(1913, pp. 281-2) I referred to Nachvak as a typical fiord. Professor Daly (1902, p. 230) describes it as “ an excellent type of fiord.” These northern arms of the sea are fiords because their sides are in general straight and parallel ; they bend at sharp angles ; they are often connected into a network by cross valleys which break the plateau into isolated blocks. At the northern end of the Peninsula some of these fiord valleys form narrow straits known as tickles, which extend from shore to shore ; and along the eastern coast the meeting of two fiord valleys often forms a tickle which cuts off part of the land as an island block. That the fiord valleys intersect a plateau is shown by Professor Daly's photographs, figs. 1, 7, 8, 9, 10 & 11 Jt. App. pp. 2539-44. Another fiord characteristic is that on the floors of the valleys there are deep basins which are often deepest inland, and are connected with the sea by a shallow passage over a slightly submerged threshold.

The fiord nature of the northern inlets is shown in the following photographs by Professor Daly— Jt. App. figs. 1, p. 2539 ; fig. 6, p. 2541; figs. 7 & 8, p. 2542 ; fig. 10, p. 2543 ; fig. 12, p. 2544 ; fig. 19, p. 2548.

B. THE SOUTHERN FIARDS.

On the southern part of the coast the inlets differ in shape as their shores are very sinuous. They belong to the category of Fiards, so named after their typical representatives on the Swedish Coast. Fiards agree with fiords in their general plan. Lines drawn along the middle of a group of fiards have a similar arrangement to corresponding lines in a system of fiords. Fiards like fiords occur in areas of hard rocks, have basins which are often deep at their landward end, and are separated from the outer sea by a threshold. They differ from fiords by their margins being very sinuous, with the land projecting into them in many peninsulas, which are often continued by islets, while the valleys that continue the bays inland often contain lakes. The essential difference between a fiord and a fiard is that in the fiard the water surface stands near the upper edge of the valley ; if a fiord is drowned, as the water level rises and reaches the upper edges, which have been worn by wind and rain and streams, the shore line becomes extremely sinuous. This fact may be illustrated by fig. 1 of Nachvak Bay, based on the map by Prof. Daly (1902, p. 112). Fig. 1a shows the parallel sides of the bay, which has the plan of a fiord as it is now: fig. 1b show the shape that the inlet would have if the water level were raised to the contour of 1,500 ft. ; it would then be intermediate between a fiord and a fiard : submergence to the 2,500 ft. contour would reduce the land to the areas shown by the dotted line on fig. 1b and Nachvak would be a fiard.

That the southern inlets of Labrador are often fiards is shown not only by the maps but by Professor Daly's photographs ; Jt. App., fig. 28 ; Ford Harbour, p. 2552 ; figs. 29 and 30, Hopedale, p. 2553 ; fig. 35, Sloop Harbour, p. 2556. That Hopedale is a fiard was pointed out in my book on Fiords (1913, p. 279), and I there remarked “ the fiard-like nature of the coast between Hamilton Inlet and the Strait of Belle Isle.”

III. THE NATURE OF HAMILTON INLET.

The longest and deepest inlet in Labrador is Hamilton Inlet, including the Narrows and the deep basin within them known as Grosse Water or Groswater Bay, or “ Melville Bay ” (Packard 1891, map opp. p. 90) or Lake Melville. It has been frequently described as a fiord and referred to as the longest fiord in Labrador by A. S. Packard (1891, p. 167), Robert Bell (1895, p. 348), and A. P. Low (1895, p. 123). My identification of this formation as a fiord (1913, p. 279) was based mainly on the Admiralty Chart (No. 375) which shows its parallel sides for most of its course, its great internal depth of almost 1,000 ft. below sea level and the threshold at the Narrows ; that chart also shows that the external basin is deepest close to the Narrows, and that secondary thresholds occur between that deep and the outer sea. The inlet moreover lies between two steep fronted mountain blocks. South rise the Mealy Mountains of which the figure by Kindle, Geol. Surv. Can. Mem. No. 141, 1924, fig. 3, p. 12, shows its long straight front with the spurs truncated along a line a little back from the south-eastern shore of the inlet. Mr. Kindle (ibid. p. 11) speaks of the “ front of this Wall.” To the north the mountain front is also so steep that A. P. Low (1909, p. 142) refers to it as “ the rocky wall of the fiord ” and according to the Admiralty Chart the mountains rise 4,500 ft. in height.

The geological evidence indicates that this inlet was formed along faults, a view confirmed by its re-examination by Kindle (1924, p. 16) who explains the basin as a sunken fault block.

The mouth of the inlet is funnel shaped, and the photograph of Indian Harbour (Daly Jt. App. p. 2558, fig. 40), which is beside the entrance, is fiard-like for the shore is indented and the highest hill beside it is stated to be 300 ft. high. But as inland the hills are higher, as the valley is bounded on both sides by flat mountain walls, and as the basin sinks almost 1,000 ft. below sea-level, the inner part of the Inlet is a fiord. Kindle describes it as fiord-like and accepts its branch the Double Mer, as a fiord (Jt. App. p. 2394). The simple even shores of the Double Mer, as shown in Kindle's photograph (Kindle, 1924, pl. 1), and the steep wall-like front of the Mealy Mountains are both quite different from the features of fiards.

A. THE SEAWARD END DESCRIBED AS A RIA

The seaward section of Hamilton Inlet has been identified by Mr. E. M. Kindle (1924, p. 14, Jt. App., p. 2364) as “ a typical ria” on the ground that it is funnel-shaped. The inner section within the Narrows he classifies as an expansion of the Hamilton River, and not as a fiord. The outer section from the Narrows has certainly the funnel shape and irregular shore found in many rias. Nevertheless I should regard my former interpretation of this section as a fiord as more in accordance with the available evidence. Mr. Kindle quotes my translation (Fiords, 1913, p. 69) of Penck's definition (1894) in support of his view that the Inlet is a ria. He however only quotes part of that definition, and the rest of it is not in harmony with his conclusion. According to Prof. Penck's definition rias are small, their maximum extension into the land being 31 miles, and their branching inland being unimportant. According to this definition the outer section of Hamilton Inlet is too big to be a ria, though I do not attach much weight to mere size.

p. 2495

The distinctions between the entrance to Hamilton Inlet and a ria appear to me to be three-fold.

a. Rias the Estuaries of Old River Valleys, and the Former outlet through West Bay.

Rias are the outlets of ancient rivers flowing to the sea between two mountain ranges. They are of great antiquity as they are due to slow excavation by a river. According to Mr. Kindle (1924, pp. 18-19, Jt. App., p. 2396), the original outlet from the Hamilton basin and Lake Melville was through “ The Backway ” to the coast near West Bay (Jt. App., pp. 2367, 2396), and the Narrows are of comparatively recent origin, and were formed as an overflow channel in late tertiary or glacial times. If, therefore, the Hamilton River Valley had reached the sea through a ria, that ria should be at West Bay, and not the section of Hamilton Inlet outside the Narrows.

b. Its Variation in Depth with Thresholds as in Fiords.

The second and main difference is the nature of the floor as shown by the variations in its depth. A ria is a land valley formed by a river having cut a large valley between two ranges of hills. A ria therefore, as expressed in Penck's definition as well as in my own, deepens steadily seaward. I know of no case in which a ria leads inland to a deep rock basin. In Hamilton Inlet the inland section is the deep rock basin of Lake Melville, of which the floor at one place sinks almost 1,000 ft. below sea level. In the narrows the Admiralty Chart (No. 375) marks depths of 10 and 12 fm. Outside the Narrows the greatest depth, 50 fm., is near the exit from them ; the depth decreases to 23 fm., increases to 44 fm., and again decreases to the line across the mouth of the outer section from Pompey Isle to west of George Isle on which line the greatest depth is only 30 fm.

