &c.

“ Donné par nous Louis Théandre Chartier, Escuyer, Seigneur de Lotbinière, Conseiller du Roy, Lieutenant-Général Civil et Criminel, à Québec, les assizes tenant le onzième jour de Février mil six cent soixante-huit.”

It is not disputed that this concession gave to Bissot the seigneurie of the Isle aux Œufs, situated some distance to the west of Cape Cormorant, the western boundary of the land now in question. The contest arises on the passage commencing “ Avec le droit et faculté de chasse, &c.”

For the Crown it is contended that the effect of the grant is to give the seigneurie of the Isle aux Œufs, with the accessory right of hunting, &c., on the mainland within certain limits, the extent of which will be considered later. The company, on the other hand, contend that this grant gave a seigneurie, not only in the Isle aux Œufs, but in the territory on the mainland within the defined limits.

Their Lordships are of opinion that this contention of the company is wholly untenable. They agree on this point with the opinion expressed by all the judges in the Courts below, that the rights to be exercised on the mainland are only accessory to the seigneurie of the island. They consist in the permission (not to take possession of a defined district on the mainland, but) to establish at such places as may be most convenient, fixed stations for the capture of seals, &c., with the privilege of taking the timber and land necessary for the establishment of such stations. This last-mentioned provision effectually excludes the idea that the whole land was conceded to Bissot in fee, in which case it would have been superfluous to give him the right to take the wood and land necessary for the stations. Further, the reservation of an annual payment of two beaver skins for the right to hunt and fish is stated by Sir A. A. Dorion, C.J., in the judgment of himself and his colleagues, to be inconsistent [113] with the hypothesis that a fief on the mainland was granted, and this appears also to have been the opinion of Routhier, J., and it has not been controverted before this board.

One fact remains to be noticed, tending strongly to negative the company's contention that a seigneurie on the mainland was conceded by the grant of 1661. That document contains no limitation inland of the supposed fief. It might, therefore, as well have been made the basis of a claim to the whole territory northwards, forming part of La Nouvelle France, as to the land for six miles inland. A license to make stations for fishing and hunting, and trading with the natives in an unsettled country, might naturally be given without fixing its limits inland ; but it cannot be supposed that a fief would be created without some indication of what its boundaries were to be.

This leads to the consideration of the question, over what extent of territory on the mainland is the right of establishing stations for fishing, &c., conceded ? It is thus defined: “ Depuis la dite Ile aux Œufs jusqu'aux Sept Isles, et dans la Grande Anse, vers les Esquimaux où les Espagnols font ordinairement la pesche ;” that is, “ from the said Isle aux Œufs, up to the Seven Islands, and in the great cove in the direction of the Esquimaux where the Spaniards usually fish.” In English there can be no doubt this means that the fishing stations may be established in the land between the Isle aux Œufs and the Seven Islands, and also in the Grande Anse. It has, however, been contended that the proper construction of the French is different, and that the force of the word “ jusque ” is carried on to the word “ dans,” and that the passage has the same meaning as if it had run “ jusqu'aux Sept Isles et jusque dans la Grande Anse.” No authority for this construction has been given, and all the judges of the Court below, whose mother-tongue is French, agree that the right of establishing a station in the Grande Anse is distinct from the right to make stations up to the Sept Isles. Routhier, J., says : “ Ces derniers mots comprenaient-ils toute la terre ferme depuis Ies Sept Isles jusqu'à la Grande Arise ? Je ne le crois pas, car autrement on aurait fixé l'étendue de la concession depuis l'Isle aux Œufs jusque dans la Grande Anse.” And Dorion, C.J., thus paraphrases [114] the grant ; “ Que la concession était de l'Isle aux Œufs en seigneurie, et de plus le droit de faire des établissements de pêche et de chasse sur la côte Nord jusqu'aux Sept Isles, puis dans la Grande Anse vers les Esquimaux.” Their Lordships have no doubt that this is the correct interpretation of the grant, and that it conceded to Bissot no seigneurie on the mainland, but only a right to make establishments for fishing and hunting up to Sept Isles, and also in the Grand Anse. Where that Grande Anse was situated will be considered hereafter.

It may be convenient at this point to refer, in order of date, to a map of 1678, which has been relied on as shewing that a seigneurie on the mainland was recognised as belonging to Bissot. This map is described as one “ pour servir à l'éclaircissement de papier terrier de la Nouvelle France,” and was dedicated to the Minister Colbert by the Intendent Duchesneau. Upon this map is printed “ Seigneurie du Sieur Bissot,” stretching along the coast from a little east of the Sept Isles to a place about two-thirds along the “ Isles de Mingan.” These islands follow another to a river along which is written “ Esquimaux,” and at a short distance eastward “ Baye des Espagnols ” is inscribed.

The bearing of this map on the question of boundary will, so far as is necessary, be referred to by-and-by. Its value as evidence of a seigneurie on the mainland is now the subject of consideration. The utmost effect that could be given to this map would be as evidence of reputation at the date it bears of the existence of seigneurie ; but this must necessarily give way before the proof which the representatives of Bissot have supplied that this grant to him did not in fact concede a seigneurie on the mainland. But undue importance has been given to this inscription on the map. Bissot had, in fact, a seigneurie, namely, that of the Isle aux Œufs, to which belonged as an accessory a right of making establishments for hunting, fishing, &c., on the mainland. It was not necessary for the purpose of the cartographer that all this should be set out on the map. What was of importance to him was, to indicate over what extent of coast Bissot exercised rights whatever they might be, and he did this by writing the words referred to. This [115] interpretation is indeed impliedly adopted by Routhier, J., who is most favourable to the contention of the Labrador Company. He says speaking of the right of continuing the establishment of Mingan, “ Comme cette exploitation était un accessoire de l'ancienne seigneurie de l'île aux Œufs, il n'est pas étonnant que depuis des temps reculés on l'ait appelée seigneurie du sieur Bissot.”

But it is contended, on behalf of the Labrador Company, that, even if the grant of 1661 did not in itself create a seigneurie on the mainland in favour of Bissot, this effect was produced by an Ordonnance of Intendant Hocquart in 1733, and the subsequent action upon it by the French Crown.

This Ordonnance was pronounced in a suit instituted in 1732 by Pierre Carlier, the Adjudicataire Général des Fermes Unies de France, et du Domaine d'occident, against the heirs of François Bissot (who had died in 1676), and the heirs of Sieurs Lalande and Louis Jolyet, to whom the seigneuries of the isles and islets of Mingan had been granted by the French Crown in 1679, calling upon them to shew by virtue of what title they had taken possession of the territory occupied by them on the terre du nord (i.e., the mainland north of the St. Lawrence) below the River Moisy up to the Bay of the Spaniards.

The Adjudicataire Général did not dispute the title of Jolyet (deceased) to the Isles of Mingan, described in the grant of 1679, as the “ Islets du Mingan du côté du nord et qui se suivent jusqu'à l'ance des Espagnols.” He only required the title to anything claimed on the mainland. The seigneurie of the isles and islets of Mingan will therefore only be of importance in considering the question of boundary.

In answer to the demand of the Adjudicataire Général, the Defendants relied solely on the grant of 1661, under which they allege they had formed establishments and had continual possession for seventy-one years, and they conclude by a specific claim to be maintained in the possession and enjoyment of the lands granted to François Bissot, deceased, “ in accordance with the title of concession of the 25th of February, 1661.”

In reply the Adjudicataire Général, after taking the objection, not now insisted on, that the grant of 1661 was in conflict with [116] certain earlier grants, said that, admitting the grant of 1661 and the declaration of 1668 as valid title-deeds, and construing them in the sense most favourable to the defendants, the grant gave no proprietary title except on the Isle aux Œufs. On the mainland it conferred no right of ownership, but only the right to establish there “ la pesche sédentaire,” from l'Isle aux Œufs, up to the Seven Isles and in the Bay of the Spaniards, “ a right,” he continues, “ which it would have been useless to express, if the intention of the concession had been to give a right of property, and which by its expression positively excludes a right of property.” He then presents substantially the arguments against the then defendants' claim which have been repeated before this Board, and he proceeds : “ Though the defendants have not even the right to make establishments in the tract of country from the Seven Islands up to the Bay of the Spaniards, it is in consequence of their title of concession that Bissot, deceased, has founded the establishment of Mingan continued by the defendants, for which they allege a continued possession of seventy-one years. Having regard to this long enjoyment of the seigneurie of Mingan, he will not dispute it, provided that they be limited to a concession of which the limits shall be certain and determined, so that they cannot injure or prejudice the 'Traites du Domaine du Roi.' It is at Mingan that they have fixed their establishment on the mainland. The Farmer-General will not offer opposition to the enjoyment of it being continued to them, and even that the property in it be accorded to them by a new title, if His Majesty should think ht to accord to them as recompense for the establishments which they have made there.” The Mingan here referred to as the place where the defendants are said to have fixed their establishment on the mainland is a station on the mainland opposite to the islands of Mingan, and is marked on several maps as the Mingan settlement.

The Adjudicataire Général concludes by demanding that he be maintained in his right, to the exclusion of all others, to exercise trading, hunting, fishing, and commerce in the tract of the domaine between l'Isle aux Coudres up to and including the River Moisy, that the defendants be condemned to pay him the [117] arrears of the annual dues of two beaver skins or ten livres tournois from 1661 to the then present year, unless they should prefer to give up (se désister de) the said concession, and consent to the reunion to the domaine of the said seigneurie of the Isle aux Œufs, which they long since abandoned, and moreover, also to pay the dues for the trading which they had carried on at Mingan ; and that the said defendants be bound to take a new title for the establishment made by them at Mingan aforesaid, to commence from Cormorant Point (“en allant”) in the direction of the Bay of the Spaniards, with such depth and on (payment of) such dues as it should please His Majesty to accord them.

By way of rejoinder to the reply of the Adjudicataire Général, the defendants reassert in general terms their claims, and ask whether their possession for seventy years, and the expenses they have been put to, and the losses they have suffered from the English in times of war, ought not to serve them in the place of title, and they conclude that, though they have proved their right, they consent to the River Moisy being the western limit of their concession up to the Bay of the Spaniards, and, therefore, they pray they may be relieved from the payment of the dues with which that territory is charged, and that they may be given a new title to it.

This was the state of the controversy which the Intendant Hocquart had to decide. After reviewing the pleadings, Monsieur Hocquart gave his judgment as follows:—

He took notice of the abandonment by the defendants of the territory

conceded to François Bissot, deceased, by the Company of Nouvelle France on the 25th of February, 1661, from the Isle aux Œufs up to the River Moisy, and, in consequence, as far as was necessary, reunited to the domain of His Majesty the said territory conceded to the said François Bissot from and including the Isle aux Œufs to Cormorant Point, four or five leagues below the River Moisy ; forbade the defendants and all others directly or indirectly to exercise any trading, hunting, fishing, commerce, or establishment in the territory so reunited, or in the said River Moisy and its affluent lakes and rivers ; and, in consideration of the abandonment aforesaid by the defendants, [118] he discharged them from any arrears which might be due from them, and “ as to the new title of concession required by them for the establishment made by them and their predecessor François Bissot at the place of Mingan aforesaid, the parties shall apply to His Majesty to obtain the same, with such frontage and depth and on payment of such dues as His Majesty shall be pleased to grant.”

The effect of this Ordonnance was entirely to put an end to the seigneurie in the Isle aux Œufs, and to the rights, whatever they were, which had been conceded to Bissot by the original grant, as far as Cormorant Point, and to reannex the district from and including the said Isle aux Œufs up to Cormorant Point to the domain of the King. This, with the remission of the arrears, was the whole operative part of the Ordonnance. As to the request of the defendants that the limits of their concession should be from the River Moisy to the Bay of the Spaniards, and that of this district a new title should be granted to them, this was not acceded to. The district for five or six leagues eastward of the River Moisy was reunited to the Crown, and no mention whatever of the Bay of the Spaniards is made, and the defendants are remitted to the Crown to obtain a new title for “ the establishment made by them and the said François Bissot, at the place of Mingan aforesaid,” for such frontage and depth as His Majesty might think fit to grant.

François Bissot, the son, addressed several petitions for a new title to the Comte de Maurepas, the French Secretary of State. In these petitions he set out the substance of the original grant of 1661, explained that his father had made his first establishment at Mingan, where the family residence was formed, but that he had made many others at different places, which, after they had been destroyed by the English, had been from time to time re-established. He stated that the limits of the Royal domain had been fixed by Hocquart at Cormorant Point, and he prayed that he might be continued in the remainder of his concession from that point “ down the river to the conceded lands ” (by which appears to be meant, conceded to other persons), and the exclusive privilege of continuing there his establishments, and others, if possible, for the hunting of seals, with the rights of [119] hunting and trading with the savages such as he and his late father had enjoyed for seventy years.

The result of a correspondence which followed between the Comte de Maurepas and the Marquis de Beauharnois, the Governor of La Nouvelle

France, and the Intendant Hocquart, was that the Comte de Maurepas stated, in a letter to MM. de Beauharnois and Hocquart, that the circumstances of the case would have determined him to propose to the King to confirm the heirs of Bissot in the possession of a part of the coast conceded by the grant of 1661, and to fix their condition ; but that, having regard to the existing circumstances of the family, and the discussions which such a confirmation might give rise to, he had taken the course recommended by MM. de Beauharnois and Hocquart, to suspend all determination on the subject, and that he had only induced the King to agree that the heirs (of Bissot) should enjoy such extent of coast as they (Beauharnois and Hocquart) had designated in their letter, from the boundary of Tadoussac down the river to the concession of the Sieur Lafontaine, with such depth as they (Beauharnois and Hocquart) should think right to fix ; and he concluded with a request that they would consider whether it would be convenient to leave them this extent of territory, or whether it would not be right to reduce it for the purpose of locating other concessionaires.

It does not appear that these suggestions of M. de Maurepas were ever communicated to the heirs of Bissot. No new title was ever granted to them. This letter imports no engagement on the part of the Crown to give one ; it contains only the expression of a possible intention to do so if, upon the examination of this matter by MM. Beauharnois and Hocquart, it should be thought expedient. No further action on the subject is shewn. No boundary inland was ever fixed. All that can be inferred is that the representatives of Bissot continued to carry on their stations for fishing, &c., at Mingan as before. Their Lordships, therefore, are of opinion that the judgment of Hocquart and the action of the French Crown upon it did not create or recognise any title in the heirs of Bissot to a seigneurie on the mainland.

Nothing between the date of M. de Maurepas' letter, down to [120] the cession of Canada to England in 1763, calls for observation. In 1766 the representatives of François Bissot laid before the British Government a claim to be proprietors of the terre ferme de Mingan, commonly called “ the seigneurie and post of Mingan.” In support of their claim they do not appear to have furnished evidence of the contents of the grant of 1661, but they relied on an “ Acte de Notoriété,” signed by several citizens and notables of Quebec, two of whom, at least, were parties interested, to prove an immemorial possession of the seigneurie of the mainland of Mingan by the heirs of MM. F. Bissot and Lewis Jolyet. This claim was referred to the law officers of the Crown in England, who, in the year 1768, reported upon it. After observing that “ the claim is of an exclusive right of property in the soil containing originally, in extent along the north shore of the River St. Lawrence from the Isle of Eggs to the Bay Phelippeaux which appears to be about 500 miles, and in depth into the country without bounds or limitation,” but of which a space of about thirty leagues from Egg Island to Cape Cormorant was acknowledged to have been surrendered, the law officers comment on the uncertainty of the grant as well as of possession, and they conclude, “ Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that this claim, standing as it does at present upon these papers, could not in any judicial inquiry be allowed in point of law as valid and effectual ; at the same time there is reason to think that some part of this family has been in some kind of legitimate and authorized possession of some particular parts of the shore within the limits described; but the ground, the nature, and extent of such possession does not appear at present in such authentic manner as to be capable of receiving any judicial confirmation.”

In 1781 the claimants appear to have endeavoured to supply the want of proof thus pointed out. On the 28th of May in that year F. J. Cugnet, on behalf of himself and others named, claiming to be seigneurs and proprietors in undivided shares of the seigneurial fiefs of the isles and islets of Mingan, of the isle of Anticosty, and of the terre ferme de Mingan, is alleged to have presented an Act of foi et hommage in respect of the said fiefs and seigneuries. A document of this date and to this effect [121] is found in the register of foi et hommage, and it states that the “ Seigneurie de la terre ferme de Mingan,” commencing at Cape Cormorant, “ jusqu'à la grande Ance vers les Esquimaux où les Espagnols faisaient ordinairement la pêche sur deux lieux de profondeur,” was conceded by the company (of La Nouvelle France) on the 25th of February, 1661, to the Sieur François Bissot. Appended to this document is a certificate of Cugnet himself (who appears to have held the office of Keeper of the Papier Terrier) that this foi et hommage had been presented : but it is not signed by the Governor, and therefore has no validity. But from its having been found in the registry it has since been frequently assumed, though erroneously, to have had an official character.

This document contains two statements which are now known to be untrue, whether wilfully or not it is unnecessary to inquire. The one is that the grant of 1661 conceded a seigneurie from Cape Cormorant as far as the Grande Anse. It omits altogether the mention of the Sept Isles, and changes the language with regard to the Grande Anse. The second is that it introduces a limitation inland, thus supplying words which would meet the objection taken as to the uncertainty of the grant in this respect. It is said that these words are introduced in the margin of the document ; but as the original is not before them, their Lordships cannot verify this statement.

The effect of these inaccuracies, whether intended or not, was that in 1803 MM. Vondenvelden and Charland, surveyors, in a work on the subject of the titles of ancient concessions include that of la terre ferme de Mingan, on the authority of the supposed Act of foi et hommage of 1781 ; and from this work the same error has been derived and continued in subsequent transactions. Thus in 1805, in an action at the suit of Ralph Rosslewin against one Crawford and others, the sheriff seized fifteen thirty-second undivided parts of the seigneurie of the Isles Mingan, “ with all the rights in the seigniorie of the mainland of Mingan.” The Procureur Général claimed the droit de quint due to the Crown on the sale. The matter was referred to the arbitration of M. Planté, an advocate, who gave his decision and based it upon the supposition that the grant of [122] 1661 was a concession of the terre ferme de Mingan to Sieur Fr. Bissot, and refers for his authority to the false entry of the 28th of May, 1781, in the register of foi et hommage and the work of MM. Vondenvelden et Charland. The demand and receipt on this occasion of the droit de quint by the Procureur Général has been relied on by the company as a recognition by the Crown of their title to a seigneurie of the terre ferme de Mingan. There is no proof that it was paid ; but assuming that it was, it does not amount to a recognition by the Crown. A recognition to be effectual for the purpose of curing a defective title must be made with knowledge of the defects to be cured, and no such knowledge on the part of the Crown can in this case be inferred from the mere receipt by its officer of a fiscal due, under a mistake induced by the company's predecessors.

In 1837 James Stuart, on the part of several persons named, rendered faith and homage for, amongst other things, certain undivided shares in the Seigneurie de la terre ferme de Mingan. On this occasion the act of faith and homage is signed by the Governor, Lord Gosford. This would be primâ facie proof of the existence of some seigneurie on the mainland of Mingan ; but this primâ facie proof is rebutted by the title relied on by the claimants, namely, that supposed to be derived from the grant of 1661, and the Ordonnance of Hocquart of 1733. The effect of these documents of title has been already considered.

Nothing calling for observation occurred after 1837 until the year 1854. Down to this time their Lordships are of opinion that the facts proved fail to establish that there was a seigneurie of the mainland of Mingan, or that the Crown had recognised its existence, although, chiefly from the supposed act of foi et hommage of 1781 containing the erroneous statement of the effect of the grant of 1661, a reputation had arisen that there was such a seigneurie.

With regard to the claim of the company to hold by prescription and immemorial possession, it is unnecessary to consider what would have been the effect of the evidence if the title of the company had rested upon this basis alone, because as the true root of their title has been shewn by the company themselves, there is no room for the application of the law of [123] prescription. This is clearly stated by many authors of authority : On ne peut pas prescrire contre son titre en ce sens que l'on ne peut pas se changer à soi-même la cause et le principe de sa possession . . . il suit de là que lorsque le titre est représenté, c'est par lui qu'il faut régler la cause et le principe de la possession ; et tant que le possesseur ne prouve pas une interversion légale soit par le fait d'un tiers, soit par une contradiction formelle, le titre reste la loi invincible qui sert à qualifier sa possession. Il y est ramené sans cesse par la loi et par la raison. C'est ce que les praticiens ont voulu exprimer par ce brocard ; ad primordium tituli posterior semper refertur eventus :” Troplong de la Prescription, 522, 4th ed.

In this state of things the Legislature of the province of Canada, deeming it expedient to abolish all feudal rights and duties in Lower Canada, passed for this purpose the Seigniorial Act of 1854 (18 Vict. c. 3), amended by the Act of 18 Vict. c. 103 (1855), and the Seigniorial Amendment Act of 1856 (19 Vict. c. 53). The 10th section of this last-mentioned Act is as follows : “ Inasmuch as the following fiefs and seignories, namely : Perthuis, Hubert, Mille Vaches, Mingan, and the island of Anticosti, are not settled, the tenure under which the said seignories are now held by the present proprietors of the same respectively, shall be and is hereby changed into the tenure of franc aleu roturier.”

This is an absolute statement by the legislature that there was a seigneurie of Mingan. Even if it could be proved that the legislature was deceived, it would not be competent for a court of law to disregard its enactments. If a mistake has been made, the legislature alone can correct it. The Act of Parliament has declared that there was a seigneurie of Mingan, and that thenceforward its tenure shall be changed into that of franc aleu roturier. The courts of law cannot sit in judgment on the legislature, but must obey and give effect to its determination.

It remains only to consider what was the seigneurie of Mingan to which the Act of 1856 referred. It has been contended for the Crown that there was a seigneurie of the isles and islets of Mingan which may have been intended.

The answer to this contention is that the proper name of this last-named seigneurie [124] was that of “ the isles and islets of Mingan,” and that there is no trace of evidence that it has been on any occasion otherwise designated, or that it has ever been known as the Seigneurie de Mingan.

An examination of the Act further proves that a seigneurie on the mainland was contemplated.

The original Act provides for the appointment of Commissioners (sect. 2), to whom (sect. 4.) the Governor shall assign the seigneurie or seigneuries in and for which each of them shall act, and whose duty it shall be (sect. 5) “ to value the several rights . . . with regard to each seigniori which shall be assigned to him as aforesaid.”

By virtue of these provisions Henry Judah, one of the Commissioners, had assigned to him the making of the cadastre, and the valuation of the rights of the seigneurie of Mingan, and he has discharged his duties specifically with regard to the “ seigneurie of the terre firme de Mingan,” while on the other hand no mention has been made of the seigneurie of the isles and islets of Mingan.

Before beginning to prepare the schedule for any seigneurie it was the duty (sect. 7 of the Act of 1854) of the Commissioner to give public notice of the place, day, and hour at which he would begin his inquiry ; he had power to examine on oath any person appearing before him.

Immediately after the making of the schedule, the Commissioner was bound (sect. 11 of the Act of 1854, and sect. 5 of the Act of 1856) to give eight days' public notice that such schedule would remain open for the inspection of the seignior and the censitaires of the seigniory during thirty days following the said notice, “ and any person interested in the schedule may point out in writing any error or omission therein, and require that the same be corrected or supplied.” Provisions are also made for the revision of the schedule, and it is enacted (sect. 8 of the Act of 1856) that no revision shall be allowed, unless application be made for the same within fifteen days after the Commissioner shall have given his decision under sect. 11 of the Act of 1854 ; and by the 10th section of the Act of 1855 it is enacted that, “ after any schedule shall have been completed and deposited [125] under the said Act, it shall not be impeached, or its effect impaired for any informality, error, or defect in any prior proceeding in relation to it, or in anything required by the said Act to be done before it was so completed and deposited, but all such prior proceedings and things shall be held to have been rightly and formally had and done, unless the contrary expressly appear on the face of such schedule ; and the same rule shall apply to all proceedings of the Commissioners under the said Act, so that no one of them, when completed, shall be impeached or questioned for any informality, error, or defect in any previous proceeding, or in anything theretofore done or omitted to be done by the Commissioners or any of them.”

It was open, therefore, to the Government on the one hand, or the persons claiming to be proprietors of the seigneurie of the terre ferme of Mingan to have complained in due time and in the manner prescribed, of any error in the schedule. As no such complaint was made, the schedule as deposited must be deemed to be correct.

Now, by the schedule drawn up by Henry Judah (dated the 23rd of January, 1864), it is certified that the “ seigneurie de Mingan ou de terre ferme de Mingan ” is scheduled in the country and district of Saguenay, and is not conceded ; it contains fifty leagues of frontage by two leagues of depth, extending from Cape Cormorant up to the River Goynish, forming an area of 705,400 arpents, and is bounded in front by the River St. Lawrence, and along its depth and two sides by the public domain.

This schedule, with the Act under which it was made, must now be deemed to have conclusively established the existence and boundaries of the Sieigneurie de Mingan referred to in the 10th section of the Act of 1856.

Routhier, J., by an independent examination of the evidence, has arrived at the conclusion, in which their Lordships entirely concur, that the territory in which the right to make establishments for fishing, &c., was granted by the Concession of 1661, did not extend further eastward than the River Goynish, and that there is no foundation for the claim to extend it to Brador Bay in the strait of Belle Isle. Their Lordships concur with [126] Routhier, J., in thinking that the bay referred to in the grant of 1661 as that where the Spaniards ordinarily fished was not that which is now called Brador Bay, but was the one indicated as the Baye des Espagnols on the map, presumably drawn up on the information of Sieur Jolyet, an experienced navigator, and one of the parties having an interest under the Concession of 1661. This bay exactly answers the description given in the grant of 1679 to Laland and Jolyet of the seigniorie of the isles and islets of Mingan, “ which follow one another to the bay called l'Anse aux Espagnols,” and to the position assigned to it in the map of 1678, near the eastward end of those islands and near a place or river marked " Esquimaux." It is, however, unnecessary to examine this question in detail, as their Lordships are of opinion, for the reasons already given, that the schedule drawn up by Mr. Judah is conclusive on the subject of boundary.

Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty that both appeals be dismissed, and that the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench be affirmed, and they direct that the parties pay their own costs of the appeals.

Lalande propriétaires des isles Mingan scis a la ditte Côte, en vertu du titre de concession expedié par feu M. Duchesneau intendant, a eux ou leurs autheurs le dix mars mil six cent soixante dix neuf. Nous aurions des le mois de septembre mil sept cent trente neuf rendu nôtre ordonnance en forme de reglement qui fixait entr'autres une redevance de vingt cinq livres par chaque lieue d'isles que les propriétaires d'icelles seroient tenus de conceder aux propriétaires de la Terre Ferme pour mettre ces derniers en estat et leur donner les facilités nécessaires pour faire leurs pesches sedentaires du loup marin. Nous aurions informé Sa Majesté des nouvelles representations que les dits heritiers et representans Lalande nous ont faites au sujet de la modicité de la ditte redevance sur lesquelles il luy a plû nous envoyer ses ordres l'année derniere et la presente ; nous en consequence des dits ordres sans avoir egard a nôtre ditte ordonnance qui demeurera nulle et comme non avenue, et main-tenant en tant que de besoin les dits heritiers et le dit Jacques Lalande en la propriété et possession des dites isles Mingan. the Mingan islands, situated on the said coast, in virtue of the said grant to them made, and to their successors, by the late Sieur Duchesneau, intendant, on the tenth of March 1679, we have, as early as the month of September 1739, rendered our ordinance in the form of a regulation, which, among other things, fixed a rent of twenty-five livres for each league of islands which the proprietors should be obliged to concede to the owners of the Terre Ferme, to enable them to carry on their sedentary seal fisheries ; and having informed His Majesty that new representations had been made to us by the said heirs and representatives of Lalande, respecting the insufficiency of the said rent, His Majesty was pleased to send us, last year and this year, His orders on the subject.

We, in consequence of the said orders, and setting aside our said ordinance, which is hereby annulled, and with a view to maintain the said heirs and the said Jacques Lalande, as much as is necessary, in the ownership and possession of the said Mingan Islands, order as follows, to wit :

That the heirs Jolliet and Jacques Lalande, or their representatives, shall be held on the first demand, to concede to the grantees of tracts on the mainland, or those who shall obtain such grants hereafter, the islands, islets and shoals lying opposite to, and along their said lands, and which they shall require for the success of their sedentary fisheries, the said grantees to enjoy the said islands, &c., as long as they shall remain in possession of their mainland grants, and for and in consideration of a rent of three per cent. upon the total amount of the seal oil and seal skins produced by the said propriétaires des dites isles et a leur choix a l'arrivée des effets provenant de la pesche ; ou au mois d'octobre chaque année en argent si lesd. effets sont chargés directement au lieu de l'établissement pour les ports de France, etce au prix du cours des dits effets a Quebec.

Faisons deffenses aux propriétaires des dites isles de faire aucun etablissement de pesche sedentaire entre les isles qui auront esté ainsi concedées, et même dans celles qui pourront leur rester dans une distance assés proche pour pouvoir nuire aux etablissements desja faits ou qui le seront par les proprietaires de la Terre Ferme dans l'etendue de leur concession, sous les peines de droit.

Pourront les propriétaires des dites isles faire la chasse du loup marin a coup de fusil concurrement avec les concessionnaires de la Terre Ferme après le temps expiré de la pesche sedentaire.

MURRAY'S REPLY TO LAFONTAINE'S COMPLAINTS, 24 APRIL, 1764.

[24 April, 1764]

ARCHIVES OF CANADA, SERIES Q. VOL. 2, p. 111.

Governor Murray's answer to the complaints Lodged against him by Monsieur De la Fontaine in his letter to the Earl of Halifax Secretary of State dated the 23rd October 1763 in two memorials therein inclosed.

In a Respectfull Obedience to my Royal Sovereigns Commands and agreable to the wishes of my own heart, I very cheerfully deliver this publick reply to several matters of Complaint against me, as stated by Monsieur De la Fontaine in a letter to the Earl of Halifax Secretary of State of the 23rd October 1763 as well as in two memorials therewith transmitted by said Lafontaine.

I do this with the greater Perspicuity, it is necessary to reduce the whole accusation, very Artfully blended by the Plaintiff under four principle heads or articles, to each of which in as few words as the nature of the case will admitt, I shall give a distinct and separate answer, supported by proper and undeniable proofs.

1st. That I hindered the heirs of Bissot & Jolliet to repair & Settle the Post of Mingan in the year 1761.

Ans. I do not recollect any applications having been made to me for that purpose. Mr. Tachet, the widows Vederic and Volant three of the Coheirs may be asked what they know of the matter ; but certainly no Canadian in this town is ignorant, that the greatest part of the heirs of Jolliet & Bissot were absent in the year 1761 & that those present were incapable of the great expense requisite for the undertaking in Question. Had it been otherwise I should probably have refused Permission to some of them to go below at that time 1761 ; our situation made it necessary to allow none to establish themselves in, or frequent those parts but such as we could confide in.

2nd. That contrary to their inclination I made Mr. Lafontaine and Mr. Tachet give a lease of the Post of Mingan to Mr. Isbister.

Ans. It never could have entered the head of a Briton to order a man to sign a deed giving away his own property, but Mr. La Fontaine to prove the contrary, quotes a letter wrote to him by Mr. Panet. Mr. Panet's evidence, I imagine will set that par ordre de son Excellence le Bail du post de Mingan " proceeded from my having desired him at Isbister's request to get that affair settled and finished as soon as possible, that the Isbister might not by delays loose the season. That it meant no more will be evident from the other part of the letter, which the court will be pleased to order Mr. Lafontaine to produce, as he acknowledges in his memorial to Lord Halifax that he is Possession of it.

I declare I understood at that time that Mr. Lafontaine was well pleased with the bargain, that it was what he had proposed himself & that it was a most advantageous one for him & the Coheirs. His own letter of the 10th August 1761 seems to affirm this & Mr. Isbisters evidence may perhaps corroborate it, as to the goodness of the bargain at the time, let it be considered & Determined on Oath by five of the most Creditable Merchants of the Place, Mr. La Fontaine to name two, Mr. Isbister two, & the council the fifth. It will be proper to hear Mr. Tachet ; if he chuses to speak all he knows of the matter, I shall be well pleased.

That I did recommend Mr. Isbister to Mr. La Fontaine & Mr. Tachet as the most proper man for the post of Mingan is most certain ; This Mr. Isbister had been long Principle Governor at Hudson Bay, he came here in the year 1760 with a wife and six small children, had merchandise to the amount of nine hundred Pounds, which were entirely calculated for the Posts below. Compassion for he had no Recommendation to me, made me desirous to see this man in a way to get a livelihood. Good Policy made me wish to have him established in the Posts below as he had the character of an honest man & was thoroughly acquainted with the language of the Indians residing there, & prudence made it necessary at that time of War, to be carefull who occupied the Posts in the Gulph & River St. Lawrence, & therefore passports were necessary. Now if Mr. La Fontaine can even insinuate and produce any man French or English who will join in that insinuation, that I or any person employed under me ever took a shilling for Passports or posts, it may create a suspicion in his favor & make the world believe that I had other motives in all this business of the Posts, than those consistent with my Duty. In his reply if he chuses to make any, it therefore behoves him to produce and support such insinuations.

3rd. That I stripped him of his property and gave it to other People.

Ans. This should mean nothing but the Post of Grand Mekatinat, He long attempted to deceive me with Regard to this Post but the Information of many honest men regarding it, and some unwarrantable behaviour of his when he was employed by me at first in a Court of Justice for the Canadians, opened my eyes and put me upon my guard. However, as I was well assured that the Grant of the Gros Mekatinat to Mon^r Hocquart, was not a legal one, as it had not been registered at the Conseil Superieur, I out of pure Charity for Mr. Lafontaine and his family gave him leave to occupy that post, as is expressed in my letter of the seventh September 1762 to the late Earl of Egremont in the following words “ and (I) gave Mr. Lafontaine a person in indigent circumstances with a numerous family, leave to fish and trade there (at Mekatinat) for one year only.”

Had he behaved properly he might still have Possessed that Post, but that very autumn 1761 in his way to another Post of his Montagamiou his conduct confirmed every bad thing I had heard of him, and in place of being his Protector, I ever after looked upon him as an enemy to the State. Mr. Isbisters Letter of March 1762 supported by Ross, and Algeos affidavits, evince with how much justice and how faulty I should have been to have countenanced such a man. This behaviour of Mr. Lafontaine and the Intelligence we had that winter of Privateers and Pirates, who sheltered and subsisted themselves by means of the Posts and the Bay of Chaleur made me think it highly necessary at the solicitation of all the merchants here, to arm a vessel for the Protection of their trade and the examination of the Posts, and likewise to redouble my caution with regard to the people who were to occupy the Posts in the Gulph and River St. Lawrence. It consequently became expedient to take the post of Mekatinat from Lafontaine, and to give it to Mr Gray in whom I could confide. I further declare, that could I have laid my hands on La Fontaine I should have brought him to this place not only to prevent the Mischief he was doing below, but likewise to answer the complaints of his Creditors Lymburner & Mackenzie.

The Officer commanding the armed vessel had orders to Seize him, but those orders could not be executed from an accident which happened to the vessel.

He says peremptorily in his memorial to Lord Halifax dated the 23rd October that I had declared while I was Governor of Quebec, he never should be paid the Three per cent from the produce of the Post of Mekatinat, but here is produced the minute of an order by Mr. Gray, before his departure for Great Britain, upon the 13th of last September to his Partner for discharging the same, which has been accordingly executed as Mr. Will^m Grant the said Partner is ready to prove. What credit is to be given to anything this man can say ? When he spoke to me about the Post of Mekatinat last autumn before Mr. Panet I certainly said he should never have a Grant of it, while I was Governor of Quebec, if I could prevent it, but as to the three per cent I would inform myself, and if I found he had a just claim, I would order Payment. Mr. Panet soon told me he was assured of the Equity of that claim and payment was ordered accordingly. Mr. Cramahe is to be asked the conversation he had with Mr. Lafontaine which will shew the man had no reason to be alarmed and send home such groundless complaints, and a comparison of the memorials he gave into Mr. Cramahe my Secretary, with those sent to Lord Halifax, will at least further demonstrate the Disingenuity of this unhappy gentleman.

4th That when he set forth his claims to the Posts of Mingan and Mekatinat, I gave him gross personal abuse, and pushed my Resentment, so far, as to distress his family, by taking away the Royal Pension from two of his daughters.

p. 3551

Ans. Perhaps since the beginning of the World, nothing was ever more artful & more false than Mr. Lafontaine representation of these circumstances.

That I called him “ Scelerat, et monstre qui faisait honte a la nature Humaine ” is certain that I desired him to go out of my house is as certain, that he deserved this treatment and ten times more, I flatter myself will be allowed by all who are not dead to virtue. Many complaints had been lodged by Lymburner & Mackenzie two of the most considerable & opulent merchants of this place, accusing Mr. Lafontaine of very unfair Practices in his dealings with them., such as Mortgaging Estates to them which were the property of his children by which deception he would defraud them of their money, his children of their subsistence, and was still a large sum in their Debt, without any visible means of repaying it.

These complaints having been examined, and found to be considered with truth, part of his Estate was disposed of and the Remainder sequestered for the Payment of his Creditors, which however was by no means equal to their just claims.

The memorial of Messrs. Mackenzie & Lymburner, my order thereupon, and the proceedings of the council are hereto annexed, and will answer for themselves. Mr. Lafontaine was at this time below at his Post and his family which was here was by this act of Justice reduced to great extremity ; The two young Ladies, which I had before placed at their Brother in Laws house, where at my own expence Rooms were fitted up for them found their situation there disagreeable, and as he could not maintain them for nothing, I prevailed upon Chaloux at Beauport to board them. I paid for their board out of my own pocket, the sum Mr. Lafontaine mentions, & gave some trifle to the eldest to buy necessaries.

At his return to Quebec last summer Mr. Lafontaine found his family & affairs in this unhappy situation. I sincerely pitied him, and could not prevail upon myself to add to his wretchedness by an exposition of Isbisters accusation, supported by the depositions of Ross and Alges and therefore prevented Isbisters prosecution. But we had not been here long, when I was told by everybody French and English, that he loudly complained . . . of the Injustice which had been done him, with regard to Mackenzie and Lymburner and by his Artfull insinuations was endeavouring to make the Canadians believe that they were to expect no Equity from Englishmen. I then thought it necessary to send for him La Fontaine,

Mackenzie & Lymburner, I heard them all three with patience and found that I had not been deceived in the reports made to me. I upbraided him for mortgaging his poor children's effects and by his extravagance reducing them to misery he immediately replied that Mr. Panet was the man to be blamed for that horrid act, for that he had deceived him, and said much more to this honest man's disadvantage. I sent for Panet who vindicated himself and before my face made Mr. Lafontaine acknowledge his uprightness. I then summed up his whole conduct and finished by saying as well as I can remember, you was not Sir contented with reducing your family to Beggary, defrauding your creditors falsely accusing the Justice of Government & endeavoring to prevent that confidence and union so necessary for the happiness of His Majesty's old and new Subjects, but you must labor to ruin a worthy honest man who by his Industry and Integrity can with difficulty Subsist a wife & ten small children. I will not send you to Gaol as you deserve but I pronounce you a wicked man, whose conduct is monstrous and shocking to Humanity. Such is the language and such the terrible injuries which he tells the minister he suffered, when he was claiming his rights to the Post above mentioned.

The language I confess, but he must allow the application he has made of it to be unjust, for it was no more than a reprimand for the Injustice and calumny he had been convicted of which had nothing to do with the affairs of the Posts.

Lymburner, Mackenzie, Cramahe, Panet and Major Mills to be examined and likewise Chaloux and Cugnet the son in law as to the attention I had to the young ladies.

It is not true that I withdrew my charity from the young ladies after this monstrous behaviour, the board of the Eldest was paid by me since, Madame Cartier will evince it, the second I know is well provided for tho' not at my expence. Mr. La Fontaine injures the greatest King in the world by supposing the charity of the mienest of his subjects could be the Royal Pension, nobody could have told him so, nor do such Pension exist.

Mr. Dunn and Mr. Lymburner are to be asked whether or not it was at my Recommendation that young La Fontaine was employed last summer by the Whale Fishing Company, I recommended him too to Mr. Ross my agent in London at the very time he carried home the complaint against me & begged him to endeavour to procure for him the command of a ship trading to this Colony. Let Tachet be asked whether or not he did pay to Lafontaine Six hundred dollars for the Post at Mekatinat, which I gave him and then let all the Earth Judge, if sought the destruction of this man or his family. Let him get four honest intelligent Canadians to subscribe to the character he has given of himself in the last part of his letter to Lord Halifax and I will say I was to blame for calling him Scelerat and ask his Pardon in the most Publick manner.

Upon the whole it may really appear to His Majesty servants that I have Bribed this man to give me thus opportunity of displaying my own justice, charity and moderation but no Canadian will suppose so, they know the man who probably reasoned thus Mr. Murray (for it was reported and believed here) is not to be Governor of Canada, consequently is disliked at court, any complaint against him will be Relished by the Minister who has prevailed upon the King to supersede him, now is my time to get a grant of Mekatinat, a Pathetic remonstrance of Injuries done me will procure me that Grant.

But Mr. Lafontaine is mistaken. The King who hears the complaints of the meanest of his subjects and does them the strictest justice, would not even in that Situation have condemned Mr. Murray unheard.

RECAPITULATION.

It is proved that all the heirs of Bissot & Jolliet together were incapable of Equipping the Post of Mingan, and that no application for that purpose was ever made to me by any of them it is likewise incontestably proved, that of his own free will & accordance upon his own terms, the Post of Mingan was left to Mr. Isbister by Mr. Lafontaine ; and it is plain, that Panets letter, quoted by Lafontaine to Lord Halifax, was designedly curtailed, had the whole been inserted, in place of proving the force Majeure that letter of itself is sufficient to demonstrate the contrary.

In place of being stripped of his Property, it was evident he received Eight Hundred Dollars from Tachet for the Post of Mekatinat, a gift from me ; which Mr. Lafontaine chuses to forget ; and he has the assurance to say in his letter to Lord Halifax of the 23rd Oct. that the payment of the Three per cent from the Post of Mekatinat was peremptorily refused him ; But it is proved, that orders were issued in September to Mr. Gray to pay what was due on that score.

The personal reprimand was for Injuries he had done to all the world, and most probably prevented his Creditors from throwing him into prison : It at least exculpated me for not doing it, to have winked at such behaviour must have injured the Publick this reprimand had no connection with his claims to the Posts, but he says it was for attempting to ascertain them ; and thereby to destroy my handyworks. In short the very manner of representing this matter to the Minister, shows how richly he merited the epithets I gave him on that occasion, his Ingratitude conforms everything, for it is certainly proved that his family in place of being distressed, has been long supported by me. By representing himself a man of dignity, and much esteemed in the Province, he does injustice to the Canadians. They can distinguish better, and must be shock'd that he had been ruined, “ par la fleau de la guerre.” Monsieur Foucault the senior Counsellor is here alive ; Sound in health & Judgment and esteemed by all who know him. Mr. Lafontaine's extravagance, many years before the war, put it out of the power of fortune to ruin him. Such idle deliberate falsehoods are sufficient to debase the first blood in Europe, but when told seriously to the King's minister, and that to the prejudice of his Majesty's Governor, they require a greater punishment, than I would chuse should be inflicted, upon the Unhappy father of Eight Children.

Together with the letter which you have written to me on the 20th of the month of September of last year, I have received the report of what happened at Labrador since your return from Quebec, and also the memo of what is needed for the establishment of the fort. I have rendered an account of same to the King. His Majesty was very much pleased to hear about this establishment beginning to grow considerably through the seal and cod fishing which can be made therein. He has also been pleased to continue in your favour the allowance of five hundred livres which was granted unto you last year, and I am writing to Messrs. de Vaudreuil and Raudot to provide you with all the assistance in their power.

I have also written to the commissioners at Bayonne and at St. Malo in order that they may see that the merchants who are sending vessels in your direction add ten barrels of salt to their ordinary and personal supply so that you may have your share. In their answer they told me that they could not have put this quantity on board but that they have promised to let you have all that they can spare and at a reasonable price. It is incumbent upon you to settle the matter with them. Please let me hear about the results.

I shall forward from Rochefort to Mr. Raudot the fishing tackle you ask for. He will send them to you from Quebec.

Your information as to what occurred with the Esquimaux Indians was found to be most interesting and I shall anxiously await further news from you with reference to your being able or not to tame them together with the other Indians who are allies of the French. It seems to me of great importance for your establishment that you should manage them, and I therefore recommend you to omit nothing and to reach the decision of declaring war for their destruction only when you cannot do otherwise. In the report that you make to me with reference to these Indians, please give every detail that you can that I may have a perfect knowledge of their numbers and of their strength.

I also recommend you to endeavour to place the fort which you have erected in a state of defence. As you benefit by the trade which is being made there, it is only just that you should be responsible for the cost of the garrison.

With regard to the command of the post of Labrador you are applying for, His Majesty is willing to grant same unto you provided you shall quit that of your Company, and it is upon said matter that I will await further news from you.

I am pleased to hear that the soil of this post is as good as you say either for the breeding of cattle or for the cultivation of all sorts of grains. It seems to me that this, combined with the fishing, will contribute toward making it a very important establishment. Send me a detailed memo of all faire pour parvenir a cet etablissement avec un plan du fort que vous avez fait faire et Si cela est possible une petite carte de cette coste Sur laquelle vous marquerez les ports qui Seront propres pour recevoir des Vaisseaux.

Je n'ay pu faire accorder au S.^r Prat marchand de Quebec qui vous a secouru le fret de plusieurs tonneaux de Sel que vous avez demandé pour luy parce que Sa ma.^{te} a traité cette année avec un particulier pour la depense du navire qui va a Quebec.

Je vous recommande de me donner de vos nouvelles par toutes les occasions que vous en aurez et de Suivre exactement tous les ordres que M.^r de Vaudreuil pourra vous donner.

that would be needed to place said establishment on the above footing, together with a plan of the fort which you have had erected and, if possible, a small map of the coast, upon which you should indicate the ports capable of receiving vessels.

I was unable to arrange that Sr. Prat, merchant at Quebec, who has assisted you, be granted the cargo of several barrels of salt which you requested in his behalf, because His Majesty has dealt this year with a private individual as to the expense of the ship which goes to Quebec.

I recommend you to never miss an occasion to send me all the news you can and to strictly follow all the orders Mr. de Vaudreuil sees fit to give you.

At Versailles, 30 June, 1707.

I have received the letter which you wrote to me the 26th of the month of July last year. I was pleased to bear that the establishment which you have commenced at Labrador is growing in importance every day and that the cod are very abundant there ; if the fishing facilities are such as you telles que vous me le marquez il faut s'attacher a soutenir ce poste, et je vous recommande de continuer a vous y appliquer.

J'ay veu avec plaisir ce que vous me marquez sur la pesche des Loups Marins et du saumon, et sur l'esperance que vous avez destablir aussy la pesche de la Baleine, Mrs de Vaudreuil et Raudot vous donneront toute la protection dont vous aurez besoin pour soutenir cet establissement, ainsy vous n'avez qu'a vous adresser a eux pour les choses qui vous sont indispensables, on ne scauroit vous accorder de soldats parcequ'il n'y en a pas suffisamment pour faire le service et garder les postes des gouvernements de Quebec et de Montreal, dailleurs je crois qu'il vous convient mieux d'avoir des habitans a quoy lesd. Srs de Vaudreuil et Raudot vous ayderont, je leur escris de vous envoyer un missionnaire et de faciliter a vostre famille les moyens de vous aller trouver.

Sa Ma^{te} a bien voulu vous continuer la gratifficaon qui vous fut accordée lannée derniere en consideration de vostre establissement et vous pouvez compter qu'en vous appliquant a le mettre en bon estat Elle vous fera dautres graces dans la suite.

Je me souviendray de vostre frere qui sert avec vous si sa Ma^{te} prend le Party de vous envoyer un detachment de soldats, continuez de me mander les suites qu'aura vostre establissement.

describe them to me, efforts must be made to maintain this post and I advise you to proceed with the same interest.

I noticed with satisfaction your statement on the seal and salmon fishery and on your intention or hope of forming as well a whale fishery. Messrs. de Vaudreuil and Raudot will extend to you the protection required for the maintenance of this establishment, and, therefore, you simply have to apply to them for such things as are absolutely necessary to you ; you cannot be supplied with soldiers as there is not a sufficient number of them for the service and to guard the Quebec and Montreal government posts ; besides, I am of the opinion that habitants would be more suitable to your ends and, in this, the said Sieurs de Vaudreuil and Raudot will assist you ; I am writing to them to the effect that they send you a missionary and provide your family with the required accommodation to join you.

His Majesty has been agreeable to continue to you the allowance which was granted last year in consideration of your establishment and you may expect further favours from Him in the future should you bring the same to a good condition.

I shall remember your brother who is in the service with you, should His Majesty decide to despatch a detachment of soldiers ; keep me informed of the results of your establishment.

REQUESTS of Sr. de Courtemanche to Monseigneur de Pontchartrain in order that he may be granted assistance for the maintenance of the Establishment of La Bras d'or, following the latter's intentions.

The said Sr. de Courtemanche most respectfully represents to Your Lordship that, for the upkeep of the Establishment of this post it is necessary that he should remain there alone ; for this purpose, he very humbly prays Your Lordship to grant unto him permission to remain there several consecutive years in order to strengthen same, unless he is compelled under Your Lordship's good pleasure to return to France following the orders conveyed by a canoe specially despatched to Mr. de Vaudreuil to whom reasons for this would be given.

It is of the utmost consequence, My Lord, that you be kind enough to issue orders to Messrs. the Commisioners at St-Malo, at Bayonne, at St. Jean du lush ¹ and at other places that they enquire as to the number of vessels coming to this continent and have same bring salt in sufficient quantity at the price paid for it in France as it has been explained by him in the statements of last year, keeping into account in their favour the sums of money advanced, the leakage and the insurances, d'y attirer des familles pour y faire l'Etablissement de la pesche ? Les deux vaisseaux qui y sont venus cette année n'en ont pü fournir que deux Boisseaux, n'en ayant eu par labondance du Poisson que pour faire leur pesche, mais jls [sic.] ont promis a leur départ d'en fournir chacun quatre thonneaux l'année prochaine et d'engager autant qu'ils pourront les autres vaisseaux qui y viendront de faire de mesme.

JL [sic.] vous supplie tres humblement Monseigneur de considerer ques les gratifications que vous luy avez accordé en faveur de cet Etablissement ne luy ont point été remise depuis trois années Sans compter celle qu'on a pretendu être dans la Seine lorsqu'elle fut prise, ce qui ne doit pas retomber a son prejudice puisqu'il n'a point discontinué de faire valoir ce poste.

JL [sic.] est de la derniere consequence Monseigneur que vôtre Grandeur ait la bonté d'entrer dans la depense que le d. S.^r de Courtemanche est obligé de faire pour le grand nombre d'hommes qu'il convient d'entretenir aud. poste tant pour la garde du fort que pour celle qu'il a fait faire cette année alavantgarde des vaisseaux du costé des Esquimaux afin de les garantir de leurs jnsultes [sic.], et leur donner moyen de faire tranquillement leurs travaux de pesche par lapréhention qu'ils on d'être surpris de ces Barbares, pourquoy il Supplie tres humblement vôtre grandeur de luy accorder de Canada vn teldettachement quil luy plaira, ou bien la Compagnie.

Comme vous avez donné ordre Monseigneur aud. S.^r de Courtemanche de prendre connoissance de L'Etablissement des Esquimaux, de leur nombre, et de leur force, ce qui luy paroist assés par ce que cette Nation est herrante, Jl [sic.] fera son possible pour satisfaire a vos jntentions [sic.], mais jl [sic.] ne le peut faire which is the best means for bringing there families desirous of settling at this place to carry on fishing. The two vessels which came there this year were able to furnish only two bushels of same, and as the fishing was abundant, they had just enough to cure their fish, but when leaving, they promised to provide next year four barrels each of same and to do their utmost to have the other vessels coming there do the same.

He very humbly prays you, My Lord, to take into consideration that the allowances granted unto him by yourself in favour of this Establishment have not been paid to him since three years¹ without speaking of that which has been contended to be lost in the " La Seine " when it was taken, a condition on account of which he should not have to suffer as he never discontinued to maintain this post,

It is of the utmost consequence, My Lord, that your Lordship be good enough to share the expense that the said Sr. de Courtemanche is compelled to incur in order to keep at the said post the great number of men necessary for the protection of the fort and also for that which he has had accomplished this year at the vanguard of the ships on the Esquimaux coast so that they may be protected against their insults, and give them means to carry on their fishing in peace [without] fear of their being taken by surprise by these barbarians, wherefore he most humbly prays Your Lordship to grant unto him from Canada such a detachment as he may be pleased to grant, or else his Company.

As Your Lordship has ordered Sr. de Courtemanche to look into the establishment of the Esquimaux, their number and their strength, which he deems sufficient, as this nation leads a wandering life, he will do his utmost to gratify your desires, but he will be unable to do so without being sans être Secondé, C'est pour quoy il a Supplié M^r le Gouverneur general de Luy accorder le printemps prochain aux frais du Roy six hommes avec vn Charroy, les vivres et munitions de guerre pour faire cette decouverte qu'il fera luy même afin de vous en rendre vn Compte exact, aussy bien de ce qu'il pourra découvrir le long de cette coste.

Comme vous avez laissé la liberté Monseigneur aud.^t S. de Courtemanche de prendre le Commandement de labras d'or en faisant cession de sa Compagnie, il en accepte tres volontiers le Commandement pourveu que vôtre Grandeur ait la bonté d'y joindre des appointements convenables au caractere, Sans quoy il se tiendra a sa Compagnie avec vôtre permission de rester a ce poste pour le faire valoir.

Le d. S.^r de Courtemanche vous représente Monseigneur que le Missionnaire qu'il a a les charges dans ce lieu, est d'une utilité indispensable pour le Soulagement des aines qui y sont, pour ceux d'Europe qui y viennent faire la pesche et pour Etablir le Christianisme parmy ces Sauvages qui y sont habitez lesquels l'embrassent avec Exemple c est ce qui luy fait espérer que vôtre grandeur aura la bonté d'entrer dans la dépense qu'il est obligé de faire pour son entretien et sa nourriture en luy accordant ce qu'on donne dans les autres missions.

JL [sic.] prend la liberté Monseigneur de réitérer a vôtre Grandeur Ses tres humbles jnstances [sic.] pour le retablissement du S.^r de Lavalterie qui depuis dix ans a Lhonneur de servir Sa Majesté en qualité de Cadet, ce sont deux personnes tres necessaires au d. Poste pour seconder dans les occasions le d. S.^r de Courtemanche y etant experimentez et qui y servent actuellement.

assisted. Accordingly, he has requested Mr. the Governor General to grant unto him next spring at the King's expense, six men together with a cart, supplies and war ammunitions to undertake this discovery which he will make personally in order to report faithfully on same and also on what he may discover along the said coast.

The said Sr. de Courtemanche being at liberty through Your Lordship's permission to assume the command of Labrador after surrendering his Company, he indeed accepts most willingly the said command, provided Your Lordship will be kind enough to join to same adequate compensation. Otherwise. he will remain with his Company with your permission to stay at this post to keep it up.

The said Sr. de Courtemanche represents to Your Lordship that the Missionary whom he keeps here at his own expense, is of an indispensable usefulness for the relief of the individuals who are here, for the Europeans who conic to carry on fishing, and for the establishment of Christianity amongst these Indians accustomed to same who embrace it with example, and this is why he cherishes the hope that Your Lordship will be kind enough to share the expense which he is compelled to incur for his upkeep and his food, by granting unto him what is given in the other missions.

He takes the liberty, My Lord, to reiterate to Your Lordship his very humble entreaties for the reestablishment into the service of Sr. de Baumont, and for the promotion of Sr. de Lavalterie who, for ten years, has had the honour of serving His Majesty as Cadet. These two persons are absolutely necessary at the said post and, occasionally, assist the said Sr. de Courtemanche, being experienced and serving there at present.

It will also be necessary for you to inform me of the quality of the soil, of what it is likely to yield and if there is any timber in these bays.

It is desirable that you succeed in the whale fishery which you are about to undertake ; the oil trade is a good one and the supply of the same is never excessive in the Kingdom.

I doubt whether we shall ever win over the Esquimaux ; I am not surprised at the robbery which you told me they committed against the Sieur Tapin ; they are people who, for want of commerce, lack everything they stand in need of and which we could supply them, and, furthermore, I am satisfied that, should they realize what the skins they have and the oils they make would bring them they require, they would forsake this vice. To accomplish this end, one must be persistent, as it is only through time and patience that men can be subdued, and all the more in the case of such as they. I have been told that the Indians are scattered by families ; you ought to try and induce a few of them to come and trade every year at your establishment. MINUTES OF CONSEIL DE MARINE, re

COURTEMANCHE'S REPORT, DATED 13 SEPTEMBER, 1716.

Le sieur de COURTEMANCHE, capitaine du canada commandant à Labrador à la Baye Philypeaux le 13 septembre 1716.

La côte de Labrador s'augmente de plus en plus tous les vaisseaux au nombre de 15 y ont fait une pêche très avantageuse, même plus que d'ordinaire.

Tous les capitaines demandent que ce continent ne soit point concédé à aucun particulier, ils assurent qu'ils trouveront plus d'avantages à cette côte qu'ils n'avaient autrefois à Plaisance.

(Translation.)

The sieur de COURTEMANCHE, captain in Canada, in command at Labrador, at Phelypeaux Bay, 13 September, 1716.

The coast of Labrador is steadily improving ; every vessel engaged in the fisheries at this place had a very profitable catch, even larger than usual.

All the captains are requesting that this continent be not conceded to any individual ; they affirm that they will derive more benefits from this coast than they did formerly at Plaisance.

NOTA.—Le conseil lui a écrit le 16 juin 1716 qu'il ne convenait point d'accorder aux propriétaires des navires qui vont à la pêche des établissements certaines a la côte de Labrador parceque cela nuirait à l'augmentation de la pêche et que leur demande sur cela leur avait été refusée.

Il a écrit à M. de Vaudreuil pour lui demander de permettre à son correspondant à Québec la levée de 12 hommes et de lui envoyer un officier pour les commander. Il y joindra cinq familles de sauvages pour faire l'établissement de la rivière de KESCAKIOU le tout à ses dépens.

La D.^e de COURTEMANCHE à Bayonne le 9 Décembre 1716. Son mari était sur le point de passer en France lorsqu'il a été averti qu'un parti de 800 esquimaux paraissait aux environs de son poste et qu'ils avaient déjà brulé deux cabanes de pêcheurs français, elle est venue à son défaut et une indisposition l'oblige de rester à Bayonne où elle a débarqué.

Le principal sujet de son voyage est pour justifier la conduite de son mari dont elle prétend qu'on a fait des plaintes au conseil, elle les attribue au nommé La Vallée Constantin qui ayant été son domestique a fait connaissance avec les sauvages qu'il s'attire et détourne des limites où ils doivent se rendre, c'est dans cette vue qu'étant venu à la côte de Labrador sous prétexte d'y faire un établissement il courut cette côte pour enlever ce que les sauvages auraient porté chez eux à qui ils doivent, son mari, connaissant cet homme capable de donner de mauvaises impressions aux sauvages les renvoya à Québec et informa M. de Vaudreuil des raisons qu'il avait de le faire, il lui en rendit encore un compte plus particulier étant à Versailles il y a deux ans, M. de Vaudreuil

(Translation.)

NOTE.—On the 16th June, 1716, the Council wrote to him, stating that it was not deemed proper to grant to owners of vessels permanent establishments on the coast of Labrador, as this would be prejudicial to the development of fisheries and their application for same had been rejected.

He wrote to M. de Vaudreuil and requested that his agent at Quebec be permitted to levy twelve men and that an officer should be sent to him to act as their commander. He would add to the above five Indian families, in view of forming the establishment of the River KESCAKIOU [Hamilton river], the whole at his own expense.

Dame de Courtemanche was at Bayonne, on the 9th of December, 1716. Her husband was about to take passage for France when he was informed that a party of 800 Esquimaux had put in an appearance in the vicinity of his post, and that, already, they had burnt two French fishermen's huts. She came instead of her husband who, owing to an indisposition, is compelled to stay at Bayonne, where she landed.

The chief object of her journey is to defend the conduct of her husband against whom, she claims, grievances have been submitted to the Council. Such grievances she lays at the door of one La Vallée Constantin ¹ who, having been, at one time, in her employ as a servant, has come in contact with the Indians whom he attracts to himself and induces to go beyond the limits allotted to them. It was with this end in view that, having come to the coast of Labrador under the pretense of forming an establishment at this place, he overran this coast for the purpose of taking away from the Indians whatever they would have carried to their creditors. Her husband being aware that this man was such as would instil improper notions into the minds of the Indians, sent him back to Quebec and informed M. de Vaudreuil of his reasons for so doing. He gave him a still more detailed explanation while at convint qu'un homme de ce caractère n' était pas propre dans de nouveaux établissements et lui promit qu'il ne le reverrait plus dans le sien cependant il prétend y revenir y être indépendant.

NOTA : Le conseil a accordé l'année dernière une concession au dit Constantin sur l'avis de M. de Vaudreuil qui a représenté que cet homme a été le premier à Labrador et y avait mené le sieur de Courtemanche.

Son mari ne demanderait pas mieux que de voir des familles s'établir dans son quartier, mais le bois si nécessaire pour la pêche y est si rare qu'il n'a pu se dispenser de faire sur cela ses remontrances qui sont sincères et n'ont pour but que l'avantage de la pêche.

Elle représente que l'expérience a fait connaître combien la morue est abondante dans les différents ports de cette côte, il ne reste qu'à mettre les pêcheurs à l'abri des surprises des esquimaux ce qui se peut faire par le moyen d'un fort qu'il faudrait bâtir, comme son mari l'a proposé à M. de Vaudreuil au dessous de Belisle, un officier et douze hommes suffiraient pour le garder ; son mari en aurait fait la dépense s'il n'était pas épuisé par celle de son établissement de sorte qu'il n'a pas peu de peine de fournir à l'entretien du fort qu'il garde.

Il lui est dû 3 années d'appointements et une avance de plus de 2000 au sujet des canots qu'il envoya à Québec pour donner avis de l'entreprise des anglais sur le Canada et ensuite de l'échouement de leur flotte (en marge est écrit : ses appointements sont employés sur l'état de Québec comme capitaine. Il a fait une pareille demande il y a deux ans, elle a été renvoyée à M. de Vaudreuil et Bégon pour lui faire rembourser ce qui se trouverait juste).

Versailles two years ago. M. de Vaudreuil admitted that a man of such character was not fit to be in newly formed establishments and he promised that he would see him no more in his own ; nevertheless he means to return there and be independent.

Note.—Last year [31 March, 1716] the Council granted a concession to the said Constantin, upon the advice of M. de Vaudreuil who represented this man as being the first to have gone to Labrador and that he had taken the Sieur de Courtemanche to that place.

Her husband is only too desirous of having families settle in his district, but the timber, so necessary for the fisheries, is so scarce that he could not help but voice his grievances on this score, and he did so in sincerity and with no other motive than the interest of the fisheries.

She represents that, from experience, it has been ascertained that the cod fishery is abundant in the several harbours of this coast. It only remains to insure the protection of the fishermen against the attacks of the Esquimaux, which can be accomplished, as her husband has suggested by M. de Vaudreuil, by the erection of a fort which would be guarded by an officer and twelve men ; her husband would have borne the cost of the same but for the fact that his resources were depleted as a result of the expenses incurred for his own establishment ; consequently he experiences no little difficulty in providing for the upkeep of the fort he is maintaining.

There is owing to him three years salary and an advance of over 2000 livres for canoes sent by him to Quebec in order to give warning of the attempt of the English against Canada and of the subsequent stranding of their fleet (a marginal note reads : His salary figures in the Quebec statement as that of a captain. Two years ago a similar demand was

Elle supplie le conseil d'ordonner que cette somme et les appointements de son mari lui soient payés pour la mettre en état de régler ses affaires et de lui porter les vivres et munitions nécessaires pour l'entretien de son poste. Elle représente que ces vivres sont très utiles aux pêcheurs qui font naufrage comme il est arrivé le printemps dernier à un navire normand de 58 hommes d'équipage qui a péri dans les glaces à 40 lieues au large et dont l'équipage s'est sauvé au poste de son mari et y a été nourri de ses vivres, il serait à propos qu'il en eut pour ces cas imprévus et pour la garnison qu'il demande une quantité plus forte que celle dont il est en état de faire provision, il lui faudrait aussi de la poudre et des balles pour se défendre des esquimaux. Elle ajoute que son mari a écrit du 11 Octobre dernier que ces sauvages sont venus à une lieue de son fort et ont brûlé toutes les cabanes et ustensiles que les pêcheurs partis pour France y avaient laissés, il les a poursuivis inutilement pendant six jours par mer et par terre, ce succès les fera revenir les années suivantes si on ne les arrête par le poste proposé ;

Observation : On pourrait renvoyer cette demande pour l'établissement d'un nouveau poste à M. de Vaudreuil.

En marge est écrit : Renvoyer A Messieurs de Vaudreuil et Begon tant pour l'établissement qu'il propose que pour ce qui peut lui être du afin d'avoir son avis. Demander à la D.^e De courtemanche de quelle quantité de vivres elle a besoin et à quelle condition.

She begs of the Council that such sum and her husband's salary be ordered to be paid to her so as to enable her to settle his affairs and take to him such provisions and ammunition as are required for the maintenance of his post. She submits that these provisions are most useful for the fishermen in distress, as it happened last spring in the case of a Norman vessel, with a crew of 58 men, which was lost 40 leagues in the open sea. The members of the crew, having taken refuge at her husband's post, were fed out of his provisions. It is desirable that he should have some [provisions] to meet with such contingencies, as well as for the garrison, the latter requiring a larger quantity than his situation enables him to lay in. He should also have powder and shot to protect himself against the Esquimaux. She further says that her husband has written, on the 11th October last [1715], stating that these Indians had come within a league of his fort and had burnt all the huts and utensils left there by the fishermen who had returned to France. He had chased them for six days by land and sea, but unsuccessfully. Emboldened by this success, they will return in the coming years, unless they are stopped by the proposed fort.

Remark: This application for the establishment of a new post might be referred to M. de Vaudreuil.

Written in the margin : To be referred to Messrs. de Vaudreuil and Begon for their opinion both as to the establishment suggested and as to what may be due to him. Inquire from the Dame de Courtemanche as to what quantity of provisions she requires and upon what terms.

Approved by the Conseil de Marine, on the 23rd February, 1717.

Ordonne Sa Majestè que le décès de la troisieme fille des dits St. et Dame de Courtemanche arrivant après celui dudit Sr. de Brouage, la part à elle apartemante dans les dites Concessions apartiendra par accroissement aux dits Srs. Delaporte freres, ainsi qu'elle auroit appartenu au dit Sr. de Brouage, piur en jouir par eux pareillement par moitié et leur vie durant, comme des autres portions. Veut Sa Majestè que le deces de l'un d'eux arrivant, la part à lui apartemente tourne par accroissement au survivant, pour jouir ègalement du tout sa vie durant, sans que pour raison de la prèsentee concession dont ils seront mis en possession, ainsi qu'il a ètè dit ci dessus, immédiatement après la mort dudit Sr. de Brouague, ils soyent tenus de payer à Sa Majestè ni à ses successeurs Roys ausune finance ni indemnité, de laquelle, à quelque somme qu'elle puisse monter, Sa Majestè leur fait don et remise. Et pour témoignage de sa volentè, Sa Majestè n'a ordonné d'expedier le present Brevet qu'Elle a voulu signer de sa main et ètre contresigné par moy son Conseiller et Secretaire d'État et de ses Commandements et finances, lequel sera registrè au Conseil Superieur de Quebec.

together with all the lands conceded under the patents dated on the 19th of November 1714 and on the 13th of July 1722 to have and to hold and possess one half each of same for ever, immediately after the death of the said Sr. de Brouague, in like manner as he shall or ought to have done, under the terms, clauses and conditions as provided in the said patents.

His Majesty orders that, should the death of the third daughter of the said Sr. and Dame de Courtemanche occur after that of the said Sr. de Brouague, the share belonging to her in the said concessions shall belong by extension to the said Srs. de la Porte brothers, as it would have belonged to the said Sr. de Brouague, each of them to have and to hold one half of same for ever, as for the other portions. His Majesty wishes that should the death of one of them occur, the part belonging to him return by increase to the survivor, for him to have and to hold also the whole for ever, without they being, by reason of the present concession unto them granted, as mentioned above, and immediately following the death of the said Sr. de Brouague, held to pay His Majesty or the Kings, his successors, any tax or indemnity which, whatever the sum to which same might amount, His Majesty has donated and remitted unto them. And, in testimony of His will, His Majesty has ordered me to deliver the present patent which He was pleased to sign with His own hand and have countersigned by me, his Councillor and Secretary of State and of his Household and Treasury, said patent to be registered at the Superior Council of Quebec.

BROUAGUE, ESQR. OF QUEBEC.

HUMBLY SHEWETH,

That in the year 1718 and 1721 the French Court did give to the said Francis Brouague and to his Heirs a Tract of Land on the Labradore Coast on the Gulph of St. Lawrence, nine Leagues in Front on the Sea Coast, with the Islands thereunto belonging and four Leagues into the Land, which he enjoyed until the year 1760 when he was dispossessed by an Order of General Murray, then commanding officer at Quebec, and his property given to Messrs. Mackenzie, Lime Burner¹ and others, and by them unjustly held to the present Time.

Your Memorialists therefore pray your Lordships to take this their hard and unjust Treatment into your Lordships' Consideration and order them Possession on their original grant ; or a new One from their Lordships Board ; this being almost every thing that Mr. Brouague had to leave for the support of six children, his other Property being burnt, during the siege of Quebec and your Memorialists will ever pray Ec., &c.,

In compliance with His Honour the Lieutenant Governor's instructions, I carefully read :

1st. A letter from Lord Sydney under date of the 15th December, 1784.

2nd. The copy of a memoir[re] the claims of the Sieur Favry de Chatelon to the enjoyment, during his life, of the post of the bay Phelipeaux, situated on the coast of Labrador.

3rd. The copy of a patent of concession by His Most Christian Majesty, signed at Versailles the 20th February, 1759, of the bay of Phelipeaux together with all the lands conceded by the patents of the 19th November, 1714, and of the 13th July, 1722, to the Sieurs François Foucher the elder, Hugues Jean Favry de Ponceaux and Charles Favry de Chantelon, to have and to hold, to wit, the said Sieur Foucher the entire half of the said concessions, the sieur Favry du Ponçeau one quarter and the sieur Favry de Chantelon the other remaining quarter, and this during their life forthwith upon the death of the Sieur de Brouague, His Majesty ordaining that, in the case of the death of the Sieur Foucher, his children should enjoy in equal shares the moiety of the said concessions, during their life, and that, in the case of the death of the Sieurs Hugues, Jean Favry du Ponçeau and Charles durant, de la portion accordée à leurs maris dans la moitié des dites concessions. Les dits trois papiers à moi remis par Hugue Finlay Ecuier, Secrétaire de son Honneur le 24 de ce mois :

Et J'Estime :

1° Que le Brevet de Sa Majesté T.C. en date du 20 février 1759 dans un tems oit le Canada appartenait à sa Couronne qui accorde ces concessions aux ci-des-sus-nommés, contenant un terrain de Neuf lieux de front sur quatre de profondeur, doit avoir son effet, qunat à la jouissance des concessionnaires seulement leur vie durant, ainsi qu'elle est expliquée au dit Brevet, parce que lors de la Capitualtion de la Province 1760: il est constaté que les Propriétaires de biens par titres en demeureraint posseseseurs, Et que cet Article de la Capitulation a été ratifié et confirmé par le Traité définitif de paix du 10 Février 1763.

2° Qu le défaut d'Enregistrement de ce Brevet au Conseil Supérieur, ne peut lui préjudicier, a cause de L'impossibilité où se sont trouvés les Concessionnaires de l'y faire enregitrer la conquest de ce Pais aiant été faite par les Armes de sa Majesté en Septembre de cette même année 1759.

3° Que quoique les dits concessionnaires ne dussent jouir en conséquence de ce Brevet, des concessions de la Baie Phelipeaux, qu'après le deçes du S. de Brouague leur beau-frère ils en ont eu, dès le moment de la Signature du Brevet, la Véritable propriété qui leur a donné. Jus ad rem. et qui audéçcs du S. de Brouage leur a donné Jus in rem. Et qu'en conséquence la jouissance de ces concessions de la Baie Phelipeaux a commencé en leur faveur au moment du deçes du S. de Brouague leur beau-frère.

their wives should likewise enjoy, during their lives, the shares granted to their husbands in the moiety of the said concessions. The said three papers handed to me by Hugues Finlay, Esq., Secretary to his Honour, the 24th of this month.

And my opinion is :

1st. That His Most Christian Majesty's patent under date of the 20th February, 1759, at a time when Canada appertained to His Crown, which grants these concessions to the hereinbefore mentioned parties, containing a piece of land of nine leagues in front by four in depth, must be effective in so far as the grantees' enjoyment is concerned, during their lives only, as set forth in the said patent, because, at the time of the capitulation of the Province in 1760, it was provided that the holders of property under deeds shall retain the ownership thereof, and that this article of the Capitulation has been ratified and confirmed by the final peace treaty of the 10th February, 1763.

2nd. That the default of registration at the Superior Council of this patent cannot affect it, on account of the impossibility in which the grantees found themselves of causing the same to be registered, this country having been conquered by His Majesty's forces in

3rd. That, under this patent, although the said grantees should only have enjoyed, the concessions of the bay Phelipeaux, upon the death of the Sieur de Brouague, their brother-in-law, they had, from the moment the patent was signed, the actual ownership which gave them jus ad rem, and which gave them, at the death of the Sieur de Brouague, jus in rem. And, that, in consequence, the enjoyment of these concessions of the bay Phelipeaux, began in their behalf at the time of the death of the Sieur de Brouague, their brother-in-law.

4° Que S'il est du plaisir de Sa Majesté à ordonner l'Enregistrement de ce Brevet qui maintiendrait le dit S. Favry de Chantelon dans la jouissance du dit Poste, sa vie durant (dans le cas où le Septième Paragrafe de l'acte de Québec qui statue que tous les Sujets Canadiens, tiendront leurs propriétés & possessions et enjouiront, en gardant à sa Majesté la foi et la fidélité qu'ils lui doivent, et la Soumission due à la Courone & et au Parlement de la Grande Bretagne, Ne soit point un obstacle à l'octroi de sa demande, il est incontestable qu'il sera dans le droit de réclamer et de demander aux Particuliers qui ont exploité cette Baie de Phelipeaux quelques dédommagements depuis le Déces du S. de Brouague arrivé le 15 mars 1761.

5° Mais que dans ce cas le S. Favry de Chantelon, pour éviter toutes contestations, dit Suivre le même sort que celui qu'ont essuié les Seigneurs et propriétaires du Fief & Seigneurie des Isles et Islets de mingan qui na ne sont point obstinés à retirer aucuns profits de leur dit Fief & Seigneurie depuis 1763, jusqu'en 1775 tems, pendant lequel, il était réputé être et dépendre du Gouverne-ment de terre neuve, en conséquence de la Proclamation roiale de sa Majesté du 7 Octobre 1763, qui par l'acte de Quebec, ainsi que le Baie Philipeaux ont rentré dans les limites de cette Province, Et ne peut raisonnablement exiger des particuliers qui ont exploité les pêches dans cette Baie, qu'une rente annuelle de puis la ditte année 1775 sur le même pied que les Seigneurs des Isles et islets de Mingan sont paiés de leurs fermiers, en conséquence d'une Ordonnance en règlement de M^{rs} de Beauharnois & Hocquart Gouverneur general & intendant de ce Pais en date du 4 Octobre 1743, qui en conséquence des Ordres de Sa Majesté T. C. ordone que les propriétaires des isles et islets de Mingan, seroit en droit de recevoir des particuliers qui Exploiteront des Pêches sur & dans

(Translation.)

4th. That, if it is His Majesty's pleasure to ordain the registration of this patent which would confirm the said Sieur Favry de Chantelon in the enjoyment of the said post (in case the seventh paragraph of the Quebec Act which enacts that all Canadian subjects shall retain their property and possessions and enjoy the same, by keeping faith and fealty to His Majesty as they are bound to, and subjection to the Crown and to the Parliament of Great Britain, is no impediment to the granting of his request, it is indisputable that he will have the right of claiming and asking from the individuals who operated this bay of Phelipeaux, some indemnity since the death of the Sieur de Brouague on the 15th March, 1761.

5th. That, in such a case, the Sieur Favry de Chantelon, in order to avoid any controversy, must share the fate of the seigniors and proprietors of the fief and seigniory of the Isles et Islets de Mingan who did not insist on deriving any profit from their said fief and seigniory between 1763 and 1775, during which time, it was deemed to be in and belong to Newfoundland, in consequence of His Majesty's Royal Proclamation of the 7th October, 1763, and which, along with the bay Phelipeaux, under the Quebec Act, was returned within the limits of this province, and could not reasonably demand from the individuals who carried on the fisheries in this bay more than a yearly rent from the said year 1775 on the same basis as that paid to the seigniors of the Isles et Islets de Mingan by their lessees, in consequence of an ordinance in settlement of Mrs. de Beauharnois and Hocquart, Governor General and Intendant of this country, under date of the 4th October, 1743, which, in pursuance of His Most Christian Majesty's instructions, ordains that the proprietors of the Isles et Islets de Mingan should be l'Etendue des dites Isles, une redevance annuelle de trois. pour Cent sur le total des huiles & Peaux de lousps marins qui y auront ete Exploitès. La dite Baie Philipeaux n'ayant ete concèdée qui dans la vue d'y exploiter des Pêches, qui ont toujours ete les plus abondantes sur la Côte de la Brador.

Ce reglement est au Regitre d'intendance N° 31. f° 99.

6° Que le S. Favry de Chantelon qui réclame la dite jouissance, comme appartenant a lui seul, suivant sa note a cause de la mort de son frère et de celle du S. Foucher doit avant de se l'aproprier poruver que le fils du dit S. Foucher qui a passé en France avec lui En 1760, est aussi décédé, ce qui j'ignore.

Le soussigné soumet humblement Sa presente opinion a son Honneur le Lieutenant Gouverneur entitled to collect from the individuals who may operate fisheries on and in the extent of the said Isles, a yearly rental of three per cent on the total of the oils and seal skins produced therein, the said bay de Phelipeaux having been only conceded in view of the fisheries which have always been the most abundant on the coast of Labrador.

This regulation is in the register of the Intendants, No. 31, f° 99.

6th. That the Sieur Favry who claims the said enjoyment, as belonging exclusively to himself, according to his memoir, as a result of his brother's death and that of the Sieur Foucher must, before taking it over, prove that the said Sieur Foucher's son who returned to France with him in 1760, is also dead, of which I am ignorant.

The present opinion is respectfully submitted by the undersigned to His Honour the Lieutenant Governor.

Between the Srs. Pierre Glemet and Francois Joseph de Vienne, lessees of the post of the Baye Phelipeaux and dependencies, plaintiff in the petition by us answered, present in person on the first part,

And the Sr. Michel Fortier, merchant in this city, defendant, also present in person, on the second part,

Seeing the said petition stating that upon the contestations arisen between the Sr. de Brouague, the owner of the said post, and the defendant claiming to be the grantee of the inlet called Ste. Claire, our ordinances, before rendering judgment, that the Sr. Pellegrin, " lieutenant de port, " would determine the limits of the post of the Bay of Phelipeaux ; that the latter having been unable to reach that place then for that survey, the defendant has continued to operate the said inlet of Ste. Claire, which caused the plaintiffs to make their declaration at the Record Office of the Admiralty, on the return of the vessel of the Sr. Fortier, for the purpose of recovering the proceeds of the fishing which he had illegally carried on, the said inlet of Ste. Claire being in the dependency of the Bay of Phelipeaux ; that, notwithstanding this declaration and protestation, the defendant having appealed to us, claiming that the said inlet was not included in that Bay : We rendered our ordinance, on the 15th of September, which allows the defendant, temporarily, to fish in the inlet of Ste. Claire. And, as it appears from the procès-verbal of the Sr. Pellegrin of the 24th of June last respecting the limits of the Bay of Phelipeaux, that the said inlet of Ste. Claire is within the dependency of the said Bay, the plaintiffs make a motion that we would be pleased to bring the defendant before us to witness the homologation of the said procès-verbal. Therefore, that he shall, in the future, be prohibited to operate the said inlet of Ste. Claire, and for having so done, be condemned to 20,000 livres of damages and interest, both for the non-enjoyment, and for the proceeds of the fishing by the said defendant.—Our ordinance being at the foot of the said petition ordering the same to be communicated to the Sr. Fortier that he might appear before us this day, the plea of defence of the said Sr. Fortier by which he moves that the action taken against him should be dismissed, and in. the case, however, the defendant be compelled to surrender the said inlet Ste. Claire, we would be pleased to admit him incidentally as a plaintiff to take the effects belonging to him, and, as regards the buildings on shore, that he should be reimbursed according to the appraisal which will be made. Seeing also the concession granted to the said defendant by Messrs. de la Jonquiere and Bigot, Governor-General and Intendant, dated the 13th of October, 1751, by which they concede to him two leagues or so in front, by four leagues in depth, situated on the coast of Labrador, joining on the south-west point Blancs Sablons, and on the north-west, point de la Forteau for seal-fishing pur-

Sur la requeste à nous présentée par Pierre Constantin, habitant de la coste et seigneurie de Maure, contenant qu'il a beaucoup contribué à l'établissement fait par le sieur de Courtemanche à la coste de la bras d'or (sic), et que dans les voyages qu'il a fait le long de cette coste, il y a découvert plusieurs bons ports et havres, dans lesquels on pourrait faire des établissements considérables, non seulement pour la pesche de molue, et des loup-marin qui y est très abondante, mais aussy pour un commerce avantageux avec les Sauvages esquimaux, nous ayant representé qu'il n'est pas possible que le sieur de Courtemanche puisse establir tout le pays à luy concédé, ny mesme decouvrir tous les ports et havres qui sont au delà de Belisle esloigné de vingt-trois lieues de L'establissement du d. sr de Courtemanche, le d. Constantin nous ayant proposé d'establir le pays au delà de Belisle, en descendant au nord nord-est, s'il nous plaisait de luy en faire une concession ; à quoy ayant esgard et ne nous paraissant pas, attendû l'esloignement, que ce nouvel establissement puisse préjudicier à celui fait par le dit S. de Courtemanche, mais au contraire qu'il pourra estre très utile pour l'augmentation de la pesche du loup-marin et contribuer à la découverte de quelques bons ports et havres dont on pourra dans la suite tirer de grands avantages.

Nous en vertu du pouvoir à nous conjointement donné par Sa Majesté avons donne, accordé et concedé, donnons accordons et concédons par ces présentes au dit Constantin trente lieues de terre de front, depuis le détroit

Michel Bégon, Knight, Seignior de la Picardière, Murbelin and other places, Councillor of the King in his Councils and in the Parliament of Metz, Intendant of Justice, Police and Finance of New France.

On the petition presented to us by Pierre Constantin, inhabitant of the coast and seignory of Maure, stating that he has largely contributed to the establishment formed by the Sieur de Courtemanche on the coast of la bras d'or (sic), and that in the explorations undertaken by him along said coast, he has discovered thereat several good ports and harbours in which important establishments could be formed, not only for the fishing of cod and seal which are there in abundance, but also for a profitable trade with the Esquimaux savages ; and having represented to us that it is impossible for the sieur de Courtemanche to settle all the country conceded to him, nor even discover all the ports and harbours which are beyond Belleisle, as far as twenty-three leagues from the establishment of the said de Courtemanche, and the said Constantin having proposed to us that he may settle the country beyond Belleisle, the said country running down towards the north-northeast, if it were our pleasure to grant him said concession : In consideration of which and, as it does not appear to us, owing to the distance, that this new establishment would be prejudicial to that settled by the said Sieur de Courtemanche, but, on the contrary, that it might become most advantageous for the development of the seal fishing and contribute towards the discovery of several good ports and harbours which should be, in future, of great benefit.

We, in virtue of the power jointly entrusted to us by His Majesty, have given, granted and conceded, and do hereby give, grant and concede unto the said Constantin, thirty leagues of land proffondeur avec les isles et bâtures qui se trouveront sur la d. estendue, pour en jouir par le dit Constantin, ses successeurs et ayant cause pendant dix années avec droit de chasse, pesche et traite avec les Sauvages dans toute l'estendue de la d. Concession, à la charge de porter foy et hommage au chasteau Saint-Louis de Québec, duquel il relevera aux droits et redevances accoutumées, suivant la coutume de Paris suivie en ce pays, de conserver et faire conserver les bois de chesne propre pour la construction des vaisseaux du Roy, de donner avis à Sa Majesté des mines, minières ou minéraux si aucuns se trouvent dans la d. estendue et establir la d. concession, laisser la grève libre à tous pêcheurs, à l'exception de celle dont il aura besoin pour faire sa pesche, le tout sous le bon plaisir de sa Majesté, de laquelle il sera tenû de prendre confirmation des pntes dans un an, et après la d. ratification prise a faute par luy de tanir feu et lieu sera la d. concession réunie au domaine de sa Majesté. En foy de quoy nous les avons signé, à icelles fait apposer les sceaux de nos armes et contresigner par nos secrétaires. Versailles, 17 April, 1736.