The existence of these thresholds with intervening depressions is the typical arrangement of a fiard, and not of a ria. If a ria were being filled by shoaling such irregularities might develop ; but the association of these ridges with rocky islets shows that they are structural rock features, and not banks of silt. The photograph by Daly of Indian Harbour is quite consistent with the fiard nature of this bay as the shore is very indented, and the highest hill in the view is said to be 300 ft. high.

c. The third distinction is the expansion inland to the Melville Basin.

p. 2496

B. THE INNER OR MELVILLE BASIN.

a. The Objection to its Fiord Nature Based on the Hamilton River.

Mr. Kindle's main argument for his view that Lake Melville is not a fiord is apparently the sentence which he quotes (1924, p. 14, Jt. App., p. 2364) from my " Fiords " (1913, p. 66) to the effect that no great river enters a fiord. As he regards the Hamilton River, which enters the head of Lake Melville, as a great river, he concludes that Lake Melville cannot be a fiord. The sentence quoted by Mr. Kindle is in the discussion of fiords throughout the world, and applied to the world's great rivers. None of them enters the sea through a fiord, although they may discharge near fiords ; thus the Mackenzie River of north-western Canada enters the sea through an ordinary gulf and not through the fiords on the Pacific coast. The Columbia River, after a long irregular course through British Columbia, passes south into the United States and thus avoids reaching the sea in the fiord belt. The Yangtze-kiang opens near the fiord of Nimrod Sound, but not through it.

The Hamilton River is comparatively small. Its length to its entry into Lake Melville, according to Mr. Kindle, is about 300 miles. It is a river of the same order of length as the Thames (210 miles), to which I should never have thought of referring as a great river in a chapter dealing with the world as a whole. A. P. Low (Jt. App., p. 2596), though referring to the Hamilton River, the North West, and Kenamai, as " three large rivers," also refers to them as these three large streams," and the Admiralty Pilot (Newfoundland and Labrador, 1907, p. 707) calls the Hamilton River a " large stream." These statements do not suggest " a great river."

b. The Unity of the three sections and the Term Inlet.

Hamilton Inlet (including Melville Bay) appears fundamentally different from a river with a ria as its outlet.

They have generally been regarded as one unit, as by the Admiralty Charts (No. 1422, 1871 corrected 1922, and No. 375, 1876), which adopt the name Hamilton Inlet for both the seaward part and the inland extension, known as Grosse Water Bay and Lake Melville. The Admiralty and A. P. Low apply the term Hamilton Inlet to both parts ; other authorities, as Packard, mark the whole as the Ivocktuke Inlet (Packard, 1891, pp. 285-88), while he calls the inner part Grosewater Bay (Packard, 1891, p. 166).

The name Hamilton Inlet seems more appropriate to the inner section than to the outer. The term inlet appears less appropriate to the funnel-shaped area outside the Narrows than to Lake Melville or Grosswater Bay, which is deeply let into the land. The Admiralty Chart of Labrador (1422) records three localities as inlets, viz., Davis Inlet, St. Lewis Inlet and Hamilton Inlet, and both the Davis and St. Lewis Inlets are narrow arms of the sea, deeply let into the land. Deep Inlet (at 55° 24') is a fourth, reported in the Newfoundland and Labrador Pilot (1907, p. 729). Formations like that outside the Narrows are called bays or sounds. The extended outer end of St. Lewis Inlet is marked on the charts as St. Lewis Sound ; and the Canadian geographer Dr. R. Bell, in his map of Labrador, 1895, marks Lake Melville as Hamilton Inlet, and the part outside the Narrows “ Aviktot ” or Eskimo Bay. The traditional use of the name Hamilton Inlet for the part now known as Lake Melville seems historically correct. The entrance to the inlet was known as Eskimo Bay, and was crudely represented on early maps of Labrador. The earliest map of the Labrador Coast that I have seen which applies the term inlet to this formation is that of Aaron Arrowsmith, 1814 (No. 17 of the Newfoundland Case Atlas). He marks it as “Ivucktoke Inlet, 30 leagues.” The map shows only the outer part, which is much less than 30 leagues long, so the note must refer to the existence of an inlet 30 leagues long from the end of the outer bay. During the Governorship of Sir Charles Hamilton, 1821-25, it bore the name (Admiralty Chart 375, edit. 1823) of the Hamilton Inlet and the name was probably given it during its survey in 1823 by the “ Pelter.” The name Hamilton Inlet is also used in John Arrowsmith's map of British North America, 1834 (Atlas No. 21). Various later maps as the Canadian Labrador Boundary Map of 1890 (Atlas No. 39) use the name Hamilton Inlet for the inner part and call the outer part “ Grand Esquimaux or Hamilton Bay ” or as “Aviktot or Eskimo Bay ” (e.g. R. Bell, 1895, map 1; cf. also Atlas Maps 35, 37, 38). The name Hamilton Inlet is however quoted by Packard (1891, p. 498) as used by Aaron Arrowsmith in his Chart “ The Northern Seas between Europe and America, London 1808,” in which says Packard, the name of Hamilton Inlet was applied to Invuctoke Bay. If so the name would have been given after Captain John Hamilton, who was Surrogate for Labrador, 1767 ; but as Arrowsmith does not use

c. The Melville Basin due to Faulting.

That the Lake Melville basin should be classified as a fiord valley and not as a river cut valley follows from the fact that it was formed by the sinking of its floor. Mr. Kindle (1924, p. 13) remarks that the “ very deep fiord-like lakes connected with or near Hamilton Inlet constitute one of the most prominent geographic features,” and earlier in the same memoir (p. 11) he observes that “the most striking topographic feature of the region is the great depth to which the fiord-like valleys extend below the level of the adjacent plateau margin.” These deep valleys occur along belts lowered by faulting. Mr. Kindle has shown (1924, p. 58) that the Lake Melville basin and its branch, Double Mer, were each formed by the subsidence of a long block between faults. Kindle (1924, p. 58) states that Lake Melville “ basin represents a fault block.” In the Joint Appendix (p. 2365) he states, “ The wider parts of both Double Mer and Lake Melville basins are believed to be defined by fault-planes which have dropped down two large blocks (Fig. 5A and C).” It is true that he attributes the formation of the basins to erosion of the sandstones thus dropped down ; but he is emphatic that the lowlands of these two basins are “ limited in part at least by fault-planes, as indicated in Fig. 5A and C ” (Quoted Jt. App., p. 2365). Even if the basins were made by denudation, that would have excavated the basins because the rocks had been shattered by faulting, and the broken material would have been easily removed by denudation. The two long rectilinear trough valleys being due to faulting and descending deep below sea level, are therefore fiord valleys.

p. 2498

d. Similarity to Double Mer— an accepted Fiord.

Mr. Kindle in his description of Lake Melville says that it is fiord-like and he refers to its branch, the Double Mer, as still nearer to a Fiord (1924, p. 13) ; in fact he says (Jt. App., p. 2394) that “ Double Mer is a deep fiord valley.” Mr. Kindle indeed remarks (ibid., p. 2363), that the great depth of Lake Melville and its steep mountain scarp rising nearly 2,000 ft. above it on the south side ally it to the fiord. His photograph of Double Mer (Kindle, 1924, pl. I) represents a formation indistinguishable from those of the fiord valleys of Norway and the West of Scotland. The photograph, but for the absence of roads and houses, might pass as a view of one of the fiord valleys, tributary to the Clyde estuary. I fail to see any reason why if Double Mer is a fiord the basin of Lake Melville is not also a fiord ; for both the Lake Melville basin and Double Mer are valleys

(1) that were formed by vaults ;

(2) that have sheets of “ Cambrian ” sandstone let down on to their floors by faulting ;

(3) that are bounded by sub-parallel mountain walls

(4) that sink below sea level. (As Lake Melville is 160 fm. deep and Double Mer only 46 fm. (Vide, Kindle, Jt. App., p. 2363) in this respect L. Melville is more fiord-like than Double Mer) ;

(5) and that are connected with the sea by a narrow shallow channel, and expand westward.

e. Lake Melville as a River.

The interpretation of the entrance to Hamilton Inlet as a ria would involve the view that Lake Melville is a river and not an arm of the sea. That view does not seem to agree with the facts or with the ordinary geographical use of the term river. It is no doubt often difficult to determine the exact point where a river ceases and its estuary begins. The essence of a river is being a well-defined stream of water flowing from high land to lower land. If a river expands into a body of water so large that the water is stagnant, the river becomes a lake. When a river approaches the sea so long as it continues as a well-defined stream of land water it remains a river ; but when it widens out so that the land water is completely merged in the sea water, or remains as a thin layer over a mass of sea water, then I should regard the river as having become an estuary and an arm of the sea. As Loch Melville extends to the depth of almost 1,000 ft. below sea-level, and the Report by Mr. H. W. Jones (Jt. App. pp. 2334, 2351–2) shows that the bulk of the water in it is seawater, I regard Lake Melville * as an arm of the sea and not a freshwater lake or a river.

It may be pointed out that the range of tide in Lake Melville is small, the amplitude (i.e. half the height between high and low tide levels) being about $\cdot 83$ of a foot (W. J. Stewart, Jt. App., p. 2319). The tide at the inner end of Lake Melville in Goose Bay, has a rise and fall of 2·6 ft. for springs and 1·34 ft. for neaps (H. W. Jones, amplitude of 1·3 ft., $\cdot 67$ ft., Jt. App., p. 2358). This tidal range is greater than that in the Baltic, where on the Swedish coast near Stockholm and on the opposite part of the Finland coast at Helsingfors it is less than an inch (Baltic Pilot, Pt. II. 1913, p. 21), or than in the Mediterranean, as Naples is said to have no regular tide (Mediterranean Pilot, Pt. II., 1905, p. 260), and that on the south-east coast of Sicily is one foot (ibid., Pt. I., 1913, p. 519).

The salinity of Lake Melville is much higher than that of parts of the Baltic. The lowest salinity recorded in H. W. Jones' table, Jt. App., p. 2361, for Lake Melville is 10·57,† whereas in the northern part of the Baltic it is less than three (i.e. three parts to the 1,000) and as far south as the latitude of Stockholm and around the Aland Islands, the salinity is only from 5 to 6 per 1,000 (Pettersson, Scott. Geogr. Magaz., Vol. X., pl. X., 1894).

On consideration of all the evidence available to me I regard Lake Melville Basin, the Narrows, and the entrance to them as part of one arm of the sea.

IV. THE NATURE OF THE LABRADOR INLETS.

The nature of the Labrador inlets has an important bearing on the width of the coastal region. Two suggestions have been put forward as to their origin. The older view is that they were ancient valleys excavated by rivers and enlarged and deepened by ice during the glacial period. That view seems to me quite inconsistent with their shapes and distribution. The two characteristic geographical features of these valleys are their youth, as shown by their steep, flat, wall-like sides and their arrangement in rectilinear series, the members of which often cross at regular angles like a network. Their youth is especially shown in the northern series, where they occur as deep, narrow valleys with precipitous parallel sides.

A. THE FIORD VALLEYS NOT ICE-CUT.

That these valleys were not carved out by ice follows from the fact, which is I think admitted by all the authorities, that they were earlier than

† He records surface fresh water in the upper part of "lake Melville" (Jt. App. p. 2352) & in Carter Basin (Ibid., p. 2361) : but under the brackish water of Mulligan's Bay lay 88% sea water (Ibid. p. 2352)

p. 2500

the Ice Age, and that those in the northern area were never even filled with ice. Robert Bell (Scottish Geogr. Mag. XI. 1895, p. 340) remarked that "the mountains forming the northern part of the chain have not been glaciated like the rest of Labrador, and they present steep sides with jagged crests rising out of the cold sea." Prof. Daly confirms the view that the northern valleys were never more than partially occupied by ice ; according to him the ice only reached the height of 2,000 ft. above sea level in Nachvak fiord, where the walls rise 3,400 ft. high. If, therefore, the upper part of each of these valleys was never occupied by ice, they cannot have been made by ice. The utmost that can be claimed for ice action in respect to them is that it deepened pre-existing valleys.

B. NOR OLD RIVER VALLEYS.

The essential characteristics of these valleys are equally inconsistent with their origin as cut by rivers which slowly excavated them by wear throughout geological time. Rivers may excavate deep canyons, but such canyons are short-lived. Frost, wind, rain and streams, and the chemical decay of rocks when exposed to the atmosphere together attack and wear back the upper walls of a canyon, which is thus widened into a broad rounded valley. If these fiord valleys were due to the action of rivers which, as Low suggests, had begun their excavation in very ancient times (Low, 1895, pp. 26-7, Jt. App., p. 2600, which he dates even as early as pre-Cambrian, Jt. App., p. 2601, quoted from his 1895 memoir), then it is impossible that the valleys should still be canyon-like valleys. Moreover, if these valleys were of great geological antiquity some of the hollows should include deposits laid down in the long period since their excavation. Most of such deposits might have been swept away by ice, but some would probably have been left, like the "Cambrian ?" sandstones beside Lake Melville and Double Mer.

Practically all those who have described the coastal valleys of Labrador represent them, or at least many of them, as fiords. Fiord valleys are always young, for when rivers occupy them their walls are soon worn into the irregular slopes of ordinary land valleys, and the fiord character is destroyed.

Rivers and ice may have modified and deepened the fiord valleys of East Labrador, but they did not initiate them, and some other explanation of their formation is needed.

C. THE ARRANGEMENT OF THE FIORD VALLEYS.

The fact that the fiord valleys are independent of river action is indicated by their plan and distribution. The fiords at the northern end of the series near Cape Chidley run east and west. They are continuous through the land as tickles or straits, which separate the northern blocks as islands. These " tickles " have the characteristics of young valleys. It is most improbable that they were cut by recent rivers, which would not have been likely to saw their way through this massive mountain range, while Hudson Strait was open to them. It may be suggested that they were cut before the formation of Hudson Strait, but the youthful character of the tickles shows that they are younger and not older than Hudson Strait.

South of this east and west series are a number which run inland from north-west or north-east ; two of them so nearly meet that the northern end of Labrador is a peninsula joined to the mainland by a narrow isthmus. The east to west direction of the fiords is predominant from Cape Chidley to Cape Mugford. From Cape Mugford southward to Nain is an intermediate area, in which east and west valleys are combined with others trending from about W.N.W. to E.S.E., and others from north-east to south-west.

From Nain to the Isle of Ponds (lat. $53\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$) the shore trends W.N.W. to E.S.E., and the fiord valleys run in three directions. One series is parallel to the coast-line ; a second series cuts inland at an angle of about 60° and this series includes Loch Melville and the front of the Mealy Mountains ; the third series has a trend of east and west.

From the Isle of Ponds southward to Cape Charles the coastline resumes its N.N.W. to S.S.E. direction and the predominant inlets have the same trend from Nain to the Isle of Ponds, or they are combined with others trending approximately east and west.