The Sr. Constantin represents that, in the month of March, 1716, the King conceded to him four leagues of land in front on the coast of Labrador, namely, two leagues above running to the northeast from Constantin's dwelling and situated to the northeast of the rivière des François and two leagues below running towards the saute river. That, many years before that concession, he had already formed an establishment at about a league towards the northeast of the river des François. That he had always operated this establishment, and has made others for seal-fishing within the extent of his concession without having been disturbed till 1734, when the Sr. Cheron, ship-owner and the partner of the Srs. foucault and Foucault took possession of St. Modet island included in his concession, cast his nets for seal-fishing between this island and the mainland, and has disturbed the fishing that he, Constantin, had caused to be carried at the River des Francois at a distance of half a league or so from that island. That, on the return of the Sr. Cheron the Srs. Boucault and Foucault have applied to you for the concession of this same island. That, having been informed of that petition, it has been represented to you that the concession requested by the Srs. Boucault and Foucault could not be granted to them without taking a ne pouvoit leur estre accordée sans prendre une partie du terrain compris dans celle qu'il a obtenue en 1716 et sans faire tomber les Etablissements qu'il a faits. Que les Srs Boucault et foucault ayant pretendu que l'Etablissement principal du Sr. Constantin estoit a la Baye Rouge et non a la Rivière des françois, on fit comparoitre devant M. Hocquart 4. Temoins dont deux furent choisis par les Srs Boucault et foucault eux mêmes, et qui tour deposerent qu'a la Vérité il y avoit une cabane a la Baye Rouge pour loger les Pecheurs, mais que le principal Etablissement du Sr. Constantin estoit a la Rivière des françois. Que la dessus il fut dabord resolu d'attendre les Eclaircissemens qu'on pouroit prendre sur la Carte que lc Sr. de la Richardiere devoit dresser de la Cote du N. du fleuve. Qu'on proposa ensuite au S. Constantin un arrangement qui ne luy convint point. Qu'il envoya cependant a son ord^{re} un batiment a son poste pour y faire la peche mais que 8. jours après l'arrivée de ses pecheurs a St. Modet, le Sr. Cheron y arriva et leur notifia une concession que vous avés expédiée aux Srs. Boucault et foucault, En sorte que les Pecheurs du Sr. Constantin leverent leurs Rets et se retirerent.

Il a ajouté que par cette Concession il se trouve depouillé d'une grave qu'il faisoit valoir depuis plusieurs années et qui faisoit son unique ressource pour subsister et faire subsister sa famille, il a demandé d'Estre maintenu dans sa concession de 1716. Et it a Envoyé un plan suivant lequel it paroît que l'Isle St. St. Modet doit effectivement estre comprise dans cette dre concession.

Si cele est, les representations qu'il fait sont fondées, et il ne seroit pas juste de laisser subsister la concession expédiée aux Srs Boucault et foucault. Vous aurés agreable de me marquer ce qui en est, et de me donner votre avis sans prevention ni complaisance.

of the terrain comprised the one he obtained in 1716 and without the destruction of the establishments he has made. That the Srs. Boucault and Foucault having pretended that the principal establishment of the Sr. Constantin was situated at the Baye Rouge and not at the Rivière des François. Four witnesses were summoned before M. Hocquart, two of whom were selected by the Srs. Boucault and Foucault themselves, and who all gave evidence and stated that there really was a cabin at the Baye Rouge for the accommodation of the fishermen, but that the principal establishment of the Sr. Constantin was at the Rivière des François. That, thereupon, it was at first decided to wait for the enlightenment which could be obtained front the chart the Sr. de la Richardière was to prepare of the north coast of the river. That an arrangement was afterwards proposed to the Sr. Constantin to which he could not see convenient to agree. That he nevertheless ordered the sailing of a vessel for fishing there ; but that eight days after the arrival of his fishermen at St. Modet. Sr. Cheron arrived there and notified them of a concession which you have despatched to the Srs. Boucault and Foucault. Consequently, the fishermen raised their nets and withdrew.

He added that, by this concession he was deprived of a beach which he was operating for many years and which constituted his only resource to subsist and to support his family. He has asked to be maintained in his concession of 1716. And he has sent a plan according to which it scents that St. Modet island must actually be included in the said

If it is so, the representations he makes are well founded, and it would not be just to allow the remaining in force of the concession forwarded to the Srs. Boucault and Foucault. You will please inform me of the occurrences and give me your advice without prejudice or favour.

was, in part, the cause of considerable damage which they have suffered this year on account of the failure of the fishery which they have established at the said place of St. Modet, because the musket shots which have been fired by the said LeCourt and his men in that place, which is the natural seal-way, were compelling these wounded animals who were running away, to take another way than the natural one, and leading away others with them. Therefore, the petitioner requests you, Monseigneur, that you would be pleased to give him a written certificate of the declaration which had just been made in your presence by the said Sr. Dezauniers, in his name as well as in the name of the said Sr. de Brouague. to the effect that he had no longer intended to fish with muskets and that it was also the design of the said Sr. de Brouague. who had written him to that effect, And as what has been stated to you, Mgr. of the declaration of the said Sr. Dezauniers is known to us: The petitioner in the said name prays you to be kind enough to deliver to him an official declaration, and consequently to forbid the said Sr. Dezauniers, both for him and for the said Sr. de Brouague, not to fish in the future with muskets, and to forbid them and all other persons to fire or cause musket shots to be fired on the seal-way, under the penalty of an arbitrary fine, as well as under the penalty of all costs. damages and interest. And you shall do justice. Signed Boucault, and below, is written : To be communicated from hand to hand to be returned to us this day. We order, etc. At Quebec. the sixth of October. 1736. Signed Hocquart, and below is written Gilles Hocquart, Intendant of New France. The parties having appeared : and after the Sr. Dezauniers had said that he and the Sr. de Brouague no longer intend to cause fishing to be done with muskets at Longue Pointe, we have delivered an official declaration to the petitioners. And we, without taking into consideration the petition of the said Boucault in these names, do forbid the said Sr. De Brouague

On the petition presented to us by M. Breard, Controller of the Navy in Canada, setting forth that he had secured from His Majesty, the 30th of April, 1719, a patent of ratification of concession for a tract of land of about 4 leagues in front by 6 leagues in depth, to be taken from the river Tekapoin which is the north-east limit of the concession of the Sr. Pommereau in descending to the limit of that of the Sr. Lavalterie ; that he had sent, by reason of this patent, in the month of July of last year, 1749, one Araby to form a fishery establishment on the said tract of land, which would have caused him an expenditure of over 2500^{l.}, which Araby had reported to him, on his return, that there was, within the whole extent of this concession comprising numerous islets, but one seal-pass ; it cannot be of use to him because it dries each tide, as a result of which this concession is valueless to the petitioner. Therefore, he prays, as a compensation for the unproductiveness of the said concession and the expense he has incurred in that connection, that he may be granted, for a

MURRAY TO EGREMONT, 7 SEPTEMBER, 1762, re THE INVALIDITY OF GRANT TO HOCQUART.

Quebec, 7th Sept. 1762.

MY LORD :

I am honored with your Lordship's favor of the 12th June last, inclosing a copy of Monsieur D'Affey's to Sir Joseph Yorke, wherein that Minister sets forth Monsieur Hocquart's title to a certain District of Land,¹ situate in the lower part of the River St. Lawrence, and makes a formal complaint of my having, to the prejudice of this Gentleman, granted the same away to a Monsieur La Fontaine.

I must first beg leave to inform Your Lordship that this place, which lies a great way below Anti Costi, and not far from the entrance into the Straights of Belleisle on this side, is only fit for carrying on the Seal Fishery, and to trade with the Northern Indians resorting to those parts, and as I think it highly necessary in the present circumstances, for reasons too obvious to mention, to know for whom and by whom this trade is carried on, I have all along paid a due attention thereto.

Monsieur Hocquart's agent could produce no title in favour of his principal, at the same time I was well informed, the King's grant to him for life had never been registered at the Conseil Superieur of Quebec, a form absolutely necessary to authenticate the same, and as I did not thoroughly approve of the Persons who held it in Farm, I laid the lease aside for the present and gave Monsieur La Fontaine, a person in indigent circumstances with a numerous family, leave to fish and trade there for one year only.

The confirmation of the grant which Monsieur Hocquart is said to have obtained in 1760, is a sufficient proof how sensible he was, that the original title was defective ; in a letter to his agent, of which I have the honour to inclose an extract, he acknowledges his having the title by him, which consequently had not been transmitted, and registered here in due form.

If Monsieur Hocquart's original title was defective, the confirmation, as Monsieur D'Affey is pleased to stile it, appears to me as ill founded. His Majesty's ships rid triumphant in every part of the river below Quebec, long before the period which he assigns for the execution of this Act of Sovereignty, and His Majesty's Forces were in full possession of Lower Canada.

When Monsieur La Fontaine's time expired, I granted the same¹ for seven years, or untill His Majesty's pleasure was further known, to a Mr. Gray, one of the British Merchants residing here, and as he is an intelligent sensible young man, I meant upon a settlement of the affairs of this Colony to recommend this Gentleman for a further indulgence herein, as he promises to become a most usefull member of society.

Your Lordship will please to lay the affair before His Majesty, with a full assurance that the same is the plain and true state of time fact, without the least alteration in any one circumstance, without any view to injure or molest the parties concerned, and to which I was moved only by the unalterable zeal with which I have and shall always continue to act for His Service.

I have the Honor to be,

My Lord,

Your Lordship's most obedient and most faithfull humble Servant.

Les heritiers Bissot et Joliet Seigneurs, depuis plus d'un siècle, de la Terre ferme de Mingan, des Isles et Ilets de Mingan et de L'isle d'anticosty ; Et Jean Taché propriétaire à Vie du Poste de St. Modet (Les dits biens situés dans la Riviere St. Laurent), sont forcés de recourir à la justice de Vôtre Majesté, pour Etre maintenus dans La possession de Leurs biens.

Les limites tirés en 1763 entre les Provinces de Quebec Et de terre Neuve ont mis sous le gouvernement de cette deniere Province La plus grande partie de leurs Seigneuries. PETITION TO THE KING from Jean Taché and the heirs Bissot and Juliet, new Canadian subjects, presented by Pierre Houdin, their attorney.

SIRE,

The heirs Bissot and Juliet, seigniors for over a century of Terre Ferme de Mingan, of the Isles it Islets de Mingan and of Isle d'Anticosty and Jean Taché, owner for life of the post of St. Modet (the said property being situated on the river St. Lawrence), are compelled to appeal to Your Majesty's sense of justice so that they may be maintained in the possession of their property.

As a result of the boundaries drawn in 1763 between the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland, the greater part of their seigniories have been placed under the Government of the latter province. In 1765 they commenced to be disturbed in their possessions, a frigate having ordered back the vessels which had left Quebec (although provided with passports) to go and operate the St. Modet post and other posts in the said seigniories, and continuons notices and threats having forced their lessee of Mingan seigniority to take refuge within the limits of the province of Quebec, the result of which has been Nouveaux sujets, privés de leur travail ordinaire, Et pour la Province de Quebec En général par la perte totale de la Pêche ; Perte qui ne peutêtre réparée ; la pêche qui se fait dans cette partie N'ayant lieu que dans un certain Temps de L'hyver où Le poisson passe, Et qui ne peut par conséquent être faite que par les gens Etablis sur le lieu.

Le Seul droit des Gens ; Une possession réelle et immémoriale ; Une jöissance d'un siècle ; La capitulation générale du Canada confirmée par le traité de Paix, Et ce traité Luy même Sembloient assurer aux Sujets du même MONARQUE, Sous deux gouvernemens séparés, Ils Sont troublés dans leur jöissance sous de faux prétéxtes, Et cette privation est assuretment egalle pour eux, a les en depouïller.

Vôte Majesté est trop juste, Sire, pour souffrir L'oppression, Et trop Compatissante pour Exposer à Ses yeux La situation de 50. des dits heritiers reduits a la mendicité par les malheurs de la Guerre ; que leurs ancêtres ont obtenu ces seigneuries pour prix du sang qu'ils ont versé en combattant et Soumettant les Sauvages de ces parties, et par leurs découvertes ; choses qui ont contribüé a L'Etablissement d'un Païs passé en La possession de Vôte Majesté par la gloire de ses armes. Non Sire, Vos nouveaux sujets n'employent point ces ressources attendrissantes auprès d'un Monarque Conduit par L'esprit de justice ! La Seulle exposition de Leurs droits est suffisante auprès de Vôte Majesté.

Ces droits Sont, pour les heritiers Bissot Et Joliet, 1°. La Seigneurie de la terre ferme de Mingan, prendre du cap des corps morans, jusqu'a la baye Phelippaux, ou ance des Espagnols. 2°. La Seigneurie des isles Et ilets de Mingan, Sur le même front que la Terre ferme. 3°. La Seigneurie de L'isle d'anticosty. 4°. La réunion à la terre ferme de Mingan, d'une portion de la a very considerable injury to your new subjects, deprived of their usual occupation, and to the province of Quebec generally through the entire loss of the fisheries ; a loss which cannot be repaired as the fisheries in this district can only be carried for a certain time in the winter when fish are migrating, and consequently can only be worked by people residing in the region.

The mere rights of man, an actual and immemorial possession, an enjoyment for a century, the general capitulation of Canada confirmed by the treaty of peace, and that treaty itself seemed to assure to the subjects of the same monarch under two separate governments. They are troubled in their enjoyment under false pretexts and that deprivation is just as much for them as if they had been robbed.

Your Majesty is too just to tolerate oppression and too humane to be shown the situation of 50 of the said heirs reduced to beggary through the misfortunes of war; that the ancestors obtained these seignories as a reward for having shed their blood in the fight against the Indians in these parts and their submission and for their discoveries, all of which made for the building up of a country now passed into Your Majesty's possession as a result of the glory of his arms. Nay, Sire, your new subjects need not have recourse to such pitiable arguments with a Monarch actuated by a sense of justice : The mere recital oft heir rights is sufficient for Your Majesty.

As far as the heirs Bissot and Joliet are concerned these rights consist : 1st. The seigniory of Terre Ferme de Mingan, to start from cape Cormorant, as far as the bay Phelypeux or Spaniard's inlet. 2nd. The seigniory of the Isles of Isles de Mingan, on the same front as the Terre Ferme. 3rd. The seigniory of Isle d'Anticosty. 4th. The reunion to the Terre Ferme de Mingan, of a part dite seigneurie, Nommée le Poste du grand Mecatinat, qui en avoit été detachée pour 9. années, Seulement et dont la jouissance a ensuite été accordée en 1762. pour 7. années au Sr. John Gray négociant, par son Excellence Le Général Murray, qui Connut que cette partie du Commerce Etôt negligée, les Canadiens rüinés, Etant alors hors d' Etat de la faire Valoir : Ne demandant cependant cette reünion, qu'après l'expiration des 7. années de jouissance accordées au dit Sr. John Gray, qui pave une rente aux dits heritiers. Les Droits du Sr. Jean Taché, Sont, La jouissance pendant Sa vie du Poste de St. Modet.

Les heritiers Bissot Et Joliet Et le Sr. Jean Taché convaincus que Votre Majesté, moins glorieuse par ses Conquêtes, que par Le bien Et la tranquillité dont Elle entend faire jouür ses nouveaux sujets, s'adressent donc avec La Confiance la plus Entiere Et la plus respectueuse aux pieds du Thrône, Et Suplient Vôtre Majesté, de Vouloir bien donner ses ordres au Gouvernement de Terre Neuve, pour Empêcher qu'ils soient troublés à L'avenir dans Leurs Possessions Et qu'ils puissent jouür au contraire de Leurs dites Seigneuries Et postes Paisiblement Et En toute propriété, Soit par Eux mêmes ou Leurs fermiers. Comme ils en ont jouü depuis vn siècle, Et que L'ordre de vôtre Majesté soit intimé au Gouverneur de la dite Province de Terre Neuve, affin qu'il n'en puisse prétendre Cause d'Ignorance. C'est La justice que Vous demandent, Sire, Les dits heritiers Bissot Et Joliet Et le Sr. Jean Taché ; Leurs Coeurs penetrés de La plus respectueuse reconnoissance ne cesseront de Continüer les Voeux sincerès qu'ils font pour la Gloire Et L'heureux Régne de Vôtre Majesté. ainsi que Le suppliant, qui en travaillant pour d'infortunes Compatriotes, N'a d'autre intèret que de faire Eclater la justice de Vôtre Majesté.

of the said seigniory, called the post of Grand Mecatinat, which had been separated therefrom for nine years only and the enjoyment of which was subsequently granted in 1762, for seven years, to Sieur John Gray merchant by His Excellency General Murray, who was aware that this part of the trade was neglected, the Canadians ruined, they being then unable to develop the same ; such reunion being asked only after the expiration of the seven years of enjoyment granted to said Sieur John Gray who pays rent to the said heirs. The rights of the Sieur Jean Taché consists in the enjoyment for life of the post of St. Modet.

The heirs Bissot and Joliet and the Sieur Jean Taché, convinced that Your Majesty takes more glory from the welfare and tranquillity he intends to be enjoyed by his new subjects than from his conquests, most confidently and respectfully beg of Your Majesty, at the foot of the throne, to be pleased to give to the Newfoundland Government instructions that they be no longer disturbed in their possessions and that they may, on the contrary, enjoy peaceably and as their exclusive property their said seigniories and posts either themselves or through their lessees as they have enjoyed the same for a century, and that the Governor of the said Province of Newfoundland be notified of Your Majesty's order so that he may not plead ignorance thereof. Such is the justice requested of you Sire, by the heirs Bissot and Joliet and the Sieur Jean Taché, who, their hearts filled with the most respectful gratitude, shall not cease to pray for the glory and welfare of your Majesty's realm, and so shall the petitioner who, in lending assistance to unfortunate fellow countrymen, has no other end in view than to proclaim Your Majesty's justice.

APPLICATION, 2 JUNE, 1775, OF WM. BURGESS FOR GRANT OF ST. MODET AND ANSE-A-LOUP.

 ARCHIVES OF CANADA, SERIES Q 11, FOLIO 141.

Whitehall, June 2, 1775.

[DARTMOUTH TO CARLETON, Enclosing an application from Wm. Burgess, a merchant of London. applying for a grant of land beginning at Island point to the northward of Pettit Modest crossing the river Des francais southward to a point of land called Ance au Loup including the islands of Grand and Pettit St Modeste. The Canada merchants assure Burgess that no grant has been made of this territory.

In his letter of transmittal, Dartmouth says that he would recommend Burgess for such countenance and protection as shall correspond with the rules Carleton may think fit to adopt for the better ordering and governing the fisheries and possessions on that Coast.]

To the right honorable the Earl of Dartmouth one of his Majesty's principal Secretaries of State—

The Memorial of William Burgess Merchant of London.

HUMBLY SHEWETH—

That your Memorialist having been for some years concern'd in the fishery on the Coast of Labrador, under the control of the Governor of Newfoundland is in a great measure prevented carrying his undertakings to any Extent unless favor'd by Government with a Grant of Land ; because on that part of Labrador for which he now petitions—to obtain seals & other animals that breed in those seas—it is necessary to keep a settlement the year round to be ready for the opening of the Ice in the Spring inhabited by a number of Settlers & to build such places for shelter as may secure them from the Inclemency of the weather & the Encroachments & depredations of the Indians [Eskimo] who wander about that Country & who have at times cut off many people, which might have been averted by this plan of Settlement.

Your Memorialist begs leave to represent, that to accomplish his design, he must be at a considerable expence to raise those Buildings, victual & cloath the people & the only chance he can see of reimbursing this Expense is by a Grant confirming it to his, securing a certain possession—& that this design when put into execution will be of great advantage to the Commerce of this Nation, as the produce of it will be a supply of Oils for the Lamps of the metropolis & other cities of the Kingdom—Sealskins &c.—besides the shipping & Seamen necessary for carrying it on from hence.

The Situation your Memorialist petitions for is on the Coast of Labrador, beginning at Island point to the Northward of petit Modeste crossing the river Desfraneois Southward to a point of Land call'd Ance au Loup including the small Islands of grand & petit St. Modeste.

The coast is inhospitable & the Islands barren sands unfit for cultivation.

Your Memorialist humbly hopes that your Lordship will consider the reasonableness of his plea & grant him his petition.

London, May 1775.

B[urgess] has enquired of the Canada Merchants & at the plantation office, if any Grant had already been made, he is inform'd not & knows it to be so as his Vessels have those two Last Summers attempted the fishery on that spot—& if the old Canadian subjects had any claim—the merchants say no, as the old settlers have never made a progress—so far to the Eastward of Quebec-tho' he cannot succeed without a Grant for reasons stated, yet notwithstanding the whole concern w^d center in London in sanie manner as if it co^d be carried on without that Grant.

GRIEVANCES, LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL OF CANADA, 1849.

SESSIONAL PAPERS NO. 3. REFERRED TO IN THE EIGHTH VOLUME OF THE JOURNALS OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL OF THE PROVINCE OF CANADA, VOL. 8, APP. LLLL., 1849.

Antoine Talbot, of the Parish of Berthier, County of Bellechasse, and District of Quebec, mariner, having been duly sworn on the Holy Evangelists, deposeth and saith :—From the year 1838, to the the spring of the year 1846,

I possessed, as proprietor, an establishment¹ on the Coast of Labrador, where I carried on the cod, seal, and herring fishery : I had bought this establishment in the year 1838, from a certain James Dumaresq, for the sum of forty pounds sterling, which I duly paid him in money. During that period of time, I was always recognized by all the fishermen of the coast as sole proprietor of the said establishment, where I made generally above three hundred pounds currency net profit each year, so that although I had taken this establishment with very limited means, I improved it considerably and augmented my stock of fishing tackle, which were worth in the spring of the said year, 1846, about eighteen hundred pounds currency. With these means, I was then capable of carrying on the fishery on a tolerably large scale, and could expect to make larger profits than I had hitherto made. In the spring of the said year, 1846, I left Berthier with twenty-three men whom I had engaged to conduct my establishment. Before I had arrived, a certain William Henry Ellis had taken it by force, having broken in the doors of my buildings and driven away the person I had left in charge, to take care of my effects and fishing implements ; I called on the said Ellis to give me up my property and effects, but obtained nothing but menaces ; he even struck me, telling me to leave the place immediately unless I wished him to take my life ; the said Ellis had with him. about sixty men. I retired with my hired men on board my schooner, and as it was impossible for me to regain my property by force, with the small number of men I had, I was obliged to keep away.

In order not to lose the fishing season entirely, I employed my men in fishing on board my schooner, and returned to Quebec in the autumn, with the few fish I had taken, the produce of which was not sufficient to pay the wages of my men. I had then lost nearly the whole of my summer, as well as the store of fishing implements, and also my establishment, as I have above stated.

In the hope that the said Ellis would at least leave me my establishment, with the buildings I had thereon erected, I went down to Labrador in the following spring, with some fishermen I had engaged at Berthier ; I then took possession of my buildings which were unoccupied, and repaired the said establishment for the fishery ; but about three weeks afterwards, the said Ellis arrived with twenty-eight men, and again drove me away ; I was thus obliged to take refuge on board my schooner, where I employed to the best of my means the few men I had, in the same manner as the preceding summer, fishing on board my schooner.

On my insisting upon entering my buildings, I was nearly killed by Ellis's gang, one of whom tried to shoot me with a gun ; Ellis' people even cut the cables with which I had moored my schooner to the shore. I returned to Quebec in autumn after suffering considerable loss. Not being able to make up my mind to abandon a property on which I had expended all I possessed, and the enjoyment of which might ensure to me considerable profits, I again went down to Labrador last spring, with some men I had engaged, but I still found the said Ellis in possession of my property, and again had to lose nearly my whole time in fishing on board my schooner. On the 10th of August, Her Majesty's ship the "Alarm," commanded by the Hon. Granville Gower Loch, Companion of the Bath, having touched at the place I was at, I went on board of the vessel, and laid my complaint before its Commander, who condemned the said Ellis to restore to me immediately my said establishment, as well as the effects he had taken from me ; this took place on the 16th of time said month, but the said ship having left the coast, the said Ellis returned me nothing ; he retained my said establishment as well as all my effects, and I returned to Quebec this autumn, with the produce of a fishery insufficient to cover my expenses. The losses I experienced in the manner stated, nearly ruined me. I have also to state that I know no authorities whatsoever on the Labrador coast to whom I could have applied to render me justice ; that the nearest Court of Justice to my establishment, is at St. Johns, Newfoundland, which is about 150 leagues from my post.

I have, moreover, to state, that a great part of the Labrador coast is exposed to aggressions similar to those I have described, by the crews of above 1500 vessels, which arrive annually on this coast.

années au lieu et place, Et par cession du S.^r Basile de cette ville à qui la Concession en auroit été faite cy devant, Et qui n'etoit point en moyen de Le faire valoir, c'est ce qui me procure l'honneur d'Ecrire a Votre Grandeur pour luy rendre compte que j'ay travaillé avec Succes a humaniser, Et rendre traitables Les Sauvages Eskimaux qui ont toujours été les pirates de cette Côte.

Votre GRANDEUR aura pour agreable le recit que je vais luy en faire.

L'année derniere deux Chaloupes d'Eskimaux etant venu a bord du batiment de La baye des Chateaux, ces barbares ayant mis les armes bas, Et ayant fait signé aux françois d'en faire de meme, demanderent à traiter. on leur fit quelques presens. Leur traite faite, ils firent entendre qu'ils viendroient en plus grand nombre. Le Lendemain ils vinrent à bord au nombre de cinq Chaloupes ; ayant mis les armes bas de part et d'autre ; ils traiterent Environ huit quintaux de barbe de baleine pour des marchandises françoises. Il [sic.] leur fut fait aussy quelques presens dont ils parurent fort contents.

Cette année ayant été obligé de faire partir de cette rade au mois de Septembre un batiment pour aller chercher les huiles restées au poste de la baye des Chateaux Les Eskimaux au nombre de vingt-deux hommes sans y comprendre Les femmes, Et les Enfans attirés Sans doute par la reception qu'on Leur avoit fait l'année precedente Sont venus à bord du batiment pour y traiter. Ils [sic.] y ont mesme travaillé pendant plusieurs jours de suite avec nos matelots pour les aider à charger Les huiles. Et comme il n'y avoit point auposte de marchandises pour la traite, ils Sont restés avec les francois qui gardoient le poste disant qu'ils attendoient le batiment qui devoit arriver pour L'hyverneme nt afin de traiter avec luy. ce récit fait connoitre qu'il y a lieu d'Espérer d'apriver ces barbares qui se sont rendus redoutables le carried on the operation for several years in the stead and place and by assignment of the Sieur Bazile, of this city, to whom the concession had been granted and who could not develop the same, to which fact I owe the honour of writing to Your Grace to inform you that I successfully employed myself to civilize and make tractable the Eskimaux savages who have always been the pirates of this coast.

Your Grace will be pleased with the following account I submit herewith.

Last year, a party of Eskimaux, in two boats, came on board the vessel at Baye des Chateaux, and these barbarians having laid down their arms and motioned the Frenchmen to do likewise, wanted to trade. They were given a few presents. Their trading over, they gave us to understand that they would return in larger numbers. The following day they came on board from five boats, and arms being laid down on both sides, they traded some eight hundred-weights of whale fins for French goods. They were also given a few presents with which they seemed to be quite pleased.

This year, it being necessary to despatch a vessel from this roadstead in September to fetch the oil left at the post of Baye des Chateaux, the Eskimaux, numbering twenty-two men, besides the women and children, evidently drawn by the reception accorded to them the previous year, came on board of the vessel to trade. They even worked for several days with our sailors helping at the loading of the oil. And, as there were no trading goods at the post, they remained with the Frenchmen in charge of the post and said they were waiting for the vessel about to arrive for the winter to do their trading then. This account leads us to long de La Coste par leurs brigandages, Et de les rendre traitables. pour cet effet dans les Instructions du Capitaine, il luy estoit deffendu de tirer sur Eux, ny de leur faire aucun mal, afin de les attirer par ce moyen. En profitant de cette heureuse Conjoncture, Et en les attirant par presens au poste des Chateaux, Il [sic.] sera facile, Et l'on pourra avec plus de sureté penetrer jusques dans leurs villages ou jamais personne n'a osé aller, Et faire quelques decouvertes vtilés a La Colonie.

L'année dernière au poste du S.^r Marsal qui est au dessous de celui cy, il fut imprudemment tiré quelques coups de fusil pour les chasser d'une Isle ou ils estoient cabanés. ce printemps pour se venger jls [sic.] sont venus En armes au poste du S.^r Marsal qu'ils ont brulé et pillé, Et de trois françois qui gardoient le poste ils en ont massacré deux, Le troisieme s'est sauvé par la fuite. on craignoit qu'ils n'en fissent de meme au poste des Chateaux, qui est voisin, mais ils y ont restés avec nos françois sans leur faire aucun mal.

Il y a quelques années que j'eus l'honneur de demander La Concession de la baye des Eskimaux, dite autrement baye des hollandois, nommée par les Sauvages Quichechaquiou. Vous Eutes la bonté, Monseigneur, de faire attention à ma demande, et d'ecrire en consequence à M. Le gouverneur general et à M. L'Intendant de m'en donner la preference, si tot que j'en aurois fait la découverte. je n'ai pû la faire jusqu'à ce jour d'autant que j'ay des associés dans L'exploitation de la baye des Chateaux qui n'ont pas voulu me permettre de me servir à mon usage de ce qui appartient a la Société. ainsy comme il est necessaire pour cette découverte d'avoir un poste dans le voisinage pour y attirer les Eskimaux, pour S'y Equiper, Et s'y refugier au cas de besoin, c'est ce qui me fait demander le poste de la baye des Chateaux along the coast for their depredations, and make them tractable. To that end, in the instructions issued to the Captain it was forbidden to shoot at them, or to harm them in any way, so as to attract them. By taking advantage of this fortunate happening and in attracting to the post des Chateaux by means of presents, it will be easy and safer to go as far as their own villages where no one has dared to venture up to this day, and thus make discoveries useful to the Colony.

Last year at the Sieur Marsal's post, situated above this one, a few shots were imprudently fired at them in order to drive them away from an island where they had built huts. This spring, out of revenge, they came in arms to the Sieur Marsal's post which they burnt and sacked. And out of three men who garrisoned the post, they killed two, the third having escaped through flight. It was apprehended that the post des Chateaux, in the vicinity, would meet with the same fate at their hands, but they remained with our Frenchmen without molesting them.

Some years ago I had the honour of requesting the cocession of Baye des Eskimaux, otherwise known as the baye des Hollandais, and called Quichechaquiou by the Indians. You were kind enough, [onseigneur, to consider my request and, accordingly, to instruct, by letter, Monsieur the Governor General and Monsieur the Intendant that I was to be given the preference as soon as I had made the ex loration of the same. This, I have been unable to do as yet, inasmuch as I have partners in the working of Baye des Chateaux who refused to allow the use, for my personal benefit, of what belongs to the partnership. As the exploration referred to calls for a post in the neighbourhood whither the Eskimaux could be attracted, and to serve as an equipment station and a place of refuge in case of emergency, it is why I am asking for the post of Baye des Chateaux established by me and which the Sieur Bazile could not afford to develop. I have presented to Monsieur the Governor General and Monsieur the Intendant several petitions together with the annexed memoir requesting for the space of nine years the exclusive privilege of sedentary seal fishing with the trading and hunting right of the post of Baye des Chateaux, and I offered to make, at my own expense and costs, the exploration of Baye des Eskimaux as soon as I would have obtained the concession of the Baye des Chateaux which is the only post at hand which could facilitate this undertaking and compensate for the costs. I trust, Monseigneur, that you will favourably consider my request and grant to me, in preference to all others, the concession of Baye des Chateaux without prejudice to that of the Eskimaux, when I have explored it.

It being expedient that the King's name be made known to these barbarians by the means of a few presents that would be distributed to them in His Majesty's name, I would ask Your Grace to cause to be delivered to me every year, in the store at Quebec, trading goods and other effects for the Eskimaux, to the extent of such a sum as you may be pleased to determine, which effects I promise to take charge of, for distribution among the Eskimaux in the King's name, which would tend to attract those barbarians and prevent their depredations.

I am, Monseigneur, with the deepest respect, Your Grace's most humble and most obedient servant, Petition presented by the executor and the creditors of the late Sieur Marsal to Mrs.

the Governor and Intendant of New France.

The executors and the creditors of the Sieur Marsal beg to represent to you, that the said Sieur Marsal had obtained front His Majesty a patent of ratification of the concession which he had obtained by your authority, the 4th of September, 1753, of the post of Cape Charles, together with the exclusive privileges of hunting and trading.

This concession, Mgrs., of the 4th of May, 1754, is for nine years, that is to say, was to last till 1763.

No one from the colony is ignorant of the heavy expenditure made by the Sieur Marsal at this establishment, where he incurred seven thousand livres of debts which the petitioners claim this day from his estate, and that neither they nor their successors will be able to recover without, in fact, your kindness and justice.

The late Sieur Marsal having incurred heavy expenditures and done a considerable amount of travaux pour le metre en etat semblent en reclamer les fruits pour sa succession, ses creanciers dont il a employé les fonds à cette exploitation, qu'il a si souvent eû soin de repaître de cette attente, et a qui il ne reste que cette ressource pour être payés, semblent avoir les titres les plus justes pour obtenir cette grace.

Tous se réunissent, l'exécuteur testamentaire créancier luy même, les créanciers particuliers réclament de vôtre justice, la liberté d'exploiter ce poste et d'en jouir pendant le reste du temps qui reste à expirer de la concession ; dont l'ordonnance ou continuation de concession sera au nom du S. Tachet, par la vous leur procurerez la seule ressource pour être payés. Signé Tachet, Havy et Lefebvre, Malroux et B. Thouron.

Vû la présente requête, Nous en considération des avances que le feu Sr. Marsale a faites pour l'exploitation du poste en question et pour faciliter à ses créanciers les moyens de recouvrer les prêts qu'ils ont faits aud. deffunt pour cette exploitation, PERMETTONS sous le bon plaisir de Sa Majesté aux dits créanciers de faire exploiter led. Poste a leurs risques, perils et fortune sous le nom dud. Sr. Tachet et d'en jouir pendant l'espace de temps porté en la concession sus dattée.

All unite, the executor, himself a creditor, and the individual creditors claim from your justice, the liberty to operate this post and to hold the same for the remaining part of the unexpired term of the concession ; the ordinance or extension of concession to be made in the name of the Sieur Tachet ; thereby you will provide the only resource to be paid. Signed Tachet, Havy et Lefebvre, Malroux et B. Thouron.

Seeing the present petition, We, in consideration of the advances which the late Marsal has made towards the operation of the post in question and in order to facilitate to his creditors the means of recovering the advances which they have made to the said deceased for this operation, do grant, under the pleasure of His Majesty, to the said creditors PERMISSION to operate the said post at their risks, perils and fortune, under the name of the said Sieur Tachet, and to have and hold the same for the term referred to in the above dated concession.

INDIAN ISLAND.

AUTHORIZATION, 15 SEPTEMBER, 1786, BY LT.-GOV. HOPE, TO PERRAULT et al., TO ESTABLISH SEAL, COD AND SALMON FISHERIES AT INDIAN ISLAND CONCESSION.

ARCHIVES DE LA PROVINCE DE QUEBEC.

By the Honble. Henry Hope Esqr., Lieutenant Governor and Commander in Chief in and over the Province of Quebec
; Brigadier Genl. Commander in Chief of His Majesty's Forces in the said Province and the Frontiers thereof &c.
&c. &c.

Whereas It hath been represented unto me by Messrs.
Perrault, l'aine, Pierre Marcoux, John Antrobus, and Louis Dunier of Quebec Merchants, that a Concession or Grant of Indian's Island¹ On the Eastern Coast of Labrador and of a certain Portion of Land on the mainland opposite thereto, to be taken from a line drawn from the Western Extremity of the said Island until it touches the Shore, and from thence running along the said Shore to the North and North East Five leagues in front on two Leagues in Depth with the Rivers which Shall be found therein, would enable them to establish Sedentary Fisheries Seal, Cod and Salmon fisheries in that quarter in which they might hope to find their own Emolument, and that material advantage would also thereby accrue to the Trade of this Province. And Whereas it is not expedient at this time to make any Concessions or grants of Land Conceiving that certain local Regulations Should previously be made to render the Establishments in that quarter of more advantage and Utility. But in order that the above Merchants may in the mean time receive Such Sanction as is consistent with present circumstances and as may Induce them to proceed in this undertaking which may tend manifestly to promote the Commerce and Welfare of the Province.

I have thought fit to authorize and empower the said Messrs. Perrault l'ainé, Pierre Marcoux, John Antrobus and Louis Dunier to establish Seal, Cod and Salmon Fisheries in the whole or any part of the Island and Shore above described, and in the rivers which shall be found therein, and there to carry on the said fisheries without Lett or molestation.
Provided always that if the said Island or lands are or shall be found to be within the limits of the lands granted to the Society of Unitas Fratrum no Settlement shall be made thereon without the consent of the said Society and that no Right or Privilege is or shall be hereby given or conveyed Subversive of the rights and Privileges granted to the Merchants Adventurers of

And Provided also, that the said Messrs. Perrault, Marcoux, Antrobus and Dunier, shall not under colour of this authority exclude or prevent any others of His Majesty's Subjects from fishing or drying fish on the said Island and Shore unless from such parts only as are necessary for their carrying on the said Fisheries and Actually employed and used by them for these Purposes. And In Witness of this Privilege granted to Messrs. Perrault l'aine, Pierre Marcoux, John Antrobus and Louis Dunier I do hereby give to them this Licence for Enjoying the same during pleasure by which it is intended not only to secure to them the present enjoyments thereof. But of their claim upon Governments for a preference in obtaining a Concession or grant of the whole or parts of the Lands above described, under such restrictions and limitations as may hereafter be devised for the better regulation of the Fisheries and matters appertaining thereto in that Quarter.

Given under my hand and seal at arms at the Castle of Saint Lewis in the City of Quebec, this fifteenth day of September One thousand seven hundred and Eighty Six, in the Twenty-Sixth Year of His Majesty's Reign.

said Sieur Constantin has been intrusted with goods for the trade of which a statement has been drawn up signed by himself, the said goods to be traded by him or by such of the above named parties as he may be willing to appoint should he consider expedient in the most profitable manner possible.

The necessary provisions for the said sieur and the said three men have been delivered to him for their subsistence during the journey, of which a statement signed by him has been drawn up.

He shall see to it that no malversation be committed by the said men either through the improper use of the provisions or through the malicious squandering of the goods meant for the trade, a matter concerning which we feel confident that the said sieur will be very attentive as well as concerning his special application towards securing the best results possible from that undertaking.

It having been decided to station four or five men during the winter at that fort [Eskimo River] he shall leave at the post, the above named parties hired under such condition and shall recall those who are already there, leaving only one or two of the "winterers" in order to command in the fort whom he is to announce in such quality after having given to them the necessary instructions for the defence of the fort and the success of the hunt to be made by these men during the winter and the entire period of their stay and to take the necessary steps to prevent the skins from being embezzled or wasted, in consideration whereof the said winterers shall have one half of their winter hunt as to the sale of which I have reserved unto myself the preference as agreed upon by them.

As the master of the brigantine will be instructed to meet the said Sieur Constantin at the post where he may be or at a place to be recognised by a signal agreed upon sur les lieux pour ce signal en sorte qu'il n'en puisse mésarriver en aucune façon s'il trouvoit dans sa route quelques navires et sur les lieux quelques bâtimens anglois ou autres à la pêche il prendra toutes les précautions imaginables pour les reconnoître auquel cas il évitera non seulement les d. bâtimens mais encore en donnera advis au d. Ferret afin qu'il prene garde que le Brigantin ne soit pris lorsque le dit Brigantic sera prêt en sen retourner il fera mettre toutes les peaux et peletries quil aura traittés en paquet et embaler ceux qu'il sera nécessaire affin que rien ne se gaste

Il fera charger le tout dans le Brigantin après avoir fait un estat bien exact au bas duquel il fera donner un reçu au d. Ferret

Les marchandises detraite vivres et provisions nécessaires pour l'hivernement seront envoyés par le Brigantin et remises au d. Sr. Constantin

Lequel avant que de sen revenir fera un estat bien exact de toutes les marchande. munitions vivres et autres effets quil laissera au Fort dont il chargera les command^{ts} solidairement avec ceux qu'il commettra pour avoir inspection non seulement des dits effets mais encor de toutes les peaux et pelleteries qui proviendront des chasse et traite

Et au surplus fera tout ce qu'il jugera estre de plus avantageux dans cette entreprise et pour la seureté de son exécution et des effets qui luy sont confiés between them, the said Sieur Constantin shall, in connection with the said signal, take good care upon his arrival thither that no mishap of any kind whatever result therefrom ; should he, on his way come across any ships and on the premises find any English or other fishing vessels he shall take every possible precaution to reconnoitre the same in which case he must not only avoid them, but also warn the said Ferret accordingly so that he shall take care lest the brigantine be captured, when the said brigantine shall be ready to return, he shall cause to be bundled up all the skins and pelts he shall have traded and, as the case may be, bale up those likely to be deteriorated.

Il est ordonné par nous au Sr. Ferret d'obéir au Sieur Constantin en tout et de suivre ses ordres lorsqu'il l'aura joint. Fait à Québec ce vingt et un avril 1703

He shall cause the whole to put on board the brigantine after having made a list of the same at the foot of which he shall cause the said Ferret to give a receipt to that effect.

Such trading goods, food and provisions as are required for the wintering shall be shipped by the brigantine and delivered to the said Sieur Constantin.

Before leaving to return, he shall make an exact list of all the goods, ammunition, food and other effects loft by him at the Fort and which he shall intrust to the commandants jointly with those he shall appoint to look after, not only the said effects, but also all the skins and pelts obtained from the chase and trade.

Further he shall do whatever he may deem proper and in the best interests of that undertaking and conducive to the securing of its accomplishment and of the effects intrusted to him.

It is ordered by us that the Sieur Ferret obey the Sieur Constantin in everything and follow his instructions when with him. Done at Quebec this twenty-first of April, 1703.

EXPLORATION OF COAST FROM KEGASKA TO CHATEAU BAY,

WITH BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF RIVER KESSESAKIOU (HAMILTON).

ARCHIVES DE LA PROVINCE DE QUEBEC.

Kegaska est une rivière à cinquante lieues plus bas que Mingan. Son embouchure est fort étroite et sableuse, mais abondante en saumon et c'est tout ce que l'on peut faire que d'y entrer avec un bâtiment de vingt tonneaux encore il faut que la marée soit toute haute : mais une lieue au-dessous, il y a un havre où toutes sortes de bâtiments peuvent entrer et y estre en sureté ; il n'y a que le vent directement du large qui puisse empêcher d'en sortir et c'est le sud su est le lon de la coste est remply d'illets et on y trouve une grande quantité de gibiers, comme outarde, canard, monjacques et gouellants qui y pondent depuis le mois d'avril jusqu'à la fin d'août, en sorte que l'on y peut vivre, pourvu que l'on soit garnie de poudre et de plomb ; à 5 lieues au dessous est la baye des Mascouavau dans le fond de laquelle il y a deux rivières très abondantes en saumons la coste continue toujours remplie d'illet, d'îles de loups-marins, de gibiers plus bas environs une demie lieue est une autre baye qui ne cède en rien aux autres endroits pour l'abondance du gibiers, de saunions, et de loups-marins, en descendant l'on trouve plus bas la rivière appelée par les sauvages Ouxaminisiby qui veut dire rivière de la peinture

(Translation.)

The Kegaska is a river situated fifty leagues below Mingan. Its mouth is very narrow and sandy, but it contains salmon in abundance, and one can scarcely enter it with a twenty ton vessel, and at that, it must be at high tide. However, a league further down there is a harbour¹ in which vessels of all kinds can safely take refuge. Ships can only be prevented from leaving the harbour by a wind directly from the open sea, that is, the south-east by east wind. All along the coast there are numerous islets, on which can be found large quantities of game, such as wild geese, ducks, monjacques, and gulls whose laying-time extends from the month of April to the end of August, so that one, with a supply of powder and shot, can subsist in this place. Five leagues lower down is the bay of Mascouavau², into the head of which flow two rivers very rich in salmon. As one descends the coast, the islands and islets are still in larger number, and seals and game are still abundant. About half a league further down, there is another bay³ equally as rich as the other places in seals, salmon, and other game. Descending, one finds lower down the river called by the Indiana Ouxaminisiby⁴, meaning the river of paint and a really fairly nice paint is found in this river et effectivement il s'y en trouve d'assez belle dont les Sauvages se servent à leurs usages. Cette rivière n'est pas remplie à beaucoup près de saumons comme les autres, mais aussi elle ne diffère en rien non plus que le reste de la coste en Isles et Illest, gibiers de toutes sortes et loups marins.

Les Sauvages ont coutume de montrer dans les terres par une rivière qui se trouve à 7 lieues plus bas appelée la rivière au caribou je croy appelée ainsy à cause de l'abondance du caribou qu'ils trouvent. Il y a aussi beaucoup de castors et c'est une répétition inutile que celle de dire l'abondance des loups marins, d'isles et d'isles que l'on trouve.

Devant la rivière appelée Estaouemaniou les Isles sont fort larges em mer, l'abondance des loups marins y est plus grande que dans tous les endroits dont j'ai parlé si devant, il a des havres très beaux et pour toutes sortes de bâtimens et la rivière se trouve remplie de saumons dans la saison.

A dix lieues de là, c'est de la rivière Nautouagamicou qui est très grande mais impraticable pour des bastimens, l'on voit de la mer sa chute qui est très belle, les bastimens peuvent se mettre à l'abry des vents dans les Isles qui sont devant la dite rivière et c'est icy ou l'on voit des troupeaux de loups marins sur les pointes des Isles et sur les rochers tant l'abondance est grande.

Huit lieues plus bas est la baye du petit mescatina dans le fond de cette baye une des cranches de la rivière de Nantouagamiou et au large est une groce isle, mais il ne fait pas bon passer en terre à moins que ce ne soit avec un charois ou en canot, de là jusqu'au grand mescatina tous les Isles et Islest sont remplis de gibiers et loups marins.

L'on découvre ensuite une grande pointe fort haute et qui avance près which the Indians use for their own requirements. This river is far from being as abundant in salmon as the others, but on the other hand it in no wise differs from the remainder of the coast as far as islands and islets, game of all kind and seals are concerned.

The Indians are in the habit of travelling inland by a river which is seven leagues lower and called the Caribou river, on account, I presume, of the large number of caribou found there. There are also many beaver, and it is needless to repeat it, seals, islands and islets are very numerous at this place.

In front of the river called Estaouemaniou¹ the islands are further out in the sea, and the seals are in greater abundance there than at any of the other places referred to previously; there are excellent harbours, suitable for ships of all kinds, and the river is full of salmon in the season.

Ten leagues away from this place, the river of Nautouagamicou² flows. This river is wide but impracticable for ships. From the sea, one sees a fall which is very beautiful. Vessels can take shelter from the wind among the islands in front of said river. At this place, there is such an abundance of seals that herds of them may be seen on the points of the islands, as well as on the rocks.

Eight leagues lower down is the bay of Petit Mescatina, and at the end of the bay there is one of the arms of the river de Nantouagamiou³ and a large island at some distance from the shore. But it is not advisable to cross over by land unless with a cart or a canoe. From that spot to the Grand Mescatina all the islands and islets abound with game and seals.

Then, one discovers a large and very high point of land advancing nearly five leagues into de cinq lieues en mer et c'est ce qui se nomme le grand Mescatina ; il y a de très beaux mouillages à terre, mais comme il se trouve dans l'entrée de la dite pointe de groces isles que les mouillages et les havres y sont beaux et bons, à l'abry de la mer de quelque côté qu'elles viennent, j'estimerois beaucoup mieux se tenir dans les isles qu'à terre, quoy que les mouillages soient très beaux comme j'ai dit.

Dans la baye d'ahaha qui est à quatre lieues plus bas, ou j'ai fait tuer à coup de fusils 200 loups marins en deux jours de tems les batimens de quelque grandeur qu'ils soient peuvent entrer entre les isles qui bordent la dite baye et si mettre en sûreté dans de très beaux havres qui y sont, la terre abonde en caribou, et les Isles en gibiers, c'est dans cet endroit où les Esquimaux firent leurs hivernement. Il y a deux ans, ce qui se connait par leurs cabannes ou plus tost casmate qui y sont encore et ces là où je remarquée que ce que l'on dit d'eux qu'ils ne faisoient point de feu pendant l'hiver, n'est que trop vray et les os des loups marins, de caribou, et de balleines qui sont encore dans les cabannes à tas, comme des charniers y causent une puanteur infecte de manière que l'on y peut enter sans avoir mal au coeur et enfin l'on peut dire à ce quil' paroist qu'ils rongent les os comme feroient des chèvres.

Les Sauvages montant dans les terres et en descendant par la rivière St Augustin qui est à une lieue plus bas ; il y a quatre petites rivières en chemin nommée Cuescatacaou, la rivière au Saumon, celle Cuyatefalou et celle de Missina ; la terre est bordée au large par des Isles qui sont fort saines où il n'Y a aucune crainte pour les batimens pour peu que l'on aye l'aperceance de la terre, l'on peut faire sur ces iles quantité de peaux d'huilles.

the sea, and this is what is called the Grand Mescatina. There are very good anchoring-places by the shore, but, inasmuch as at the entrance to the said point of land, large islands afford good and pretty anchorages and safe harbours, sheltered from the open sea on all sides, it would be better, in my estimation, to remain among the islands than close to land, although, as I have stated, the anchoring places are quite good.

Four leagues lower down, in the bay of Ahaha¹, where I had killed 200 seals with muskets in two days, vessels of any size can enter between the isles bordering the said bay and remain in security in very good harbours there. The land abounds with caribou and game is found in abundance in the islands. This is the place where the Esquimaux had their winter quarters two years ago, as indicated by their cabins, or casements rather, which are still there, and I remarked they really, as has been said of them, have no fire in winter time. Bones from seals, caribous and whales, still lying in heaps in their cabins, as if in a charnel house, exhale such a pestilential odour that one cannot enter into the cabins without being sick. In short it may be said, as it appears, that they gnaw bones after the manner of goats.

The Savages reach the interior and return by the river St. Augustin which is a league further down. On the way, there are four small rivers, one called Cuescatacaou, Salmon river, river Cuyatefalou and river Missina. Off the shore, the land is bordered by islands which are very safe and where ships have nothing to apprehend if only they do not lose sight of land. Quantities of skins and oils can be obtained from these islands.

L'établissement François est à 20 lieues de là, l'aspect est fort gay ; le havre y est très beau et toutes sortes de batimens peuvent y entrer.

Il y en pouvoit mesme ranger plus de cent navires ; cette baye est bordée d'islets tres abondants en toutes sortes de vivres et le gibier y est en si grande quantité sur les isles que l'on en nourirait facilement tous les françois et sauvages, dans le fond de la baye ; au dessus du fort sont trois costeaux très agréables à la vue ; au haut desquels sont de petits lacs ou la truite et le saumon sont en telle abondance qu'avec deux trois simples lignes à main ou une petite rais rets l'on y pecheroit suffisamment de quoy faire vivre une garnison mesme considérable et une demie lieue plus bas est la rivière des Esquimaux très abondante en saumon.

Yls y sont d'une grosseur extraordinaire.

Huit lieues ensuite est la baye des Espagnols dans laquelle la pêche de morue est très abondante ; j'en ay fait L'expérience par moy-même y ayant sondé en plusieurs endroits et fait pêcher trois hommes qui en ont pris treize cents dans un jour ; elle se pêche à quatre trois et deux brasses et demie d'eau ; enfin la ligne n'a pas le temps d'aller jusqu'au fond, tant la morue y est abondante. C'est dans cette baye qu'il se trouve un endroit ou j'espère tendre aux loups marins, brasseurs est ou j'ay commencé un second établisse-ment pour y faire une pêche considérable.

Les Espagnols au dire des Sauvages l'y ont fait autrefois et probablement y seroient encore, sy se n'était le mauvais traitement qu'ils y ont reçu des Esquimaux. L'on y voit encore les vestiges de leurs établissemens, fourneaux à fondre l'huile de loups marins maisons, couvertures et huile et autre chose semblable.

(Translation.)

The French establishment is twenty leagues away ; its appearance is very gay ; the harbour at this place is very beautiful and all kinds of vessels can enter it.

Over a hundred ships could be accommodated there. This bay is bordered with islands where food of all kinds can be found in abundance and the islands are so rich in game that one could easily feed with it all the Frenchmen and savages. Above the fort, at the head of the bay, are three pretty hills,¹ on the summits of which are small lakes in which trout and salmon abound to such a degree that, with two or three hand lines or a common net, one might catch enough to feed a considerable garrison, and half a league lower down is the Esquimaux river, rich in salmon of extraordinary size.

Eight leagues further is the bay des Espagnols² in which the fishery of cod is very abundant ; I found out such to be the case by personal experience, having sounded in several places, and three men, whom I had fishing there, caught thirteen hundred of them in a single day. The fishing is carried on at depths of four, three, and two and a half fathoms. In a word, the cod are so numerous that the line has not even time to reach the bottom. In this very bay is a place where I intend hunting brasseur seals and where I have started a second establishment to carry on a considerable fishery.

According to the Indians, the Spaniards formerly had fisheries at this place and they would probably still be there but for the ill usage they suffered at the hands of the Esquimaux. One may still see traces of their establishment, stoves for melting oil from seals, houses, roofs and oil, and other similar things.

A une lieue plus bas est la grande pointe. Les Sauvages Thamahichiban qui veut dire furie de Monjacque et se nets (ce n'est) point sans raison puisque le printemps, ils en font la tuerie un mois durant à coup de bâton et en si grande quantité que c'est une chose incroyable, l'on pourrait aussy appeler cette pointe là passée des loups marins brasseurs, puisqu'ils ne cessent point d'y passer à centaine et plus de quatre mois durans. Il y a un petit havre où l'on se poste pour les tarrer et ce printemps dernier en moins de quinze jours, j'en ay fait tuer à coups de fusils à la passée de quoy remplir plus de trente barriques d'huile et si nous avions eu des rais pour barrer un petit chenal par où ils passent nous en aurions fait la charge d'un gros bâtiment cet endroit au rapport des sauvages ne manque jamais et nous en avons l'expérience depuis l'establissement de fort. Il y a au large une Isle où il se trouve une si grande abondance de peroquets qu'avec des bâtons fairrés l'on en pourroit tuer pour nourrir plusieurs personnes ; cette pointe est très agréable dans la vue. Il y a une très belle prairie et une petite rivière où l'on prend de très beaux saumons. Le caribou est en cet endroit en si grande quantité qu'il est impossible de l'exprimer puisqu'il y est en plus grande abondance que ne sont les boeufs dans les prairies des Illinois. Il a aussi dans cet endroit quantité de loups serviers, renards, martres et ours, à une lieue de la pointe il y a une petite rivière appelée la Rivière au Sable, cet endroit est encore très propre pour barrer les loups marins brasseurs, ou toutes les mêmes bandes qui passent à la suite y viennent passer, la dépense qu'il conviendrait faire seroit très médiocre n'y ayant pas plus de deux brasses et demie d'eau et une espace de deux arpents au plus à barrer, de manière que ces trois endroits occupés

(Translation.)

One league lower down is the great point (called) by the Indians Thamahichiban, which means carnage of Monjacques, and this appellation is quite appropriate, inasmuch as, for a whole month, at springtime, they slaughter them with iron-tipped clubs, in such quantities that it is an incredible thing. This point might also be called Passée des Loups-marins Brasseurs, as they pass this place by the hundred and for more than four months. There is a small harbour that is used as a station from which to fire on them and this last spring, in less than fifteen days, I have had killed with muskets, as they passed along, enough to fill more than thirty barrels of oil ; and had we had a net with which to obstruct a little channel, through which they pass, we would have made enough to load a large ship. This place, according to the Indians, never fails and we have had the [same] experience since the establishment of the fort.

Off the shore is an island¹ where peroquets are in such abundance that, with iron-tipped clubs, one could kill enough to feed many persons ; this point is very agreeable to the eye. At this place, caribou are found in such large quantities that it is beyond description, they being more numerous than cattle in the prairies of Illinois. There are also large numbers of lynxes, foxes, martens and bears. A league away from the point is a small river called the river au Sable,² which place is also very suitable for a barrier to stop the brasseur seals, the same herds passing there one after another. The outlay required would be very small, as the depth is not over two and one-half fathoms and the space to be barred would only be of two arpents at the most, so that once these three places were peuvent sans peine en deux mois de temps charger leurs bastimens d'huile, de peaux quand mesme ils seroient de trente tonneaux chaque.

J'ai présumé que l'on pouvoit aussi très facilement y faire la pêche de la ballaine puisqu'elle y est en abondance qu'elle vient même de si proche de terre que l'on la pouroit darder de dessus les pointes des rochers. J'ay conjecturé par les ossements et par les têtes qui sont à la coste que la pêche y avoit esté faite autrefois, mais probablement tous ceux qui y venoient ont esté contraint d'abandonner soit par la crainte qu'ils avoient des esquimaix, soit par les insultes qu'ils en souffroient.

Trois lieues plus bas dans la baye des forteaux je trouvé une très grande abondance de morue les mouillage est bon jusque dans le fond de la baye quoi-qu'elle ne soit à couvert d'aucune Isle qui abrie la mer, les vaisseaux y venoient autrefois et en 1702 un malouin assura que de tous tems ils y venoient faire la pesche et qu'ils n'avoient point trouvé d'endroit dans tous terres neuve où le poisson fut plus abondant, mais que les Esquimaux les obligeoient d'abandonner parce que quand ils revenaient ils trouvoient leurs chaloupes et échafauts brisés ou brulés et que même ils étoient toujours en risque de perdre la vie s'ils se laissoient surprendre.

L'embouchure de la rivière des Français distante de six lieues est de sable ou une barque peut entrer à marée basse, elle est abondante en saumon, truite, caribou, ours, renards, loups cerviers et pêche de morue au large.

Le havre St Benoist pouroit contenir une flotte tant grande fut elle. Il est à dix lieues plus bas, il abondance de loups marins et particulièrement des brasseux, c'est aussy dans ce havre ou l'on fait autrefois la pêche de occupied, their vessels, even if they be thirty ton ships, could be loaded without trouble, and in two month's time, with oil and skins.

I believe that one could also very easily carry on at this place a fishery for whales, of which there is such an abundance that they come so close to land that they could be harpooned from the summits of the rocks. I have surmised from the bones and skulls covering the coast that this fishery was formerly carried on there, but probably those who used to visit there have been forced to abandon it either because of their fear of the Esquimaux or of the outrages they suffered.

Three leagues further down in the bay des Forteaux,¹ I found a great abundance of codfish. The anchoring grounds are good as far as the head of the bay, although it has no island to insure protection from the sea. The place was formerly visited by vessels, and in 1702, a fisherman from St. Malo aserted that they had fished there for ages and that they had found no place in all Newfoundland where fish were more abundant, but the Esquimaux had compelled them to abandon it because, upon their return, they would find their boats and stages broken up or burnt, and they were in constant danger of losing their lives if they allowed themselves to be taken by surprise.

The mouth of the river des Français,² six leagues away, is sandy and a barque may enter it low tide. It abounds with salmon, trout, caribou, bears, lynxes, and with codfish, off the shore.

The harbour of St. Benoit³ could accommodate a fleet of any size. It is ten leagues lower down and it contains an abundance of seals, especially brasseurs. It is also in this harbour that fisheries balaine et que les Esquimaux au rapport des sauvages ont fait abandonner Européens. On y avoit encore les fourneaux à fondre les huilles et les ossements de ballaine, Ils sont à la coste comme des bois renversés les uns sur les autres et nous estimions qu'il falloit qu'ily en eut été plus de deux cents ou trois mils vue la quantité d'ossements qu'il ya avait et que nous contâmes quatre vingt dix têtes dans un seul endroit d'une grosseur prodigieuse.

A vingt lieues de là se trouvè la rivière Kesesakiou, le saumon et le loup marin sont en abondance ; dans les terres il se trouve quantité de caribous, renards, loups cerviers, martres et castors, c'est dans cet endroit où les Esquimaux font leur résidence à cause de la commodité de la vie qui s'y trouve jusqu'au Kesesakiou et mesme par de là tous ces espaces est bordée d'isles habitée par les Esquimaux, toutes ces îles sont remplies de loups marins, de vaches marines et de toutes sortes de gibiers ; les Esquimaux commencent à s'affranchir et à commercer avec les français qui sont établis et qui ont traité leurs denrées. J'ai aussi attiré une nation sauvage dans les terres qui n'avoient jamais eu encore connoissance des François. Ce sont des esprits fort aisés et très soumis ; un missionnaire n'aura pas de peine à y établir parmi eux le christianisme.

for whales were once carried on by the Europeans who, as reported by the Indians, were compelled by the Esquimaux to withdraw. One may still see there the oil and bones from whales. Judging from the quantity of bones piled up on the coast like sticks of woods, one on the other, there must have been, in our estimation, the remains of more than two or three thousand ; in one place alone, we counted ninety skulls of a prodigious size.

Twenty leagues away is the river Kesesakiou,¹ in which salmon and seals are in great abundance. Inland, caribou, foxes, lynxes, martens and beaver can be found in large numbers. It is at this place the Esquimaux take up their abode because of the easy means of subsistence to be found there. As far as the Kesesakiou and even beyond these spaces are groups of islands inhabited by the Esquimaux. All these islands are filled with seals, walrus and game of all kinds. The Esquimaux are becoming more sociable and are beginning to trade with the French who are settled there and who trade in their commodities. I have also attracted in the interior a tribe of Indiana who had not as yet come into contact with the French. They are very intelligent and a missionary would have no trouble to implant Christianity among them.

Nous joignons ici, Mongr, un mémoire que le Sr de Courtemanche a présenté au Sr Raudot au sujet de l'établissement qu'il a fait dans la côte de Labrador, pays des Esquimaux ; il demande des secours à Sa Majesté, et nous pouvons vous assurer, Mongr, qu'il en mérite et que cet établissement est très bon tant par la grosse quantité d'huiles qu'on y peut faire tant de loup-marin que de vaches marines dont les dents ressemblent parfaitement au bel ivoire que par les pelleteries que l'on y traite et la pêche de la morue qui y est très bonne. Le Sr de Vaudreuil a l'honneur de vous marquer sur ce sujet qu'il est hors d'état de lui donner des soldats ; les sieurs de Vaudreuil et Raudot lui permettront d'emmener des habitants.

Annexed hereto please find, Monseigneur, a memoir presented to the sieur Raudot by the sieur de Courtemanche concerning the establishment which he has formed on the coast of Labrador, country of the Esquimaux ; he is asking his Majesty for some assistance, and we may assure you, Monseigneur, that he is deserving of same and that this establishment is very important, both on account of the large quantities of oils that may be produced there from seals as well as from the walrus the teeth of which are like fine ivory and on account of the furs that are traded in at this place and the cod fishery which is very abundant. In this connection the sieur de Vaudreuil begs to inform you that he is no position to let him have any soldiers ; he has been authorized by the sieurs de Vaudreuil and Baudot to take some inhabitants with him.

ANONYMOUS MEMOIR, 1715, CONCERNING LABRADOR.

ARCHIVES DE LA PROVINCE DE QUEBEC.

Le Labrador contient tout ce vaste pays qui est à l'Est du Canada et au Nord du fleuve et du Golfe St. Laurent, ce grand pays est une presqu'île entourée du fleuve et du Golfe St. Laurent au Sud, de la grande mer à l'Est, du détroit d'Hudson, au Nord et de la Baie d'Hudson, à l'Ouest, il ne touche au Canada que du côté de l'Ouest, depuis les Iles de Mingan, où il commence jusqu'à Baie d'Hudson.

Le Labrador appartenait tout entier à la France, avant la paix d'Utrecht à l'exception de quelques petits forts, que les Anglais avaient bâtis dans le fond de la Baie d'Hudson. Le Roi leur a cédé par cette paix, une partie du Labrador, c'est-à-dire le Détroit de la Baie d'Hudson avec toutes les côtes et toutes les rivières qui se rendent dans le dit détroit et dans la dite baie, ce qui fait une étendue de pays considérable, mais presqu'inhabitable et de difficile abord. La plus grande et la meilleure partie du La Brador reste au Roi, c'est-à-dire depuis Mingan où finit le Canada et où commence le Labrador jusqu'à Belle-Isle ; et depuis Belle-Isle jusqu'à l'entrée du détroit d'Hudson, avec toutes les rivières et tout le dedans des terres, ce qui fait plus de 400 lieues de côtes.

La Suède est un pays bien plus septentrional que le Labrador. Elle est aussi bien que le Labrador un pays fort froid rempli de montagnes et de

(Translation.)

Labrador is all that vast country to the east of Canada and north of the river and the gulf of St. Lawrence. It is a peninsula bounded by the river and gulf of St. Lawrence on the south, the ocean on the east, Hudson strait on the north, and Hudson bay on the west. It joins Canada on its western border, from the Mingan islands, where it commences, to Hudson bay.

Labrador belonged entirely to France before the Treaty of Utrecht, with the exception of a few small forts which the English had built at the bottom of Hudson bay. The King ceded to them, by that treaty of peace, a part of Labrador—that is to say, Hudson bay [and] strait with all the coasts and rivers which fall into the said strait and the said bay of Hudson. This constitutes a large extent of country, but almost uninhabitable and difficult to reach. The greater and better part of Labrador remains to the King, that is to say, from Mingan, where Canada ends and Labrador commences, to Belleisle, and from Belleisle to the entrance of Hudson strait, with all the rivers and inland country. This coast is over 400 leagues in extent.

Sweden is a far more northern country than Labrador. As well as Labrador, it is a cold lacs. Cependant la Suède est très peuplée, elle a quantité de belles villes et est un très puissant royaume qui dès les temps les plus reculés a été formidable à l'Espagne, à l'Italie, à l'Allemagne, et même à la France et à toute l'Europe.

Preuve que le Labrador, par le moyen des colonies et de la culture, peut un jour devenir un puissant royaume qui fera un des plus beaux fleurons de la Couronne de l'Empereur des Français. Car outre que par la culture de la terre, le Labrador produira tout ce que produit la Suède, blé, grains, légumes, fruits, etc. etc. C'est qu'il y a apparence que l'on y trouvera des mines de cuivre comme en Suède et en Norvège. On y trouvera même peut-être du bois comme dans ces deux royaumes.

Ce qui est certain, c'est que les pelleteries sont bien plus abondantes dans le Labrador qu'en Suède et en Norvège, et même que dans le Canada. Mais ce qui mérite plus d'attention, c'est que la pêche, qui peut se faire sur environ 400 lieues de côte, de saumon, de morue, de lous marins, de vaches marines et de baleines, peut produire plus de richesses que la plus riche mine d'or du Pérou et avec moins de peine et de frais.

Il est donc très important et même nécessaire pour le bien de l'Etat, de faire incessamment au moins 3 ou 4 établissements sur la côte du Labrador. La pêche très abondante de Saumon, de morue, de marsouins, de lous marins, de vaches marines et de baleines ; remarquez que des peaux de vaches marines qui ont dix-huit pieds de long et neuf de large, on peut faire des impériales, des carosses, des harnais et des bottes, et même des buffles. Avec les peaux de lous marins on peut faire des culottes, des bas et des vestes. En la passant au maroquin, on peut en faire des bottines, des souliers, couvrir des livres, des chaises, faire des tapis, etc. etc., les dents de vaches marines qui sont plus belles que l'ivoire dont on fait de beaux ouvrages, les peaux de country, full of mountains and lakes. Still, Sweden has a very large population, several beautiful cities and is a very powerful kingdom and, from ancient times, has been a formidable opponent to Spain, Italy, Germany ; as well as to France and the whole of Europe.

A proof that Labrador, by means of settlements and agricultural development, may become in time a powerful kingdom, that would be one the brightest gems in the crown of the Emperor of the French. For besides what may be derived from the tilling of the soil, Labrador will produce everything produced by Sweden, namely, wheat, grain, vegetables, fruits, &c., &c. In fact, there are indications of the existence, in this country, of copper mines as in Sweden and in Norway. There may also be found timber similar to that in those two kingdoms.

It is certain that furs are more abundant in Labrador than in Sweden, Norway or even Canada. But that which merits more attention is that the fishery which can be carried on of salmon, codfish, seals, walrus and whales, on about 400 leagues of coast, is capable of yielding greater riches than the richest gold-mine in Peru, and with less trouble and expense.

It is very important and even necessary for the good of the State to form at once three or four establishments on the coast of Labrador. The abundant fishery of salmon, codfish, porpoises, seals, walrus and whales—note that the porpoise skins, measuring eighteen feet in length by nine feet in width, may be turned into coach tops, coaches, harness, boots or buff-jackets. From the skins of seals, breeches, socks and waistcoats can loup marin que l'on passe en maroquins, les huiles de loup marin, de vache marine et de baleine ; une infinité de caribous.

On dit que la peau de caribou prend mieux la couleur d'écarlae qu'aucune autre espèce de peau d'autres bêtes qu'il y a dans le vaste pays de Labrador qui fourniront un nombre infini de pelleteries les plus belles, les plus fines et les plus précieuses qu'il y ait au monde ; tout celà avec les mines de cuivre et d'acier que l'on trouvera inmanquablement dans le Labrador est capable de rendre considérable en peu de temps les établissements que l'on y fera et même produire tant de richesses et de grands avantages à l'Etat qu'il doit regarder le Labrador comme son Pérou.

En effet il fournira à la France de poissons, d'huiles de côtes et de barbes de baleines, de peaux de loups marins et de caribou, de pelleteries et d'ivoire et d'édredon. Pour ce qui est de l'édredon c'est une marchandise précieuse. Il y en a en Suède et en Norvège, mais il est défendu d'en transporter hors du pays. Il n'en sort que fort peu et en fraude, et de tout celà en telle abondance que l'on pourra en faire un grand commerce avec les étrangers et même de plume pour les lits à l'exemple de la Moscovie.

L'abondance de toutes ces choses augmentera en proportion que la pays se peuplera et que les établissements deviendront considérables. Pour en venir là, il faut commencer par trois ou quatre établissements le premier à la baie Phelippeaux, ce poste est très avantageux, le port et la rade sont bons ; la pêche de morue et de loup marin y est très facile et très abondante. On y pêche aussi les baleines. Il y a un prodigieux nombre d'oiseaux appelés Moyace et qui fournissent quantité de plume et d'édredon et dont les oeufs sont bons à manger.

Le Roi a donné ce poste à Mr. de Courtemanche, gentilhomme canadien pendant sa vie. Il y est établi et assez bien bati et meublé. Il y fait fair are finer than ivory and are used in the fine arts, the skins of seals which are dressed like morocco ; seal, walrus and whale oils ; an inexhaustive supply of caribou. It is said that the skin of the caribou takes the colour scarlet better than any other kind of skins from animals in this vast country of Labrador, and will furnish an infinite number of skins and furs, the handsomest, the finest and most precious in the world. All this, with mines of copper and iron, than can certainly be found in Labrador, is capable of making, in a short time, the proposed establishments both rich and flourishing and of such great advantage that Labrador should be regarded as its Peru.

In effect, it will furnish France with fish, oil, whalebone, skins of seals and caribou, furs, ivory and eiderdown. As to eiderdown, it is a very valuable merchandise. It is found in Sweden and Norway, but the exportation of same out of the country is prohibited, and very little finds its way out and surreptitiously at that. And all of this in such abundance that a large trade can be established with foreign countries. Add to these, feathers for beds, such as are used in Muscovy.

The abundance of all these things will be increased in proportion as the country becomes peopled and establishments become numerous. To achieve this, it is necessary to begin with three or four establishments : the first one at the bay of Phelippeaux, which post is very advantageous with a good harbour and roadstead ; the fishery for cod and seal is very easy and very abundant. Whales are also caught. There are a prodigious number of birds called MOYACE, which furnish quantities of feathers and of eiderdown, and the eggs of which are good to eat.

The King has given this post to M. de Courtemanche, a Canadian gentleman, during his life-la pêche principalement de loup marin qui fournit quantité d'huile et de peaux que l'on passe en maroquin lequel est fort beau, et d'un bon usage.

Il y a grand jardin où il vient de toutes sortes de legumes, pois, fèves, etc. etc., de toutes sortes de racines et d'herbages et de salades. Il y a des chevaux, des vaches, des moutons, des cochons. Il y a fait semer de l'orge et de l'avoine qui y viennent bien. Peut-être que le blé et le seigle y viendront comme en Suède et en Norvège si on se donne la peine convenable pour cela.

Aux environs de la baie, le pays est découvert. C'est une plaine de quatre lieues où il y a peu de bois. Mr de Courtemanche en envoie querir à trois ou quatre lieues avec ses chevaux et une charette. On peut en aller quérir avec des chaloupes dans la rivière des Esquimaux qui en est peu éloignée et qui en a quantité. M. de Courtemanche a engagé trente familles de sauvages montagnais à venir s'établir proche de sa maison. Il en tire de grands services et pour ses pêches en été et pour ses chasses en hiver. Il les a rendus fort sociables. Proche de la maison de Mr de Courtemanche il y a une petite rivière dans laquelle on pêche quantité de saumons et de truites.

En temps de guerre la baie Phélippeaux n'est pas sure parce qu'elle est fort ouverte ; mais à trois lieues il y a une baie et un port nommé St Amour. La pêche n'y est pas si abondante qu'à Phelippeaux mais étant fort à couvert et facile à defendre on y serait en sureté contre les entreprises des ennemis.

Le second établissement doit être fait au Petit Nord, dans le détroit de Belle-Isle à la baie de Ste Barbe où à la baie château. Cet établissement aura outre les avantages de celui de la baie Phélippeaux, l'avantage d'être au détroit par lequel le poisson et les baleines de la grande mer entrent dans le Golfe St Laurent et par où ils en sortent pour retourner à la grande mer.

time. He carries on the seal fishery as a principal industry, and quantities of oils and skins are obtained. The seal skins are dressed like morocco and give a very nice and lasting leather.

He has a large garden and grows with success all kinds of vegetables—peas, beans, &c., &c., as well as all kinds of roots, herbs and salads. He keeps horses, cows, sheep and pigs. He has sown barley and oats which grow well, and, with proper care, perhaps wheat and rye would also grow well, just as in Sweden and Norway.

The neighbourhood of the bay has been explored. It is a plain of about four leagues in extent, but with little wood, so that M. de Courtemanche has to send for firewood to a distance of three or four leagues with his horses and carts. It can also be reached by boat from the river of the Esquimaux, which is at a little distance. M. de Courtemanche has engaged thirty families of Montagnais to settle near his house. They are of a great use to him, for the fisheries in summer and for the chase in winter. He has made them very friendly. Near the house of M. de Courtemanche is a little river in which many salmon and trout are caught.

In time of war, Phelippeaux bay is not safe because it is very open, but, three leagues away, there is a bay and a port called St. Amour, where the fishery is not so abundant as in Phelippeaux bay, but, being easy of defence, one would be in safety there from the attacks of enemies,

The second establishment should be at Petit Nord, in the strait of Belleisle. either at St. Barbe bay or at Chateau bay. This establishment would have, besides the advantages of Phelippeaux bay, that of being in the strait by which the fish and whales from the ocean enter into

Le Poste peut en retirer des grands avantages des Esquimaux qui y viennent tous les étés en grand nombre.

Kessellaki est une belle et grande rivière entre les 52ème et 53ème degrés de latitude. La pêche de toutes sortes de poissons, molusques, vaches marines, et baleines y est facile et abondante. Il y a quantité de beaux bois pour faire des échafauds et des huiles de poisson bâtir des maisons et des navires.

Les grands bois et ces beaux arbres sont des marques que la terre y est bonne, que l'on pourra y élever toutes sortes de bestiaux et de volailles, y faire venir du blé et toutes sortes de grains, de légumes, de racines et d'herbages ; enfin que l'on peut y faire un établissement très considérable et qui dans la suite, sera une puissante colonie d'autant plus utile à l'Etat que : 1° Elle n'est pas fort éloignée de la France, 2° Qu'elle rendra des profits immenses sans grandes dépenses, 3° Des profits certains intarissables sans faire périr du monde, avantages qui ne se trouvent pas dans les mines d'or et d'argent qui coûtent infiniment, qui font périr une infinité de personnes et qui sont bientôt épuisées.

Ce qui sera encore infiniment avantageux à cet établissement c'est que la rivière de Kessellaki est beaucoup fréquentée par les Esquimaux qui étant fort adroits à la chasse et à la pêche pourront rendre de grands services aux Français et leur fournir quantité d'huile de poisson, de dents de vaches marines et une infinité de peaux de caribou, et de pelleteries précieuses, le pays immense qu'ils habitent étant rempli de bêtes.

Les Esquimaux sont plus de trente mille, à ce que l'on dit. Ils n'ont aucune communication avec les Européens ni avec les autres sauvages dont and return from the gulf of St. Lawrence. At this post, a lucrative trade could be carried on with the Esquimaux, who come there in great numbers every summer.

The third establishment would be on the east coast of Labrador, at Kessellaki.

Kessellaki is a large river between 52° and 53° north latitude. The fishery of all kinds of shell-fish, walrus and whales, is very easy and abundant. There is a quantity of excellent wood for fish, building stages, houses or ships, as well as fish oils.

These large woods and fine trees are a sign that the land is fertile, and that one will be able to keep animals of all sorts, including poultry, to grow all kinds of grains, vegetables and root crops. In short, it should become a considerable colony and useful to the State because : (1) it is not distant from France ; (2) it will return great profits for little outlay ; (3) the fisheries will yield certain and inexhaustible profits-advantages which are not found in gold mines or silver mines, that are very costly to work and soon exhausted and cause the death of a great many persons.

Another great advantage for this establishment will be that the river Kessellaki is much frequented by the Esquimaux, who are adroit in the chase and in the fishery, and will be able to render great service to the French and furnish them with quantities of fish oil, walrus teeth, an infinity of caribou skins and valuable furs. This immense country is filled with animals.

It is said that the Esquimaux number more than thirty thousand. They have no communication with any Europeans nor with the other savages, from whom they differ greatly. They have ils sont tous différents ayant de la barbe, étant blancs, bien faits et fort adroits. ils sont habillés très proprement de peaux de loup-marin, ayant des vestes et des culottes ; ils ne se maltraitent point, ils font des canots et des barques dont la construction est admirable ; ils sont bons forgerons, ce qui fait croire qu'ils tirent leur origine des Islandais ou des Norvégiens, ou bien de la colonie que les Danois avaient au Groenland il y a environ 300 ans, laquelle on ne sait ce qu'elle est devenue. Je crois que cette colonie ne recevant ni vesseaux ni secours du Danemark dont elle ne pouvait se passer dans un pays aussi mauvais que le Groenland hasarda de repasser hommes et femmes en Danemark dans de méchantes barques et chaloupes qui, par la tempête et les courants furent jettés sur les côtes du Labrador. Toutes les manières des Esquimaux, le bon air et la propreté de leurs femmes prouvent cette verité. Il y aussi parmi eux selon toutes les apparences des pecheurs basques qui ont fait naufrage sur ses côtes, sans doute que dans leur langue on trouvera des mots des langues des Européens dont ils tirent leur origine. Il est facile de s'en eclairer par le moyen de quelques Basques, Islandais Norvegiens et Danois. Les Esquimaux passent pour être extrêmement sauvages, et inabordables, féroces et cruels. Ils fuient à la vue des Européens parce qu'ils en ont maltraites, parce que l'on tire sur eux et qu'on les tue, et s'ils font du mal aux Européens et s'ils les tuent ce n'est pas par représailles. Je veux croire que dans le commencement qu'ils ont vu des Européens venir sur leurs côtes, ils leur ont pris quelques bagatelles et qu'après leurs larcins ils s'enfuyaient, mais celà ne méritait pas que l'on tirât sur eux et qu'on les tuât.

Les Sieurs Jolliet et Constantin qui ont été chez eux en ont reçu mille amitiés. Mr de Courtemanche qui a eu dix fois des entretiens avec eux m'a dit à Versailles l'an 1715 qu'ils sont bons, doux, civils, gais, caressants, hommes beards, are light colored, well made and very adroit. They clothe themselves very decently in seal skins and wear waistcoats and breeches. They make canoes and barques the construction of which is admirable, and are good smiths, which leads one to believe that they take their origin from the Icelanders or Norwegians, although they may have originated from the colony of Danes in Greenland some three hundred years ago, and which has since disappeared. I think that, receiving neither the ships nor the assistance from Denmark so necessary in a land as inhospitable as Greenland was, this colony ventured to return, men and women, to Denmark in poor barques and canoes which, tossed by heavy seas, became stranded on the coast of Labrador. The manners of the Esquimaux, the neat appearance and tidiness of their wives, point to this fact. There is indication of there being amongst them some Basque fishermen who were wrecked on the coasts, and without doubt one will find in their language words of the languages of the Europeans from whom they take their origin. It is easy to throw light upon them by means of Basque, Icelanders, Norwegians and Danes. The Esquimaux are considered extremely savage and intractable, ferocious and cruel ; they flee at the sight of Europeans, and if they attack and kill Europeans it is only by way of reprisal, because they have been maltreated, fired on and had some of their people killed by them. I think that in the beginning of their intercourse with the Europeans on their coast, they stole some trifling articles and then fled, but this did not warrant firing on and killing them.

The Sieurs Jolliet and Constantin, who have visited them, have received a thousand tokens of friendship. M. de Courtemanche, who has had ten interviews with them, told me at Versailles in 1715 that they were kind, mild, civil, gay and warm-hearted men and women, that they danced to et femmes, qu'elles dansent pour lui faire honneur. Ils sont fort chastes n'aimant pas la guerre et ont mille bonnes qualities. Ils sont plus timides que sauvages et cruels. Celà fait voir qu'il sera très aisé de les apprivoiser surtout si on en prend efficacement les moyens qui sont :

1° Empêcher les sauvages montagnais et les autres sauvages de leur faire la guerre, si les montagnais avaient chez eux un missionnaire jésuite il les empêcherait de faire du mal aux Esquimaux.

2° Il faut défendre aux Français pêcheurs et autres, sous des rigoureuses peines, de tirer sur eux et leur faire aucun chagrin.

3° Ordonner aux pêcheurs et aux Français de tâcher de les attirer et de faire toutes sortes d'amitiés et même quelques présents à ceux que l'on pourra joindre.

4° Dans l'échange de leur marchandise et dans le commerce que l'on aura avec eux faire en sorte qu'ils ne soient jamais mécontents et en toute occasion les traiter avec douceur et bonté.

5° Leur donner à manger mais ne leur point donner ou vendre de liqueurs enivrantes.

6° Engager les Jésuites d'entreprendre cette mission d'aller chez eux et de les apprivoiser. Ils en viendront bientôt à bout, ayant un merveilleux talent pour les missions les plus difficiles et pour humaniser les sauvages les plus féroces. Quand on aura lié commerce avec les Esquimaux, on en fera facilement de bons chrétiens. Leur esprit doux, leur aversion pour la guerre, leur amour pour la chasse sont des dispositions admirables pour cela.

do him honour. They are very chaste, dislike war and have a thousand good qualities. They are more timid than savage or cruel. From this it is very easy to see that there will be no difficulty in civilizing them if the following proper steps are taken :

1. To forbid the Montagnais and other savages to make war on them. If the Montagnais have with them a Jesuit missionary, he could prevent them from interfering with the Esquimaux.

2. It is also necessary to forbid the French fishermen and others, under the severest penalties, to fire at them or to offer them any insult.

3. To order the French and the fishermen to endeavour to win them over by offering friendship and even presents to those who join them.

4. In trading for their merchandise and in all commerce with them, to be sure that they are not discontented and, on all occasions, treat them with kindness and good will.

5. To give them food, but neither to give nor to sell them intoxicating liquors.

6. To engage the Jesuits to undertake this mission of going amongst them and to endeavour to civilize them, for the Jesuits have a great talent for humanizing the most ferocious savages. When commerce has been established with them, it will be easy to make them good Christians. Their gentle spirit, their aversion to war, and their chastity make them easily disposed to conversion.

C'est surtout la vue que l'on doit avoir en faisant des établissements dans le Labrador, et ce qui attirera les bénédictions non seulement spirituelles mais aussi temporelles sur ceux qui procureront cette gloire à Dieu et à la religion. Les Esquimaux apprivoisés rendront de grands services aux Français par la chasse qu'ils feront dans leur vaste pays et par la pêche, étant fort adroits à l'une et à l'autre. Ils leur apporteront des peaux, des pelleteries, des dents de vaches-marines, de l'huile de poisson, de l'édredon et de la plume pour les lits, y ayant sur leurs côtes une infinité d'oiseaux dont la plume est fort bonne et fort fine.

Ainsi les Esquimaux contribueront à rendre le commerce de Labrador très considérable et très lucratif pour les établissements de ces pays. J'oubliais de dire qu'il faut employer tous les moyens imaginables non seulement pour apprivoiser les Esquimaux mais aussi pour les engager à venir s'établir en villages proche des Français. Il n'est pas nécessaire de faire un détail des avantages qu'eux les Français en retireront. On les conçoit assez. On ne doit rien craindre du voisinage des Esquimaux, parce qu'ils sont doux, point du tout guerriers mais lâches et timides. Ceux qui trouvent tout difficile, qui n'ont pas le courage de faire de grandes entreprises, et qui n'aiment pas que d'autres plus courageux qu'eux les fassent disent :

1° Que le Labrador est un pays froid, stérile, où rien de ce qui est nécessaire à la vie ne peut venir, par conséquent un pays inhabitable et dans lequel il ne faut pas penser de faire des établissements. L'Ecosse, la Suède, la Norvège, la Moscovie, la Sibérie, l'Islande, les Isles de Fairo (Feroe) sont des pays bien plus septentrionaux que le Labrador, et, par conséquent autant ou plus froids que le Labrador. Ces pays sont remplis de lacs et de montagnes autant ou plus que le Labrador. La terre en est elle même aussi stérile que

(Translation.)

It should specially be held in view in making these establishments on the Labrador, that not only spiritual but also temporal blessings will be poured upon those who shall have procured this glory to God and religion. The Esquimaux, if civilized, will render important services to the French through the fishery and by the chase they carry on in their country, they being very adroit both in the one and in the other. They will bring skins, furs, walrus tusks, fish-oils, eider-down, feathers for beds, having on their coast an infinity of birds with fine and very good plumage.

Thus the Esquimaux will contribute to render commerce on the Labrador both large and lucrative for the establishments in these countries. I forgot to say that it is necessary to use every conceivable means to induce them to come and establish themselves in villages near the French, the advantages of which, both for themselves and the French, it is unnecessary to detail, as they can be sufficiently appreciated. Their proximity need not be feared, as they are not warlike but lazy and timid. Those who are always making difficulties and have not have the courage to undertake large enterprises, begrudging others their superiority, say :

1. That the Labrador is a place both cold and sterile, where nothing that is necessary for life can be found and, consequently, is uninhabitable, and no one should dream of colonizing there. Sweden, Norway, Muscovy, Siberia, Iceland, Scotland, the Isles of Fairo (Faroe) are all more northern countries than Labrador and consequently as cold if not colder. These countries are filled with mountains and lakes to the same or to a greater extent than Labrador. The land is as sterile as that of Labrador, and still, were one willing, what is being done, has been done, and what might celle du Labrador, et cependant, par la culture elles ont fait, ce qu'elles font encore, ce qu'elles feraient dans le Canada si on le voulait est une preuve incontestable de cette vérité : que les pays froids sont plus favorables aux Français que les pays chauds, que dans les pays froids, ils sont beaucoup forts, plus robustes, plus entreprenants et plus courageux, que dans les pays chauds et qu'en France même. C'est pour cette raison qu'il est plus convenable de se servir pour les établissements dans le Labrador de Canadiens fait au froid et à la fatigue que non pas de Français qui n'y sont pas accoutumés. Pour la même raison il n'y faut pas mener des Françaises mais des Canadiennes.