The direction of these fiord lines must be due to some process which has cracked the coastal region of Eastern Labrador along three chief directions. The east and west valleys are parallel to Hudson Strait ; this direction is dominant in the northern end of Labrador, but is less marked toward the south. The second important series, trending from E.N.E. to W.S.W. includes Hamilton Inlet, which is in line with the long straight course of the St. Lawrence past Rimouski to Quebec, and is also parallel, amongst other important geographical features in this region, to Nova Scotia, and to the peninsulas and arms of the sea in south-eastern Newfoundland. The members of the third series are either parallel to the coast line from Nain to the Isle of Ponds, or are at about 60° to it. This regular distribution of the inlets is quite independent of the fundamental structure of the country. The inlets cut across the rocks regardless of their strike. That the fiord valleys cut across " the Labrador trend " at high angles, and often at right angles, is shown by Prof. Daly's map (1909, p. 88), and that Hamilton Inlet (i.e., Lake Melville) lies across the strike of the rocks, is shown by Mr. Kindle (1924, p. 16).

D. THE DIRECTING LINES OF SOME CANADIAN LAKES.

The independence of geological structure shown by the fiord valleys is similar to that of many Canadian lakes. This fact is shown by maps published by the Geological Survey of Canada for western Quebec and eastern Ontario, as by M. E. Wilson, Kewagama Lake Map Area, Quebec, Geol. Surv. Can., Mem. 39, 1913, pp. 18, 19 ; by W. H. Collins, the Onaping Map Area, Geol. Surv. Can., Mem. 95, 1917, pp. 16-18, and by M. E. Wilson, Timiskaming, Geol. Surv. Can., Mem. 103, 1918, pp. 35, 36 and 38. The Authors in presenting these maps remark that the linear valleys are independent of the rocks, of the geological structure, and of the action of either rivers or ice, and must be due to earth movements ; they however point out that there is very little evidence to connect them with faults.

p. 2502

E. THE FIORD VALLEYS FORMED ALONG CLEFTS IN UPLIFTED ROCKS.

The directing lines in these cases may be explained not as ordinary faults, but as clefts produced in the tension of the country during a long gentle uplift which ruptured the rocks. The arrangement of the valleys thus produced resembles that of cracks in a pane of glass which has been broken by bending, or in cooling enamel or in a drying block of cement. The shrinkage of a drying block of cement produces cracks, some of which are parallel to the edge, and others that run in from the edge. If the block is homogeneous and the cracking is produced simply by drying, the cross cracks will tend to be at right angles to the faces ; but if the block while drying is undergoing bending, the cracks will pass in at an angle determined by the stresses due to the bending.

This tectonic origin of the fiord valleys of Labrador was recognised by Packard (1891, p. 18), who attributed them to "original lines of fracture and faults."* The zigzag course of the Bowdoin Canyon below the Grand Falls on the Hamilton River is regarded as of a similar nature. The canyon consists of half-mile lengths, trending alternately to east and to south-west (Low, 1909, p. 154). Prof. A. W. G. Wilson of Montreal (Jt. App., p. 2605) attributes this course to the influence of "two series of joint fractures" : i.e., to clefts due to tension.

The existence along the Labrador coast of many minor clefts that were probably made at the time of the formation of the major clefts which are now the fiord valleys, is shown in Prof. Daly's photographs. The cleft in the Bishop's Mitre is probably of a similar nature as I remarked (Fiords, 1913, p. 284).

- „ 18 & 19, Kaumajet Mountains at Mugford Tickle (clefts).

* Packard further remarks (1891, p. 18), “ We must believe that the same causes that produce the deep fiords likewise account for these deep fissures and depressions in the summit of the water-sheds. It is evident that any amount of glacial action, however long sustained and vast in its operation, can never account for these rude, irregular, often ' geoclinal ' troughs which follow lines of fracture and faults, lying along the axis of elevation of mountain chains, or at nearly right angles to them.”

p. 2503

In my book on Fiords I have endeavoured to prove that the fiords of the world are all due to the rupture of the earth's crust during the uplift of areas of hard rocks. The inlets of Labrador appear to me explicable only by the fracturing of the coastal belt during its uplift and the foundering of the adjacent parts of the Atlantic Ocean.

The directions of the main lines in Labrador are dominant in several parts of the North Atlantic borders, and the St. Lawrence—Hamilton Inlet line is a continuation of that of the main part of the coast of East Greenland.

F. DIFFERENT PLAN OF THE LABRADOR RIVER VALLEYS.

The direction of the fiords in the coastal belt of Labrador seems to me fundamentally distinct from the arrangement of a series of rivers. The natural arrangement of river valleys is well illustrated by the Labrador Peninsula. Rivers usually rise on the main highland and flow radially to the coasts. The most extensive highland in Labrador is an area at about 1,800 ft. above sea-level in the centre of the Peninsula ; from that highland many rivers, such as the East Main, Big River, &c., flow westward to James Bay. Others go north to Ungava Bay, such as the Kaniapiskau River, the Whale River, and the George River. The Hamilton River flows E.S.E. until it is diverted E.N.E. by falling into the Hamilton Inlet Valley. From the highland numerous rivers flow southward to the St. Lawrence ; some go south-westward until they are diverted eastward through Lake St. John and the deep Saguenay Fiord, or reach valleys which carry their waters to James Bay or through the Ottawa River to the St. Lawrence.

These radial rivers of Labrador have the normal arrangement of rivers draining such a plateau. They present a striking contrast to the rectilinear network and short deep clefts of the valleys and fiords of the Atlantic coast-land. The fracturing of the Labrador coastal belt appears primarily due to its uplift combined with the subsidence of the North Atlantic Ocean in comparatively recent geological times. That movement accordingly gave the Labrador coastal region its geographical unity.

It is necessary next to consider the natural inland boundary of that coastal belt.

V. THE THREE POSSIBLE BOUNDARIES.

Three lines have to be considered as the possible western boundary of the Dependency of Labrador.

1. THE SHORE STRIP.

The first is a line one mile in from the shore ; but the allocation of a one-mile strip of shore throughout a long coast to one state, while the interior is left to another, would appear to be a very inconvenient and unprecedented arrangement. The development of the interior of Labrador is sufficiently handicapped by its climate, its inaccessibility, and the poverty of its soils without having the extra burden of having its sea-shore under a different administration which might impose a burdensome tariff. The natural outlet from the belt as far back as the watershed is to the Atlantic. The Indians of the interior go to the seashore as at Davis Inlet, for trade in the spring (Low 1895, p. 48), and they go to the coast in severe winters (Newfoundland and Labrador Pilot, 1907, p. 643). The Livyeres or permanent residents on the coast go inland in the winter for hunting, visiting lines of traps, which, according to A. P. Low (1895, p. 43, 1909, p. 144, and Jt. App., p. 2608), are 50 miles in length. Dr. W. T. Grenfell (Jt. App., p. 2571) says that the “furriers” of Sandwich Bay go 350 miles inland. On many parts of the coast there is clearly no firewood on the shore, and the residents might be cut off from the only local supply of fuel. I can think of no case in which such a narrow strip along the shore is owned by one state while the interior belongs to another. The Zanzibar Protectorate, which is ten miles wide, along the East African Coast, is the closest analogy ; but it and the land behind are both under the direct control of the Colonial Office, and there seems to be no real analogy either historical or geographical, between these two cases.

a. The Term Coast in Central Geography.