On dit encore que pour faire des établissements dans le Labrador, il en coûterait beaucoup au Roi qui a des dépenses à faire plus pressées que celles-là. Je réponds que ces établissements peuvent se faire sans qu'il en coûte rien au Roi. Celui que Mr de Courtemanche a fait dans la baie Phelippeaux, n'a rien couté à Sa Majesté. Les autres ne lui coûteront pas davantage. Pour celà il faut engager deux Canadiens sages et entreprenants à aller s'établir : l'un au Petit Nord et l'autre à Kesselaki, comme Mr de Courte-manche l'est à la baie de Phelippeaux. Afin que ces hommes est devenu fertile et elle fournit des vivres aux habitants de ces pays qui sont en nombre infini. L'Ecosse, la Suède, la Norvège, et la Moscovie sont des pays très puissants, rempli de grandes et magnifiques et riches villes toutes plus septentrionales que Kesselaki.

be done, in Canada is an undeniable proof of this fact : that the cold countries are more suitable to the French than the warm climes ; that in cold places, they are more robust, more enterprising and more courageous than in the cold regions and than in France also. For this reason it will be better to have Canadians, accustomed to cold and fatigue, rather than Frenchmen who are unaccustomed, to conduct these establishments at Labrador. For the same reasons, Canadian women should go there rather than French women.

It is also said that, to start establishments in Labrador, would be too expensive for the King who has more pressing claims upon his purse than this outlay. To this I would reply that these establishments can be formed without costing the King anything. What M. de Courtemanche has done at Phelippeaux bay has cost His Majesty nothing. The others will not cost the King any more. It is only necessary to engage two Canadians, wise and enterprising, to undertake the settlements : one at Petit Nord and the other at Kesselaki, as

M. de Courtemanche has done at Phelippeaux bay. In order that these men has become fertile and capable of supporting their large population. Scotland, Sweden, Norway and Muscovy are very powerful countries, and filled with many large, magnificent and rich cities, all farther north than Kesselaki.

Toutes ces villes qui sont beaucoup plus septentrionales que Kesselaki qui est environ au 42me degré 30 minutes que le Petit Nord qui est au 42me et que la baie Philippeaux qui est au 41me degré, quelques minutes, les villes, dis-je sont toutes capitales de puissants royaumes ou de provinces. Elles sont toutes des plus grandes, des plus peuplées, des plus riches et des plus magnifiques de l'Europe. Faut compter que dans les royaumes et les provinces où elles sont situées, il y a encore une grande quantité de belles villes et un nombre infini de peuples qui par la culture, ont rendu fécondes ces terres septentrionales et par le commerce, ont rendu ces pays glacés très riches.

Qu'est-ce qui empêche que l'on fasse du Labrador un aussi bon pays que ceux là que l'on bâtit des villes, qu'on l'habite et qu'on la cultive comme ceux là.

Celà, dit-on, demande bien du travail et de la patience.

They are the largest, the most populous, the richest and the most magnificent in Europe. One must also consider that, in the kingdoms or provinces wherein they are situated, there also are a large number of fine towns and an infinity of people who, by cultivation, have rendered these northern lands productive and by commerce have made these cold countries very wealthy. What is there that would prevent making Labrador as good a country as any of these, by the founding of cities, the settlement of the land and the cultivation of its soil.

This, it is said, will require a great deal of industry and perseverance.

Je réponds que quand les Français sont bien conduits, ils sont autant ou plus capables de l'un et de l'autre que les Ecossais, les Suèdois, les Norvégiens, les Moscovites, et autres peuples septentrionaux. Les Français sont capables de tout ce qu'il y a de plus difficile, quand ils sont conduits par des chefs entreprenants et constants. Ce qu'ils ne se ruinent pas, et même afin qu'ils s'enrichissent, en se sacrifiant pour l'Etat, il faut leur accorder tout ce qui se peut, les combler d'honneur et de grâces. Rien de plus juste. Pour que ces postes se peuplent et deviennent considérables, il faut par les bienfaits et par les privilèges engager des Bayonnais et autres Français, mais surtout des Canadiens, à s'y aller établir et à s'appliquer à faire valoir le commerce de ce pays, principalement la pêche, dont les profits sont prompts, certains et intarissables et ne demandent que très peu d'avances.

Il faut enfin donner à ceux qui entreprendront les établissements du Petit-Nord et de Kesselaki (que l'on pourra nommer labradorville) le titre et brevet de commandant et de capitaine de milice s'ils ne sont pas, comme à celui de la baie Phélippeaux, donner à chacun la compagnie complète pour résider dans son poste et leur ordonner :

1° De ne rien entreprendre l'un sur l'autre et de vivre en paix et en bonne union et de ne point débaucher les sauvages les uns les autres ;

2° D'empêcher que les sauvages se fassent la guerre les uns aux autres ;

3° De vivre en paix avec les sauvages de les apprivoiser de lier commerce avec eux, de les engager par la douceur à venir s'établir proche des Français, enfin de ne leur faire aucune violence ni injustice ;

(Translation.)

I claim that when the French are well led they are as capable, both of one and the other, as the Scotch, Swedes, Muscovites, or any other northern people. The French are capable of overcoming all difficulties when led by enterprising and steady commanders.

They would not ruin themselves, but would even grow rich in sacrificing themselves for the State, it is necessary to grant to them all that is possible, to heap upon them honours and gifts, nothing being more just. In order that these posts may be peopled and become important, it is necessary, by bounties and privileges, to induce the Bayonnais and other French, especially Canadians, to establish themselves there and devote themselves to the development of commerce in this country, particularly the fishery, the profits of which are immediate, certain and inexhaustible, and do not require a great outlay.

Lastly, it is necessary to give to those who shall undertake the settlements of Petit Nord and Kesselaki (which should be named Labradorville), the title and patent of Commandant and Captain of militia, if they have not received them already, as in the case of Phelippeaux bay, and to give to each an entire company to reside at his post. Instructions must be given to them :

1. Not to encroach one upon the other, to live in peace, and harmony, and not entice the natives from each other

2. To forbid the natives to make war on one another ;

3. To live in peace with the natives, to civilize them, trade with them and induce them by kindness to come and live near the French, and, lastly, not to do them any violence or injustice.

p. 3702

4° D'avoir soin des missionnaires qui travailleront à la conversion des sauvages et au salut des Français.

6° De faire reconnaître la qualité de la terre, s'il y a des mines de cuivre, d'acier et autres métaux, s'il y a des pierres de quelque mérite comme marbre et porphyre ; s'il y a des bois propres à faire des maisons ou des navires ; s'il y a des plantes ou autres drogues médicinales, enfin tout ce que le pays produit. La plupart des pays sont moins nous le long des côtes qu'à une ou deux lieues dans les terres.

7° D'avoir soin qu'on, y élève quantité de boeufs et de vaches, de moutons et de brebis, de cochons et de chèvres, et même des chevaux et d'y faire multiplier tous les animaux. Si les espèces du Canada ne peuvent pas résister à ces climats, il en faut faire venir des isles de Ferro (Feroe) ou d'Islande, qui sont des pays bien plus rudes et plus froids que le Labrador. De tous ces animaux on pourra, faire des salaisons pour la subsistance de la colonie. De plus ces animaux feront du fumier qui servira à engraisser ces terres et à produire du grain, des légumes, racines et herbages.

8° De tâcher d'apprivoiser des caribous qui sont de la même chose que les Rennes dont les Lapons et les Moscovites tirent de grands services, mais il faut éviter tout ce qui ressent de la magie.

4. To have the care of missionaries who shall work at the conversion of the savages and for the salvation of the French ;

5. To explore the country, not only on the coasts, but also in the interior ; for this end, to ascend all rivers to their sources, and to engage the French as well as the Jesuits to seek the natives in their own homes, and to accompany them on their hunting trips and voyages.

6. To examine the quality of the soil, to see if there are mines of copper, iron or other metals, if there are valuable stones, such as marble and porphyry ; if there are woods fit for the building of houses and ships, if there are medicinal plants or drugs. In short, to discover all that the country may produce. Nearly all countries are less fertile along the coast than a league or two inland.

7. To see that cattle, sheep, pigs and goats, as well as horses are reared in large numbers and to promote the breeding of animals of all kinds. If the Canadian species are not such as to resist the climate, it is necessary to import cattle from the Faro (Faroe) Islands or from Iceland, which countries are more rugged and colder than Labrador. All these animals will provide food for the colony. Besides, they will furnish manure to be used for the fertilizing of these lands so as to render them capable of producing grain, vegetables, and root crops.

8. To endeavor to tame the caribou, which is the same animal as the reindeer, so greatly used by the Laplander and the Russians, but it is necessary to avoid anything that has the appearance of magic.

9° D'élever quantité de volailles, poules, pigeons, canes, oies et oitardes.

10° De semer du blé, du seigle, de l'orge, de l'avoine et autres sortes de grains. L'orge et l'avoine y viennent et mûrissent bien et peuvent servir à nourrir des bestiaux et des volailles, sans doute que le blé de Turquie y viendra. Avec un peu de soin, le blé et le s les échauffer, ce qui les rend très fertiles. Il en faut faire de même dans le Labrador, au bien y porter des farines du Canada.

11° D'y faire semer toutes sortes de légumes, pois, fèves, feverolles, lentilles, etc., etc. Les pois y viennent bien pour être mangés verts mais ne mûrissent pas assez pour être gardés. Il faut aussi tâcher d'y élever des arbres fruitiers.

12° D'y faire cultiver toutes sortes de racines, d'herbages et de salades. Toutes ces choses viennent fort bien, à ce que m'a dit Mr de Courtemanche à la baie Phélippeaux et sont de grandes douceurs pour les équipages des navires pêcheurs.

13° Pour la commodité de ces mêmes équipages avoir dans chaque établissement une ou deux grandes auberges bien bâties avec de bons lits et les autres choses convenables pour le soulagement des gens de mer, mais il faut empêcher l'ivrognerie et toutes les autres débauches.

14° Il faut qu'il y ait dans chaque établissement un curé, honnête homme, avec une église propre et bien ornée, où le service se fasse avec décence. C'est un moyen pour enseigner aux sauvages du respect et de l'inclination pour

9. To breed quantities of birds, fowls, hens, pigeons, geese, ducks, &c.

10. To sow wheat, rye, oats, barley, and other grains. Oats and barley will grow well and afford food for cattle and fowls. Without doubt, Turkey wheat will thrive. In Poland, where the lands are cold, they sow a little salt to warm them and render them fertile. The same must be done in Labrador, or grain must be brought in from Canada.

11. To plant all sorts of vegetables, peas, beans, Scotch beans, lentils, &c., &c., and also endeavour to cultivate fruit trees.

12. To cultivate all sorts of roots, herbs and salads, all of which grow very well at Phelippeaux bay, so M. de Courtemanche tells me, and are highly appreciated by the crews of the fishing vessels.

13. For the use of the same crews, to have at each settlement one or two large inns, solidly built, with good beds and other conveniences for the comfort of the seamen, but drunkenness and debauchery must be strictly forbidden.

14. At each establishment there must be a curé, an honest man, with a church well built and properly adorned, where services can be performed with decency. It is a means to inspire the le christianisme. Il est à propos que ces curés soient de St Sulpice ou de quelqu'autre communauté si les Jésuites ne veulent pas s'en charger.

15° Il faut ordonner aux Commandants de donner avis à la cour de tout ce qu'ils reconnaîtront être convenable pour le bien et l'augmentation de ces établissements.

16° Il faut aussi qu'ils aient soin que l'on bâtisse des maisons solides et commodes et qu'ils en donnent l'exemple. On peut faire de la chaux dans le pays ; on y pourra faire aussi de la brique ; de la tuile et de la poterie.

Les moyens et plusieurs autres connus de ceux qui ont plus l'expérience que moi, sont capables de rendre en peu de temps et sans qu'il en coûte rien à Roi, les établissements du Labrador très considerables et d'y attirer quantité de vaisseaux qui apporteront dans ces pays ce qui y est et en rapporteront ce qu'il produit ; poissons, huiles côtes et barbes de baleines, dents de vaches-marines, peaux de loup-marins et de caribous, une infinité de fines et précieuses pelleteries, de l'édrédon et de la plume pour faire des lits et dans la suite des mâts et autres bois, du cuivre, de l'acier et autres choses ; ce qui entretiendra un grand commerce qui enrichira le pays et les marchands et qui sera même très utile à l'Etat. On fait encore deux difficultés. 1° On dit que dans le Labrador le froid est de si longue duree que les habitants ne pourront pas résister ; Qu'il n'y a pas de vivres et de commodités pour faire subsister une nombreuse colonie. Je répons à cette objection que les Norvégiens et les Suédois ne meurent point de froid et que de bonnes maisons bien fermées avec de bons poeles, comme en Suède, en Norvège et natives with respect and admiration for Christianity. It is fitting that these curés should be of the order of St. Sulpice or of some other community, if the Jesuits will not undertake the work.

15. The Commamlants must be instructed to keep the Crown informed of what, in their opinion, is required for the good and for the increase of the settlements.

16. They should also see to it that solid and commodious houses be built, and that they set the example. Lime can be made in the country, and it is possible to make bricks, tiles and pottery.

These means, and many others known to those who are more experienced than I, are capable of rendering the Labrador settlements very considerable in a short time and without any expense to the King, and to attract there numbers of vessels which will bring all that is required, and take back the products of this country ; fish, oils, whalebone, walrus teeth, skins of seals and caribou, an infinity of fine and valuable furs, eider-down, feathers for beds, and, later on, wood for masts and other kinds of wood, copper, iron and other things. This will maintain a great commerce, will enrich the country and the merchants, and be very useful to the State. Two further objections are offered :

1. It is said that, in Labrador, the cold weather is of such long duration that the colonists would not be able to stand it ; 2. That there are not sufficient food and commodities there to support a large colony. To this objection, I reply that Norwegians and Swedes do not perish from cold at all, and that good houses, well built, with good stoves, such are used in Sweden, autres pays septentrionaux sont de bons preservatifs contre le froid. Ajoutez que les Canadiens et Canadiennes dont on se servira pour faire les etablissements du Labrador sont accoutumés aux froids les plus insupportables. 3° On dit qu'il n'y a pas de vivres. Je réponds à celà que le boeuf, le veau, le laitage, le mouton, et la volaille n'y manqueront point, non plus que le poisson frais et le salé, ni les légumes, racines et herbages.

On peut y elever de bons cochons en empêchant qu'ils ne mangent du poisson. Il faut pour celà les tenir enfermés dans le temps de la pêche ou les élever un peu loin des bords de la mer. On peut y saler du boeuf et du cochon et aussi saler ou fumer du caribou. Le pays est très abondant en gibier. Il y a des oiseaux appeles moyacks qui fournissent une infinie d'oeufs bons à manger. Le duvet de ces oiseaux s'appelle édredon. L'orge et l'avoine y viennent à maturité. Tout celà avec le grand commerce des denrées est plus que suffisant pout faire subsister une très nombreuse colonie. Si le froment et le seigle n'y peuvent pas venir à maturité, on aura facilement des farines du Canada, ce qui sera très avantageux au dit Canada. Si on peut y avoir des mouches à miel on y fera de l'hydromel comme en Moscovie et en Pologne où il y a quantite de mouches quoique le pays soit plus septentrional que le Labrador.

La laine des moutons fournira dans la suite de quoi faire des habits. Dès à present on peut faire des habits avec des peaux de moutons comme on le fait en plusieurs pays, et même dans le Médoc et dans les Landes de Bordeaux. On peut aussi y faire des habits de peaux de loup-marins comme les Esquimaux qui en sont habillés très proprement.

choses que le pays ne pourra pas fournir et que l'on ne jugera pas à propos de cultiver. En échange

Norway and other northern countries, are complete protection against it. Add to this that the Canadian men and women, who will form these establishments, are accustomed to the severest cold. 3. It is said that there is no food. To this, I may reply that beef, veal milk-diet, mutton and poultry shall not be wanting, nor fresh and salt fish, nor vegetable and roots.

It is possible to raise excellent pigs, but they must not be allowed to eat fish and during the fishing season, they must be kept at a distance from the sea. Beef and pork, also caribou meat, can be salted and smoked. The country abounds with game, and there are birds called moyacks which furnish an infinity of eggs good to eat. The down from these birds is called eider-down. Oats and barley will come to maturity. All this, with the great commerce in the commodities of the country, is more than sufficient to support a large and numerous colony. If wheat and rye will not come to maturity, they can be imported from Canada, which will be a good thing for Canada. If it is possible to keep bees, one can make hydromel, as in Muscovy and Poland, where quantities of bees are kept although these countries are farther north than Labrador.

The wool from the sheep will furnish the material required to make clothes. Even now, clothes can be made from sheep skins, as is done in several countries, such as in the Landes of Bordeaux. Also, clothes can be made from seal skins like the Esquimaux, who are very neatly clad.

The ships can bring wine and other commodities which the country will not be able to furnish or which it may not be deemed advisable to grow. In exchange, the inhabitants will give fish, oils, les habitants donneront du poisson, des huiles, des peaux, des pelleteries et autres choses que le pays produit en si grande abondance. Que la colonie, si nombreuse qu'elle puisse être aura de quoi acheter des denrées de France et du Canada dont elle aura besoin, elle sera même en état de devenir riche et puissante.

La colonie de Plaisance était dans un pays où il ne pouvait rien venir et même plus stérile que le Labrador. Cette stérilité était cause que les habitants s'appliquaient exclusivement à la pêche de la morue qui leur donnait le moyen d'avoir abondamment tout ce qu'il leur était nécessaire et même de s'enrichir.

Ce serait peut-être le plus avantageux pour les habitants du Labrador et pour l'Etat qu'ils s'appliquassent uniquement à la pêche qui produit des profits immenses.

On convient à ce que je crois, de tout ce qui est dans ce mémoire ; on avoue que les raisons de faire des établissements dans le Labrador sont convaincantes et que les moyens en sont bons et faciles. Reste donc d'en venir à l'exécution, et de laisser faire ceux qui auront le courage de commencer ces établissements et de leur accorder tout ce qui est convenable afin qu'ils ne se ruinent pas en se sacrifiant pour l'honneur et l'avantage de l'Etat et même de Dieu et de la religion.

skins, furs, and other things which the country produces in such large quantities, that the colony, numerous as it may be, will be able to buy, from France and Canada, all commodities they have need of, and thus the colony will even become a rich and a powerful one.

The colony of Placentia is a more sterile place than Labrador, being in a country where nothing will grow. Such barrenness compels the colonists to apply themselves entirely to the cod fishery, which furnishes the means to supply them with all that is necessary and even to enrich them.

It is possible, perhaps, that it will be more advantageous for the colonists of Labrador and for State, that they should apply themselves entirely to the fishery which produces such immense profits.

In my opinion, the whole of this present memoir is admitted ; it is acknowledged that the reasons for the making of the establishments at Labrador are convincing and that the means thereto are good and easy. It remains then to carry out the proposal, to grant permission to those who have the courage to found these settlements and accord to them all that is suitable so that they may not be ruined in sacrificing themselves for the honour and advantage of the State as well as for God and religion.

SUPPLEMENT TO ANONYMOUS MEMOIR CONCERNING LABRADOR, JANUARY 1717.

ARCHIVES DE LA PROVINCE DE QUEBEC.

Il y a environ six mois que je donnai à Mr de Forcade deux mémoires, un touchant le Canada, qui me semble mériter quelque attention et pouvoir être utile, et un autre touchant le Labrador qui n'a pas moins de mérite. Pour ne point répéter ce qu'il contient, je prie de le lire, et je crois que si l'on veut bien prendre cette peine on avouera que le Labrador est un pays dont l'Etat peut tirer de grands avantages, qu'il est important de bien s'y établir et de mettre en valeur.

On s'aperçoit tous les jours de plus en plus de l'utilité de ce pays et combien il est important d'y faire des établissements fixes. En voici les preuves, preuves d'autant plus convaincantes qu'elles sont déduites avec moins d'art et plus de simplicité, et qu'elles ne peuvent pas être contestées par ceux qui sont au fait de ce qui regarde ce pays affreux d'après quelques uns, mais selon les vrais connaisseurs un vrai Pérou à raison des pelleteries précieuses et fourrures dont il est tout rempli ; mais surtout à raison des abondantes et intarissables pêches de morue, de loups-marins, de vachesmarines, et de baleines, etc., qui, sans grandes dépenses, sans coûter la vie à une infinité d'hommes, peuvent produire à la France plus de richesses que les meilleurs et plus abondantes mines d'or. Je reviens aux preuves que j'ai promises. Outre celles que fournit le mémoire que j'ai donné il y a

(Translation.)

About six months ago, I gave Mr. de Forcade two memoirs, one concerning Canada, which in my estimation, is deserving of some consideration and may prove useful, and the other, no less deserving, on the Labrador. To avoid any duplication of its contents, I would ask that same be read, and I feel that, should this trouble be taken, it will be admitted that the Labrador is a country from which the State may derive material benefits and that it is of importance to have there a solid establishment and see to its development.

As time passes, each day brings home more forcibly the usefulness of this country as well the importance of forming permanent establishments there. Here is the proof of this, a proof all the more convincing since it is being arrived at in a manner devoid of artifice and complication. Such proof, moreover, cannot be disputed by those familiar with facts concerning this country, a country considered by some as horrible, but which, according to the well informed, is held to be a real Peru on account of its precious peltries and furs, and more particularly owing to its abundant and inexhaustible cod, seal, walrus and whale fisheries, &c., which, without great cost, and without causing the death of a great many persons, may bring to France more wealth than the best and richest gold mines. I now return to the proof I have promised. Besides such evidence as can be found in my memoir as submitted six months ago, we find that what took place since last year at six mois, ce qui s'est passé depuis un an au Labrador en fournit de nouvelles si pressantes que l'on ne peut pas se dispenser de faire incessamment des établissements fixes sur cette côte, ni de prendre toutes les mesures convenables pour mettre ce pays en valeur et pour en faire une colonie utile à l'Etat et aux particuliers. Les preuves sont renfermées dans une lettre que j'ai reçue de Mr. de Courtemanche et deux des lettres que Mr de Ramsay et Mr Bégon lui ont écrites. Ces trois lettres telles que je les ai reçues sont jointes à ce mémoire. J'ai aussi reçu de Mr de Courtemanche la copie écrite et les réponses qu'il leur a faite, et aussi copie de la lettre qu'il a écrite à Mr de Vaudreuil. Toutes ces copis de lettres sont entre les mains de Mr d'Avbenton.

Mr de Courtemanche écrit du mois d'octobre 1716 à Mde de Courtemanche à Bayonne, les nouvelles suivantes qu'elle m'a envoyées Article de la lettre que Mr de Courtemanche m'écrit 11 jours après mon départ dans le mois d'octobre 1716:

“ Depuis votre depart les sauvages esquimaux nous ont presque toujours tenus en occupation. Un de mes gens qui était à la chasse les aperçut et aussitot m'en vient donner avis sur le soir. Je ne manquai pas d'envoyer Mr votre fils avec deux ou trois de nos gens pour leur parler et les amuser pendant que je faisais équiper une chaloupe pour y aller moi-même. Mais les Esquimaux qui en apparence qui avaient remarqué que nos gens étaient plus alertes que ceux qu'ils avaient coutume de voir (et même ils avaient eu beaucoup d'épouvante d'en avoir vu à cheval), se servirent de l'obscurité de la nuit pour s'enfuir. Nous les avons chassés deux fois. J'ai été obligé pareillement d'aller à la Fortian, mais je n'ai pas pu les attraper. Ils étaient

Labrador affords further proof of such an urgent character that one cannot ignore the necessity of forming immediately permanent establishments on this coast or of taking the proper steps conducive to the development of this country so as to make it a settlement profitable for the State as well as to individuals. The evidence is to be found in a letter I have received from Mr. de Courtemanche and in two of the letters addressed to him by M. de Ramsay and M. Begon. These three letters are annexed to the present memoir exactly as they reached me. I have also received from M. de Courtemanche a written copy and his answers to them, as well as a copy of the letter he wrote to M. de Vaudreuil. All of these copies of correspondence are in the hands of M. d'Avbenton.

In a letter written in October, 1716, and addressed to Madame de Courtemanche at Bayonne, M. de Courtemanche gives her the following news, which she has communicated to me. Paragraph from the letter addressed to me by M. de Courtemanche eleven days after my departure in the month of October, 1716.

“ Since your departure the Esquimaux savages have kept us almost continuously occupied. One of my men, who was out hunting caught sight of them and immediately came to notify me towards the evening. I did not fail to send M. your son with two or three of our people that he might speak with them and detain them while I ordered a boat to be equipped so that I could go myself. But the Esquimaux, who apparently had noticed that our men were more alert than they had been accustomed to see (and they had even been struck with awe at the sight of one them riding a horse), took advantage of the darkness of night to make their escape. Twice we chased them. I was likewise compelled to go to the Fortian [Forteau], but I could not overtake environ 400 et autant à Blanc-Sablon, qui est à une lieue de la maison, comme vous le savez.

“ Ces malheureux ont fait de très grands dégâts à toutes les loges et encore plus à l'île à bois où ils n'ont laissé pour tout que deux bateaux. Ils ont enlevé tout le reste, mais je ne sais pas le nombre que ces messieurs y avaient laissé, non plus que ce de Mr Bernard. Ils ont aussi emporté tous les grappins, pillé ou brisé et jeté à la mer leurs avirons, et de plus généralement pris tous leurs meubles dans les loges.

“ En ceux qui ont paru à la petite rivière il y en avait 3 qui avaient chacun un fusil et d'autres quelques pistolets.

“ NOTA.—On veut croire qu'il y avait quelques Français avec eux, car ils n'avaient point coutume de se servir d'armes. Il est de conséquence que vous donniez avis à tous les armateurs de ce désordre afin qu'ils ne fassent pas de fonds sur leurs meubles.”

them. They were about 400 strong and there were as many at Blanc-Sablon which, as you are aware, is one league away from the house.

“ The wretches have caused great depredations in all the cabins and did still greater damage at l'île à bois [Woody I.] where they only left two boats. They took the remainder away, but I could not say how many these gentlemen, or M. Bernard, had left there. They also took away all the grappling-irons, stole their oars or broke them and threw them into the sea, and, in a more general way, took all their movables in the cabins.

“ Amongst those who were seen at Petite Rivière were three who had each a musket and others who had a few pistols.

“ M. Gane's officer, who pursued them after they had pillaged his property, told us recently, when at the house, that they had fired a shot from a swivel-gun and had very narrowly missed hitting their boat.

“ Note.—One is inclined to believe that they were accompanied by a few French, inasmuch as they are not in the habit of using arms. It is important that you inform all the vessel-owners of this disturbance so that they will not rely on their goods.”

COPY OF A LETTER ADDRESSED, ON THE 16TH OCTOBER, 1716, FROM THE BAY OF PHELIPPEAUX, BY M. LAIR, CHAPLAIN OF M. DE COURTEMANCHE, TO MADAME DE COURTEMANCHE, AT BAYONNE.

“ Madame,—This is to afford the writer the honour of greeting you as the most devoted of your servants. It is my earnest wish, Madame, that the present will find you in

“ Mais les Esquimaux qui en apparence avaient remarqué que nos gens n'avaient pas de froid aux yeux, et que même ils avaient eu beaucoup d'épouvante d'en avoir vu un qui était à cheval, se servirent de l'obscurité de la nuit pour fuir de sorte que Monsieur ne put pas les attraper avec sa chaloupe, quoiqu'il ait été trois jours consécutifs à les chercher.

“ Je vous assure Mde que Mr s'est un peu trop exposé à cause du grand vent et de la pluie qui tombait sans cesse ; de sorte que nous avons été fort inquiets à la maison, vos enfants et moi, jusqu'à son retour, lequel a causé bien de la joie à Melle de Courtemanche et à nous tous, non pas à cause de la grande santé que Mr a rapportée de sa course, car il en est revenu incommodé à cause du grand froid et de la pluie. J'espère moyennant la grâce de Dieu que celà ne sera rien. Celà n'a pas empêché que ces animaux sauvages n'aient pris plusieurs chaloupes à la côte. Je ne sais pas combien Mrs. de Dumène en avaient à l'île à bois. Vos gens disent qu'il n'y en a plus que deux vieilles dont ils ont voulu bruler une. Ils ont ouvert sur la dite île les cabanes et piles de bois, ou ils ont cassé avec des haches une barrique où il y avait des serres. On a trouvé aussi la même chose aux échaffaud de la petite “ Since you left, Madame, the Esquimaux Indians have visited your coast of Labrador. They went to la Fortiau. M. de la Rue's people traded with them on the first Sunday following your departure, which was the fourth day of this month.

“ But the Esquimaux who apparently had noticed the intrepidity of our men, and who had even been seized with great fright at the sight of one of them on horse-back, took advantage of the darkness of night to take to flight and Monsieur could not overtake them with his boat, although he pursued them during three consecutive days.

“ I assure you, madame, that Monsieur has run a rather great risk owing to the high wind and continuous rain ; as a result, we at the house, your children and myself, were very anxious until his return, which was the cause of great rejoicing for Mademoiselle de Courtemanche and every one of us, but not because of the excellent state of health of Mr. de Courtemanche upon his return from his journey, as he returned indisposed on account of the intense cold and the rain. I hope that, with the help of God, it will be of no consequence. This has not prevented these beastly Indians from taking several bouts on the coast. I do not know how many Mrs. de Dumêne had at l'île à Bois. Your people state that there are only two left and that they made an attempt to burn one of them. They have broken into the cabins and wood piles on the said island, where they broke open, with axes, a barrel containing some stores. It was found that they had done the “ Vos enfants, Madame, se portent tous biens, votre petite fille demande si vous viendrez bientôt. Il n'y a rien de nouveau à la maison. Ménagez s'il vous plait votre santé Mde et ne vous inquiétez point. L'indisposition de Mr ne sera rien. On fait toujours bon quart pour les Esquimaux. Je vous demande la liberté, Mde, de me dire votre très humble et très obéissant serviteur,

On dit que les Esquimaux étaient à la Fortiau 3 à 400. Ils n'ont pas paru à la petite rivière plus de cinquante, mais il y en avait une autre troupe sur l'île à bois où on a trouvé leur cabane avec une vieille grande sène et environ la charge d'un homme de flotte de linge avec quelques poules françaises. Vos gens en apportèrent hier 4 ou 5 qu'ils attrapèrent près de leurs cabanes. Entre ceux qui ont paru à la petite rivière il y en avait trois qui avaient chacun un fusil et d'autres quelques pistolets. L'Officier de Mr Gane qui fut après eux lors-qu'ils eurent pillé Mr Gane nous dit dernièrement à la maison qu'ils lui avaient tiré un coup de pierrier qui donna fort proche de leur chaloupe. On veut croire qu'il y a quelques Français avec eux car ils n'avaient pas de coutume de se servir d'armes. N'ayez point d'inquiétude. On fait bonne garde et ils se retireront bientôt.

same thing at the stages of Petite-Rivière, a number of grappling-irons having been thrown about on the ground and even in the water ; every cabin and pile of wood had been broken into ; even the salt had been thrown out, and several nets, cut into pieces, were on the ground.

“ Your children, Madame, are in perfect health, and your young daughter wishes to know whether you will return soon. There is nothing new at the house. Please take care of your health, Madame, and do not worry. Monsieur's indisposition will amount to nothing. We always keep a good look-out for the Esquimaux. May I take the liberty, Madame, of subscribing myself your most humble and most obedient servant,

It is reported that the Esquimaux at la Forteau numbered 300 or 400. They did not appear at Petite Rivière, but there was another troop of them at l'île à Bois where their cabin was found with an old net of large dimensions, about a seaman's load of linen, as well as a few French fowls. Your people brought in 4 or 5 of them yesterday having caught them near their cabins. Amongst those who came to Petite Rivière, there were three who each had a musket and a few others were armed with pistols. M. Gane's officer who pursued them after they had pillaged him, told us recently, at the house, that they had shot at him from a swivel-gun and narrowly missed hitting their boat. It is thought that there were a few French with them as they are not accustomed to the use of arms. Do not let anything worry you. We are keeping guard and they shall soon withdraw.

LAIR, priest.

Il faut gagner ces Français et s'unir pour apprivoiser les Esquimaux.

De toutes les nouvelles qui ont été mandées du Labrador l'année 1716 et du contenu de toutes les lettres ci-jointes on doit conclure :

1° Qu'une lettre écrite à la baie Phélippeaux le 4me de septembre étant arrivée à Versailles le 18me octobre, le voyage de France à Labrador n'est ni long ni difficile et par consequent que ce pays peut être secouru en peu de temps ;

2° Que les Esquimaux sont en grand nombre et bons marins ; que le pays est bon et habitable et que l'on peut y faire des établissements fixes puisqu'il y a des chevaux et des vaches, des brebis et quantité de volailles, que les herbages, les racines, et les légumes de France y viennent bien, sans parler de la chasse et de la pêche qui y sont en abondance ;

3° Que la poche étant très abondante et d'un grand profit sur la côte du Labrador qui a près de 400 lieues, il faut y faire au moins trois établissements fixes ; un à la baie de Phélippeaux, le second au détroit de Belle-ile et le troisième à la baie de Kesselaki, tant pour y faire la pêche que pour arrêter les sauvages des Esquimaux. Pour cet effet il faut dans chacun des trois postes avoir une garnison d'environ 15 soldats avec un officier. La compagnie de Mr de Courtemanche suffira pour ces trois postes dans chacun desquels il faut bâtir une tour d'environ 40 pieds de haut à cause des neiges. Dans laquelle les soldats et l'officier logeront et sur laquelle on mettra des coulevrines pour empêcher les Esquimaux d'approcher. Il est même à

The Frenchmen must be won over and we must be united in order to render the Esquimaux sociable.

From all the news received from Labrador during the year 1716 and the contents of every letter hereto annexed, it must be concluded :

1° That a letter, written at Bay Phélippeaux, on 4 September, having reached Versailles on 18 October, the journey from France to Labrador is neither long nor trying, and therefore, this country may obtain relief in a short time ;

2° That the Esquimaux are numerous and are good sailors ; that the country is a good one and inhabitable and that permanent establishments may be formed, inasmuch as there are horses, cows, sheep and a number of fowls ; herbs, roots and vegetables from France grow well, without mentioning game and fish which are in abundance;

3° That the fisheries being very abundant and very lucrative on the coast of Labrador which is nearly 400 leagues long, at least three permanent establishments should be formed there; one at the bay of Phélippeaux, the second at the strait of Belleisle and the third one at the bay of Kesselaki, to carry on fishing as well as to check the Esquimaux savages. To this end, each of the three posts will require with a garrison of about 15 soldiers with an officer. M. de Courtcmanche's company will be sufficient for these three posts in each of which will have to be built a tower of about 40 feet in height on account of the snow. The soldiers and their propos d'avoir dans chaque poste un brigantin bien armé pour leur donner la chasse ;

4° Qu'il faut employer tous les moyens imaginables pour apprivoiser les Esquimaux.

Ces moyens sont : 1° De défendre aux Français de tirer sur eux et de les maltraiter ; 2° de tâcher d'en attirer ou attraper quelques-uns de leur faire toutes sortes de bons traitements, et de les renvoyer avec des présents pour eux et pour leurs compatriotes ; 3° d'engager quelques Français hardi et adroit d'aller chez eux pour tâcher de les gagner ou du moins pour engager les Français que l'on croit être parmi eux de les persuader d'avoir commerce avec les Français. Pour cet effet promettre et donner de bonnes récompenses à ces Français ; 4° Engager les Jésuites à établir une mission chez les sauvages. C'est certainement le meilleur moyen pour les apprivoiser, ces Pères ayant un talent admirable pour gagner les Français. Quand ils seront apprivoisés on en retirera des avantages infinis. On profitera de leurs pêches, auxquelles ils sont fort adroits, de leur chasse et de leurs précieuses pelleteries. On les rendra chrétiens. Les Français feront leur pêche avec assurance étant en paix avec eux.

Cet article mérite de sérieuses attentions.

Car si les Esquimaux s'agguerrissent et les Français les aient toujours pour ennemis il faut renoncer au Labrador et à la pêche qui s'y fait ce qui serait une grande perte ; 5° Il faut aussi que dans chaque poste il y ait un magasin de vivres afin que les équipages des navires qui peuvent périr ou qui par d'autres accidents peuvent être obligés de passer l'hiver dans ce officer will live in it, and on it, will be the culverins to keep the Esquimaux at a distance. It is also desirable to have, at each post, a well armed brigantine to pursue them ;

4° That all conceivable means must be employed to render the Esquimaux friendly.

Such means are : 1. To forbid the French to shoot at them or ill-treat them ; 2. To endeavour to win over or seize a few of them, then to treat them with kindness and send them back with presents for themselves and their fellow-people ; 3. To induce a few bold and clever Frenchmen to go among them in order to win them over or, at least, to prevail upon those Frenchmen believed to be with them to persuade them to trade with the French. To this end, suitable rewards ought to be promised and given to those Frenchmen ; 4. To engage the Jesuits to establish a mission amongst them, for these fathers have an astonishing talent for winning over [to] the French. Once they have been civilized, immense benefits may be derived from them. We will profit by their fisheries, at which they are very clever, by their chase and their valuable furs. We will convert them to Christianity. Being at peace with them, the French will be able to carry on their fishery in security.

This article is deserving of the most careful consideration. In fact, if the Esquimaux become hardened against us and are always considered by the French as enemies, the Labrador and the fisheries must be given up that are carried on there, which would mean an enormous loss ; 5. At every post there must also be a store of provisions to save from death by cold or hardships the crews from any vessels that may be wrecked, or as a result of other accidents, may be compelled to winter in this pays-là n'y meurent pas de faim ni de froid ni de misère ; 6° Il faut marquer les limites des dépendances de chaque poste, faire défense à ceux qui les auront d'aller dans les dépendances de leurs voisins tant pour la pêche que pour la traite avec les sauvages ; défense de débaucher les hommes et les sauvages de leurs voisins même de les recevoir et prendre à leurs gages ; défendre de vendre de l'eau-de-vie, des armes et de la poudre aux sauvages crainte qu'étant très nombreux et fort adroits ils ne deviennent trop puissants ; 7° Ordonner aux concessionnaires de vivre en union, de se secourir aider et défendre les uns les autres ; et recommander au commandant ou gouverneur du Labrador d'y tenir la main et de donner avis à la Cour de ceux qui feront leur devoir et qui s'appliqueront à rendre la colonie florissante afin qu'ils soient récompensés, rien n'étant plus précieuse et estimable pour les colonies nouvelles qu'un bon et zélé habitant ; 8° Il faut donner une grande liberté aux pêcheurs et ne les point inquiéter ni gêner dans leur commerce. Il me semble néanmoins que l'on pourrait les obliger d'entretenir les trois petits forts et la compagnie de soldats qui y sera en garnison, et même de tenir la dite compagnie toujours complète par les recrues qu'ils y mèneront à leurs dépens. Dans chaque poste ils auront un magasin de munitions de guerre et de bouche rempli et entretenu à leurs dépens, et le garde-magasin qu'ils auront droit de mettre dépendra d'eux. Il y aura aussi dans chaque poste un magasin de vivres et d'habits appartenant aux pêcheurs.

Le garde-magasin dépendra d'eux. Il ne distribuera ou vendra ces vivres et habits que par leurs ordres et ne rendra compte qu'à eux, ou bien il faut faire pour l'entretien des forts et de la garnison du Labrador ce que le Roi a fait depuis peu pour l'entretien des forts de Guinée. Il est juste country : 6. The boundaries of the dependencies of each post must be determined. It must also be forbidden to the owners of such dependencies to enter their neighbours' dependencies either for fishing or to carry on trade with the Indians ; to prohibit the enticing away of their neighbours' men and Indians or from harbouring them and hiring them ; to prohibit the sale of brandy, arms and powder to Indians lest the latter, owing to their great number and adroitness, become too powerful ; 7. Enjoin the grantees to live united, to help, assist and defend one another ; and to recommend to the Commandant or Governor of Labrador to be vigilant and report to the Court those who have done their duty and who have been instrumental in rendering the colony prosperous, as nothing is more valuable or highly prized for a new colony than a good and zealous settler ; 8. The fishermen must be given the greatest freedom possible and they must not be disturbed nor interfered with in their trade. Nevertheless, it seems to me that they might be held to maintain the three small forts and the company of soldiers garrisoned therein, and also to keep up to strength the said company with recruits they would bring there at their own expense. At each post, they shall have a magazine of ammunition and provisions to be kept filled and maintained at their expense, and the storekeeper, whom they shall be authorised to appoint there, shall be dependent on them. There shall also be at each post a store-room for food and clothing belonging to the fishermen.

The store-keeper shall be dependent on them. Such food and clothing shall only be issued or sold by him on their order and he shall only be accountable to them. Or else what the King has done lately for the maintenance of the forts in Guinea will have to be done for the upkeep of the que les pêcheurs qui ont tous les profits fassent les frais nécessaires pour la sûreté et la commodité de leur commerce ; frais qui ne seront pas considérables et qui cependant leur procureront de grands avantages. Mais aussi il faut absolument empêcher qu'ils ne soient inquiétés par les officiers et soldats, ni par les Esquimaux ; 9° Le grand nombre dès Esquimaux, leur hardiesse à venir en flotte au nombre de 800 jusqu'à la baie Phélippeaux, les fusils, pistolets, pierreries et chaloupes qu'ils ont, les Français qui sont avec eux, les courses, ravages et pelleteries qu'ils ont faites et qui augmenteront si on n'y met pas ordre, font voir qu'il est de la dernière importance de s'y opposer au plus tôt soit par l'établissement des trois postes dont j'ai parlé ; surtout de celui du district de Belle-Ile par où passent ces sauvages et où il faut avoir quelques brigantins armés pour les arrêter à ce passage, soit en prenant les moyens pour les apprivoiser et les rendre amis des Français ; 10° La vigilance et la hardiesse de Mr. de Courtemanche pour s'opposer à une flotte d'environ 800 sauvages et pour les mettre en fuite méritent bien quelques récompenses, au moins quelques gracieusetés ; un homme qui veut bien, pour le service de l'Etat demeurer presque seul, dans un pays inhabité tel que le Labrador, étant impayable.

forts and garrison in Labrador. It is fair that the fishermen, who get all the profits, should bear the necessary expense to insure the safety and convenience of their business ; such costs would not be very heavy and still they would derive great benefits therefrom. On the other hand, their being disturbed by the officers and soldiers or by the Esquimaux should be absolutely prevented ; 9. The large numbers of the Esquimaux, their boldness in coming, 800 strong, as far as the bay of Phélippeaux, the muskets, pistols, swivel-guns and boats which they have, the Frenchmen who are with them, their incursions, ravages, the peltries they have secured, which are bound to increase unless they are stopped, are all so many things which tend to show that it is of the utmost importance to take action against them at the earliest possible moment. either by the establishment of the three posts above referred to, particularly that of the district of Belleisle through which these Esquimaux travel and where there should be a few armed brigantines to intercept them at this pass, or by taking the necessary means to civilize them and make them the friends of the French ; 10. The vigilance and gallantry displayed by M. de Courtemanche in opposing himself to a fleet of some 800 Indians and putting them to flight are well worth some recognition, at least a few presents ; a man who is willing, for the service of the State, to live, practically alone, in an uninhabited country like Labrador, is almost priceless.

SECTION I.

CENSUS STATISTICS OF CANADA.

No. 1422.

MEMORANDUM BY DOMINION STATISTICIAN ON CANADIAN CENSUS RETURNS FOR THE LABRADOR PENINSULA.

In submitting a statement upon the census returns of Canada affecting the territory within the Labrador peninsula, it is desirable first to take note of certain changes affecting the territorial limits of the Dominion in that quarter. The Dominion of Canada was called into existence by the British North America Act, 1867. Under section 6 of this Act, the part of the Province of Canada (as it existed at the date of the Act) which had formerly constituted the Province of Lower Canada was made the Province of Quebec. Three years later—by Imperial Order-in-Council of the 23rd June, 1870—Rupert's Land was admitted into and made a part of the Dominion of Canada. Since that time the whole Peninsula, exclusive only of the coastline from Blanc Sablon to Cape Chidley, has always been considered and treated for the purposes of the census as embraced within the Dominion as being part and parcel either of the Province of Quebec or of the unorganized territories of the Dominion.

Various censuses had been taken prior to Confederation which affected territory within the Peninsula, but except as regards the censuses taken in the old Province of Canada (1840-1867) in 1851 and 1861, the published returns of these censuses consist merely of a general abstract of the aggregate return of population for each census district, and there are no details indicating the distribution of the population within each district. For instance, the report of the census of 1825 in the Province of Lower Canada gives for the county of Northumberland (which as constituted by Proclamation of the Lieutenant-Governor of Lower Canada of 7th May, 1792, published in pursuance of the Imperial Act 31 Geo. III., chap. 31, s. 14, comprehended all that part of the Province to the north of the St. Lawrence and east of the river Montmorency) simply a total return of 11,189.¹

Similarly, the census or rather statistical inquiry made in December, 1827 (as adjusted to the new civil divisions and subdivisions of the Province established by the Act 9 Geo. IV. (1829), chap. 73, L. Can.), gives only a general return for the county of Saguenay (which under that Act replaced the County of Northumberland as regards the Labrador peninsula) of 8416.² This return was accompanied by a “recapitulation and estimates” which included the following³:

Number of men employed in the King's Posts and Mingan, within the Province	400

Voyageurs employed in the Indian trade, some- times sojourning in the Indian territories	300

The figures given in this statement were, moreover, stated to be “exclusive of the military forces of the country and the aborigines wandering in the interior.”

The published returns of the censuses taken in Lower Canada in 1831 and 1844 are correspondingly general : they give a total return for the county of Saguenay in 1831 of 9,891⁴and in 1844 of 13,787.⁵

Brief notes are given below of the censuses taken under the Act of 1847 (10-11 Vic. c. 14, Can.) in the Province of Canada and, since Confederation, in the Dominion of Canada under the Census Act of 1870 (33 Vict. c. 21, Can.), and succeeding legislation. The Act last cited provided for a census of the Dominion of Canada in the first year of each decade.

CENSUS OF 1851-1852.

The census returns for the county of Saguenay give details for various places along the Saguenay River and the north shore of the River and Gulf of St. Lawrence, and include for sub-district No. 364 “Escoumins, Sault au Cochon, Isle Jeremie et Postes du Roi” (King's Posts), a return of 1284⁶ (which return, a footnote states, “includes 500 for King's Posts, and back settlements not taken”), and for sub-district No. 378 “Indians,” a return of 663.⁷

CENSUS OF 1860-61

In the report of this census, the returns for the county of Saguenay¹ are detailed for several sub-districts, including the various localities along the north shore of the St. Lawrence and places which are not named. e.g.:—

River Moisi and other places	705
Shelldrake and other places	1050
Gibraltar Cove and other places	370

	River St. Jean and other places	649
² ib. sup. p. 35	Bay of Kegasca and other places	933

³ ib. sup. p. 542

The table of census by origin for this county shows that the total return for the county of 6,101 included 804 Indians, all of them tributary to places named along the north shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence.² The table of census by “professions, trades and occupations” shows that the return for the county of Saguenay included 1,038 hunters.³

CENSUS OF 1871

In the report of this census, the returns for the southeastern part of the Peninsula vast of the Bersimis River included under the Province of Quebec, in census district No. 152, “Labrador.”⁴ The detailed returns are given for various sub-districts lettered from A to H, identified with the names of places along the north shore of the St. Lawrence and comprising in all a superficial area of 38,856,353 acres. These returns include for:—

560	Sauvages de Mingan

These figures indicate that the census contained an enumeration of a very considerable portion of the Indians inhabiting the interior country of the southeastern half of the Peninsula. The census, however, contained a special return of the aboriginal population of Canada, which shows that the whole of the Indians within the Labrador peninsula were enumerated as subjects of Canada. This return was set forth in the form of a table with an accompanying illustrative map indicating the territory occupied

“By the Census of 1871, an exact enumeration has for the first time been made of the aboriginal population within the limits of the Province of Prince Edward Island (323), of Nova Scotia (1,666), of New Brunswick (1,403), of Quebec (6,988), and of Ontario (12,978), showing a total for these five Provinces of 23,358.

“However, as the Census has recorded this population only by localities and not by tribes, it has been thought desirable to supply this deficiency, and at the same time to try to establish the number of the indigenous population throughout the whole extent of the British possession in North America, together with the approximate extent of the superficies inhabited by each of the tribes, or groups of tribes ; the result of which will be found summarized in the Table which follows. The information has been drawn from the Census of 1871, from the writings and notes of the missionaries ; from reports, works and memoirs published at different periods, and from details received, viva voce, from persons who have been in intimate relations with these clans.”

“The names given in the following Table are those sanctioned by history or by the authority of ethnographers to mark the distinct groups ; there are added to each, letters indicating the race to which the tribe belongs.

“It is scarcely necessary to say that the hunting grounds of each Indian tribe are not actually marked off by precise and invariable limits, like those which divide the Provinces of an organized country from one another, and that, therefore, the figures, beyond those taken from the Census of 1871, are only approximate. As to the calculations of the superficies, they have, in common with the rest of the work, been very carefully made, and it is confidently believed they do not yield in point of exactitude to the estimates made from time to time (which all necessarily vary) of the superficies of the unsurveyed regions of the American continent. From the total superficies, shown in the Table by tribal occupancy, and given in detail hereafter, for each Province, the bays and the great estuaries have been eliminated.”

CENSUS OF 1880-81.

The census returns for census district No. 76, “Chicoutimi and Saguenay” (Province of Quebec), contains details for various sub-districts along the north shore of the River and Gulf of St. Lawrence and includes for sub-district “ff. Unorganized Territory” a total return of 1,416.¹ The table of census by origin shows that the returns for the whole census district of Chicoutimi and Saguenay included 1,480 Indians, of which number 1,398 were in the unorganized territory.²

Census district No. 192, designated "The Territories," gives the returns for the unorganized territories of Canada, including as sub-districts

“v. Eastern Rupert's Land,” and “w. Labrador.” The total return given for Eastern Rupert's Land is 4,349 ; that for Labrador 1,035.¹

The table of census by origin gives a return of 4,016 Indians for “Eastern Rupert's Land,” and of 1,000 for “Labrador (Can'n. Interior).”²

In the introduction to the report of this census, the following observations were made with regard to the census of the aboriginal population :

“It has been almost impossible to make an enumeration, properly so-called, of the Indian population over a great extent of the unorganized territory of the Confederation ; consequently the rate of the aboriginal population of the sub-districts thus situated has been settled by estimate, these districts being :

* * * *

All the sub-districts of District 192 (Territories) with the exception of those included in the Indian Treaties Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7, the enumeration of these being made according to the indemnity per head paid by the Department of the Interior ; and also with the exception of the principal portion of the Indian population of Eastern Rupert's Land, which has been regularly enumerated.

“The estimates of the Indian population of the sub-districts, not susceptible of enumeration, are the same as those published in the fourth volume of the Statistics and Census of 1871, whose approximate correctness is fully proved by a comparison of them with the portion regularly enumerated in 1881. In round numbers, of the total aboriginal population, amounting to 108,547 souls in the Census of 1881, the estimate just spoken of has been made in respect to 34,000.”

The census of this year includes detailed returns for census district No. 148, “Chicoutimi and Saguenay,” Province of Quebec. The returns for this district are identified with various sub-districts including as one of them “mm. Unorganized Territory” with a total population of 1,387.³ Census district No. 201, “The Unorganized Territories,” includes “Labrador,” but only the total return for the whole district, viz., 32,168, is given.⁴ There are no details to show what proportion of this enumeration belonged to “Labrador.”

respecting territory within the Labrador peninsula have now to be noticed.

By Order-in-Council (Dom.) of the 18th December, 1897, rescinding a previous Order-in-Council of the 2nd October, 1895, the unorganized portions of Canada were divided into provisional districts. One of these districts—the district of Ungava—as described by the Order-in-Council and outlined on accompanying map, comprised all that part of the Labrador peninsula bounded on the south by the northern boundary of the Province of Quebec as subsequently fixed by chap. 3 of the Statutes of Canada, 1898, saving the coastline northward from Hamilton Inlet to Cape Chidley. By the statute just cited, the northern and northeastern boundaries of the Province of Quebec were conventionally defined. The boundary was drawn along the middle of the Eastmain river from its mouth to its source in Patamisk Lake and from the most northerly point thereof along a straight line approximately in latitude 52° 55' north to its intersection with the Ashuanipi branch of the Hamilton River, thence along the middle of that river to “the Bay du Rigolet or Hamilton Inlet” and thence easterly along the middle of the said bay or inlet “until it strikes the westerly boundary of the territory under the jurisdiction of Newfoundland,” and thence southerly along the said boundary to the point where it strikes the north shore of the Anse Sablon in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Contemporaneously, the boundary on the north of the county of Saguenay, which had theretofore been coterminous with “the limits of the Province” (vide, R. S. Q. 1888, Art. 64, No. 54) was changed and the county now became limited on the north “by the parallel of 52° 45' north latitude and by the line dividing the waters of the basin of the River St. Lawrence from those of the River Ashuanipi, Hamilton or des Esquimaux” (vide, 62 Vict. (Que.) c. 6, s. 8). The county, nevertheless, continued to be, and still is, bounded on the east by “the limits of the Province” (vide, 62 Vict. (Que.) c. 6, s. 8 ; R. S. Q. 1909, Art. 67, No. 60 ; 13 Geo. V. c. 13, s. 1). The lands within the Province, north of the county of Saguenay, were constituted a territory to be known and designated under the name of “Territory of Ashuanipi” (vide, 62 Vict. (Que.), c. 5, s. 2). As defined by this Act “the territory of Ashuanipi is bounded on the north, east and west by the limits of the Province ; and on the south and southwest by the county of Saguenay. The territory so bounded comprises the basin of the River Ashuanipi, Hamilton or Esquimaux, as well as all other parts of territory watered by water-courses flowing directly towards the Atlantic.”

of Quebec. These returns are identified with fifty-five sub-districts embracing all the localities along the north shore of the St. Lawrence and all the unoccupied and unorganized territory in the district.¹ The table of census by origin for this district shows that the total return includes 1,990 Indians, most of them included in the sub-districts along the north shore of the St. Lawrence.² For the unorganized districts of the Province of Quebec, viz., Abittibi, Mistassini and Ashuanipi, the census gives a return of 2,405.³ Of this total 1,270 are, by the table of origin, classified as Indians, 49 as half-breeds, and 925

CENSUS OF 1911.

The report of this census gives detailed returns for census district No. 154, "Chicoutimi and Saguenay," Province of Quebec, in much the same manner as the census report of 1901, except that the details are given for 69 sub-districts.⁵ The total return for the unorganized parts of the Province is 2,066.⁶ The published returns of this census did not include the returns for the district of Ungava as the details had not been received at the time the volumes went to press. An addition of 1,285 was, however, made on this account to the general total. The pertinent details of the enumeration which was made are as follows :

301	Rigolet
225	Northwest River
8	Wickham Bay
10	Hope's Advance Bay
710	Chimo on Koksoak River
31	Wolstenholme

Mr. P. G. Smith took the census of Northwest River, which included the population of Goose Bay and Mud Lake on the Hamilton River. Mr. William E. Swaffield took the census returns for Rigolet.

CHANGE OF THE BOUNDARIES OF THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

By chap. 45 of the Statutes of Canada, 1912, the boundaries of the Province of Quebec were extended so as to embody in that Province the whole of the Peninsula exclusive only of the area of the coastline over which the Colony of Newfoundland exercised lawful jurisdiction. The territory so annexed to the Province of Quebec was constituted a new territory under the name of " New Quebec " (Statutes of Quebec, 1912, chap. 13).

CENSUS OF 1921.

The census returns for all that part of the Province of Quebec east of the Bersimis River were included under the census district of Saguenay. These returns gave details not only for all the localities along the north shore of the St. Lawrence, but also for Ungava,¹ under which the enumeration included:—

155 Northwest River
317
Port Burwell

The total return for Saguenay included, according to the table of origin, 2,368 Indians, of which 1,068 were shown as in Ungava, and 1,292 on Indian reserves ; 1,557 were of unspecified racial origin.²

It may be added that the census of Ungava was carried out through the agency of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Hudson's Bay Company's factors, and Roman Catholic and Church of England missionaries. With regard to the Lake Melville district, the method of the census may be illustrated by the following report of the officer in charge, Mr. John S. Black-hall, Post Manager of the Hudson's Bay Company's post at Rigolet :

“I have divided the names into two sections : (1) those who reside in this vicinity (Rigolet) all the year, and (2) those who only come within my jurisdiction during the summer months-July to September. The remaining months they trek inland, say, one hundred miles west and then come within the station at Northwest River, named by you North West Arm.

“This district comprises an area of, say, forty miles, West and North, and twenty miles East and South. The natives and settlers being scattered along the inlet and rivers in various creeks and coves.

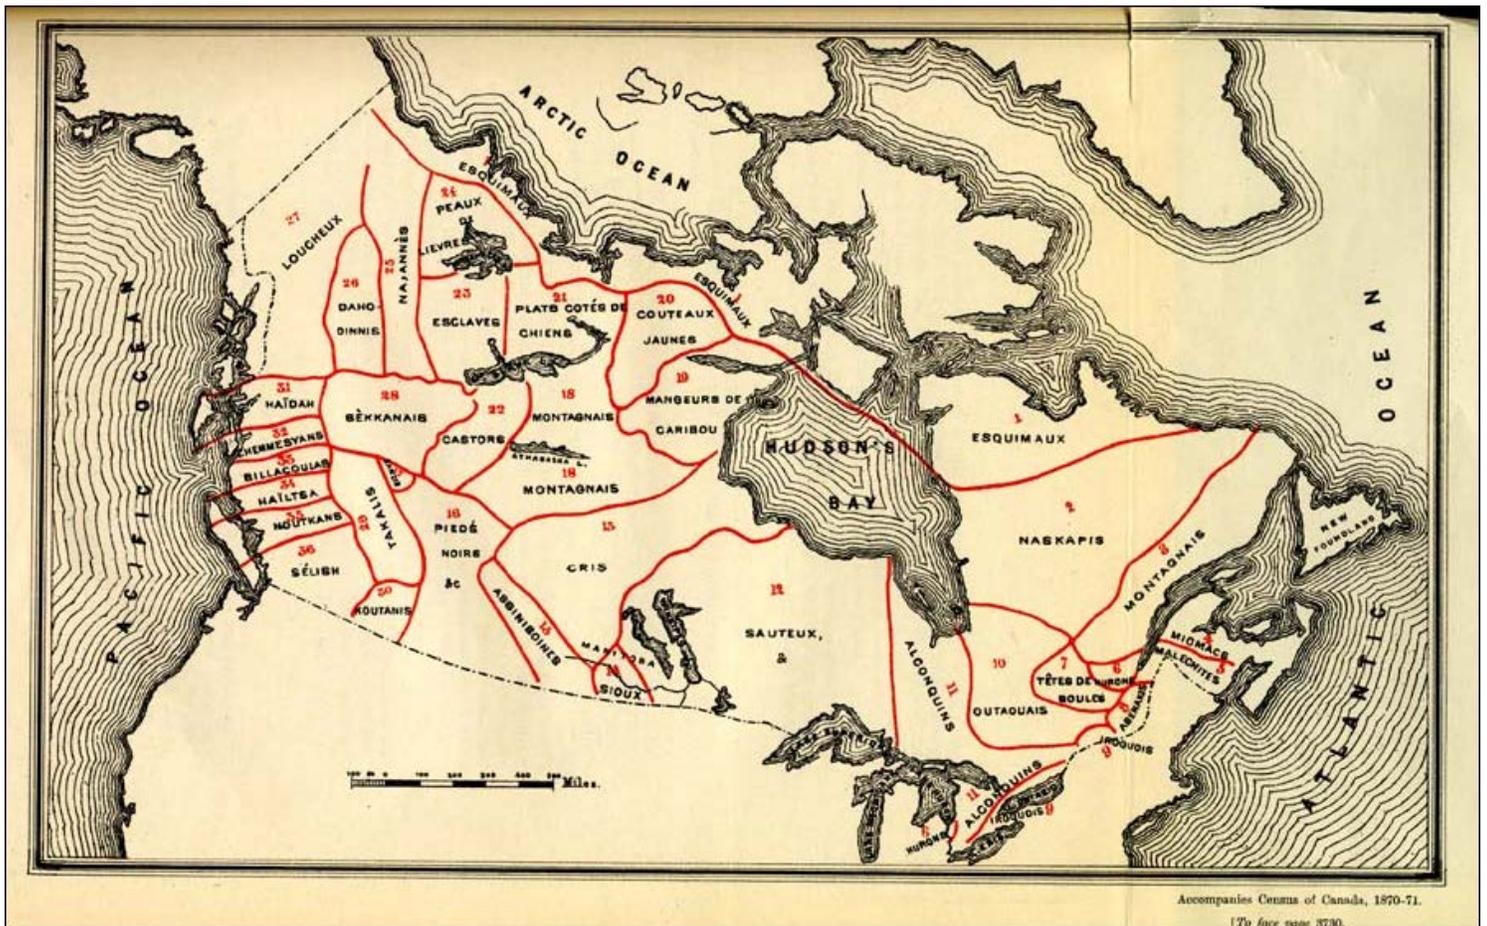

“I have not included the coast dwellers, that is, those who remain on the coastline all the year, as admittedly they belong to Newfoundland.” A second officer in this district, Mr. E. F. Ewing, reported as follows :

“I have now completed the census of Northwest River and the following outlying settlements, Grand River, Kenemish, Traverspine, Sabasquashew, and North West Islands.”

SECTION II.

VOLUNTARY STATEMENTS OF INHABITANTS OF THE LAKE MELVILLE DISTRICT AND TWO AFFIDAVITS RELATING TO THE VOLUNTARY STATEMENTS.

No. 1423.

IN THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

IN THE MATTER OF THE BOUNDARY BETWEEN THE DOMINION OF CANADA AND THE COLONY OF NEWFOUNDLAND ON THE LABRADOR COAST.

Voluntary Statement of ERNEST F. EWING, of North West River, Lake Melville.

1. I am the Post Manager of the Hudson's Bay Company's post situated at the mouth of North West River in Lake Melville. I have served with the Hudson's Bay Company at Cartwright as accountant, at Rigoulette Post as acting Manager and four years as Post Manager at North West River Post. From my experience on the Labrador and examination of the ancient records of the Hudson's Bay Co., I have acquired some knowledge of the conditions of trade and happenings in this region for some years past, and, more particularly, of the facts and matters hereinafter mentioned.

2. Re Indian Trade : The fur trading post at North West River, operated by the Hudson's Bay Company, was established in the year 1836, for the purpose of trading with the Indians. During the time North West River was supplied from Quebec with a French Canadian priest, this Post was the headquarters (during summer months) of large bands of Indians, chiefly of the Montagnais tribe. A few Nascaupes also come this way. With the passing of the caribou, the Nascaupes ceased to come, as the journey was too far to undertake unless deer were plentiful. These Indians now come from Ungava (their headquarters) to Davis Inlet and from there get enough grub to enable them to resume their hunting back to Ungava.

The Montagnais or Mountaineer Indians still continue to visit North West River annually and each year we receive contingents from Mingan, Seven Islands, Nascarrow, and St. Augustine. These Indians are dependent on North West River for sufficient supplies to enable them to hunt furs on their way out to the above mentioned gulf posts. The country over which Indians hunt, ranges as follows : St. Augustine Indians hunt and always have hunted from St. Augustine to Sandwich Bay. Mingan and Seven Island Indians' hunting grounds extend from Mingan and Seven Islands respectively to Lake Michikamau and the Grand or Hamilton River. Over these hunting grounds they claim their fathers and forefathers have always hunted and trapped. The Nascaupes hunt from Ungava to Lake Michikamau. Indians, when hungry, will kill game and in fact all animals at any season of the year, for food, irrespective of the condition of the skin, and of game regulations. When hunting fur, however, they conform to the game laws of Quebec rather than to those of Newfoundland for the reason that they would otherwise be unable to dispose of their pelts at the gulf post which are regularly visited by the Quebec game inspectors.

3. Re Customs Duties : This Post has been in the habit of paying Customs Duties to the Newfoundland Government for some years, but always under protest, as we claim that this post comes under the jurisdiction of Canada rather than of Newfoundland.

4. Re Game and Fish Regulations : Salmon and trout are netted during July and August in Lake Melville and its tributary rivers and streams. Newfoundland's game laws are, the hunters claim, not applicable to this country. Owing to climatic differences, the seasons are not the same as Newfoundland's, and, therefore, as the different fur bearing animals change with the seasons, the natives cannot conform with Newfoundland game laws even if they were otherwise disposed to do so. Representation has been made by the natives to the Newfoundland Government to have the existing laws altered, but their requests have not been granted. The game laws as applied in the province of Quebec will be of great advantage to Lake Melville and the Hamilton Inlet.

5. Re Magisterial Authority in Lake Melville : M. Murphy, J.P., of Cartwright, one of the commissioners of the Newfoundland Supreme Court, and Dr. W. T. Grenfell, have authority to try cases in Labrador. Dr. Grenfell has to my knowledge tried a few cases in this Bay. In one case, an Indian was tried for catching furs out of season. This case was dismissed. Some few cases of seduction have also been tried. Samuel Hope, charged with seducing a young girl, was fined $100.00 and James Michelin was sentenced to one year in gaol for the like offence. He was incarcerated at St. Johns.

6. Re Grants of Mineral Lands : I have been informed by Charles Goudie of North West River that sixteen grants were made on Lake Winokapau on the Hamilton River, all of which have lapsed with the exception of five, which, I understand, Goudie is holding for himself and others, paying $20.00 per annum for each grant to the Newfoundland Government.

p. 3738

7. Re Grants of Poor Relief : The Newfoundland Government dispenses relief at Rigoulette and Cartwright and along the coast. Owing to the hunting facilities being good and possibly to more energy being shown by the natives of North West River, there has been very little need of relief at this post. When necessary however I have issued relief to natives on account of the Newfoundland Government. I also issue relief when occasion arises to sick and destitute non-treaty Indians who, being considered Canadians, have no claim on the Newfoundland Government. Relief was issued by me to Indians last year, and application has been made to the Indian department at Ottawa for payment of the same.

8. Re Religious Dependence of Indians : The Indians visiting and inhabiting this post, depend as their forefathers did before them, upon the diocese of Quebec to furnish them with a priest for spiritual instruction and for the purpose of christening their infants and burying their dead. They will carry their dead about with them for hundreds of miles until they meet a priest in order that their dead may be buried upon consecrated ground. The religious superstitions of the Indians are very pronounced and their belief in the rites of the Roman Catholic Church very strong.

9. Re Census. The census of North West River and surroundings was taken by Mr. P. Smith of the Hudson's Bay Company in 1911. The Hudson's Bay Company is taking it this season for the Canadian Government.

10. Re Codfish in Lake Melville. There are no codfish in Lake Melville proper. Some years codfish will come to within a short distance of Rigoulette post, and in 1919 whilst I was at Rigoulette the natives caught large quantities at Burnt Wood Head one mile below the Hudson's Bay Company's post. This is a very unusual occurrence and possibly does not happen once in a decade. The caplin which the codfish pursues for food does not enter this Inlet and this together with prevalence of fresh water in this bay, accounts for the fact that there are not now, nor apparently ever have been, any deep sea codfish in Lake Melville.

11. Re Natives Attitude Towards Boundary Question : The natives of North West River and outlying settlements have expressed the wish that they desire a change in their condition ; that whilst the boundary question is in dispute they still have to pay taxes to the Newfoundland Government for which they receive nothing in return, except a more or less casual mail service.

I make the foregoing statement voluntarily, verily believing it to be true according to the best of my knowledge, information and belief.

No. 1424.

IN THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

CANADA AND THE COLONY OF NEWFOUNDLAND ON THE LABRADOR COAST.

Voluntary Statement of RAOUL THEVENET, of North West River, Lake Melville.

1. I am the manager of the fur trading post of Revillon Freres Trading Co. Ltd., which is situated at the mouth of the Northwest River in Lake Melville. This post was established in 1901 for the purpose of trading in furs with the Montagnais and Nascaupee Indians but more particularly with the former, sometimes called the Gulf of St. Lawrence Indians, which we knew were "hunting" in the country in and about Lake Melville and its tributary rivers. I took charge of the post in 1909.

2. Re Indian Trade : The Indians with whom we trade are mostly Montagnais. We see also a few Nascaupees but only a few families make North West River their headquarters. All the others, the Montagnais, come from St. Augustine, Mingan, Seven Islands and Nascarow, on the Gulf of St. Lawrence. These we see only during the winter months when they come out to replenish their provisions, it being too far for them to go and come back to and from their original trading posts to their hunting grounds in the same season. The territory at and around North West River as far as Hopedale towards the coast has been the best of the Indian hunting ground for generations past, but these last few years the so-called Natives (half-breeds) and Newfoundlanders have been making a regular business of trapping, some of them having as many as three to six hundred traps set during the hunting season. In doing this they have overrun the Indian hunting grounds. The Indians are continually complaining to me about the matter, for, as hunting is their only means of living, they are getting poorer every year. Indeed but for the relief which has been given them at the expense of the Government of Canada some of them would surely have starved. They are becoming very bitter against the white trappers and any year trouble may break out. No relief whatever has been given to the Indians by the Newfoundland Government. The North West River Posts get only a small share of the Indian fur trade ; by far the largest part goes to the posts on the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Perhaps this is accounted for, in a large measure, by the fact that the Indians for generations past have been devout Roman Catholics and have been in the habit of going out each year to the Gulf posts to meet the priest in charge of the Missions which have been long established at these posts. In former times, a Roman Catholic priest from Quebec used to visit North West River and for some time there was a Roman Catholic Mission here ; but for some reason unknown to me the priest discontinued his visits about thirty years ago, telling the Indians to meet him thereafter at the Missions on the Gulf.

3. Re Customs Duties : My Company pays each year about Three Thousand Dollars in duties to the Newfoundland Government, and has been doing this since the post was established. We have always paid under protest. We have never been required to pay any duties on furs caught in Canadian territory and exported to Newfoundland via North West River and Rigoulette. Only goods imported from Canada and coming through Rigoulette to points inland have been taxed. We never see any Newfoundland officials, except the Customs Officer at Rigoulette and some years a Game and Fish Warden. In 1910 and 1911 Judge Morris and Minister of Marine Picott paid us a visit. It was short. I complained about the mail service which was and is still shamefully handled and nil during the winter. They made a good many promises which they did not or could not keep, and it is the last we saw or heard of them. This mail service is the only return ever given to the people here for all the moneys paid to the Newfoundland Government by way of duties. The Labrador people have no representative in the Newfoundland Legislature.

4. Re Land Grants : Some grants of lands were made by the Newfoundland Government in 1905 to some of the natives, notably to Malcolm McLean of Carter's Basin and to a number of the natives at Grand Village, Mud Lake, but I cannot say how much land was granted. The fee charged appears to have been about Three Dollars for Fifty Acres. Licenses of mining locations have also been granted by the Newfoundland government as far inland as Lake Winokapou on the Hamilton River. I submit herewith two of these licenses ; one, in favour of Charles H. Goudie and, the other, in favour of Joseph Lescandron, both of North West River.

5. Re Magisterial Authority : For some ten or fifteen years past, Doctor W. T. Grenfell, of the Deep Sea Mission, who is a Newfoundland Justice of the Peace for The Labrador, occasionally has visited North West River and heard a number of cases. In 1914 a Canadian, Mr. Armand Martin, then the Manager of Revillon Freres Post here, was appointed a Justice of the Peace for North West River. He vacated the office in 1915 when he left North West River. Dr. Paddon of the Grenfell Mission was appointed in his room and stead. Dr. Paddon heard three cases here : two were cases of seduction and one a breach of the game regulations. In one of the seduction cases, Dr. Paddon imposed a fine of $100 ; in the other, he sentenced the accused to one year in gaol. The prisoner was taken to the gaol at St. John's and when he came back he reported that it was the best time he ever had had in his life. His term was shortened three months for good conduct and on his release the Warden of the gaol showed him the " sights " of the City. Thus, the administration of Justice at North West River has been made as attractive as possible to the natives. In the third case, relating to the breach of the game regulations, Dr. Paddon dismissed the charge but forfeited the pelts which were 1 Silver and 2 Red Foxes.

6. Re Game and Fish Regulations : During recent years an attempt has been made to apply the Newfoundland game and fish regulations at and about North West River, but these regulations are not observed by the natives except during the occasional visit of the Customs Officer at Rigoulette or of the Game and Fish Warden. The Indians make no pretense of observing these regulations at any time, being governed apparently only by their own customs. I understand that a Newfoundland Game and Fish Warden first visited North West River about 1906 ; he was a man named White, Robert Montague says he was told by White to take up his nets which were in the Rapids about three miles above the mouth of North West River, but that he paid no attention to him. Four years ago, however, Game and Fish Warden Delaney required Montague to remove his nets from the Rapids. His reason for doing this is not at all clear in view of the fact that my Company as well as the Hudson's Bay Co. and the Natives of North West River were permitted to continue to fish by nets in the mouth of the River as has been their custom time out of memory. It is the practice of the Game and Fish Warden when he comes here to require the trading companies to fill out forms showing the quantities of furs which they have bought during the season.

7. Re Poor Relief : I know of only one case of relief given by the Newfoundland Government at North West River. The recipient was Mrs. McKenzie. She had just arrived from the coast. The relief amounted to $12 as per order from relieving officer Gosse. It looked much like a personal gift, and she spent it all on fancy articles. That was in 1919. During the Spanish Influenza crisis, the same year, many of the natives died, and the Newfoundland Government was called upon for help. The government's answer, as publicly announced by Sir John C. Crosbie, Minister of Shipping, and published in "The Plaindealer," a weekly newspaper published at St. John's, Newfoundland, early in November, 1919, was "Let them die." This statement is characteristic of the attitude of indifference and neglect which the Newfoundland Government at all times has shown towards the Labrador.

8. Re Cod Fish. No Cod Fishing was ever carried on, so far as I have been able to ascertain, in the waters of Lake Melville, for the good reason that there are no cod fish there. The explanation, resides in the fact that these waters are largely fresh and consequently not a suitable habitat for the deep sea cod fish. This condition of things appears to have existed time out of memory, so there is no reason to believe that cod fish were ever caught in Lake Melville. They have been caught occasionally in the Hamilton Inlet a few miles eastward of Rigoulette, but that I believe is the nearest point to Lake Melville where they have been found.

9. To the best of my knowledge every one of the natives living in this country earnestly wished that this will be held to be Canadian territory. They say, "We do not think anything worse could happen to us than to be put under the jurisdiction of Newfoundland."

I make the foregoing statement voluntarily, verily believing it to be true according to the best of my knowledge, information and belief.

IN THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

IN THE MATTER OF THE BOUNDARY BETWEEN THE DOMINION OF CANADA AND THE COLONY OF NEWFOUNDLAND ON THE LABRADOR COAST.

Voluntary Statement of MALCOLM McLEAN of Carter Basin,
Lake Melville.

1. I came to Labrador from the Island of Lewis, Scotland, a young man of 19 years of age, in the year 1872, in the service of the Hudson's Bay Company. For five years I worked at the Company's posts at Rigoulette and Northwest River ; then I left the Company's service in order to do trapping and fishing on my own account and I have followed that occupation ever since. I have resided continuously on and about the Hamilton Inlet and Lake Melville, and have an intimate knowledge of the conditions which have obtained from time to time and of everything that has happened in this region since I came here.

2. The Montagnais and Nascaupée Indians, with whom the trade at the posts at Rigoulette and the Northwest River has always been carried on, hunt over all the territory north and south of Lake Melville and the Hamilton Inlet, right out to the sea-shore, wherever there is game to be found. They have always been doing that since I came to this country and I believe their forefathers ranged over the same territory. The Eskimo live along the sea-shore north of the Hamilton Inlet, the first considerable settlement of them being at Hopedale where the Moravian Brothers have a mission. A few of them trade at the Hudson's Bay Company's post at Rigoulette but none of them trades at the posts at North West River.

3. The first grants or leases of lands or of timber rights upon Lake Melville of which I have knowledge, were made by the Newfoundland government about 1901. In that year two concerns began operations. One, the Grand River Pulp and Lumber Co., of Nova Scotia, began to cut timber on limits lying upon Goose Bay and the Hamilton River. The Company established two mills : one at Mud Lake and another at Carter's Basin, though they were operated at different times. The Company continued operations until about 1911 or 1912, when the mills were closed down and all operations suspended. Since then. I have cut 5,000 ft. of timber on the Company's good order under the Newfoundland regulations ; but beyond this no further operations have been carried on.

The other lease granted in 1901 was to the firm of Messrs. Calder and Muir of Nova Scotia, of a timber limit upon the Kenamou River. In the fall of 1901, they erected a portable mill at Carter's Basin ; they cut timber throughout the winter and sawed it in the following summer. The lumber was sold to the Grand River Pulp and Lumber Co., which shipped it away. About 1907, Messrs. Carter and Muir sold their limit to S. P. Benjamin, of Nova Scotia, who in the winter of that year had a gang of 14 or 15 men on the limit. They cut a large quantity of logs but nothing further was done. The logs are still rotting on the ground. I understand Mr. Benjamin some time afterwards sold the limit to the McMartins of Montreal but this firm never worked the limit.

In or about September 1913, a man named Edward E. Robinson came to Carter's Basin as the manager of The London and Labrador Corporation, Ltd., of London, England. He began operations for his company on the Kenamou River. They cut logs up to Christmas time the first winter and the next winter they cut a large quantity of pit props on Carter's Basin, and on the north side of Lake Melville about 12 miles east of Northwest River. These props are still on the ground. No further operations were ever carried on by the company.

About 1910 or 1911, and for several years following, a concern called The Labrador Syndicate in which I believe a number of Newfoundlanders were interested, had some cruising done in the timberland around the head of Lake Melville ; also a search was made for minerals. No operations of any kind were started, however.

During two or three summers (1916, 1917 and 1918, I think), a Mr. Penny, agent of the Reids of Newfoundland, did some cruising over the lands around the head of Lake Melville, but no operations resulted from this work.

4. The game and fish regulations of Newfoundland are observed neither by the Indians nor by the settlers in and about the Lake Melville country. During the past six or seven years a Newfoundland game and fish warden has paid an annual visit to Lake Melville, going up as far as Mud Lake. There were many breaches of the law if he had wished to take notice of them, but I have never heard of his taking any action to secure the punishment of offenders.

5. No cod fishing has within my recollection ever been carried on in Lake Melville for the reason that the water of this lake, whilst slightly brackish, contains too much fresh water to make the lake a suitable habitat for this species of fish. On one or two occasions cod-fish have been caught in the Narrows, about three miles eastward of Rigoulette, but this was regarded as a most exceptional event. Usually they are caught about two miles east of Rigoulette in the Hamilton Inlet but rarely to the westward of that limit.

6. According to my certain knowledge, a census has been taken for the Canadian government of the settlers living around Lake Melville on three different occasions, namely, in 1891, 1901 and 1911, and this year it is again being taken. The census of 1891 was taken by Mr. Mesber of Sandwich Bay ; that of 1901 by Mr. Guy, of Sandwich Bay and that of 1911 by Mr. Peter Smith of the Hudson's Bay Company at the Northwest River post.

7. Ever since I came to Labrador, the Indians of the country, both Montagnais and Nascaupée, have been, without exception, devout members of the Roman Catholic Church ; and until last year their spiritual needs were attended to by priests belonging to the diocese of Quebec. Pere Babel was the first priest to visit the Northwest River post. That was in the " Sixties." He was followed by Pere Arnaud who came here several years. He was succeeded in this mission by Pere Lacasse who also made a number of visits. Later on Pere Favert came ; and still later, Pere Le Moine. The last named was the last priest from Quebec to come here. He discontinued his visits about thirty years ago, telling the Indians to come down thereafter to the missions on the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Last year a priest from Newfoundland came here.

8. The inhabitants of this country are dissatisfied with the present state of things and are anxious, according to my knowledge, hardly without exception, that this country should be held to constitute part of Canada rather than Newfoundland.

They believe that their lot cannot be any worse and expect that it is likely to be a great deal better if the question as to the boundary is decided in that way.

9. In 1905, I may add that I secured from the Newfoundland government a grant of 160 acres on Carter's Basin, subject to a reservation of gold, silver, coals and other minerals. I paid the government the sum of $49.00 for this land.

The foregoing statement has been read over to me and I sign the same verily believing it to be true according to the best of my knowledge, information and belief.

CANADA AND THE COLONY OF NEWFOUNDLAND ON THE LABRADOR COAST.

Voluntary Statement of THOMAS L. BLAKE and AMON CHAULK of Mulligan Bight, Lake Melville and JOSEPH MICHELIN of Traverspine on the Hamilton River.

1. We, the undersigned are amongst the oldest inhabitants on and about Lake Melville and the Hamilton Inlet.

I, Thomas L. Blake, was born about 20 miles west of Rigoulette 78 years ago.

I, Joseph Michelin, am 75 years of age and was born at a settlement on Lake Melville about 12 miles east of North West river.

I, Amon Chaulk, aged 66 years, came to the Labrador Coast in 1868 and, except for four years spent at Stag Bay, have lived continuously on and about Lake Melville.

We have been trappers and fishermen all our lives, our practice being to fish in the summer for salmon and to trap fur-bearing animals in the winter time. We have a fair remembrance of the conditions and happenings which have obtained and taken place in this region since we were young men and more particularly of the facts and matters hereinafter mentioned.

2. The Indians who have traded for a great many years at the North West River Post are the Montagnais or Mountaineer Indians who come north-wards from the Gulf of St. Lawrence and in particular from St. Augustine, Mingan and Seven Islands to hunt and trap the fur bearing animals. Many years ago we used to see Nascaupée Indians from the Ungava country, but when the outposts of the Hudson's Bay Company at Lake Winokapau and Fort (Nascaupée) Nascopie which was located near the headwater of the Hamilton River, were closed about 1873 or 1874, these Indians ceased to come down here in any considerable numbers. The Indians have always hunted north and south of Lake Melville, generally speaking, as far eastward as Mulligan Bight.

3. The principal fishery carried on in Lake Melville and the Narrows between the said lake and Hamilton Inlet is the salmon fishery. Very occasionally we have caught the deep sea codfish in the Narrows about 2 or 3 miles west of Rigoulette, but this is a very exceptional occurrence, the nearest point to Rigoulette at which this fish is usually caught being Black Island in the Hamilton Inlet 20 miles or more distant.

4. We have never at any time been in the habit of observing the Newfoundland game and fish regulations, being governed in our hunting and fishing only by certain customs which have long been recognized by the inhabitants of this region. We understand that the Newfoundland fishermen who fish for cod in the Hamilton Inlet have always been governed by the Newfoundland regulations.

5. We know of no grants of land which have been made by the Newfoundland government except the grant of 60 acres of land at Traverspine, which was made to the undersigned Joseph Michelin a few years ago, and also we understand some grants of land were made about 1905 to a number of the settlers at Mud Lake.

I, the undersigned Joseph Michelin, obtained two mining licenses from the Newfoundland government, one relating to a location on the Hamilton river about five miles above Muskrat Falls and the other to a location at Lake Winokapau. These licenses have lapsed.

6. Although we have been required for some years past to pay Customs Duties upon the goods imported by the Hudson's Bay Company and other posts and bought by us from the posts, we have never been given any representation in the Newfoundland Legislature nor any return for the revenue contributed by the inhabitants of Labrador except a Mail Service, which at best is a very poor one, letters posted to us in the fall of the year frequently not reaching us until the following June.

According to our information, the inhabitants of Lake Melville and the Hamilton Inlet are, without a single exception that we have heard of, most anxious that Labrador shall be held to constitute part of the Dominion of Canada.

The foregoing statement has been read to us and we sign the same verily believing the same to be true according to the best of our knowledge, information and belief.

IN THE MATTER OF THE BOUNDARY BETWEEN THE DOMINION OF CANADA AND THE COLONY OF NEWFOUNDLAND ON THE COAST OF LABRADOR.

Voluntary Statement of JOHN MICHELIN and JOHN BLAKE, both of Grand Village, Mud Lake, on the Hamilton River.

1. We, the undersigned, are the oldest inhabitants of the country on and about Lake Melville and the Hamilton Inlet.

2. I, John Michelin, was born in 1852 at Sabisisquasho on Lake Melville about twelve miles east of the Northwest River. My father, Merceller Michelin, was a French-Canadian who came from Three Rivers, Quebec, to work at the Hudson's Bay Company's post at the Northwest River shortly after it was established. I have lived in this country ever since my birth. The greater portion of my time, since early manhood, I have spent in the service of the Hudson's Bay Company : during the past fifteen years I have been in charge of an outpost for the company at Grand Village, Mud Lake.

3. I, John Blake, the son of the late William Blake, deceased, was born at a settlement on Lake Melville near Rigoulette in 1856 and have always lived in this country, except for two winters spent in Nova Scotia. My occupation, for the most part, has been that of a trapper and fisherman.

4. We both have an intimate knowledge of the country on and about Lake Melville and the Hamilton Inlet, of the natives who inhabit or range over this region, and of the conditions and happenings which have existed and taken place from time to time since our early boyhood, and, in particular, of the facts and matters hereinafter mentioned.

5. The Montagnais Indians have been in the habit of trading furs annually at the trading posts situated at the Northwest River and also to an inconsiderable extent at the Hudson's Bay Company's post at Rigoulette, the trade at the latter post being carried on for the most part with the planters living around the Hamilton Inlet and a few Eskimo families.

The said

p. 3749

Indians call themselves the “ Gulf Indians.” They sojourn at the various trading posts along the Gulf of St. Lawrence during the summer months, usually leaving these posts some time in August to travel northwards by canoe routes to their hunting grounds in the interior country. Originally these Indians never visited the trading posts hereabouts, but since the “ seventies ” they have been in the habit of coming out to the Northwest River about the middle of December to obtain fresh supplies of provisions. Some of them come back in the early spring to trade their furs, but the most of them go to the gulf posts, claiming that they receive higher prices for their furs at those posts. Before the Montagnais Indians began to come to the Northwest river, the trade at this place was carried on chiefly with the Northwest River Indians who hunted over this region and with the Nascaupee Indians who came down from the North, but in the course of time many of the Northwest River Indians died off and others of them joined the Gulf Indians and the Nascaupees were attracted to the trading posts in the Ungava country, and to some extent also to the posts of Davis Inlet and to the posts on the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

The Indians hunt over all the territory north and south of Lake Melville and the Hamilton Inlet, as far seawards as the coastal mountain range, near the seashore, wherever game is to be had, and they have done this, we believe, for a great number of years.

6. Re grants and leases of lands, timber limits and mineral rights.

The first grant or lease of timber limits or of lands made in this region by the Newfoundland government was that made to the Grand River Pulp and Lumber Co. about twenty years ago of a timber limit on Goose Bay and the lower part of the Hamilton River. The company erected three mills,—one at the Kennemish River, one at Mud Lake, and still another at Muskrat Island in the Hamilton River. They carried on operations until 1911 or 1912 when they closed the mills and abandoned all operations, except (we believe) the annual cutting by hand-saw of 5,000 feet of lumber in order to keep alive the said grant or lease.

Another timber limit on the Kenamou River was granted about the same time to a man named Caulder of Nova Scotia. He worked this limit during one winter (1902–3) cutting upwards of 800,000 feet of deals.

In 1905 each of us as well as a number of other settlers obtained from the Newfoundland government grants of the lands on which our homes are now situated, the other settlers referred to being Robert Best, Mark Best, and Joseph Blake. We understand the Methodist Mission also secured a grant of the lands occupied here by the chapel and parsonage. In 1917

we each obtained from the Newfoundland government a grant of mineral rights on Lake Winokapau up the Hamilton River. We know that Charles Goudie, Donald Michelin, Joseph Blake, Rev. Wm. S. Mercer and George Serricks secured similar grants in the same region. None of us worked our claims and we believe the grants have all lapsed.

7. Re Game and fishing regulations.

Until 10 years ago no pretence was made to notify or apply Newfoundland regulations in regard to the killing of game and the catching of fish, in and about Lake Melville and the Hamilton River, but during the last 10 years posters have been hung up from time to time at the trading posts requiring the inhabitants to observe certain game and fishing regulations. However, very little has been done towards securing the enforcement of these regulations. During the last six years (excepting last year), Mike Delaney, a Newfoundland fish warden, paid an annual visit to Lake Melville and Mud Lake. Three years ago he required Robert Montague of Northwest River, to remove his trout nets from the rapids just below Grand Lake, but this is the only case of an exercise of authority by him which has come to our notice. The Indians do not observe the game and fish regulations of the Newfoundland government. They seem to be governed only by their own customs in regard to hunting and fishing seasons.

8. Re magisterial authority.

Dr. Wilfrid T. Grenfell and Dr. Henry Paddon of the Deep Sea Mission, are justices of the peace on the Labrador Coast, the former having been appointed some twenty years ago, and the latter six or seven years ago. These gentlemen have visited Rigoulette and the Northwest River annually during the periods of time above mentioned, but we do not know of more than four cases which they have heard and disposed of, one of them being a case relating to an infraction of the game laws and the others relating to charges of seduction.

9. Although the Newfoundland government, of recent years, has been in the habit of granting relief through the Hudson's Bay Company's post at Rigoulette, to poor and destitute planters and Eskimos on the sea-coast to the eastward of Rigoulette, no such grant has to our knowledge ever been made to any person on or about Lake Melville on the Hamilton River.

10. An inconsiderable number of cod fish are caught during a few days each year in the Hamilton Inlet about four miles east of Rigoulette, but at no time within our recollection has this species of fish been caught or found in the Narrows or in Lake Melville to the eastward of the limit above mentioned.

In our opinion, the reason for this is the prevalence of fresh water within the area above described, the cod fish being strictly a salt-water fish.

11. The inhabitants of Labrador have never been given the franchise, neither have they been allowed representation in the Newfoundland legislative assembly, although on one or two occasions they petitioned the Newfoundland government to be allowed such representation. They feel that they are entitled to it in view of the considerable revenue which Newfoundland derives from Labrador. Moreover, they are greatly dissatisfied with what Newfoundland has done and, more particularly, left undone on the Labrador coast and earnestly hope that Labrador will be held to form part of Canada.

The foregoing statement has been read over to us and we sign it, verily believing it to be true in every particular.

IN THE MATTER OF THE BOUNDARY BETWEEN THE DOMINION OF CANADA AND THE COLONY OF NEWFOUNDLAND ON THE LABRADOR COAST.

I, ERNEST FREDERICK EWING, Fish Merchant, of Rose Blanche, Newfoundland, make oath and say as follows :—

I am a native of St. John's, Newfoundland, and was employed with the Hudson's Bay Company for six years, the first two in travelling for the Company between the posts of Cartwright, Rigolet and Northwest River, buying furs and auditing, after which I took charge of the post at Northwest River, which appointment I held for four years, resigning in 1922 to engage in my present work.

There were three trading posts at Northwest River—one owned by the Hudson's Bay Company, one by Revillon Freres of Paris, and one by the Porters of New York.

There were about fifteen families on our post, that is, within the land we claimed as our own ; five families at the Revillon post, which was across the river from us, and two families at the Porter post, somewhat to the south of ours. There were also various families of half-breeds and natives within the vicinity, in small settlements.

About fifty families, or, say, 200 persons in all, of Montagnais Indians would come out semi-annually from the interior. They claimed Northwest River as their native home, and most of them had never been across the height of land except to hunt, while others travelled as far as Seven Islands, Mingan, and intermarried with some of the natives on Canadian Labrador. They were Roman Catholics, and came out every summer to meet the priest from Newfoundland, who comes to Northwest River to visit them, and they came out in winter about Christmas and New Year to barter their furs for supplies.

Our post at Northwest River operated an outpost at Mud Lake, some 18 miles away ; another at Traverspine River, 23 miles away, and recently started one at Nascopie River, 50 miles inland from Northwest River, which we ran in winter for the convenience of the Indians, to save the expense of hauling supplies there by dog teams. It was proposed to build there shortly and stock it by means of a motor-boat in summer.

In the summer of 1921 a Canadian Government steamer came to Northwest River in connection with the Labrador Boundary Case and had on board Mr. Plaxton, a lawyer from the Canadian Department of Justice. He, with the assistance of a Frenchman. Mr. Thevenet, the manager of the Revillon Post,, circulated among the residents a printed paper with various questions on it, some of which suggested that the residents would be better off under Canadian control than under Newfoundland control, and requested them to declare themselves in favour of, and petition for, the territory to pass into the control of Canada. Messrs. Plaxton and Thevenet would get the settlers to visit the latter's office, discuss with them the matters included in the circular, and then persuade them to sign this statement. Most of the people signed it under the impression that they would be better off, because they were told that if Canada had control they would not have to pay any taxes, would have a better mail service there, and a better development of the region would be undertaken. I am confident that if the facts were properly put to the people they would all sign another petition declaring in favour of Newfoundland control.

1. In early November 1919 I was Minister of Shipping in the Government of the Colony which went out of office following the General Election held that same month.

2. I have read an extract from a statement made at North West River on the Labrador on the 21st day of July, 1921, by Mr. Raoul Thevenet and witnessed by Mr. C. P. Plaxton.

3. I have seen the statement there made that in answer to a request made to the Government of Newfoundland for relief for the natives of Labrador in that year I had replied “Let them

4. I never made any such statement either directly or indirectly ; nor did I or any other member of the Government of the day, to my knowledge, make any statement or declaration of such a nature, or of any nature which - could indicate any less concern or interest in the welfare of the natives of Labrador than we would show towards those of Newfoundland.

5. If any statement were attributed to me by the

MEMORANDUM OF AUTHORITIES AND OPINIONS ON EVIDENTIAL VALUE OF MAPS.I.—Dispute Concerning the Limits of Nova Scotia or Acadia, 1750-1755.¹

[11 Jany., 1751.]

By the 12th article of the Treaty of Utrecht, 1713, France yielded and made over to Great Britain, in the most ample manner and form, “all Nova Scotia or Acadia, with its ancient boundaries,” etc. A dispute afterwards arose between the two Crowns with regard to the limits of Nova Scotia or Acadia, as so yielded to the Crown of Great Britain. In July, 1749, it was agreed between the two Crowns that commissaries should be appointed to define, in an amicable spirit, the boundaries between the colonial possessions of Great Britain and France in North America. General William Shirely, Captain-General and Commander-in-Chief of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, and Mr. William Mildmay, were appointed commissaries on behalf of Great Britain. The commissaries held sittings in Paris from 1750 till May, 1755. Negotiations were suspended preliminary to the outbreak of the Seven Years' War on the 17th May, 1756. Several memorials were exchanged between the British and French commissaries upon the question of the limits of Acadia.

In a memorial dated 11th January, 1751, the British Commissaries, after referring to the evidence afforded by certain maps in support of their contention, said :

“But for these there is no occasion to cite them after the Proofs of an higher Nature already produced, and Maps are appeal'd to by us only in answer to the Assertion, that Charts of all Nations confine the Limits of Acadia or Nova Scotia precisely to the Peninsula ;

Evidence, Geographers often lay them down 'upon incorrect Surveys, copying the Mistakes of one another ; and if the Surveys be correct, the Maps taken from them, tho' they may show the true Position of a Country, the Situation of Islands and Towns, and the Course of Rivers, yet can never determine the Limits of a Territory, which depend entirely upon authentic Proof ; and the Proofs in that Case, upon which the Maps should be founded to give them any Weight, would be themselves a better Evidence, and therefore ought to be produced in a Dispute of this Nature, in which the Rights of Kingdom are concern'd.'

In their answer to the French memorial the English Commissaries made the following additional observations on the subject of the map evidence :

“In Treating of Maps it may not be improper to remind the French Commissaries, that the Commissaries of the King of Great Britain were not the first who appealed to these as an Authority in the present Discussion : That they never have cited them but to correct Mistakes made by the French Commissaries : That they in their last Memorial disclaimed any great Reliance upon the Evidence of Maps, even where they have proved them to favour the Claim of the King of Great Britain. And that they should not at this Time have gone into a more minute Consideration of them, if the French Commissaries had not made it necessary, by again giving a much greater credit to Maps than they deserve, and by affecting to make them seem material in the Discussion of the Point before us ; and if they did not themselves judge it to be essential, not to leave any one of the Proofs urged by the French Commissaries in Support of their system without a sufficient Confutation.

“The three English Maps cited by the French Commissaries are, one by Mr. Halley, another by Mr. Popple, and a third by Mr. Salmon ; and to give them the greater Weight, they are very careful to do Justice to the great Knowledge of Mr. Halley in Geography and Astronomy, and they observe that Mr. Popple is one of those who have 'travaille sur les titres.' The fact is, that Acadia is marked in Mr. Halley's Map within the Peninsula near the Sea-Coast, and Nova Scotia near the Isthmus, from which it appears, that he did not think Acadia was confined to the South-east Part of the Peninsula, and that he was very little attentive to the Position of Countries in his Map ; his only View having been to shew the several Variations of the Needle in the several Degrees of Longitude there marked ; the whole Map full of geographical Errors proves this to have been his Design, and the French Commissaries chose an unfortunate Topic to commend Mr. Halley upon, when they cited this Chart as a Specimen of his profound Knowledge in Geography ; however strong an Example this very Map may be of that Gentleman's great Skill in Astronomy, and however perfect it may be in the Light and for the Purpose he designed it.

“As to Mr. Popple's Map, the French Commissaries have no other Authority from any Circumstances attending the Publication of that Map, for supposing that it was made under the Inspection or Patronage of the Board of Trade, or for representing Mr. Popple as a Person whose Situation should given additional Credit to it ; than that Mr. Popple has said in the Margin of his Map, that he undertook that Work with the Approbation of the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations, who might very well approve of such an Undertaking but who never superintended or approved of Mr. Popple's Manner of executing it. Mr. Popple inserted this marginal Note meerly to secure a better Reception to his Work ; he does not pretend in it, that the then Board of Trade had ever approved of any thing farther than the Undertaking, his Map was framed according to his own particular Notions ; he published it upon his own single Authority : the Board of Trade at the Time gave it no extraordinary Sanction. It is inconsistent with the very Records it pretends to have copied ; it came into the World as the Performance of a single Person ; it has ever been thought in Great Britain to be a very incorrect Map, and has never in any Negotiation between the two Crowns been appealed to by Great Britain, as being correct, or a Map of any Authority.

“But if the French Commissaries could make this Map to have been the Work of a Servant of the English Government directed at the time by the Board of Trade, what Evidence could they draw from it, of any Effect in the present Discussion ? Mr. Popple has marked the Peninsula with the Name of Acadia, and the whole Country westward as far as the Southern Bank of the River St. Lawrence with the Name of Nova Scotia, of which he makes St. Croix the western Boundary, which shows he thought the Country of Acadia or Nova Scotia extended from the southern Bank of the River St. Lawrence to St. Croix, and makes his Map but a very slight Authority for the French Commissaries, who confine Acadia or Nova Scotia to the south-eastern Part of the Peninsula, or for the Opinion of the Sieur Durand, who confines it to the whole of the Peninsula only.”

II.—*The Oregon Boundary Controversy, 1817-1846.*¹

In his treatise entitled “The Oregon Question Examined” (London, 1846), Sir Travers Twiss dealt with the question of the evidential value of maps as follows :—

“Maps are but pictorial representations of supposed territorial limits, the evidence for which must be sought for elsewhere. There may be cases, it is true, where maps may be evidence ; when, for instance, it has been specially provided that a particular map, such as Melish's Map of North America, shall be the basis of a convention ; but it is to be regretted that maps of unsurveyed districts should ever have been introduced into diplomatic discussions, where limits conformable to convenient physical outlines, such as headlands or watercourses, are really sought for, and are understood to be the subject of negotiation. The pictorial features of a country, which, in such cases, have been frequently assumed as the basis of the negotiation, have not unusually caused greater embarrassment to both the parties in the subsequent attempt to reconcile them with the natural features, than the original question in dispute, to which they were supposed to have furnished a solution. That the name of Nouvelle France should have been applied by French authors and in French maps to the country as far as the shores of the Pacific Ocean, was as much to be expected as that the name of California should have been extended by the Spaniards to the entire north-west coast of America. which we know to have been the fact, from the negotiations in the Nootka Sound controversy.”

Referring in a later chapter to the claim illustrated by some French geographers to the westwardly extension of New France to the Pacific Ocean, and remarking that this claim required “some better evidence than the maps of the French geographers,” Sir Travers Twiss proceeds to say :—

“A map can furnish no proof of territorial title ; it may illustrate a claim, but it cannot prove it. The proof must be derived from facts, which the law of nations recognises as founding a title to territory. Maps, as such, that is, when they have not had a special character attached to them by treaties, merely represent the opinions of the geographers who have constructed them, which opinions are frequently founded on fictitious or erroneous statements : e.g., the map of the discoveries in North America, by Ph. Busche and J. N. de Lisle, in 1750, in which portions of the west coast of America were delineated in accordance with De Fonte's story (supra. Ch. IV), and the maps of north-west America at the end of the seventeenth and beginning of the eighteenth centuries, which represent California as lately ascertained to be an island. An examination of the collection in the King's library at the British Museum, will remove all scepticism on this head.”

In his preface to this treatise Sir Travers Twiss added the following remarks on the subject of maps :

“Some observations have been made in Chapter XII. and other places, upon the general futility of the argument from maps in the case of disputed territory. The late negotiations at Washington have furnished an opposite illustration of the truth of the Author's remarks. Mr. Buchanan, towards the conclusion of his last letter to Mr. Pakenham, addressed an argument to the British Minister, of the kind known to logicians as the argumentum ad verecundiam :—

'Even British geographers have not doubted our title to the territory in dispute. There is a large and splendid globe now in the Department of the State, recently received from London, and published by Maltby and Co., manufacturers and publishers to “The Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge,” which assigns this territory to the United States.' The history, however, of this globe is rather curious. It was ordered of Mr. Malby (not Maltby) for the Department of State at Washington, before Mr. Everett quitted his post of Minister of the United States in this country. It no doubt deserves the commendation bestowed upon it by Mr. Buchanan, for Mr. Malby manufactures excellent globes ; but the globe sent to Washington was not made from the plates used on the globes published under the sanction of The Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge,' though this is not said by way of disparagement to it. The Society, in its maps, has carried the boundary line west of the Rocky Mountains, along the 49th parallel to the Columbia River, and thence along that river to the sea : but in its globes the line is not marked beyond the Rocky Mountains. Mr. Malby, knowing that the globe ordered of him was intended for the Department of State at Washington, was led to suppose that it would be more satisfactorily completed, as it was an American order, if he coloured in, for it is not engraved, the boundary line proposed by the Commissioners of the United States. The author would apologise for discussing so trifling a circumstance, had not the authorities of the United States considered the fact of sufficient importance to ground a serious argument upon it.”

III.—Ontario-Manitoba Boundary Dispute, 1884.¹

In his argument before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, Mr. Dalton McCarthy, Q.C., (of counsel for Manitoba), introduced his observations upon the maps which had been put in on either side, by the following remarks :

“Now, my Lord, I come to the maps, which I may just as well refer to now. And the first observation I make with regard to them is this. I am going to refer to the maps put in by the other side, and also to deal with those we put in, bearing upon this question. It was stated (and I ask our Lordships to adopt it as my argument if I cannot read it) by those who have been concerned in investigations of this kind, that there is nothing more deceptive than a map. Nothing has given rise to greater trouble in the settlement of international boundaries than reliance being placed upon maps. Of course it is a different thing if a map is referred to in a treaty, and incorporated in a treaty, or Act of Parliament, or any document of that kind, but maps published independently, or under Royal authority, as many of these are said to be, are apt to be, and have been proved by experience to be, the most deceptive possible kind of evidence to be guided by ; so that whilst I put in maps which may or may not be useful, I disclaim relying very much upon them, and at the same time I argue before your Lordships that very little reliance is to be placed upon maps put in by either side.”

IV.—British Guiana-Brazil Boundary Dispute, 1901-1903.

In submitting her argument in this controversy, Great Britain made the following observations upon maps in relation to the question of their value as evidence in a dispute as to boundaries :

(i) General Observations.

“In questions as to the boundaries of territory claimed by conterminous nations the maps of the territory which have from time to time been prepared, whether published or unpublished, may be referred to in illustration of the questions at issue from two different points of view.

“They may be cited as showing the contemporary ideas of the geography of the particular district and the existence or non-existence - of towns, villages, or posts ; or they may be considered in respect of the boundaries shown upon them.

“In neither case can a map taken by itself be regarded as an authoritative document ; in cartography, perhaps more than in most documentary evidence, it is necessary to study and verify the whole history of a document before it can be admitted to have any authority at all. This statement holds good, though in a less degree, in respect of geographical details as well as lines of boundaries. Boundary lines are the more liable to error because geographers have in very many instances been without adequate information on which to base their conclusions.

“The manner in which map-makers so often mechanically copy one another introduces further difficulty into the consideration of cartographical evidence ; and the want of system in selecting the maps to be copied adds yet more ; atlases often contain different maps of the same territory with very different presentations of it, more particularly as regards the lines of boundary exhibited. This is specially true of atlases prepared about the end of the eighteenth and the beginning of the nineteenth century.”

p. 3761

“(b) As to Boundaries.

“On a question of boundary, maps may be cited as evidence—

1. Of the general reputation as to the boundary ;
2. Of the claims put forward by any particular nation ;
but in either case the extent to which a map is entitled to carry authority requires careful investigation.

“It does not follow that a map which deservedly enjoys a high reputation in respect of its delineation of physical features should be treated as of equal authority on a question of boundary.

“D’Anville’s great Map of 1748 was the first map of South America which portrayed what apparently are definite political boundaries. But there is no record of the information on which D’Anville based his lines, and they accordingly cannot be accepted as having any weight in the face of definite historical facts which are against them.”

“Fundamental Difference in the Point of View.

“There is a fundamental difference in the view taken by the British and Brazilian Governments as to the importance of maps as evidence in an international case. Brazil appears to appeal to the whole cartography of Guiana without any reference to its authority, and without any real attempt to investigate critically the value of any of the maps. Great Britain, on the other hand, holds that the value of a map depends upon various circumstances which must be carefully determined ; that, of itself, a map is of no value as evidence at all ; and, therefore, that the accumulation of maps all showing the same line carries no weight whatever. The repetition of an erroneous fact upon a series of maps does not prove the fact any more than the repetition of errors by historians alters the actual truth when it is discovered. The lake of Parima was marked on maps of repute down to the middle of the 19th century, but this did not give the lake existence. The British Government maintain that each map, like each document, must be investigated carefully and verified by contemporary evidence. They have endeavoured all through this inquiry to maintain a rigid standard of criticism in regard to every map which they have brought before the Arbitrator.”

V.—Alaska Boundary Dispute, 1903.¹

In his argument before the arbitral tribunal, in the Alaska

Boundary Case, Sir Robert Finlay, of Counsel for Great Britain, said:—

“Of course I do not attach any very great importance to maps. The question of what value is to be attached to the maps depends entirely on the circumstances under which it was made. If a map merely represents something taken from an earlier map, or the impression which the map-maker formed, which was a convenient one to put on paper, then it comes to nothing. It is merely hearsay. When it comes to accurate investigation of boundaries, really the evidence of the maps requires to be very carefully weighed before it is determined what importance should be attached to any particular map.”

p. 3762

Further on in his argument, Sir Robert Finlay said :—

“Now I have thought it my duty to go through these maps, calling attention to what they show. I am very sensible of the fact that after all these subsequent maps are of no very great value in a matter of this kind. The maps that were before the negotiators may be very useful indeed. Subsequent maps merely show the impression of the mapmaker, and we do not always know from what source he derived it ; they very often copy from one another, and when it comes down to a mere question of boundary, as indicated either by colour or by drawing a line, the information of the mapmaker is not necessarily of any particular value. So that the evidence of the maps must be discounted by all these considerations.”

Little importance is apparently attached by jurists to the colouring of maps or to the manner in which names are written or printed thereon. Interrupting Sir Robert Finlay in the course of his argument on the evidence of maps, Lord Alverstone, the President of the tribunal, took occasion to say:

“Mr. Attorney : May I suggest to you, only as a result of very long experience and having had to do with these sort of maps, as you know, on several occasions, with regard to legends and popular representations of the names and places, channels, and things of that kind, they are extremely valuable ; but with regard to these minor details such as colouring, we have always found them to be something that you cannot act upon for the reason that they are done by hand and very often done by people who do not understand what they were doing ? On broad lines they are useful to both sides, but on the minor points I do not think they give us much assistance.’

“Sir Robert Finlay : I quite agree, my Lord.

“The President : I think that is our general feeling.”

In his opinion in support of the award, Lord Alverstone said:

“For the purpose of identifying the channel, known as Portland Channel, the maps which were before the negotiators may be useful. This is one of the points upon which evidence of contemporary maps as to general reputation is undoubtedly admissible.

* * * *

[1926.]

“I do not attach particular importance to the way in which names on the maps are written or printed, and therefore I do not rely on the fact that in the case of some of these contemporary maps, the words 'Portland Channel' are written so as to include, within the name, the lower part of the channel which is in dispute. From long experience I have found that it is not safe to rely upon any such peculiarities.

* * * *

“In the view I take of the terms of the treaty, it is not necessary to discuss subsequent action. Had the terms of the treaty led me to a different conclusion and entitled me to adopt the view presented by Great Britain, I should have felt great difficulty in holding that anything that had been done or omitted to be done by or on behalf of Great Britain or that any conduct on her part prevented her from insisting on the strict interpretation of the treaty ; nor do I think that the representations of map-makers that the boundary was assumed to run round the heads of the inlets could have been properly urged by the United States as a sufficient reason for depriving Great Britain of any rights which she had under the treaty, had they existed.”

VI.—The King v. Price (1926) S. C. R. (CAN.) 28.

“A grant was made in 1693 by Frontenac, Intendant of New France, and confirmed in 1694 by royal warrant of Louis XIV, King of France, upon the request of Augustin Rouer, for and in the name of Louis Heuer, his son, for the concession of a lake, or one lake ('d'un lac'), called Mitis, which discharged itself into a river of the same name, with one league of land all about the lake. This grant was and still is commonly known under the name of the seigniori of Lake Metis. According to the topography, it is not a single body of water which is to be found at the source of the River Metis, but three bodies of water, two of them being approximately of the same altitude above sea level and the third being of an altitude approximately eight feet above the other two ; all three discharged naturally, from one to another by channels of flowing water which form no part of the lake expanse. At the time of the grant, these bodies of water were situated in a remote locality and uninhabited unless by Indians. After various changes of ownership, the respondent became the proprietor of the seigniori in 1922 and it then instituted a petition of right for the purpose of determining the extent of the property. It is alleged that, at the time of the grant, it was not known that there was any difference of level between the three bodies of water and that what are now shown in the modern maps and known generally as three lake sections with connecting channels were, by the grant, considered and described as a single lake ; and it concluded by asking for a declaration that the three bodies of water should be considered as 'a lake' within the meaning of that term in the grant.

“At the trial, the respondent produced a number of maps which were admitted in evidence on its behalf : they came originally from various sources, but were mostly selected from the collection of maps at the Dominion Archives. The earliest are of the date of 1765 and in all these maps down to 1863, there is a single lake shown at the head of the River Metis.”

the Court of Appeal for Quebec and affirming the judgment of the Court of King's Bench for Quebec, allowed the appeal of the Crown and identified the upper lake, now known as Lake Metis, as the “Lac Mitis” referred to in the original grant. The judgment of Anglin, C.J., Mignault and Newcombe, J.J., was delivered by Newcombe, J. The following extracts, with regard to the evidential value of the maps which were admitted in evidence on behalf of the respondent, are taken from his judgment.

“Maps are from their nature of very slight evidence. Geographers often lay them down upon incorrect surveys or information, copying the mistakes of one another. This may be illustrated by reference to Holland's map of 1803, where it is said, under the figure of Lake Metis, surrounded by lines to represent the boundaries of the seignior, that ' these lakes are laid down not from actual survey but from information of travellers.' Now this drawing which is the first representation of a lake which is of any use for the purpose of realizing its size or shape was certainly laid down without any reliable information ; there is no lake of its outline or size upon the ground, and yet the lake as shown here re-appears in subsequent maps with considerable regularity until 1863, a time considerably subsequent to Ballantyne's survey. It must be remembered that these are all maps of an unsurveyed district, and they are really of little or no value to prove the facts which they depict or represent ; they may however be useful as admissions against the party who produces them ; and, in this aspect, the inference which they support is that, until the time of Ballantyne's survey, everybody, both cartographers and the persons from whom they got their information, were under the impression that the River Metis had its source in one lake only. It may be that the description of the grant is apt or sufficient to include the upper or the lower lake as a lake, or one lake, called Metis, which is the subject of the grant, but upon what principle the description can be extended to include more lakes than one I am unable to realize. I see no convincing evidence that the 3 lakes were called Metis ; but, if they were, how does that improve the respondent's case ? If there were 3 lakes called Metis discharging into the River Metis the grant is surely void for uncertainty, or because it is impossible to apply the description to any defined subject-matter ; and, if it be only the lower lake which discharges into the River Metis, that fact, while perhaps sufficient to identify the lake as the subject of the grant, does not entitle the respondent to include also 2 other lakes called Metis which do not discharge into the River Metis.

“Maps, when they have no conventional or statutory significance, should be regarded merely as representing the opinions of the persons who constructed them, they furnish at best no adequate proof, and none when it appears that they are founded upon misleading or unreliable information or upon reasons which do not go to establish the theory or opinion represented, and when they have not the qualifications requisite to found proof of reputation. Some of the later printed or coloured maps issued by the Departments of Colonization or of Crown Lands represent the Seigniorship in accordance with the respondent's contention, others adopt that of the Crown. These maps embrace large districts, if not the whole Province ; they are issued for departmental use. . . . Territorial limits and the boundaries of wilderness grants are, perhaps more frequently than not, lacking in definition or precision of statement, and when a general map of a Province or district is in course of preparation, the attention of the departmental draftsman is not apt to be specially directed to careful consideration of the particular features or details upon which claims may depend, and sometimes, not unnaturally, particulars creep into the draft without due consideration of their use or trustworthiness. They are matters of detail, perhaps proper to be shown if verified, but not contributing to the main purpose of the work, which is not essentially concerned to verify them. These maps are prepared and issued not for the purpose of establishing facts or as admissions ; they merely illustrate, and the proof must come from sources outside the maps. Mercer v. Denne (1904), 2 Ch. 534. Neither the Minister nor the Governor in Council can in the reasonable course of administration consider and conclude all the particulars or details which find place in a general map, or all the questions which, if the map import admission or proof, it might be used to determine. The map-makers of the department use the information which is available, and they in turn, no matter how carefully they execute their work, are not proof against oversight or errors, the consequence of which might be very serious if these erroneous representations are to be taken as determining the facts with relation to pending claims. It is not in this manner that the Crown domain can be alienated."

VII. In Bidder v. Bridges, 54 L. T. (N.S.) 529, the action was to establish commonable rights over a piece of land on behalf of all the proprietors and occupiers of lands or tenements in a certain parish, the chief questions raised by the evidence being (1) whether the land in question was within the parish, and (2) if so, whether the plaintiffs had any right to maintain the action. The Ordnance map, tithe maps, and several other maps of the district, some of which had been kept in the British Museum, were tendered in evidence for the purpose of showing the position of the boundaries of the parish. Kay, J., who tried the case, held that the maps were not admissible in evidence. On this part of the case he said :

"The Ordnance map and several other maps, some of which came from the British Museum were tendered in evidence on either side. The Ordnance map excludes the land in question from the parish of Mitcham. Many of the other maps included it. In the case of the Ordnance map, it seems an investigation on the question of the disputed parish boundary was made under the provisions of the statute 4 & 5 Vict. c. 30 and subsequent Acts. No public inquiry was held. Certain men were appointed by justices of the peace in the locality to point out the boundaries. Tracings of maps then produced were taken, and a statutory declaration was made by the lord of the manor of Wallington, detailing the acts of ownership which have been proved in this action, or some of them. But the maps which were produced from the British Museum were not then referred to. It was argued that hearsay evidence, and evidence of reputation is admissible to prove the position of parish boundaries (1 Taylor, pp. 541, 542), and that therefore all these maps should be received. As to the greater part of them, I am not informed how, or on what information, the boundary was laid down. None of them probably was made with the same care in this respect as the Ordnance map, and it is obvious that nothing like the amount of evidence on the question was produced for the purpose of that map which has been given before this court. *In my opinion these maps are not admissible as evidence in such an action as this ; if they were, they amount to no more than a statement of the opinion of the particular map-maker upon such information as he obtained at the time. Upon this part of the case, namely, in what parish the land in question lies, I am bound to say that the plaintiffs have not proved to my satisfaction that this portion of the common is within the vill of Mitcham, or if it were, that it is not waste of the manor of Wallington. If it be waste of the manor of Wallington, though within the vill of Mitcham, the lord of that manor would have a right to separate it from the rest of Mitcham Common, and so to exclude the plaintiffs and the other commoners claiming in right of Mitcham (Co. Litt. 122a). This is sufficient to decide the case against the plaintiffs, but so much evidence was given, and so much argument was used upon the other points raised, that I feel bound to express my opinion upon them.”

*With regard to the question of admissibility of old maps as evidence of reputation, see also Mercer v. Denne, 1904, 2 Ch. 534; 1905, 2 Ch. 538, C.A.

SHOWING THAT THE FORTY-NINTH PARALLEL OF LATITUDE WAS NOT SELECTED AS THE LINE OF SEPARATION BETWEEN THE FRENCH AND THE BRITISH TERRITORIES IN NORTH AMERICA, BY COMMISSARIES APPOINTED AGREEABLY TO THE TREATY OF UTRECHT.

Mr. Monroe, minister plenipotentiary of the United States in London, in his letter of September 5th, 1804, to Lord Harrowby, the British secretary for foreign affairs,* makes the following statement with regard to the adoption of the 49th parallel of latitude as the northern boundary of Louisiana :—

“By the tenth article of the treaty of Utrecht, it is agreed that 'France shall restore to Great Britain the Bay and Straits of Hudson, together with all the lands, seas, sea-coasts, rivers, and places, situate in the said bay and straits, which belong thereto ; and it is also agreed, on both sides, to determine, within a year, by commissaries to be forthwith named by each party, the limits which are to be fixed between the said Bay of Hudson and the places appertaining to the French, which limits both the British and French subjects shall be wholly forbid to pass over, or thereby to go to each other, by sea or by land :
the same commissioners shall also have orders to describe and settle in like manner the boundaries between the other British and French colonies in those parts.' Commissaries were accordingly appointed by each power, who executed the stipulations of the treaty, in establishing the boundaries proposed by it. They fixed the northern boundary of Canada and Louisiana by a line beginning on the Atlantic, at a cape or promontory

* Communicated to Congress, and published with President Jefferson's message of

in 58 degrees 30 minutes north latitude, thence south-westwardly to the Lake Mistissin, thence farther south-west to the latitude of 49 degrees north from the equator, and along that line indefinitely.”

Mr. Monroe does not give his authority for the assertion respecting the adoption of this line by the commissaries ; he, however, most probably derived his information from the map of America attached to Postlethwayt's “Dictionary of Commerce,” published in 1751, to which he alludes in other parts of his correspondence, and in which a line appears nearly as described by him, with a note on the map, saying, “The line that parts French Canada from British Canada was settled by commissaries, after the peace of Utrecht, making a curve from Davis's Inlet, in the Atlantic Sea, down to the 49th degree, through Lake Abitibis, to the North-West Ocean.” In the dictionary to which this map is attached, the limits of these territories are expressly declared to be undetermined. The map of North America, by Palairt and Delaroche, published at London in 1765, also gives the same line, without any note as to the manner in which it was adopted. In the map of the British Possessions in America, published by Bowen and Gibson in 1775, and in one or two other inferior maps, the 49th parallel is given as the southern limit of the Hudson's Bay Company's territories, from the vicinity of Lake Superior, westward to Red River, down which the boundary is continued to Lake Winnipeg. These are the only authorities, as yet discovered, for the belief that the 49th parallel was adopted as a boundary by commissaries appointed according to the treaty of Utrecht.

On the other hand, Mitchell's great map of America, published in 1755 at London, under the patronage of the colonial department, presents a line drawn around Hudson's Bay, at the distance of about one hundred and fifty miles from its shore, as “the bounds of Hudson's Bay by the treaty of Utrecht” ; and the same line appears on the map of America accompanying Smollett's “History of England,” published in 1760, on that of Bennet, published in 1770, on that of Faden, in 1777, and on some other maps of that period.

No line of separation whatsoever, between the Hudson's Bay territories and the French possessions in America, is to be found on the large and beautiful map of America by Henry Pople, published in 1738, also under the patronage of the colonial department, and bearing the stamp of the approbation of Dr. Halley, which is particularly minute in all that relates to the territories in question ; or on any of the maps in the atlas of Maxwell and Senex, published in 1721, or in any of those attached to the volume of Boyer's “Political State for 1721” ; to the “History of Hudson's Bay,” by Dobbs; to the “American Traveller,” by Cluny ; to the “History of the British Empire in America,” by Wynne ; to Alcedo's “Dictionary of America,” or on many other maps, of inferior merit, which might be named.

These discrepancies should not excite surprise ; for maps, and books of geography, which are most frequently consulted in relation to boundaries, are, or rather have been, the very worst authorities on such subjects ; as they are ordinarily made by persons wholly unacquainted with political affairs. Of this, numerous examples may be cited from works of authors the most highly esteemed as geographers, even at the present day.”*

* In a large and beautifully engraved map of the United States, published at Philadelphia, in 1821, “from the most undoubted authorities, by —, geographer and draughtsman,” the northern boundary of the United States west of the Mississippi is represented by a line drawn westward from the sources of that river, nearly under the latitude of 47 degrees and 40 minutes, the country north of this line being stated to be “in dispute between Spain and Great Britain.” Now, three years before this map appeared, the boundary between the United States and the British possessions in that part of America had been fixed by treaty, according to which, the dividing line followed the course of the 29th parallel, and, two years before the date of the map, Spain had also, by treaty, ceded to the United States her rights to all territories in America north of the 42nd parallel. These treaties had been published, and it is scarcely credible that they should have been unknown to an American geographer engaged in preparing a map of the United States. Mistakes of the same kind, equally great, are, however, committed in Europe. In the Encyclopedia of Geography, published at Edinburgh, in 1834, by Hugh Murray, and other scientific persons, we find it stated (p. 1374), that “the whole region west of the Rocky Mountains, extending between the 42nd and the 49th parallels of latitude, has, by discovery and treaty, been assigned to the United States,” and a statement to the same effect may be found in the London Quarterly Review for January, 1822. These mistakes evidently arose from ignorance; but the same defence cannot be pleaded in all cases ; for maps have been drawn, and engraved, and colored, with a full knowledge of their falsehood, in order to forward the ends of governments or of individuals.

CARTES..."

BY NICOLAS SANSON D'ABBEVILLE. Paris, 1657, pp. 2-3 verso.

Dans mes Tables Geographiques i'ay divise cette Amerique Septentrionale en Canadienne, & Mexicane ; sous le nom de Canadienne i'entens la partie de l' Amerique, qui est aux anuirons du Canada ; & là où les François, les Anglois, les Holandois, les Danois, & les Suedois ont fait diverses Colonies ; sous le nom de Mexicane, j'entends la partie que le Roy Catholique seul a occupé pour la pluspart, & là où il a estably nombre de Colonies. I'ay subdivisé la Canadienne en Terres Arctiques, & Canada, ou Nouvelle France : la Mexicane, en Nouveau Mexique, & Mexique ou Nouvelle Espagne.

Entre les deux parties du milieu, la plus orientale, & la plus proche de nostre Europe se doit estimer sous le nom general de Canada, ou Nouvelle France : de Canada par ce que ceste Region est la premiere de ces quartiers ou les nostres ont pris terre ; Nouvelle France par ce que les François s'y sont establish les premiers ; & paravant que les Anglois, que les Hollandois, & que d'autres peuples de l'Europe s'y fussent arrestés. La plus occidentale, & la plus éloignée de l'Europe se peut appeller on general Nouveau Mexique parce que les Espagnols du Mexique on Nouvelle Espagne ne l'ont decouvert que quelque temps apres qu'ils ont esté établis, & Maistres de ce Mexique, ou Nouve le Espagne.

De ces quatre parties de l'Amerique Septentrionale, Sçavoir the Mexique, ou Nouvelle Espagne, le Nouveau Mexique, le Canada ou Nouvelle France, & l'Amerique Arctique ; la Nouvelle Espagne est baignée & par la Mer de Nord, & par la Mer de Sud, l'Amerique Arctique encor par l'une & l'autre Mer, la Nouvelle France seulement par la Mer de Nord, le Nouveau Mexique seulement par la Mer de Sud.

CANADA, OU NOUVELLE FRANCE.

Sous le nom de Canada, ou de Nouvelle France, nous estimons ce qui est aux deux costées de la Grande Riviere de Canada, ou de S. Laurens ; depuis les Isles, qui sont au devant de son emboucheure, jusques & si avant que cette Rivere sera connue & depuis les Golfes & Destroits de Davis, & de Hudson jusques à la Nouvelle Espagne. En ceste estendue de Pays nous aurons les Isles de Terres Neuves, la Terre de Labrador, le Canada, qui communique, son nom au reste, l'Acadie, le Saguenay, les Irocois, les Hurons, les Algonquins

Les Isles de Terres Neuves, ou suivant les Basques de Bacallaos, 1. des Morues, son ainsi appellées à cause de ces Poissons, qui s'y peschent ; & y sont en telle quantité, que quelquefois ils semblent empescher le cours des Vaisseaux ; & le Golfe, ou Baye de S. Laurens en est presque de mesme.

La plus grande de ces Isles, & qui prens communement le nom de Terre Neuve, a quatre ou cinq cens lieues de circuit. Pays mal habité à l'Orient ; & au Midy, les habitans s'estants retirés plus avant dans les Terres. Le terroir ne seroit pas à mespriser s'il estoit cultivé : il y a force Volailles, Fruits, Poissons. L'air tire sur le froid, la coste a quantité de bons Ports, & de belles Eades.

Le Canada pris particulierement est à droit, & dessus la plus basse partie de la Grande Riviere ; & ce nom s'est communiqué & a la Riviere, & aux Pays circonvoisins. Ceste Riviere est la plus belle do l'Amerique Septentrionale, & une des plus belles du monde : elle a deux cent brasses de profondeur à son emboucheure, & trente lieues de Largeur. Son cours, suivant la rapport de crux du Pays, est des-ja connu de quatre ou cinq cens lieues ; avec apparence que nous decouvrirons à la fin que le Lac, qui semble faire sa source, se descharge dans la mer par deux ou par trois cours differents ; l'un vers nous, qui est celuy de Canada ; un autre vers l'Ouest, & au dessus de Californie ; le dernier vers le Nord, & dans la Mer Christiane, & que ces ouvertures nous monstrent le chemin que nous cherchons, il y a si long-temps pour aller aux Indes orientales par l'Ouest.

Les Peuples avec qui les François negotiant icy, sont les Canadiens, les Hurons, les Algonquins, les Attiquameques, Nipisininiens, Montagnets, ceux du Saguenay, de l'Acadie, &c. & pour ce sujet nous avons diverses Colonies sur la Grande Riviere à Tadoussac, à Quebec aux Trois Rivieres, à Sillery, a Richelieu, a Montreal ; & au dehors a la Baye de Chaleur, a Miscou, A. Port Royal, &c. Ce Negoce ne se fait quo par eschange : Ils nous donnent des Peaux de Castors, do Loutres, Martres, Loups Marine &c. pour du Pain, des Pois, des Febves, des Pruneaux ; pour les instruire au Christianisme, plusieurs Ecelesiastiques, & Religieux cy ont diverses Missions, & Residences, encor un Hospital, un Seminaire, d'Ursulines. Les P. Iesuites ont le principal soin de ces Maisons.

Au Septentrion de Canada est l'Estottlande ou Terre de Labrador pres le Destroit de Hudson ; & on l'appelle quelquefois Terre de Cortereal, & quelquefois Nouvelle Bretagne : quoy que e'en soit, je l'estime faire partie de la Nouvelle France : Le Pays est plein de Montagnes, charge do Bois, avec beaucoup de Sauvages.

A NEW MAPP OF AMERICA SEPTENTRIONALE.¹

DESIGNED BY MONSIEUR SANSON AND REVISED INTO ENGLISH, AND ILLUSTRATED BY RICHARD BLOME. 15 x 22. London, for R. Blome,

Blome follows Sanson and shows Canada or New France as extending to Hudson bay as far west as Button bay and to Hudson strait, on the north, and to the Atlantic on the east. In the text, part IV, p. 4, he says that :

“Under the name of Canadiana is understood that part of America which is about Canada, where the English, French, Hollanders, Danes and Swedes have divers Colonies.”

The country to the north of Canada is designated “Artick Landes.” Ungava peninsula is designated “Estotiland, Terra de Labrador & New Britanie.”

Blome also says:

“Under the name of Canada or New France, we esteem that which is on both sides the great River of Canada, or St. Laurence, with the Isles that are before its Mouth, unto, and so far as this River is known and from the Gulfs and Streights of Davis and Hudson unto New Spain or Mexico. In this extent of Country, we have the Isles of Newfoundland, Terra di Labrador, Canada, which communicates its name to the rest, Acadia. Saguenay, the Irocois, the Hurons, the Algonquins, with about a hundred other sorts of people, whose names are known.

“North of Canada is Estotiland, or Terra de Labrador near Hudsons Streight ; it is called sometimes the land of Cortereal, and sometimes New Brittany ; however, I esteem it a part of New France.”

EXTRACTS FROM “REMARQUES SUR LA CARTE DE

Les Traités de Géographie ne nous donnent pas une connoissance bien juste & suffisamment détaillée de l'Amérique Septentrionale. Les Cartes qui ont été publiées pour cette Partie du Monde, à la fin du siècle dernier & au commencement de celui-ci, ne sont pas plus exactes, & si on les compare entre elles, on sera frappé des différences considérables qui s'y trouvent, tant sur l'étendue que sur la situation des mêmes Parties ; mais on peut excuser leurs Auteurs sur le peu de connoissances qu'on en avoit alors, & qui ne commencent à se développer que depuis une dizaine d'années : & quoique nous soions encore loin de la précision nécessaire, à laquelle il y a tout lieu d'espérer que nous parviendrons dans quelques années ; en attendant ces connoissances, j'ai cru qu'il étoit utile de fixer celles que nous avons aujourd'hui, & d'en faire connoître le degré de certitude.

Parmi les Cartes les plus récentes, & qu'on doit avec justice regarder comme les meilleures celle qui a été faite en 1746, par M. Danville, Géographe du Roi & de l'Académie des Inscriptions, doit tenir le premier rang : ensuite viennent deux Cartes Angloises, publiées à Londres ; la première en 1753 par M. Green, en trop petit point à la vérité pour y trouver les détails nécessaires que l'on y a même trop négligés ; mais elle est accompagnée d'un Mémoire rempli de Remarques utiles à la perfection de la Géographie ; la seconde a pour titre, Carte des Possessions des François & des Anglois dans l'Amérique Septentrionale, par M. Mitchell en 1755. Elle est en huit feuilles, & contient les mêmes Parties que la nouvelle Carte dont il s'agit. On peut joindre à ces Cartes celle que M. Robert a publiée en 1753. Je crois qu'il est inutile de rappeler ici ce que j'ai donné en 1744 sur l'Amérique ; & surtout ces trois Cartes du Canada & de la Louisiane, qui, si je l'ose dire, ont servi de base à ceux qui ont travaillé depuis, comme il est aisé de s'en convaincre à la première inspection, malgré les changements & les améliorations qu'ils peuvent y avoir faits, & dont je crois être en droit de profiter.

justice qui leur est dûe : si je suis forcé d'employer la critique, je ne m'en servirai que comme d'un flambeau pour m'éclairer, & me conduire dans une carrière obscure où il est si facile de s'égarer ; que si malgré cet aveu, quelques Auteurs, soit François, soit Anglois, s'en trouvoient offensés, ce mot sera toute ma réponse :

Caedimus, inque vicem prebemus crura sagittis.*

Un écueil qu'il faut éviter avec soin, & contre lequel beaucoup d'Auteurs ne sont pas assez en garde, c'est cette prévention particulière, soit pour sa Nation, soit pour quelques idées séduisantes, auxquelles on sacrifie toute autre connoissance, & que l'on défend souvent avec aigreur.

La Géographie n'est qu'une, & par conséquent vraie : c'est la dégrader, que de s'en servir pour appuyer de fausses conjectures, ou d'injustes prétentions ; c'est cependant ce qu'on a vu dans plusieurs Cartes de l'Amérique Septentrionale, & surtout dans celles que les Géographes Anglois ont publiées récemment ; mais il est certain que l'amour de la Patrie n'est pas plus une excuse pour le Géographe, que sa façon de représenter les choses ne fait loi pour les Nations voisines.

En effet, qu'un Géographe, Anglois ou François, change les noms reçus anciennement pour chaque Pays, qu'il les porte aux Contrées voisines, qu'il en resserre ou étende les limites, suivant certaines circonstances ; qu'il ajuste sa Carte à des idées particulières qu'il a adoptées, on n'en peut assurément rien conclure, & de pareils Ouvrages ne sont pas des titres qu'on oppose sérieusement en cas de contestation. Mais le Géographe qui cherche le vrai, remonte aux premières découvertes, & suit leurs progrès ; il connoît les premiers noms, & les changemens que le tems & les circonstances leur ont fait essuyer ; il distingue les premiers établissemens, de ceux qui les ont suivis, & ne marque de limites que celles qui sont constatées par des Traités.

Voilà les règles que je me suis imposées, c'est au Public à juger si je ne m'en suis pas écarté.

Après ces réflexions préliminaires, qui m'ont paru essentielles dans les circonstances présentes, je vais entrer dans la discussion géographique des principales Parties de l'Amérique Septentrionale, refermées entre le 28 & le 72^e degré de Latitude, & pour le faire avec quelque ordre, je diviserai cette grande étendue de Pays en six Parties principales, en commençant par le Nord, & suivant vers le Sud, ordre assez naturel en Géographie, ce qui forme autant d'articles différens.

1°. La Baie de Hudson, & les Pays voisins.

2°. La nouvelle France, ou le Canada.

3°. Les Côtes Orientales de l'Amérique, depuis l'Acadie jusqu'à la Floride, contenant les Pays possédés par les Anglois, ARTICLE II.

LA NOUVELLE FRANCE, OU LE CANADA.

Le Canada est un grand Pays découvert¹ & possédé depuis plus de deux siècles par les François. On lui donne également le nom de Nouvelle France.

Pour donner une juste idée de son état, tel qu'il étoit possédé par les François au commencement de ce siècle, il faut le diviser en Partie Orientale & Partie Occidentale.

La Partie Orientale comprend l'Isle de Terre neuve² les Terres de Labrador ou Nouvelle Bretagne, le Golfe S. Laurent, le Fleuve de ce nom dans toute l'étendue de son cours, depuis son embouchure jusqu'au Lac Ontario, la Gaspésie, le Pays des Etchemins, & l'Acadie.³

La Partie Occidentale contient ces grands Lacs connus aujourd'hui sous les noms de Lac Ontario, Lac Erié, Lac Huron, Lac Supérieur & Lac Michigan, avec les Pays qui en sont au Nord & au Sud, jusqu'aux Montagnes des Apalaches, les cours des Rivières d'Ohio, d'Ouabache & des Illinois, jusqu'au Fleuve Mississipi ; ensin les Terres qui sont à l'Ouest, comme le Lac des Bois, celui de Gouynipique, le Lac Bourbon, celui des Prairies &c, avec les Postes que nous y avons établis.

Au Nord de l'Isle de Terre neuve, on trouve le Détroit de Belle-Isle, qui fait une des entrées du Golfe S. Laurent ; ce Détroit a au moins 40 lieues de long sur 10 à 12 de large. Au Nord du Détroit de Belle-Isle sont les Côtes de Labrador, grand & vaste Pays, que les François avoient nommé anciennement nouvelle Bretagne ; mais le nom de Labrador (qui veut dire Terre du Laboureur), qu'on prétend lui avoir été donné par les Espagnols, a prévalu. Les François ont seuls droit sur ces Pays, puisqu'ils l'ont découvert en même tems que le Golfe Saint Laurent dont il fait partie, & que dès les premiers tems ils ont commercé & qu'ils y commercent encore seuls avec les Naturels du pays. A la Côte Orientale de ce Pays, on trouve la grande Baie des Esquimaux, située par les 55 degrés 30 minutes de Latitude, concédée aux Habitans de Quebec par le Gouverneur du Canada ; cette Baie est très grande & très profonde, semée de beaucoup d'Isles à son entrée, & s'enfonçant dans les Terres plus de 40 lieues. Le sieur Joliet, qui fut envoyé en 1694 par M. de Frontenac, Gouverneur du Canada, pour visiter la Côte de Labrador, la nomma Baie S. Louis ; il y trouva parmi les Sauvages qui vinrent faire la traite avec lui, des vestiges fort anciens de commerce fait avec des Vaisseaux François, & nous avons continué depuis de fréquenter cette Baie & d'y faire le commerce. Les Peuples qui habitent cette Contrée sont connus sous le nom général des Esquimaux, ils sont errans & vagabonds & très sauvages ; le commerce qu'on fait avec eux consiste en peaux de Loups marins & quelques Pelleteries.

Le Cap Charles fait la Pointe la plus Orientale de Labrador, & forme l'entrée du Golfe de Saint Laurent du côté du Nord ; il est situé par les 52^e degrés 4 minutes de Latitude, & par les 55 degrés 40 minutes de Longitude. Depuis ce Cap en allant à l'Ouest-Sud-Ouest, jusqu'à la Rivière Saint Augustin (autrement Pegouatchiou) il y a près de 80 lieues. La Côte entre deux est arrosée de beaucoup de Rivières, dont quelques-unes sont considérables & tombent dans des Baies, à l'entrée desquelles il y a quantité d'Isles. Les principales sont la Baie des Châteaux, la Baie Rouge, le Grand & le Petit Saint Modeste, la Baie de Forteau, la Baie Phelippeau & autres où nous avons des Habitations & de petits Forts, entr'autres le Fort de Pont-Chartrain.

GOLFE SAINT LAURENT, & FLEUVE SAINT LAURENT.

Ce Golfe, qui a pris son nom du Grand Fleuve S. Laurent qui s'y décharge, a pour bornes du côté de l'Est la Côte Occidentale de l'Isle de Terre-Neuve, du côté de l'Ouest & du Midi les Côtes de la Nouvelle France, & au Nord la Côte de Labrador qui est aussi de la Nouvelle France.

XI. TERRA DE LABORADOR ; OR, NEW BRITAIN.

Is a Country of vast Extent, lies N. from Newfoundland and the River of St. Lawrence, and along Hudson's Bay and Streights, to N. Lat. 64. Some name it Corterealis and Estotiland. Others reckon the two others to be Subdivisions of it. The Name of Laborador is ascrib'd to its being fit for Cultivation ; that of Corterealis to a Portuguese Gentleman, who was here in 1500 ; and Nova Britania came from some Britons in France, who were here in 1504 ; But the English claim'd a Right to it from Cabot, who discovered it with Newfoundland in Henry VIIIth's Time. The French reckon it part of Canada, and have some Settlements here The Natives were like the rest of the Northern Americans, dwelt for most part in Caves, and liv'd by Fishing and Hunting. By Conversation with the French they are said to be more civiliz'd. The Sansons in their Map ascribe that part of it which lies on the N. Side of the River of Canada to New France, and the most easterly Part of that Division is called Great and Little Eskimaux. They say the whole is a mountainous Country, and abounds with Wild Beasts. The length of it from the River St. Lawrence to the Entrance of Hudson's Bay, is, according to our Maps, 1020 Miles, and the greatest breadth from E. to W. 450.

NOUVELLE FRANCE ISLES ET AUTRES COLONIES FRANÇOISES.

Toutes ces nouvelles Colonies Françaises peuvent être divisées selon les Parties du monde où elles sont situées, & subdivisées en Regions & Provinces.

Celles de l'Amerique Septentrionale se peuvent divisées en Colonies situées dans la Terre ferme, & en celles situées dans les Isles. Les Colonies de la Terre Ferme forment ce que nous appellons la Nouvelle France, divisée en Canada ou Nouvelle France propre, & en Louisiane, qui forme la Nouvelle France Meridionale. Le Canada est cette grande Region, qui est située le long & des deux côtés du fleuve Saint Laurent, des Lacs que ce fleuve traverse & des rivières qui se rendent, tant dans le fleuve que dans les lacs ; elle se divise en plusieurs Provinces & Gouvernements particuliers, qui sont la Terre de Labrador ou Pais des Eskimaux, & le Saguenai où se trouvent Tadoussac & Chicoutimi au Septentrion du grand fleuve S. Laurent ; la Gaspésie et le Pais des Abenakis & Etchemins au Midy du même fleuve ; le Canada propre ou Gouvernement particulier de Quebec, celui des Trois-Rivières, celui de Montréal & celui des grands Lacs.

IDÉE GÉNÉRALE DU CANADA OU DE LA NOUVELLE-FRANCE.

Le Canada, ou la Nouvelle-France n'est proprement borné au Nord que par la Baye d'Hudson, à l'Est par la mer et l'isle de Terre-Neuve, au Sud et au Sud-est par les colonies anglaises, au Sud-est par la Louisiane, à l'Ouest par les terres espagnoles et par des terres ou des mers inconnues ; il était plus considérable avant le traité d'Utreck, par lequel le roy a cédé à la reine d'Angleterre et a ses successeurs, à perpétuité, la Nouvelle-Ecosse, ou l'Acadie, conformément à ses anciennes limites, la ville de Port-Royal, l'isle de Terre-Neuve, et la Baye d'Hudson.

Son étendue actuelle comprend.

1". . . .L'Isle Royale qui est à l'entrée du golfe de Canada, (St-Laurent), avec toutes les isles qui se trouvent dans cette baye.

2". . . .La terre ferme de l'Acadie, le long de la presqu'isle d'Acadie, jusqu'à la mer, et ce qui se trouve jusqu'à la Nouvelle-Angleterre, en tirant à l'Ouest.

3". . . .La terre ferme de Labrador, et toutes les côtes maritimes qui se terminent et s'étendent du Détroit de Belle-Isle jusqu'à la Baye d'Hudson.

4". . . .Toutes les terres aboutissantes au fleuve de St-Laurent, depuis son embouchure jusqu'à sa source, et a celle de toutes les rivieres qui s'y déchargent.

DU GOLFE DU CANADA, DU FORT ET TERRES DE LABRADOR.

Sur la droite au bout de l'isle de Terre Neuve, qui régne tout le long du golfe, et dont l'étendue est de plus de 80 lieues on trouve par les 52 degres latitude nord, le detroit de Belle-Isle appelé communement le passage du Nord ; ce détroit est forme par l'extremité des terres du continent de l'Amerique, et par le bout du côté septentrional de l'isle de Terre Neuve.

Les terres qui sont vis-à-vis cette coste, se nomment les terres de Labrador, elles s'étendent jusqu'à la baye d'Hudson, dont l'entrée est par les 62 degres et quelques minutes de latitude nord.

Dans ce détroit, a la distance d'environ 40 lieues du golfe, sur les costes des terres de Labrador, pres d'une grande baye appelée la baye de Philippaux est scituée le fort Pontchartrain de Labrador, qui a été établi par le sieur de Courtemanche, qui y commandait ; ce fort est par 52 degres et quelques minutes de latitude nord ; c'est aujourd'huy le sieur Martel de Berouague qui le possède. Il se fait dans toute cette coste, et principalement dans cet endroit, une grande pesche de morues mais elles sont ordinairement plus petites que celles qu'on pesche audessus de l'Isle de Terre-Neuve, et dans le golfe du Canada ; le sieur de Courtemanche y a fait faire la pesche aux loups marins qui y sont fort abondants, de même que dans le golfe de Canada, et dans le fleuve St-Laurent, cette pesche se continue et se fait au printens, et produit ordinairement 4 à 500 barriques d'huile, au dit sieur de Berouague.

TERRA DE LABRADOR.

III. This Country which is call'd New Britain by the English, lies to the South-west of Greenland ; it has Hudson's Streights, and Part of the Atlantick Ocean, on the North-east ; and the last, also, on the East. On the South-east it is divided from Newfoundland by the Streights of Belle-Isle ; on the South it has the Gulph and River of St. Laurence, and Part of Canada ; and on the West Hudson's Bay. It extends from the 50th to the 63rd Degree of Latitude, and from the 51st to the 79th Degree of Longitude West from London. Its Form is almost triangular. The Name of Terra de Labrador, which the Spaniards gave it, and which signifies the Ploughman's Land, seems to hint that this Country is cultivated ; and yet it is very probable, says la Martiniere, that the greatest Part of it lies untill'd. We have no Knowledge of the Inland Parts of this Country, and but an imperfect one of the Coast.

NEW BRITAIN

This Country is situated betwixt the 50th and 64th Degrees of N. Latit., and bounded on the North by Hudson's Bay and Streights, which separate it from the Countries of the Artie Circle ; on the East by the North Sea, on the South by Canada and the Gulph of St. Lawrence, and on the West by Countries unknown.

It received the Name of New Britain from the English. That Part of it which lies to the East of Hudson's Bay, received the Name of Labrador from the Spaniards ; and that of Esquimaux, from a savage People who inhabit the South-East Part of it.

The Coasts are all that is known of this great Country. New Britain consists properly in that Track of Land, which is divided into two Parts by Hudson's Bay, one to the East of it, and the other to the West.

The great poverty and ferocity of the people who live near the sea shore, with the excessive coldness of the climate, have deterred Europeans from settling any colonies here. The natives hunt for furs, in which they carry on a traffic with the Europeans. Aan de Noordzyde van den Golf van St. Laurens heeft men, als gezegd is, een zeer hooge Kust, die de Zuidkust is van een zeer groot Land, het welk van ouds den naam van Terra De Labrador of Terra Laboratoris, dat is het Arbeiders Lands, gevoerd heeft. De eigentlyke reden, dat 'er de Spaanschen dien naam aan gegeven hebben, is nog een Raadzel : ten ware het mogt zyn, om dat zy oordeelden, dat 'er zonder Arbeid niet uit te haalen was : terwyl de Landen, door hun in Zuid-Amerika ontdekt, van zelf genoegzaam Vrugten, tot Levensonderhoud, uitleverden. De Engelschen gaven 'er, naderhand, den naam van NIEUW-BRITTANNIE aan ; hoewel zy, so het schynt, nimmer eenige moeite aangewend hebben, lom de binnenlandsche gesteldheid te ontdekken, of bezitting van de Kust te neemen.

Dit Land strekt zig van vyftig tot meer dan zestig Graaden Noorder Breedte uit ; in Lengte Oost- en Westwaards, ongevaar, van den vyf-en-vyftigsten tot den zes-en-zeventigsten Graad, bewesten Londen. Men kan hier uit de uitgestrektheid opmaaken van een plek Lands, die de drie Ryken van Groot Britannie ver to boven gaat in grootte ; ja mooglyk zelfs wel geheel Frankryk, en Spanje, in dat opzigt, overtreft. De gedaante, echter, schynt driehoekig te zyn, aan de Zuidzyde breed, en Noordwaards, smal toeloopende, daar zy paalt aan de Straat Hudson, hebbende de Baay van dien naam ten Westen, en de Zee van Groenland ten Noordoosten. De Zuidzyde paalt ten deele aan de Grenzen van Kanada, ten deele aan den Golf van St. Laurens, wordende, wordende door een Kanaal, de Straat van Bellisle genaamd ; van Terreneuf afgescheiden.

The north side of the Gulf of St. Lawrence is bounded by a very high The country coast which forms the south coast of a very large country which has always had the name of Terra de Labrador, or Terra Laboratoris, i.e., Labourers' Land. Why it has thus been called by the Spanish is still unexplained, unless they thought, that, without labour, nothing could be got out of it, whilst the countries they had discovered in South-America produced without work sufficient fruit for subsistence. The English, subsequently, called it New-Britain, but it seems they have never done anything to explore the conditions of the interior, or to take possession of the coast.

This country extends from fifty to over sixty degrees north latitude, and from about the fifty-fifth to the seventy-sixth degree of longitude, west of London. This gives one an idea of the extent of an area which far exceeds the three kingdoms of Great-Britain in size, nay which possibly surpasses France and Spain in that respect. The form of the country seems, however to be triangular, wide in the south, and narrowing to the north, where it is bounded by the Hudson Strait, having the bay of that name to the west and the Greenland Sea to the north-east. The south side is bounded for a part, by the borders of Kanada, and the remainder by the Gulf of St. Lawrence, being separated from Terrenew by a Channel called the Strait of Bellisle.

The Coast is rocky, and interspersed with innumerable isles. The only attempt to trade with Labrador, has been directed towards the fishery ; the annual produce of which, amounts to upwards of £49,000 sterl. The inhabitants, whose number is unknown, hunt for furs and skins. The Moravian Brethren maintain a communication with their mission on the coast of Labrador. The property of their ship is divided into shares of £10 only, with the supply intended for the brethren ; articles are sent for traffic with the natives, enabling them to bring back cargoes that have afforded them not always a dividend of more than the interest of the capital employed. P R E F A C E.

IN the following report I have endeavoured to answer, in so far as the geographer may, two questions of prime importance in connection with the Labrador Boundary dispute: —

A. What precisely is the coast-line from which the territory known as the " coast " should be measured inland?

B. Where precisely should the coast-line be traced in the vicinity of Hamilton Inlet?

In seeking an answer to these questions I have examined the various reports, maps, charts and other documents listed below, and in addition many briefer memoranda and other sources of information not specifically cited in the text.

Throughout the report I have endeavoured to emphasize fundamental physical distinctions and to avoid theoretical niceties which have no place in a practical problem such as this. There are sound scientific reasons for distinguishing between seas and rivers, bays and lakes ; and these reasons we must understand and respect. But fine theoretical distinctions and controverted questions upon which specialists themselves cannot agree, need not greatly concern us. We will seek rather the fundamental reasons for making broad distinctions which are widely recognised and which form the basis of important actions in law, and in diplomacy, as well as in the every-day affairs of men.

To aid the reader in keeping clearly before him the general argument, I have summarized the substance of the report in the pages immediately following this Preface. This summary will be found convenient for ready reference, will show at a glance the relation of any details of the discussion to the general argument, and may serve a useful purpose where one desires to review the substance of the discussion without following it step by step.

IN answer to the first of two questions treated in this report—" What precisely is the coast-line from which the territory known as the coast should be measured inland ?"—it is answered that the coast-line is the line which outlines or contours a land mass where such land mass comes in contact with the sea. In elaboration of this answer it is shown (p. 1) that the scientific definition of coast-line places it at the inner edge of the shore, at the line reached by the highest storm tides (Fig. 1A). There is a scientific distinction between coast-line and shore-line (p. 2) and between coast and shore, which the law has sometimes recognized (p. 3). In popular usage “ coast-line ” and “ shore-line ” are commonly confused (p. 4), although it is generally recognized that “ coast-line ” is a term inapplicable to the margin of lakes and rivers (p. 5). “ Coast-line ” is sometimes confused with “ coast ” or “ coastal strip,” even in diplomacy (p. 5), although it is properly a line without width. We must recognize and distinguish an “outer coast-line,” an “inner coast-line,” and a “ political coast-line,” each different from the other (Fig. 2, p. 7). It is the inner coast-line which chiefly concerns us here.

We now consider carefully the important and critical fact that the coast-line does not enter rivers and lakes (p. 9). It is first shown that physiographers and geographers restrict the terms “ coast ” and “ coast-line ” to the margins of lands bordering the sea. Then it is made clear that this restriction is so sound and practical that it is fully recognized by the law (p. 11), with only rare exceptions (p. 12). Popular custom follows the lead of science and the law (p. 13). Contrary arguments presented on behalf of the Colony of Newfoundland are considered at some length (p. 16 et seq.), especially the contention that the Alaskan Boundary Case forms a precedent for drawing the coast-line at the head of tide or head of salt water in tidal rivers (pp. 20-26). This contention, like the others, is shown to be erroneous, and it is concluded that the coast-line follows the border of the sea and its bona fide bays, but does not enter rivers or lakes, even where these are penetrated by salt water and by the pulsations of the tides (p. 26).

Having defined the coast-line, we now proceed to answer the second question—“ Where precisely should the coast-line be traced in the vicinity of Hamilton Inlet ?” The answer (p. 27) places it on the margins of Hamilton Inlet proper, but does not permit it to enter the Narrows or Lake Melville. Hamilton Inlet, east of Tikoralak Head, is thus recognized as a true arm of the sea (p. 27) ; but before we can justify the answer in so far as it relates to the Narrows and Lake Melville, we must dispose of some preliminary considerations. It is first shown that the presence of salt water in a river or a lake does not constitute it an arm of the sea (pp. 27-31) ; next that the propagation of tides into a river or a lake does not make it a sea arm (pp. 32-34). These scientific views are then shown to be recognized as sound and practical in the law (pp. 34-40) and in diplomacy (pp. 40-42). Navigability, the test proposed by Vice-Admiral Learmonth for distinguishing sea arms from land waters, is next shown to be wholly inapplicable in geographic and territorial problems such as the Labrador question (pp. 43-47).

The three preliminary considerations mentioned in the preceding paragraph having been disposed of, it is next shown that the Hamilton River system is a unit from its sources on the watershed to its mouth at Tikoralak Head, the Narrows and Lake Melville representing the tidal lower portion of this river system (p. 47). The criteria for recognizing true rivers are first set forth (p. 49), and it is shown that the Narrows stream corresponds in all essentials to the requirements for a normal river which is affected as most rivers are near the sea, by the tides (pp. 50-51). Special peculiarities of tidal rivers are then discussed, and it is demonstrated that all such peculiarities are typical of the Narrows stream (pp. 51-55). Finally, stream characteristics due to glaciation are set forth, and the presence of these characteristics in the Narrows-Lake Melville basin is pointed out (pp. 55-57). It is shown that if we had only the Narrows to deal with, and if Lake Melville were suppressed (Fig. 3, p. 57), no one could doubt that the Hamilton River continued to Tikoralak Head, the head of Hamilton Inlet proper.

Lake Melville is next considered, and it is argued that this water body is neither a fjord nor a bay of the ocean, but a true lake (p. 58). Inasmuch as the Colony of Newfoundland has presented testimony to the effect that Lake Melville is a fjord, apparently in the belief that this would fix its status as a sea arm, the fjord problem is fully considered, and it is shown—first, that the fjord problem is one of much intricacy and wholly irrelevant to the present issue (pp. 58-66); second, that the theory of fjord formation applied to the Labrador coast is highly improbable, and that Lake Melville lacks the essential characteristics of a fjord (pp. 66-70); and, third, that however interesting these theoretical considerations may be, territory cannot be assigned to sovereignty on such debatable grounds (p. 71). After the fjord problem is disposed of, it is shown that Lake Melville lacks the ordinary physical characteristics which are essential to a bay of the ocean (pp. 71-73). The obvious affinities of this water body with true lakes are then discussed, examples of other lakes affected by salt water and tides being cited (pp. 73-76).

In order to make more evident the fact that Lake Melville and the Narrows stream are terrestrial water-bodies whereas Hamilton Inlet proper is an arm of the sea, an imaginary drop of sea-level is assumed, and the resulting conditions (Fig. 4B) are compared with the conditions actually existing (Fig. 4A). It is shown that Lake Melville and the Narrows stream would exist independently of the sea, whereas Hamilton Inlet must be extinguished if the sea is withdrawn (pp. 76-82). Such a test fixes the mouth of the Hamilton River system at the mouth of the Narrows, and the head of the true sea inlet at Tikoralak Head (p. 83). This completes the demonstration as to the precise position of the coast-line in the vicinity of Hamilton Inlet.

A. —THE “ COAST-LINE ” IS THE LINE WHICH OUTLINES OR CONTOURS A LAND MASS WHERE SUCH LAND MASS COMES IN CONTACT WITH THE SEA.

It will later appear that the “ coast ” of any land mass is a zone or belt of country of indefinite breadth extending inward from the coast-line. It is important, therefore, that the precise significance of this base line, from which the breadth of the coast is to be measured, be clearly understood. Fortunately the meaning of “ coast-line ” is less open to controversy than is the broader term “ coast,” and it is thus convenient to treat it first, leaving the discussion of “ coast” to subsequent paragraphs.

SCIENTIFIC DEFINITION OF COAST-LINE

For the physiographer “ coast-line ” has been defined as the line which forms the boundary between the shore zone alternatively covered and uncovered by the tides, and the coast zone always exposed to view. “ It marks the seaward limit of the permanently exposed coast.”*

The essential relations will be clear from Fig. 1, reproduced from a volume on “ Shore Processes and Shore-line Development ” published by the present writer in 1919. This shows the shore divided into two minor zones : the foreshore traversed by the normal play of the tides, and the backshore covered only at times of extraordinary high water. At the inner edge of the backshore, and just at the base of the wave-cut cliffs where such exist, is the coast-line. The coast-line thus traces the landward limit of the realm dominated by the action of marine forces, and the seaward limit of the realm dominated by subaerial agencies.

SCIENTIFIC DISTINCTION BETWEEN “COAST-LINE” AND “SHORE-LINE.”

It will be seen from Fig. 1A that the physiographer makes a distinction between “ coast-line ” and “ shore-line,” and that he recognizes a high-tide shore-line and a low-tide shore-line. If he speaks of shore-line without qualification he usually means the low-tide shore-line, the line bounding the seaward limit of the foreshore. This is the physiographic basis for the fact, pointed out by Gilbert and Brigham, that in applying to the edge of the land washed by ocean waters the terms shore-line and coast-line, “ the latter suggests more particularly the margin of the land, the former the border of the sea.”†

The physiographer makes a further distinction between coast-line and shoreline, for he recognizes that rivers and bays, as well as the oceans, have shore-lines, whereas he restricts the term coast-line to “ the line along which the ocean waters wash the edge of the land.”‡

This distinction is clearly expressed in different terms in a modern textbook of physiography when the authors say : “ The shore is the margin of the land next to any large body of water, whereas the coast is the margin of the land next to the sea ” (Arey, Bryant and Clendenin).

LEGAL DEFINITION OF “COAST-LINE.”

The terms “ coast ” and “ shore ” figure abundantly in the law, but rarely have the courts been called upon to define the term “ coast-line.” That the law will recognize the “ coast-line ” as a line drawn at the inner edge of the shore when circumstances make clear that the coast was meant to exclude the shore, is clear from a decision in such a case where it was held that the expression “ coast-line ” used to describe a property boundary in a certain grant of land was "intended to indicate the actual and the normal boundary of land which was divided from the sea by high water mark, and that it consequently included the land down to the normal high water mark, and not further, to the exclusion of the foreshore and all rights to mine under it." *

POPULAR CONFUSION OF THE TERMS "COAST-LINE" AND "SHORE-LINE."

Obviously one cannot expect that popular usage will, in referring to the limit between land and sea, make the fine distinction between coast-line and shore-line recognized by the physiographer. The reasons for confusing coast-line and shore-line are easily understood. Except on low shores where the tidal range is great, the two lines are commonly but a few yards apart. It would not be possible to show both lines correctly on maps of ordinary scale. Most people fail to distinguish between sea-coast and sea-shore (see Fig. 1B) ; while others who recognize a difference think of coast as including the narrower shore, with both having the same limiting line seaward. Under these conditions it was inevitable that “ coast-line ” and “ shore-line ” should be used interchangeably as applied to the margin of the sea, and even the physiographer has sometimes fallen into this loose manner of speaking. The fact that such confusion exists is immaterial to the present issue, for there is here no dispute as to who shall possess the narrow strip of shore between coast-line and low-tide shore-line. It is assumed that in the present case possession of the coast will carry with it possession of the bordering strip of narrow shore. The popular confusion of the terms coast-line and shore-line is mentioned here simply to make clear actual usage as affecting the term coast-line, and to emphasize two significant facts, referred to below :

(1) That despite the confusion as to terminology along the shores of the sea, even popular usage recognizes coast-line as a term inapplicable to the shores of lakes and rivers ; and

(2) That as commonly employed the term “ coast ” is conceived to be such a narrow zone that it is usually made synonymous with sea-shore, the terms coast-line and shore-line therefore being used interchangeably.

“ COAST-LINE ” CONFUSED WITH “ COASTAL STRIP ”

It should be clear that the term “coast-line” properly denotes a line without width. It therefore should not be confused with “ coast ” or with such expression as “ strip of coast ” or “ coastal strip,” all of which expressions imply a belt of country having some width. Unfortunately such

* Joint Appendix, Second Proof, Volume III., p. 1758 (Final Print, Vol. V, p. 2092).

confusion is sometimes encountered, as in the English translations of that part of the convention between Great Britain and Russia, dated February 28/16, 1825, relating to the eastern boundary of Alaska, where the French “ lisière de Côte ” is improperly translated “ line of coast, ” instead of the more correct “ strip of coast.” This results in a confused and absurd treaty provision which becomes intelligible only in the light of the context. The same confusion reappears elsewhere in connection with this Alaskan Boundary dispute, as, for example, in the places cited at page 7 of the Counter Case of the Colony of Newfoundland, where Sir C. Bagot is quoted as speaking of “ a line of coast extending ten marine leagues into the interior,” and Count Nesselrode of “ the width of coast-line necessary for the safe existence and consolidation of our colonies.” Whether these uses of the terms coast-line and line of coast be attributed to incorrect translation from French texts of the original convention, to careless use of language by diplomatic agents, or to some other cause, there can be no doubt that such usage is both improper and exceptional. In the documents relating to the negotiations, the territory in question is usually described simply as the “ lisière,” as a “ strip of mainland,” “ strip of seacoast,” “ strip of territory,” etc. ; and the English translation of the authoritative French text of the convention, given by the Honourable John W. Foster* (then Ex-Secretary of State and a United States member of the Joint High Commission) in his account of the boundary dispute written while negotiations were still pending, correctly translates “ lisière de côte ” as “ strip of coast.” On the other hand, the United States representatives, in presenting their argument, repeatedly confused “ coast-line ” and “ coast.” Notwithstanding the fact that “ coast-line ” is not infrequently employed in the unfortunate manner indicated by several of the foregoing citations, it remains true that overwhelmingly preponderant usage recognizes the coast-line as a line without width which forms “ the contour of the coast ” (Funk and Wagnalls), “ the outline or contour line of a coast ” (Webster), “ the outline of a shore or coast ” (Century).

While recognition of the occasional confusion of “ coast-line ” with “ strip of coast ” is necessary to a full understanding of certain citations set forth in the Counter Case of the Colony of Newfoundland, the matter is not vital to the present issue, since it is not questioned that Newfoundland is entitled to jurisdiction over the “ coast ” of Labrador within specified limits, and it cannot be disputed that the coast has breadth, measured from the coast-line as a line of departure.

AND “ POLITICAL COAST-LINE.”

Islands (I, I, Fig. 2) closely bordering a coast are commonly treated as part of the coast. This usage holds in physiography, in general geographic descriptions and nomenclature and in popular discussions and legally the term coast “ includes the natural appendages of the territory which rise out of the water.”

In physiography and in general geography the term “ coast ” includes likewise certain types of bars which separate undoubted ocean bays or lagoons (L, Fig. 2) from the mainland, as well as the margin of the mainland bordering the inner sides of such bays or lagoons.

On both types of coasts it is customary to distinguish between an “ outer coast-line ” discontinuous and contouring the seaward sides of the outer islands or the seaward sides of the bars ; and an “ inner coast-line ” or “ mainland coast-line ” continuous and contouring the edge of the main-land (see Fig. 2). The outer coast-line does not enter the mouths of deep bays (B, Fig. 2), but it does follow the great or major windings of the coast as shown in Fig. 2. The inner or mainland coast-line is sometimes called the “ physical coast-line.” This was the line claimed by the United States as the base from which the ten marine leagues were to be measured inland in the Alaskan Boundary dispute.

Besides the inner and outer coast-line known to physiographers, political geography recognizes a third line, the “ political coast-line ” or “ legal coast-line.” This differs from the outer coast-line in being continuous, and in entering bays broadly open to the sea (B, Fig. 2), although it cuts across the mouths of bays where such mouths are not more than six miles wide (sometimes a greater width is permissible). It is the political coast-line which is adopted in international law as the base from which to measure the belt of high sea contiguous to the territory of a given nation formally recognized as under the jurisdiction of that nation. In the Alaskan Boundary dispute, the “ political coast-line ” is apparently confused with “ outer coast-line ” in the Printed Argument of the United States, perhaps because they are often coincident for long distances. It is understood that in the present controversy there is no dispute as to the possession of coastal islands or bars, nor any claim to use the political coast-line as a base of measurement. Attention, therefore, centres on the inner or mainland coast-line, the precise position of which is a subject of dispute in the vicinity of Hamilton Inlet.

THE COAST-LINE DOES NOT ENTER RIVERS AND LAKES.

Few geographical concepts are more firmly established or more widely accepted than that coast, and hence the coast-line which contour them, are restricted to lands bordering on the sea. It would not be correct to say that a contrary conception has never found its way into geographical literature, for in a subject to which men without technical physiographic training have contributed largely, and in which popular geographic terms are loosely used, it would be strange indeed if occasional authority could not be found for the application of the term “ coast-line ” to lands bordering rivers and lakes. The definition of “ coast ” in Ash's Dictionary, London, 1775 and 1795, cited on page 8 of the Counter Case of the Colony of Newfoundland, and which extends the term to cover “ the bank of any large river or water,” is a case in point. This exceptional definition of the term “ coast ” only serves to set out in bold relief the overwhelming mass of authority specifically restricting the term to lands bordering the sea. The surprising and significant thing is that despite the confusion (noted above) of the terms shore-line and coast-line as applied to the sea margin, and the further fact that rivers and hays as well as seas have shores, all classes of writers—physiographic, geographic, legal and popular—should be so near to perfect agreement in restricting “ coast ” and “ coast-line ” to lands washed by the ocean waters.

By scientists the terms “ coast ” and “ coast-line ” are defined in texts on physical geography or treatises on shore-lines (sometimes without distinguishing them from the shore or shore-line of the sea) as “the line along which the ocean waters wash the edge of the land ” (Gilbert and Brigham), “ the contact of land and sea ” (Tarr and Martin), “ the margin of the sea ” and “ the line formed by the meeting of the land and the sea ” (Chamberlain), “ the region immediately to the landward of the shore-line formed by the intersection of the plane of the sea with the land ” (Gulliver), “ the narrow intricate belt where the sea and land meet ” (Russel), and in the terms of the physiographic text already quoted in an earlier paragraph, “ the shore is the margin of the land next to any large body of water, whereas the coast is the margin of the land next to the sea ” (Arey, Bryant and Clendenin). Physiographers and geographers are unanimous in restricting the coast-line to the border of the sea.

The law fully recognizes the geographic fact that “ coast ” and “ coast-line ” refer to the margins of lands washed by oceanic waters. Thus we find “ coast ” defined in the law dictionaries as “ the margin of a country bounded by the sea ” (Bouvier), “ the edge or margin of a country bounding on the sea ” (Black), “ the land on the edge of a country bordering on the sea ” (English), “ the land which bounds the sea ” (Stroud). The meaning of coast has repeatedly been clearly set forth in the course of judicial decisions involving the interpretation of such terms as coast, coast-line and coast-wise, etc. These tell us that the coast is “ the seaboard of a country ” (Ravesies v. United States, 35 Fed. Rep. 919), “the contact of the mainland with the main sea, where no bay intervenes, and with the latter wherever it exists ” (Hamilton v. Menifee, 11 Tex. 751), “ the land bordering on and washed by the sea ” (Soult v. Corvette l'Africaine, Bee's Adm. Rep. 1810, 208), “ the land which bounds the sea ” (King v. Forty-nine Casks of Brandy, 3 Hagg, Adm 275). These definitions of coast are accepted and promulgated in various legal works (see citations in Joint Appendix, Second Proof, Vol III, p. 1744, Final Print, Vol. V, pp. 2076-2078) Sometimes “ coast ” is made synonymous with “ shore ” but in such cases the context makes it clear that “ seashore ” is meant (Ravesies v. U.S., 35 Fed. Rep. 919).

Since sea-water and tides flow from the ocean into the lower parts of rivers, and the transition from bays to rivers is frequently a gradual one, and since, furthermore, ocean vessels enter freely the mouths of many rivers, we must not be surprised to find an occasional judicial decision apparently out of harmony with the overwhelming mass of legal opinion concerning the significance of “ coast.” Two instances are cited in footnote 5 on page 1743, Volume III, of the second proof of the Joint Appendix (vide Final Print, Vol. V, p. 2077). In one case the words “ seashore ” and “ coast ” in a certain act were held to be broad enough to include tide and overflowed lands along a river emptying into the ocean, and in another case an act regulating pilotage on vessels on the coast of England was held to extend to the River Thames. But these decisions, whether or not to be explained as so justified by the special matters to which they relate as to constitute apparent rather than real exceptions to the usual rule of law, stand out in relief against the generality of legal usage, and are offset by decisions that vessels on rivers, even if carrying merchandise between different states of the United States, are not engaged in “ coastwise trade,” since “ coast-wise trade means trade or intercourse carried on by sea ” (see Ravesies v. U.S., 35 Fed. Rep. 919). Even more specific are certain of the contrary opinions : “ coast (is) a word very strangely applied to a river, but the proper word applied to the sea ” (The Twee Gebroeders, 3 C. Rob. Adm. 343) ; “ the term coast, in its popular sense is, we believe, applied to the land fronting on the open sea, or inlets off the sea, or bays, but is never applied to that fronting on rivers ” (Regina v. Cox, 1859, 1 P. E., I. Rep. 173) ; “ I do not apprehend that the banks of a river, although subject to tidal influence, come within that description,” i.e., “ coasts of Scotland ” (Bowie v. Marquis of Ailsa, 14 Court of Sessions Cases, 4th Ser. 666).

Following the lead of scientific and legal usage, popular custom almost universally restricts the terms “ coast ” and “ coast-line ” to the margin of the sea. This is reflected in the definitions given by standard dictionaries, where we find “ coast ” (often made synonymous with shore of the sea, as already noted) defined as “ the margin of land next to the sea, the sea-shore ” (Funk and Wagnalls), “ the sea-shore or land near it ; the seaboard or sea marge, that is, land immediately abutting the sea ” (Webster), “ the side edge, or margin of the land next to the sea ; the sea-shore ; the boundary line formed by the sea ; the coast-line (Century), the edge or margin of the land next the sea, the sea-shore ” (Murray's New English) and “ coast-line ” usually in some such terms as “ the outline or contour of a coast ” (See preceding section). Looking backward to past usage, one finds in the older dictionaries almost as great uniformity as in these of to-day. With the exception of Ash's broad definition (1775, 1795) already cited, and one by Richardson (1867) defining coast merely as “ the side, the edge, or margin ; border, limit, or boundary, a district,” we find remarkable agreement that the coast is “ the sea-shore and the adjoining country, in fact, the sea front of the land ” (Smyth 1867), “ the edge, border, or margin of a country bounded by the sea ; the shore ” (Webster 1857 and 1865), “ the edge or margin of the land next the sea ; the shore ” (Johnson 1895, 1818, 1831), “ the edge or margin of the land next the sea, the shore ” (Sheridan 1780), “ the edge of the land next the sea, the sea-shore ” (Bailey 1764), “ a shore or land, which lies near and is washed by the sea ” (Barclay 1744). Some of these authorities admit as other meanings “ side of anything,” “ frontier border,” “ exterior line or limit,” but such meanings are marked “ obsolete,” “ archaic,” or “ dialect ” by Webster (1857 and 1865) and later authorities. We will recur to this point in discussing the significance of “ coast ” as used in early days, but it is irrelevant to the question as to whether a “ coast-line ” as restricted to the sea margin, or enters tidal rivers and lakes. Among all the authorities Ash (1775 and 1795) alone allows “ coast ” to be applied to the bank of any large river or water, and he gives the first meaning as “ the edge of the land next the sea, the sea-shore,” Bailey (1764) and Johnson (1818 and 1831) specifically state that the term coast “ is not used for the banks of less waters,” Webster (1857), after giving the definition cited above, “ the edge or margin of the land next to the sea, the sea-shore,” says : “ This is the more common application of the word ; and it seems to be used for sea-coast, the border of the sea. Hence it is never used for the bank of a river.”

From the preceding discussion it is clear that we have to deal here, not with a term which is so loosely used as to give equal right to employ the term in any one of several meanings, but with a term which according to the overwhelming mass of authority-scientific, legal, and popular-has one perfectly definite, well recognized significance. If a somewhat figurative use of “ coast ” is justified by some authorities and found in certain Biblical passages, the literal application of the term presents no difficulties. Only by rejecting the overwhelming mass of scientific, legal, and popular authority can one apply the term “ coast ” to the banks of rivers or lakes. The line which contours the coast, the coast-line, is therefore of necessity restricted to lands bordering the sea. It follows around the heads of ocean bays, ocean inlets, and other true arms of the sea ; but it does not enter rivers or lakes.