It may be urged that the term coast means the shore line, but such does not seem to me the correct geographical meaning. The term coast has been largely used, especially in the 17th and 18th centuries, for a border-land region, and not for a mathematical line, or for a narrow strip along the meeting place of land and sea. When Herod, as the Bible states, slew all the children in the coasts of Bethlehem, it would not have served his purpose merely to have slain those on a line on the outskirts of Bethlehem. The term coast there obviously means the tract of country including Bethlehem and its neighbourhood. Most authoritative British Dictionaries recognise the use of the term coast for a broad belt of country. The term is said to come from the Latin costa, a rib, and has been used for side or rib, and would therefore mean a side of the Labrador Peninsula. The Encyclopædic Dictionary, 1889, Vol. II, gives as the first meaning “a side” ; as the fourth, “frontier limit or border of a country” ; as the fifth, “the seashore” ; and as sixth, “a district, a country, a region.” The New English Dictionary, Vol. III, 1893, after pointing out the origin of the word coast from costa, its resemblance to) côte, and its primary meaning as a rib or side, gives as its fourth meaning “the seashore” ; as the fifth, “the borderland” ; and as the sixth, “a tract or region of the earth.”

Johnson's Dictionary of 1755 gives a restricted definition of the word coast ; but his original Dictionary is famous for its freakiness, and the edition of 1818, to quote that nearest 1825, gives as the second meaning, “ 2, Border, limit or frontier of a country,” and remarks that this sense was annotated by Johnson.

The term coast is still widely used in geography for a region as in “ the Gold Coast,” and the “ Coastal Cordillera ” of South America, which are often 60 miles back from the shore.

p. 2505

b. The Term Coast in Canadian Geography.

Its similar use in Canada may be illustrated by Coast being the name of a sub-division of British Columbia which extends for 150 miles inland, by the Coast Range of western Canada extending at least 100 miles inland, and as in Labrador the Coast River, lat. $55\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ N., does not itself reach the sea, from which it is 25 miles distant at its lower end and 90 miles at its source.

The distinguished Canadian authority on Labrador, Mr. A. P. Low, applies the term coast to the tract of country extending a considerable distance back from what he (Low, 1895, p. 21) distinguishes as “ the coast line.” North of Nain, he says, p. 22, the Coast Range is much higher, being from 4,000 to 6,000 feet. He refers to the northern mountain range as confined to the coast region, so that the coast region includes the whole of that mountain range, and must therefore extend at least 50 miles inland.

On p. 23 he states that the northern half of the Atlantic coast rises in a chain of mountains higher than any other part of the Peninsula. On p. 25, he speaks of “ the highlands of the coast cutting off the drainage of the interior and forcing it to flow northward into Ungava Bay.” So according to Low the watershed is determined by the coastal highlands. Low, therefore, extends the coast inland to the watershed and to include the whole of the northern chain.

2. ALONG THE COASTAL MOUNTAINS.

A second possible line would be one joining the highest summits of the mountains which lie inland from the shore and passing along the crest of the former mountain chain. If the ancient chain were still complete its crest might have furnished a suitable frontier between the coastal belt and the interior. The chain is now most nearly complete in the northern part. “ Taken as a whole, the Nain-Kiglapait-Kaumajet-Torngat Mountain group is a distinct entity, a distinct topographic province of the Labrador Peninsula ” (Jt. App., p. 2537). Even in the northern part from Cape Chidley to Nain it is broken through by a series of deep valleys, so that a line joining the highest mountain summits would be a very inconvenient and geographically undesirable boundary. That type of frontier was claimed by Chile in its dispute with the Argentine, and was rejected by King Edward's Award.

3. THE WATERSHED.

a. Its Convenience.

The only convenient western boundary of the “distant entity” and “distinct topographic province” is the watershed, which separates the rivers that flow across the mountain belt from those that cross the western plains to Hudson Bay. South of Nain the mountain belt is less complete. Prof. Daly remarks, “South of Nain there is no well-defined existing mountain-chain,” but the continuity of the foundation is shown by
p. 2506

Prof. Daly's figure (1909, p. 88). Fragments of the ancient chain remain as the Kokkoke Mountains with Mount Muckamee (alt. 4500 ft.), north of the western end of Lake Melville (see Admiralty Chart No. 375) and the Mealy Mountains. The intervals between the southern remnants of the mountain chain are so great that even if the position of the original mountain crest could be determined, it would form an even less satisfactory frontier than north of Nain. The most suitable boundary between this mountainous dissected coastal belt and the plains to the west is the main watershed, with the possible exception of the upper part of the Hamilton Basin.

The term watershed means the line separating the drainage as it comes from the German “wasserscheide” or “water separation.” It is sometimes incorrectly used for the slope of the land from the divide. Watershed means precisely the same as “height of land” as used in Canada. The “height of land” in Labrador separates the fiord-riven coastal region from the plateau across which many rivers flow westward to Hudson Bay. The watershed for most of Labrador is the most convenient and natural geographical boundary. For owing to the depth of the fiord valleys all communications in northern Labrador necessarily pass along the valleys to the coast. As remarked previously (p. 22) the Indians trade down these valleys to Davis Inlet, and the permanent residents on the coast during the winter work inland along miles of traps which, according to Low, extend 50 miles in length, and probably reach to the “height of land.” The Admiralty Pilot remarks that “in summer travelling can only be done by sea” (Newfoundland and Labrador Pilot, 1907, p. 643).

The suitability of the watershed in Labrador as the boundary is indicated by the numerous authorities who have adopted it, amongst whom may be mentioned the late Dr. Robert Bell, formerly Director of the Geological Survey of Canada in his map (Scott. Geogr. Mag., Vol. XI, 1895, opp. p. 360). He remarks (ibid. p. 336) that “Newfoundland claims about 140,000 square miles, the remaining 420,000 belonging to Canada”; so that he regarded a quarter of the peninsula as not belonging to Canada.

That the “height of land” was intended to be the western boundary of the Dependency of Newfoundland is suggested by the line selected for the frontier from the St. Lawrence. It was defined as inland due north from Blanc Sablon to the 52nd parallel, a distance of over 40 miles. There the defined line was near the “ height of land ” between the drainage into Hamilton Inlet, and that into the St. Lawrence. That the intention was to follow the watershed from that point is shown by the frequent adoption of that line as the boundary in the maps of that period.

b. The identity of the Rocks on the two Sides of the Watersheds.

It may be represented that in a plateau country the watershed is not an important or logical boundary ; but on such a plateau it is usually the natural line and the line of greatest economic importance, as it is the main factor in the direction of trade and traffic. Timber is naturally floated downstream from the divide, and all bulky produce tends to go the same routes. It has been objected that this line is artificial as the rocks on both sides are identical. That objection would also apply to the watershed in Scandinavia, which is also a vast plateau of rocks of the same age and general nature as those of Labrador. There is the same unity of geological composition between Norway and Sweden as between Labrador east and west of the watershed.

p. 2507

VI. ANALOGY OF SCANDINAVIA AND LABRADOR.

This reference to Scandinavia recalls the instructive analogy between the peninsula and Labrador. As the geology and geography of Norway are better known they throw light on the origin of the Labrador fiords, and on the natural geographical divide in such a country. Scandinavia, like Labrador, consists of a foundation of rocks belonging to the same geological date, and most of the country has also remained above sea-level through most of geological time. Scandinavia also consists of a fiord-riven coastal belt facing the Atlantic, and of a long gentle slope away from the ocean toward an inland sea. As the present structure of both Labrador and Scandinavia was impressed on them from the Atlantic the sequence of the corresponding belts is reversed. Scandinavia begins on the west with an island fringe known as the Skargaard, which consists of an enormous number of islands ranging from mere rocks to islands of a considerable size. The mainland rises from the coast, especially to the north, in abrupt precipices, and is indented by long fiords. Further south a low rocky platform often separates the plateau front from the sea, and the inlets in this platform are fiards. The coastal part of the main plateau is cut up by an intersecting network of trough valleys into isolated mountainous blocks. From the watershed the plateau extends inland and bears hills of moderate elevation and innumerable lakes. This plateau descends by a long slope traversed by numerous rivers which are much longer than those flowing to the ocean, and this slope ends in an inland sea, the Baltic.

The structure of Labrador is essentially the same. The Atlantic coast has its guard of islands ; to the north the plateau front descends precipitously into the sea, and the coast is indented by long fiords ; to the south there is a low lying rock platform with fiards. The meeting of fiord valleys cuts up the coastal belt into isolated blocks. In contrast to the broken topography of the coastal region the plateau to the west has a relatively level surface with low hills, broad valleys, and innumerable lakes. The plateau descends in a long slope drained by many rivers, and ending in the inland sea of Hudson Bay.

The geographical development of Scandinavia along the fiord-riven region was slow owing to the small amount of cultivable land, and the extreme difficulty of land communication, which rendered the country dependent upon the sea. The Norwegians are therefore a sea-going people, and occupation spread slowly inland on the working of mines and forests.

The development of the slope towards the Baltic was much easier and towns were established far inland, while the settlements in Norway were still confined in the coast. The boundary which has been adopted between Norway and Sweden is for most of the distance the watershed between the rivers flowing to the Atlantic, and to the Baltic. Such departures from the watershed as have been made south of 60° were made to secure a suitable frontier where the watershed was inconveniently sinuous.

On the southern coast the area with the fiords which indent the land from the sea between Scandinavia and Denmark is included in Norway. The Scandinavian analogy is therefore in favour of the adoption in Labrador of the watershed as the general frontier.

J. W. GREGORY.

SUMMARY.

The Peninsula of Labrador consists of two main sections—an eastern belt facing the Atlantic which is high and mountainous, and is deeply indented by many arms of the sea (fiords and fiards). The western section is a plateau with a comparatively gentle undulating surface sloping downward to Hudson Bay and Ungava Bay. The high mountains and arms of the sea in the western section give it a distinct geographical entity. This belt has been called, as by some Canadian geographical authorities, the coastal region, and that term is in accordance with geographical and Canadian usage, as may be illustrated by the wide areas assigned to “ Coast ” in British Columbia. The Hamilton Inlet has been generally accepted as a fiord, and as the longest fiord in Labrador. Its entrance is not a ria, but a fiard ; and the inner (Lake Melville) is the essential part of Hamilton Inlet, and to it the name inlet was first applied. As a deep basin filled with seawater below a thin layer of freshwater, it is an arm of the sea. Its branch, the Double Mer, is accepted as a fiord, and Lake Melville has still better title to the name fiord.

The Labrador inlets were neither cut by ice nor by ancient rivers. Their arrangement shows that they were due to the fracturing of the eastern coast of Labrador during the earth-movements which upheaved the Labrador coastal mountains and led to the foundering of the floor of the North Atlantic basin. The inlets are true fiords ; their arrangement is essentially different from that of river valleys, the normal arrangement of which is illustrated by the river valleys on the Labrador plateau.

Labrador is strikingly similar in structure to Scandinavia, both peninsulas which in each consist of blocks of ancient rocks are found on both sides of the watershed. The watershed is the main boundary between the fiord-river mountainous region of Norway and the gentler slope of Sweden to the Baltic.

HAMILTON INLET

OBSERVATIONS ON THE FAUNA AND FLORA.
By C. TATE REGAN, M.A., F.R.S., Keeper of Zoology in the British Museum (Natural History).*

1.—SALINITY OF WATER IN HAMILTON INLET.

Dr. Kindle's report on the fauna and flora of the Hamilton Inlet is so incomplete that, in order to arrive at any conclusion, it is necessary to consider the conditions in this area, and what happens in similar conditions elsewhere. As regards the salinity of the water there are available, for the inner part of the Inlet, west of the Narrows, the salinity determinations made by the Canadian Hydrographic Survey in September, 1921. The salinity of the surface water was determined at five points, at which the figures found (10·57 to 15·57) have been inserted on the chart (fig. 3, p. 4 ; the salinities at various depths were also determined, and I have attempted to represent the results obtained by means of a diagrammatic vertical section, which is, so far as concerns the region west of the Narrows, based entirely on these determinations.

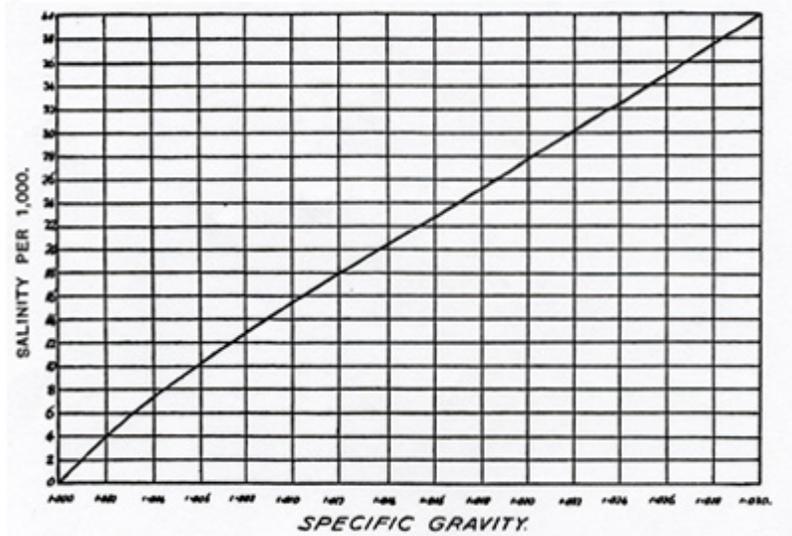

There are also a number of determinations of the density or specific gravity of the water, of which those made in 1923 are summarized by the Senior Tidal and Current Surveyor (C. pp. 2333-4). This gentleman writes of water having a density of 13 per cent., 21 per cent., etc., of that of sea-water, but as the density of fresh-water (1·000) is 97·6 per cent. that of the sea-water taken as a standard (1·024) this is obviously a mistake alternatively he writes of water with a certain percentage of sea salinity, but the percentage system does not give true values for salinities. Sir John Murray (The Ocean, p. 54) gives the figures of specific gravity at 60° F. corresponding to salinities of 0, 10, 20, 30, 32·5, 35, 37·5 and 40 per 1,000. I have plotted these and connected them by a line, to form a diagram by means of which the specific gravity determinations can be converted into approximate salinities (fig. 1, p. 2).

It will be noted that compared with the salinity of water of specific gravity 1·024, the salinity of water with specific gravity 1·006 is not 25 per cent., but 31 per cent., and that of water of specific gravity 1·012, not 50 per cent., but 55 per cent.

*This report has been prepared by me in my time and in my private capacity as a zoologist who has studied problems of distribution; it must not be considered to represent an official view.—C. T. R.

Taking the region west of the Narrows it will be seen that the density determinations made in July and August, 1921 (C. p. 1946) confirm the salinity determinations made in September, corresponding to surface salinities of ca. 15 at Pelter's Cove and 8 miles west of Caravalla Point, ca. 10·8 in Mulligan's Bay. Those of surface water made on August 21st and 22nd, 1923, are lower (e.g., salinity ca. 9 instead of 14 off St. John's Island), but the drop at Rigolet from S.G. 1·0205 (flood) and 1·0168 (ebb) on August 17-18 to 1·0170 (flood) and 1·0125 (ebb) on August 26th is sufficient indication that heavy rainfall was responsible for this. The general average of the density determinations in the Narrows justify the figure 23 on the map, indicating the approximate average salinity of the surface water at about that point ; the exact location at the surface of the figures 26 and 28 is unimportant.

No doubt the salinity of the water in Hamilton Inlet would be higher during the winter, as in the Norwegian fiords ; in these, melting snow and ice and rainfall swell the rivers and produce a surface layer of water of low salinity during the summer ; but in the winter this layer tends to disappear and the surface water has a much higher salinity.