It appears to be argued in paragraph 16 and 17 of the Newfoundland Counter Case that authority is found in the Alaska Boundary Dispute, and in the King v. Forty-nine Casks of Brandy (3 Hagg. Adm. 257) for drawing the coast-line (from which the belt of territory belonging to Newfoundland is to be measured inland) about the heads of bays, inlets and creeks, and at the head of the tide in rivers and streams ; and that Hamilton v. Menifee (11 Tex. Rep 718) and Regina v. Cox (1859 1 P.E. I. Rep. 170) show that the sinuosities of bays and inlets must be followed. Further, the reference to the Alaskan Boundary Dispute is so worded as to imply that the decision in that case justifies the drawing of a coast-line along “the banks of, e.g., rivers or lakes.”

It is true that the coast-line follows the sinuosities of bays and inlets of the ocean, as understood in the cases of Hamilton v. Menifee and Regina v. Cox, for the bays and inlets there cited are physiographically parts of the sea. This does not mean that the coast-line follows anything which on a given map may happen to be named bay or inlet, for it is common knowledge that such terms are sometimes loosely used, and that a true river may be named an “inlet,” just as true inlet or bay of the ocean is frequently named a “river.” But in the cases cited it will be observed that the Court in the one instance contrasts “bay” with “the main sea” in such a manner as clearly to indicate its opinion, which I believe is physiographically correct, that the bay in question was a branch of the sea ; and in the other the Court specifies “inlets off the sea, or bays,” contrasts them with “the open sea,” and specifically excludes tidal rivers. These two cases therefore support Newfoundland's contention that the coast-line (from which the belt of coast belonging to her is to be measured) should follow the margins of bays and inlets which are physiographically parts of the sea ; but they offer no support for drawing the coast-line into rivers or lakes, being indeed specifically opposed to such an extension of the coast and its bounding line.

Neither the Alaskan Boundary case nor the case of the King v. Forty-Hine Casks of Brandy constitutes any authority for drawing the coast-line into such creeks as are to be classed with tidal streams, or into lakes, or at the head of the tide in rivers or streams. The latter case seems irrelevant to the present issue, while the Alaskan case, like the other two cases cited above, merely supports the contention that the Coast-line should follow true bays and inlets of the sea, including those salt-water bays which, although unquestionably arms of the sea, are called “creeks” in certain coastal regions.

The use of the word “creeks” for true arms of the sea is common in diplomatic documents, and appears, for example, in the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854 between Great Britain and the United States, where it is agreed that fisherman of both countries shall have the liberty to take fish “on the coasts and shores, and in the bays, harbours and creeks” of certain territories, it being specifically stated that such liberty “applies solely to the sea fishery.” while “all fisheries in rivers and the mouths of rivers” are definitely excluded. The Honourable John Hamilton Gray, in his Award as Umpire under the Reciprocity Treaty, points out that Webster and Maunders both define “creek” to be, according to English usage and etymology, “ a small inlet, bay or cove, a recess in the shore of the sea or of a river,” although it is recognized that American usage also applies the term to small rivers.*

Geographically the case of The King v. Forty-nine Casks of Brandy does not seem to be related to the present issue. The question there decided was not whether the coast or coast-line extended inland along tidal rivers. Such a question is not even indirectly touched upon. The decision related to Admiralty jurisdiction “ on the coast ” or on the high sea as affected by the rise and fall of the tide, and the court held that “ below the low-water mark the Admiral hath sole and absolute jurisdiction, but between high-water and low-water mark the common law and the Admiral have jurisdiction by turns,” provided always that the area in question is on the coast. “ If the water is within a county the common law claims jurisdiction.” It is true that the Court cites authority for the view that “ a port, haven or creek is divisum imperium, except when in the body of a county ” ; but the geographic features of the locality involved in this case, and the full text of the decision leave no doubt that “ port, haven or creek ” here refer equally to true arms of the sea. After a careful reading of the ease and a study of maps of the locality involved, I do not see how it can be held pertinent to the present issue.*

* One American geographer has stated that he can tell what part of the country a man comes from if he will answer three questions. Of these questions one is : “ What is a creek ?” selected because in one region a creek is a small fresh water stream, at another an arm or bay of the sea.

The geographic setting of the Alaska dispute serves to make clear the meaning of the text relating to it. The Alaskan coast is a true fjord coast, with deep arms of the sea penetrating far into the land and branching most intricately. These true sea arms are usually easily distinguished from the rivers which enter them, the mouths of the latter being most often clearly defined, and in many instances obstructed by deltas or bars. Tides run inland for miles along certain of the rivers, and a few are navigable for a considerable distance. The true sea arms are known as canals, inlets, passages, coves, bays, passes, ports, sounds, gulfs, bights, arms, harbours and straits. It was around the sinuosities of these that the coast-line, used as a reference line for boundary purposes, was to run. The word “ creeks ” does not occur in the Convention of 1903 establishing the Alaskan Tribunal, in the questions submitted to the Tribunal for adjudication, or in the Decision handed down by the Tribunal. The phrase used is always “ the bays, ports, inlets, havens, and waters of the ocean.” The chief point in dispute was not whether the coast-line should run around the inner ends of these arms of the sea, or far up the rivers at the head of the tide ; it was in essence whether it should run from headland to headland across the sea arms, or follow the sinuosities of the coast around their inner ends.

Did the United States, in contending that the eastern boundary of the lisière should follow around the heads of the sea arms, argue that measurement should be made from the head of tide in rivers or lakes, or from the head of salt water in stream channels or lakes basins? By no means.

A careful reading of the Cases, Counter Cases, and Arguments presented before the Alaskan Boundary Tribunal will show : —

(1) That while the word “ tide-water ” is used by the representatives of the United States in referring to the points from which marine leagues was to be measured inland, it was not used in a technical sense to denote head of tide on rivers, but solely to denote the sea-water of the bays, ports, inlets, havens, and other undoubted arms of the sea.

(2) That the word “ salt-water ” was more commonly employed, but again always as a synonym for the water of undoubted sea arms, and never with respect to the salt water entering the channels of rivers or basins of lakes.

(3) That where surveys were made to secure data for determining the correct position of the boundary at selected localities, the point of departure for calculating the marine leagues was always on the broad expanse of an undoubted sea arm, or at the mouth of a river, and never at the head of tide or salt water in a river channel.

* See Hagg. Adm. Rep. 3, 257-293.

(4) That at no point is the eastern boundary of the lisière more than 10 marine leagues from a broadly open sea arm, whereas the head of tide on many of the rivers is found miles inland from the heads of these open sea arms ; and, what is even more pertinent,

(5) That at no point did the eastern boundary of the lisière as claimed by the United States before the Tribunal exceed the distance of 10 marine leagues from the water of an undoubted sea arm, whereas had head of salt water or head of a tide on the rivers been used as a basis of measurement the boundary claimed must have lain much farther eastward in Canadian territory.

It is true that the use of the word “ tide-water ” in connection with the United States' claim gave rise to some uneasiness on the part of the Canadian representatives, and in their printed Argument it is pointed out that New Orleans, 110 miles above the mouth of the Mississippi, is on tide-water. The glaring absurdity of the theory that the ocean extends to all tide-waters is strongly commented on, and the rejection of the theory is called for.* In the oral argument Sir Robert Finlay still further exposed the absurdity of the contention that measurement should be made from salt water or from tide-water. He spoke in part as follows :—

“ The contention put on behalf of the United States comes to this : That you are to measure your distance from salt water or from tide-water. Sometimes it is put in the shape of salt water, and sometimes in the shape of tide-water. Well, these two contentions may have a very different effect, and it is necessary to look at the precise meaning of that contention. This is a point, of course, of the most enormous importance, because if the answer to this question given by the United States is coupled with their contention as to tide-water, it is difficult to say to what point the lisière may not be carried back. I do not know how far the tide runs up these rivers at the various points on this coast, and to set up such a canon as that which the United States seeks to set up, of taking the limit of tide-water as the point from which you are to measure, is to invite a series of controversies of the most irritating and difficult character.”

Mr. Turner, a United States member of the Tribunal, thereupon asked Sir Robert Finlay :

“ Do you not think the United States' contention might be reasonably construed as meaning tide-water within the bays and inlets?”

Mr. Dickinson, of Counsel on behalf of the United States, then explained :—

“ Mr. Attorney-General, if you will permit me, it might save you some trouble and the Court also if I say that what you are referring to was not used in the technical sense in which you are insisting upon, and was only meant to apply to the heads of the inlets. We do not claim that the coast-line goes up the rivers,† and the line which has been projected upon these maps was not measured up from the water extending up the river, but only from the heads of the inlets. . . . It (tide-water) was only intended to be synonymous with the heads of inlets. No further weight was intended to be given it.”*

Thus it is clear that in the Alaskan Boundary dispute both the United States and Canada expressly repudiated the contention now set up by Newfoundland. that the coast-line enters rivers and that measurement inland from a coast-line should begin at the head of tide on rivers.

The American position was further emphasised by Mr. Hannis Taylor, of Counsel for the United States. The phrase repeatedly used by Mr. Taylor in his oral argument cited in paragraph 33 of the Case of Newfoundland, was not head of tide, but “ where the salt water touches the land,”—a very different thing, as Sir Robert Finlay observed. In fact, Mr. Taylor made it clear that the principle of rise and fall of the tides was not applicable to the issue before the Tribunal ; and it is equally clear from the geographical references in his discussion that when he speaks of salt water touching the land, he has in mind undoubted branches of the sea, like the broad, salt-water inlets characteristic of the coast of Maine and the coast of Alaska. to both of which he refers. In order to show how far he was from advocating any strained interpretation of the extent to which the sea advanced into the land, we may quote the following from his argument, directed specifically to Sir Robert Finlay's reference to tide-water at New Orleans on the Mississippi River :—

“ To avoid any possible question, instead of going 110 miles up some river beyond these inlets, we have stopped at a point at which there can be no claim or controversy. It would be just as easy to prove that the Admiralty Courts had no jurisdiction at the mouth of the Thames as it would be to prove that the water in question is not sea up to the point at which we claim.” He then quotes the Prime Minister of Canada, Sir Wilfred Laurier, as recognizing the head of Lynn Canal as the “ ocean terminus ” of a certain railway, and continues : “ This I am simply giving as a popular interpretation, and it concurs exactly with the scientific, that the end of the head of the inlet is the ocean itself, ...”†

Plate 2 of the Atlas accompanying the Case and Counter Case of the United States. In determining the boundary claimed, preparatory studies were made on a base map published by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey in May, 1903. Several hundred circles were drawn with a radius of ten marine leagues, centering on points selected along the shore-line, the intersections of the circumferences of the circles then being connected by a curved line to give the boundary sought by the United States. From an inspection of these circles it appears that “ these points were chosen without regard to the exact limits reached by salt water or the high points reached by the tides,” but were rather chosen on the shore of mainland or of inlets ; and even when at the heads of inlets were almost without exception “ at points where the inlet in each case has an appreciable width and in my judgment might be regarded as an arm of the sea.”* In response to a query as to whether, in reaching its decision, the Alaskan Boundary Tribunal itself paid any attention to head of tide-water or head of salt water, the Engineer to the United States Section of the International Boundary Commission has replied as follows : “ I think you are right in assuming that no attention was ever paid to such fine points as determining whether the ten marine leagues should be measured from the head of tide-water or from any other particular point.”

From the foregoing paragraphs it will be clear that no possible authority can be found in the Alaskan Case for drawing a coast-line into the mouths of rivers or lakes, or for measuring a coastal strip from the head of tide in river channels or lake basins. On the contrary, the Alaskan negotiations served to establish more firmly than ever the principles that the coast-line is limited to the borders of the ocean, including undoubted sea arms ; that it does not enter the rivers ; and that it is not related to the extreme head of salt-water or to the head of tide, where these are found beyond the true borders of the sea.

It is concluded, therefore, that none of the four cases cited by Newfoundland constitute any precedent for deviating from the sound geographic rule, accepted generally by legal authorities and strongly supported by popular usage ; that the coast-line follows the border of the sea and its bona fide bays and inlets by whatever names called, but does not enter rivers or lakes, even where these may be subject to the action of salt water or to the pulsations of the tide.

It now becomes our duty to apply this rule in the vicinity of Hamilton Inlet.

B.—THE COAST-LINE OF LABRADOR ENTERS HAMILTON INLET NEAR THAT PART OF THE MAINLAND OPPOSITE INDIAN HARBOUR, FOLLOWS SOUTHWESTWARD ALONG THE MARGIN OF THE INLET TO THE VICINITY OF TIKORALAK HEAD. THENCE EASTWARD ALONG THE SOUTH MARGIN OF THE INLET TO THE VICINITY OF WEST BAY HEAD. IT DOES NOT ENTER THE NARROWS, BUT CUTS ACROSS THEIR MOUTH IN THE VICINITY OF TIKORALAK HEAD.

So obvious is it that Hamilton Inlet as above defined belongs to the domain of the sea, that detailed evidence in support of this conclusion need not detain us. This will more clearly appear in a later section. That the arrows and Lake Melville are not arms of the sea seems to me equally certain, although perhaps less obvious. Confusion is due largely to the fact that salt water flows from the sea arm, Hamilton Inlet, through the Narrows into Lake Melville, and the ocean tides are likewise propagated through the Narrows into the lake. These facts are abundantly established by competent evidence of qualified experts, and we may therefore pass directly to consideration of the question :—

“ Does the presence of salt water and the propagation of the tides in a river or a lake constitute it an arm of the sea ?” To this the physiographer must reply in the negative.

THE PRESENCE OF SALT WATER IN A RIVER OR A LAKE DOES NOT CONSTITUTE IT AN ARM OF THE SEA.

It is the rule in Nature that rivers join the sea with “ accordant junctions.” That is to say, streams do not normally (although they do under certain special conditions) enter the sea by falling over steep cliffs, but rather flow smoothly into the ocean, with the surface of the river, at its mouth, at the same level as the surface of the sea. This means, necessarily, that the bed of the river channel is below sea-level ; and this condition may continue far into the land. Thus the bottom of the channel of the Mississippi River is below sea-level more than 200 miles inland, measured from the mouths of the principal passes on the delta. Now since the salt water of the sea is heavier than the fresh water of rivers, it is obvious that conditions may be favourable for the penetration of salt water into river channels, especially along the bottoms of the channels. If results of researches by F. L. and V. W. Ekman are valid, this tendency of salt water to penetrate river channels, due to difference in specific gravity, is accentuated by the development of “ reaction currents ” which are alone sufficient to carry salt water “ well into the bed of a river.”* But whatever the cause or causes of the phenomenon, it is one of the commonest at river mouths. In the Hudson the salt water penetrates beyond the Highlands, passing through the lake-like expansion of the river known as the Tappan Zee 25 to 40 miles from the sea, and reaching Poughkeepsie 75 miles inland. In the Mississippi River salt water may extend inland 40 to 45 miles under ordinary conditions, and in exceptional circumstances is reported to have been detected more than 100 miles from the sea.

The amount of salt water which enters a river and the distance inland to which it penetrates will depend in considerable part upon the volume of the river water flowing outward. In time of freshets the salt water will be more effectively washed out than when the river discharge is at a minimum. In some streams the percentage of salt water will always be higher than in others, due to differences in size and depth of the river channel, differences in river discharge, and other factors. But in all cases, and at all times, the appearance of the river may be sensibly the same, the stream flowing between restricted banks to the ocean where the transition from narrow channel to boundless ocean basin may be abrupt and striking, leaving no possible doubt as to where the mouth of the river is located.

Under such circumstances it must be obvious that the presence or absence of salt water in the lower part of a river's course, and the variable percentage of salt water at a given point at different times, depend upon factors quite independent of the river's existence as such. We cannot stand on the bank of a stream, miles inland from its clearly defined mouth at the edge of a perfectly developed delta, and say : " I cannot tell whether or not this is a river until I determine the salinity of the water ;" nor can we say : " It was a river yesterday, because I found no salt water then, not even in the bottom of the channel ; but I have no idea whether it is a river to-day, because I have not tested the water since yesterday."

In the Gulf of Mexico the lighter water of the Mississippi River flows out over the salt water of the sea in a layer some feet in thickness ; yet this part of the gulf is still as much a part of the sea as ever. Opposite the mouth of the Rhone the surface water is sometimes fresh 10 miles out to sea,* while the Amazon affords a classic example of this phenomenon on a big scale. The Baltic is an arm of the sea, despite the fact that the water in the northern part is relatively fresh clear to the bottom. In Albemarle Sound the water is quite fresh to the bottom in the heads of bays which all physiographers would agree must be classed as arms of the sea. I have watched cattle drinking from the head of the Baltic, and observed healthy cypress trees standing in fresh water, eight feet deep, in Albemarle Sound, yet cannot regard either as anything but arms of the sea. And if percentage of salt does not determine the extent of the sea in these cases, it cannot determine the extent of the sea in river channels. As a matter of fact, seas and rivers are physiographic entities quite independent of the extent to which fresh water may enter the one, or salt water may enter the other. Salt water is usually characteristic of the sea, as fresh water is usually characteristic of rivers. But where sea and rivers meet their waters mingle in varying ways under varying conditions, so that degree of salinity has no scientific value as a means of determining where the sea ends and rivers begin.

On the grounds just outlined I cannot regard the presence of salt-water, mingled with the fresh, in the Narrows and in Lake Melville as having any bearing on the question as to whether or not these water bodies are arms of the sea. In both bodies the salt water occurs in the manner common to true river channels and lake basins located close to the sea. And since fauna and flora vary with variations in salinity of water, it follows that the presence of a marine fauna or a marine flora, or both, along parts of the water bodies In question, is irrelevant to the present issue. We might accept as valid all the observations presented by Mr. C. Tate Regan as to the theoretical possibility that marine animals and marine plants may penetrate into Lake

* WHEELER, W.H. "Tidal Rivers," p. 116, London, 1893.
p. 3810

Melville (although Regan opposes theoretical possibilities to observed facts) without being one step nearer the solution of the problem before us. Similarly we might accept the brief observations of Vice-Admiral Learmonth on density and temperature of the waters in the Narrows and Lake Melville, without securing light on the critical point at issue. These observations are all of value as tending to emphasize the fact brought out above, that where fresh water streams meet the sea, there is a mingling of fresh water with that of the sea, and a mingling of salt water with that of the streams in proportions that vary widely under changing conditions. But salt water does not make the river or lake part of the sea, any more than fresh water makes the sea a river or lake.

THE PROPAGATION OF THE TIDES INTO A RIVER OR A LAKE DOES NOT CONSTITUTE AN ARM OF THE SEA.

If the mingling of salt water with the fresh in a river channel or lake basin does not constitute such river or lake an arm of the sea, much less can the entrance of the tides be held to transfer a stream or lake to the domain of the ocean. For the tidal undulation is transferred from salt to fresh water with perfect ease, and normally penetrates inland far beyond the greatest reach of the salt water.

"From the general formation of the country (Prince Edward Island), the tides ebb and flow many miles up all the rivers and almost to the source of many others," said the Court in the case of Regina v. Cox when holding that the term "coast" was not applicable to land fronting on a certain tidal river. Along the improved River Nene in England the tides reach to Peterborough, 25 to 30 miles above the point where that stream empties into the Wash. In the River Trent the tide enters as a bore or eagre which passes Gainsborough and is felt above Torksey, 34 miles from the river's junction with the Humber. The tidal wave in the Seine passes Rouen and reaches some distance above Martot. If we consider that the mouth of this river is found at the head of the long narrow estuary, some miles above Quilleboeuf, the tide penetrates 60 miles along the course of the river proper. The Scheldt is tidal 58 miles above Antwerp, or 70 miles above the point where the channel suddenly expands into an estuary three or four times as broad, below Lillo. Tidal pulsations are constantly felt on the St. Lawrence as far up as Three Rivers and under favourable circumstances (low stage of river and high spring tides) have been detected at Montreal, 150 miles above Quebec. In the Hudson River the tide flows strongly to Albany and Troy, 150 miles from where the stream enters the inner New York harbour. At Troy the mean range of the tide is still nearly three-quarters as great as at the river's mouth, and the tide would flow farther were it not stopped by a dam. On the Amazon the tides penetrate far into the interior of the country, both along the main river and along its tributaries. Thus on the Rio Tapajos the tides rise and fall several inches at a point 380 miles above that river's junction with the main Amazon, or 750 miles from the point where the Amazon first begins to expand into its estuary, and 900 miles from the Atlantic.* If we are to admit that Albany and Troy, situated behind a high mountain barrier through which the Hudson escapes by a narrow and picturesque gorge, are coastal cities ; if we are to admit that the coast-line of South America is to be drawn not only up the Amazon for hundreds of miles but up its tributaries for additional hundreds of miles, then “ coast ” and “ river ” no longer have any sure significance as geographic terms. To state the proposition that we should go between 300 and 400 miles up the Amazon to the mouth of the Tapajos, then 380 miles up the Tapajos, to a point 900 miles from the open Atlantic, before we draw the line from which to measure inland a certain breadth of coast, is sufficient to show the absurdity of the proposition. Manifestly tides are not phenomena peculiar to the ocean. They arise in the ocean, but are communicated to any water bodies open to receive them, whether such bodies be sea inlets, true rivers or lakes, or artificial canals or reservoirs.

LEGAL VIEW OF TIDAL RIVERS.

Thus far I have considered the problem of salt water and tidal undulations in rivers solely from the physiographic point of view. To show that the conclusions stated are not based on highly theoretical grounds or reached by fine-spun academic reasoning, but, on the contrary, are such as to commend themselves to the sound common sense of mankind, it is pertinent to point out that these same conclusions have long been firmly established in our legal procedure, and are reflected in popular custom and usage. To convince himself of the latter fact one has only to note how far below the head of tide and head of salt water our rivers continue to be named and described in the same terms applied to them farther inland. Legal usage is less widely appreciated, but it concerns us more because it represents a studied effort to describe facts and conditions with precision. Science seeks to determine abstract truths, while the law endeavours to apply those truths accurately and fairly to the solution of practical problems. In the question before us legal usage offers a useful commentary on the practical applicability of the scientific facts stated above.

Callis (1622), in his “ Treatise on Sewers,” states : “ A river, therefore, is a running stream, pent in on either side with walls and banks ; and beareth that name as well where the waters flow and re-flow, as where the waters have their current one way, as is expressed in the case of the piscary of the Banne in Ireland ” (4th Edition, 1824 95 (77)). This definition was adopted by Woolrych in his “ Treatise on Waters ” (2nd Edition, 1851, p. 40). In the case of Gordon v. Moray (Mor. Diet. Dec. XV, 12 798) the House of Lords held that the ostium fluminis comprehended the whole space between the lowest ebb and the highest flood mark, a decision quoted in the House of Lords as authority in later cases. In Bowie v. Marquis of Ailsa (14 Ct. of Sess. Cases, 4th Ser., 667-8) Lord Young, concurring in the opinion of the Lord Justice Clerk, and referring to the River Doon in Scotland, where the tides rise and fall, and the water is sometimes brackish throughout the area then in dispute, said : “I agree with Your Lordship that the River Doon is no part of the sea. It runs into the sea, but it is not the sea.” In the case of Vail v. McGuire (50 Wash., 190-1) the Court quoted and applied the modern meaning of estuary as given in the “ Century Dictionary ” — “ that part of the mouth or lower course of a river flowing into the sea which is subject to tides and specifically an enlargement of a river channel towards its mouth in which the movement of the tide is very prominent.” That a tidal estuary is a part of the river and does not belong with the sea is further indicated in the opinion of the Lord Chancellor in the case of Gammell v. Commissioners of Woods and Forests (3 Macq., Scotch App., 460), where Lord Chelmsford said : “ But the grants since the Union are many of them not capable of being referred to rivers or estuaries, because they are grants of fishings in the sea adjacent to lands 'upon the sea coast,' or 'upon the sea shore,' or 'along the sea coasts,' or 'lying along the sea coast.’”

In Scotland the placing of cruives and other machinery in the tidal lower portions of rivers, where the sea ascends and withdraws, and where certain fish, whether of the sea or of fresh water, descend and ascend, was prohibited by statutes dating back as far as 1318. These statutes have received judicial interpretation in several cases, among them two relating to the River Don in 1820 and the River Conon in 1839. In the Don case (Earl Kintore v. Forbes, 3 Wilson and Shaw App. Cas. 266) the House of Lords adopted the construction of the statutes stated by the Lord Chancellor, which held that they “ refer not the sea-coast but to rivers and continuations of rivers,” a decision later referred to as settled law by the Lord Chancellor in the River Conon case.

The presiding judge in this latter case (Horne v. McKenzie, McLean and Rob. Rep. 1839, 983-984) charged the jury in part as follows : “ Now, I have to lay it down to you, in the first place, that the statutes, as explained by decisions, make these machines unlawful, if they be placed in what is usually known as a river, in the ordinary sense of this word. . . . There are many rivers which only join the sea through a firth, or through a land-locked valley, where the fresh and salt waters meet. . . . If it (the valley space) shall be so fully and distinctly occupied by the flowing fresh waters, as that it is really a river, though the common river features may be periodically effaced by the tide, it comes under the preceding rule—that is, being still a river, these machines are unlawful. Moreover, rivers have estuaries ; that is, spaces intermediate between the strictly proper river and the strictly proper sea. Through these partly fresh and partly salt estuaries, though its ordinary river features may be impaired, or at high tides even obliterated, the river still does in truth exist and operate. . . . The estuary is a part of the river.” On appeal seven judges united in a written opinion holding that :

“ If in such an estuary, there is absolutely no sensible admixture of fresh water whatever, when the tides are ebbing and flowing . . . we can scarcely conceive a more decided proof that an estuary of such a description could not be considered as a river, in the sense of the law referred to. On the other hand, if, during the ebbing and flowing of the tides, and in the average condition of the waters, the fresh water actually predominates, or forms more than a half of the whole, it seems almost as difficult to hold that such an estuary could ever be regarded as the sea, or an arm or branch of the sea.” These judges pointed out, however, as had the Judge of first instance in the case, that in determining what was sea and what was river, the proportion of salt water was but one among many factors which must be considered. Thus, they would hold that a river does not lose its character as such merely by being met by the advancing tide, provided (1) that this be within what are called the jaws of the land, and provided (2) that the relative size of the river, and (3) the other circumstances, would satisfy a jury that on the whole the space is river, including in this term its estuary. Lord Moncrieff concurred in part of the foregoing opinion, but qualified his concurrence by holding that the absence or prevalence of fresh water was not a proper test as between sea and river. The Judgment of the House of Lords was delivered by the Lord Chancellor, who said, among other things : “ I see nothing in the statutes, or in any authority, to justify the putting the legality or illegality of the act upon such a test ; and on principle there is nothing to support it. If this were the test, the legality of the act at any particular place would depend upon the state of the tide, and the right of fishing would belong to one party at high tide, and to another at low tide. Suppose a small river flowing into a large estuary, at low water there might at any particular place be scarcely any salt water, whereas at high water the presence of fresh water might be scarcely perceptible. Whereas in a large river the fresh water might predominate long after the junction with the sea. The large rivers of America are perceptible at a great distance from the shore, and in the Mediterranean ships take in their water from the Rhone in the open sea. The test suggested is therefore, I think, erroneous, whether it be treated as exclusive, or as an important ingredient in the consideration of the question.” The Lord Chancellor then suggested that a proper test might be to determine the point where the river reaches the level of the sea at low tide. Down to this point all would be river ; beyond it would be sea. “ Down to the point of low tide the waters descend, but no further. Into these waters the sea rises, and the fish ascend, which cannot be said of any part beyond that point.” *

Under the Reciprocity Treaty between Great Britain and the United States (Washington, 1854) it became necessary to determine what were properly rivers and what were arms of the sea, since certain fishing rights under the Treaty applied only to the sea fishery “ all fisheries in rivers and the mouths of rivers” being reserved in a different category. The Umpire under the Treaty, the Hon. John Hamilton Gray, in setting forth the criteria for distinguishing rivers from sea arms, speaks in part as follows :—

“ There is no limitation as to size, or volume ; the Mississippi and the Amazon roll their waters over one fourth the circumference of the earth. The Tamar, the Ex. and the Tweed would hardly add a ripple to the St. Lawrence—yet all alike bear the designation, are vested with the privileges, and governed by the laws and regulations of Rivers. It is not the absence or prevalence, of fresh or salt water, that distinction has been expressly ignored in the celebrated case of Horne against McKenzie, on appeal to the House of Lords. It is not the height or lowness of the banks ; the Rhine is still the same river, whether flowing amid the mountains of Germany, or fertilizing the low plains of Holland. It is not the rise or fall of tide, or the fact that there may be little, if any, water when the tide is out. The Stour and Orwell in England are dry at low water ; yet they have always been recognized, and treated, as rivers. The Petitcodiac in New Brunswick, and the Avon in Nova Scotia, owe their width, their waters, their utility, entirely to the Bay of Fundy, yet their claim to be classed among rivers has never been doubted.” The Umpire then goes on to give, as a useful test, the existence or non-existence of bars at the river's mouth, assuming that such bars result from a conflict between the river waters and the waters of the sea. Where such bars are lacking he would rely upon “ the physical features of the surrounding country,” and other criteria independent of those mentioned above, in the application of all which criteria “ the exercise of a sound discretion ” is recognized as essential. A study of the disputed cases adjudged by the Umpire shows that most, if not all, of those declared to be rivers are subject to tidal movements or are entered by salt water, or both. The Umpire quotes the opinion of the distinguished hydrographer, Admiral Bayfield : “ The point where the fresh water enters the estuary, and mixes with the tide waters, may be miles inland, but it does not, I think, cease to be a river until it flows over its bar into the sea,” and continues :—

“ This view of Admiral Bayfield, that such waters do not lose their character as rivers because flowing through an inlet, or an estuary, is confirmed by the principles laid down to determine what are “ navigable ” rivers, in the technical sense of the term, as distinguished from its common acceptation. To the extent that fresh waters are backwardly propelled by the ingress and pressure of the tide, they are denominated navigable rivers ; and to determine whether or not a river is navigable, both in the common law and in the Admiralty acceptation of that term, regard must be had to the ebbing and flowing of the tide. In the celebrated case of the River Banne, in Ireland, the sea is spoken of as ebbing and flowing in the river. These principles are recognized in the Courts of the United States and the authorities collated, and most ably commented upon by Angel.” *

These citations might be expanded at length, but enough has been said to show how the scientific fact that salt water and tidal undulations penetrate true rivers and lakes without altering their most essential characteristics, is fully recognized in law and in diplomacy as a sound basis of action in the practical affairs of mankind.

p. 3815

THE FACT THAT A RIVER OR A LAKE IS PERMANENTLY NAVIGABLE TO VESSELS ENTERING FROM THE SEA DOES NOT CONSTITUTE IT AN ARM OF THE SEA.

It would hardly seem necessary to state this geographically obvious proposition, were it not for the fact that Vice-Admiral Learmonth, in his Memorandum, has stated that “ for practical purposes a useful test often adopted in determining what is an inlet of the sea is whether the waters in question are permanently navigable by ocean-going vessels,” and has so applied the test as to support the contention that the Narrows and Lake Melville together constitute an arm of the sea. I do not question the accuracy of the Vice-Admiral's initial statement, but it seems to me that the gist of the whole matter lies in the words “ for practical purposes.” For what practical purposes? If for the purpose of navigation, it is clear that the test may be very useful, for one can understand that to the navigator the important point is not where he passes from sea into river or lake, but the point where he must halt and transship his cargo to rail or to smaller vessels. But if the purpose be, as here, to determine where the line between oceanic and terrestrial water bodies should be drawn, the test is worse than useless. For not only would the application of the test place in the domain of the ocean extensive sections of many true rivers and some lakes ; it would at the same time exclude from the category of sea arms countless bays and inlets which all authorities accept as branches of the ocean, although too shallow to be navigable by ocean-going vessels.

Many rivers are navigable to ocean-going vessels far into the interior of a country, often far beyond the uttermost limit ever reached by salt water, and sometimes far beyond the reach of the tides. Large merchant vessels can reach Montreal, 150 miles above Quebec. The Hudson River is navigable for first-class ships to the town of Hudson, 117 miles upstream. Large numbers of ocean steamers reach Rosario on the La Plata, 230 miles up from Buenos Aires. Grain has been shipped from St. Louis in sea-going vessels, 1,266 miles from the mouth of the Mississippi. Ocean-going vessels penetrate 680 miles into the heart of China, to Hankow, on the Yangtze. Steamers from England regularly ascend the Amazon to Manace, 860 miles above Para, while sea vessels, drawing 15 feet of water, reach Iquitos, 1,100 miles farther up the river, or nearly 2,000 miles from its mouth. In this connection we may refer again to the quotation given in an earlier section from the award of the Umpire under the Reciprocity Treaty, the Hon. John Hamilton Gray, in which he refers to “ the principles laid down to determine what are navigable rivers,” as confirming the view that navigable tidal streams are true rivers and a study of his award will show that so far from making navigability a cause for excluding a tidal stream from the class of rivers, in more than one case he cites the presence of a navigable channel as one of the proofs that a given stream is properly to be classed as a river. Thus, Award No. 5 : “ The Murray is a river, and entitled to be so considered in view of its abundant supply of fresh water, its formation, and deep and navigable channel,” and Award No. 7 : “ The Boughton is entitled to be considered a river. It is deep and broad, affording accommodation for vessels, and facilities for ship building far in the interior.”

Perhaps it was the realization of the fact that navigable rivers can not appropriately be classed with sea inlets which led Vice-Admiral Learmonth to state that “ Such a test is specially applicable to cases where, as here, no rivers navigable by such vessels flow into the waters under consideration.” This seems to imply that if a navigable river entered Lake Melville, the application of the test would be less appropriate, and hence that the marine character of the waters would be more doubtful. If this be the meaning, the test for geographical purposes is highly artificial ; for why should the marine character of a supposed inlet depend upon whether or not one of the rivers which enters it happens to be navigable? One might perhaps argue that the large quantity of fresh water poured into a basin by a navigable river would make its marine character less obvious ; but in this case the real criterion becomes quantity of fresh water, and two or more non-navigable streams may bring in more fresh water than one which is navigable. And if the mere entrance of a navigable river into a basin makes the test of doubtful applicability, how much more completely must the test fail when a navigable river lies between the basin and the sea ! Lake Melville is separated from the sea by a long narrow channel navigable by ocean-going vessels ; and one of the essential points at issue is whether this channel (the Narrows) should be classed as an arm of the sea or as a navigable tidal river. If, as I shall show below, the latter classification is correct, it would seem that the test of navigability is in any event inapplicable to Lake Melville.

We must look to other criteria for a safe guide when drawing the limits between marine and terrestrial water bodies. Bays and sea inlets on the one hand, rivers and lakes on the other, have physiographic characteristics which distinguish them one from the other. In each and every class some examples are navigable, others are not. Hence, however important navigability may be from the standpoint of the marine officer, it is obviously irrelevant to the geographic problems of drawing coast-lines, determining coastal extent, and separating marine water bodies from rivers and lakes. And however valuable the classification of inlets presented by Admiral Learmonth may be from the point of view of the navigator, a scheme which would group together such diverse features as Lake Melville, the Amazon River, the Dardanelles Strait and the Black Sea, simply because all are navigable to ocean-going vessels, has no geographic significance or utility.

THE HAMILTON RIVER SYSTEM IS A UNIT FROM ITS SOURCES ON THE WATERSHED TO ITS MOUTH AT TIKORALAK HEAD. THE NARROWS AND LAKE MELVILLE REPRESENT THE TIDAL LOWER PORTION OF THIS RIVER SYSTEM.

What, then, are the criteria for discriminating between bays and other sea inlets on the one hand, and rivers and lakes on the other? They are physiographic, and have to do with the forms of the containing channels or basins, rather than with the composition of the waters which occupy them. Both rivers and lakes may be salt under certain circumstances, even when far in the interior of a continent ; but their channels and basins have certain physical characteristics quite independent of their water content. What those characteristics are form the subject matter of text books of physiography. Streams in an early stage of erosion appear differently from those more advanced in the cycle of stream development. Valley forms vary with the internal structure of the rocks in which they are cut, with the presence or absence of fractures or “ faults,” and with other geological factors. Glacial erosion modifies valley forms according to well-recognized laws. Lake basins are formed in a great variety of ways, a single text book sometimes describing eight or ten distinct types of lakes. Obviously, then, any general consideration of all the peculiar features of rivers and lakes would be much beyond the scope of the present report.

Fortunately no such extended treatment is necessary for the purpose in view, since the features essential to a proper determination of the true character of the Narrows and Lake Melville are few in number and easily apprehended. We need concern ourselves first, with the features common to all streams and lakes ; and, second, with those features especially characteristic of streams and lakes in a glaciated region of crystalline rocks, such as Labrador. In following this program it will be convenient to deal separately with river characteristics and with lake characteristics, in the order named.

THE NARROWS STREAM IS A TIDAL RIVER.

The normal features of a river are five in number :—

(a) It ordinarily occupies a depression or “valley” which is long in proportion to its breadth.

(b) The walls of the valley are sensibly parallel, although usually farther apart toward the river's mouth than toward its head, and in weak rocks than in resistant rocks.

(c) The pattern of the valley is apt to be irregular or more or less sinuous in horizontal rocks and in massive crystalline rocks, but may be straight for long distances where parallel to tilted layers of sedimentary rocks or determined by a fracture.

p. 3818

(d) The floor of the valley descends toward its mouth at variable rates, but always continuously enough to conduct water prevailingly seaward. Exceptional floods, or the incoming of the tide in the valley mouth, may locally and temporarily reverse the current ; and some parts of the valley floor may be deeper than others. But these facts never prevent the river from discharging its waters through the valley in a single direction.

(e) Because of the relations described in the preceding section, the surface of a river, no matter how much checked by obstacles such as shallows, or how much embarrassed by incoming tides, has an average surface slope inclined seaward.

Such are the normal characteristics of rivers in general. When we apply to the stream through the Narrows these five tests for a river, we find that it meets them all. The stream in question occupies a depression which is long in comparison with its width. Charts and maps show a total length for the whole passage from Lake Melville to Tikoralak Head of some twenty miles or more, with a width varying from a little more than one mile to a little more than three miles. Descriptions and pictures agree in giving to this passage the typical form of a fairly youthful valley cut by a stream in resistant crystalline rocks. The walls of the valley are in general strikingly parallel, although farther apart in some places than in others, the greatest breadth occurring near the mouth. In pattern the Narrows passage shows the irregular or roughly sinuous course typical of river valleys cut in crystalline rocks. The floor of the valley is notably irregular, some parts being much deeper than others ; but the average slope is seaward, from depths (below sea-level) of ten to twenty fathoms at the head of the western passage around Henrietta Island, and twenty-six to thirty fathoms at the head of the eastern passage, to thirty-five to fifty fathoms near the mouth. Despite the " deeps " in the channel (to which reference will again be made), and the fact that incoming tides temporarily reverse the current, the waters of the Hamilton River system never fail to discharge seaward through the valley in a single direction. Careful surveys show that the average surface slope of the water in the valley inclines seaward at a rate comparable with that of the Ottawa and St. Lawrence (Joint Appendix, Second Proof, IV, pp.

1914, 1958, Final Print. Vol. V, p. 2320). In every respect the Narrows passage conforms to the requirements of a river valley, and I see no room for the slightest doubt that it is a true river valley, which, like most rivers of the Atlantic seaboard, is markedly tidal in its lower portion because a subsidence of the land, or a rise of sea-level, has permitted sea water to enter more freely into the valley than it otherwise would. Like the St. Lawrence above Quebec, the Hudson to Albany, the Potomac beyond Washington, the Narrows is a typical “drowned river” which has not been sufficiently affected by the drowning to lose its true river characteristics.

------	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	---	----

undulations entering them such marked peculiarities that “ river tides ” require special treatment in works upon the tides, while in works on rivers and hydraulics special treatment is commonly accorded “ tidal rivers.” Indeed, “ tidal rivers ” frequently form the subject of special treatises, like those by Calver, Unwin, Bouncieau, Mengin, Partiot, Wheeler, and others. Among the peculiarities of river tides are :—

(a) An unusually marked retardation in the advance of the tidal wave, due in large part to the opposing force of the river current and to the ascent of the river slope.

(b) A progressive diminution in the vertical range of the tide, due in part to the ascent of the river slope.

(c) A distortion of the form of the tidal wave, with resulting inequality in duration of rise and fall of the tide.

(d) A marked increase in duration and velocity of the ebb current, and a decrease in the duration and velocity of the flood current.

The tidal surveys carried on in the Narrows in 1923, and reported in full in Volume IV of the Joint Appendix, pp. 1913-1957, were, in my opinion, sufficiently accurate in character and carried on for a period sufficiently long, to demonstrate beyond any doubt that all four of the above peculiarities of river tides are strikingly developed within the Narrows. Thus the rate of advance of the crest of the tidal wave, which in Hamilton Inlet proper averages two and one-third miles per minute, drops suddenly to an average of little more than one-third of a mile a minute within the Narrows (Joint Appendix, Second Proof, TV, p. 1929. Final Print, Vol. V, p. 2335). The vertical range or amplitude of the tide is increasing slightly as the wave advances up the Inlet as far as Tikoralak Head ; but on entering the Narrows it drops off quickly to about 78 per cent. of its normal value at Rigolet (Final Print. p. 2335), while farther inland towards Lake Melville it is still less (as noted above, this is due only in part to river slope). The distortion of the tidal wave in the Narrows is evident from the fact that the period of rising tide averaged but five hours and fifty-six minutes, whereas the fall required on the average six hours and twenty-nine minutes (Final Print, p. 2335). In duration the ebb current everywhere predominates over the flood current, the maximum excess period of the ebb amounting to one hour and seven minutes in mid-channel on the surface (Final Print, p. 2332). In velocity also the ebb current predominates everywhere over the flood current, the measured velocities of the ebb averaging 80 per cent. greater than the flood (Final Print, p. 2332). Thus in every detail the peculiarities well known to characterize tides in rivers are strikingly manifest in the Narrows, affording convincing confirmation of the fact that the Narrows is a true river.

Long period observations might alter slightly the precise values given above ; but I do not see how they could possibly change the essential facts pertinent to the issue before us. If the object were to determine with highest possible precision exact values for each of the above-mentioned factors, the long-period observations recommended by Vice-Admiral Learmonth would be necessary. But where the object is, as here, merely to determine whether or not the peculiar features of tidal rivers are present in the Narrows, no such necessity exists. In fact, without any surveys one could, having before him pertinent information regarding the physical features of “ the Narrows,” safely conclude that this lower portion of the Hamilton River system must exhibit the peculiarities described. It appears, indeed, that the “ river slope ” through the Narrows, a feature involved in the peculiarities of tidal rivers, was not only predicted, but its value was estimated with considerable accuracy, before any surveys were undertaken (Joint Appendix, Second Proof, TV, p. 1956, Final Print, Vol. V, p. 2359). The surveys merely demonstrate the development in the Narrows of tidal river characteristics to an unusually marked degree—so marked that no conceivable changes in rates of river discharge, or in other seasonal variations of physical conditions could possibly change the essential relations.

In respect to the Vice-Admiral's observations that the peculiarities observed in the Narrows and Lake Melville are also found in sea inlets “ of this configuration and depth,” “ where a connecting waterway with a moderate tidal range expands into a large deep basin, into which a very extensive drainage falls from the distant watershed of the interior,” and in part depend on “ the depth, width, and sinuosities of any waterways offering obstruction ” to the travel of the tidal undulation, it is to be noted that the physical features thus described are not found in true sea inlets, but only in tidal rivers and estuaries including tidal lakes. It is because the Vice-Admiral makes navigability the test of a sea inlet, that he is able to class tidal rivers as inlets, and then to compare the Narrows with them.

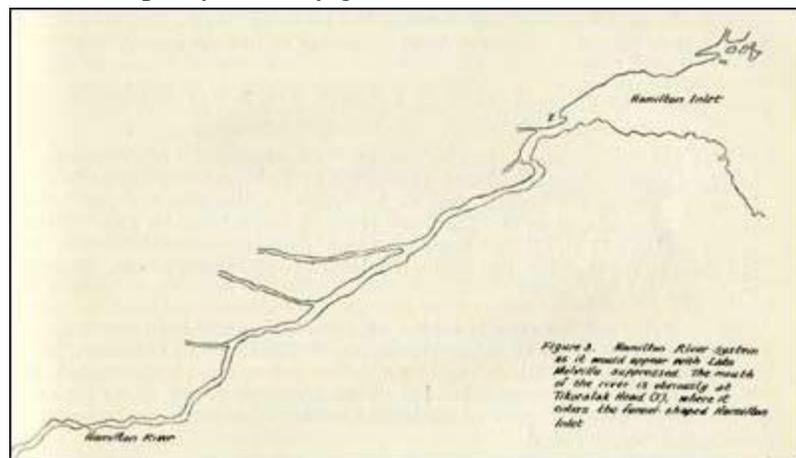

When a land area has been subjected to glaciation, the river systems have impressed upon them certain features which cause physiographers to apply to them the term “ disturbed drainage.” Some rivers are turned from their former valleys into new courses, often flowing from one broad, pre-glacial valley or lowland across a former divide (usually via minor side valleys or ravines) into another broad, pre-glacial depression. Erosion in time transforms the new course through the former dividing range of hills or mountains into a gorge or canyon which contrasts strangely with the broader depressions occupied by other parts of the same stream. Where the new course leads over cliffs or ledges, waterfalls develop. Glacial debris obstructs stream valleys, ponding or laking the waters, and often diverting the streams into erratic courses. Glacial erosion over-deepens parts of the valley floors to produce lake basins in the broad valleys, smaller “deeps” in very narrow valleys or channels. Where belts of weak rocks favour extensive erosion, broad and deep lakes are apt to develop. Where a narrow gorge compresses the ice within limited compass, thus accelerating ice-movement and increasing erosive power, local deeps may alone result.

Labrador is such a glaciated land, and its drainage system well displays the features described above. The Narrows seems to be a typical example of a gorge cut transversely across a former divide and connecting two broader lowlands, one occupied in part by Lake Melville, the other largely submerged to form Hamilton Inlet proper; Lake Melville is one of many similar lakes which repeatedly interrupt the river courses. The falls in the Hamilton River are just as normal characteristics of “disturbed drainage” as are the lakes. In the Narrows. “deeps” interrupt the average seaward descent of the valley floor, giving depressions greater than are found in adjacent parts of Hamilton Inlet proper. These are typical of narrow gorges traversed by ice-currents at some stage of the glacial period, and call to mind the much greater deeps in the Hudson gorge through the Highlands of New York, where depths between 765 and 950 feet below sea-level were scoured in solid rock by the ice current. (These were later partly filled by glacial debris,

Larger Version (57 kb)

but their initial depths were greater than any known in the lower course of the river, or in adjacent parts of the sea floor.) In short, not a feature of the Lake Melville-Narrows district is unusual or without its counterpart in other lake basins and river valleys in the glaciated regions of America. Were they located farther inland, not a doubt would arise as to their true character. It is only if we allow ourselves to be confused by the presence of salt water and tidal phenomena, common enough in lakes and rivers near the sea, that any question as to the essential nature of Lake Melville and the Narrows can trouble

It is probably safe to say that if Lake Melville alone were farther inland, and the Narrows remained precisely as they are, no one would question that Hamilton River was continuous to the mouth of the Narrows, and that the sea began near Tikoralak Head. Fig. 3 shows the conditions essentially

p. 3822

as they would then appear. Can it be doubted that with these conditions the river would clearly be indicated as a unit to the point where it enters Hamilton Inlet proper, opposite Tikoralak Head ? The slightly expanded mouth of the river is clearly differentiated from the greater expansion of the Inlet, not only by a distinct change in the course of the shores, but also by the fact that the river does not enter the apex of the Inlet, but a little farther east, distinctly to one side of the Inlet's axis. And if the Narrows would clearly constitute the tidal lower portion of Hamilton River were there no lake, it cannot be held to belong in a different category simply because a lake happens to interrupt the river's continuity. The interposition of a lake in a river's course effects no change in the essential nature of that river, either above or below the lake. The lake may regulate the rate of flow in the outlet stream, and dampen the effect of floods ; but that stream is a river in precisely the same degree, whether or not the lake be present.

LAKE MELVILLE IS NEITHER A FJORD, NOR A BAY INDENTING
THE COAST. IT IS A TRUE LAKE.

In his interesting memorandum on “ Geographical Considerations as to the Canadian-Newfoundland Boundary in Labrador ” Professor J. W. Gregory devotes the greater part of his text to a discussion of the “ fjord problem ” as related to the Labrador coast in general and to Lake Melville in particular. With all due respect to this distinguished authority, it does not seem to me that this discussion is relevant to the present issue. It seems irrelevant for two reasons :—

(a) First, because it relates to fine distinctions between, and controverted theories of origin concerning, different kinds of inlets (fjords, fiards, rias, etc.) which are of much interest to the physiographer, but which are of no practical value to the geographer, lawyer, or diplomat charged with the duty of distinguishing between marine and terrestrial water bodies ; and

(b) Second, because fjords, no matter what theory of origin one accepts, are never the product of marine agencies, and have no genetic relation to the sea ; they are basins of independent origin which are called fjords, fiards, etc., if occupied by true arms of the sea, but are called by other names if occupied by terrestrial water bodies. Thus, even if one were to accept Professor Gregory's theory respecting the origin of fjord basins, we must still determine first whether Lake Melville is a lake or an arm of the sea before we can apply to it the term fjord.

A further word of explanation may serve to clarify these two points.

p. 3823

THEORIES OF FJORD FORMATION.

(a) The origin of fjords has long been disputed. In various countries geologists and geographers have contributed a voluminous bibliography to the subject, which I have reviewed at some length in my volume on "Shore Processes and Shoreline Development." In order to show the complexity of the subject I cannot do better than repeat what I said there regarding the fjord problem, in words written more than ten years before the Labrador boundary question was brought to my attention. Incidentally the quotation will reveal my doubts regarding the correctness of Professor Gregory's ideas on fjord formation, and will serve to emphasize the fact that whether or not the term fjord is applicable in any given case depends wholly on whether or not it happens to be occupied by a true arm of the sea.

Fjord Shorelines.-Perhaps no type of shoreline has given rise to so much discussion as has the fjord shoreline. We may note in the first place that geologists and geographers may be divided into two main groups whose ideas regarding the origin of fjords are mutually opposed. The first group may be designated as the "glacialists," because in their opinion all the phenomena peculiar to fjords may be explained as the result of extensive glacial over-deepening of pre-glacial river valleys near the sea. The second group, or "non-glacialists," reject the theory of ice erosion, and attempt to account for the phenomena of fjords in other ways.

According to the glacial theory, fjords are partially submerged glacial troughs. The troughs of glaciated mountains far from the sea are similar to fjords, except that the former have not been drowned by marine waters. In both cases the troughs were formed by extensive glacial over-deepening of former river valleys. The pre-glacial valleys guided the glaciers which later came to occupy them, and by confining the ice streams to the narrow limits imposed by the valley walls, insured a maximum efficiency of glacial erosion. The glacial theory asks no questions as to what determined the courses of the pre-glacial valleys ; but it is fully recognized that among other causes ancient fault lines must be considered, since a fault may give a crushed zone which is weaker than the unfractured rock, or may bring a belt of weak rock into such position that subsequent valleys will soon be excavated along it, parallel to the fault. This would satisfactorily account for the fact that many fjord shorelines have a more or less angular pattern.

Esmark was the first to advocate the glacial origin of fjords, almost a century ago. The fjord valleys of New Zealand were ascribed largely to ice erosion by von Haast in 1865, while Helland a few years later, in discussing the fjords of Norway and Greenland, gave the best exposition of the glacial theory as applied to the interpretation of fjords which had appeared up to that time. Helland seems to have anticipated Shaler in recognizing the ability of glaciers to excavate their channels below sea-level, and to have given a fairly good account of the essential significance of hanging valleys some twenty years before Gannett's classic statement. The influence of rock fractures on the orientation of fjord valleys was recognized by Brögger, who did not fail, however, to attribute the actual excavation of the fjords to glacial erosion. In a similar manner Reusch for the Norwegian fjords, and Andrews for those of New Zealand, make a clear distinction between the rôle of faulting in determining lines of weakness favourable to rapid stream and glacial erosion, and the role of glaciers in giving to the fjords their present form and depth.

In 1895 Shaler, in discussing changes of sea-level, accepted the glacial origin of fjords and stated that since glaciers may cut their channels below the surface of the sea, the flooding of a glacial trough may be accomplished as the ice melts, without any sinking of the land or rising of the water-level. This same view, that fjords do not indicate past changes of level, was adopted by Hubbard in a brief review of the fjord problem which he published in 1901, by Daly in his account of the Labrador fjords, and by Andrews in discussing the fjords of New Zealand. It is further elaborated by Gilbert in his report on glacial studies, forming the third volume of the Harriman Alaska Series, where the reader will find a discussion of the physics of glacial erosion below sea-level. Marshall in his "Geography of New Zealand," and Tarr in his report on "The Physiography and Glacial Geology of the Yakutat Bay Region, Alaska," are among other students of fjords who attribute their excavation to ice erosion.

Members of the non-glacialist group are by no means in agreement among themselves as to the origin of fjords. They agree on one thing only—that ice did not excavate these deeply submerged canyons. Some consider fjords the product of normal stream erosion followed by a partial submergence which permitted the valleys to be drowned. This was the view expressed by Dana, who first emphasized the restriction of fjords to high latitudes, but did not suggest for them a glacial origin. Upham definitely rejects the glacial explanation, and follows Dana in considering fjords as drowned normal river valleys. Brigham and Hull seem to incline to the same view, the former speaking of "the common-sense conclusion that they are river valleys made tidal by drowning," but both recognize that fjords have been to some extent modified by glaciers. Hirt in a review of "Pas Fjord-Problem," Dinse in a more elaborate study of "Die Fjordbildungen," and Grossman and Lomas, in a report of the Faroe Islands, tend to assign to glaciers but a moderate rôle in modifying pre-existing valleys ; while J. W. Tayler and Fairchild definitely reject the glacial theory of fjord formation, Fairchild specifically invoking coastal subsidence to account for the fjord embayments.

Among those students who admit that ice erosion played an essential part in fashioning fjord valleys, there are a number who either expressly require coastal subsidence, or else tacitly assume that subsidence is necessary for the drowning of the glacial troughs. Robert Brown, writing on "The Formation of Fjords ” in 1869 and 1871, required the combined action of glacial erosion and coastal subsidence. The same view is supported by Remmers in his “ Untersuchungen der Fjorde an der Küste von Maine,” and by Güttner in an essay on “ Geographische Homologien an den Küsten ” published in 1895. Those writers, assuming the necessity of subsidence without specifically discussing the point, include Penck in his “ Morphologie der Erdoberfläche,” de Lapparent in his “ Traité de Geologie,” Gallois in his account of “ Les Andes de Patagonie,” Le Conte, in his “ Elements of Geology,” and Hobbs in his “ Earth Features and Their Meaning.”

Formerly many observers were inclined to regard every fjord as either a rift valley formed by the dropping down of a narrow strip of the earth's crust between two parallel faults, or as a gaping chasm opened along a single fault. This tectonic theory of the origin of fjords, once much in vogue as an explanation for all valleys, is now generally regarded as obsolete. Statements of the tectonic theory in which ice is credited with a very minor role in clearing out crushed and broken rock left in the fault cleft, or in the moderate widening of an open chasm, will be found in a short paper by Gurlt entitled “ Über die Entstehungsweise der Fjorde,” published in 1874; in Peschel's “Neue Probleme der vergleichenden Erdkunde als Versuch einer Morphologie der Erdoberfläche,” dated four years later ; and in Kornerup's account of the fjords of south-west Greenland. A more modern supporter of the tectonic origin of fjords is Steffen in a shore paper on “ Der Baker-Fjord in West-Patagonien.” But by far the most elaborate thesis in support of the tectonic theory is J. W. Gregory's recent book on “ The Nature and Origin of Fjords.” This serious attempt to rehabilitate a much-discredited theory of fjord origin contains extensive references to the literature of fjords, but frequently misinterprets the view held by the authors quoted. In a critical review of the book the present writer has endeavoured to show that Gregory's arguments are based upon a misconception of what the glacial theory of fjords implies, and upon an uncertain and variable interpretation of the tectonic theory.

Readers who wish to follow the discussion of the fjord problem further will be interested in an essay by Nordenskjöld on “ Topographisch-geologische Studien in Fjordgebieten,” and in a shorter paper by Werth entitled “ Fjorde, Fjärde, and Föhrden.” Both contain many references to the literature of the subject, and Werth's paper explains the differences between typical fjords, the allied forms in low rocky coasts like south-western Sweden some-times called “ fiards ” (Plate XX), and the “ föhrden ” of the Baltic shores of Denmark and Schleswig-Holstein, similar to fiards but lacking their rocky shores. The relations of these three sub-types of fjords are also considered by Penck, Dinse, and Hubbard. An early paper by Ratzel discusses at some length the essential characteristics of

Without, at this time, entering into any elaborate discussion of the several theories of fjord formation, it may be said that the interpretation which would regard fjords as partially submerged river valleys fails to account on any rational basis for the restriction of true fjords to glaciated high latitudes, for the identity in form between fjord-valleys and the glacial troughs of glaciated high altitudes, for the almost uniform violation of Mayfair's law by tributary valleys which enter main fjords with discordant junctions, and for the occurrence of submerged fjord basins which, were the land to stand higher, would become lake-basins not distinguishable from those of typical glacial troughs. Special pleading and strained reasoning have suggested a variety of possible explanations for each of these characteristic relationships, some of which might apply in one given instance, others in another. Glacial over-deepening of pre-existing river valleys alone offers a single explanation adequate to account at once for all of the specified relationships in all of the observed cases.

The tectonic theory of fjords is based on a misunderstanding of the significance of the known occurrence of fault-lines in certain fjords, and of the rectangular pattern of other fjords, which suggests an intersecting fault pattern. There can be little doubt but that crushed zones along faults, and unfaulked strips of weak rock, have often determined the position and pattern of fjord-valleys. It is, however, an error of reasoning to jump to the conclusion that faults make fjords. As already noted, the glacial theory of fjord origin fully recognizes the fact that the pre-glacial valleys later transformed into fjords were often excavated along ancient fault-lines. Stream erosion naturally took advantage of the weak belts determined by faulting, forming fault-line valleys ; but not until ice occupied these pre-glacial stream valleys and profoundly changed their shape and their depth, were the forms which we called fjords produced.

To prove the presence of a fault-line through a fjord is, therefore, to prove nothing as to the tectonic origin of the fjord. The tectonic theory, moreover, affords no rational explanation of the restriction of fjords to high latitudes, nor of the identity in form between fjord-valleys and unsubmerged glacial troughs, between fjord-basins and trough lake-basins. In the glacial theory alone do all of the phenomena cited, including the relation of fjords to faults, find a logical interpretation.

The foregoing paragraphs are sufficient to show that I regard the fjord problem as one of considerable importance, and that I have given much attention to it in its proper place. A more detailed analysis of Professor Gregory's ideas on fjords was published by me in 1915,* and is proof that I am not averse to discussing at length the theories which Professor Gregory supported some years ago, and which are now incorporated in his Memorandum and applied to the Labrador coast. But while such a discussion might be of interest to the physiographer, I do not see how it could be pertinent to the present issue. Certainly Newfoundland's claim to the Labrador coast will not hang on the slender thread of a special theory of fjord formation rejected at the present time by the great majority of physiographers. Surely the coast-line must be drawn, for geographical and territorial purposes, on the basis of fundamental physical distinctions widely recognized and accepted as valid, and not on the basis of theories which are still disputed by specialists. In law and in diplomacy, in the engineering profession and in the common walks of life, the essential phenomena of tidal rivers and sea inlets are well understood, and are made the basis of important acts ; but what place do fjords, and fiards, and theories of their origin hold in the practical affairs of man?

* JOHNSON, DOUGLAS. "The Nature and Origin of Fjords," Science, N.S. XLI, 537-543, 1915.

(b) But even if we were to admit that the theories of fjord formation were pertinent to the present issue, and that the fine distinctions between fjords, fiards, förden, and rias of various types should be mastered by the practical man as well as by the professional physiographer, we would still face a curious dilemma. All these theories and distinctions relate to the origin of the basins occupied by the water, and not to the nature or behaviour of the water bodies as affected by the special forms of the basins.

Thus, suppose we accept Professor Gregory's theory that fjords are basins formed primarily by fracturing of the earth's crust. Identically similar fractures occur in the interior of the continents as well as on the margins. Every geological and physiographic feature assigned by Professor Gregory to Lake Melville can be duplicated repeatedly far inland in North America. The resulting basins hold fresh water in the interior and are therefore called lake basins. On the coast they may be entered freely by the sea, when they will be called fjords, fiards, förden, or rias by different students, according to the details of form exhibited, or the theory of origin accepted as most plausible. If the sea enters but partially and with difficulty by a narrow passage, the student must first decide whether the water body in the basin is more closely related to lakes or to sea arms, before he knows whether to call the whole feature a lake basin or a fjord. It is a curiously illogical procedure to say ; " fractures produce fjords ; fractures produce the Lake Melville basin ; hence Lake Melville is a fjord ; therefore it is not a lake." If one started with the even more valid premise : " Fractures produce lake basins," the same reasoning would lead to an opposite conclusion.

EVOLUTION OF NORTH-EASTERN AMERICA.

In order that there may be no misunderstanding of my own position, let me say specifically that in my opinion the fracture origin of the Labrador coast, as set forth by Professor

Gregory in his Memorandum, is in the highest degree improbable. It is contrary to the known history of the whole eastern section of Canada as deciphered by a number of competent geologists working on the ground. All the geologic facts which Professor Gregory adduces in support of his theory are better accounted for in the well-established sequence of events worked out by Daly, Kindle, Goldthwait and many others. This sequence places the observed fractures far back in geologic time, and limits their effect upon present topography chiefly to an indirect influence upon erosion by providing infaulted strips of weak rock which rivers and glaciers could readily excavate. The basins were not formed by the sinking of the floors between fractures as assumed by Professor Gregory, but by normal stream erosion etching out the infaulted weaker rocks long after all topographic effects of the fracturing had been obliterated. For since the fracturing there have elapsed long periods of denudation, during which the land was reduced to a nearly level plane close to sea-level. Uplift of the plane permitted rivers to entrench themselves anew, and it was in this erosion period that the infaulted strips of weak rocks were quickly removed to give unusually broad valley lowlands, while youthful valleys were carved in resistant rocks. (Professor Gregory unfortunately confuses the old and doubtful theory of " Pre-Cambrian Valleys " with the well-established and almost universally accepted present view that all the valleys date from Tertiary or later time ; and from this confusion draws wholly unwarranted conclusions as to the origin of the youthful valleys.) More recently, glaciers spread over the northern part of the country disturbing the drainage in the manner already described in an earlier paragraph. Where the ice passed through valley low-lands underlain by weak rocks, it found conditions especially favourable for easy excavation of deep basins which were occupied by water as the ice melted away. Infaulted weak rock strips were more abundant in the interior than on the coast, and their erosion by streams of water and ice produced countless broad river valleys and lake basins. The uplifted and dissected plane was gently warped, without any appreciable fracturing at this period, so that the margins of the continent were encroached upon by the sea. Valleys and lowlands were " drowned " giving sea inlets or bays where the sea entered freely and largely extinguished the land topography ; giving partially drowned tidal rivers or lakes where the former topography was but slightly affected. Of the true sea inlets those deeply cut and profoundly altered by glacial erosion to give certain specific forms are today called fjords ; those of less relief moderately affected by glaciation are called fiards ; and those which have suffered little or no changes due to glacial erosion are called rias. The same types of basins found inland give glacial troughs if ice erosion has profoundly affected the form of the original valley, glaciated valleys if the effects of ice erosion are moderate, and normal valleys if the ice produced little or no change. Wherever such inland valleys have over-deepened places in their courses lakes are formed.

LAKE MELVILLE NOT A FJORD.

Thus, whether the Lake Melville basin is a true lake basin, or is a fjord, fiard, or ria, depends wholly on whether its essential features are little affected by marine submergence, or are largely extinguished by the sea. In my opinion Lake Melville undoubtedly is a true lake. Even if its basin were deeply submerged by a free entrance of the sea, it could not properly be called a fjord, since according to all descriptions it clearly lacks the essential topographic features of a true fjord. It shows, for example, striking contrasts with the true fjords found farther north on the Labrador coast. Instead of trough walls descending steeply to the water, the lake is for long stretches bordered by lowland plains reaching inland from the shore for several miles before high land is encountered. The catenary cross-profile of the true fjord appears to be lacking, and the broad and irregular form of the basin is unusual for a fjord. Streams from the highlands do not descend directly to the lake from the ordinary type of hanging valleys but have their fall over a probable fault-line scarp far back from the supposed fjord waters. All this is normal for a lake basin developed by erosion of an infaulted block of weak rock, but is abnormal for a fjord. Professor Gregory notes that the Lake Melville basin extends below sea-level, but this is not peculiar to fjords, lakes of every type have basins deeper than their outlets, and many of those near the sea, and some far inland (e.g., the Great Lakes) have their bottoms below sea-level. Depth is merely a matter of how effectively the glaciers happened to erode, how far a fault block dropped, or other extraneous factors. Professor Gregory is able to classify Lake Melville as a fjord only because he makes fracturing the primary cause of fjords ; but as has been pointed out above (a) the fracturing is vastly more ancient than the period of fjord formation, and (b) fractures are as commonly found associated with river valleys and lake basins as with fjords. The fact that earlier writers applied the term fjord to Lake Melville, a fact stressed by Professor Gregory, should not mislead us. It was common practice in earlier days, especially among geologists who were not specialists in physiography, to use the term “ fjords ” very loosely for narrow sea inlets of all kinds and for lake basins closely associated with them. Even inland lakes with steep-walled basins were sometimes called “ fjords.” Thus the name “ fjord ” has been applied to bays and lakes on the coasts of Maine, Massachusetts, Nova Scotia, Cape Breton Island, Denmark, and to lakes in Switzerland, none of which are now classed as fjords.

I have stated in the above terms my reasons for rejecting the contention that Lake Melville is a fjord, not because I believe this theoretical matter pertinent to the present issue, but merely to make clear the fact that Professor Gregory's whole memorandum is based on a theory of fjord origin which has been rejected as untenable by most physiographers, on a history of the Labrador coast which is in conflict with that worked out for the whole north-east coast of America by those geologists and physiographers best acquainted with the region, and on a standard of fjord topography which is at variance with that generally recognized by specialists in land forms. As an eminent authority, Professor Gregory is most assuredly entitled to hold and defend these several views, and to demonstrate, if he can, their superiority over the views more generally accepted throughout the geologic fraternity. But coast-lines cannot be delimited, or territory assigned to sovereignty upon any such debatable grounds.

LAKE MELVILLE NOT A BAY OF THE OCEAN.

True arms of the sea may result from the extensive submergence of former river valleys (producing rias), glacial troughs (producing fjords), or other types of depressions. Whatever their origin they have certain features in common. The valleys, troughs or other land features are sufficiently drowned by marine submergence to change completely the general appearance of the region. The sea has free access to the depressions ; it may find such access through narrow inlets, or large inflow of water from rivers may freshen the headward portions of the sea arms, but the sea does not have to make headway against a definite outflowing current of land water. The mean level of the sea arm is substantially that of the open sea nearby. Tides are not greatly affected by river action, so fail to develop in any marked degree, if at all, the behaviour characteristic of tidal rivers.

In none of these respects does Lake Melville resemble a sea arm. There is no extensive marine submergence of the basin. The lake is deep, but most of the submergence actually existing would remain if the sea were a thousand miles distant and thousands of feet lower. Of the thousand feet of depth recorded for the lake only the upper 150 is due to the entrance of the sea ; the rest would persist if there were no sea. Even with this addition the floor of the basin is still visible over large areas as a low plain bordering the lake. The essential form of the basin and its narrow outlet are little obscured by such sea-water as finds its way into the depression. Access of sea-water to the basin is not free ; the incoming flood must overcome the outflow of the largest river on the east coast of America north of the St. Lawrence, a river draining a basin so vast that all of England could be put into it, with plenty of room to spare. Against this outflow the sea must struggle for miles along a narrow and crooked river valley. The mean level of the lake is above the mean level of the sea, even when the river outflow is not at its maximum. Tides cannot reach the lake without first undergoing the striking modifications characteristic of river tides. The lake is not directly connected with the sea, but as shown in a preceding section, is separated from it by a narrow tidal river 20 miles in length. For all of these reasons it would be altogether improper to classify Lake Melville as a bay or arm of the sea.

LAKE MELVILLE IS A TRUE LAKE.

A careful consideration of all the evidence makes it clear that Lake Melville must be classed with the countless other lakes which diversify the glaciated area of north-eastern America. Deep lake basins, while far less numerous than those of moderate depth, are none the less well recognised as normal features in glaciated districts. The Hamilton drainage system includes, in addition to Lake Melville, Grand Lake with a depth of 540 feet, and Lake Winikapau, far in the interior, over 400 feet deep. Lake Superior has depths slightly over 1,000 feet, Lake Michigan over 800 feet, and Lake Ontario over 700 feet. Kindle has referred to Lake Mjosen in Norway, with a depth of more than 1,000 feet. Nor is there anything peculiar in the fact that the bottom of Lake Melville is below sea-level. Of the various lakes mentioned above, all but one have their bottoms hundreds of feet below sea-level, notwithstanding the fact that most of them are far inland. The great depth of Melville is not only normal for a glacial lake, but it finds a ready explanation in the presence of a belt of weak sandstones, first etched out by streams to form a broad lowland in pre-glacial times, then easily deepened by ice erosion.

Salt water and tides in lakes are of frequent occurrence where such lakes are near the coast. Lake Kennebecasis in New Brunswick, with a level distinctly above that of mean sea-level * is entered by the sea at high tide, and is itself tidal. Inasmuch as Lake Kennebecasis is directly connected with the sea by a very short tidal inlet it is far more closely allied to bays than is Lake Melville, and while such classification is certainly incorrect, it is understandable why it should sometimes be called a bay. This is done in certain maps and atlases, and I have myself been guilty of the error. Nevertheless, it is more widely known as a lake, is regarded by the Canadian Department of Marine and Fisheries as an expansion or lake of the St. John River, and the fishery in the lake is regarded and treated in the Department's Regulations as a river fishery.†

Lake Pontchartrain in Louisiana is separated from the sea by a narrow channel eight miles long, through which both salt water and tides enter the lake basin. Yet David Starr Jordan cites it as a type example of lakes formed by the damming effects of river deposits.‡ The Secretary of War of the United States has stated that the War Department regards Lake Pontchartrain as “ a body of water distinct and separate from the Gulf of Mexico, and hence a waterway, the navigable portions of which lie wholly within the limits of a single state.”§ It may be added that although this lake is mostly fresh, sea fish find their way into the basin with the salt water, and have been observed there by Jordan mingling with fresh water species. The lake is accessible to small ocean-going vessels drawing nine feet. Both the long narrow channel leading into the lake, and the name, Rigolets, remind one curiously of the entrance to Lake Melville. In this same region Lake St. Catherine, while nearer the sea, is fresher than Pontchartrain although entered by salt water and the tides, Lake Maurepas is farther inland, yet subject to tidal undulations and to some access of salt water. Grand Lake, like Lake Melville, is separated from the sea by an irregular channel 20 miles long, and is generally fresh, yet salt water and the tides penetrate into it. Farther west, on the Gulf Coast, Calcasieu Lake and Sabine Lake, through which large rivers of the same names discharge are separated from the sea by narrow channels a few miles in length. Both lakes are brackish from sea water, and both are tidal, and it may be added that both basins differ in origin from those previously mentioned. All of the foregoing lakes in the Louisiana-Texas area are true lakes in every sense of the word, and are accessible to small boats entering from the Gulf of Mexico. Furthermore, “ all of these lakes are classed as inland waters by the Steamboat Inspection Service, i.e., the pilot rules for inland waters or for western rivers apply on these lakes as distinguished from the high seas where the international rules apply.”

* The difference is at least two feet, because differences of 1.96 and 2.04 feet were determined by two lunar months' tide-gauge readings during the autumn level of the river, the gauge in the lake being well down toward the tidal inlet.

PHYSICAL CONTRAST BETWEEN HAMILTON RIVER AND HAMILTON INLET.

No one familiar with the loose and variable way in which names are frequently printed on maps and charts can attach any significance to the fact that the name Hamilton Inlet has occasionally been so printed as to cover the tidal lower portion of the Hamilton River system. The distinction between the true inlet and the true river system must depend, not on the whim nor even on the best judgment of the cartographer,* but rather on the fundamental physical features described in preceding sections. It is submitted that those physical distinctions have been shown to be real and practical, but it may emphasize the validity of those distinctions to apply a very simple and non-technical test to the whole area here under discussion. This is to imagine the sea to be entirely withdrawn from the area, as would be the case for example if sea-level were to drop, say, 1,500 feet. The result would be accomplished by a drop of but one-fifth this amount, but to avoid any confusion we may assume the figure of 1,500 feet in order to carry the sea far below the lowest part of the Lake Melville basin.

Fig. 4A is an outline of the present hydrography of the region, in so far as it relates to the Lower Hamilton River, Lake Melville, the Narrows

* In preparing maps and charts the United States Geological Survey, The United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, and presumably similar government bureaus in other countries follow the practice of naming physical features as they understand them to be named locally. Experience shows that not infrequently their understanding is a mistaken one, due perhaps to insufficient inquiry on the part of the surveyor.

and Hamilton Inlet, and is based on surveys by Low and Kindle of the Geological Survey of Canada, and on Chart 420 of the Canadian Naval Service. Fig. 4B is an outline of the hydrography as it would appear if the sea were to abandon the area entirely, consequent upon a 1,500 foot drop in sea-level. It is based in part on contours drawn from soundings and in part directly on soundings. For Lake Melville and the Narrows the data are found on Chart 420 and is abundant. If we assume that the ponded lake waters will have a depth of 35 feet where they escape through the narrow channel at Pike Run, at the upper end of the Narrows (an assumption which cannot be far wrong), the 20-fathom subaqueous contour, already drawn on Chart 420. except where close inshore, will give with more than needful accuracy the shore-line of Lake Melville under the new conditions.* Goose Bay, however, will be held at a slightly higher level by the narrow and shallow channel which connects it with the rest of the lake.

For Hamilton Inlet proper the data are far less abundant, although sufficient for our needs. Soundings (Admiralty Chart No. 375) are too few in number to make possible the drawing of accurate contours, but a study of these soundings makes it clear that after the drop in sea-level there would remain no large water bodies to require contouring. Near the head of the funnel-shaped inlet or embayment there is a deep area revealed by soundings of thirty-four, thirty-three, fifty and forty-six fathoms. Eastward there is a belt several miles broad in which the deepest soundings are twenty-two and twenty-three fathoms. Still farther eastward there are evident channels deeper than twenty-three fathoms. From these figures we may be sure that with the drop of sea-level all water would drain off eastward down to the twenty-two fathom level. Below this there might persist in the head of the embayment a small lake (L) occupying the " deep " above referred to. If there is a channel deeper than twenty-two fathoms, not revealed by the soundings, the lake might be smaller than shown in Fig. 4B, or it might be wholly replaced by a normal river channel, but in no case could it be very much larger than it is represented.

Eastward from the lake there appears to be a depression or channel twenty to twenty-five miles long, running close to the south side of Saddle Island (S), thirty to forty fathoms deep throughout most of its length, and forty to fifty fathoms at its extreme eastern and north-east of George Island (G). In places this channel may shallow to depths of twenty-five fathoms, as depths of twenty-five and twenty-six fathoms are recorded at two places, or it may be that the deep channel continues in the areas without soundings in this section of the Inlet's floor. Soundings toward the south-east from

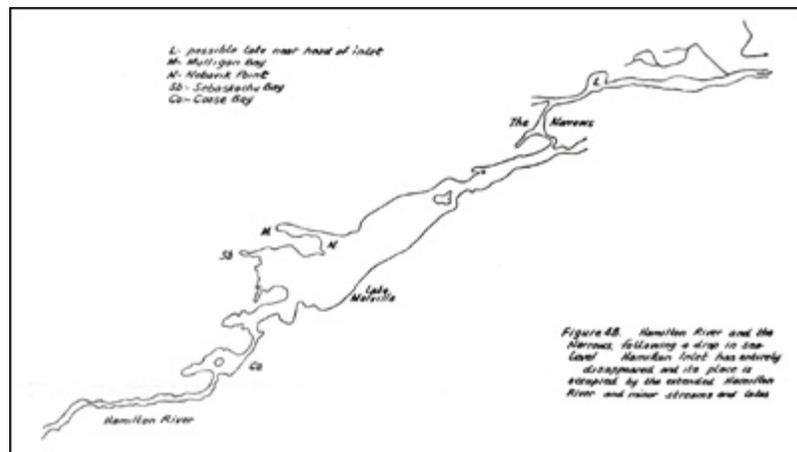

*Unpublished soundings brought to my attention since this was written indicate the presence of a 16-fathom shallow or bar in the Narrows just above Rigolet. The effect of this would be to hold the water above the bar at a slightly higher level than I have assumed. Consequently the Lake and Narrows under the new conditions would resemble the present Lake and Narrows even more closely than I have indicated in Figure 4B.

Saddle Island indicate a broad, relatively shallow (fifteen to twenty-three fathoms) plain south of the deep channel.

North of the channel above described there appears to be a branch channel, deepest along the north side of Saddle Island (S), apparently itself joined by a minor tributary still farther north. It is possible that the branch channel might be deep enough and broad enough to hold small lake north of the island, as shown in Fig. 4B, but it seems equally probable that no such expansion of the river would occur. Farther north-east there is evidence of another small channel heading west of Indian Harbour. It may join the main channel within the limits of the figure, or more probably farther east. Between George Island (G) and the mainland near West Bay Head (W), soundings are relatively shallow, but ten or twelve miles south-east of George Island there is a belt of deep soundings.* Whether the main channel just north of George Island turns south-east to this belt, or continues eastward or north-eastward to another belt of deep soundings, is not evident from the available data.

No special significance should be attached to the precise locations or dimensions of the lakes and channels described above and represented on Fig. 4B. As to these details there can be no doubt that more abundant and more accurate data would justify significant changes. This much, however, is certain. The kind of hydrography represented in Fig. 4B would not be at all changed by any new data. Whatever errors of detail are inherent in the Hamilton Inlet portion of Fig. 4B, due to lack of abundant soundings, there is no doubt that a drop of sea-level such as we are assuming would reveal in this area a single main river and some minor tributaries either continuous or interrupted by small lakes. The funnel-shaped inlet would disappear entirely, and in its place would come a river system bearing no resemblance whatever to the former water body it replaced.

How different is the case with Lake Melville and the Narrows stream. Under the new conditions Lake Melville is still there. Some shore details are changed with the moderate fall of lake-level, but the general pattern of the lake remains much as before. One can even trace such details as Mulligan Bay (M), Nebavik Point (N), Sebaskachu Bay (Sb), and Goose Bay (Go), now better called Goose Lake because of its slightly higher level. The Narrows show no other modification than the change in level and breadth, while the west arm no longer connects with the lake. The pattern and character of the gorge remain the same, and the lake continues to discharge through it as before.

Suppose an explorer, furnished with a proper map of Lake Melville, the Narrows and Hamilton Inlet (Fig. 4A) were to enter this region following the imagined drop in sea-level, and hence were to find conditions as shown in Fig. 4B, what would his verdict be? It would run something like this “ The lake is undoubtedly the one named Lake Melville on the map, for while there are inaccuracies in the map, the general form of the lake, its tread, and even many of its details are easily recognized, leaving no question that this is Lake Melville. So, too, with the outlet channel marked 'The Narrows' on the map. The identity of the present outlet with that shown on the map is remarkably close. The only noticeable error is found where the map continues the west arm of the outlet valley clear back to the lake, and this is pardonable, for on the ground there is a distinct depression or low pass connecting this arm with the lake. But eastward from this point the map is hopelessly wrong. It shows a funnel-shaped bay of the sea called 'Hamilton Inlet.' As a matter of fact there is nothing in this region bearing the slightest resemblance to such an inlet. The Hamilton River continues eastward for many miles, flowing through occasional small lakes and receiving small tributary streams, right where the sea inlet is supposed to be.”

Such a test emphasizes the essential point brought out by a study of the physical features of the district. Lake Melville and the Narrows are terrestrial water bodies, a true lake and a true river, merely modified to a limited extent by accidental entrance of the sea. Remove the sea and they remain intact. Hamilton Inlet is a marine water body, a true arm of the sea, dependent on the sea for its very existence. Remove the sea and it disappears entirely. The point where the true sea inlet ends and the Hamilton River system begins is thus clearly indicated. It is at the inner end of the disappearing bay, at Tikoralak Head.

No. 1447.

REMARKS BY CAPT. FREDERIC ANDERSON, CHIEF HYDROGRAPHER, CANADA,

RESPECTING THE "OBSERVATIONS BY VICE-ADMIRAL LEARMONTH, K.B.E., C.B., ON THE HYDROGRAPHIC SURVEY AND REPORTS CONTAINED IN THE DOCUMENTS EXHIBITED BY THE CANADIAN GOVERNMENT IN THE APPENDIX OF DOCUMENTS IN RELATION TO LAKE MELVILLE, HAMILTON INLET AND THE NARROWS."

I. Basis of Remarks

Vice-Admiral Learmonth, states that the materials upon which his Observations are chiefly based are the Dominion Government Chart No. 420 and the Hydrographic Report included in the Documents accompanying the Canadian Case.

He further states that, if certain data which he enumerates, had been available, they would have formed a more complete and satisfactory basis "for judging the characteristics of the area under discussion."

Inspection of these data does not indicate that they would have added materially to the knowledge available, and, in any event, had Admiral Learmonth applied to the Government of Canada, they would have been supplied immediately.

Referring to the survey of lake Melville by the Chief Hydrographer of Canada. Admiral Learmonth states that :

"Moreover an expansive sheet of water with deep water throughout and a tidal stream of 5 knots in the Narrows area and extending for 20 miles in length had to be surveyed. Apart from the rigours of the climate, the Labrador season is short and there are no facilities on the spot for the conduct of a survey. No data were available from previous surveys, so that a rigid triangulation was necessary over the whole area involving the establishment of elevated stations in a trackless and timbered country. Accordingly it is not unlikely that the time available proved insufficient for a survey in any great detail."

Admiral Learmonth's statement indicates that he lacked a knowledge of the time during which the survey was carried on, of the size and power of the survey steamship used, of the number of parties engaged upon the survey, of the weather experienced by the survey parties in 1921, of the nature of the country as regards the facility of access to commanding triangulation stations and other pertinent data, and also of the equipment and general has been in existence since 1883, and has charted and published charts of many miles of the inland and coastal waters of Canada. It may fairly be stated that these charts, in point of accuracy and clearness of delineation, are comparable with the best.

With regard to the survey of Lake Melville, the following are the facts of the case :

The steamer Acadia, a vessel of some 1,000 tons displacement and 177 H.P., built specially to meet surveying requirements in 1913 by Swan, limiter and Wigham-Richardson, Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, was detailed for this service.

In addition to the undersigned, who was in command, the surveying staff consisted of the following :—

Three Senior Surveyors.

Four Junior Surveyors of several years experience.

One Junior Surveyor.

Two shore-parties were landed with full equipment, including gasolene launches, at Rigolet, and Carter basin at the west end of the lake, respectively. In the main portion of the lake three parties were operated from the ship.

These parties were employed in carrying out the survey of Lake Melville and the “ narrows ” from 15 July till the end of September. This large organization was employed owing to the shortness of the season and the extensive area to be covered, extending some 90 miles or more from the entrance to the “ Narrows ” to the head of Goose bay. The whole area was triangulated and traversed and the bases measured at either end checking up closely, thus proving the accuracy of the work.

The “ Narrows ” and vicinity were plotted on a scale of 4,000 feet to one inch, also the narrows entering Goose bay, the main portion of the lake being on a scale of 12,000 feet to one inch. It was the intention to extend the survey some considerable distance into Hamilton inlet. However, owing to the non-arrival of the second coal supply, the operations were terminated in consequence of the lateness of the year.

The numerous elevations in the vicinity of the lake furnished exceptionally good triangulation stations some of which were accessible with ease and the others without much difficulty. The survey staff worked with great zeal and accomplished much more than their critic estimates. As everyone will recollect, the summer of 1921 was a particularly fine one and with much less than the average rainfall both in Great Britain and North America.

The survey staff worked with great zeal and accomplished much more than their critic estimates. It is not an over-statement to assert that the survey of lake Melville is of as high a degree of accuracy as the Admiralty surveys.

It should be noted that, throughout his observations, Admiral Learmonth consistently bases his remarks and argument upon the sailor's point of view and ignores geographical and physical facts which absolutely nullify some of his deductions.

p. 3838

II. Admiral Learmonth states that :

“ Chart No. 375 was first published in 1864 and entitled 'Hamilton Inlet' ; the 1864 Chart shows the Pelter's track from Tub Harbour on the Eastern extremity to Goose Bay at the head of Lake Melville. Charts No. 222 and 1422 though they touch the area in question are less valuable for the present purpose.

“ It is noteworthy that Chart No. 375 uses the term Hamilton Inlet as covering the whole of Lake Melville. The Eastern or outer portion of Hamilton Inlet extending so far as the Narrows would be properly described as a Sound, but no distinguishing name has hitherto been given to it in Admiralty publications, the description Hamilton Inlet being used as indicated above to cover the whole Inlet as far as and including Goose Bay. A probably reason why no separate name has been given to the 'Sound' is that it affords no convenient shelter or stopping places for vessels. So far as I am aware the use of the term has not been challenged until the present proceedings. It is true that the term is not so used in the Chart No. 420 included as No. 13 in the Canadian Atlas, but this Chart does not clearly identify the actual geographical locality of Lake Melville and places the comparatively well known name Hamilton Inlet without prominence beyond the Narrows in the margin of the Chart. In spite of the materials disclosed in the documents appended to the Canadian Case I still consider that the descriptive Title used for Canadian Chart No. 420 is incorrect and certainly confusing.”

The history of the nomenclature of present lake Melville and Hamilton inlet may be conveniently divided into French usage and British usage and a study of such history discloses that both French and British recognised the riverine quality of the waterway discharging lake Melville and the lake-expansion of the Hamilton river, now known as lake Melville.