HYDROGRAPHY OF THE BALTIC

The account given by the Canadian hydrographers recalls the conditions in the Baltic, where we have also the decreased range of the tides, the lowered salinity, the fresher water at the surface and the saltier water below, the outflow greater than the inflow, etc. The hydrography of the Baltic has been described by Petterson (Scottish Geographical Journal, 10, 1894), who states that it receives by rainfall and rivers much more water than it loses by evaporation ; hence there is a surface current outwards and the surface water is fresher than that nearer the bottom ; his chart and diagrammatic representation of the salinity of the water (fig. 2, p. 3) may be compared with those given for the Hamilton Inlet ; the lesser salinity of the Baltic is very evident.

FISHES OF THE BALTIC.

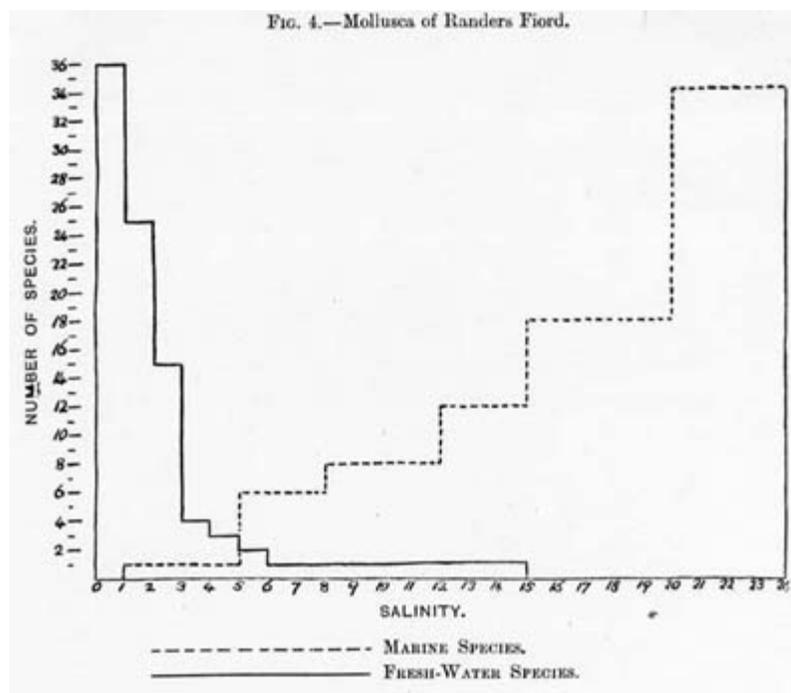

The Baltic is a marine area, with a marine fauna and flora. Such typically marine fishes as herring, sprat, garfish, cod, plaice, turbot, sandlance, lump-sucker, gobies, etc., are widely distributed in the Baltic and are permanent residents ; in some years mackerel enter the Baltic in large schools and may range to the Gulf of Finland. There are other marine fishes such as whiting, gurnard, brill, sole, etc., that inhabit the southern Baltic, and others again that are found only in the south-west corner. The number of species of fishes resident in the Skaggerack that never enter the Baltic is relatively small. The cod ranges to the lower part of the Gulf of Bothnia, where the salinity of the water at the bottom is about 7. This fish is the object of extensive fisheries. The capture of spawning fish, and modern investigations of the distribution of the eggs and larvae, leave no room for doubt that the cod breeds in the Baltic (cf. Strübborg, Medd. Komm. Havunders. Fiskerei, VII, No. 1, 1922).

Some marine fishes enter fresh-water to breed, or for other purposes ; these may form freshwater colonies—which in time may become fresh-water species of marine genera ; but the great majority of the fresh-water fishes of the world belong to families that are restricted to fresh-water. There are many species of such true freshwater fishes, pike, roach, dace, perch, etc., in the countries round the Baltic. Several of them extend into the fresher parts of the Gulfs of Bothnia and Finland and into the slightly saline water inside the island belt off the coast of Sweden. The perch is generally considered to be most tolerant of some salinity of the water, and on the east coast of Sweden it is found not only between the mainland and the island belt, but sometimes outside the island belt.

In Mr. Prince's memorandum it is stated that the specific gravity of the water in Lake Melville is such as to prevent cod eggs from floating or to enable them to develop normally. It is also stated that cod eggs and fry find favourable conditions in water with specific gravity 1.021, and that if the specific gravity be reduced to 1.019 nearly the whole of the eggs sink to the bottom. The breeding and development of the cod in the Baltic require some explanation in face of these statements. Mortensen in 1897 discovered that in the Baltic the eggs of the sprat were 1.2 to 1.5 mm. in diameter and had a specific gravity of 1.006 to 1.007, whereas in the Limfiord they measured 0.9 mm. and had a specific gravity of over 1.017 ; he regarded this as an interesting example of how an organism could adapt itself to conditions. This observation led to further work, which was summarized in 1908 in an important paper by H. P. Jacobsen and A. C. Johansen, entitled "Remarks on the Changes in Specific Gravity of Pelagic Fish Eggs" (Medd. Komm. Havunders. Fiskerei, III, No. 2). These authors write: "During the development of the ovary of fishes with pelagic eggs a series of processes are in progress which, among others, produce the result that the specific gravity of the eggs approximates to the specific gravity of the sea-water, so that generally just after spawning they keep just at the surface or suspended in intermediate layers, etc. In the same locality and at the same niveau the specific gravity of the eggs is not very variable, but if we regard the whole area in which the eggs of a certain species occur the range of variation in many cases becomes very considerable. The specific gravity of cod eggs varies at least as sea-water between 8 and 35 per cent. salinity."

MOLLUSCA OF RANDERS FIORD.

It is a fair statement of the known facts to say that in water with a salinity higher than 5 the fish-fauna is predominantly marine. That this is true of groups other than fishes is exemplified by A. C. Johansen's researches on the mollusca of Randers Fiord (Blöddyrene i Randers Fiord, Copenhagen, 1918). The salinity of the water ranges from 0 to 24. The predominance of the marine species, immigrants from the Kattegat, in water with salinity higher than 5, and the inability of the majority of the fresh-water species to live in water with a salinity higher than 3, is well shown in the accompanying diagram. Of 71 species, 36 are fresh-water, 34 are marine, and one only (not included in the diagram) is a brackish-water form, found in water with salinity of 1 to 20.

THE NORWEGIAN FIORDS.

Hjort (The Depths of the Ocean, pp. 477-8) has given a short general account of the invertebrate fauna of the Norwegian fiords, showing how the difference in physical conditions (temperature, salinity, etc.) and in the nature of the bottom, between the island belt and the inner parts of the fiords, determines the biological differences. There is a diminution in the number of species, some penetrating a greater, some a less distance ; but the fauna of the fiords is marine.

The first half of Dr. Hjort's description is sufficient to illustrate the general character of the littoral fauna of the inner parts of the fiords :—

“ The Fjords.—We have seen that the fauna of the littoral zone among the skerries, especially in the tidal area and laminaria belt, is abundant both in species and individuals. There is a diminution, however, as we penetrate farther into the fjords. In the tidal area of the inner fjords, and at greater depths also, we miss the limpet and the purple snail, while the hydroids to be found on the fucus in the skerries become less and less abundant, until even Dynamena pumila disappears.* This change in the fauna is mainly due to the decrease in salinity, since the surface of the inner fjords, for a greater part of the year at any rate, is occupied by a layer of less saline water in which these forms cannot thrive. Far up the fjords, however, in the tidal area, we get the barnacle, the mussel Mytilus, and the black periwinkle, which seem to be less affected by a difference in salinity, though even they require a certain percentage of salt, since they disappear, for instance, from the tidal area in the more enclosed parts of the fjords, where, owing to the great accession of fresh water, the salinity is particularly low. The mussel and black periwinkle, it is true, may sometimes occur even here also, but only in fairly deep water. We also find the horse mussel in the fjords. The great thickets of Laminaria hyperborea, which are so characteristic of the skerries, are absent from the inner fjords, and so are most of the forms associated with them. In their place, however, we get Laminaria digitata and L. saccharina, but in comparatively small quantities.