In 1704, Le Gardeur de Courtemanche, in the chart which accompanied the report of his exploration (Map No. 7a, Canada Atlas) designates this waterway Riviere Quesesasquiou.

In an anonymous memoir concerning Labrador, 1716, the authorship of which is attributed to Courtemanche, the author recommended that a post be established at Kessellaki, which he describes as a “ grande rivière entre les 52 ème et 53 ème degré de latitude ” and as “ beaucoup fréquentée par les Esquimaux.”

As the Eskimo did not frequent any portion of Lake Melville except the extreme eastern portion, this statement unquestionably refers to the water-connection between Lake Melville and Hamilton Inlet.

Pierre Constantin's chart, 1715 (Map No. 7B, Canada Atlas) also shows the outlet and designates it " Grande Riviere de Ouessesakiou."

In 1743, Sieur Jean Louis Fornel, commissioned by the Governor General of Canada to make the discovery of La Baie des Eskimaux, explored Hamilton inlet and the lower portion of the Narrows, ascending to a point about four miles from the present site of Rigolet. He planted two crosses, raised the French flag, and took possession of the country "au nom du Roy et do la Nation Francoise." On his return, he compiled several charts of his explorations and, in the one reproduced as Map No. 8, Canada Atlas, he shows his own explorations and those of a French Canadian named Pilotte, and his son, whom he left in 1743 with instructions to establish a post and to make surveys. In his narrative, Fornel states that he examined the bay " cy devant nommée des Eskimaux et par les Sauvages Kessessakiou " and named it " baye St. Louis," and, with regard to the river referred to by the savages as Kessessakiou, he says, " que, nous nommons riviere St. Louis du nom de la baye ou elle se decharge." On his 1748 chart (Map No. 8, Canada Atlas) the waterway which discharges lake Melville is designated " R. de Kessessakiou."

In 1753, Bellin, the famous French geographer, published a chart (Map No. 19, Canada Atlas) of the " Golphe de St. Laurent contenant les costes de Labrador depuis Mecatina jusqu'a la Baye des Esquimaux." Bellin designates the body of water to the east of present Ticolorak island, " Baye St. Louis ou Baye des Esquimaux cy devant Baye des Kessessakiou." The waterway discharging lake Melville is designated " Riviere de Kessessakiou."

The first known use of the name "Lake Melville" antedates Chart No. 375 by 39 years. As applied to the lake-expansion of the lower Hamilton river, it appears in Arrowsmith's chart of 1825 (Map No. 29, Canada Atlas), entitled : " Chart of Labrador and Greenland, including the North West Passages of Hudson, Frobishers and Davis." By A. Arrowsmith, Hydrographer to His Majesty. London. Published 1st June, 1809, by A. Arrowsmith. Additons to 1825.

This chart—called for convenience, the Arrowsmith chart—shows the track of His Majesty's Brig 'Clinker,' designated " Track of the 'Clinker' in 1821," and contains a printed note in which it is stated, with respect to " that part of the Coast of Labrador . . . from Okkak to Ivucktoke or Hamilton Inlet, many places are now more correctly laid down from the observations of Mr. Rt. Morison, Surgeon, R.N., when on coasting voyages in H.M. Brig 'Clinker' in 1821 and 1822." The chart evidently incorporates a survey of Hamilton Inlet and Lake Melville and the connecting water-way, as the configuration of these areas is shown with tolerable accuracy. The lake-expansion of the lower Hamilton is designated “Melville Lake,” and the outer expanse eastward of the Narrows “Ivucktoke or Hamilton Inlet.” A small reach of the Hamilton river above lake Melville is shown, and named “Hamilton R.” The Arrowsmith chart signalizes the origin of the names “Hamilton,” as applied to the inlet and to the river, and “Melville Lake” to the lake-expansion of the river. This lake-expansion is also designated “Lake Melville” in chart No. 375, referred to by Admiral Learmonth, but published thirty-nine years later, and in all other charts of this region.

Comparing the foregoing with the French usage, we find that Arrow-smith varied their nomenclature to the extent of applying a specific name—Lake Melville—to the lake-expansion of the Hamilton river and of replacing “Baie St. Louis ou Baie des Esquimaux cy devant Baie Kessessakion” of the Bellin chart, by “Ivucktoke or Hamilton Inlet” as the name for the outer expanse.

Chart 375, “Hamilton Inlet,” published in 1860, only includes the inlet and lake Melville, whereas present Chart 375, “Sandwich Bay to Nain,” includes 3 degrees of latitude and nearly 7 degrees of longitude.

As the use of the same number for two charts which differ so radically is confusing, they are below referred to by their respective territorial names.

Between Rigolet and the lower portion of Hamilton river, there are nine names on the Arrowsmith chart. Of the nine names, seven are included in Chart 375, Hamilton Inlet, 1860. On Chart 375, South Brook is changed to the Indian name—Kenemiehe River. The name Hamilton Falls is omitted, and Melville Island appears. The name “Lake Melville” appears on the chart for the first time and was undoubtedly given either by Morison or Arrowsmith.

Chart No. 375, Hamilton Inlet, 1860, adopts Arrowsmith's names for Hamilton Inlet, Lake Melville and Henrietta Island.

On the “Sandwich Bay to Nain” chart, published in 1871, and republished, at intervals, since that date, the above names are re-engraved as on the “Hamilton Inlet” chart.

Chart 375 (of 1864) shows the track of H.M. Brig “Pelter,” and is entitled :—“Labrador, Hamilton Inlet (Ivucktoke Inlet).

Compiled from Sketch Surveys by William Robinson, Midshipman, H.M.B. 'Pelter,' Lieut. R. C. Curry, Commanding, 1823, and by J. W. Reed, Master, H.M.S. 'Bulldog,' under the orders of Capt. Sir F. McClintock, R.N., 1860. London, Published at the Admiralty, 9 Feb'y. 1864. Capt. G. H. Richards, R.N., Hydrographer.”

In this connection, the following points are to be noted :—

(1) That Surgeon Morison undoubtedly furnished Arrowsmith with the data which he incorporated in his 1825 chart (No. 29, Canada Atlas). This is practically demonstrated by the note inserted on this chart and by Morison's letter to the Admiralty, 24 March, 1825.

(2) That Robinson's survey was not published by the Admiralty until 1864-39 years after Arrowsmith's chart—and, during the intervening time, Arrowsmith had given to the world the nomenclature which the Government of Canada contends is correct and is not confusing.

(3) That, if it may be assumed that the purpose of an Admiralty chart is the communication of hydrographic information which will conduce to the safe navigation of the ships of all nations, then it is a fair deduction that the Hydrographer, in preparing Chart No. 375 in 1860, intended the name “ Hamilton Inlet ” (Ivucktoke Inlet) to apply only to the outer expanse eastward of the Narrows, for, although many soundings are shown within that area, hardly any are shown within the area of lake Melville. Moreover, that expanse is specifically designated “ Lake Melville.” The more consistent and probable interpretation of the chart is that the Hydrographer did not intend to disregard the nomenclature that had already been used for more than one-third of a century.

(4) That the interpretation of Chart No. 375 (Hamilton Inlet), suggested above, is not only the more consistent and probable construction, but is actually that which was intended by the hydrographic surveyor who prepared the chart, is demonstrated by the fact that Chart No. 1422 (Sandwich Bay to Nain), published at the Admiralty, 30 March, 1871, under the superintendence of Rear-Admiral G. H. Richards, F.R.S., Hydrographer—was also the Hydrographer under whose direction Chart No. 375 was published—adopts the same nomenclature for the waters in question as appears on Arrowsmith's chart of 1825. The lake-expansion of the lower Hamilton is designated “ L. Melville ” and the expanse eastward of the Narrows is designated “ Hamilton Inlet (Ivucktoke) (see plan 375).” Thus, Chart No. 375 was unequivocally interpreted by its author in a manner entirely consistent with Canada's present contention and he referred to the area (viz., the true inlet) with respect to which it was intended, as its title suggests, to furnish the latest hydrographic information. In a word, it unqualifiedly confirms, rather than disaffirms, the nomenclature of the Arrowsmith chart of 1825. Even part of the printed note which appears on the latter chart is reproduced on the chart of 1871. There is, consequently, no basis in fact for Vice Admiral Learmonth's assertion “ that Chart 375 uses the term 'Hamilton Inlet' as covering the whole of Lake Melville.” The fact that, in later editions of this and other charts the name “ Hamilton Inlet (Ivucktoke) ” is engraved in a manner which might suggest (though, perhaps, not intended to do so) the application of this description to Lake Melville (which is so specifically designated on all the Admiralty charts) as well as the Inlet, is not a sufficient ground for putting forward this innovation as against settled prior usage.

(5) Again, Chart No. 375 (Hamilton Inlet) published in 1864, is not in any sense the same Chart as No. 375, published in 1876 and bearing the title “ Sandwich Bay and Nain including Hamilton Inlet.” The latter is not on the same scale as the former ; it includes a much larger area ; it does not include lake Melville in Hamilton inlet and has no connection with it except that it bears the same number and, incidentally, includes lake Melville and Hamilton inlet.

Admiral Learmonth states that Chart 320 (No. 13 in the Canada Atlas) “ does not clearly identify the actual geographical locality of Lake Melville and places the comparatively well known name Hamilton Inlet without prominence beyond the Narrows in the margin of the Chart.”

The purport of this statement is not quite clear. Chart 320, as clearly stated in the title, is a chart of “ Lake Melville.” The surveys, though carried eastward only a short distance beyond Broomfield island in the Narrows, were not continued into the Inlet owing to the lateness of the season and the name “

Hamilton Inlet ” was engraved at the outer end of the seaward part of the Narrows merely to indicate that expanse as being the body of water into which the Hamilton river, through its outlet, locally known as the “ Narrows,” debouches.

III. Admiral Learmonth states that, for “ practical purposes a useful Test often adopted in determining what is an Inlet of the Sea is whether the waters in question are permanently navigable by ocean-going vessels ” and that this “ test was adopted by the Inter-Departmental Committee on the Limits of Territorial Waters appointed by the British Government in 1922.” He, further, says that such a “ Test is specially applicable to cases where, as here, no rivers navigable by such vessels flow into the waters under consideration.”

These statements are of such a surprising nature that it is difficult to reply to them. The application of such “ test ” would result in such anomalies and absurdities that it is difficult to imagine a Committee of such high standing adopting a test* that converts the St. Lawrence to Three Rivers, the Amazon for 1,000 miles, the Mississippi to New Orleans, the Yangtsekiang to Hankow and many other well-known “ rivers ” into “ sea-inlets.” Moreover, in many instances, it is absolutely opposed to the usage of centuries and numerous legal decisions.

Probably the nearest analogy to conditions at the outlet of lake Melville is to be found where the St. John river, in New Brunswick, falls into St. John harbour, discharging through “ a narrows ” about one mile long. Above the “narrows,” the St. John expands into a lake designated on the Admiralty charts Kennebecasis “ bay. ” The Nova Scotia and Bay of Fundy Pilot describes conditions at the “ Narrows ” —commonly called the “ Reversible falls ” —as follows :

“ The Falls.—A little more than a mile above the city [St. John] are the Falls, narrow channels about 80 yards in width and about 3 ½ cables apart, where at low tide the surface of the river water is from 11 to 15 feet above that of the sea ; as the ordinary tidal rise is from 23 to 27 feet, the sea level at high water is (except in great freshets) from 8 to 12 feet higher than the waters of the river.

“ Thus there are two falls during every tide, viz., one outward, and one inward, the vessels can only pass when the waters of the ocean and those of the river are on a level, and this occurs only for the space of about 10 minutes during each ebb and flow of the tide ; at all other times it is either impassable, or extremely dangerous. During great freshets, which generally happen between the beginning of April and the middle of May, from the melting of the snow, the Falls are absolutely impassable to vessels bound up the river, as the tide does not rise to the river level.”

* For obvious reasons, the “ Report of the Inter-Departmental Committee on the Limit of Territorial Waters, 1923," is a highly confidential document, and it is not permissible to quote the whole or any portion of it. An examination of this document by a representative of the Government of Canada, however, failed to disclose anything which bore out the statements by Admiral Learmonth respecting the adoption by the Committee of such "Test." Further, a member of the Inter-Departmental Committee has confirmed that said Committee did not adopt the "Test" referred to.

p. 3843

The foregoing contains some anomalous statements but, apparently the writer intended to state that, during the low-water season, mean tide in the St. John river above the "Narrows" is 1½ feet above mean tide in St. John harbour.

In 1908, a line of levels was run from a gauge at Indiantown, on Kennebecasis bay, to the Tidal and Current Survey gauge on Reed's Point wharf, St. John.

The gauge readings at Indiantown during the period, 29 August to 27 September, showed that, during the summer-water season, mean tide in Kennebecasis bay is 2.00 feet above mean tide in St. John harbour.

Dr. W. Bell Dawson states that the difference of level between Half-tide at Indiantown, on Kennebecasis bay, and Mean Sea-Level in St. John harbour, was deduced from observations of the tide at Indiantown, obtained by the Tidal Survey in 1908; the tide gauge at Indiantown being connected with the permanent tide gauge in St. John harbour by levels taken by the District Engineers of the Public Works Department.

The Half-tide level at Indiantown was obtained by computing the average level of High Water and the average level of Low Water during periods of a lunar month at a time in the Autumn of 1908, when the water of the river was low. In this way, the true level of Half-tide was obtained, as the mean between High tide and Low tide.

The result in September comprised the lunar period, August 29 to September 27. The result in October comprised the lunar period, September 29 to October 28.

	During Sept., 1908.	During Oct., 1908.
Half-tide level at Indiantown ; above the Low-water Datum of the tide in St. John harbour	16.04 feet	15.96 feet
Mean Seal-level in St. John harbour above Datum ; as determined from 19 complete years of observation	14.00 feet	14.00 feet
Half-tide level at Indiantown above Mean Sea-Level in St. John har.	2.04 feet	1.96 feet

The gauge at Reed's Point wharf was established before 1896 and the readings, therefore, extend over a period of 30 years.

In this connection, a comparison with the Thames is pertinent. The Hamilton river at the foot of the "Narrows" has a drainage area of 54,110 square miles. Using the results obtained for the Ottawa river as a basis, namely, a mean run-off of 1 cubic foot per second per square mile of drainage area, and assuming that the discharge of the Hamilton is two-thirds of the Ottawa, would give an average discharge of 36,073 cubic feet per second.

p. 3844

The "Encyclopaedia Britannica" states that :

"The average gaugings at Teddington for the summer months of the years 1883 to 1900 were in July 413,000,000 gallons a day [767 cubic ft. per second] in August 395,000,000 gallons a day [734 cubic ft. per second] and in September 375,000,000 gallons [697 cubic ft. per second]. The normal natural flow in ordinary summer weather is about 350,000,000 gallons a day [601 cubic feet per second], and of this, after the companies have taken 130,000,000 only 220,000,000 gallons are left to pass over Teddington Weir. After a long period of dry weather the natural flow has been known to fall considerably below 200,000,000 gallons [less than 371 cub. ft. per second]."

In short, the average discharge of the Hamilton would be 47 times the discharge of the Thames in July, 49 times the August discharge and 52 times the September flow.

Down to its expansion into Goose bay, no one questions the identity of the stream claimed by the Government of Canada as the Hamilton. Down to that point, the river current ranges from fairly strong to rapids and falls. At Goose bay, the river expands and for a distance of 80 miles between Goose bay and Pike run, at the east end of Henrietta island, it passes through what is known as lake Melville. Lake Melville has an average width of about 10 geographical miles and a maximum width of 20 miles. In this expansion, the river necessarily flows with a very slow current and the flow is affected by the tidal inflow at the eastern extremity but it cannot be too strongly stated that, except for these modifying conditions, lake Melville is just as much a part of the Hamilton river as any part of the stream commonly known by that name, above Goose Bay. I repeat : That, although increased width and depth slow down the current, the character of the Hamilton river in its Lake Melville expansion is not lost though it is materially modified. Every drop of water that enters Goose bay, unless lost by evaporation, eventually passes through the "Narrows" and into the ocean. And that the riverine character is not lost was demonstrated when the precise levels by the Geodetic Survey of Canada proved that there is a descent at the outlet of the lake-expansion of the Hamilton called, for the sake of convenience — “ lake Melville.”

Admiral Learmonth states that Canadian Chart 420 (No. 13 in the Canada Atlas) “ does not clearly identify the actual geographical locality of Lake Melville.”

It is submitted that it is quite clear that lake Melville extends to Henrietta island. If there were any doubt as to the eastern extremity, it would be placed beyond question by the plans to illustrate the Tide Gauging and Levelling operations in the vicinity of Rigolet (No. 15, Canada Atlas) which indicate plainly the eastern limits of the lake.

In the case of large rivers which discharge into inlets of the ocean, such as Hamilton inlet, it not infrequently happens that the exact point where the river ends and the inlet begins is a question concerning which there may be an honest difference of opinion. There is one criterion, however, concerning which there can be no dispute, namely, that a river does not end until it reaches the point at which it ceases to descend whether part of the fall to said point be measurable or immeasurable.

In the case of the Hamilton, it has been demonstrated that there is a descent to at least as far as Lester point and there are substantial grounds for believing that it falls about 0.1 foot below it and that the river continues to descend to at least as far as Ticorolak and Turner headlands.

Admiral Learmonth's comments regarding the passages entering lake Melville both to the eastward and westward of Henrietta island do not exactly coincide with the facts obtained during the progress of the survey. Generally speaking, navigation through these channels is greatly handicapped by excessive cross currents. Even with a fair tide the greatest caution must be exercised in order to keep out of trouble.

The passage to the eastward of Henrietta island, known as Pike run, at the narrowest point, is not recommended for navigation, except at slack water, even with a fair tide, owing to the great disturbances and cross-currents to be found at this point and combined with a sharp bend of 9 points in the channel.

It is true that the powerful steamer Acadia made this turn against an ebb neap tide, but with great difficulty, and it would be unsafe for a modern freight vessel, with or against the current, as a ship of this size could not be handled with the same ease as the Acadia.

The passage close to the westward of Henrietta island was always used by the Acadia and generally with a fair tidal current, but under these circumstances frequently the cross-currents both above and below Henrietta island were such that the greatest care was required to be exercised. Therefore this channel would not be available for modern freight vessels except at slack water or perhaps at neap tides with a fair current under favourable conditions but could not be attempted with safety at spring tides.

The channel to the westward of Henrietta island is quite out of the question for navigation except for small craft owing to the narrowness of the channel and the strong cross currents.

Observing these strong tidal disturbances from the islands in the vicinity gave one the impression that the slope in the river to the lower entrance to the Narrows would be much greater than that shown by the precise levelling. It is to be regretted that time did not admit of current observations being taken at these points, which would undoubtedly prove considerably in excess of that found in the Narrows off Rigolet.

The Commissioners appointed under the terms of the Reciprocity Treaty, 1854, disagreed respecting the mouth of the St. John river, in New Brunswick. the British Commissioner claimed that a line connecting Sheldon point and Inner Mispick point designated the mouth of the St. John river, while the United States Commissioner claimed that the line connecting Negro point and Red head designated the mouth.*

It is noteworthy that the inner line—the line claimed by the United States Commissioner—includes in the river St. John the whole of the Inner St. John harbour.

Had the United States Commissioner had the support of Admiral Learmonth, doubtless, he would have claimed that the mouth was somewhere above Kennebecasis bay.

The opinion of the Umpire under the Reciprocity Treaty, 1854, is pertinent in connection with the discussion as to the determination of the “ mouth ” of a river. Referring to the determination of the mouths of the Miramichi and Buctouche rivers, he said :—

“ There are large and magnificent bays and harbours, unconnected with Rivers ; there are bays and harbours dependent upon and formed by mouths of Rivers. The terms are not indicative of locality. Bays and harbours may be found far up in the interior of a country ; in lakes or in rivers, and on the sea-board. The 'mouths of Rivers' are found in one locality only, namely, in that part of the River by which its waters are discharged into the sea or ocean, or into a lake, and that part of the River is by the express language of this Treaty excluded. Is the use of a term which may be applicable to many places, to supersede that which can only be applied to a particular place, when the latter is pointedly, eo nomine, excluded? But why should such a construction be required, when the object of the Treaty can be obtained without it. The cause of the difficulty was not the refusal to permit a common fishery within the mouths of Rivers, but within three marine miles of the sea coast. That difficulty is entirely removed, by the liberty to take fish 'on the sea coast and shores, and in the bays, harbours and creeks, without being restricted to any distance from the shore.'

“ The position taken by the Commissioner of the United States, is further pressed, upon the ground, 'That the terms of a grant are always to be construed most strongly against the granting party.' The application of that principle to the present case is not very perceptible. This is rather the case of two contracting parties exchanging equal advantages ; and the contract must be governed by the ordinary rules of interpretation. Vattel says : 'In the interpretation of Treaties, compacts, and promises, we ought not to deviate from the common use of the language, unless we have very strong reasons for it.' And, 'When we evidently see what is the sense that agrees with the intention of the contracting parties, it is not allowable to wrest their words to a contrary meaning.' It is plain that the framers of this Treaty intended to exclude the 'mouths of Rivers' from the common possession. Ought we, by construing the terms of the Treaty most strongly against the nation where the River in dispute may happen to be, to 'wrest their words to a contrary meaning?' I think not.

“ Mr. Andrews, for many years the United States Consul in New Brunswick and in Canada, a gentleman whose great researches and untiring energies were materially instrumental in bringing about this Treaty, and to whom the British Colonies are much indebted for the benefits they are now deriving and may yet derive from its adoption, thus speaks of the Miramichi in his Report to his Government in 1852 : 'The extensive harbour of Miramichi is formed by the estuary of the beautiful River of that name, which is two hundred and twenty miles in length. At its entrance into the Gulf, this river is nine miles in width.

“ 'There is a bar at the entrance of the Miramichi, but the River is of such great size, and pours forth such a volume of water, that the bar offers no impediment to navigation, there being sufficient depth of water on it at all times for ships of six or seven hundred tons, or even more. The tide flows nearly forty miles up the Miramichi, from the Gulf. The River is navigable for vessels of the largest class full thirty miles of that distance, there being from five to eight fathoms of water in the channel ; but schooners and small craft can proceed nearly to the head of the tide. Owing to the size and depth of the Miramichi, ships can load along its bank for miles.'

“ In 'Harper's Gazetteer' (Edition of 1855), the width of the Severn, at its junction with the British Channel, is given at ten miles across. That of the Humber, at its mouth, at six or seven miles ; and that of the Thames, at its junction with the North Sea at the Nore, between the Isle of Sheppey and Foulness Point, or between Sheerness and Southend, at fifteen miles across. And the Saint Lawrence, in two different places in the same work, is described as entering 'the Gulf of Saint Lawrence at Gaspa Point, by a mouth one hundred miles wide.' And also that 'at its mouth, the Gulf from Cape Rosier to Mingan Settlement in Labrador, is one hundred and five miles in length.'”*

The Umpire decided that a line connecting Fox and Portage Islands designated the mouth of the Miramichi.

IV. Admiral Learmonth devotes considerable space to a discussion of inlets of two kinds. As it has already been demonstrated that lake Melville is not an inlet, such discussion is not germane to the subject.

* History and Digest of the International Arbitrations to which the United States has been a party. By John Bassett Moore, Vol. I, pp. 468-469.

V. As Burrard inlet, Masset inlet, Sandwich bay, Skyring water and the sea of Marmora open into the sea, without any fall, comparisons with lake Melville are of no value.

VI. Admiral Learmonth states that :—

“ Although the time available was short and it was not possible to employ the test of a closure for the actual levelling operations between the two Tidal Station.”

This statement shows a complete misapprehension of the levelling operations. Admiral Learmonth seems to be under the impression that the levelling was done with an ordinary dumpy or a “ Y” level. It is necessary, therefore, to state that the levelling was done with a precision level of the highest grade and the work was carried out by one of the ablest levellers in Canada.

The whole line was levelled and re-levelled in opposite directions, and, wherever the difference was in excess of the very narrow limits of permissible error, it was re-levelled.*

VII. Admiral Learmonth states that :—

“ This difference of Mean Tidal Level determined between August and September is accepted in the Canadian Report as not being an unchanging quantity representing a permanent difference between the level of Lake Melville and Mean Sea Level.”

So far from this deduction being correct, it is exactly the opposite. The Canadian report is insistent that there is a “ permanent difference between the level of Lake Melville and mean sea level,” that lake Melville is the higher and that such difference is permanent.

This permanent difference is due to the inflow from the upper Hamilton, Northwest, Kenamu and other tributaries of the Hamilton which fall into its lake-expansion, called, for the sake of convenience, lake Melville.

That the outflow of the Hamilton is arrested for part of the day and that such arresting slightly increases the fall is immaterial. The only essential point is that, so long as the Hamilton discharges through the so-called “ narrows,” the fall will be there and such fall fully justifies Canada's contention that it is the lowermost portion of the Hamilton river.

Navigability or non-navigability is immaterial. Whether the “ narrows ” is navigable by a steamship of the greatest tonnage or so studded with rocks as to be practically un-navigable is immaterial and unimportant. The crucial test of its riverine quality is : Is there a fall?

VIII. Admiral Learmonth states that :

“ The Period embraced by the observations must also be carefully noted. They were limited to a Period of two months, at the end of the summer in a particular year, and conclusions correctly drawn for this Period may not be true for other Periods, and should not be taken as a permanent state of the physical conditions that occur. Thus the Difference in Level found may be seasonal only, and due to the fresh water accumulating in the broad expanse of lake Melville during the summer flood and then making a gradual egress through the Narrows.”

* See Mr. Montgomery's report, Annex A, p. 306.

This is a statement that the water in lake Melville may have been abnormally high during the summer of 1923—an assumption that cannot be justified. It would be as reasonable to assume that the water in lake Melville was abnormally low in 1923 and that, in a normal season, the descent would have been greater than was found to be the case.

The Canadian observers were in close touch with the local inhabitants and, had 1923 been an abnormal summer, they would have heard it discussed by them. That such was not the case is proof that it was neither an abnormally wet nor an abnormally dry summer.

In 1894, A. P. Low ascended the Hamilton river. Leaving North West River House on snowshoes on 5 March, he reached the portage past the Grand falls on 30 April. From 1 to 29 May he was either in. camp or portaging past Grand falls.

In short, for nearly four weeks, he was waiting for the break-up of the Hamilton river.

He states that on 11 June, the ice had all gone out of the river and on 14 June, he states that the river fell three inches during the night, which indicates that the crest of the spring freshet has passed.

It is notorious that June is the high-water month in the Hamilton ; that the June freshet water is discharged before the end of July and that August and September are summer-water months.

To put forward theories and suppositions of abnormal conditions in opposition to well-ascertained facts and measurements of the highest degree of accuracy is futile.

The records of the Hudson's Bay Company post at North West River show the following :—

1890-1909.—The opening of the river ranged from 5 April to 19 June ; average date was 10 May.

1923.—On 24 April, the river was “ practically clear ” in front of North West River post.

1924.—On 22 May, Grand lake was open.

1925.—On 25 May, the Beaver was launched showing that the river was open in front of the post and that navigation was open in lake Melville.

Mr. Ralph Parsons, District Manager of the Montreal-Labrador District of the Hudson's Bay Company, who, for some time, was in charge of the Lake Melville posts and is thoroughly familiar with conditions on the Labrador coast, states that the freshet usually commences about mid-May and lasts three weeks. He states that the freshet period is almost always over by 20 June, and certainly not later than 1 July. After that the flow is quite normal.

T. L. Blake, “ an old trapper who has passed most of his days ” at lake Melville states that :

“ The flow of water following the spring freshets becomes normal about the middle of June each year.”

Admiral Learmonth states that :

“ Nothing short of a prolonged Series of Observations would suffice to establish with certainty the existence of any Permanent Difference of Level between the river and outer portions of Hamilton Inlet.”

So far as this can be taken as a statement that a “ prolonged series of observations ” would demonstrate that there was no fall between lake Melville and mean sea level, I take direct issue with such statement.

It is possible that such “ series of observations ” might reduce the fall as determined by Canadian observers in 1923 by a few hundredths of a foot or it might increase it by a similar amount but, on the other hand, I assert that, in the nature of things, so long as the discharge of the Hamilton and its tributaries, passes through the “ narrows ” there is and must be a fall there which, for the twelve-month period, would be as great, or greater, than the fall determined in August-September, 1923.

Admiral Learmonth states that the “ prolonged series of observations ” “ would have to be determined with great precision,” which seems to indicate that the work already done was not done with great precision. The answer to that inference is an assertion that it was done with great precision.

IX. Admiral Learmonth states that :

“ When attempting to compare the slope of the River St. Lawrence with the slope which has been deduced for the Narrows of the Hamilton inlet, certain cautions should be regarded :

(a) The levelling operations referred to above were not sufficiently prolonged or extensive to prove the existence of any permanent slope in the Narrows.

(b) In the case of the St. Lawrence, the Gulf of that name is an undoubted Inlet of the Sea, which gradually as it is ascended merges into the well-known river system in order to define a division between the two, some more or less arbitrary line of demarcation a choice of criteria must be adopted ; in the case of the Hamilton Inlet, where all vessels have natural permanent access from the open sea free of all obstruction, by means of a short, deep, narrow connecting Waterway to a Sea Basin which is navigable without hindrance to its head, no river enters into the question.”

As to (a) strong exception must be taken to the statement that the levelling was not “sufficiently prolonged or extensive.” The levelling operations between Lester Point and “The Backway” were carried out with the same type of instrument and the same degree of precision as the precise levelling along the St. Lawrence and elsewhere in Canada.

As to (b), the argument lacks clarity but it seems to be, in essence, a statement that, if access to the waterway under consideration is obtained through “a short, deep connecting waterway” which then expands into a lake, said lake and short, deep connecting waterway form an Inlet but, if access is had from “an undoubted inlet of the sea” into the St. Lawrence “river system,” a “choice of criteria must be adopted.”

Unfortunately, no “choice of criteria” is set forth and we are left in the dark, both as to Admiral Learmonth's dictum respecting the position of the mouth of the St. Lawrence and of the other criteria which would enable us to decide the upper and lower limits of choice.

Just why the “short, deep, narrow connecting waterway” exercises such an overwhelming influence in the determination of the riverine or nonriverine status of the lower Hamilton is not clear.

As to (c), it is stated that :

“Lake Melville is nevertheless an Arm of the Sea, although owing to its expanse, depth of penetration into the interior of the country, and general configuration it possesses the characteristics of a Sea Inlet in a less degree than the Sound seaward of the narrows.”

Like the “short, deep, narrow connecting waterway,” the “expanse,” “depth of penetration into the interior” and the “configuration” of Lake Melville have no bearing upon the question so long as there is a fall at its outlet and such fall has been demonstrated.

X. Admiral Learmonth states that, if the amplitude of the Tidal wave were very much less than it is (6½ feet maximum), conditions in lake Melville “would then be similar in some respects to those prevailing in the Dardanelles and the Sea of Marmora.”

Inasmuch as there is a definitely ascertained fall in the “narrows,” there can be no doubt that a decreased range of tide would result in lower salinity than at present.

Further, comparisons of conditions in the Sea of Marmora which is demonstrably at the same level and practically of the same salinity as the Mediterranean are hardly pertinent.

XII. Admiral Learmonth states that :

“The distribution of Fresh Water on the surface, due to the drainage of rain water and melted ice and snow, may have been abnormally large in the 1923 season.”

p. 3852

This supposition has already been dealt with. It has been pointed out that there is no evidence that 1923 was an abnormal season and that it would be just as reasonable to say that the “distribution of Fresh Water on the surface” may have been abnormally small.

XIII. Admiral Learmonth states that the suggestion in the Canadian Case that " the connecting Waterway between lake Melville and the Sound extends seaward as far as Turner and Ticorolak headlands, 10 miles from the entrance to the Narrows, is in my opinion entirely incorrect."

As the officer in command of the Acadia during the survey of lake Melville in 1921, I am of the opinion that it may be fairly contended that the mouth of the Hamilton river is defined by a line drawn from Ticorolak to Turner headland, but, in any event, it cannot be successfully contended that it does not extend, at least, to that point.

As to the contention that there are :

“Sufficient reasons of Imperial Policy against placing Lake Melville in the category of River Systems, instead of, as heretofore among the Sea Inlets, inasmuch as a new precedent would be thus set up which would involve a general re-classification of similar Water-Basins joined to the sea and an alteration in the standards now applied to determine their nature, and further any such change might very likely serve to prejudice the position of the British Empire, as a maritime power, in any future Territorial disputes or Congresses with other Nations.”

I cannot acquiesce in this statement, for I fail entirely to understand how, if Lake Melville is placed in the category of a river, a new precedent for determining the territoriality of a similar waterway would be set up or the position of the British Empire as a maritime power prejudiced. Whether lake Melville is a part of a river or an inland sea, it is by English law a part of the Dominions of the Crown. It is inter fauces terroe, and, there-fore, part of the British possessions in America. Also, it seems to me that Admiral Learmonth's argument is based on a false assumption, for lake Melville has not, heretofore, been placed among sea inlets, if by that term he means it has the character of an inland sea. The history of this expanse of water shows that it has always been considered as riverine rather than marine in its characteristics. The French, as early as 1704, recognised its riverine quality. Commander William Martin, H.M. Brig Clinker, took the same view : for, in his log for July 1821, he states that he sailed up the “River Ivucktoke,” meaning lake Melville and the waterway which discharges it, and I surmise that it was in view of the information communicated to him by this officer that A. Arrowsmith, Hydrographer to His Majesty, when he published his chart in June, 1825, incorporating in it a survey of this waterway, determined to classify it and name it as a lake—a lake-expansion of the river. That these early views as to the characteristics of this water-way are correct is amply borne out by the levelling and tidal operations carried out under the directions of the Government of Canada in 1921 and 1923.

ANNEX "A" TO No. 1447.

LEVELLING IN LABRADOR.

BY R. H. MONTGOMERY,
Chief of Levelling Division, Geodetic Survey of Canada.

After perusal of Vice-Admiral Learmonth's report I find the only reference to the precise levelling operations is contained in the following extract of Paragraph VI :

“Although the time available was short, and it was not possible to employ the test of a closure for the actual levelling observations between the two Tidal stations, the following conclusions as to the determination of the Tide Level Slope between the two Stations mentioned may be accepted as substantially accurate during the period embraced.

(a) That at any instant throughout the period of the observations there was a Definite Slope of the water surface between the two Stations, the Mean Tide Level of the Lake Melville Station being higher than that of the Lester Point Station.

(b) That the Average Difference between the Mean Tide Levels of the two Stations during this period was 5 inches.

(c) That the difference was not always constant, but subject to variations at the times of Spring and Neap tides, being greater during the outgoing than the incoming tide, and greatest during the Neap tides.”

In other words, Admiral Learmonth accepts as substantially accurate that during the period embraced, the Mean Tide Level at the Lake Melville station was, on the average, five inches higher than Mean Tide Level at the Lester Point Station.

In view of the frank acceptance of this fact, which was the result ascertained by the tide gauge records and the levelling operations, further comments on this phase of the case would appear unnecessary. However, while I am satisfied that Admiral Learmonth, in view of his undoubted technical ability, had no intention, inferentially or otherwise, of casting any reflection on the accuracy of the levelling operations, I believe his remark "Although the time available was short, and it was not possible to employ the test of a closure for the actual levelling observations between the two Tidal Stations." may tend to create such an impression. To obviate this, I feel constrained to elucidate my original report on the levelling operations as contained in the Canadian Case in reference to this particular remark.

When the Geodetic Survey of Canada was requested to carry out this investigation, in view of the undoubted difficulties of running precise levels in such a country and the probable importance which the results might have, it was decided that I should personally take charge of these operations. Special care was taken throughout the execution of this work, and, in my opinion, the precise levels under consideration, as far as precision goes, compare favourably with any of the 22,000 miles of precise levels which have been run in this Dominion under the supervision of the Geodetic Survey of Canada.

In spite of the precision and refinement now exercised in precise levelling, there still remain inherent errors of a small order, resulting from accidental and systematic causes. In developing a national system of levels it is customary to run the lines in such a manner as will form a network of polygons, or circuits. In this net, each circuit closure represents the algebraic sum of these small errors in its perimeter and, by a rigorous mathematical adjustment of the net in its entirety, these closures are reduced to zero. While the adjustment removes the small inherent errors, its effect on actual difference of elevation between two adjacent bench-marks is so slight as to be undeterminable by field operations. Hence, in an isolated short line of levels, as occurs in the Labrador work, where a difference of elevation of the magnitude of 5 inches was under consideration, it was manifestly out of the question to secure a circuit closure even if the country had permitted doing so.

It is true that, while a circuit closure also reveals the presence of a gross error that is one which would be detected by field operations. In our precise levelling procedure, the route to be levelled is divided into sections, approximately one mile in length and, on each section, at least two lines, one forward and one backward, are run under as different atmospheric conditions as possible. If the difference of elevation between the terminal bench marks of each section, as determined by these two lines, is more than 0.015 of a foot, then additional lines are run until this agreement is reached. These additional lines are designated as releveling. Owing to the exceptionally difficult nature of the route, the amount of releveling on this line was unusually high. At times, as many as six separate lines were run in a section before this agreement was reached. Consequently the possibility of a gross error existing in this work is negligible.

The formula for determining the probable error of a line of double levelling is $$\text{probable error} = 0.67 \frac{d^2}{4n} \cdot m \cdot .1$$

where d = the local discrepancy in feet between the forward and backward measure in such section

m = length of each section in miles

n = number of sections

L = length of the line in miles.

The probable error of this line, using the above formula, is ± 0.012 feet or ± 0.14 inch, which is well within the limits adopted by the International Union of Geodesy and Geophysics as their standard for levelling of high precision.

ANNEX "B" TO No. 1447.

COMMENTS ON THE OBSERVATIONS OF VICE-ADMIRAL LEARMONTH, AND MR. C. TATE REGAN, By H. W. JONES, TIDAL AND CURRENT SURVEY, CANADA.

Comments on the "Observations of Vice-Admiral Sir Frederick C. Learmonth, K.B.E., C.B., on the Hydrographic Survey and Reports by the Canadian Government on Lake Melville, Hamilton inlet, at the Narrows, 1921-23," and supplementary note respecting criticisms by C. Tate Regan, M.A., F.R.S.

For the purpose of brevity and convenience reference will be made directly to the divisions of Sir Frederick's observations.

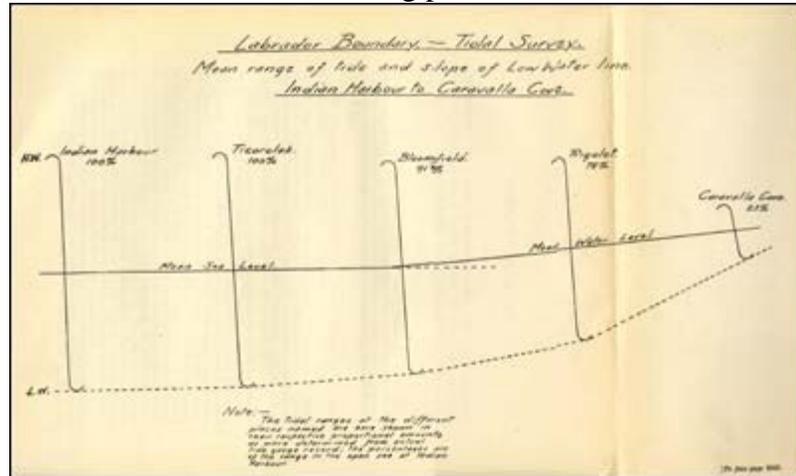

II. That the body of water concerned may have been improperly named at the first, through imperfect knowledge of the physical features resulting from incomplete investigation, is not a sound or just reason for confirming the appellation now. That the term "Lake" has been used as well as "Inlet" indicates indecision in the past as to which it really is.

III. The test of accessibility by ocean-going vessels would make of the St. Lawrence river a sea inlet as far as lake St. Peterwhere the first extensive dredging has been done, whereas the Commissioners appointed under the Reciprocity Treaty between the United States and Great Britain, concluded and signed at Washington on the 5th of June, 1854, agreed and decided with respect to the river St. Lawrence that "a line bearing N. 40° W. (magnetic) connecting Cape Chat with Pointe de Monts . . . shall mark the mouth or outer limit of said river," and that all the waters within or to the westward of this line should be reserved and excluded from the common right of fishing therein under the first and second articles of the said treaty (Moore's International Arbitrations, Volume 1, page 487) ; and in the Royal Proclamation on the 7th of October, 1763, the boundaries of the Province of Quebec as thereby established are defined in part by a liminary line drawn "from thence (i.e. Cape Rosiers) crossing the mouth of the river St. Lawrence by the west end of the Island of Anticosti terminates at the aforesaid river St. John." (Canadian Constitutional Documents, 2nd edition, page 164.)

If it be a sound criterion for determining the limit between a river and the sea that the river carries its title down to the point at which it reaches the level of the sea at low tide-this being the level at low tide to which the waters of the river fall and beyond which the level of the sea never drops-then a determination of the position of the dividing line may be quite approximately made from the tidal record obtained from the self-registering tide gauges.

Taking the mean range of the tide at Indian Harbour as being that of the open ocean and as 100 per cent., the range at Ticoralak Island was found to be also 100 per cent. ; at Broomfield Island 91 per cent. ; at Rigolet 78 per cent., and at Caravalla 23 per cent. of the ocean range. Thus the elevation of the level of the water at low tide is lower at Rigolet than at Caravalla, lower at Broomfield island than at Rigolet, and lower at Ticoralak than at Broomfield island, but from there outward to Indian Harbour it remains the same. From this it is clear that the lowest level to which the waters can be reached somewhere between Broomfield Island and Ticoralak Island, or in the neighbourhood of Ticoralak Point and Turner Headland (see diagram of tidal ranges).

The argument in par. III. premises that no river here comes into consideration, ignoring that the outlet from Lake Melville for a distance approximately 15 miles, after consideration of its physical features, may be judged as such. Its abbreviated length does not make it any the less a river.

It cannot be claimed that the “lake” is accessible at all times by the largest ocean-going vessels except at very great risk. Currents, with tides that were not maximum springs, measured up to 51 knots in the “Narrows” or river stretch opposite Rigolet, and in the passages around Henrietta Island, because of the natural laws where the cross-sectional area is much restricted, they must be much stronger. The figure of 3¼ knots (see III, p. 5) for the strength of the currents that may be expected is certainly in error ; they are likely up to 7 or 8 knots, and possibly more, in these passages on the ebb, when with maximum tides. While the Tidal Survey party lacked the time to make determinations here, the descriptions of the flow through these passages by those who knew them indicated violent currents. A small vessel was said to have foundered in the whirlpools at one time, and the writer had the opportunity of observing the very strong cross-currents between Pike Run and Strathcona Point. Ordinary caution would limit the times to make the passage to the periods at or near slack water.

V. In comparing Lake Melville and its outlet to numerous other water bodies similar in some respects, no discussion is given to the degree of evidence of river water flowing through the discharge. The amount of tidal current itself is dependent upon whether the oceanic tide adjacent is large or small. But the amount of outward discharge and velocity, compared with the inward, is the measure by which we must judge whether the stretch from the lake to the sea is a river or not. The relative densities are also important.

In the case of the Bras d'Or Lakes there are no streams worthy the name of river flowing into them, and the same might be said of Burrard and Masset Inlets. The streams in the outlets are essentially due to the tides. On the other hand, great rivers flow into Lake Melville, and their waters must find their way through the outlet, giving to this channel more or less—as may be judged—the nature of a river.

A comparison with the St. John River-system of lake basins is suggested. It has an outlet with very strong combined tidal and river currents and through which vessels can pass only at times of slack water. The tidal undulation reaches a distance of ninety miles, but the distance of penetration of sea water has perhaps never been determined. Whether it is found in the strata of the adjacent lakes I cannot say, but have been told on good authority that hake are caught in the Kennebecasis arm. I leave it to the biologists to tell the habits of this fish.

On the other examples cited for comparison, I have not the means at hand to enable me to comment, except as to the Black Sea, which, by its size alone, is perhaps removed from the same class. Also its effluent would be affected by the great evaporation basin of the Mediterranean with which it is connected through the Sea of Marmora.

VII. The fact that river influence, as shown by the Tidal Survey observations, is a sensible quantity, is admitted, and that it accounts “in a great measure” for the difference of level between the gauging stations. I am in agreement with the statement that the cause of the mean level of Lake Melville being higher at neap than at spring tides is the greater volume of water flowing inwards or outwards during the latter than the former periods, but not with the explanation to show that the tidal action is responsible for holding up the mean level of the lake. . . .

That the turn of both the flood and ebb streams occurs “at approximately the same time at each end of the waterway” is very much open to question as concerns the under current, and as to the surface current such is not the case, for, from our point of observation at anchor in midstream, the approach of the current after slack water could be plainly seen at considerable distance as a ridge of turbulent water, while it was yet stationary in the vicinity of our mooring. Doubtless after a time, as the difference of levels increased more rapidly, the remaining stretch would begin to move almost as a body. In the case of the under current, the factors of momentum and inertia, coupled with the changing in the height of the tide affecting one end before the other, would preclude a simultaneous reversal. Also, if the momentum of the flood current, inwards for 1½ hours after high water tends to bank up the water in the lake, it should also hold true that a similar but even longer and stronger ebb current continuing outward after low water would assist the flow outward to a similar extent or more. For with a greater volume flowing outward, the frictional resistance is proportionately less, and its greater momentum carrying it farther into the open sound (see diagram of Relative Velocities) would have a drawing effect after it on the water from the lake above, and also delay the following flood tide, thus prolonging the duration of the ebb flow. For these reasons the argument presented does not establish that the tidal action has the “cushioning effect” spoken of to hold the lake to a higher level.

On the contrary (since proven by the gauging and levels) the water level in the lake is higher through the periods of neap tides than through the periods of spring tides. Or in other words, the less the amount of tide, the higher is the level in the lake. Thus it appears the tide is responsible for the level of the lake being as low as it is.

VIII. “Nothing short of a prolonged series of observations would suffice to establish with certainty the existence of any permanent difference of level between the inner and outer portions of Hamilton Inlet.”

The laws of gravitation and inertia alone are sufficient to prove that there is a “permanent difference of level” between the lake and the sea. The gauging and precise levelling are only necessary to prove that the difference is a sensible amount which may be measured. Large rivers flow into the lake. Its area or the local climate is not such that evaporation from its surface need be considered. The water accumulates until, owing to difference of level, the force of gravity overcomes the inertia, and flow results through the short river to the sea. As there is no other escape, so long as the rivers flow, there must be a difference in the mean levels. The dominant flow outward is very pronounced, as shown by the observations.

IX. (a) Dealt with in VIII.

(b) It is said that “no river enters into the question.” Attention is called to the evidence of river influence, and characteristics of a tidal river in the reach known as the Narrows, as shown by the Tidal Survey Report.

X. (No comment.)

XI. (Last paragraph.) The features which are distinctly characteristics of tidal rivers are here said to belong to sea inlets, i.e., those dependent principally upon the element of watershed discharge, but also on the frictional resistance of an attenuated channel and slope.

XII. In this section the percentages of density refer to the excess over unity as compared with the same of sea water and not to the relation between the densities themselves. This was not made sufficiently clear in the original report, and this opportunity is taken to prevent mis-interpretation.

A General Consideration of the Problem.

A shallow strait connecting the sea with a deep inlet into which no streams discharge would have an equal flow each way, of water of uniform sea density, neglecting for the purpose of illustration such modifications as would be caused by barometric disturbance, convection, and other temporary or irregular influences.

The water of a river flowing directly into the sea is also of uniform (fresh) density, but flows all one way, losing itself abruptly at its mouth.

Between these two extremes is the tidal river with its estuary and reaches which are penetrated by the sea water, and pulsate in the manner of flow with the tide. The water of the sea flows and ebbs mainly along the bottom under the water of the river as far as the slope of the river bed permits, and because of agitation caused by obstructions and irregularities of the channel it permeates to a more or less extent the waters of the river. The flood and ebb currents in such a stream show characteristics common to all of them.

Now, if a waterway conducting a river discharge lead from a deep basin, the outlet being like a weir, followed by a channel, so that only at the highest tides would any salt-laden water enter, the water in the lower undisturbed recesses of that lake or basin would be as salt as the sea and the outlet would still have the features of a tidal river.

The case under consideration is such as this only that the outlet, while much restricted in width, is deep enough that all tides penetrate the basin, but the features of river flow and presence of river water are strongly evident.

For illustration, let us revert to the contemplation of the shallow strait connecting the sea with a deep inlet into which no rivers discharge. “Other things being equal,” the tidal flow will be equal in both directions, the water uniform in density, and the mean levels equal. If sufficient streams could be deflected into such an inlet it would be converted into a lake at a higher elevation than the sea, and the strait would become a river.

The purpose of this is to show that whether the outlet from Lake Melville through the Narrows to the "sound" below is a strait or river depends upon the amount of river water present and the nature of the flow

Very large rivers flow into the lake which may not be relatively large, having in mind the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence river, and the flow through the outlet has been shown by the Tidal Survey investigations to resemble less the flow through a strait, than of a tidal river. Per contra, the density of the water is nearer that of sea water than fresh water, but this is also true of nearly all tidal rivers in their lower courses and estuaries.

SUPPLEMENTARY NOTE TO THE ORIGINAL TIDAL SURVEY REPORT
REFERRING TO THAT PART CONCERNING THE DENSITY OF THE WATERS.

Mr. C. Tate Regan calls attention to certain figures given as percentages of density of sea water. For the sake of brevity and as the purport is so obvious, the term "density" was used for the "excess-of-density-overunity." It is this "excess" or difference in density of the numerous samples of water over the density of pure water which indicates the existence of salt water and which is also the measure of its presence. The "percentages" are therefore between zero (density of pure water being 1,000) and 0.024 as 100 per cent., the density of standard sea water being 1.024. Thus a sample of brackish water of specific gravity 1.012 has only 50 per cent. by weight of substances foreign to pure water, that standard sea water bears ; or, in simple language, it has 50 per cent. the character of sea water as distinguished from fresh water in regard to weight. The figures for the densities are all given, so this particular use of the term is quite obvious.

p. 3861

The use of the term "salinity" is also brought up. It was not my intention to deal with salinity at all, but this word was used instead of "density" in the instance pointed out.

REPLY TO OBSERVATIONS BY VICE-ADMIRAL SIR FREDERICK C. LEARMONTH REGARDING LAKE MELVILLE AND THE NARROWS.

BY DR. W. BELL DAWSON.

In the discussion of the question whether Lake Melville is an arm of the sea or part of a river system, it may be well to note at the outset that this can only be decided by considering the physical conditions which characterize the waters of true inlets and river estuaries. It is thus no mere question of language or an academic discussion of names. This is evident from the names of maps. Take, for example, two bodies of water connected with the ocean by a narrow channel, one in the Queen Charlotte Islands and the other in Cape Breton Island. In any physical geography, these would be classed together because identical in their features ; yet on the maps, one is named an inlet (Masset Inlet) and the other a lake (Bras d'Or Lake). A third very similar one is named a sound (Puget Sound).

The general contention in the “ observations” submitted by Vice-Admiral Sir F. C. Learmonth, is that any body of water into which ships can enter from the ocean, is an Arm of the Sea. The matter is regarded purely from the viewpoint of navigation. The seaman may no doubt consider that any water he can navigate is an extension or branch of the general ocean ; and it does not matter to him whether it is the mouth of a river or a lake, whether it is salt water or fresh, so long as his vessel can get there.

Admiral Learmonth takes this view, and includes all types of inlets and estuaries as “ Arms of the Sea,” so long as they are accessible to ocean-going vessels. The question of navigation is thus made the only criterion. If we take this definition of an arm of the sea, and follow it out, it will become clear that it entirely ignores all physical distinctions in navigable waters. For ocean-going vessels reach Montreal on the St. Lawrence, and ports 2.300 miles from the ocean on the Amazon, and as far as Hankow on the Yang-tze in China. According to the definition, these rivers would have to be classed as arms of the sea up to the head of ocean navigation. Such a view can only be understood from the seaman's standpoint. To the deep-sea captain, a river only begins where his cargo has to be discharged and transferred to river craft.

It will be seen as we proceed, that in the classification of water-areas connected with the ocean, the main distinctions between them must be based on their physical characteristics. A rational classification can thus be made.

The question whether Lake Melville is to be considered as an inlet or arm of the sea, or as part of the Hamilton river system, can then be determined by making a comparison with the various types of inlets and estuaries. The descriptions of inlets given by Admiral Learmonth, are very good so far as they go ; but the primary distinctions between one and another, according to their physical characteristics, are not brought out with sufficient clearness to afford a basis for a decision in the question before us.

In Canadian waters, we find so wide a diversity of characteristics that we have, as it were, a museum containing probably every type that can be imagined ; and we may therefore utilize Canadian inlets and estuaries as examples. Furthermore, the tidal behaviour in all those cited, has been investigated by the Tidal and Current Survey of Canada.

The features and characteristics of inlets and estuaries that we have to consider, are such matters as water-slope, the behaviour of the tide, the outflow to the ocean, and so forth ; and the distinctions between them depend primarily on whether or not they receive a large volume of river water. They may therefore be classified as follows :—

(A) Inlets of the sea which are not modified in their characteristics by river inflow.

(a) The typical inlet is a long arm of the sea, fairly uniform in its width, its sides being approximately parallel. These abound on the coasts of British Columbia and Alaska, and they form the fjords of Norway.

(b) Expanded inlets, connected with the sea by a narrow entrance ; but which receive no river discharge of consequence.

(B) Estuaries of rivers. (To show the bearing of tidal features on the classification, it is noteworthy that where there is little or no tide, a delta is formed at a river mouth instead of an estuary.)

(a) The estuary of the ordinary type where the shores of the river are no longer parallel, but (as a rule) open out towards the ocean. These are well known everywhere.

(b) Expanded estuaries, where the river enlarges to a lake-like area before discharging into the ocean. These are comparatively rare ; but the lower part of the St. John river and the Hamilton river estuary afford characteristic examples. At the one extreme of this class, Lake St. Peter on the St. Lawrence may be cited as an expansion which is just reached by the tide ; and at the other extreme there are bays or ponds at the mouths of rivers at the coast, which are enclosed by bars, or islands.

In this classification, we are dealing throughout with water-areas affected by the tide ; because they are all connected with the ocean. The mere fact that a tidal undulation advances over a water area, does not prove the area to be a part of the ocean. For the tidal undulation may run a long way up a river, where the banks are parallel and the water fresh. This is well exemplified by the rivers in any maritime country.

The classes to which such water-areas belong are more clearly indicated than in any other way by the manner in which the tide acts in them. We will describe this as concisely as possible, to explain only those physical differences which are distinctive in their bearing on the Hamilton river system.

The typical inlet (such as those of the British Columbian coast and the fjords of Norway) has approximately parallel shores and is usually deep ; it rims a long way inland (as much as 60 or 80 miles) and it may have branches. Such inlets are properly arms of the sea ; the tide rises fully as high at the head as at the mouth ; and the water is salt throughout their extent. For there is rarely any river discharge of consequence in these inlets, because of the topography in which they are found. Even when their entrance has become somewhat narrow and shallow (through an exceptional circumstance), as in the case of Burrard inlet, the rise of the tide is not decreased up to the head, and the water is perfectly salt. The typical estuary of any large river, is a complete contrast to this. The rise of the tide increases from the ocean inwards ; and its characteristics differ in many ways that we need not enter upon.

It is the second sub-division in each of the above classes that chiefly concerns us—namely, a large expanse of water connected with the ocean by a narrow entrance. When their physical characteristics are considered, it will be found that the leading influence which dominates them is the amount of river discharge which they receive. This will accordingly justify the primary distinction made in the classification.

As examples of such expanses in the inlet class, there are the Bras d'Or Lakes in Cape Breton Island, and Masset Inlet in the Queen Charlotte Islands. (It has been noted that one is called a lake and the other an inlet, although their characteristics are identical.) They both occupy the central part of islands, so that the river discharge they receive is negligible. [See the outline maps herewith.] Their leading features are :—

(1) They are practically as salt as the sea. (2) The water surface is at the mean level of the outside ocean. (3) The tidal streams outward and inward have the same strength. (4) The rise of the tide is greatly reduced, because the entrance is so narrow and the area so large that it has not time to fill up, during the tidal period. Such an expanse is in reality a part of the ocean ; and the amount of navigation into it will depend chiefly on the depth of the connecting entrance ; and on trade conditions.

As examples in the estuary class of large expanses of water connected with the ocean, we may cite the lower part of the St. John river in New Brunswick, which in the lowermost portion of its course includes several lake -expansions with different appellations. Lake Melville is also a characteristic example of this type. [See the outline maps herewith.] The leading features of the type are :—

(1) The water is less salt than sea water, and it may even be fresh in part. (2) The surface is higher than the mean level of the ocean. (3) The tidal stream outwards towards the ocean is much stronger than inwards ; and in extreme cases, the current may not reverse at all. (4) The decreased rise of the tide is due to the water slope up which the tidal undulation has to make its way, as well as to the size of the expanse. The contrasting features of the two types may be further considered.

(1) Salt and Fresh Water.— It is usual at the head of the estuarine portions of such rivers for the salt water to flow in along the bottom when the tide begins to rise, because it has a greater density, being salt water and being almost always colder than the river water. The sea water thus acts as a wedge and raises the water level while the surface water is still running out. Very definite examples of this could be given in various river mouths. In this respect the Narrows resemble an estuary and not an inlet of the sea.

(2) Water Slope.— An expanse in a river mouth is always at a higher level than the mean level of the sea ; whereas in a true inlet (though it may have the same general shape) there is nothing to keep the level higher than in the ocean outside. Lake St. Peter, on the St. Lawrence, affords an example of this. In the case of the St. John, there is a rocky barrier at the river mouth which accentuates the differences unduly. The writer calculated the level of Lake Melville above mean sea level, on the assumption that it was part of the Hamilton river system ; the calculation being based on comparison with stretches of the Ottawa and the St. Lawrence ; and the result he obtained was 0.50 of a foot. The difference, as afterwards deter-mined by the levelling was 0.42 of a foot ; and this might have been slightly more if the levels had been extended further seaward as he had recommended when the surveys were undertaken. This certainly corroborates the view that Lake Melville is part of a river system.

Admiral Learmonth reviews quite elaborately the nature of the observations taken, and their interpretation ; but he seems to make the matter unnecessarily complicated. In these observations every precaution was taken to obtain a truly balanced result, as well as to carry out the work under normal conditions. The Hamilton river was not in flood at the time, as the freshet season only lasts about three weeks, and is always over by the middle or end of June at the latest. The result given by the observations cannot properly be challenged therefore on the ground that it might be different under other conditions at other times.

(3) Tidal Streams.— The greater strength of the outward tidal stream through the Narrows is itself a proof, according to the laws of flowing water in hydraulics, that a difference in level must exist ; that is, that the average level of Lake Melville must be higher than sea level. This greater strength of the outward stream was also found to persist throughout the whole of the time during which the observations were made, which corroborates the validity of the levelling results beyond the two months period of observations on which they are based.

Retardation of the Tidal Undulation.— The retardation in the advance of the tide, which causes high water to be later in time as the tide progresses, is a somewhat complex problem. But when Admiral Learmonth says that “ it is a common feature in sea inlets,” this cannot be accepted as a general statement. For it is remarkable that in the most typical of all inlets, there is practically no retardation, as the time of high water at the mouth and the head is almost simultaneous on a distance of 50 miles.

The following examples from the British Columbia coast will show, that, in truly typical inlets, the time of the tide is practically simultaneous throughout :—

From Hartley Bay, at the entrance, to Kittimat, at the head of Douglas channel, distance 49 miles, the time of high water is 4 minutes later.

From Namu, at the entrance, to Bella-kula, at the head of the inlet, distance 69 miles, the time of high water is 2 minutes later.

From Vancouver, in Burrard inlet, to Port, Moody, at the head, the tide, though it has to pass through Second Narrows, is only 13 minutes later.

Also, the rise of the tide at the head of these inlets is actually greater than in the entrance by 2 to 12 per cent.

These small differences of time were determined by means of registering instruments to record the tide, with the use of chronometers for accurate time.

In contrast with the above the retardation of the tide in an ordinary estuary for an equal distance would be about two hours, as found in the St. Lawrence estuary in its narrower parts. (See the differences of time in the Canadian tide tables.)

The greatest amount of retardation that occurs is therefore in estuaries and as far up a river as the tide extends, where it is chiefly due to the counter-flow of the river and to river slope. In these respects the retardation of the tide in the Narrows and Lake Melville has a closer resemblance to estuarine conditions than to tidal action in any true inlet.

Maximum Rise of Tide.— In any funnel-shaped estuary, the rise of the tide increases from the ocean inwards, and the head of the estuary can be defined (in most cases) as the point where the tide has its maximum range. Beyond this point the tide may still make itself felt a long way up the river, but it gradually decreases in height. On comparing the whole stretch from the outer bay to the head of tide in the Hamilton river with a noteworthy estuary, such as the St. Lawrence, the similarity in this respect is striking, for the maximum rise occurs outside the Narrows, and from this tidal indication these Narrows and Lake Melville within them are to be considered as part of the river system. (See chart accompanying Tidal Survey report, where a comparison with the St. Lawrence is shown, and diagram herewith.)

Supposed Modifications.—In maintaining the marine character of Hamilton inlet, Admiral Learmonth discusses the modifications that would occur if there were no tide on the open coast of that region ; and this supposition is made to institute a comparison with the Black Sea and the Sea of Marmora. It would be more to the point to consider what would occur if there were no river inflow into Goose Bay at the head of Lake Melville. which conies from a drainage area of nearly 52,000 square miles. It is evident that if there were no inflow of fresh water there would be nothing to keep the lake surface at a higher level than the ocean outside. The tidal streams would become equal out and in through The Narrows, and the water throughout would become as salt as the ocean. The rise of the tide would become greater, for there would be no water slope against its entering, nor would there be a preponderance of outflowing water for the tide to overcome. Lake Melville would thus pass into the other class and become a true inlet of the sea, but with a decreased area.

Summary.—The conditions in Lake Melville and the Narrows that connect it with the ocean may be summarized as follows : The rivers that flow into Lake Melville dilute the sea water to such an extent that sea fish do not enter the lake ; the volume of the inflowing rivers is so great that it maintains the level of the lake above sea level, and modifies the ordinary tidal action of the sea ; this higher level together with the large river volume causes the outflowing ebb in The Narrows to be stronger than the flood ; and the point where the tide attains its maximum range is outside the Narrows, which shows that the river system extends as far as this point. The features are all those of a tidal river, as distinguished from an inlet or arm of the sea ; and accordingly the Lake Melville area may properly be considered part of the Hamilton river system with the mouth of the river at the outer end of the Narrows.

MARINE LIFE IN THE ST. LAWRENCE.

BY DR. W. BELL DAWSON.

The occurrence of sea shells and other marine creatures on the shores of the Lower St. Lawrence is well known to those who frequent the seaside resorts there ; and the marine forms here referred to have been observed by the present writer who has spent more than one summer at each of the places which are here referred to.

The mouth of the St. Lawrence River is placed at Point des Monts, where the estuary narrows appreciably before opening out into the arm of the Gulf of St. Lawrence in which Anticosti is situated. This position for the mouth is recognized in the British Tide Tables as well as by the decision of the Commissioners appointed under the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854. The localities here referred to, can therefore best be described by their distance above this point.

On the south shore, at Metis Beach and Cacouna, resorts that are 53 and 138 miles respectively within Point des Monts, the boulders and rocks of the foreshore between high and low tide, have quantities of periwinkles upon them (the Littorina rudis), and mussels are common near low water (the Mitylus edulis). The whelk (Buccinum undatum) and the Natica are also commonly found, washed up from the deeper water.

On the north shore, at Tadoussac at the mouth of the Saguenay 135 miles above Point des Monts) besides the common mussel there are beds of sea-urchins (Echinus drobachiensis) to be found at the lowest tides, as well as star-fish (Uraster vulgaris). At Murray Bay (172 miles above Point des Monts and only 80 miles below Quebec) the periwinkle abounds as well as the limpet; and star-fish are also found.

At most of these places the clam (Mya arenaria) and the cockle (Cardium Islandicum) are found where conditions are suitable for them.

In the deep water as far up as Murray Bay, sea shells and other marine forms were obtained by dredging, which Sir William Dawson carried out there. The results are described by Dr. J. F. Whiteaves, Naturalist of the Geological Survey of Canada, who himself carried out dredging operations in the Anticosti region. The following quotation is from a Paper by Dr. Whiteaves entitled : On some Results obtained by Dredging in Gaspé and off Murray Bay :—

“ By dredging in the St. Lawrence opposite Murray Bay, 60 species of marine mollusca, identical with well-known by Principal Dawson. It was not previously known that such strictly marine species lived so far up the river. Among the most interesting of these shells is an Astarte. Not only, too, are these Murray Bay shells of a very marine type, but in many cases they are of an unusually large size." (From Canadian Naturalist, Second Series, Vol. IV, 1869, pages 270-273.)

In another Paper by Dr. Whiteaves entitled : Notes on a Deep-sea Dredging Expedition . . . in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, he thus again refers to the matter :—

“ In the centre of this river (the St. Lawrence) opposite Murray Bay, about 80 miles below Quebec, Principal Dawson has dredged quite a large series of Labrador marine invertebrates ; but how much further up the stream these salt-water denizens extend, we have yet to learn.” (From Canadian Naturalist, Second Series, Vol. VII, 1875; pages 98-99.)

The matter is explained by Sir William Dawson himself in an extended paper entitled : The Post Pliocene Geology of Canada ; published in the Canadian Naturalist, Second Series, Vol. VI. One section of this paper, from pages 369 to 403, is occupied by a list of the mollusca found fossil in the geological deposits, and those still living in the St. Lawrence River and Gulf. From this extensive list, the shells found living in the waters off Murray Bay, have been compiled by the present writer ; and they include the following :—

(BIVALVE SHELLS, similar in appearance to the mussel.)

RHYNCONELLA PSITTACEA. In great abundance at Murray Bay, in about 20 fathoms.

TERREBRATELLA SPITZBERGENSIS. At Murray Bay this is not uncommon, and is found attached to stones in 20 to 25 fathoms.

LAMELLIBRANCHIATA.

MEMORANDUM BY MR. A. LANDMARK.
SOMETIME INSPECTOR OF THE FRESHWATER AND SALMON FISHERIES OF NORWAY.

In my opinion the following are the factors which mainly come into consideration in deciding the question as to whether an area covered by water at the outlet of a large river, which is connected with the sea by a comparatively narrow and shallow channel, must be regarded as a bay of the sea or as a part of the watercourse :—

- (1) The average height of the water in relation to the sea outside the narrow connecting channel ;
- (2) The salinity of the water in the partly enclosed basin ;
- (3) The nature of the vegetable and animal life there.

With regard to these factors :—

Re (1) On account of the tidal movements in the sea and also of the irregularity of the supply of water in the watercourse caused by variations in the weather, it follows as a matter of course that the relation between the height of the water in the partly enclosed basin and that of the surface of the sea is not constant but varies incessantly. If the threshold in the narrow connecting channel lies higher than the level at high water in the adjacent sea, the surface of the water in the partly enclosed basin will always be more or less above the level of the sea, and in that case it is clear that the partly enclosed basin is a part of the watercourse and not a part of the sea. Doubt will only arise when the threshold is lower than the level of an ordinary high tide in the adjacent sea, since it may readily happen that the level of the water during high tide is higher outside the threshold than inside and the reverse during ebb tide. As a result the current in the connecting channel will be alternately in-going and out-going. If, however, in such cases the surface of the water in the partly restricted basin is known on an average to be higher than in the sea outside, and if as a result the current is known to be out-going for a longer time than it is in-going, it would appear to be difficult to regard the basin as a bay of the sea. For disregarding the accumulation of water which the tidal movement of the sea, with or without the assistance of storms, occasions at certain places, especially in open sea bays which run to a point, it would appear to be incompatible with the natural law of equilibrium that the main height of the surface of the sea at one place should be known to be higher than at another and adjacent place.

Re (2) and (3) When the threshold of the connecting channel lies sufficiently low, the salt water of the sea outside, on account of its greater specific weight, will run into the basin and thus by degrees to a greater or lesser extent replace the lighter fresh water in the deeper parts of the basin. But this is nothing other than what is also the case in relatively large and some what sluggish rivers, even though they have no deeply lying or extensive basin at their outlet, because during high tide the salt water will penetrate a longer or shorter distance up the river along its bed, even though the current in the higher layers of water runs out the whole time, The circumstance that the water has a considerable salinity in the deeper layers of the basin is therefore no hindrance to regarding the partly enclosed area as a part of the watercourse. It is only when the salinity in the upper layers of water becomes relatively large that there would appear to be reason to regard the basin as belonging to the sea.

But even if we disregard the fact that the salinity is not constant at all parts of the basin, but in the upper layers in any case will vary with the dimensions of the mass of water which the river conveys to the basin at any given time, it would scarcely be possible to state any definite degree of salinity either at the surface or at a slight depth below it, as a decisive factor in reply to the question as to whether the basin is to be regarded as part of the sea or part of the watercourse. Valuable guidance is given here, however, in the nature of the vegetable and animal life inside the connecting channel as compared with the corresponding conditions outside the latter. For if the majority of the vegetable and animal forms characteristic of the salt water outside the connecting channel are lacking in the less saline basin within, whilst in their place appear species which are characteristic of fresh or slightly saline water and which are lacking outside, this would appear to indicate so great a difference in the character of the basin that it could not reasonably be regarded as a part of the salt sea, and this applies to an even greater degree the more sudden the transition is from salt water to fresh water (brackish water) flora and fauna.

With regard to the special case lying before us, it appears to me from the information contained in the documents of the case, that all the three factors mentioned above tend towards the opinion that Lake Melville is a part of the Hamilton watercourse. According to the observations which were made uninterruptedly for two months, the main height of the water inside the narrows lies 5-6 inches higher than that outside the same, and at every spring tide the current is about one hour longer out-going than in-going, and at neap tide about three hours longer outgoing than ingoing. The salinity in the upper layers of water is also seen to diminish considerably in the narrows and markedly so inside Henrietta Island, and in full agreement therewith both the vegetable and animal life within the latter island are essentially of a different character from that outside the narrows, in particular there are quite lacking, as far as I can see, seaweed and practically speaking cod. It may also be mentioned that the name of the basin in question is Lake Melville which indicates that from ancient times the basin has been regarded as part of the watercourse and not as a bay of the sea. As far as I can see the name given was employed in oldest maps, whilst it was not until more recent maps that the basin was given the name Hamilton Inlet. In my opinion, therefore, it is correct to regard Lake Melville as a part of the Hamilton watercourse. It is no argument against this that the connecting channel between the sea and Lake Melville is so broad and deep that large sea-going ships can pass through it. Because this is nothing else than what applies to numerous rivers of approximately the same size as the Hamilton River, e.g., the Thames and the Tyne.

With regard to the true interpretation of the expression “coast” employed in the Royal Proclamation of October 7th, 1763, I assume that the English (American) word, like the corresponding Norwegian word “kyst,” can be employed in somewhat different ways. In addition to indicating actual coast line, i.e., the boundary line between the sea and the land, the expression can be employed to indicate a large or small area of land adjoining the sea, the extent of which must be estimated according to the rest of the text in which the expression occurs. Thus we may speak of coast fishermen, in contradistinction to fjord fisherman, of coast districts in contradistinction to inland districts, of coast climates in contradistinction to inland climates. In the explanation of the said Royal Proclamation of October 7th, 1763, the object is said to be the promotion of fishing “to the end that open and free fishing of our subjects may be extended to and carried on upon the coast of Labrador and the adjacent islands.” But as the promotion of “open and free fishing” is the sole object of the measure, the territory which it is intended to include in the expression “coast” must be restricted to the comparatively insignificant stretch of land along the sea, which it is necessary for fishermen to be able to make use of in order to carry on fishing and to utilise its products. Moreover, since, as far as I can see. in 1763 just as now no commercial fishing of salt water fish was carried on in Lake Melville, but at the utmost an inconsiderable amount of fishing for household purposes, the expression “open and free fishing” appears to apply only to the great sea fisheries of Labrador and Newfoundland, and even if we regard Lake Melville as a part of the sea, it would not appear probable that the expression “coast” was intended to include the land adjoining the basin as well.

Although on account of the dissimilarity of the conditions the following is only of slight interest in the case before us, I will add that the question as to whether a basin lying at the outlet of a river which is connected with the sea by means of a comparatively narrow and shallow channel, is to be regarded as a part of the watercourse or of the sea, has been submitted to the courts of law in Norway for decision twice. Both cases, however, applied to areas of water of a very inconsiderable extent in comparison with Lake Melville.

One concerned Mivannet in Hardanger, which lies at the outlet of a quite small river. It is only a little more than 1 kilometer long and somewhat less in breadth, and it is separated from the sea by a channel of less than 100 metres in length. Its height above the level of the sea is not greater than that the salt water of the sea flows in at every high tide, and its bed is, therefore, covered with salt water in which there occur a number of salt water fish, although not in very large numbers. The water at the surface is also so saline that cattle will not drink it. The surface of the basin however lies on an average somewhat higher than the surface of the adjacent arms of the sea, although it is not possible to state the exact figure. Both the lower court and the High Court came to the conclusion that the basin must be regarded as part of the watercourse and special emphasis was given to the circumstance that the surface on an average lies higher than that of the sea. In addition, importance was also attached to the fact that the fish in the basin are mainly fresh water fish.

The other case concerns what is known as Bolstad Fjord in Nordhordland, which lies at the outlet of the Voss River, which at its outlet in the basin has a catchment area of 1,450 square kilometers. Bolstad Fjord is about 16 kilometers long and on an average not more than 1.5 kilometer in breadth. The depth goes down to 75 fathoms. The channel which connects the fjord with the arm of the sea lying outside is 2-3 kilometers long, but at its narrowest part only 50-60 meters broad, and its threshold is situated 1.6 meters below the lowest level of water in the sea outside. When the water is at its lowest, the smallest depth of water in the channel is about 2.2 meters. At that time it was regularly traversed by a small steamer, but only when the water was somewhat high in the sea. The level of Bolstad Fjord at ebb tide is about 0.7 meter higher but at high tide 0.1 meter lower than the surface of the sea outside, that is on an average 0.3 meter higher than the sea. There are found a number of salt water fish of various kinds, but not very many, and there is no seaweed. The two lower courts came to the conclusion that Bolstad Fjord must be regarded as part of Voss River, importance being attached to the fact that the level of water on an average lies higher than that of the sea, but in addition importance was attached to the information submitted regarding the nature of the animal and vegetable life in the fjord. In the Supreme Court, however, the question as to whether Bolstad Fjord should be regarded as a part of the river or a part of the sea was not decided, the Court finding that the question regarding fishing rights could be decided on a foundation which was independent of the question regarding Bolstad Fjord's nature as a watercourse or sea.

A REVIEW OF THE DATA CONCERNING THE LABRADOR BOUNDARY AS DISCUSSED IN THE NEWFOUNDLAND COUNTER-CASE AND OF OTHER MEMORANDA CONCERNING THE BOUNDARY.

BY E. M. KINDLE.

NEWFOUNDLAND COUNTER-CLAIM.

I have given careful consideration to the paragraphs of the Newfoundland counter-case on behalf of the Colony of Newfoundland re the Labrador boundary to which Mr. C. P. Plaxton has directed my attention in his letters of April 12 and July 5, 1926. Below I submit some observations and comments concerning the paragraphs 19, 20, 21 and 22.

The Newfoundland counter-case implies, in the first half of paragraph 19, that the “ admittedly tidal ” character of the western part of Lake Melville is to be regarded as supporting the Newfoundland claim that Lake Melville is an arm of the sea. The futility of supporting this claim in any degree upon the presence of tidal action is indicated clearly by the fact that both Northwest river and Little Lake have tidal waters but waters which are perfectly fresh. The water at the north or upper end of Northwest river has a tidal rise and fall of two feet or more (estimated), and I found the water in it as satisfactory for drinking purposes as that in the mountain streams.

Concerning the part of paragraph 19 of the Newfoundland counter-case quoting Low's reference to Hamilton inlet as a fiord it must be pointed out that Mr. Low's report was written thirty odd years ago. Since 1895, when it appeared, considerable advance has been made toward developing a more precise nomenclature of land and water forms. At that time fjord was given a breadth of meaning comparable with that which still attaches to the word “ loch ” in Scotland, and the term ria was hardly known. The typical fresh-water lake, Loch Katrine, of Sir Walter Scott, and Loch Lomond, so well known from its literary associations, and numerous other Scottish lakes connected with the sea by swift fresh-water rivers go under the name lochs along with Loch Killisport, a typical marine inlet on the west coast of Scotland.

Mr. A. P. Low presumably applied the term “ fiord ” to Lake Melville in the same broad sense that the Scotch call both Lake Lomond and the marine bays of their west coast lochs.

The broad way in which the term “ fiord ” was used in the 'eighties may be seen in Geikie's text, 1885 edition, p. 267, where he says :—“ Some of the Alpine lakes (Lucerne, etc.) are inland examples of fjords.” The inlets on the west coast of Denmark have also been often termed fiords,¹ but they are not now so classed.

It is unlikely that Low was much concerned with any precise classification of the physiographic features of the coastal region. His fame rests on the splendid contribution which he made to our knowledge of the interior of Labrador.

The contention of the Dominion that Lake Melville should be regarded as an expansion or widening of the Hamilton river rather than as an inlet of the sea is supported by at least four separate classes of facts. The character of the water in the lake, the physiography of the shore and outlet, the distribution of the plant life, and the character of the animal life in the water all strongly support the classification of Lake Melville as a part of the Hamilton river drainage system or as an integral part of the river.

Perhaps the most satisfactory, as well as the simplest way, to decide whether Lake Melville should be classed as a part of the Hamilton river drainage system or as an inlet of the sea is to taste the water. This simple test I applied by cooking and making tea with the lake water for two days at one of my camps near McLean Point east of Goose Bay. This test happened to be made because a camp site convenient in other respects was remote from any small stream. The water was found entirely usable—a statement which certainly could not be made of the water of any true marine inlet or bay.

Permanent residents of the Lake Melville basin say that in spring, when the Hamilton river is high, the water of the western part of the lake is perfectly fresh. My own published figures on salinity² are open to criticism from the Canadian viewpoint in this discussion because they represent salinity when the Hamilton river was low and the salinity of the lake at its maximum figure.

The physiographic considerations which lead me to consider Lake Melville a part of the Hamilton river drainage system may be briefly stated as follows :—The Hamilton river, in common with hundreds of other rivers throughout the glaciated parts of North America, has had parts of its valley transformed by glacial scour or by morainal damming into lakes during the Glacial period. One of these lakes, called Lake Winokapau, is located about 200 miles above the Narrows and has a length of 34 miles and a depth of 427 feet. Lake Melville differs from Lake Winokapau chiefly in having been formed so near the old river outlet that the tide comes in and makes it brackish. The slight width of the Narrows through which Lake Melville empties into Hamilton inlet, about 1 mile, and their length, approximately 12 miles, are dimensions which perfectly fit the conception of a river channel.

Its junction with the head of the trumpet-shaped embayment called Hamilton inlet appears to be the most suitable point to designate as the mouth of the river.

A careful inspection of the shores of the Narrows at low tide shows that the sea weeds of various kinds, including Fucus, gradually become scarce and disappear altogether after passing the entrance to Lake Melville.

The molluscan life characteristic of the intertidal zone reacts to the changed environment at the outlet of the lake in the same way. Two of the most abundant creatures in the shallow water everywhere along the Atlantic coast of Canada are a small shell called Littorina and the common barnacle. These are found on the seashore wherever it is rocky, hundreds of individuals to the square foot often being present. Both of these hardy shells grow scarce in approaching the head of the Narrows from the sea. But a few stragglers persist to the vicinity of Henrietta Island, where they completely disappear (see figure Mem. Can. Geol. Surv. 141).

Briefly summarised, Lake Melville is a part of the inland waterway with a long narrow outlet of the river type. The water is fresh enough toward the western end to drink, and completely excludes such characteristic marine fish as the cod and the common marine creatures and plants of the intertidal zone which can be seen at low tide anywhere seawards from Rigolette.

The essential defect in the statements contained in paragraph 21 lies in the fact that it follows the indiscriminating method of lumping all the inlets and river mouths of the Labrador coastal region into the single class of geographical forms called fiords. This is an easy but an inaccurate and incorrect way of dealing with them.

The coast of Labrador has fine examples of fiords in the high mountainous region south of Cape Chidley. Professor Coleman has described one of them in detail. Comparison of Coleman's map¹ of Nachvak fiord, with a map² of Lake Melville brings out clearly the contrasts. The steep mountain walls come down to the water's edge in the case of Nachvak fiord and its sides are nearly parallel. The map of Lake Melville shows, instead of the nearly parallel sides of Nachvak and most other fiords, very irregular shore lines expanding to a width of 20 miles and bordered by a terraced plain many miles in width at its maximum. Through this lake go the waters of one of the largest rivers of the eastern coast of North America.

Nachvak fiord, like most other fiords, receives only the drainage of the immediately adjacent mountains.

It is alleged in paragraph 21 of the Colony's counter-case that Lake Melville is a basin of salt water with a surface layer of fresh water, and consequently we are advised "it is an arm of the sea." The inference drawn does not follow from the conditions stated. If these conditions are approximately as alleged Lake Melville will still differ in no material degree from many ordinary rivers in the lower parts of their channels.

sea mouth of a river commonly rests upon a body of sea water. Vaughan Cornish, a well known English geographer, has given the reason for this superposition of fresh upon salt water in ordinary rivers in the following passage :—“ A river flowing into the sea as a surface current of light water creates an induction current of sea water which flows landwards under the outflowing water.”¹ Johnson² has directed attention to the fact that the Fraser river in British Columbia, although a shallow stream, rests upon salt water in the lower part of its course. “ It was observed in determining the upstream limit of sea water beneath the river water that at times the sea water at the bottom continued to move upstream for some time after high tide and for some time after the surface water had started to flow out.” “ It was also found, from the water density determinations, that the sea water continues to move in at the bottom or is near stationary for considerable lengths of time when the surface current was outward.” The alleged fact that the deeper water of Lake Melville is salt water cannot therefore be adduced as evidence that this lake is an arm of the sea. The line of reasoning followed in the Newfoundland counter-case (latter part of paragraph 21) could just as well be employed to prove that the lower part of the Fraser river in B.C., which has an average width of a quarter of a mile, is an arm of the sea. The western third of Lake Melville is bordered on both sides by a densely forested plain several miles in width. I spent two days in trying to cross this wooded plain to the foot of the mountains south of Carter basin, and failed. Mr. LeRoy Bowes, of the Hydrographic Service, had a similar experience, and did not carry the traverse of the Kenamou river hack to the mountains (see map by Hydrographic Surv.). To class as a fiord a lake 20 odd miles wide which is bordered for many miles by a plain too wide to cross in a two days' journey, may suit the purpose of our legal opponents, but it would astonish a Scandanavian geologist familiar with the typical Norwegian fiords. Nachvak inlet, with its steep mountain walls coming nearly to the water's edge, answers well to the Norwegian type of fiord, but Lake Melville does not.

I have pointed out in my report the fact that Hamilton inlet answers perfectly to the definition of a ria. If the authors of paragraph 21, who deny this classification of the inlet, can cite a better example of a ria, I would be gratified if they would indicate just how it conforms better than Hamilton inlet does to the definition of that term quoted by me in Memoir 141, page 14. I am willing, however, from the standpoint of usage elsewhere, to grant an alternative classification of this coastal indentation, although it does not, in my opinion, fit so well the geological and biological facts as does the application of the term ria. If nomenclature comparable with that used for the entrance to the Amazon were applied here, the mouth of the Hamilton river should be drawn seaward of the Narrows entrance 30 odd miles from the points limiting Potties Bay and Tub harbour. This would give the Hamilton river mouth a width of only about 20 miles, whereas the mouth of the Amazon as generally defined has a width of 207 miles (“ Ency. Britannica ”). Neither tides nor salt water are considered in drawing the line between the coast line of Brazil and the mouth of the Amazon river, as the following quotation from the “ Encyclopedia Americana ” will show : “ The river is perceptibly affected by the tides as far up as the town of Obidos, 400 miles from its mouth.” At the mouth of the river at Springtides the bore or pororca rushes up the river in the form of huge waves 10 feet to 15 feet high, “ three or four of which follow each other with irresistible force.”

MEMORANDA BY SPECIALISTS REPRESENTING THE NEWFOUNDLAND GOVERNMENT.

Additional memoranda prepared by specialists in the interest of the Newfoundland boundary claims which has been submitted to me for consideration will be separately discussed in the following pages.

OBSERVATIONS BY VICE-ADMIRAL SIR FREDERICK C. LEARMONTH, K.B.E., C.B., ON THE HYDROGRAPHIC SURVEY AND REPORTS BY THE CANADIAN GOVERNMENT OF LAKE MELVILLE, HAMILTON INLET, AND THE NARROWS, 1921-23.

Paragraph II of Vice-Admiral Sir F. C. Learmonth's memorandum concludes with the statement that he considers that the “ Title used for Canadian chart No. 420 is incorrect, and certainly confusing.” This chart bears the title Canada E. coast Lake Melville. While not prepared to admit in any sense the correctness of this assertion, it may be stated to fairly describe the nomenclature and geography of the Lake Melville and Hamilton inlet waterways as laid down on an old British Admiralty chart of even later date than the one which the Vice-Admiral wishes to have accepted as a standard for present hydrographic nomenclature. I refer to chart 2060B, originally published November 1870. In this chart Hamilton river is given a length of about 5 miles, while the lakes of the Upper Hamilton valley are connected up with an imaginary stream which empties into the Strait of Belle Isle. This chart make the name Hamilton inlet apply up to the the mouth of the 5-mile

Hamilton river as it might well do if no larger stream than that entered the waterway. Neither the geography nor the hydrographic nomenclature of chart 2060B, and older charts cited by Vice-Admiral Learmonth, fit present knowledge, and their nomenclature can hardly be seriously considered as having a chance of surviving the nomenclature of the Canadian 1922 chart and the Geol. Surv. Canada, Memoir 141, page 44.

Although supporting the old nomenclature of certain charts, viz., the the application of Hamilton inlet to Lake Melville, the Narrows, and the bay outside, the Vice-Admiral quite fails to refer to the original nomenclature of the old French chart of this coast on which the eastern end of the Narrows is indicated as the mouth of Hamilton river. If priority has any weight in deciding the proper nomenclature, then we must accept the original French usage of Hamilton river to include the waterways to the eastern end of the Narrows. The use of the name Lake Melville for a part of the lower portion of the Hamilton river is by no means a recent innovation. This term and Hamilton inlet are applied on the 1871 Adm. Chart No. 1422 precisely as used in Memoir 141. Certain later Adm. charts, however, like the 1881, 375 chart, apply Hamilton inlet in the broadly inclusive way up to the head of Goose Bay instead of following the original French plan of designating the Lake and Narrows as the lower end of Hamilton river. As a matter of fact, the Admiral finds it necessary in order to make his own statements understandable to adopt our nomenclature in parts of his memorandum, e.g., line 1, page 8.

The test is proposed (paragraph III) for deciding what constitutes an inlet of the sea by classing as such any waterway debouching into the sea which is “ permanently navigable by ocean-going vessels.” If this were generally applied in North America, Quebec and Washington would become coastal cities, whereas both are conceded to be located well about the mouths of the rivers on which they are situated. If this criterion is not acceptable on the St. Lawrence and Potomac rivers, it is not any more appropriate in connection with the waterways connected with the Hamilton river. The Lower St. Lawrence and the Saguenay rivers are both several times deeper than the Narrows.

Application to South America of the test of permanent navigability by sea-going vessels gives even more extraordinary results than it does in North America. The Amazon main river is navigable for ocean steamers as far as Iquitos, 2,300 miles from the sea, and 486 miles higher up for vessels drawing 14 feet of water. (“ Ency. Britannica.”)

Such a criterion manifestly cannot be seriously considered in the light of these examples. Neptune himself would beg to be excused if asked to rule over two thousand miles of the Amazon forests.

In its concluding paragraph this memorandum objects to accepting Ticoralak and Turner headlands as marking the proper mouth of the Hamilton river drainage system. But various other examples could be cited to show that from the standpoint of custom and usage that this is a very modest claim. This would give the mouth of the river system a width no more than three times that of the Hamilton immediately above Lake Melville. The width of the mouth of the Amazon river is usually measured from Cabo do Norte to Punto Patijoca, a distance of 207 statute miles.

GEOGRAPHICAL CONSIDERATIONS AS TO THE CANADA-NEWFOUNDLAND BOUNDARY IN LABRADOR.

BY J. W. GREGORY.

The Newfoundland Government is fortunate in having so eminent a geologist as Professor Gregory to discuss my report on the Lower Hamilton river basin. I only regret that Professor Gregory has not had an opportunity for a personal examination of the region dealt with in his twenty page memorandum. That might have led him to revise his own earlier published view of the nature of Hamilton inlet based on the observations of Dr. Robert Bell and others, but not on his own. Geological discussions and opinions based on any other than an intimate personal knowledge of the field in question are apt to yield unsatisfactory or erroneous results. A single example will illustrate the point. Several years ago a well-known geologist was sent by the United States Government to Alaska during the Nome gold stampede, to make a reconnaissance report. The report included a description of a volcano in south-eastern Alaska, observed only from the deck of a steamer, which had never been previously reported. This geologist had seen a conical mountain with sides having just the angle which volcanoes ordinarily assume and the new volcano was accepted until later investigation, at closer quarters than the deck of a steamer, showed it to be composed of limestone.

Dr. Robert Bell, whom Professor Gregory quotes as having classed Lake Melville as a fiord, examined a great deal of the Labrador coast, but many of his observations, like the Alaskan one just mentioned, were made unavoidably from the deck of a vessel. His observations of Hamilton inlet and Lake Melville appear to have been made from outside the Narrows. Dr. Bell's Labrador Peninsula map includes a strip of Palaeozoic rocks across the north-western arm of the Labrador Peninsula. (Scott. "Geogra Mag." Vol. XI, opposite page 361, 1895). This may possibly be correct, but it has never been placed on the official maps of the Geological Survey of Canada. Dr. Bell's knowledge of the Lake Melville physiography is based not on such long range observations as Professor Gregory's, but his classification of the Lake Melville basin as a fiord is not entitled to greater weight than has been accorded his belt of Palaeozoic rocks west of Ungava bay. I have referred elsewhere in discussing the Labrador Counter-case to another authority, A. P. Low, whom Professor Gregory quotes as having applied the term "fiord" to this basin, but it may be added here that while Low called Hamilton inlet a fiord he considered it to be the product of river erosion as the following quotation¹ plainly indicates :—"From the above facts some idea can be had of the great length of time required for the erosion of the main valley of the river, from the falls to the mouth of Hamilton inlet, which is really a submerged portion of this river valley."

Professor Gregory shows considerable zeal in citing from the old Admiralty charts and other sources (pages 8 and 9) the application of Hamilton inlet to the waterway called Lake Melville on Chart 420 and in Memoir Geological Survey of Canada, 141. But he fails to mention a still earlier chart which designates this lake and the Narrows as a river. The hydrographic nomenclature used by me in Memorandum 141 adopts, in a general way, the river conception of the early French charts, including one prepared by Sieur Jean Louis Fornel under the authority of the Governor General of New France. This chart bears the date of 1748 and has priority in date of publication over all the Admiralty charts cited by Professor Gregory. It was prepared after Fornel had landed men on the coast near Rigolet to spend a winter in exploration, and includes presumably the results of their observations in the interior. Some of the British hydrographers evidently had an entirely erroneous conception concerning the volume of river drainage entering what they at a much later date called Hamilton inlet which was doubtless a factor in causing them to disregard Fornel's designation of the Narrows and Lake Melville as a river and class these waterways as an inlet. The general chart (Admiral No. 2060B), which shows Hamilton river as a stream less than 10 miles long entering Goose Bay, is evidence of the misleading character of the information which was accessible to some of the British chart makers. The French had a far better knowledge of the interior geography of Labrador than their British successors which lead them in the 1748 chart to designate correctly the terminal end of the Hamilton river waterways as a river. On Fornel's chart (1748) the designation "R. de Kessessakiou," printed just seaward of the present Narrows, makes it plain that he included the Narrows as a part of the Hamilton river.

The French explorers who preceded Fornel on this coast also used for the Narrows the designation river. Le Gardeur de Courtemanche, in his chart dated 1704, called them the "R. Quesesasquion," and another chart, showing the explorations of Pierre Constantin in 1715, includes an outlet corresponding with the position of the Narrows which is designated "Grande Riviere des Quesesakion." The Arrowsmith map, "Chart of Labrador and Greenland," published in 1825 by A. Arrowsmith, "Hydrographer to His Majesty," shows nothing in contravention of the previous French application of the term "river" to the Narrows. On it, as on succeeding maps, the expansion above the Narrows is called Lake Melville, and Ivuktuk or Hamilton inlet is applied only to the expansion well to the eastward of the waterway now called the Narrows. In the Admiralty chart, 1422, printed in 1871, Hamilton inlet is applied in the same way, including nothing above the Narrows, the interior expansion being called Lake Melville.

In view of the evidence of the old charts cited above, it appears that Professor Gregory's statement, "The traditional use of the name Hamilton inlet for the part now known as Lake Melville seems historically correct,” should be revised to read seems—“ historically incorrect.” The early French charts have agreed in applying the name river to the Narrows, while early English charts have confined Hamilton inlet to the expansion east of the Narrows.

p. 3907

In Mein. 141 Hamilton inlet was used in conformity with the old charts for the outermost funnel-shaped part of these waterways which I have classed as a ria. Professor Gregory gives three reasons for objecting to the classification of the outermost funnel-shaped entrance to the Hamilton river basin as a ria. Although admitting that in its funnel shape the bay corresponds to his own and other definitions of a ria, he claims (a) that it extends into the land farther than a ria should according to the maximum of 31 miles allowed by Professor Penck's definition. But since the Hamilton inlet ria extends into the land only 45 miles, and no farther than the Firth of Forth, which Gregory cites as a British example of a ria, its size cannot be seriously held even by him to exclude it from the class of rias ; (b) even if the Hamilton inlet ria has not been associated with Hamilton river drainage previous to the Glacial period, it must have been the outlet of the Double Mer valley from the time of its birth, which should furnish it a sufficiently ancient lineage to meet Professor Gregory's requirements ; (c) Ria has been given by some geographers a wider meaning than the usage of Gregory and Penck admit. Professor Gregory's third objection to calling Hamilton inlet a ria because it leads up to a fiord—the Double Mer—has no weight, according to Gulliver's usage of the term, who indicates its limitations as follows : “ The term ria, from the Spanish, may be advantageously used to cover all types of subaerially carved triangles, including Von Richthofen's fjord, ria, Dolmian, and liman types” (“ Shoreline Topography,” Proc. Am. Academy Arts and Sciences, vol. 34, no. 8, p. 220, 1899).

Thus it will be seen that while the funnel-shaped bay outside the Narrows does not quite fit some, it does fit other definitions of ria in a satisfactory manner.

An important difference of opinion between Professor Gregory and myself exists regarding the nature of the body of water called Lake Melville, on chart 420, and in my report (Memoir 141, Geological Survey of Canada). Professor Gregory considers it a fiord. Lake Melville is the outermost and largest of a series of three closely connected lakes. Narrow, short channels, a fraction of a mile in length, join Grand lake and Little lake to Lake Melville near its north-western extremity, while its south-western end narrows through Goose Bay into the normal Hamilton river channel, which, just above Goose Bay, is approximately a mile wide, nearly as wide as the outlet of Lake Melville. A careful measurement of the drainage basin of this lake shows it to receive the drainage of 60,750 square miles.¹ Professor Gregory has compared the Hamilton river to the Thames, but the latter, including the Medway river, has a drainage basin of only 5,924 square miles —less than one-tenth that of the Hamilton river basin. The drainage basin, which reaches the sea through the Narrows, the outlet of the Hamilton river system, is thus seen to be equivalent to about three-quarters of the total area of Great Britain, which is estimated at 84,447 square miles (E. Réclus, “The Earth and its Inhabitants,” vol. 4, P. 1). The Hamilton river system, including the chain of lakes near its head and the terminal Lake Melville, has a length of about 630 miles, and, as stated above, a drainage basin of 60,750 square miles. Professor Gregory asks us to class the outermost lake, which is more than 20 miles wide, of this great drainage system as a fiord. A typical fiord on the west coast of America is called the Portland canal. The name is sufficient indication of the long parallel sides which characterise it and other ordinary fiords. In the words of Professor Gregory (“Nature and Origin of Fiords,” p. 487) : “Their valleys are long and straight, and many miles of them can be seen at a glance.” Again he says: “They are typically long, straight, narrow channels ” (page 5). But Gregory points out a still more important characteristic of fiords. He writes : “Thus, in Scandinavia, the chief rivers rise near the fiords, but flow south-eastward across Sweden into the Baltic ; in New Zealand the rivers which rise close to the western fiords flow south-eastward across nearly the whole width of the country to the eastern coast ; and in America, both in the far south in Patagonia and in the north-west in Alaska and north-western Canada, the rivers flow away from the fiords (italics are mine), and either after a sinuous course reach the sea to the north, or across America to the Atlantic. Hence, owing to the comparative shortness of the rivers that flow into the fiords, the alluvial plains beside them are small and scattered.” This statement of Gregory's is well supported by the measurement which I have made of the drainage area of the longest and most typical fiord in Norway. As depicted on a large scale Norwegian chart, its total drainage basin is 4,715 square miles. Comparison of these figures with the 60,750 square miles of the Lake Melville drainage basin and the parallel sides of the Sogne and other representative fiords with the irregular widely flaring ones of Lake Melville will indicate at once how very far Lake Melville departs from the physiographic form called fiord.

This review of the contrasts between Lake Melville and characteristic examples and definitions of fiords appears to indicate that the name lake is a far more suitable term for this body of water than fiord. Its great extension below sea level, which it shares with the adjacent Grand Lake, as well as with Lake Ontario, which reaches 492 feet below tide, cannot in any way be held to remove it from the category of lakes. The great drainage system, which it transmits, and to which it belongs, its shape and the considerable lowland plain bordering it, are features which put it outside the class of fiords. My usage of the name lake is also historically correct, since it conforms with the earliest charts which designated the Narrows as a river.

Before concluding these remarks on the lacustrine aspects of the Lake Melville basin attention may be called to the fact that none of the bodies of water with which Professor Gregory has compared Lake Melville resemble so much as does the long inland basin in eastern Sweden, 75 miles long, which joins the Baltic in the vicinity of Stockholm. Like Lake Melville this waterway is directly connected with the sea, and a certain amount of salt water enters the eastern end. This basin is known on the charts on Lake Maelar not as a fiord.

COMPARISON OF LAKE MELVILLE AND DOUBLE MER.

Professor Gregory urges that Lake Melville should be called a fiord because the adjacent Double Mer has been thus classed by me. His reasons (1 and 2) for classing thorn in the same category may be stated as similarity of origin. Lake Mjösen, in Norway, with an area of 140 square miles, and extending 1,080 feet below sea level, Professor Gregory would doubtless admit, has essentially the same origin as most of Norwegian fiords, yet no one calls it a fiord. Professor Gregory gives as the third reason why the Double Mer and Lake Melville should be classed alike that they “are bounded by sub-parallel mountain walls.” But this cannot be admitted as true. Double Mer expands to a maximum width of 5 miles or less, while Lake Melville reaches a width of 25 miles or a little less. In the western part of Lake Melville basin the mountains retreat, leaving a wide terraced plain on both sides comparable with the lake itself in width. But the most significant and striking contrast between the two is seen in the fact that the long narrow approximately parallel-sided Double Mer receives, like other fiords, only the drainage of a trifling area, while Lake Melville transmits to the sea the drainage of an area equal to three-quarters of Great Britain. In other words, one is a fiord and the other is, with the Narrows, the terminal end of the largest river entering the Atlantic north of the St. Lawrence.

Even if Professor Gregory's claim that “fiord valleys are independent of river action” were well founded, it would be useless to claim that the Lake Melville basin and the Narrows are not essentially a river valley in origin. Faulting was responsible for the old pre-glacial Hamilton river following the present valley, but the river was the essential active excavating tool which did most of its work when the continent stood many hundred feet higher than at present and when all of the Atlantic coast rivers emptied far to seaward of their present mouths. The approximate seaward extension of the Hamilton river in pre-glacial times is suggested in the supplementary sketch map attached to the accompanying copy of Spencer's chart¹ showing the submarine river valleys of the north Atlantic coast.

Professor Gregory points out (page 11) that Lake Melville has a much greater tidal range than the Baltic, where it is less than 1 inch in places, and states that higher salinity is reported by Mr. Jones for Lake Melville than the northern part of the Baltic shows. It has apparently not occurred to him that the strong tidal currents of Lake Melville which are wanting in the Baltic because it is not part of a river system, together with the river current, result in a mixing of river and sea water in the lake which give, when compared with the fresh water end of the Baltic, relatively high salinity figures. Elsewhere in this Memorandum I have pointed out that a river current does in one case known to me entirely prevent thermal stratification of the water and that the salinity figure cited by Gregory is explained by the river current, which he overlooks, and the tidal currents together. Elsewhere

p. 3910

I have pointed out, however, the futility of comparing water bodies so entirely unlike in size as Lake Melville and the Baltic Sea, the latter having more than twenty times the breadth of the former.

The fragmentary character or trifling amount of data available concerning Lake Melville salinities make satisfactory comparison impossible on any basis at present.

HAMILTON INLET.

“OBSERVATIONS ON THE FAUNA AND FLORA.”

BY C. TATE REGAN, M.A., F.R.S., Keeper of Zoology in the British Museum (Natural History).

Much of this memorandum is occupied with a criticism of my discussion of certain biological data contained in Memoir 141, Geological Survey of Canada.

I am willing to grant that it is sometimes difficult to draw hard and fast lines for the limits of a halophyte flora just as it is for a calciphile flora. But the fact that a particular species has been recorded both from seashore and the shores of inland lakes is not alone proof that such a plant may not be considered a halophyte. One or two of the most typical halophytes known to me have been found growing on the shores of Lake Winnipegosis near the middle of the continent and in the Slave river basin in highly alkaline and saline soils.

Professor Regan is so imbued with a belief in the high relative salinity of Lake Melville that he is disposed to believe that cod will yet be found in the lake. In view of the universal agreement of fishermen that they are entirely absent from this body of water such an opinion seems to be without foundation. The absence of the cod from waters which we are assured by Professor Regan have the proper salinity leads to the conclusion that either Professor Regan, or the cod, have made a mistake. I am not able to believe that the cod would overlook such a desirable habitat as Professor Regan suggests Lake Melville to be.

Ancylus lake, with its fresh water bivalves, the geological antecedent of the Baltic sea, probably represents a closer analogue to Lake Melville than the present Baltic sea with which Professor Regan compares it.

The great discrepancy in the size of Lake Melville and the Baltic sea should have deterred Professor Regan from his courageous attempt to predict the inaccuracies which the expects to be found in my Lake Melville report. The Lake is less than 100 miles long, with an average width of 15 miles or less, while the Baltic sea has a length of 960 miles and a maximum width of about 400 miles. The particular fallacy to which I wish to call attention resulting from the comparison of large and small bodies of water is associated with the thermal and other stratification of water bodies. In a large body of water subject to sea waves like the Baltic summer thermal stratification will be quite different from that which will develop in a lake the size of Lake Melville. Two examples of lakes near Ottawa will illustrate my meaning. A small lake (McKay) shows a July thermocline at 10 feet, the water above being near air temperature and below dropping abruptly to near freezing. Lake Deschenes, through which the Ottawa river flows, shows no thermocline in July, the temperature being nearly the same from top to bottom, a result of the current mixing the warm surface and cold bottom waters. In recent years naturalists have been learning to scrap their old ideas with reference to predicting from the biological conditions found in one body of water the conditions to be expected in another. B. W. Evermann, one of the keenest American ichthyologists has stated (see "Lake Maxinkuckee, a physical and biological survey") that the United States Bureau of Fisheries has wasted thousands of dollars by working on that theory in introducing fish into lakes where an intelligent examination of the local conditions would have shown the species introduced could not live. It is possible to take trout from a lake in which they thrive and drown them in a few minutes in the water of another fresh-water lake a mile away (see Birge and Juday, "Inland Lakes of Wisconsin," page 130). Yet the British Museum Zoologist undertakes, by comparing a brackish water Canadian lake with one of the great inland seas of Europe, to predict (page 8), that: "It is not unlikely that cod may be found" in the former. A comparison of the hydrography of the Baltic sea and Lake Melville, in which certain alleged errors of the Canadian hydrographers are revised, as Professor Regan thinks they should be, led him to the extraordinary conclusion that the greater salinity of Lake Melville "is very evident." This conclusion is reached by comparing in diagrammatic charts (pages 3-4) the salinity of Lake Melville as deduced from a limited number of water samples, none of which represent the river flood season, with the salinity of the Baltic based on several thousand samples and observations extending over a long term of years and including the four seasons of the year.

The exhaustive and elaborate character of the investigations of salinity and temperature conditions carried out by the Swedish and Danish Governments in the Baltic sea are sufficiently indicated by extracts from Peterson's account of them.¹ "The system adopted by the Swedish naturalists at the present time, in their exploration of the sea which surrounds the Scandinavian peninsula, is to despatch a number of ships simultaneously from different ports across that part of the sea which is to be explored, each ship being provided with a complete set of hydrographic instruments worked by assistants specially trained for their task in the laboratories of Stockholm's Hogskola, the Polytechnic Institute, etc. The route of each ship, and the position of every sounding station, are determined beforehand, according to previous experience.”

* * * *

more than 1,000 water samples, and took the same number of temperature observations, besides 200 samples for gas analysis.”

* * * *

“ The hydrographic condition of the Baltic was minutely investigated in July, 1877, by a Swedish expedition, conducted by Professor F. L. Ekman, who collected about 1,800 records of temperature and salinity from different depths at sounding stations in all parts of the Baltic.”

“ Four times a year, on the 1st February, May, August and November, thirteen hydrographic sections in different parts of the Kattegat and the Sounds are made by Danish gunboats.”

It should be noted that the Baltic figures of salinity represent the four quarters of the year, and any other figures compared with them, if reliable deductions are to result, must do the same. The Lake Melville figures used by Professor Regan, however, are based on samples taken in summer only, when the rivers are at their lowest stage. The important fact to note here is that the Lake Melville salinity figures entirely fail to cover the early spring period when the three-foot layer of ice melts and leaves a thick layer of quite fresh water which accumulates over much of the lake during the period when the ice prevents wave action and the consequent mixture with the brackish water below. These figures also fail to show the salinity of the lake during the flood period of late spring when the Hamilton, Kenimou and other large streams are emptying into Lake Melville the melted snow from their 60,750 square miles of drainage basin.¹ It is the comparison of the Baltic salinity figures representing the four quarters of the year with Lake Melville salinity figures representing only one quarter, and that the summer period of minimum stage of rivers, which leads Professor Regan to his erroneous conclusion that Lake Melville is more saline than the Baltic sea. He might as reasonably take the temperature figures recorded for the Ottawa valley during July and August, and, ignoring winter figures, deduce from these the character of the climate of eastern Canada. This unfortunate comparison has even led him to question some of my carefully established facts which are recorded in map form concerning the distribution of two typical marine animals (figure 6, page 52, Memoir 141, Geol.

Surv. Can.). Professor Regan in questioning the accuracy of this map on the basis of a salinity of Lake Melville claimed to be greater than that of the Baltic overlooked the fact that his information regarding the salinity of Lake Melville during the freshet season was equivalent to zero. Biological predictions based on that sort of data need no discussion. Without having been closer to the problem he is writing about than the opposite side of the Atlantic, Professor Regan states, speaking of Littorina, that “ further investigation may be expected to reveal its widespread occurrence west of the Narrows wherever there are shores suitable for it,” and finds the distribution recorded by me difficult to believe. My results are plainly shown as regards the intertidal zone by the map (page 52), which indicates abrupt termination of the Littorina marine tidal zone fauna at the entrance to the lake.] began the study of the estuarine distribution of marine animals more than ten years ago (see Amer. Jour. Sci., May, 1916, pp. 449-461), and gave the most careful attention to gathering the facts for the map in question because of my general interest in the control exercised by fresh and brackish water over the upstream range of marine shells. In the present case the facts were secured by cruising near the whole of the north and south shores of Lake Melville with the aid of a small launch and canoe. The rocky shores, which are essential for the abundant occurrence of Littorina and Balanus balanus, are nearly everywhere present, but these shells are absent. Only one conclusion is possible in the face of these carefully established facts of distribution concerning Professor Regan's claim for a salinity of Lake Melville comparable with the Baltic sea. It is entirely unwarranted. The marine intertidal fauna fails to extend west of the Narrows because of the fresh and brackish water which they everywhere encounter to the westward. Within the Narrows the violent currents mix so completely the fresh water with sea water that the salt water fauna suffers no great harm.

¹ The contrast between the summer-autumn as compared with the winter-spring salinity of the terminal portions of many N. American rivers is widely recognized in the eastern United States as the following quotation will suggest :

“ The oyster fishery in Mississippi is prosecuted in Mississippi Sound. The absence of oysters in the rivers may be due to the fact that, while the waters are brackish a distance of 5 to 10 miles up from the river mouths from June to November, they are practically fresh the remainder of the year.” (U.S. Commission of Fish and Fisheries ; Report of Commissioner, Pt. 29, 1905, p. 454.)

In his conclusion Professor Regan states that the “ most striking feature of my report is the absence of any positive evidence as to the character of the fauna and flora of the Hamilton inlet west of the Narrows.” I am glad he has called attention to this feature of the report. If he will examine the literature on the Pleistocene deposits of the Upper St. Lawrence and Lake Ontario valley he will find it displays the same “ striking feature ” for the region west of Brockville, which he has noted in my report, while below Brockville marine fossils from numerous localities are recorded. The reason for this is that during the Pleistocene submergence of the St. Lawrence valley brackish water conditions prevailed along the head of the present St. Lawrence and Lower Lake Ontario valley, which suited neither marine nor fresh water faunas, and no organic remains representing the shore deposits of this time have ever been found between Brockville and Lake Ontario. For the same reason there is little to record concerning the intertidal zone of Lake Melville. Fresh water shells may be carried down to it from the rivers at times, but I saw none.

MEMORANDUM BY JOHAN HJORT, Sc.D., F.R.S.

Professor in the University of Oslo, Norway.

In 1922, I was asked to express an opinion on the statement : “ the conditions existing in Lake Melville are so unfavourable for cod, that neither their spawning, nor their life-development, nor their adult life would be possible in the waters referred to.” This opinion was given in a statement (Document No. 1016, page 2403. Vol. V of Joint Appendix) which aimed at showing that the pelagic cod does not go up to Lake Melville, which therefore cannot be included in the coast, granted that the latter is interpreted as a field of activity for British fishermen. This was admitted in accordance with the Royal Proclamation of 7th October 1763 (Canada Case, p. 8). In an annex (Doc. No. 1018, Vol. V of Joint Appendix, page 2410) Professor Schetelig proved by means of the quaternary geological data that the geographical and hydrographical conditions in Lake Melville had not changed in character in this respect since 1763.

On examination of the communications and documents which I have now received I am unable to find that this statement is in any way weakened, but the question is dealt with also from other points of view. Thus the conception “ coast ” in general is discussed by Newfoundland (Counter-Case, Newfoundland, par. 17). For example, “ coast-line ” is defined as “ the line where the salt water touches the land ” (Case, Colony of Newfoundland). In my view no absolute conception can be deduced from the terminology, neither scientific nor popular, as to the specific application of the word “ coast ” or what belongs to the coast.. A “ fjord,” for example, can quite rightly be understood to be a submersion of the surface plane of the land itself, which in the present geological period has sunk beneath the niveau of the sea and which has a certain characteristic configuration of its bottom. From that point of view a fjord is not coast—does not belong to the coast—even if tidal movement can be observed along its entire length and if layers of brackish water occur in a fairly long or short stretch of the fjord. It may be of some interest in this connection to remember that in Norway, whence the word fjord originates, this word is in many instances used for lakes which have no other connection with the sea than a descending river, which in some cases lies much higher than the sea level, but which have the same characteristic configuration as deep excavations of the superficial rocky plane of the land as the fjords which directly communicate with the sea (e.g. Tyrifjord,

On the other hand the word " coast " is given a clear, well-defined meaning, if it is used in relation to a definite occupation, as for example the large cod fisheries of Labrador. And my expression of opinion in 1922 was to the effect that Lake Melville from that point of view did not belong to the coast. " Coast in its relation to Imperial Policy " is of course also a clear idea (as proposed by Sir Fr. C. Learmonth, Doc. No. 1035, page 2522, Appendix).

In the Newfoundland Counter-Case, par. 18, it is further stated that it was also presumed that other livelihoods than the coast fisheries were to be assigned to Newfoundland in Labrador. In this event the foundation is quite different from that upon which I was required to base my opinion. It is not for me to criticise this historical-juridical foundation, which lies quite outside my province. But provided that in 1763 the opinion ruled that Newfoundland should protect the coastal fishing interests and administer the land territory which is of importance for this purpose, I take it for granted that Lake Melville can in no way be considered as included therein, as it clearly appears from old literature and that recently sent that the natural conditions of Lake Melville have not since 1763 been suitable for the influx of shoals of sea cod, for which reason no sea cod fishing has taken place there.

In a memorandum called " The Hamilton Inlet," C. Tate Regan discusses the question from a point of view different to this. In his conclusion, page 2520, he says : " The general purport of the biological evidence put forward in support of the Canadian Case is to suggest that the marine fauna and flora do not extend beyond the Narrows owing to the reduced salinity of the water. I have disproved this contention by showing that the species specially selected to illustrate it are found elsewhere in water of salinity as low as, or lower than that of the Hamilton Inlet west of the Narrows." Mr. Regan refers principally to the Baltic, in which marine animals and among them also the cod species are known to live in brackish waters of a salinity even lower than what seems to be characteristic, partly in any case, west of the narrows in " Lake Melville." Mr. Regan's contention that a fish belonging to the cod species might be found in " Lake Melville " may therefore be correct, if we suppose the salinity is the only dominating factor for the distribution of this species, and if other circumstances, e.g. lack of oxygen, would not prevent its appearance as in many Norwegian inlets with a very similar configuration of the bottom, that is inlets with comparatively shallow barriers at the entrance and deep excavations inside these barriers.

Questions like these, however, cannot be decided with certainty without special investigations of the kind. Such investigations would be of interest in themselves, but they seem to me unnecessary for the question, which I am discussing here. Neither Mr. Regan nor any other author has, as far as I have been able to discover, produced any positive information as to the appearance of the species of cod inside the “ Lake Melville.” In his interesting “ Report on Labrador Fisheries, 1892-1924 ” (Appendix, p. 2564), Mr. Wilfrid T. Grenfell says as follows : “ I have visited Labrador and cruised in my own steamer amongst the peoples of the coast for 32 years ” ; and page 2566, “ It is safe to say that few codfish enter Melville Bay, a fact that is attested by the Eskimo cod fishery at Caravalla. This is at 'the Narrows' or only entrance to Lake Melville, and is about 20 miles inside Rigolet. They have always led me to understand that all they get are Rock cod, a fish that so far has no value for Newfoundland fishermen. They are accustomed to reject these when taken by mistake amongst the cod on the outside. That no cod fishery (has been carried on) by Newfoundlanders or Canadians, or anyone except for Rock cod by native Labrador men, further up the Hamilton Inlet than the Narrows, or ever has been is fairly certain. At any rate during the past 32 years I would assert with great confidence that none has been.”

This information, which must be taken as the most reliable at hand, seems to me quite conclusive as a corroboration of my statement in the Memorandum of 1922, that the pelagic cod does not go up into Lake Melville.

It is in this connection of interest to consider the comparison which Mr. Regan has drawn between the one region, the coast of Labrador and the Hamilton Inlet on the one hand and on the other hand the North Sea and the Baltic. The quite correct statement that the species of cod occurs in the Baltic is by no means any proof of the pelagic cod of the Norwegian coast or the North Sea migrating into the Baltic. There is in the Baltic a characteristic race or stock of cod of a small size, quite different from the stock of cod living in the larger open areas of the sea, and individuals belonging to this latter stock are never known to migrate into the area of brackish water. to which the small-sized race is confined. Mr. Regan's comparison would, therefore, be a strong argument against “ Lake Melville ” being a ground for the stock of pelagic cod, but as the appearance even of the species of cod in the “ Lake Melville ” has not been recorded, it seems of little value to draw this comparison at all.

For the purposes of the British fishermen annually resorting to that coast, in the ordinary conduct of their fishing operations. for the purposes of “ the open and free fishery ” (Canada's contention in the Case of Canada, para. 4) “ Lake Melville ” may, therefore, be rightly claimed as a water quite apart from what has been intended by and can rightly be included in the conception of the word “ coast ” as used by the Royal Proclamation of the 7th October, 1763.

THE BIOLOGY OF HAMILTON INLET, THE NARROWS AND LAKE MELVILLE.

BY DR. A. G. HUNTSMAN,
Director, Marine Biological Station and Fisheries Experimental Station, Atlantic Coast.

In the second paragraph of his article Mr. Regan takes exception to the use by Mr. Jones (Canadian Case, pp. 1927-1928) of a certain definition for percentage of the density of sea-water or percentage of sea salinity. It is a matter of common practice to express density or specific gravity (meaning density relative to water) by subtracting 1 and multiplying by 1,000. The density 1,024 becomes 24, as is the case throughout in Hydrographical Tables by Martin Knudsen, Copenhagen, 1901, which tables were prepared under the direction of an international committee. When Mr. Jones uses this practice as a basis for calculating his percentages, and at the same time gives the actual extended figures of relative density for the water samples, his meaning is, or should be, perfectly clear.

We may ask what Mr. Regan's definition of percentage of salinity is. On page 6 of his article he quotes in support of his contentions and emphasizes by putting it in italics, "sea-water between 8 and 35 per cent. salinity." The salinity, as ordinarily defined, of the open Atlantic is only in the neighbourhood of 3½ per cent. The authors, from whom he quotes, did not make this error, but used the sign ‰ (meaning "per mille"), which in his article becomes "per cent."

The coast placed "under the care and inspection of our Governor of Newfoundland" by the proclamation of the 7th October, 1763, was "to the end that the open and free Fishery of our Subjects may be extended to and carried on upon the coast of Labrador and the adjacent Islands." What is then the extent of the coast selected for a fishery purpose? There can be no question as to the nature of this fishery. Cod has been the lure that has brought European fishermen to the coast of North America for centuries, and to this day in Newfoundland and Labrador fish and cod are synonymous terms.

The cod is distinctly a deep-sea fish, and a characteristic fish neither of the estuaries nor of the fresh waters. Typically it is to be found on the offshore banks, but it not infrequently occurs during part of the year close to the shore. This is true particularly on the coast of Labrador owing to the northern limit of its range. It approaches that coast only during a short summer season, that shortens as one proceeds north, being only about a fortnight in duration at the entrance to Hudson strait, where lies the terminus of the cod's migration.

The main mass of the Labrador current is of very low temperature (below $-1^{\circ}\text{C}.$) and consequently unsuitable for the cod. The shallow coastal portion warms during summer sufficiently to be suitable, and in it the cod are to be found. The Labrador fishery is, therefore, distinctly a coastal fishery.

The largest river system of the Labrador coast discharges through Lake Melville into Hamilton inlet. The geological evidence shows that Labrador has a drowned coast, the result of subsidence. This subsidence has brought the mouth of Lake Melville to sea-level. Does that fact make Lake Melville a part of the coast, in particular a coast for cod fishing? Where does river end and sea begin? The river brings a steady stream of fresh water driven by gravity. The sea, through the pumping action of the tide, sends its salt water into the river mouth. Hamilton inlet connects with Lake Melville through the Narrows. The chief struggle between river and sea has been, and still is, taking place at that point. The evidence shows clearly that the river still prevails in Lake Melville (though with a definite sea-water influence shown), and that the sea prevails in Hamilton inlet (though with a pronounced fresh-water influence shown). What is the evidence?

The mean level of Lake Melville is higher than that of Hamilton inlet by more than five inches (Stewart, p. 1914). The tide entering from the ocean scarcely increases in amplitude when approaching the head of the inlet, and, in passing through the narrow passage from Ticoralak island to Caravalla cove into Lake Melville, decreases in amplitude by more than 75 per cent. (Jones, p. 1929). This gives on a much reduced scale an effect similar to that seen in the reversing falls at the mouth of the St. John river, New Brunswick, the outside water being on the average about a foot higher at high tide and about two feet lower at low tide than the inside water. The river influence through the Rigolet narrows is shown in several ways. The outflow is 80 per cent. stronger (Jones, p. 1926) than the inflow, and continues for about 15 per cent. longer time (Jones, p. 1926). The outflowing water from surface to bottom in 18 fathoms is about 15 per cent. (outside ocean water as standard) less salt (Jones, p. 1928) and about 4° warmer (Jones, p. 1919) in summer than the inflowing water.

As Lake Melville is in places more than 150 fathoms deep, the densest water reaching it through the Narrows is permitted to accumulate at the bottom and remain practically undisturbed for long periods. Yet in both 1921 and 1923 the deep water even at a depth of 172 fathoms was far from being as salt (under 2.8 per cent.) and was little colder (over $0^{\circ}\text{C}.$) than the water passing toward the lake at the bottom opposite Rigolet during July and August. Let us contrast with this the conditions, which we found in Mistanoque bay on the north shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence inside Belle Isle strait, in Temple bay, Labrador, at the outer end of that strait, and in Notre Dame bay on the east coast of Newfoundland in 1923. Each of these is shallow at the entrance (for the two former indeed less than ten fathoms) in comparison with the water inside. In each of these the bottom water was saltier and colder (salinity over 33 per cent. and temperature below $-1^{\circ}\text{C}.$) than any water at the entrance, and than any water for a considerable distance outside the entrance. These facts prove that the winter water of the Labrador and Newfoundland coasts is, as would be expected, both colder and saltier than that of summer and enters and remains at the bottom of the deep fjords throughout the summer. Lake Melville differs from these in that, as shown by its deep water, the dense, salt water is never able, even when winter conditions stop both rain and the melting of ice, to dominate the Rigolet Narrows and enter Lake Melville. The river outflow must, therefore, control the strategic situation in the Narrows throughout the year.

Animals and plants are distinctly limited by the physical conditions of their environment. On land the contrast between the coast and the interior of Labrador is largely one of temperature, the coast being dominated by the sea, which carries a burden of ice coming from the north. On the coast the snow persists in places at sea-level and with a south exposure at least as late as September and as far south as the strait of Belle Isle, as we found in 1923. Hamilton inlet shows this condition, its waters bearing fragments of icebergs and its shores with snow patches as late as August. Lake Melville, on the contrary, has the warmer temperature of the interior. The flora reflect this climatic contrast, the sub-arctic treeless vegetation of the coast steadily giving place to the north temperate forest vegetation of the interior as one passes towards the head of Hamilton inlet, the most abrupt change taking place finally at Rigolet Narrows. As this difference is the result of sea influence, it should not be surprising that the life of the water should show as great or even greater contrast. Temperature as well as salinity here distinguish ocean from river and lake. Hamilton inlet shows a decrease in salinity and an increase in temperature from its mouth to its head, as is the case with estuaries generally. Into the Rigolet Narrows water with the low salinity of that at the surface of the ocean off the coast (density at $60^{\circ}\text{F}.$, 1.0240) enters as a bottom layer and is thoroughly mixed with the brackish water from Lake Melville. This mixed water (density about 1.020) flows out in large volume and occupies the upper levels of the inlet. The same mixed water enters Lake Melville (probably only during the winter, when it is coldest and therefore heaviest) and occupies the depths below about twenty fathoms from the surface (data in Jones, p. 1945). From twenty fathoms depth up in Lake Melville there is at first a slow and later a rapid decrease in salinity till at the surface, particularly near the head of the lake, the water is nearly or altogether fresh. There are accordingly the following water : sea-water toward the bottom in Hamilton inlet, estuarial Water above in the inlet, produced in the Narrows, and below in Lake Melville ; and brackish to fresh water near the surface in the lake. The temperatures of these waters were : sea-water, 31° to 35° F. ; estuarial water, 35° to 45° F. ; and brackish to fresh water, 45° to 57° F.

The above described variable conditions set limits to the distribution of the marine and fresh-water life of the region. Dr. E. M. Kindle (pp. 1989 and 1990) has traced the distribution of two estuarial animals, the detection of whose presence or absence can be readily made as they live in the intertidal zones. These animals are the periwinkle, Littorina rudis, var. groenlandica, and the barnacle, Balanus balanoides. The former was found on the shores of Hamilton inlet and of the Narrows as far up as Henrietta island. It did not occur on the shores of Lake Melville. It was found along the channel on the north and west of Henrietta island, but not along the other channel (Pike Run) on the east side of that island. This is in harmony with the expectation that the rotation of the earth would deflect the inflowing (and therefore estuarial) water to the western channel, and the outflowing (and therefore brackish) water to the eastern channel. The barnacle occurred with the periwinkle, but did not extend as far through the Narrows on either shore. Dr. Kindle states that the other species of animals commonly associated with these did not extend west of the Narrows. These facts clearly show that these estuarial animals are limited by the extent of the estuarial water and have failed to invade Lake Melville, with its brackish water.

The estuarial Greenland or rock cod (Gadus ogac) shows a similar distribution. According to Grenfell (pp. 2109 and 2112) this fish is taken by ; the natives as far up as Caravalla cove, that is the limit in distribution of the periwinkle. The rock cod is definitely limited by lowered salinity. The capelin is a sea-fish that comes to the coast and into the estuaries to spawn. Dr. Kindle (p. 1991) states that they were common (1921) at Rigolet in the Narrows, but were not seen west of Henrietta island, that is they were restricted to the estuarial water.

The true cod (Gadus callarias) is an ocean or bank fish, but at certain seasons it comes to the coast. Certain varieties range far and wide, accomplishing extensive migrations, but even of these, and, when abundant, very few, and these the immature, penetrate even to the heads of estuaries. This is also true of a huge inlet like the Bay of Fundy. Passamaquoddy bay, which opens into the Bay of Fundy, is about twelve miles long and five broad, and it contains water with a salinity of over 30 per cent. Nevertheless, its cod fishery is confined to the passages at its mouth. In correspondence with this, Dr. Kindle, from his investigations of Hamilton Inlet in 1921, states (p. 1982) : “ The cod is unknown in the Narrows and the waters west of them. Cod-fishing is confined to the waters adjacent to the islands in the eastern part of Hamilton inlet.” Mr. Jones, from investigations made in 1923. states (p. 1930) that “ it was learned that occasionally, and late in the fall only, they were caught in the vicinity of Double Mer Point.” Also he states (p. 1931) : “ A fisherman who had spent the last eleven seasons on the Labrador coast, said the farthest up the Inlet that ha had known cod-traps to be set was at Black Island on the north side and at Turners Bight on the opposite shore. These places are twenty-five and thirteen miles respectively below Rigolet.” Professor Coleman, as reported by Professor Prince (p. 199i), on his visit to Hamilton inlet, saw no cod being taken there, though the waters outside were swarming with fishing craft. Dr. Grenfell states (p. 2113) : “ I have seen schooners from the south fishing in this inlet as far as Turners Bight, Ticoralak and Double Mare,” and “ I have never seen or heard of any genuine summer cod, or any other fishing carried on in Hamilton inlet . . . above the Narrows.” All these accounts agree as to the cod occurring in abundance only in the outer part of Hamilton inlet and as to its inner limit being the outer part of the Narrows, that is only so far as the sea water extends along the bottom where the cod live. The cod accordingly is shown to be limited to the extent of this sea water, which is unable to penetrate through the Narrows into Lake Melville.

The investigations extended from Indian Harbour (well out in Hamilton inlet) inwards through the Narrows well into Lake Melville. They give the most definite evidence that marine fishes and invertebrates are co-extensive with the sea water and the superficial estuarial water, which do not penetrate beyond the Narrows.

MR. C. TATE REGAN'S " HAMILTON INLET—OBSERVATIONS ON THE FAUNA AND FLORA."

Mr. Regan claims to have disproved a contention “ that the marine fauna and flora do not extend beyond the Narrows owing to the reduced salinity of the water . . . by showing that the species specially selected to illustrate it are found elsewhere in water of salinity as low as, or lower than, that of the Hamilton inlet west of the Narrows.” He makes the mistake of considering that, since under certain conditions lowered salinity fails to exclude certain marine species, it must necessarily always fail to do so, although the conditions other than those of salinity may be very different and the species themselves may be of different varieties or races in the two cases. His argument is the more surprising as it is made in the face of actual observations of the distribution of certain intertidal animals, the determination of whose presence or absence does not present any particular difficulty. His assumption that Dr. Kindle “ did not think it worth while to find out whether they (certain species found in the Narrows) reappeared in the more shallow areas further west, in which the salinity is considerably higher than in the Baltic, where some of these species occur ” is not justified in view of Dr. Kindle's statement on page 1960 (which Mr. Regan should have noticed) “ during the field work the writer traversed the north and south shores of Lake Melville.”

The following is an example of reasoning that is false through failure to take account of variable material and variable conditions. A person with a knowledge of fresh water only might argue that water cannot remain liquid below 32° F., but a seaman knows that salt water will not freeze until its temperature is considerably below 32°, and the scientist knows that the freezing-point of fresh water itself is considerably lowered by increasing the pressure to which it is subjected. To what extent facts may refute reasoning by analogy in the case of the relation of animals to their environment will perhaps be clear from the following examples. On the south side of the Strait of Belle Isle the cod leave when the temperature of the bottom water, where they are living, rises to and above 10° C., as we observed in 1923, yet off Cape Cod the cod has been taken in quantity by the United States Bureau of Fisheries in water with a temperature as high as 14° C., as we have been informed by Dr. H. B. Bigelow. In 1915 Captain Thor Iversen caught in the Gulf of St. Lawrence cod that were living and spawning in water with a temperature below 0°C. (see Report of Canadian Fisheries Expedition, 1914-1915, p. xxvii, Hjort ; and p. 44, Dannevig), yet Adolph Nielsen in his work for the Newfoundland Government (Annual Report of the Newfoundland Fisheries Commission for the year 1893, Appendix No. 1, Report for the Year 1893, by A. Nielsen, Superintendent of Fisheries) found that the cod that he was attempting to hold for spawning purposes were killed when the temperature fell below 0° C. The apparent discrepancies in these facts are doubtless to be attributed not to any errors in observation, but to our use of the word “ cod ” not for one thing, but for a group. The cod species, Gadus callarias, as scientifically defined, certainly includes a very considerable number of varieties or races, differing in geographical distribution, in habits, in temperature relations, and in salinity relations. Such races have been studied in considerable detail in the case of the herring, but we have as yet very little knowledge of those of the cod.

Mobius and Heincke on page 233 of their account of the fishes of the Baltic (“ Die Fische der Ostsee,” IVte Bericht Comm. Wiss. Untersuchung der deutsehen Meere, s. 193-296, 1883) do indeed separate the cod of the Baltic as a distinct variety, “ Küstendorsch,” from the cod of the North Sea, “ Hochseedorsch,” and they refer to the fact that von Linnée considered the cod of the Baltic as a distinct species from the cod of the North Sea. Although this Baltic cod occurs and supports a fishery as far up as the Finnish Gulf, and although its eggs have often been found in the deeper, saltiest water of the Baltic, it cannot be considered as established that it breeds successfully in the Baltic, as would be inferred from Mr. Regan's statements on pages 5 and 6. Jacobsen and Johansen on page 21 of their article “ Remarks on the changes in specific gravity of pelagic fish eggs,” from which Mr. Regan quotes for support of his statements, state “ the majority of the pelagic fish eggs in the Belt Sea and the Southern Kattegat are present in the lower layers, and the same seems to hold good for the pelagic young of such species as cod and plaice.” The waters referred to are at the entrance of the Baltic. Also for the Baltic itself, Otterstrom (" Eggs and young of fishes in the Danish waters," Rep. Dan. Biol. Sta., XIII, 1906) shows how the pelagic eggs are chiefly in the deep, salter water, and he states, " In the inner parts of the true Baltic the upper water layers cannot float the pelagic fish eggs, or if so only quite exceptionally. On the other hand, numerous pelagic fish eggs are found in the salt bottom-layers." This deep salt water, in which the eggs and fry of the cod chiefly or altogether occur, moves into the Baltic from without at a rate estimated by Jacobsen and Johansen as between 0.04 and 0.12 miles per hour. Any cod fry occurring in the Baltic or in the waters at its mouth may well have been carried in with this inflowing water. Otterstrom on page 16 of the article mentioned above states, " We have not up to the present found pelagic cod young in the true Baltic Cod and plaice thus do not develop in the true Baltic, which is probably connected with the extremely low temperature ruling in the deeper, egg-carrying water layers." There are, therefore, good reasons for believing- that even in the case of the Baltic race of cod, brought forward by Mr. Regan, to show that cod would be expected to occur and to breed in Lake Melville, estuarial conditions with very low salinity of the surface water, and low salinity of the bottom water prevent development. There is no evidence whatever to show that the deep-sea cod which migrate to the Labrador coast for a short summer season, either live, breed or develop in the brackish and estuarial waters of Lake Melville.

Not only may species and varieties differ in the salinities that they frequent or can endure, but the individual fish may exhibit such differences from one stage to another of its life history. The eggs and fry of the salmon, as experiments by Dr. A. H. Leim and Mr. F. R. Hayes have shown, cannot endure salinities approaching those of the sea water frequented by the adults. That, since certain cod live, spawn, and develop in low salinities in the Baltic, therefore, cod in " Hamilton inlet beyond the Narrows . . . are not deterred by the decreased salinity of the water " (Regan, p. 8) is not a justifiable conclusion for the Labrador cod in view of the existence of racial differences, and is not necessarily valid even for the Baltic cod under the special conditions, which Lake Melville presents. In a region where life for European man depends almost wholly upon the cod fishery, the presence or absence of the cod in sheltered waters with easy conditions for fishing is certain to have been determined by frequent trials. As quoted in our " Biology of Hamilton inlet, the Narrows, and Lake Melville," the reports are unanimous that the true cod, Gadus callarias, does not extend even into the Narrows, and that it furnishes a fishery only in the outer part of Hamilton inlet. Such facts afford no ground for Mr. Regan's supposition on the basis of conditions in the Baltic that the true cod will be found in Lake Melville.

In the concluding paragraph of his article Mr. Regan assumes from analogy with other waters “ that a marine fauna and flora extends nearly to the mouth of the Hamilton river.” The Canadian investigations have demonstrated an admixture of sea water well to the head of Lake Melville. Under such a condition it would be expected that the waters of the lake would contain forms of life unable to live in strictly fresh water. Should all of these forms be called marine ? The various forms of plant and animal life show the most varied relations to salts dissolved in water. In no case are they able to dispense altogether with the salts. A very large proportion of the earth's aquatic plant and animal life lives neither in the saltiest water of the sea, nor in strictly fresh water (which contains but a minute percentage of salts), and presumably such forms are unable to endure either extreme. Some of these at least should be placed in an intermediate group or groups between the fresh-water and the marine forms, and there should be not only a brackish-water group, but also an estuarial group. Mr. Regan restricts the fresh water group and broadens the marine group with the result that he excludes from the former (p. 9) and includes in the latter (p. 5) fishes such as the salmon, Salmo salar, and the brook trout, Salvelinus fontinalis, that “ enter fresh water to breed.” This classification is inept seeing that these species can, and in fact do, either occasionally or usually, pass their whole life history in fresh water, and on the other hand cannot do so in the sea, being unable until well along in life to endure the salinity of the sea.

No hard and fast lines of division can be set. It would be expected that in Lake Melville the superficial or brackish water and the deep or estuarial water will have each to a certain extent its own characteristic forms of life, but also that each will have forms in common with one or more of the other kinds of water (including fresh water and sea water), or have either as strays or as more or less permanent residents forms properly belonging to one or more of the other kinds of water.

Adult whitefish, Coregonus alba, and adult brook trout, Salvelinus fontinalis, are to be considered as fresh-water forms. Occasionally the adults are found in water with a salinity of 32 per mille or over, but that does not make the water fresh, but merely shows that at that stage they are able to endure such a condition. Similarly should certain forms that ordinarily go through their entire life-history in the sea be found nearly to the head of Lake Melville, it would prove no more than that they were able for a time at least to endure the brackish or estuarial conditions existing there. It would not invalidate the conclusion based upon the hydrographic conditions that have been described and upon the distribution of certain piscian, molluscan, and crustacean species, that the sea conditions and the sea fauna and flora, properly speaking, stop short of Lake Melville.

DESCRIPTIONS OF HAMILTON INLET.
BY NAVAL OFFICERS, TRAVELLERS AND GEOGRAPHERS.

[1860.]

BULLDOG*, BY G. C. WALLICH.”

* * * *

Aug. 28.—At 8 A.M. we arrived at Rigolette, a very picturesque little [1860.] station belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company, occupied at present by a couple of their employés. It is situated in an extensive reach, bounded by granitic hills, clothed with spruce-fir and white birch. The salmon-fishery is carried on here on a large scale, but, as already mentioned, is just over for the season. It appears that two large decked boats which passed us yesterday afternoon were conveying the salmon, and also the furs collected, to Indian Harbour, where they are shipped for their destination by the Company's Agent.

On emerging from “The Narrows,” we entered a large expanse of water stretching away to the westward as far as the eye could reach, and apparently about twelve or fifteen miles in breadth. When we anchored for the night, there was still no land visible above the waterline to the westward.†

The higher we advance up this magnificent arm of the sea, the greater is the distance reported to be between its eastern and western boundaries. At Indian Harbour we were informed that the extreme length was between ninety and a hundred miles. Today, at Rigolette, it is stated to be nearly 120. I mention the circumstance because, although it is by no means to be wondered at, that persons moving about from settlement to settlement should only possess a general knowledge of the geography of the country, as this correctly laid down in the most modern maps, and it seems almost incredible that, within a few hundred miles of our North American colonies and naval stations, an arm of the sea of sufficient extent to shelter the largest fleet in the world, possessing very extensive salmon-, cod-, and capelin-fisheries, the shores of whose tributaries are said to abound in timber of large size which might be floated down in rafts and shipped in deep water, and whose mineral resources are probably neglected solely because they have been undeveloped, should have remained up to the present day so partially explored.

Aug. 29.—Arrived at North-west River, the head of Hamilton's Inlet, and the principal settlement of the Hudson's Bay Company in this part of Labrador. Towards the upper extremity of the inlet, the shores converge somewhat, and become gradually flatter and more closely wooded. At this point the channel receives the waters of "North-west" and "Hamilton's" Rivers. The former, or more northerly branch as its name implies, debouches into the inlet by a narrow channel only about eighty yards in width—the settlement being on the northern shore, and situated on a small tract of flat land from which the forest has been cleared. The opposite shore is low, and densely wooded to the water's edge, but none of the trees are above 30 or 35 feet in height.

* * * *

Salmon and salmon-trout are taken in great quantity throughout the entire length of Hamilton's Inlet and the rivers that flow into it. Mr. Smith states that the pike also occurs, and a species of shark about 4 feet in length, quite distinct from the dog-fish. I was unable to procure specimens, however. Capelins and cod-fish are only taken near the mouth of the inlet and along the coast.

* * * *

Aug. 30.—Leaving North-west River at an early hour this morning, the 'Bulldog' commenced her return voyage down the inlet, and at noon anchored off the bluff headland known as "Long Point," in order to survey.

* * * *

The length of Hamilton's Inlet, from Indian Harbour to North-west River, is 118 miles. At its mouth the width is nearly fifteen miles. the deepest water at this part being about the central portion of the five miles intervening between George Island and the northern shore.

EXTRACTS FROM "EXPLORATIONS IN THE INTERIOR OF THE LABRADOR PENINSULA." BY HENRY YOULE HIND, M.A., F.R.G.S.

The shores of Hamilton Inlet have already been described, with their wall-like boundary formed by the Mealy Mountains on the south side of the inlet. The most important river draining the vast table-land of the Peninsula falls into the bay. The Ashwanipi or Hamilton River, rising in the rear of Seven Islands, near the head waters of the east branch of the Moisie, is the great river of Labrador. It is nearly a mile and a half broad at its mouth, which is situated at the head of the inlet, and twenty-five miles up the river its breadth varies from a quarter of a mile to one-eighth of a mile, from which dimensions it does not change to any great extent as far as it has been examined. About one hundred miles from its mouth the great falls and rapids occur, which extend over twenty miles and involve fifteen portages. The Hudson's Bay Company's barges were taken as far as the foot of these rapids ; the remaining part of the river, up to the now abandoned Fort Nasquapee, is traversed in canoes. The river above the grand falls is tranquil and easily navigable. In 1839, Mr. McLean descended the Ashwanipi from Fort Nasquapee to its mouth. He reached the fort from Ungava Bay, after enduring many hardships and privations.

As we proceed in a north-westerly direction along a very rugged line of coast, with deep bays and indents, the Great Inlet, called Esquimaux Bay, Invertoke Bay or Hamilton Inlet opens to view. It is situated 250 miles beyond the Straits of Belle Isle, the entrance being in lat. 54° 23' N., long. 57° 25' W.

It is by far the largest of the many inlets which indent that part of the coast. At its entrance it is upwards of thirty miles in breadth, thence decreasing, until at the Port of Rigolette, about fifty miles from the sea, it is reduced to about a mile in width, after which it again expands, and about ninety miles from the sea forms a magnificent salt-water lake upwards of twenty miles in breadth, and fully thirty in length.

At the western extremity of the lake, it again contracts to a narrow width for a short distance, above which it forms another lake about seven miles wide and twenty long, when the head of the inlet is reached. Its total length may be taken at 150 miles, and its mean breadth about fifteen miles, exclusive of two large arms that join it in the neighbourhood of Rigolette, the one running to the south-east about forty miles, and the other having a course nearly parallel to the main bay, and a length of sixty miles. Including these arms, the surface covered by its waters may be taken at about 1,700 miles.

Hamilton Inlet.

Goose Bay.

Hamilton Inlet, Invuktoke, or Esquirnaux Bay is the largest and most important of the many long, narrow fiords or inlets that indent the Atlantic coast of Labrador and Newfoundland. Its greatest length, from Indian Harbour to the mouth of the Hamilton River at its head, is slightly over one hundred and fifty miles, while its average breadth is about fourteen miles.

* * * *

Rise of Tide.

From the mouth of the North-West River, the shore trends southward nine miles to the end of Sandy Point, a low, broad expanse of sand stretching Sandy Point. this distance out from the north side, evidently the remains of drift brought down by the Hamilton River. Opposite Sandy Point the Bay is only three miles and a half wide, and shoal water, caused by an extension of the point, continues to the south side, with only eighteen feet of water at the deepest part, where the channel is less than a half mile wide.

Beyond the point, the shore again trends northward, forming Goose Bay, Goose Bay. which averages nine miles in width and is nearly twenty miles long, to the head of Terrington Basin, where Goose Bay River flows in. This is a shallow stream, draining a considerable area of country between the Grand and Northwest rivers. Goose Bay is in most places quite shallow, being filled up with sand brought down by the Grand or Hamilton River, which flows in on the south side, nine miles above Sandy Point. A low sandy point, about five miles wide, separates the river from the upper part of Goose Bay.

At Indian Harbour the tide rises seven feet at springs ; at the lower end of the narrows the rise is four feet, while above the narrows the rise is only about two feet and continues the same to the head of the inlet, where the rise and fall of the tide is much modified by the direction and strength of the wind. Below the narrows, there is a strong current formed by the ebb and flow of the tide ; while through the narrows the rising and falling water rushes with a velocity varying from four to seven miles an hour, and in a number of places heavy rapids occur, which, with whirlpools and eddies, render the passage of small boats dangerous when the current is at its strongest. Above the narrows, there is no perceptible current, except that caused by winds.

Sandwich Bay is one of the more important inlets. It is 25 miles long and 6 miles wide. It contains several good harbours, and here, at a place which still bears his name, the adventurous Major Cartwright established his trading post at the end of the last century. The most important, however, is Hamilton Inlet. This extends 35 miles inland where it narrows to one-third of a mile, and then expands into Lake Melville, 18 miles wide, and reaching 90 miles farther inland to where the Grand or Hamilton river discharges its waters. The whole distance from the headland at the mouth of the inlet to the Hamilton river is 150 miles, and the average width is 14 miles. At the narrows is Rigolet, the chief post of the Hudson's Bay Company in the district. The country round is bold and rocky especially on the south shore where the Mealy mountains rise abruptly 800 to 1200 feet from the waters of the inlet.

THE DOMINION OF CANADA — — — OF THE ONE PART

AND

THE COLONY OF NEWFOUNDLAND - OF THE OTHER PART

I, George Washington Littlehales, C.E., of Washington, D.C., Hydrographic Engineer of the U.S. Hydrographic Office, make oath and say as follows :—

1. That the Hydrographic Office is an established institution of the United States of America and the Hydrographic Engineer is the Senior Scientist of that institution.

2. That I have been engaged in marine hydrography ever since graduation from the U.S. Naval Academy and for the last twenty-five years have been Hydrographic Engineer of the U.S. Hydrographic Office.

3. That the attached document, marked A, was prepared by me as a commentary on the Canadian Reports respecting the hydrography and kindred question respecting Hamilton Inlet and the tract embraced within the limits of Canadian Government chart No. 420, and that the statements therein are true according to the best of my knowledge, information and belief.

TO CANADIAN GOVERNMENT CHART NO. 420, ENTITLED “CANADA-EAST COAST—LAKE MELVILLE,” AND THE REPORTS OF THE HYDROGRAPHIC AND PHYSICAL OBSERVATIONS UPON WHICH THE CHART IS BASED.

I have examined the documents sent to me by the Government of Newfoundland, comprising Canadian Government Chart No. 420, entitled Lake Melville, and the reports of the hydrographic and physical observations upon which the chart is based ; and have considered them in connection with British Admiralty chart No. 375, entitled Coast of Labrador—Sandwich Bay to Nain including Hamilton Inlet, and also with the Newfoundland and Labrador Pilot, Volume II, fifth edition, published in 1917 by order of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, together with its official supplements up to the 7th issue in February, 1926.

The charts and the Pilot remarks are explicit in showing Lake Melville to be a part of an inlet of the sea, accessible to heavy-draft shipping, and the physical observations from the field of survey show that it is tided throughout by dependence on the tides of the Atlantic Ocean and permanently occupied by oceanic water, which was over-spread during the season of the Canadian survey by water derived by precipitation from the atmosphere over the water-shed of which it is the catchment basin—a condition often observable in the ocean itself in localities of heavy rainfall and at the mouths of large rivers. Although the considerations of the dynamic hydrography of Rigolet Narrows would have been better subserved by stating the density of the water in situ instead of reducing the specific gravities to a standard temperature, this proceeding has not overbalanced the preponderance of the evidence of the physical observations which divests Hamilton Inlet of the characteristics of a river flowing into the ocean below the Narrows and instead confirms the traditional view that this Inlet is a marine tract all the way to the head of the tide water at the mouth of the Hamilton River.

The Narrows constitute a strait connecting two tided bodies of water each of which is alternately higher and lower than the other ; and the residual flow is that which characterizes the tidal interaction between the Atlantic Ocean and its dependent sea, the Arctic Ocean, which is less dense in its upper layers than is the Atlantic water, that is to say, the interaction is such as results when the lighter body of water has higher mean surface-level.

The tide in Hamilton Sound is of the progressive-wave type, and the tide in the Hamilton Inlet or Lake Melville is also of the progressive-wave type, while in the Narrows separating these two bodies of water there is a hydraulic movement brought about by the fact that part of the time the level of the water in the sound is higher than in the inlet and part of the time it is lower. The Narrows thus acts as a channel through which the water flows from the body having, temporarily, the higher level to the one having the lower level. If the details of the readings of the gauges had been published in the Reports, the lines joining simultaneous heights of the tide at the two ends of the Narrows could have been plotted to show by their slope the difference of level.

While it is true that, “ in river mouths, sea water finds its way along the bottom especially during the rise of the tide,” this is to preserve a hydrostatic balance which results in the retreat of the sea water when the tide falls. But, in the arm of the sea called Lake Melville, the sea water occupies the basin permanently.

The Reports also point out as a feature of tidal rivers that “ the outward flow or 'ebb stream ' during the fall of the tide is stronger and continues for a longer time than the inward flow or ' flood stream,' which is weaker and of shorter duration because of the opposed current of the river ” ; but this also occurs when two tided bodies of water—one more saline and the other less saline—are connected by a strait, and the lighter body has the higher mean surface-level.

I have also read the “ Observations of Vice Admiral Sir Frederick C. Learmonth on the Hydrographie Survey and Reports of the Canadian Government of Lake Melville, Hamilton Inlet, and the Narrows, 1921-23,” and, in expressing concurrence in the conclusions reached therein, I would mention, in addition to the instances cited of the application of the term “ Coast ” to territories of large inland extent, the Central American territory known in political history as the Mosquito Coast.

THE BOTANICAL EVIDENCE OF MARINE CONDITIONS IN HAMILTON INLET, LABRADOR.

M. L. FERNALD, Sc.B.,

Fisher Professor of Natural History (Botany) in Harvard University.

I have been actively and practically continuously engaged since 1891 in research in and teaching of botany (systematic and geographic) in Harvard University, and for twenty-three years I have devoted the summers to intensive field studies of the flora from New York State to Newfoundland and Labrador.

1.—INACCURATE BOTANICAL STATEMENTS IN THE FIRST KINDLE REPORT ON HAMILTON INLET.

It is necessary, before proceeding with a detailed consideration of the botanical evidence presented by Dr. Kindle, to examine carefully his status as a botanist and, consequently, his ability to use botanical data without error.

Dr. Kindle has published two articles upon the flora of Hamilton Inlet. The first of these, "Notes on the Forests of Southeastern Labrador,"¹ appeared in 1922; the second, as a portion of his report on the "Geography and Geology of Lake Melville District, Labrador Peninsula,"² in 1924. In the first article the quality of its author's botanical knowledge became perfectly apparent. On page 62, in describing the Lake Melville district, he said:

"The white birch (Betula pendula) is a very common tree"; and, at the bottom of the page, he continued:

"The principal trees in the approximate order of their abundance in the Lake Melville district are: black spruce (Picea mariana, B. S. P.); white, or canoe, birch (Betula pendula, Roth, var. ?); tamarack (Larix laricina, Koch); fir (Abies balsamea, Mill); white spruce (Picea canadensis, B. S. P.); balsam poplar (Populus balsamifera, L.); yellow, or grey, birch (Betula lutea, Michx. f.); black, or white, birch (Betula lenta, L.); trembling poplar, or aspen (Populus tremuloides, Michx.) ; ground juniper (Juniperus communis, L., var. depressa, Pursh)."

Now, to any careful botanist, who knows the trees of Canada and of Labrador, it is at once obvious that the author of the above statements does not know them. The tree of eastern America which has been mistaken for the Old World Betula pendula is quite unknown from Labrador. I write with assurance because it was I who first recognised the existence of a second species of canoe birch in eastern America and called attention¹ to it under the erroneous name, B. pendula. Subsequently, it was described as an endemic eastern American species and in a recent study² I have discussed it and its range, as Betula coerulea grandis, Blanchard. So far as known from actual specimens it occurs from Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island to the region of the city of Quebec, thence south into New England. Dr. Kindle's party contained a student, Mr. R. H. Wetmore, subsequently one of my students, who was instructed to collect specimens of all flowering plants seen ; but Mr. Wetmore's collection, which I personally examined, contained no material of Betula pendula or of B. caerulea grandis. The white or canoe birch of Lake Melville is the regular and abundant canoe birch (Betula papyrifera) which abounds in the forests of boreal America and which was recorded by the great student of the Labrador Peninsula, A. P. Low, as "common. . . about Hamilton Inlet . . . at the head of the inlet, trees up to ten inches in diameter are not uncommon."³ Dr. Kindle did not mention this ubiquitous tree in his first account of the forests of the region, though in his second report he made the correction.

Again, let us consider the other birches : " Yellow, or grey, birch (Betula lutea . . .) ; . . . black, or white, birch (Betula lutea . . . :)." Mr. Wetmore's collection contained no specimen of either of these comparatively southern species ; Low, who certainly knew Labrador, in listing the trees of the Peninsula (including the Hamilton drainage) did not mention either of them ; Robert Bell and A. T. Drummond,⁴ both competent botanists, in their detailed map of ranges of Canadian trees did not recognise B. lenta as extending north of the United States and they indicated the northern limit of B. lutea as hundreds of miles south of Lake Melville. The latter species was not found as far north as Anticosti by Schmitt,⁵ nor about Lake St. John by Marie-Victorin.⁶ On the accompanying map I have indicated the approximate northern boundaries of both B. lutea and B. lenta, the range of the former derived largely from Bell and Drummond, of the latter from Blanchard, who, pointing out the confusion of the two species among lumbermen, concluded : “ a line drawn from Portland, Maine, to Montreal will mark its eastern and northern limit.”¹

The last species enumerated by Dr. Kindle as one of “ the principal trees ” is “ ground juniper (Juniper communis, L., var. depressa, Pursh).” Even if an author does not know whereof he is writing, he might be put on guard by the names “ ground juniper ” and “ var. depressa.” The only form of Juniperus communis in Labrador is a depressed shrub, var. montana, Ait. (not var. depressa Pursh), forming prostrate mats or carpets and never rising more than a foot or two from the ground. In a list of “ principal trees ” it has no more place than does “ partridge-berry ” (Vaccinium Vitis-Idoea) or the “ ground hurt ” (Vaccinium uliginosum).

To the botanist, therefore, it is sufficiently clear that Dr. Kindle is undoubtedly a better geologist than botanist and that his botanical statements cannot be accepted as final until they are most rigidly verified.

2.—MISLEADING STATEMENTS OF HABITAT IN THE SECOND KINDLE REPORT.

The plants collected in Hamilton Inlet by Mr. R. H. Wetmore were identified by Mr. Wetmore under my direction, and I stand back of the identifications. Mr. Wetmore's original report² was published by him in

² R.H. WETMORE., “ Plants of the Hamilton Inlet and Lake Melville Region, Labrador,” Rhodora, xxv, 4-12 (Jan., 1923).

January, 1923, as an independent article entitled “Plants of the Hamilton Inlet and Lake Melville Region, Labrador.” He there enumerated twenty stations or areas from which collections were made and modestly stated that “this does not represent an exhaustive study of the flora of the area covered, for the Survey itself was pre-eminently hydrographical and geological in its intent, hence those elements in the work were stressed accordingly ; also the mode of travel of our party—by motor-boat and canoe—was conducive only to botanizing those points at which stops were made.” It was this report which I helped prepare and with which my responsibility ceases.

The details of the second report on the flora, included as pages 23-27 of Dr. Kindle's “Geography and Geology of Lake Melville District, Labrador Peninsula,”¹ in 1924, were not referred to me and I had nothing to do with the statements of the preferences of the plants for littoral, brackish or fresh conditions, nor with the deductions drawn by Dr. Kindle from the list. My thirty-five years of active botanical exploration of the region from western New York to Newfoundland and Labrador would have led me to quite different statements and conclusions. Furthermore, the statements of habitat for many of the species listed in Dr. Kindle's report are so opposed to the statements of such distinguished and authoritative Canadian botanists as the late Professor John Macoun² and Professor Marie Victorin,³ that the contradictions are at once apparent. John Macoun, during a long lifetime Chief Naturalist of the Geological Survey of Canada, had an intimate knowledge of plants of all Canada ; Marie-Victorin, Professor of Botany at the University of Montreal, since the death of Macoun, the outstanding systematist of eastern Canada, knows the flora of the lower St. Lawrence and the Gulf as no other Canadian has known it. Surely no one will question whether the active botanists, Macoun and Marie-Victorin, or the geologist, Kindle, state more accurately the habitats of plants.

When we turn to the deduction by Dr. Kindle, that Iris setosa var. canadensis, Polygonum viviparum and Ranunculus lapponicus are “salt-loving plants” which have shown “inability to extend their range west of the head of the Narrows,” we are at once forced to the conclusion that his wish was father to his thought. In his independent publication in Rhodora Mr. Wetmore, assistant on the Survey, who was detailed to collect the plants, explicitly stated that Iris setosa var. canadensis occurs on the “South side of Lake Melville, from Carter Basin to English River” and on “Shores at Sabascachew Bay” (Stations 16 and 20 of Mr. Wetmore's paper). The discrepancy between this original and independent statement and the later one in the Kindle report, that it does not extend west of the Narrows, is apparent.

³ MARIE-VICTORIN, “La Flore du Temiscouata” (1916).

The other two plants which, not found by his party west of the Narrows, seem to Dr. Kindle to “ afford very clear botanical evidence of the change that takes place in the salinity of the water west of the Narrows,” are Polygonum viviparum and Ranunculus lapponicus. To an experienced botanist their citation as plants indicating saline habitats is a further indication that Dr. Kindle was so convinced that the Narrows is a natural check to saline water, that any plant found by his party only from the Narrows eastward was to his mind an inhabitant of brackish or saline soil. Polygonum viviparum, however, is a widely dispersed plant of fresh soil, found across the northern parts of Eurasia and America and southward on cool shores or mountains. Its occurrence in Canada was thus summarized by John Macoun : “ Quite common on cold, boggy points along lakes in the northern part of Canada ” ; its range is thus given in Gray's “ Manual of Botany ” : “ Alpine summits of New England, shores of Lake Superior, Colorado and Utah to Alaska and Greenland.” That certainly does not make it an indicator of salinity. Here is the statement in Dr. C. E. Moss's “ Cambridge British Flora ” of its distribution in Great Britain : “ Damp, mountainous grassland and grassy ledges of mountainous cliffs,” a British range indicated on the accompanying map traced directly from Professor Moss's publication. This map, with the areas occupied by Polygonum viviparum dotted, clearly demonstrates the lack of foundation for Dr. Kindle's assertion that this species can grow only where there is strongly saline water. (See Map on next page.)

Similarly, the third plant specially selected by Dr. Kindle as strictly dependent on salt water, Ranunculus lapponicus, is an arctic species which occurs southward in America on cold or mossy places to Labrador, the Lake Superior region and the Canadian Rocky Mountain region. On the Hamilton drainage, instead of “ not extending west of the Narrows,” as Dr. Kindle states, it has been known for thirty years from Seal Lake at the head of the Nascaupée River (entering the western end of Lake Melville at Northwest River), where it was collected by A. P. Low in 1896.⁽¹⁾

The Kindle report lists forty-five species of flowering plants as occurring in brackish or littoral habitats, but there is absolutely no question that twenty-four of these species are in no case specially characteristic of sea-beaches. These twenty-four species are enumerated below ; and I have appended statements of their habitats as given by experienced Canadian and American botanists.

HIEROCHLOE ALPINA.—On the summits of high mountains and northward (Macoun) ; exposed hill crests (St. John)²; alpine regions, New England, New York and northward (Gray's Man.) ; south to the high mountains of New England and New York (Britton and Brown, 111, Fl.) ; granitic mountains (Fernald).³

PHLEUM ALPINUM.—Mountain summits and elevated mountain slopes (Macoun) ; exposed hill crests (St. John) ; alpine regions of New England and northward (Gray's Man.) ; south to the mountains of New Hampshire, Vermont, etc. (Britton and Brown) ; mountain-tops and river-banks (Fernald).

CALAMA GROSTIS CANADENSIS, var. LANGSDORFI.—Low grounds, across Canada (Macoun) ; grassy shores and borders of woods (St. John) ; moist meadows, Labrador, mountains of New England, Lake Superior, etc. (Gray's Man.) ; south to mountains of New England and New York, etc. (Britton and Brown) ; granitic mountains (Fernald).

CAREX CANESCENS.—Bogs and swamps from the Atlantic to the Pacific (Macoun) ; sloughs, meadows, thickets and borders of woods (St. John) ; wet places (Gray's Man.) ; swamps and bogs (Britton and Brown).

CAREX BRUNNESCENS.—Alpine or subalpine, across the continent (Macoun).

CAREX LENTICULARIS.—Beds of rivers, growing in crevices of rocks (Macoun) ; clump open spots (St. John) ; gravelly or sandy shores, Labrador to the Mackenzie, etc. (Gray's Man.) ; shores (Britton and Brown) ; granitic mountains and shores (Fernald).

CAREX RARIFLORA.—Peat bogs (Macoun).

CAREX VESICARIA.—Ditches and along streams (Macoun) as C. monile ; swales (St. John) ; meadows and low grounds, across the continent (Gray's Man.) ; marshes and wet meadows (Britton and Brown).

JUNCUS FILIFORMIS.—Along river margins, in gravel, and on lake shores, across the continent (Macoun) ; grassy shores and sandy borders of ponds (St. John) ; wet shores and bogs (Gray's Man) ; south to the mountains of Pennsylvania, etc. (Britton and Brown).

SALIX PLANIFOLIA. (S. chlorophylla and S. phylicifolia of American botanists). Labrador to Lake Winnipeg and Great Slave Lake (Macoun) ; brooksides and river banks (St. John) ; south to alpine districts of Quebec and northern New England (Gray's Man.) ; swamps (Britton and Brown) ; granitic mountains (Fernald).

COMANDRA LIVIDA.—Cold bogs, and on mountain tops in the south, and on exposed shores in the north (Macoun).

POLYGONUM VIVIPARUM.—Discussed above.

ARENARIA LATERIFLORA.—Sandy soil or swampy ground, Nova Scotia to Vancouver (Macoun) ; thickets and borders of woods (St. John) ; gravelly shores, thickets, etc. (Gray's Man.) ; moist places and on shores (Britton and Brown).

STELLARIA LONGIPES, var. LAETA.—Arctic regions, south to mountain tops (Macoun) ; open places near the shore (St. John) ; sandy or gravelly beaches, Gulf of St. Lawrence, northward and westward (Gray's Man.).

RANUNCULUS LAPPONICUS.—Discussed above.

DRABA INCANA.—Labrador to Rocky Mountains (Macoun) ; turfy headlands and hillsides (St. John) ; rocky places (Britton and Brown) ; calcareous cliffs and shores (Fernald).

PARNASSIA PALUSTRIS.—Swamps throughout Canada (Macoun) ; Labrador to Alaska and Wyoming (Gray's Man.) ; wet places (Britton and Brown).

POXTENTILLA MONSPELIENSIS. (P. norvegica).—Cultivated grounds, river bottoms and lake shores (Macoun) ; grassy shores and banks (St. John) ; open soil (Gray's Man.) ; dry soil, often a weed in cultivated ground (Britton and Brown).

POTENTILLA PALUSTRIS.—Marshes and bogs across the continent (Macoun) ; bogs, borders of ponds, etc. (St. John) ; cool bogs (Gray's Man.) ; swamps and peat-bogs (Britton and Brown).

POTENTILLA TRIDENTATA.—Westward through the wooded country to the Rocky Mountains—it seems to thrive equally well on rocks and sand (Macoun).

p. 3943

CORNUS CANADENSIS.—Cool, sandy woods, from the Atlantic to the Pacific (Macoun) ; in open or wooded places (St. John) ; damp cold woods (Gray's Man.) ; low woods (Britton and Brown).

GENTIANA AMERALLA. (G. acuta).—Labrador to the Rocky Mountains (Macoun) ; rocky, sandy or turf slopes (St. John) ; barrens, meadows and rocky banks (Gray's Man.) ; moist or wet places (Britton and Brown) ; calcareous cliffs (Fernald).

CALUM LABRADORICUM.—Wet shores and borders of thickets (St. John) ; in moss (Gray's Man.).

ACHILLEA TMILLEFOLIUM, var. NIGRESCENS (A. borealis).—Borders of woods and on grassy banks on mountains, and by streams from the Atlantic to the Pacific (Macoun) ; grassy or rocky shores (St. John) ; wet rocks and mossy slopes (Gray's Man.).

More than half the plants listed in Dr. Kindle's report as maritime (of brackish or littoral habitat) are, then, definitely inland species. These plants rarely seen west of the Narrows, include several arctic-alpine species. Their relatively greater abundance toward the outer coast is unquestionably due to the bleaker conditions there, not to the salinity. The discussion thus far makes it clear, then, that Dr. Kindle's conclusion, that certain plants do not extend in Hamilton Inlet west of the Narrows because they are " salt-loving plants " is wholly fallacious.

3.—OCCURRENCE OF MARITIME PLANTS ON LAKE MELVILLE.

It should not be concluded, simply because Dr. Kindle's report erroneously records so many inland plants as maritime, that there are no true maritime plants in Hamilton Inlet. The usual maritime flowering plants of that latitude are all there—twenty-five species collected either by Dr. Kindle's party or by the Bowdoin College Expedition of Professor Leslie A. Lee, Mr. Austin Carey, and others in 1891.¹ Some of these species, however, are also found in favourable areas in the interior of the continent and may be omitted from the discussion, as not conclusive evidence of maritime conditions ; but others are absolutely unknown in north-eastern America away from the sea-margin. These include seven that extend to or nearly to the head of Lake Melville, which are enumerated below, with a statement of their distribution in Hamilton Inlet, and of their habitats elsewhere in eastern America as given by the leading botanical authorities.

1. POA EMINENS.—At mouth of Mulligan River (Wetmore, Kindle) ; gravel beaches, turfy shores, and rocky ledges near the sea (St. John) ; essentiellement halophytique (Victorin)² ; gravelly sea-shore (Gray's Man.) ; beaches and shores (Britton and Brown). See accompanying map of the range of the species in eastern America.

2. IRIS SETOSA, var. CANADENSIS (I. Hookeri).—Outer coast to the east end of Lake Melville ; shores of Mulliock Cove ; Carravalla Bay ; south side of Lake Melville, from Carter Basin to English River ; shores at Sabascachew Bay (Wetmore) ; common where water is strongly saline ; not seen above the Narrows (Kindle)—(note the contradiction of Wetmore's statement) ; peculiar to the sea coast and always within the limit of spray from the sea (Macoun) ; " along the edges of gravelly beaches and at the crests of the ocean cliffs where the plants are often subjected to baths of salt spray ” (*Collins*¹) ; sea beaches and headlands (Gray's Man.) ; rocky, gravelly or turfy shores near the sea (St. John) ; “ get iris est particulier au bas Saint-Laurent et a la cote de l'atlantique ” (Victorin.). See accompanying map of range.

3. POLYGONUM ISLANDICUM.—Mulligan Point, Lake Melville, July 25, 1891 (Bowdoin College Expedition). A northern sea-beach species, extending south to northern Newfoundland and represented southward by the closely-related and perhaps not specifically separable P. Fowleri and P. allocarpum. See accompanying map of range of the series.

4. STELLARIA CRASSIFOLIA.—Caravalla Bay (Kindle) ; Mulligan Point, Lake Melville, July 20, 1891 (Bowdoin College Expedition), the specimen in the Gray Herbarium ; brackish or springy places (St. John) ; strictly coastal in eastern America, on saline or brackish shores. See accompanying map of range in eastern America.

5. POTENTILLA PACIFICA.—Westerly into the lake as far as Northwest River (Kindle) ; brackish or saline soil (Fernald, Rhodora, xi, 9, where the species was first recognised in eastern America) ; brackish shores (St. John).

6. PLANTAGO OLICANTHOS. (recently recognised² as a species distinct from P. decipiens).—Recorded under the latter name by Wetmore from shores of Sebaschew Bay ; Mulligan Point, 1891 (Bowdoin College Expedition)—specimen in Gray Herbarium ; salt marshes and saline or brackish shores (Fernald) ; salt marshes (Macoun) ; saline shores (St. John) ; “ Espece exclusivement maritime ” (Victorin). See accompanying map of range of the species.

7. SENECIO PSEUDO-ARNICA.—Westward into Lake Melville as far as Sebaschew Bay (Kindle) ; gravel beaches along the coast (Macoun) ; saline shores (St. John) ; “ rivages maritime ” (Victorin). See accompanying map of range in eastern America.

4.—RELATION OF THE RANGES OF MARITIME FLOWERING PLANTS TO THE DISTRIBUTION OF MARINE ALGAE.

It is a very significant point that, although it is asserted that marine algae and invertebrates do not extend up Lake Melville, several species of strictly maritime flowering plants of the outer sea-margin extend to or nearly to the head of the “Lake,” and that seven of these are so uncompromisingly fastidious that elsewhere in eastern North America they are confined to the true sea-margin. On the St. Lawrence³ they are abundant on the outer coast, reaching Riviere du Loup (opposite the mouth of the Saguenay), and two of them getting as far as Cap a l'Aigle (or Murray Bay). These facts are displayed in the accompanying map, showing the actual known stations for these strictly maritime flowering plants on the Lower St. Lawrence.

The reputed absence of marine algae and marine invertebrates at the head of Lake Melville has been emphasized. I am not equipped to discuss the invertebrates ; but in case of the marine algae it is important to note that the Kindle report contains no enumeration of them even from the outer shores of Hamilton Inlet where they certainly must abound. In other words, the Kindle party was not sufficiently interested to collect or a least to report upon the algae of the region. One must, therefore, wonder if the alleged absence of them from Lake Melville is based upon an energetic and intelligent effort to find them ; for, in view of the demonstrated presence near the head of the Lake of the maritime flowering plants, it is quite unbelievable that the marine algae do not likewise extend to the head of Lake Melville.

The only extensive report which I know on the marine algae of the lower St. Lawrence is that of Kemp,¹ but it is surely a most significant fact that the truly marine species extend in the St. Lawrence up to the limit of the strictly maritime flowering plants. Thus at Murray Bay, near the inner limit of the maritime flowering plants, such genera of algae are found as Cladophora, Enteromorpha, Chorda, Chordarie, Ectocarpus, Delesseria, Phyllophora, Polysiphonia, Rhodomela, etc., etc., and near the inner limits of Poa eminens, Stellaria crassifolia and Senecio pseudo-arnica such genera of marine algae as Laminaria and Agarum occur.

It should be perfectly evident, then, that the marine algae extend quite as far as the strictly maritime flowering plants ; and as these same species of flowering plants reach nearly to the head of Lake Melville, it is only reasonable to believe that the marine algae must also be present in the waters near the head of the Lake.

5.—CONCLUSIONS.

It is shown that Dr. Kindle has not hesitated to guess at the identities of plants, and that his guesses are too often erroneous.

It is shown that the statements of habitat in the Kindle report are so largely at variance with the statements by the most accurate Canadian and American botanists that no reliance can be placed upon them. Of the three species specially emphasized by him as occurring only from the Narrows eastward and, therefore, to his mind " salt-loving " plants, two are most emphatically not plants of saline habitats, and the third, instead of stopping at the Narrows, actually extends to the head of Lake Melville.

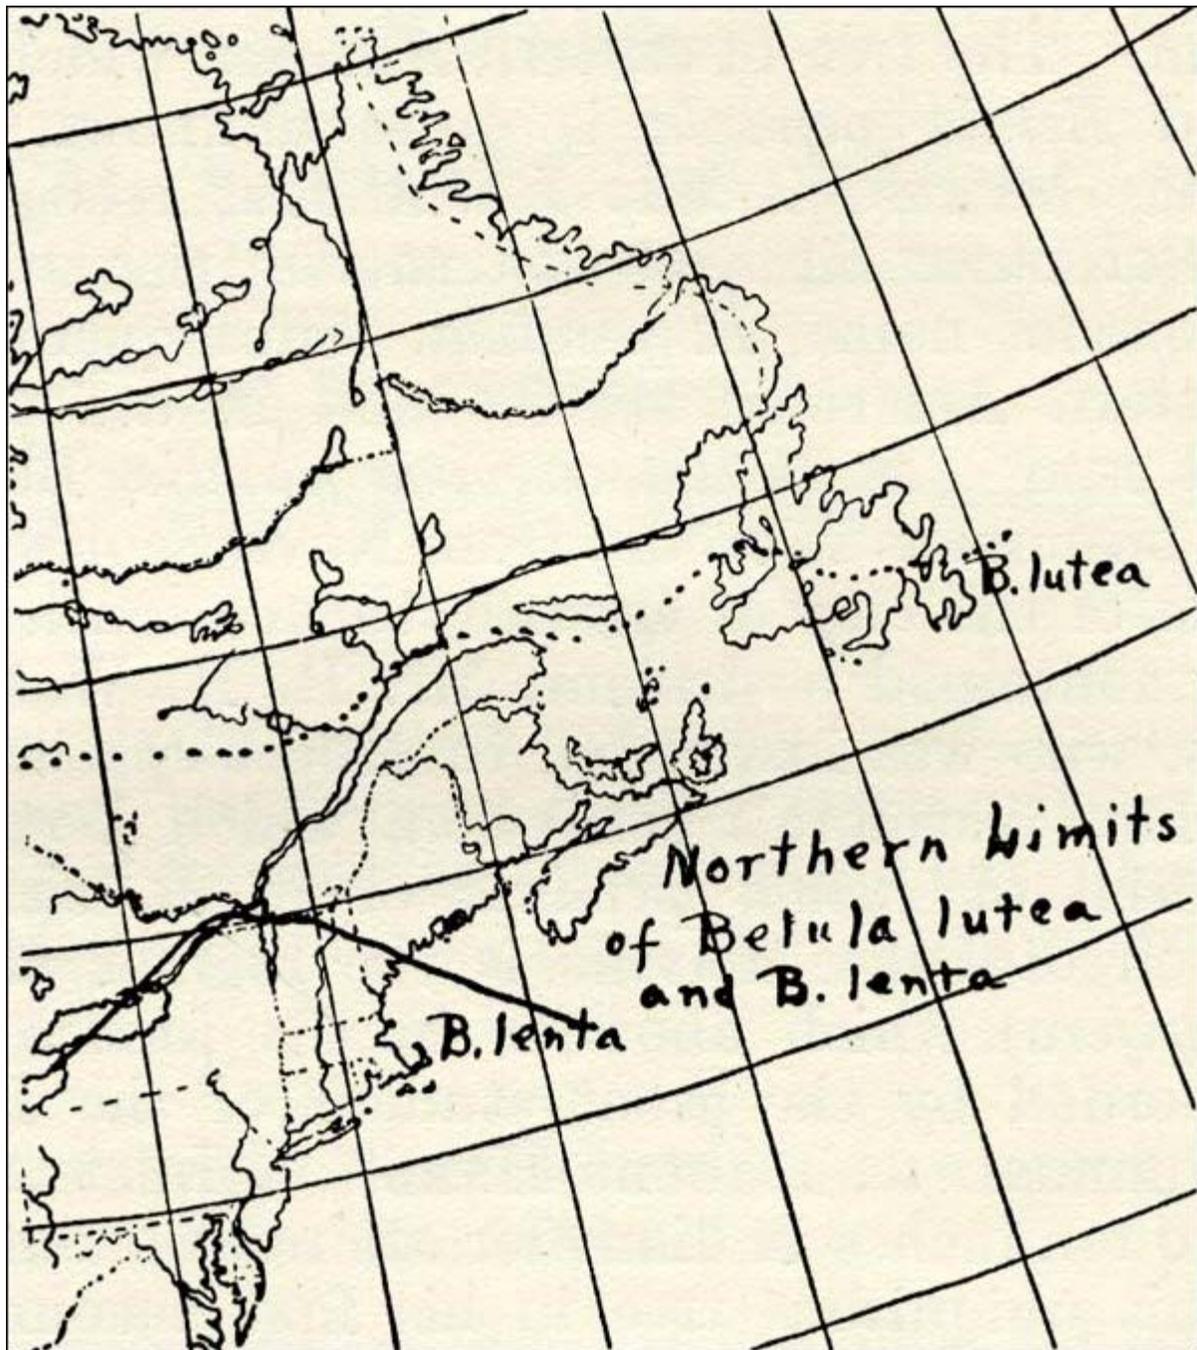

It is demonstrated, largely on evidence collected by Dr. Kindle's party, that several of the maritime plants known from the Hamilton Inlet region extend westward nearly to the head of Lake Melville. These plants elsewhere in Eastern America occur only on the ocean-margin or about the Gulf of St. Lawrence or the lower River St. Lawrence. Their occurrence at the head of Lake Melville is evidence that Lake Melville is an arm of the sea.

It is shown that in other regions, notably the lower St. Lawrence, the distribution of the strictly maritime plants, which we positively know from near the head of Lake Melville closely coincides with the distribution of the marine algae. It is, consequently, impossible to avoid the conclusion that Dr. Kindle's contention, that marine algae do not occur far up Lake Melville, is based on a preconception rather than upon a vigorous attempt to find the algae there.

REVIEW OF THE PAPERS BY E. M. KINDLE AND J.
W. GREGORY.

BY CHARLES SCHUCHERT,

Professor Emeritus of Historical Geology in the Sheffield Scientific School, and Professor Emeritus of Paleontology in Yale University.

The writer (who has been Professor of Historical Geology since 1904 at Yale University and has visited and studied the geology widely in the United States, Canada, Newfoundland, Labrador and Greenland) carefully studied an original copy of Doctor Kindle's report, entitled "Geography and Geology of Lake Melville District, Labrador Peninsula," rather than the abbreviated copy, No. 11, of the documents in the matter of the Boundary Dispute between Canada and Newfoundland. This was done to get the whole of Doctor Kindle's account. Then the writer studied Professor J. W. Gregory's paper, "On the Labrador Boundary Question," and Professor R. A. Daly's "Topography of the Northeast Coast of Labrador." In addition he carefully read Doctor A. P. Low's very valuable "Report on Explorations in the Labrador Peninsula," 1896, published by the Geological Survey of Canada ; and Professor R. A. Daly's "The Geology of the North-east Coast of Labrador," 1902, published by Harvard College.

In studying Kindle's report of his observations in the Lake Melville area, the writer was soon made aware that his major object was to take a narrow view of the phrase "the coast of Labrador," and this attitude appears in the opening paragraph. Throughout his report the stress is laid upon the word "coast," and it is clear that his use of this word is in the narrowest maritime sense, namely, restricting it to the littoral area of salt-water overlap of the Atlantic Ocean upon the Peninsula of Labrador. Throughout we see his labouring with redefinitions of geographic and geologic terms and then applying them in his redefined sense to the specific areas visited.

Kindle says : "Lake Melville and Hamilton Inlet together afford continuous waterway which permits sea-going vessels to penetrate about 150 miles inland beyond the outer islands. The entire eastern coastline of Labrador is a succession of deep bays, inlets, and fringing islands." (10)

"The most striking topographic feature of the region is the great depth to which the fiord-like valleys extend below the level of the adjacent plateau margin." (11) temporarily depressed during the Glacial period—simply by the great weight of the ice.

After the ice cap melted away the earth's crust did not immediately respond and rise to its pre-Glacial level. Hence for a considerable time the Atlantic water transgressed upon the coast," when " the ocean waves built hundreds of short beaches in the bays and among the islands of the coastal fringe. These beaches have recently been elevated because the earth's crust ultimately responded to the removal of the ice load." (Daly, Documents, Part XV, p. 2079.)

In this matter of the raised beaches Kindle says : " No fisherman can fail to recognise the autographs of the sea in the elevated boulder beaches and terraces of sand which may be seen in many places 200 feet or more above the present sea-level. These elevated sea beaches, which at scores of localities look almost as fresh and perfectly preserved as those now being built, demonstrate that the eastern coastline has risen 300 feet or more in Hamilton Inlet district." (8)

" Lake Melville, into which Grand Lake empties, is a tidal lake, and shows a maximum depth of 160 fathoms." (Kindle, 13.)

Kindle discusses the fiordal nature of Lake Melville but finally objects to calling it a fiord because " one of the largest rivers in Labrador Peninsula (namely, Hamilton river) flows into Lake Melville. . . . It appears, therefore, that Lake Melville can be more properly regarded as a lake-like expansion of the Hamilton than as a fiord."

This argument shows at once that Kindle wants to make of Lake Melville a fresh-water and landlocked lake, so that the seashore can be drawn at the inner end of the Narrows. This is made plainer from the following :—" Hamilton Inlet (sensu stricto) belongs to the class of seashore indentations called rias and that physiographers would consider at least its outer shores to be a part of the seacoast. . . . Since neither the lake nor the Narrows conforms, even approximately, with the definition of a fiord, the Narrows may be technically regarded as the mouth or outlet of greater Hamilton River enlarged by the waters of Grand Lake, Kenama and Kenemich rivers. From the standpoint of a physiographer the term seacoast would, therefore, not be applicable beyond or southeast of the junction of the Narrows and Hamilton Inlet." (14)

In regard to this decision of Kindle the writer would say that it is far more natural and correct to agree with geographers in general and specifically with Gregory, who " regards Lake Melville Basin, the Narrows, and the entrance to them as part of one arm of the sea." (17)

No geographer was more familiar with Labrador than Doctor A. P. Low, Geologist of the Geological Survey of Canada, and in his well-known and highly-valued report of 1896 he says :

" The Atlantic coast (of Labrador) is exceedingly irregular, being deeply cut by many long, narrow bays, or fiords. . . . Hamilton Inlet is the largest and longest of these inlets, extending inland over one hundred and fifty miles from its mouth. The fiords, as a rule, have greater depths than the banks outside the island fringe.” (20 L.) The last-named collection is a characteristic feature of fiords.

p. 3951

“ Hamilton Inlet, Invuktoke, or Esquimaux Bay, is the largest and most important of the many long, narrow fiords or inlets that indent the Atlantic coast of Labrador and Newfoundland. Its greatest length, from Indian Harbour to the mouth of the Hamilton River at its head, is slightly over one hundred and fifty miles, while its average breadth is about fourteen miles.” (124 L.)

Hamilton Inlet. “ At Indian Harbour the tide rises seven feet at springs ; at the lower end of the Narrows the rise is four feet, while above the Narrows the rise is only about two feet and continues the same to the head of the Inlet, where the rise and fall of the tide is much modified by the direction and strength of the wind. Below the Narrows there is a strong current formed by the ebb and flow of the tide ; while through the Narrows the rising and falling water rushes with a velocity varying from four to seven miles per hour.” (127 L.)

From the previous quotations we learn that at the close of the Glacial period most of the Atlantic coast of Labrador was lower by about 300 feet than it is now. Accordingly marine water, tides, and waves entered more deeply into all the fiords and rivers and especially so into the Lake Melville and Hamilton River areas. This is confirmed not only by the many places with sand terraces, which Low says go up Hamilton River 70 miles to Gull Rapid Gorge, but especially by the basal clays having marine Pleistocene shells which are listed by Kindle and Packard. They also occur 10 miles above the mouth of Kenemich River and at Muskrat Falls of the Hamilton River. These fossil forms are still represented by individuals living off the coast of Labrador. Since the time of this greater flooding the east Labrador coast has risen about 300 feet and appears to be rising even now. As this evidence is admitted by all, it helps us the more easily to understand the significance of the present coastal conditions.

Kindle says that Lake Melville can be navigated by sea-going vessels, “ that it is a tidal lake,” and that “ the most striking topographic feature of the region is the great depth to which the fiord-like valleys extend below the level of the adjacent plateau margin.” These are all characteristic of fiords and marine inlets. So far as the writer knows, all geographers call the Lake Melville area a fiord and an inlet of the sea. On the other hand, freshwater lakes are never referred to as tidal lakes, since in them the pull of the moon is so slight as to raise very minor tides. In Lake Melville the tides, according to Low, are readily measured and are variable according to time and wind conditions, causing two daily tides rising anywhere up to about two feet. Here, then, we have a “ lake ” into which there flows (twice daily) oceanic water, and that causes the “ lake level ” to rise and sink even into Goose Bay. And the latter is said, by Kindle, to have brackish water in midsummer (54). Accordingly we see why all geographers regard Lake Melville as but a part of Hamilton Inlet ; it is truly but an arm of the sea and an inlet that is open to sea-going vessels for about 150 miles.

In regard to what constitutes the seaboard or seacoast, attention is directed to the fact that there are in the United States eight chief “ seaports,” or “ ports of entry,” and these are situated on or near the oceanic fronts (as Boston, New York City, which is 10 miles inland, Galveston, and San Francisco, 5 miles inland), or are far from the ocean (as Seattle, 40 miles from the Straits of Juan de Fuca, Philadelphia, 96 miles inland, New Orleans, 106 miles from the Gulf of Mexico, and Baltimore, 180 miles, as ships go, to the Atlantic).

Kindle lays unduly great “ coastal ” value upon the allegation that practically all the marine animals of the Atlantic Ocean fail to get a foothold in Lake Melville.

What bearing has this on the geographic fact that Lake Melville is but an extension of Hamilton Inlet, which is truly an arm of the sea ? None whatever, for he is discussing the distribution of a marine fauna that has no relation to the physiographic and geographic continuity of the land, and geography in this case is of far more significance than is the distribution of marine life.

That geographic entities cannot be bounded wholly by the distribution of marine life becomes all the more evident when we consider the conditions of the Baltic Sea. Though this sea is almost without tides and is said to have the characteristics of a great lake, but with a salt content variable between 6 and 10.5 parts per thousand of water, yet no geographer regards it other than as a sea and an extension of the Atlantic Ocean. Any atlas will demonstrate this acceptance. Heilprin, in 1906, defined the Baltic Sea as “ a sea of Europe, enclosed by Sweden, Russia, Prussia, and Denmark and communicating with the North Sea.” Its area is 160,000 square miles and receives the drainage of at least 800,000 square miles, which is the main cause why the Baltic Sea has so greatly freshened water. In this sea with variable marine waters there lives a mixture of marine and fresh-water life that totals around 240 forms, while around Great Britain, where the waters are normal marine, there live about 1,040 species. In these facts we see to what extent normal marine life fails to enter the Baltic Sea because of its freshened waters, and finally none of it gets a foothold in the inner ends of the Gulf of Bothnia and the Gulf of Finland. Here the life is all of fresh-water kinds, because the waters are completely fresh, yet the Baltic Sea with its various gulfs is regarded by all as a geographic unit of the marine realm, and one separating political entities.

The leading authorities on Labrador—A. P. Low, J. W. Gregory, R. A. Daly, A. Heilprin—and nearly all geologists regard the Lake Melville area as a genuine fiord and the longest by far of all “ the glorious fiords ” of Labrador. Daly says there are thirty or more large fiords and that twelve of them extend inland from 30 to 50 miles. Kindle's objections to calling the Lake Melville area a fiord are not well taken.

The topography of the Lake Melville region, Kindle says, resulted from “ subaerial and river erosion modified by glaciation and directed in some degree by important structural features. Their main features were developed in pre-Glacial time when the Labrador coast stood considerably higher than at present. These waterways cannot, therefore, be regarded as representing in any degree the work of the sea in cutting back or eroding the coast along lines of least resistance.” (70-71) Professor Gregory does not agree to this interpretation of Kindle and describes its evolution differently, but even so this difference of opinion as to the origin of fiords has no bearing whatever on the present sea-level and with the fact that the present tides of the Atlantic Ocean penetrate to the head of Lake Melville. If there were no Hamilton River back of the lake, there would be instead of a lake a typical marine body of water, so that even Kindle would not hesitate to call Melville Bay an arm of the sea.

The writer first saw Labrador in the summer of 1897 and again in 1910, when he often heard the terms “ On the Labrador,” and “ Coast of Labrador,” understanding by them then and ever since an undetermined width of mountainous and back of the salt-water coastline. That this is the general conclusion of geographers as well finds excellent support in Lippincott's “ A Complete Pronouncing Gazetteer or Geographical Dictionary of the World,” 1906, edited by the well-known geographers Angelo Heilprin and Louis Heilprin. Here we read :—“ Labrador Coast, that portion of the peninsula of Labrador which drains east into the Atlantic Ocean. It is a dependency of Newfoundland.” Under “ Labrador ” we read the same : “ That portion belonging to Newfoundland is that which is drained by rivers flowing into the Atlantic Ocean. The coast is deeply indented with fiords, the largest on the Atlantic side being Hamilton Inlet.”

The writer sees no possibility of a natural boundary in the geology of Labrador, nor in the distribution of marine or land life. The only natural line is one to be surveyed along “ the crest of the watershed ” between the various rivers. Accordingly, the writer is in complete accord with Gregory and Daly that the Atlantic Coastal Belt of Labrador is a distinct and natural geographic entity, bounded on the west by the height of land or the watershed between it and the plateau of Labrador. This height of land or the line of drainage into the Atlantic Ocean, Hudson Bay, and Gulf of St. Lawrence is the only place where a natural boundary can be drawn between the claims of Newfoundland and Canada (Quebec). “ The watershed is the natural geographical division, as it determines the direction of trade and commerce, since exports would go down the waterways to the coast.” (Gregory).

FEB., 1860.¹

Government House,
Quebec, 25th February, 1860.

My Lord Duke,—I have the honor to enclose a copy of a recommendation of the Executive Council of Canada, approved by myself, with reference to Wood Island on the coast of Labrador.

This island is situated about 57° 10' west longitude, just at the entrance of the Strait of Belle Isle.

Now, if I am not mistaken the Commission of the Governor of Newfoundland limits the jurisdiction of that Government as follows :—

* * * *

“ In and over our Island of Newfoundland and the islands adjacent, and all the Coast of Labrador, from the entrance of Hudson's Straits to a line to be drawn due north and south from Anse Sablon on the said coast to the fifty-second degree of north latitude, and all the islands adjacent to that part of the said Coast of Labrador, as also of all forts and garrisons erected and established, or which shall be erected or established, within the said Island of Newfoundland and the islands adjacent, or on the Coast of Labrador within the limits aforesaid, or in the said islands adjacent to that part of the said coast, for and during our will and pleasure.”

It will be observed—1st. That the due north line forming the western boundary in Labrador of the Government of Newfoundland, begins to run from Anse Sablon or Blanc Sablon Bay, as it is called in Bayfield's Chart of 1832-4 ; consequently, that line of itself can affect nothing south of its commencement.

2. That the islands given to Newfoundland are those adjacent to the Coast of Labrador, belonging to that Government. But the word adjacent is hardly applicable to an island which is nearer to another territory, viz., that of Canada.

If, for example, in dividing the bed of a river the islands were annexed, respectively, to the bank to which they were adjacent, no one would say that an island which was nearer to the right bank than it was to the left could be called adjacent to the latter.

I hold, therefore, that the whole of Wood Island, which clearly, according to Bayfield's Chart, is much nearer to Canadian ground than it is to the Territory of Newfoundland, must be taken to be already part of the Territory of Canada, and I have to request Your Grace's consideration of the question.

I have, &c.,

EDMUND HEAD.

ORDER-IN-COUNCIL (CANADA), 23 FEBRUARY, 1860.²

COPY OF A REPORT OF A COMMITTEE OF THE HONORABLE THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL, APPROVED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL ON THE 23RD FEBRUARY, 1860.

The Committee of Council have had before them a memorandum of the Hon. the Commissioner of Crown Lands transmitting a report of Jos. Bouchette, Esqr., Deputy Surveyor General, dated 18th January, 1860, on a communication from P. Fortin, Esquire, commanding the Government vessel “ La Canadienne ” respecting “ Wood Island,” better known as “ Isle au Bois Blanc,” and on the expediency of the demarcation, on the ground of the line of boundary between the Provinces of Canada and Newfoundland, the latter Province claiming the said Island, which would, however, appear more properly to be an appendage to Canada.

In a subsequent memorandum dated 16th February, 1860, the Commissioner states that the said Island would, in the opinion of Mr. Fortin, be valuable to Canada as a Fishing Station, there being extensive cod and herring fishery establishments (by Canadians only) thereon already. That it is well sheltered and under the lee affords good anchorage. That it would be suitable for the landing place of a submarine telegraph cable, and with a Light House on the S.E. point could be securely approached by Ocean steamers to deliver despatches at all times ; whilst it possesses advantages for the establishment of a coaling station for Canadian line in the Straits ; and that the acquisition by Canada of that part which lies towards the Newfoundland border is considered by him of importance to this Province.

That Messrs. Edmonstone, Allan & Co. are of opinion that the Island affords convenient shelter and safe anchorage, but that until that part of the Gulf is properly lighted, few vessels will adopt the route thro' the Straits, whilst the Harbour could always be resorted to as a refuge whether belonging to Canada or Newfoundland. That as regards its advantage as a coaling depot

“ no steamers will,” they state, stop for coal at a way station. That the position of the Island as regards the Canadian coast and boundary, and the nominal value to Newfoundland of that portion lying East of the probable line of demarcation make the acquirement of the whole by Canada desirable provided it can be done for a very trifling consideration.

The Committee recommend that Your Excellency invite the attention of the Colonial Secretary to this subject with the view of determining to which Province the Island in question belongs or shall belong.

(Copy,—Canada,—No. 35.) Downing Street, 13th April, 1860.

Sir,—I have to acknowledge your Despatch, No. 16, dated the 24th February last, enclosing a copy of a Report from a Committee of the Executive Council of Canada, approved by yourself, recommending to my consideration the question whether the Island called Wood Island or “ Ile au Bois ” on the coast of Labrador, should be held to belong to Canada or to Newfoundland.

2. You refer me to “ Bayfield's Chart of 1832–34,” and consider that the Island as laid down in this chart cannot be esteemed “ adjacent ” to that part of the Labrador coast, which is placed by Royal Instructions under the Government of Newfoundland, and that it is consequently within the Territory of Canada. On referring to this chart, I cannot say that I think it so conclusive on the question of proximity as it appears to yourself. Before, however, Her Majesty's Government consider this question further, they would be glad to have before them a Report of the Law Officers of your Government, as to the legal authority on which the claim of Canada rests to the Territory to which you consider the island an appendage. I refer you, among other matter for the consideration of those officers, to the Acts of Parliament named in the margin.

[Enclosure in No. 1477.]

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF CROWN LANDS AS TO EXACT GEOGRAPHICAL POSITION OF WOODY ISLAND, 10 OCT., 1860.⁸

Department of Crown Lands,
Quebec, 10th October, 1860.

The only exhibit of the coast of Labrador, upon which any certain knowledge of the exact geographical position of the Island known as “ Isle au Bois,” can be safely and satisfactorily relied, is the hydrographical chart, better known as Captain Bayfield's Chart of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and Strait of Belle Isle, published in sheets by the Admiralty of England in 1843.

According to this chart (sheet No. 1) “ Isle au Bois,” called on the chart “ Wood Island ” (which is in fact a translation from the French word “ bois ” into the English one “ wood ”), is situated on the northerly coast of the western outlet of the Strait of Belle Isle from the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and adjacent to that part of the coast of Labrador, well known as the Basin or Harbour of “ Anse au Blanc Sablon.”

The island in its general configuration, is much in the shape of a rightangled triangle, its northern or longest side bearing nearly due north-west and south-east. The apex of the triangle being at the north-west extremity of the island, leaving a channel of about half of a marine mile between it and the main land, whilst at its south-eastern extremity or easternmost point, bearing nearly south-south-west from the easternmost point of the Bay of “ Anse au Sablon,” a broad channel of about two miles opens upon the Strait of Belle Isle.

The geographical position of the above external boundaries of Wood Island, more especially as regards its eastern extremity as relative to the geographical position of the eastern boundary of the Province, to be hereinafter referred to, may be set down, according to Captain Bayfield's said chart, as follows :—

Easternmost point	Latitude	51° 23' 20”	Longitude	57° 9' 33”
Southernmost point	”	51° 22' 50”	”	57° 10' 20”
North-west extremity	”	51° 24' 10”	”	57° 11' 40”

Now, agreeably to the Imperial Act, 6 Geo. IV., chap. 59, clause whereby certain parts of the coast of Labrador and adjacent islands are reannexed to Lower Canada, and wherein it is enacted “ that so much of the said coast as lies to the westward of a line to be drawn due north and south from the Bay or Harbour of ' Anse au Sablon,' inclusive, as far as the 52nd degree of north latitude, with the Island of Anticosti and all other islands adjacent to such part, as last aforesaid, of the coast of Labrador, shall and the same are hereby reannexed to make a part of the said Province Lower Canada,” &c., the eastern limit or boundary of the Province, so as to include the Bay of “ Anse au Sablon,” would properly lie at the southernmost point of that part of the Coast of Labrador, situated between the said Bay or Harbour of “ Anse au Sablon,” and the small bay called “ St. Clair ” lying east of said “ Anse au Sablon,” as shewn on the chart, wherefrom a line being drawn due north to the 52nd parallel of latitude, all the territory to the west of said line pertains to Canada, whilst all or any islands lying west of a line drawn due south from the aforesaid southernmost point or eastern limit of the Bay of Anse au Sablon,” being adjacent to such part of the territory of the Province on the coast of Labrador, also, of right belong to Canada, and form part of the District of Saguenay in Lower Canada.

Referring again to Bayfield's Chart, the easternmost point of the Bay or Harbour of Anse au Sablon, identical with the southernmost point of that part of the coast of Labrador lying between “ Anse au Sablon ” and the Bay adjoining on the east, appears so clearly defined as to admit of its geographical position being set down from the chart as lying in latitude 51° 25' 5” north and in longitude west from Greenwich 57° 8' 15”. Whence a line drawn due south towards the sea will pass 1' 20” of arc (equal to about 1,700 yards) to the eastward of the easternmost point of “ Isle au Bois,” which places that island geographically within the jurisdiction of this Province, as shewn on the annexed plan.

All which is respectfully submitted.

P. M. VANKOUGHNET,
Commissioner Crown Lands.

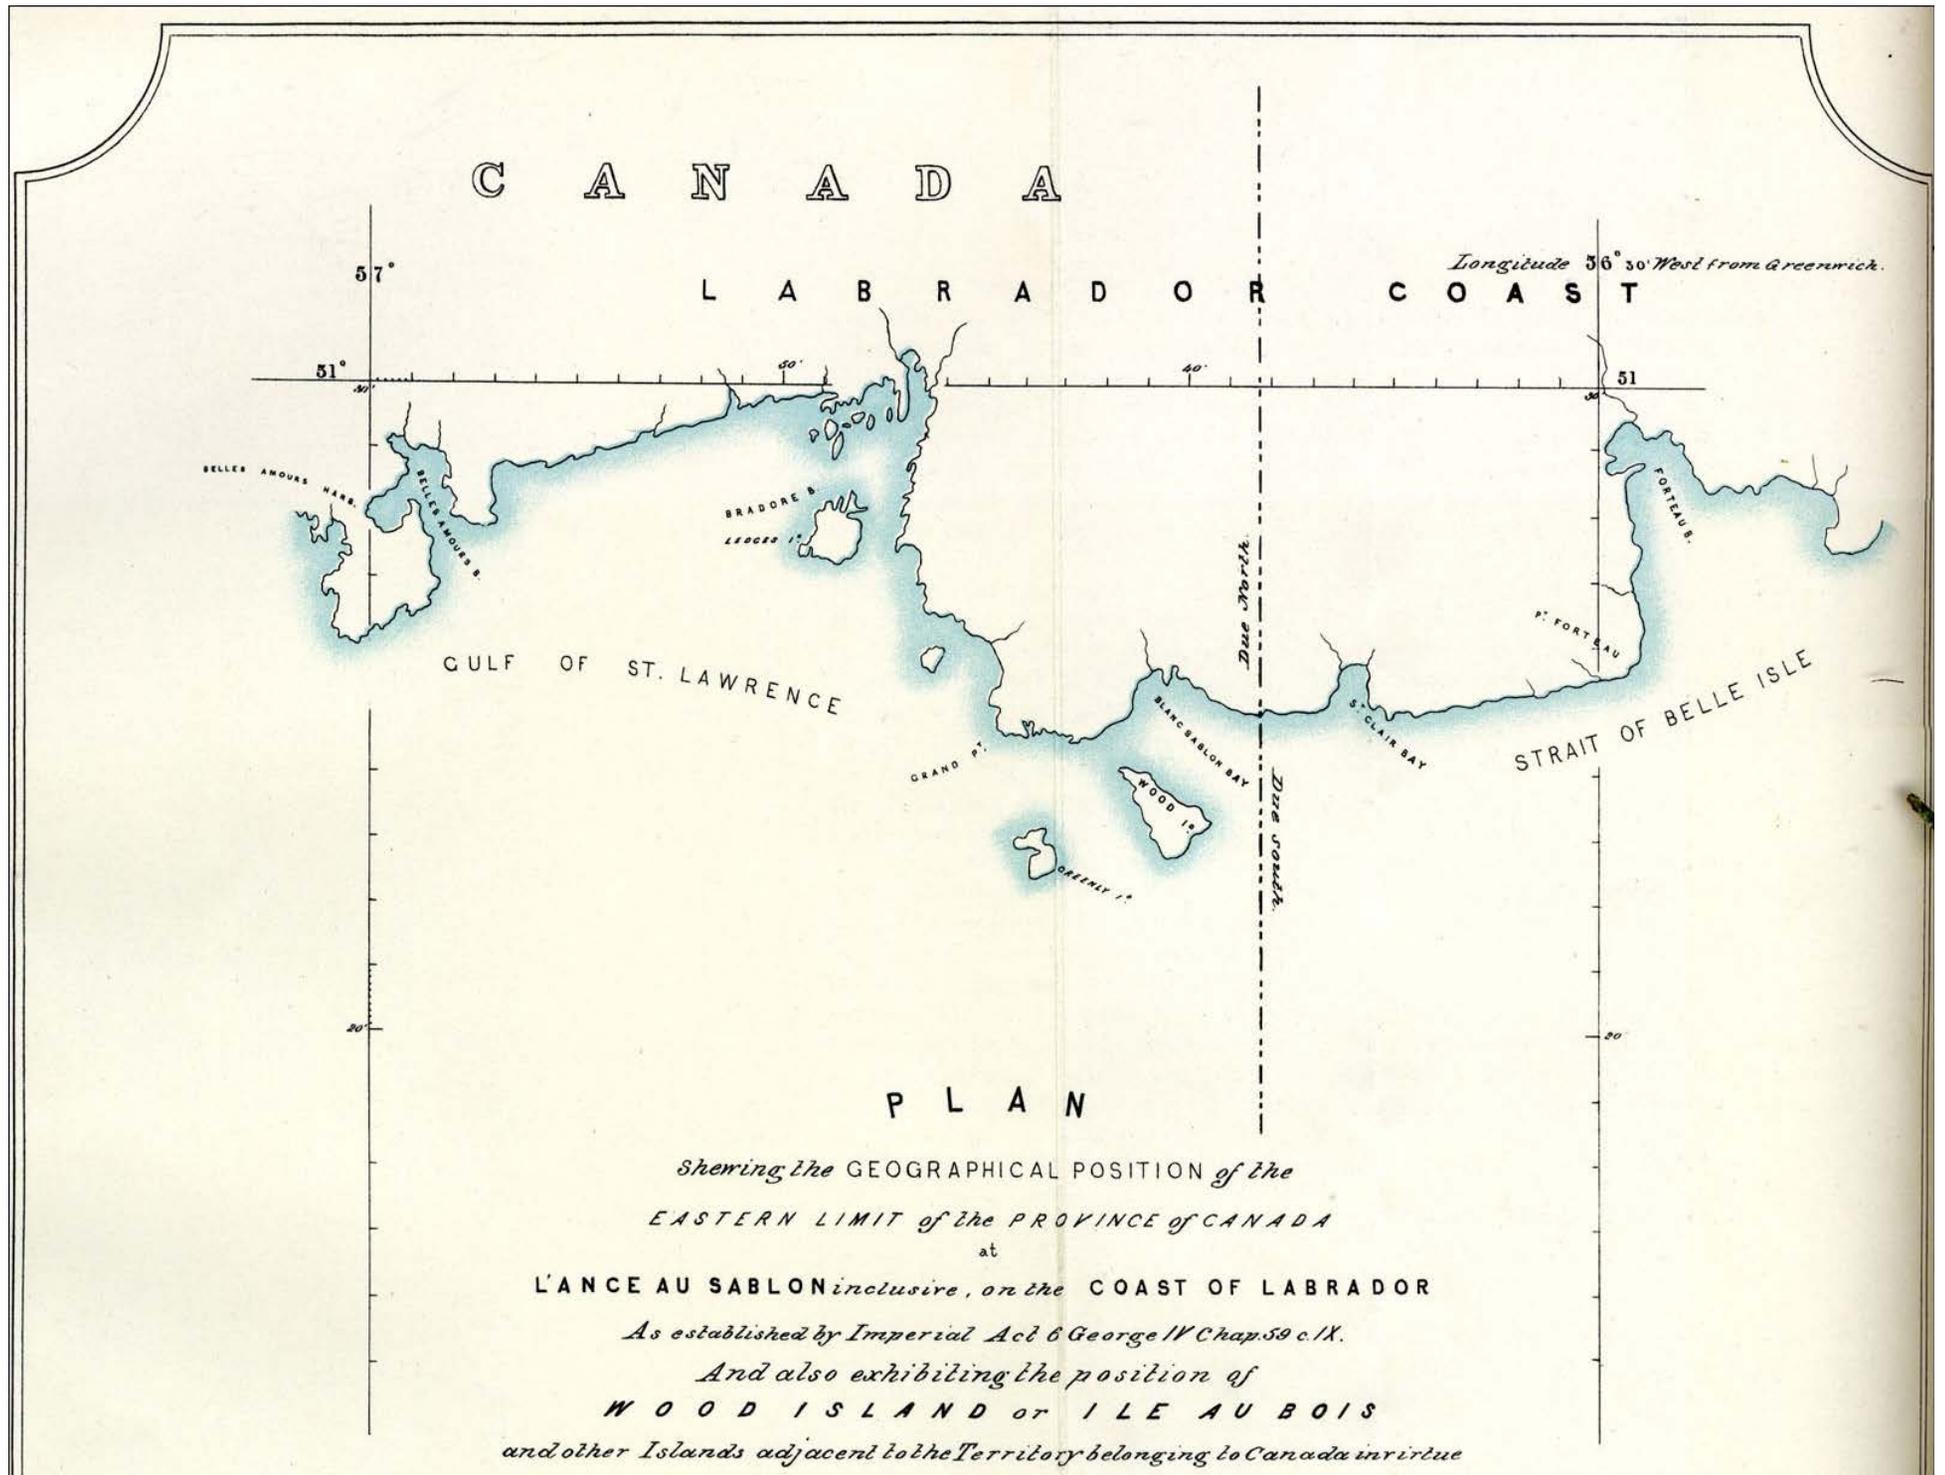

I have to explain and ask to be excused that the Statute of 6th Geo. 4th was not referred to by me in my former Report on which His Excellency based his Dispatch to His Grace the Colonial Secretary. I had overlooked it, feeling that the case in favour of Canada was, on the partial examination which I had then made, sufficiently strong.

On the above reference and in consideration of the Imperial Statute (6 Geo. IV, cap. 59, sec. 9), and the report of the Commissioner of Crown Lands, it seems to us clear that Wood Island is within the limits of Canada.

Capt. P. Fortin enquiring whether Isle à Bois belongs to Canada.

Referred 12th April, 1858.

Department of Crown Lands,
Toronto, 26th April, 1858.

Having carefully examined the Hydrographical Chart No.
1 by Admiral Bayfield, of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, it would appear that, the island designated as Wood Island, situate in Blanc Sablon, on the Labrador Coast,

¹² File No. 1778 (1874), Dept. of Justice, Canada.

as shown on the annexed trace, lies, according to the Eastern limit or boundary line of the Province, established in virtue of the Imperial Act 6 Geo. IV, ch. 59, in greater part within this Province, there being only about one-third of the said Island, at its Eastern extremity, lying on the East side of the said line, prolonged into deep water, and therefore, out of this Province until such time as the province line shall have been drawn bounded in the field by competent authority.

The question submitted in Capt. Fortin's Communication under date 31st July last, relative to Wood Island (better known as Isle au Bois blanc), in a mean latitude 50° 23' 40" & Longitude 57° 10' 30", Bayfield's Chart), at the Eastern limit of the Province, which has already formed the subject of a report from this Department, dated 26th April 1858, is becoming, under the increased developments of the resources of the Gulf Shores & its fisheries, of the first importance, and would appear to demand of the Government this Province some early action with the cooperation of the Government of Newfoundland, for the demarcation on the ground of the line of boundary between these Provinces, in accordance with the Imperial Acts defining the limits of the territories respectively belonging to either province, on the Labrador Coast, Gulf of St. Lawrence. With reference more immediately to the Isle au Bois Blanc, this Island, which, were a line drawn due south from the middle of the Bay or Anse au Blanc Sablon, would be divided between Canada & Newfoundland, in the proportion of about two thirds to the former, and one third to the latter, appears, from its geographical position, at the outlet of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, by the Straight of Belle-Isle, into the Atlantic Ocean ; also in a maritime point of view, as a shipping or naval depot on the direct route of Our Canadian line of Steamers, and for inward or outward bound vessels, to be of permanent importance to this province ; while it is comparatively of lesser consideration to Newfoundland, and in the case of its two fold occupancy, that circumstance could not otherwise than be attended with much inconvenience in regard to the different custom duties to be levied for either province, as even now appears to be a subject of difficulty, for those cogent reasons, besides other minor considerations, this Island should obviously belong in whole to this Province.

The Imperial Act 6th Geo. IV, ch. 59, which fixes the Eastern limit of Canada along the Labrador Coast, by a line to be drawn “ due North to the 52° parallel of North Latitude,” makes no mention of any Islands in front of the coast, consequently, contains no provision as to the mode in which any Island or Islands that may be situate in front of the conterminous point of boundary of both Provinces, may be assigned.

The question would, therefore, appear to be open to Imperial adjudication, on the respective merits of the claim which either Province may lay to the jurisdiction of the Isle au Bois Blanc, and the Islands in the Bay of Anse au Blanc Sablon.

Respectfully submitted,

JOSEPH BOUCHETTE, D.S.G.

Commissioner of Crown Lands,

The undersigned desires to bring under the notice of His Excellency in Council the subject treated of in the within report, in order that such action, as may be necessary on the part of the Imperial Authorities, can be invoked before the British Parliament closes its next Session.

P. FORTIN TO COMMISSIONER OF CROWN LANDS, 12 MARCH, 1864.¹⁵

Laprairie, 12th March, 1864.

Sir,—In my report of progress of the date of the 31st August last, and in my general report of last year, I had the honor to bring to your knowledge the acts of authority practised by a Customs Officer of the Government of Newfoundland on Canadian Territory, at a place called Anse aux Blancs Sablons, in the Strait of Belle Isle.

These acts of authority consisted in the exaction of customs duties on goods that Messrs. Fruing & Co., and Messrs. Le Boutillier & Brothers had in their stores, which are situated in a part of l'Anse aux Blancs Sablons, which has always been recognized as belonging to Canada, and which is made to appear as being within the limits of Canada on a diagram officially furnished to me, in 1858, by the Department of Crown Lands, through the Provincial Secretary's Office, at my demand, with a view to know exactly where the eastern frontier of Canada lay in the Strait of Belle Isle, and how, much our Province owned of l'Anse aux Blancs Sablons, and of the Island called l'Ile à Bois, which is opposite to it, and contains valuable cod fishing establishments, and being rich fishing grounds, and which on that account it would be most important never to surrender to the Government of Newfoundland, as this island might be of great consequence in the future.

It seems to me that Canada has a right to the whole of the Bay of Blancs Sablons, by virtue of the Imperial Act, 6 Geo. IV., cap. 59, while the Officers of Newfoundland (for along with the Custom Officer above referred to, there was a Judge sent by the Government to exercise his authority on the coast), pretend it is entirely within the limits of the territory owned by Newfoundland on the coast of Labrador.

Before last year, no Officer of Newfoundland had ever attempted to claim any authority beyond a line drawn from the Anse aux Blancs Sablons Brook, at the bottom of the said Anse, and extending due south to the sea, and as I did not myself pretend to go beyond that said line, no conflict of jurisdiction was apprehended between the Officers of Newfoundland and Canada, and, indeed, there has never been any difficulty between any officer of the last named Province and me, but now with the pretensions of the neighboring Government over the whole of Anse aux Blancs Sablons, what will take place ? Will there not be a conflict of authority between the officers of the two interested countries, which will certainly turn to no good results ?

Under the existing circumstances, and pending the decision of the Imperial Government as to the eastern frontier of Canada in the Strait of Belle Isle, I have the honor to ask you, Sir, to instruct me as to what I shall do next season in l'Anse aux Blancs Sablons. Will I continue to exercise my jurisdiction over that part of the Bay which has always been recognized as belonging to Canada, or will I yield to the quite recent and extraordinary pretensions of the officials of the Government of Newfoundland.

Hoping that I may receive an answer before the opening of navigation.

I remain, Sir,
Your most obedient servant,

P. FORTIN.

Commissioner of Crown Lands, Quebec.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF CROWN LANDS TO PRIVY COUNCIL, CANADA, 19 MARCH, 1864.¹⁶

Department of Crown Lands,
Quebec, 19th March, 1864.

The Commissioner of Crown Lands has the honor to report the recurrence of acts of jurisdiction on the part of officers of the Government of Newfoundland, on that part of the coast of Labrador which is within the eastern frontier of Canada, at Blanc Sablon Bay.

The Imperial Statute, 6 Geo. IV, cap. 59, re-annexed to Canada certain portions of the coast of Labrador, and all adjacent islands, formerly within the Province of Newfoundland. That Act established the boundary line as drawn due north and south from the Bay of Blanc Sablon (inclusive) as far as the 52nd degree of north latitude, including all islands adjacent. In consequence of seizures made at Wood Island by the Customs Officers of Newfoundland, in 1860, a report of facts was made by this Department to the Law Officers of the Crown, describing the geographical position of the island and also the exact line of boundary, as laid down from the terms of the Imperial Statute. The joint opinion of the then Attorneys General is, that Wood Island is within the limits of Canada. Acting upon that opinion, the Department has instructed its officers to regard as Canadian territory and exercise authority over the islands and mainland situated west of the line so drawn. At the bottom of Blanc Sablon Bay, close to the frontier, but clearly inside (or westward) of such a line, there are important fishing establishments owned by Canadians. Last year, an officer of Newfoundland levied Customs dues at one of these establishments ; and the parties aggrieved apply for redress through this Department.

The undersigned respectfully submits this matter for the consideration of the Governor General in Council.

WM. McDOUGALL.
Commissioner.

COLONIES TO MR. STUART MOORE.¹⁷

To Sir E.
Head,
13 April,
1860.

Downing Street,
22 October, 1923.

Sir,—I am directed by the Duke of Devonshire to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 2nd October, and to state that though the Colonial Office records after the end of the year 1860 are not ordinarily open to public inspection, the Secretary of State has no objection in the circumstances to your inspecting and making copies of any correspondence in the Public Record Office between the Colonial Office and the Canadian Government on the subject mentioned both during and after that year, subject to the understanding that this permission does not extend to any Newfoundland records later than 1860.

2. It may be of assistance however to you to know that though it is the case that the Governor of Canada was asked in a despatch dated 13th April, 1860 (of which a copy is enclosed) for a report by the Canadian Law Officers in connection with the claim to Wood Island, the records of this Department seem to show that no reply was received from the Canadian Government at least up to the end of 1864.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,

COAST OF LABRADOR.

What is generally designated in Canada as the Coast of Labrador comprises the King's Posts, the Seignory of the Mainland of Mingan, and that part of the coast which extends from the eastern limits of that Seignory to Blanc Sablons Bay, the eastern boundary of the Province of Canada. This bay is about 300 leagues from Quebec.

* * * *

That part of the Coast which extends from the River Gagnish to Blancs Sablons Bay is most important. It is on the numerous Isles and Islets in the neighbourhood of this Coast, that the greater part of the fishing establishments for the stationery Seal fishery are situated.

1855.¹⁹

As the season was now far advanced, it was impossible for me to visit all the fishing stations on the coast of Labrador ; the fogs, which are very frequent on these coast, often prevent us from making the land. I nevertheless reached L'Anse aux Blancs Sablons and visited all the fishing stations belonging to Canada on that part of the coast.

In the afternoon I visited Bradore Bay and in the evening went on to Blancs Sablons Bay, where La Canadienne came to anchor. The curing of the herring was going on, on all sides. The fish had been taken in great quantities in both these Bays.

At the establishment of Mr. De Quetteville they were preparing to ship to Jersey 1000 barrels of this excellent fish, so well known as the Labrador herring. Messrs. Le Boutilliers and brothers had 500 barrels at Wood Island. About 1,200 barrels had been taken by the inhabitants of the coast, and the fishermen from the Magdalen Islands and the Lower Provinces had carried away more than 5,000 barrels.

* * * *

The Government of Newfoundland sent an officer this year to Labrador, to collect, upon all goods and produce imported into that part of the coast which is within their jurisdiction, the same duties which are paid on their admission into the Island of Newfoundland.

I had not the pleasure of meeting that officer, but I know that he applied to several proprietors and agents of establishments situated near our frontier, at Blancs Sablons Bay, and that on their refusal to pay the duties, he delivered to them a copy of the tariff of Newfoundland and other papers relating to his mission, with an intimation that next year the Government of Newfoundland would, in his opinion, send to Labrador, with the officer of customs, an armed force sufficient to enable him to seize all goods on which the duties should be refused to be paid.

The house of Le Boutillier and Brothers own an establishment on the island of Bonaventure, opposite Percé, and others at Wood Island and Forteau, in the Straits of Belleisle. The last named is not in Canada. The business done by these two houses is considerable, amounting probably to $200,000 ; that of Le Boutillier and Brothers to $150,000. The men in their employ are numbered by hundreds. Each establishment is composed of half a score large buildings, timber built, and in good order, serving to store goods, cordage, fishing tackle, provisions and cured fish, the last mentioned article awaiting shipment to a foreign market.

Canada extends on the Straits of Belleisle as far as Anse aux Blancs Sablons, at the head of which is the river which marks the line of separation between the part of Labrador belonging to Canada and that part which is under the jurisdiction of Newfoundland.

Anse aux Blancs Sablons is situated in 51° 25' north latitude, and in 57° 10' longitude west of Greenwich. It is about a mile in depth by a mile and three quarters wide.

Wood Island, on which are situated three considerable cod fishing establishments, and Green Island, at present uninhabited, but near which there are excellent fishing grounds, shelter it from the south east wind, while the mainland protects it from those from the east, north and north east winds.

L'ANSE AUX BLANCS SABLONS.

POINT AU POT.

Mr. Martin Parent is owner at this place of a stationary seal fishery, which yields him, annually, from 160 to 300 seals, besides 25 barrels of herring.

Mr. Thomas Lavallée is owner of a cod fishing station, which yields 250 quintals of cod and 100 barrels of herring.

²¹ Report of P. Fortin for 1857. Appendix 31 to the Journals of the Legislative Assembly. Session, 1858.

FOND DE L'ANSE.

Mr. Phillip LeBrocq is owner of a cod fishery here in which he employs fourteen fishing boats and forty-five men.

The average yield is 1,750 quintals of cod, 4 tons of oil and 350 barrels of herring.

Mr. LeBrocq owns a barque of 200 tons burthen in which he sends his fish to the European Market.

WOOD ISLAND.

Messrs. Le Boutillier and Brothers own a flourishing fishing establishment here, which gives occupation to seventy men and nineteen boats.

Yield of the fishery, 2,400 quintals of cod.

” ” ” 24 barrels of oil.

” ” ” 250 barrels of herring.

South of Wood Island is a stationary seal fishery belonging to Messrs. Le Boutillier which brings them in from 150 to 200 seals annually.

Total population of the north coast from Godbout River to Anse aux Blancs Sablons, 1,225.

On the 5th, I visited the fishing establishment of l'Anse des Dunes at Long Point, of the Little Harbour, at White Sand Bay and Wood Island....

At La Pointe aux Pots the fishing was also successful. At the old establishment of Lebrocq, now belonging to Fenning and Co., fourteen boats were employed, and at the estai lishment of Le Boutillier and Brothers, at Wood Island, nineteen boats.

[47] We left in the afternoon and arrived in Blancs Sablons Cove at 10 o'clock p.m.

On the 23rd, I visited Fruing & Co.'s establishment—Mr. Fall, the agent, paid me the duties on the goods in their store. I next settled a difficulty between two fishermen residing at the bay, respecting the possession of a piece of land, and then proceeded to Little Harbor where I visited the vessels lying there, and the fishing establishments. Tranquility prevailed everywhere.

²² Annual Report of Pierre Fortin. Season of 1858. Printed by Order of the Legislative Assembly, Toronto, 1859.

²³ Annual Reports of the Superintendants of Fisheries for Upper and Lower Canada . . . also that of Pierre Fortin for 1859. Quebec, 1860, p. 47.

In the evening I crossed over to Wood Island, and went to Messrs. Le Boutillier & Brothers' establishment, and requested the agent to pay the duty on the goods I noticed in their store, all of which appeared to be foreign merchandize. He said that being under the impression that the whole of Wood Island belonged to Newfoundland, in as much as a Custom-house officer of that island had called two years before to collect the Customs duties, he could not accede to my request, until I gave him positive proof that the island formed part of the territory of Canada. For my part, I did not think it proper to act with severity and seize the goods before receiving further instructions from the Commissioner of Customs.

Having landed the supplies for the Light houses at Forteau and Belleisle, I resumed my duties on the 29th in the afternoon in Blancs Sablons Bay, where I visited all the fishing establishments. The house of Le Boutillier and Brothers had 36 boats there, engaged in the cod-fishery ; Dequitteville on Wood Island, and Captain Hulin, 20 boats. On the mainland, the house of Dequitteville employed 54 boats ; Fruing and Co., 24 ; Lavallée, 2 ; and different outfitters of Long Point, 12. In these establishments, not less than 800 men are employed, including fishermen and salters ; besides these there were 40 schooners, chiefly from Nova Scotia, at anchor in the Bay, and engaged in cod-fishing.

[13] On the 21st I continued my journey in the boat, and went to the River Metagamu, where La Canadienne came to pick me up ; we then touched at Little Mecatina and at Whale's Head, and in the evening, the wind being very favourable, we continued our voyage, coming to an anchor the next morning at l'Anse aux Blancs Sablons.

* * * *

The duties of my office and those imposed upon me by the taking of the census, detained me up to the 29th in l'Anse aux Blancs Sablons and in Bradore Bay.

As in the preceding years, I visited all the posts, and tried to collect useful information respecting the fisheries.

There never had been seen a greater quantity of cod than this year in that part of the Strait of Belle Isle. Summer fishing had begun on the 20th June, and closed on the 28th July ; and, consequently, had lasted 44 days. But out of those 44 days, on account of the bad weather, our fishermen could fish but 34, and I may give an idea of the enormous quantity of cod caught in the neighbourhood of l'Anse aux Blancs Sablons, either by our own fishermen or by those of the Nova Scotia schooners, by stating that 33 boats employed at l'Isle à Bois by Messrs. Le Boutillier & Bros., during that time caught 408,257 cod.

[44] On the afternoon of the 26th June, we again set off for Forteau, and this time again the ice prevented us from reaching that place ; we were obliged to anchor under the lee of Wood Island. But the same evening the ice, brought down by the sea, compelled us to get away from the land for the night ; I had been able, however, to land on Wood Island for an hour and visit Mr. Alfred LeBoutillier, the agent at the largest fishing station on that island.

There were in Anse aux Blancs Sablons and in Bradore Bay about the same number of fishermen as last year.

The English Government every year sends one or two frigates or corvettes to protect the coast of Labrador fisheries, which belong to Newfoundland, as well in the Straits of Belle Isle as on the Atlantic shore, as far as the establishments of the Hudson's Bay Company ; it is seldom, however, that they visit the shores of Canada, and when they do, they rarely come further than Anse aux Blancs Sablons or Bradore Bay. The latter place had been visited by the usual number (from 200 to 250) of schooners from Nova Scotia and Prince Edward's Island, but a smaller number than usual ,of American schooners had been observed.

With the exception of a difficulty between two persons at Anse aux Blancs Sablons, which I disposed of, the public peace had not been disturbed in those parts. [62-76]

[29] On the 5th I visited the fishing establishments of Messrs. Le Boutillier Bros., on Isle à Bois, and those of Fruing & Co., at the foot of the bay, where I was surprised to learn that on the 20th July last, two armed schooners, employed by the Customs of Newfoundland for the protection of the fisheries on the coast of Labrador, which is under the jurisdiction of this province, had anchored at Blanc Sablon. Justice Benjamin Sutherland was on board one of these schooners, and Mr. J. Winter, Collector of Customs, on the other.

The last-named gentleman went to the above establishments, and notwithstanding the refusal of the agents, in the first instance (by reason of these establishments having to this date being recognized as being on Canadian territory), he succeeded to collect custom duties on the goods then in store :—£178 4s. 8d. stg., at Mr. Le Boutillier Bros.' establishment, and t62 Os. 3d. stg., at that of Mr. Fruing & Co.

I was, moreover, informed that dues had been collected on empty barrels, intended to be filled with fish, and on salt on board the “ Canadian ” and other provincial schooners, anchored in Blancs Sablons bay. In my quality of customs' officer for these shores, I have reported to the Commissioner of Customs, for the information of His Excellency the Governor General, all the circumstances relating to the acts of an officer of the government of Newfoundland at places which, according to a diagram furnished to Inc by the Board of [30] Public Works, through the honorable the Provincial Secretary of the province, are entirely inside of our Custom boundary.

We found 118 schooners in Blancs Sablons bay and at Green Island, engaged in the herring fishery, which was abundant, although the fish were generally small. Codfishing had not been good in the above places and had begun very late.

Mr. Le Boutillier of Isle à Bois, laid a complaint before me to the effect that about twenty of his men were refusing to continue codfishing as they had agreed with him, under the pretence that the fishing was not good enough. Having met them, I explained to them all the obligation under which they were to fulfil the terms of their engagement, under the penalty of a fine. Mr. Le Boutillier told them that he would not detain them more than five days if the fishing did not improve ; upon this, they put all their boats to sea and went on with their work, to the great satisfaction of the head of the establishment [31-54].

[12] During my visit at Blanc Sablon Bay, and while engaged in visiting the ports which have always been considered as a part of the territory of Canada, those namely of Fruing & Co., at the head of the bay, and Le Boutillier & Co., on Wood-Island, I was informed that the officers of customs, of the Labrador coast, which belongs to the Government of Newfoundland, had been to those establishments, and had demanded from the persons in charge, the duties payable on the goods which they had imported from Europe this year, amounting to a considerable sum, under pain of having them confiscated, as they had been last year. I shall remark, further, that the said officers claimed the whole of Blanc Sablon Bay, as well as Wood Island, as belonging to Newfoundland, in virtue of a clause in an Imperial Act, which declares that the western boundary of the territory belonging to Newfoundland, on the Labrador coast, shall be in 51° 25' N. and 57° 09' W. (The words in Italics are extracted from the Commission of the Governor General.) [13]

On 25th July, I went on board of the armed cutter “Hawk,” Stephen Marsh, Esquire, Commander, belonging to the Government of Newfoundland. That gentleman, who is the Commissioner of the Fisheries, told me that he had received orders from his Government to consider the western boundary of the territory belonging to Newfoundland, as lying on the meridian of 50° 9' W. from Greenwich, and that accordingly the whole of Blanc Sablon Bay and Wood Island lie within his jurisdiction. Now, as my letter of instructions from the Department, dated 20th June, 1864, directed me to treat Wood Island as a possession of Canada, a conflict of jurisdiction arose, creating for the inhabitants of these parts, a state of things full of difficulty and even peril, as they did not know to which Government obedience was due, and their industrial as well as their commercial pursuits suffered in consequence.

If I had been at Blanc Sablon Bay when the Newfoundland officers of customs made their visit to the establishments on Wood Island to collect duties, I should have resisted their claims, as required by my instructions, and should have made use of all the means at my disposal to prevent them from levying contributions on fishing establishments, which, up to that time, had always been considered as belonging to Canada. The House of Le Boutillier and brothers, at Wood Island, were forced to pay, this year again, £60 sterling for duties, and the House of Fruing & Co., of Blanc Sablon Bay, £46 8s. 11d. sterling. But as an undesirable conflict of jurisdiction might have ensued, and as the claims of the Newfoundland officers of Customs will probably be renewed next year, and it might happen again, as it has happened in the present year, that I should not be on the spot in time to protect our traders and fishermen against these encroachments on our territory, and it is very desirable to put an end to these conflicts of jurisdiction, I take the liberty of recommending that the Governments of Canada and Newfoundland come to an understanding, with a view to a final arrangement of the matter in dispute, and that monuments should be planted on the division line, by competent persons, to show, in an unmistakable manner, the boundary line (East) of Canada, in Blanc Sablon Bay. [18] At Anse aux Blancs Sablons, at Woody Island and at Green Island, the products of the cod fishery had, up to that time, been below the average. However, the cod had appeared in larger numbers for some day past, and there was ground for hope that the fishery might yet yield average results. [19]

[19] At 5.20 p.m., we followed up our course to the eastward, and the next day, at 4 a.m., we came to anchor at Ile à Bois. In Anse aux Blancs Sablons I found 15 schooners, and at Green Island 8 others, all engaged at cod-fishing ; among the latter there were four French schooners. I boarded each of them, and, after having told their masters that they had no right to fish on the British shores, ordered them to depart as soon as the weather would permit them to do so. [20]

On the 13th and 14th the weather was bad. I went to Ile à Bois, and a second time to Green Island, then to Bradore, to see that the French schooners had left our shores. [21-68]

P. FORTIN'S REPORT.

[8] On the 12th, in the evening, we left this Station, and the next day we arrived at Meccatina.

From that place I continued along the North Shore as far as Blanc Sablons, stopping at all the [9] principal places, as may be seen by the extracts from the log-book, and granting Fishing Licenses wherever it was necessary to do so.

There we met twelve schooners, nine of which were from Esquimaux Point, one from Nova Scotia, and two from Newfoundland in the Harbour at Sheep Bay five, four of which were from the Magdalen Islands, and the other from Nova Scotia ; in Blanc Sablon Bay forty vessels, one of which was a

brig, one was a brigantine, and thirty-eight were fishing schooners. [9-17]

DOCUMENTS RELATIVE TO CIVIL DIVISIONS OF THE PROVINCE OF LOWER CANADA (AND QUEBEC) AND TO THE PROVISIONAL DISTRICTS OF CANADA AFFECTING TERRITORY WITHIN THE LABRADOR PENINSULA, AND TO THE BOUNDARIES OF THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

No. 1492.

PROCLAMATION DIVIDING THE PROVINCE OF LOWER CANADA INTO COUNTIES AND

Alured Clarke,

GEORGE THE THIRD by the Grace of God, of Great Britain France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. To all Our loving Subjects whom these presents may concern. WHEREAS in pursuance of an Act of Parliament lately made and provided, passed in the Thirty first Year of Our Reign and of Authority by Us given for that purpose, Our late Province of Quebec is become divided into the two Provinces of Upper Canada and Lower Canada, and Our Lieutenant Governor of the said Province of Lower Canada by Power from Us derived, is authorised in the absence of Our Right Trusty and Wellbeloved Guy Lord Dorchester, Captain General and Governor in Chief of Our said Province of Lower Canada to divide the said Province of Lower Canada into Districts, Counties, Circles or Towns and Townships for the purpose of effectuating the intent of the said Act of Parliament, and to declare and appoint the number of Representatives to be chosen by each to serve in the Assembly of the said Province. KNOW YE THEREFORE, that our Trusty and Wellbeloved ALURED CLARKE, Our Lieutenant Governor of Our said Province of Lower Canada, in the absence of Our said Governor in Chief, hath and by this Our Proclamation doth divide the said Province of

Lower Canada into Counties, Cities, and Towns, and declare and appoint the number of the Representatives of them and each of them to be as herein after limited, named, declared and appointed, that is to say, that the first of the said Counties be all that part of the said Province on the southerly side of the River of St. Lawrence, now called the District of Gaspé, as described in Our Royal Proclamation under the Great Seal of Our late Province of Quebec, bearing date the twenty-fourth day of July in the twenty-eighth year of Our Reign.

* * * *

That the nineteenth of the said Counties to be called Quebec, shall comprehend all that part of Our said Province on the northerly side of the River St. Lawrence between the easterly side of the said County of Hampshire, and a line running north north-west from the southwesterly angle of a tract of land commonly called the Seigniori of Beaupré, near the mouth of the River Montmorency, together with all the Islands in the said River St. Lawrence nearest to the said County, and in the whole or in part fronting the same, (except the Island of Orleans,) including within the said County the tract of land comprehended within the limits of the City and Town of Quebec herein after described, and that the twentieth of the said Counties to be called Northumberland, shall comprehend all the rest of Our said Province on the northerly side of the River St. Lawrence, and on the easterly side of the said County of Quebec, together with the Island of Coudre and all the other Islands in the said River St. Lawrence nearest to the said County, and in the whole or in part fronting the same, except the Island of Orleans.

* * * *

AND KNOW YE ALSO that Our said Lieutenant Governor hath also declared and appointed, and doth hereby declare and appoint that the several Counties of Cornwallis, Devon, Hertford, Dorchester, Buckingham-shire, Richelieu, Surrey, Kent, Huntingdon, York, Montreal, Effingham, Leinster, Warwick, St. Maurice, Hampshire, Quebec and Northumberland, afore-mentioned, shall and may be represented in the Assembly of the said Province by two Members or Representatives to be duly chosen in and for each of the same Counties respectively ; and the Counties of Gaspé, Bedford and Orleans, by only one Member or Representative for each of the said Counties respectively ; and the Cities or Towns of Quebec and Montreal respectively, by four Members or Representatives for each of the said Cities or Towns, to wit, two for each Subdivision thereof respectively ; and the Town or Borough of Three Rivers, by two Members or Representatives for the said Town or Borough ; and the Town or Borough of William Henry, by only one Member or Representative for the said Town or Borough. Of which Our loving Subjects and all others concerned are to take due notice and govern themselves accordingly. In Testimony whereof, We have caused these Our Letters to be made Patent and the Great Seal of Our said Province of Lower Canada to be hereunto affixed. Witness our Trusty and Well beloved

CAP. 73.

Preamble.

ACT to make a new and more convenient subdivision of the Province into Counties, for the purpose of effecting a more equal Representation thereof in the Assembly than heretofore.

14th March 1829. Presented for His Majesty's Assent, and reserved " for the signification of His Majesty's pleasure thereon."

17th August, 1829. Assented to by His Majesty in His Council.

5th October, 1829. The Royal Assent signified by the Proclamation of His Excellency the Administrator of the Government.

WHEREAS the present division of this Province, for the purpose of electing Members to serve in the Assembly thereof, as made by a certain Proclamation, issued by virtue of and in conformity to the provisions of the Statute in that case made and provided, by His Excellency Alured Clarke, Esquire, Lieutenant Governor, then administering the Government of this Province, bearing date at the Castle of St. Lewis, the seventh day of May, in the year one thousand, seven hundred and ninety-two, is, by reason of the great extension of the old settlements and the formation of new settlements in remote parts of the Province, become inconvenient :—And whereas the appointment of Fifty Members to serve in the Assembly, among the said divisions respectively, is, from the aforementioned causes, and the increase of the population of the Province since the date of the said Proclamation, become unequal and insufficient, for remedy thereof, and to remove as speedily and equitably as may be, the causes of the existing complaints, and

L'honorable Secrétaire d'Etat, Ottawa.

COPY OF A REPORT OF A COMMITTEE OF THE HONOURABLE THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL, DATED THE 21ST NOVEMBER, 1894. APPROVED BY THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR THE 30TH NOVEMBER, 1894.

RESPECTING THE SETTLEMENT OF THE NORTH AND THE NORTH-EASTERLY BOUNDARY OF THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

The Honourable the Commissioner of Crown Lands, in a report dated the 21st of November instant (1894), sets forth : that the important question of the North and North-eastern Boundary of the Province of Quebec, although submitted on various occasions to the Federal authorities at Ottawa, remains up to the present unsettled, notwithstanding the fact that the pretensions of the Province of Ontario, for an analogous extension of territory, have been recognized by the Parliament of Canada and the Imperial Parliament.

That as a matter of justice and right, the Province of Quebec is fully justified in persisting as it does persist, in the views embodied in the resolutions of the Quebec Legislative Assembly of 1886, having reference thereto, copy of which has already been transmitted to His Excellency the Governor General in Council, and in claiming, as it does claim, for reasons similar or somewhat similar to those successfully urged by the Province of Ontario, for an extension to its boundaries, all the territory situate north of the height of land, as far as the northerly limits held by the French Government, at the time of the negotiations preliminary to the signature of the treaty of Utrecht in 1713, and more particularly the territory defined in the aforesaid resolutions, as follows :—

“All the country bounded on the west by a prolongation of the present boundary line between Ontario and Quebec to the south shore of James Bay, and by the shore line of this bay as far as the mouth of East Main River, on the north by the right bank of East Main River from its mouth to its source, thence by a line drawn to the northernmost waters of the Grand River Esquimaux, Ashuanipi or Hamilton, and by the left bank of this river to its mouth in Rigolet Bay (Hamilton's Inlet), on the east and north-east by the meridian of the easternmost point of the source of the River St. Paul or Little Esquimaux, and again on the east by this same river to the fifty-second degree of north latitude, following this parallel to its intersection by the meridian of Anse au Blanc Sablon, the present recognized eastern boundary of this province.”

That the lack of information relating to this extent of country is one of the explanations given for the delays which have occurred in the settlement of this just claim ;

That within the last three years exhaustive explorations have been effected by competent officers of the Geological Commission of Canada, through the principal waters system of that region, and that the Government of Canada is no doubt at present in possession of the necessary data regarding the geography and resources of that country.

p. 4006

That these studies being now completed, the necessary legislation can be adopted by the Parliament of Canada, and the Honourable Commissioner recommends that a despatch be sent through His Honour the Lieutenant Governor to the Honourable the Secretary of State for Canada, praying that the Government of Canada submit at the next session of Parliament the adoption of a measure sanctioning the North Eastern Boundary of the Province of Quebec as laid down in the Resolutions of the Quebec Legislative Assembly of 1886 above cited.

Clerk, Executive Council.

CERTIFIED COPY OF A REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL, APPROVED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF THE 8TH JULY, 1896.

On a Memorandum dated 6th July, 1896, from the Minister of the Interior, submitting the annexed Report from the Deputy Minister of the Interior, having relation to the subject of the Northern, North-western and North-eastern boundaries of the Province of Quebec, and containing a proposed description of the same.

The Committee on the recommendation of the Minister of the Interior advise that the said report be approved, and that the necessary steps be taken to obtain the acceptance by the Government of Quebec and the ratification by Parliament of the proposed description of the North-western, Northern and North-eastern Boundaries of the Province of Quebec therein contained.

RODOLPHE BOUDREAU,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

Department of the Interior,
Ottawa,

29th January, 1896.

(P.C. 2623a.)

The Hon. T. MAYNE DALY, Minister of the Interior.

SIR,—I have the honour to report that I have, in accordance with your request, given careful consideration to the various references which have been made from Council of despatches from His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Quebec, having relation to the subject of the Northern, North-western and North-eastern boundaries of that Province.

p. 4007

The views of the Provincial authorities as to what these boundaries should be are set forth in a report, dated 4th June, 1886, made by a select committee of the Legislative Assembly

“ to consider the question of the Northern and North-eastern limits of the Province of Quebec, and the necessary measures to be taken in order that such limits do include the territories to which it is entitled by establishing and defining such rights.” The correspondence which has passed between the Province and the Government of Canada in this relation has been laid before Parliament, and shows in effect that what the Province contends for is the continuation to the shore of James Bay of the due north line from the head of Lake Temiscamingue which already constitutes the Eastern boundary of the Province of Ontario ; thence along the shores of James Bay to the mouth of the East Main River, and along that River to its source ; thence by a right line to the most northerly waters of the Ashuanipi or Hamilton River ; thence descending that stream until it intersects the boundary of Newfoundland territory in Labrador ; and finally following the last named boundary to Blanc Sablon on the north shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

This proposal, with the correspondence arising out of it, was referred to the Department of the Interior in December, 1889. I then reported that next to nothing was known about the East Main and Hamilton Rivers ; that like all other rivers they undoubtedly had several sources and branches, and that before they could be adopted as a boundary it would be necessary to determine in each case which of the branches is to be adopted as the dividing line. It was then regarded as possible that some of the branches of both streams might extend far away to the north, and include territory which it was not contemplated by either Government should be included in the Province of Quebec. Even if both Governments were agreed as to the propriety of adopting the Legislative Assembly's suggestion on its merits, the branches and sources of the respective rivers to be adopted for the purposes of the boundary, and to be connected by a right line, should first be agreed upon.

With a view to the acquisition of as much as possible of the information which was thus indicated as being necessary, Mr. William Ogilvie was despatched to James Bay in the spring of 1890. His survey settled definitely and affirmatively a point upon which up to that time there was more or less doubt ; that is, as to whether the Temiscamingue meridian, although actually made the Eastern boundary of the Province of Ontario by an Act of the Imperial Parliament on the assumption that it intersected James Bay at the point indicated upon all existing maps, really did touch the waters of the Bay at all. Mr. Ogilvie fixed the point at which the Temiscamingue line reaches the waters of the Bay, made a reliable survey of the coast-line from that point to the mouth of the East Main River, and determined the latitude of the mouth of the River. In 1892 Mr. A. P. Low of the Geological Survey connected by a micrometer survey Ogilvie's station at the mouth of the East Main River with Lake Mistassini, 308 miles of the East Main River being included in this survey. Again in 1893 Mr. Low continued his survey from the point on the river which he reached the previous season up to the head of Patamik Lake, from which he went to Ungava Bay by the Koksoak or Ungava River, and from thence to Hamilton Inlet, where he spent the winter. In the spring of 1894 he surveyed the Hamilton River from Goose Bay to a point some distance up the Ashuanipi branch, and returned to that section last year with the object of obtaining further particulars respecting the country about the head waters of the Manicougan River.

The Government are now in possession of sufficient information to show that the proposal made by the Government of Quebec in 1886 is a practicable one.

I do not contend that the boundary proposed is a legal boundary, but on the contrary admit that it is a conventional one. The true limit of the Province of Quebec on the North would probably be the boundary between New France and the territories of Great Britain on the northern part of the continent. There was some difference of opinion between France and England as to where the boundary should be, and the commissioners appointed to decide the question never reported. Even if that boundary had been finally established it could not now be adhered to, because in the interval, after an arrangement and a re-arrangement, the Imperial Government finally detached from the Province of Quebec and placed under the jurisdiction of Newfoundland the strip along the Atlantic coast extending from Anse Sablon to Hudson Strait described by " Letters Patent " dated 28th March, 1876, as follows : " The Coast of Labrador from the entrance of Hudson's Strait to a line to be drawn due north and south from Anse Sablon on the said coast to the 52nd degree of north latitude, and all the Islands adjacent to that part of the Coast of Labrador."

What therefore is now aimed at is a conventional line which will also be convenient and easily ascertained, and it is believed that in the description appended to this memorandum that aim has been attained, the only portion of the lines it describes which would appear to require to be established by any further actual survey being the right line connecting the waters of the East Main River with the water of the Ashuanipi. The suggestion made by the Hon. David Mills when this matter was discussed in the House of Commons in 1893 was that the Rupert River should be the boundary, his contention being that the territory lying to the south of it would be equal in extent and it might be presumed superior in value and importance to the territory which the Province of Quebec would yield to Canada north of that river. But the Rupert River would serve as a boundary only in respect of the territory lying between Lake Mistassini and James Bay, and there would be a great tract of country lying between Lake Mistassini and the Hamilton River which would have to be connected by an artificial line, the cost of surveying which it is impossible to estimate, but which would in any event be very great. All that is known about that part of the country, including the exploration of Mr. Lowe, would indicate that neither its soil nor its climate make it suitable for agricultural or pastoral purposes ; that its supply of timber is of no great value ; and there would appear to be no indications from its geological structure of much available mineral wealth. The conventional boundary proposed has the advantage of being for five-sixths of its distance a natural boundary which needs no surveying to establish it, and it gives to the Province of Quebec not any more, and probably a good deal less territory than it would have obtained had the Commissioners appointed to define the boundary between the French and British possessions in the Northern part of the continent arrived at a decision. Moreover, it is substantially the proposition of the Province itself. The Provincial Government and Legislature originally described the territory which they thought should be included as lying south of the East Main River followed to its source, the last mentioned point to be connected with the most northerly source of the Hamilton River. At that time, if I am not very much mistaken, the sources of both rivers were assumed to be situated geographically, in relative proximity to each other—a theory which is now no longer entertained. It would take many years of exploration and the expenditure of a good deal of money to settle what are the true sources of the East Main and the Hamilton Rivers respectively, but as I read the correspondence which has passed upon the subject, the boundary line as hereinafter described will meet the views of the authorities of the Province to all intents and purposes. I therefore respectfully submit it for your consideration, and recommend that the necessary steps be taken to obtain its acceptance by the Government of Quebec and its ratification by the Parliament of Canada.

Proposed description of the North Western, Northern and North Eastern boundaries of Quebec :—

Commencing at the head of Lake Temiscamingue thence along the province of Ontario due North to the shore of the part of Hudson Bay commonly known as James Bay, and thence north-easterly, following upon the said shore to the mouth of the East Main River, and thence easterly ascending along the middle of the said river up to the confluence of the Branch thereof flowing from Patamisk Lake, and thence ascending along the middle of the said branch up to Patamisk Lake, and thence along the middle of the said Lake to the most northerly point thereof, the said point being about fifteen miles south from the Hudson's Bay Company's post on Lake Nichigun and approximately in Latitude fifty-two degrees and fifty-five minutes north, and longitude seventy degrees and forty-two minutes west of Greenwich ; thence due east along the parallel of latitude of the said point to the intersection of the river discharging the waters of Lake Ashuanipi, which river is known under the names of Hamilton or Ashuanipi or Great Esquimaux River, and thence descending along the middle of the said river through Menihek, Marble, Astray and Dyke Lakes to the most southerly outlet of Dyke Lake, and thence along the middle of the said outlet to Birch Lake, and thence along the middle of Birch and Sandgirt Lakes to the most southerly outlet of Sandgirt Lake, and thence along the middle of the southern channel of the Hamilton River to Flour Lake, and thence along the middle of Flour Lake to its outlet, and thence along the middle of Hamilton River to the Bay du Rigolet or Hamilton Inlet, and thence easterly along the middle of the said bay or inlet

OF THE HONOURABLE THE PRIVY COUNCIL (DOMINION), APPROVED BY HIS EXCELLENCY ON THE 2nd OCTOBER, 1895.

Ref. 389,977 on 37,906

On a Report, dated 26th July, 1895, from the Minister of the Interior, submitting that it is expedient for the convenience of settlers in the unorganized and unnamed districts of the North-West Territories¹ and for postal purposes, that the whole of such Territories should be divided into provisional districts, and recommending that four such districts be established, to be named Ungava, Franklin, Mackenzie and Yukon.

The Minister further recommends that the Boundaries of such districts shall be as follows :—

1. UNGAVA.—The District of Ungava (coloured brown on the map hereto attached), of indefinite extent, to be bounded as follows :—

On the North by Hudson Strait ; on the West by the East Coast of Hudson Bay and James Bay ; on the South by the Province of Quebec ; on the East by the boundary between Canada and the Dependency of Newfoundland, on the Coast of Labrador.

And with regard to the Islands in Hudson Strait, Hudson Bay and James Bay, it is to be understood that only those islands which lie within a distance of three sea mile from the Coast are to be included in the District ; all outside of this limit are to be under the control of the Dominion Government.

2. FRANKLIN.—The District of Franklin (coloured pink on the map hereto attached), of indefinite extent, to be bounded as follows :—

Beginning at Cape Best, at the entrance to Hudson Strait from the Atlantic ; thence westerly through said Strait, Fox Channel, Gulf of Boothia, Franklin Strait, Ross Strait, Simpson Strait, Victoria Strait, Dease Strait, Coronation Gulf and Dolphin and Union Strait, to a point in the Arctic Sea, in Longitude about 125° 30' West, and in Latitude about 71° North ; thence northerly including Baring Land, Prince Patrick Island, and the Polynea Islands ; thence north-easterly to the " farthest of Commander Markham's and Lieutenant Parr's sledge journey " in 1876, in Longitude about 63½° West, and Latitude about 83¼ North ; thence southerly through Robeson Channel, Kennedy Channel, Smith Sound, Baffin Bay, and Davis Strait to the place of beginning.

EXTRACT FROM ORDER IN COUNCIL (DOMINION) OF THE 18th DECEMBER, 1897, ESTABLISHING PROVISIONAL DISTRICTS IN THE UNORGANIZED PORTIONS OF CANADA.

On a Report, dated 10th December, 1897, from the Minister of the Interior, stating that by Order in Council of the 2nd October, 1895, the unorganized portions of Canada were divided into Provisional Districts, four new districts being created and changes made in the boundaries of one of the old districts. It was further provided that at the next session of Parliament, a Bill should be introduced having for its object the addition of territory to the District of Keewatin. Shortly after the date of the above Order deficiencies were found in the description of the district boundaries, and as doubts existed as to the form of the proposed amendments to the Keewatin Act, no steps were taken to carry out the directions of the Order.

The Minister recommends that the Order in Council of the 2nd of October, 1895, be cancelled, and that such legislation as may be necessary be introduced at the next session of Parliament to authorize the division of the portions of Canada not comprised within any Province into nine Provisional Districts in accordance with the annexed description and map.¹

The Minister adds that should these recommendations be approved, the Districts of Assiniboia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Athabasca will remain as they were established by the Order in Council of the 2nd October, 1895, and previous Orders, but the boundaries of Ungava, Keewatin, Mackenzie, Yukon and Franklin will be slightly changed.

The Committee submit the above recommendations for Your Excellency's approval.

To the Honourable (Signed) JOHN J. McGEE,

PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

[Assented to 15th January, 1898].

WHEREAS the act 34-35 Victoria, chapter 28, of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, “ An Act respecting the establishment of Provinces in the Dominion of Canada,” enacts that the Parliament of Canada may, from time to time, with the consent of the Legislature of any Province, increase, diminish or otherwise alter the limits of such Province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said Legislature, and may, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase, diminution or alteration of territory ;

Consent of Legislature to certain boundaries.

WHEREAS it has been agreed, between the Government of Canada and that of this Province, that the north-western, northern and north-eastern limits of the Province of Quebec should be those hereinafter indicated, and it is expedient to give effect to such agreement :

Therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislature of Quebec, enacts as follows :—

1. The Legislature of the Province of Quebec hereby consents that the north-western, northern and north-eastern limits of the Province of boundaries. Quebec be the following :—

“ Commencing at the head of Lake Temiscamingue, thence along the eastern boundary of the Province of Ontario due north to the shore of the part of Hudson Bay commonly known as James Bay, and thence north-easterly following upon the said shore to the mouth of the East Main River, and thence easterly ascending along the middle of the said river up to the confluence of the branch thereof flowing from Patamisk Lake, and thence ascending along the middle of the said branch up to Patamisk Lake, and thence along the middle of the said Lake to the most northerly point thereof, the said point being about fifteen miles south from the Hudson Bay Company's post on Lake County of Saguenay.

WHEREAS the north-eastern, northern and north-western frontier of the Province of Quebec, which served as the boundary of certain counties of this Province, was definitively established by the act of the Parliament of Canada, 61 Victoria, chapter 3, in accordance with the consent of the Legislature of Quebec, expressed by the act 61 Victoria, chapter 6 ;

Whereas the aforesaid delimitation of the frontier necessitates a new description of the limits of the said counties :

Therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislature of Quebec, enacts as follows :—

THE QUEBEC BOUNDARIES EXTENSION ACT, 1912, STATUTE OF CANADA, 2 GEORGE V. (1912), CAP. 45.

Short Title.

AN ACT TO EXTEND THE BOUNDARIES OF THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

[Assented to 1st April, 1912.]

extended.

WHEREAS on the thirteenth day of July, one thousand nine hundred and eight, the House of Commons resolved that the limits of the province of Quebec should be increased by the extension of the boundaries of the province northwards so as to include the territory hereinafter described, as in the said resolution is more particularly set out, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the Legislature of Quebec and by the Parliament of Canada : Therefore, subject to the consent of the said Legislature, His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows :—

1. This Act may be cited as The Quebec Boundaries Extension Act, 1912.

Population as
tion.

2. The limits of the province of Quebec are hereby increased so that the boundaries thereof shall include, in addition to the present territory of the said province, the territory bounded and described as follows :—Commencing at the point at the mouth of East Main river where it empties into James bay, the said point being the western termination of the northern boundary of the province of Quebec as established by chapter 3 of the statutes of 1898, intituled An Act respecting the north-western, northern and north-eastern boundaries of the province of Quebec ; thence northerly and easterly along the shores of Hudson bay and Hudson strait ; thence southerly, easterly and northerly along the shore of Ungava bay and the shore of the said strait ; thence easterly along the shore of the said strait to the boundary of the territory over which the island of Newfoundland has lawful jurisdiction ; thence south-easterly along the westerly boundary of the said last mentioned territory to the middle of Bay du Rigolet or Hamilton Inlet ; thence westerly along the northern boundary of the province of Quebec as established by the said Act to the place of commencement ; and all the land embraced by the said description shall, from and after the commencement of this Act, be added to the province of Quebec, and shall, from and after the said commencement, form and be part of the said province of Quebec upon the following terms and conditions of Quebec shall be excluded in ascertaining the population of the said province for the purposes of any readjustment of representation of the other provinces consequent upon any census ;

(b) That in the general census of the population of Canada which is required to be taken in the year one thousand nine hundred and twenty-one and in every tenth year thereafter the population of the territory hereby added to the province of Quebec shall be distinguished from that of the said province as heretofore constituted, and the representation of the said territory in the House of Commons shall be determined according to the rules enacted by section 51 of “ The British North America Act, 1867,” regulating the representation of the provinces other than Quebec ;

(c) That the province of Quebec will recognize the rights of the Indian inhabitants in the territory above described to the same extent, and will obtain surrenders of such rights in the same manner, as the Government of Canada has heretofore recognized such rights and has obtained surrender thereof, and the said province shall bear and satisfy all charges and expenditure in connection with or arising out of such surrenders ;

(d) That no such surrender shall be made or obtained except with the approval of the Governor in Council ;

(e) That the trusteeship of the Indians in the said territory, and the management of any lands now or hereafter reserved for their use, shall remain in the Government of Canada subject to the control of Parliament.

3. Nothing in this Act shall in any way prejudice or affect the rights or properties of the Hudson's Bay Company as contained in the conditions under which that company surrendered Ruperts Land to the Crown.

4. This Act shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation C. of the Governor in Council published in The Canada Gazette, but such proclamation shall not be made until after the Legislature of Quebec shall have consented to the increase of the limits of the province herein provided for, and agreed to the terms, conditions and provisions aforesaid.¹

[3 April, 1912.]

STATUTE OF QUEBEC, 2 GEORGE V. (1912). CAP. 7.

Preamble.

AN ACT RESPECTING THE EXTENSION OF THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC BY THE ANNEXATION OF UNGAVA.

[Assented to 3rd April, 1912.]

WHEREAS the act 34–35 Victoria, chapter 28, of the Parliament of the nited [sic.] Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, “ An Act respecting the establishment of Provinces in the Dominion of Canada,” enacts that the Parliament of Canada may, from time to time, with the consent of the Legislature of any Province, increase, diminish or otherwise alter the limits of such Province, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the said Legislature, and may, with the like consent, make provision respecting the effect and operation of any such increase, diminution or alteration of territory ;

Whereas the Parliament of Canada has passed an act reproduced in the schedule to this act, by which it has declared that the Province of Quebec comprises the territory therein described in addition to its present territory subject to acceptance by the Legislature of Quebec of the terms, conditions and provisions set forth in the said act ;

Whereas in the said act of the Parliament of Canada it is declared that the provisions thereof shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation by the Governor-General of Canada in Council published in the Canada Gazette, but that such proclamation shall not be made until after the Legislature of Quebec shall have consented to the increase of the limits of the Province upon the terms and conditions and subject to the provisions therein stipulated ;

Whereas it is expedient to consent to the change of the limits proposed and to accept the terms, conditions and provisions to which this increase of the said limits is subject :

Therefore, His Majesty, with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and of the Legislative Assembly of Quebec enacts as follows :—

Legislature
consents that certain territory form part of Province,
&c.

Coming into force.

1. The Legislature of the Province of Quebec consents that the territory described in the act of the Parliament of Canada set forth in the schedule to this act, do form part of the Province of Quebec ; the whole on the terms and conditions and subject to the provisions therein set forth, and that proclamation to that effect be made by the Governor-General of Canada in Council, fixing the day on which this change in the boundaries of the Province shall take effect.

2. This act shall come into force on the day of its sanction.

SCHEDULE.

WHEREAS on the thirteenth day of July, one thousand nine hundred and eight, the House of Commons resolved that the limits of the Province of Quebec should be increased by the extension of the boundaries of the province northwards so as to include the territory hereinafter described, as in the said resolution is more particularly set out, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed to by the Legislature of Quebec and by the Parliament of Canada : Therefore, subject to the consent of the said Legislature, His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows :—

1. This Act may be cited as The Quebec Boundaries Extension Act, 1912.

2. The limits of the Province of Quebec are hereby increased so that the boundaries thereof shall include, in addition to the present territory of the said province, the territory bounded and described as follows :—Commencing at the point at the mouth of East Main river where it empties into James Bay, the said point being the western termination of the northern boundary of the Province of Quebec as established by chapter 3 of the statutes of 1898, intituled An Act respecting the north-western, northern and north-eastern boundaries of the province of Quebec ; thence northerly and easterly along the shores of Hudson bay and Hudson strait ; thence southerly, easterly and northerly along the shore of Ungava bay and the shore of the said strait ; thence easterly along the shore of the said strait to the boundary of the territory over which the Island of Newfoundland has lawful jurisdiction ; thence south-easterly along the westerly boundary of the said last mentioned territory to the middle of Bay du Rigolet or Hamilton Inlet ; thence westerly along the northern boundary of the Province of Quebec as established by the said Act to the place of commencement ; and all the land embraced by the said description shall, from and after the commencement of this Act, be added to the Province of Quebec, and shall, from and after the said commencement, form and be part of the said Province of Quebec upon the following terms and conditions and subject to the following provisions :—

(a) That the population of the territory hereby added to the Province of Quebec shall be excluded in ascertaining the population of the said province for the purposes of any readjustment of representation of the other provinces consequent upon any census ;

(b) That in the general census of the population of Canada which is required to be taken in the year one thousand nine hundred and twenty-one and in every tenth year thereafter the population of the territory hereby added to the Province of Quebec shall be distinguished from that of the said province as heretofore constituted, and the representation of the said territory in the House of Commons shall be determined according to the rules enacted by section 51 of “ The British North America Act, 1867,” regulating the representation of the provinces other than Quebec ;

(c) That the Province of Quebec will recognize the rights of the Indian inhabitants in the territory above described to the same extent, and will obtain surrenders of such rights in the same manner, as the Government of Canada has heretofore recognized such rights and has obtained surrender thereof, and the said province shall bear and satisfy all charges and expenditure in connection with or arising out of such surrenders ;

(d) That no such surrender shall be made or obtained except with the approval of the Governor in Council ;

(e) That the trusteeship of the Indians in the said territory, and the management of any lands now or hereafter reserved for their use, shall remain in the Government of Canada subject to the control of Parliament.

3. Nothing in this act shall in any way prejudice or affect the rights or properties of the Hudson's Bay Company as contained in the conditions under which that company surrendered Ruperts Land to the Crown.

4. This Act shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation of the Governor in Council published in The Canada Gazette, but such proclamation shall not be made until after the Legislature of Quebec shall have consented to the increase of the limits of the province herein provided for, and agreed to the terms, conditions and provisions aforesaid.