* It is interesting to note that Dynamena pumila is also found in the estuary of the Elbe as far up as Cuxhaven.

“ The difference between the inner fjords and the skerries is not so marked when we descend to greater depths, since a good many forms are equally at home in both. Some of the littoral fauna, like the lancelet, appear to avoid the fjords altogether.* Two forms, which rarely ascend far up the fjords of West Norway, are the lobster and the common edible crab ; but the common shore crab (Carcinus moenas) penetrates to their inmost recesses. The big black sea-slug (Cucumaria frondosa) is another form which abounds among the skerries and in the outer parts of the fjords, but very exceptionally penetrates far in. No doubt their presence is due to the feeble currents, or the greater or less accessions of fresh water prevailing in the fjords—local conditions that are bound to affect the distribution of the fauna.”

FISHES OF HAMILTON INLET.

From the distribution of cod in the Baltic it is perfectly clear that if they do not penetrate into Hamilton Inlet beyond the Narrows they are not deterred by the decreased salinity of the water ; also that as they breed in the Baltic in regions where the salinity is 7 to 10 at the surface and 10 to 20 at the bottom, they will not be prevented by the salinity of the water from breeding in parts of Hamilton Inlet in which the salinity is 10 to 15 at the surface and reaches 26 at a depth of about 20 fathoms.

Cod live at depths down to 100 fathoms, but the majority of them do not go beyond 50 fathoms ; thus it may readily be admitted that the region immediately west of Henrietta Island, with shores descending steeply to depths of 150 fathoms or more, is quite unsuitable for cod. But beyond this, commencing with the Valley Bay—Neveisik Island district, are considerable areas of the right depth for cod, and it is not unlikely that cod may be found there, especially where the bottom is rocky, pebbly, or weedy. In forming this opinion I bear in mind the fact that the deep area west of Henrietta Island would be a check to the normal immigration of cod along the bottom ; but it would not, I think, act as an effective barrier cutting them off from the more favourable regions further west. Cod do not always swim at the bottom and in certain circumstances, e.g., when in pursuit of prey swimming near the surface or in mid-water, might occasionally cross this area. Moreover, larval fish might swim over, or be carried across by strong tides.

Dr. Hjort states that in Norway no immigration of cod takes place into fiords where barriers exist and shallow entrances lead into deeper and wider basins farther inland.

He had before him the memoranda prepared by Dr. Kindle and Mr. Prince, but not the fuller information as to the topography and hydrography of the Inlet which is contained in the Canadian atlas and hydrographical reports ; thus it may be doubted whether the Hamilton Inlet fully corre-

* The reason for this may perhaps be that the lancelet requires pure sand or shell-sand to live in, while the bottom of the fjords generally consists of mud.

sponds to the fiords he had in mind and whether in any of these

“ the deep basin behind the entrance ” is succeeded after a few miles by a region with large areas of comparatively shallow water. His reference to the “ possibility of an accidental and very rare inflow of water from outside ” is further evidence that his memorandum was prepared without knowledge of the tides and currents in the Narrows.

The only information available with regard to other fishes is that capelin “ were not seen ” west of Henrietta Island, that there are salmon fisheries, and that “ salmon-trout ” are caught west of Henrietta Island.

The capelin is a member of the smelt family (Osmeridæ). According to Smitt (Scandinavian Fishes) it “ never enters quite fresh water.” Collett has recorded that “ in Varanger Fiord there is a good and sure spawning place off the mouth of the Jacob Elf. At the flood the capelins ascend high up the river, as far as the water is brackish enough.” Jordan and Evermann (Fishes of North America) term the capelin a marine species that sometimes ascends streams. The eggs of the capelin are deposited in sand at the edge of the water, and if there are any sandy beaches in Hamilton Inlet the shoals would probably resort to them in the spring or early summer for breeding purposes ; from what is known of their habits elsewhere it seems unlikely that they would be deterred by the salinity of the water from visiting any part of the Inlet, except perhaps the extreme western end.

The salmon of Labrador is the same species (Salmo salar) as that of Britain. Its life-history has been very fully worked out. The adults make their way into rivers from the sea in order to spawn on the gravelly shallows ; when they have finished breeding they go back to the sea, or make the attempt, for many are so enfeebled that they die. The young fish live in the rivers until they are about 6 inches long, a length generally attained in two years, although the period may be longer ; they then make their way straight to the open sea, where they feed on other fishes and grow rapidly, attaining a weight of several pounds in a year ; after one or more years in the sea they return to the rivers to breed. For such fishes the Hamilton Inlet may be presumed to be mainly a passage leading to and from the rivers in which they breed ; it is improbable that more than a small proportion of either young or adult fish do more than travel through it. The migratory habits of the salmon are of great importance for the fishery, the object of which is to intercept the fish on their inward migration, either in the rivers or as they approach the river mouths.

The “ salmon trout ” mentioned by Dr. Kindle is presumably a char, Salvelinus fontinalis, for Jordan and Evermann state that “salmon trout ” is the Canadian name for sea-run individuals of this species. This is a smaller fish than the salmon and does not go so far out to sea ; it is probably resident throughout the Hamilton Inlet. It runs up rivers to breed and forms permanent fresh-water colonies in the rivers it enters ; in the breeding season the residents in the rivers would be joined by those ascending from the Inlet.

It is probable that in the rivers of the east coast of Labrador there are no true fresh-water fishes, as these would have become extinct owing to the conditions that prevailed in the Glacial Period. The Hamilton River may possibly have established connections since which have enabled it to acquire a few species (e.g., Catostomus catostomus, C. commersonii, Perca flavescens), but these, if present, would not venture into the Inlet except in the immediate vicinity of the mouth of the river.

It may be noted that of the marine fishes common to Labrador and Scandinavia some have a wide range in the Baltic, e.g. Lump-sucker (Cyclopterus lumpus), sea-snail (Liparis liparis), and sea-scorpion (Cottus scorpius), and would not be deterred by the salinity from entering the inner part of Hamilton Inlet ; these, and other species also, may be expected to occur beyond the Narrows, especially in the bays, where the depth and salinity of the water would seem well suited to them. No investigation of the fauna of these bays seems to have been made, and until this has been done the statement that marine fishes do not penetrate beyond the Narrows cannot be accepted.

INVERTEBRATES OF HAMILTON INLET.

Dr. Kindle's report on the intertidal fauna and flora shows that in this respect Double Mer and the Narrows are typically marine. On nearly every boulder or rock outcrop in the vicinity of Rigolet are numerous barnacles (Balanus balanus) and periwinkles (Littorina rudis), but, according to Dr. Kindle, neither is found west of Henrietta Island. From the map it appears that for a distance of about 8 miles westwards from Henrietta Island the inlet is about 4 miles wide and is very deep ; the 50-fathom line is close inshore and the shores appear to rise abruptly from the water ; without having seen the place I cannot be certain, but I think it probable that in this area there is no intertidal zone with rocks, and that the apparent absence of barnacles and of periwinkles may be due to this. Dr. Kindle's statement does not appear to be founded on an examination of the fauna of Valley Bay and Etagaulet Bay ; if he has made such an investigation he has not given the results of it.

The barnacle, Balanus balanus, extends from the Arctic Ocean southwards to Cape Cod and the English Channel. It occurs at all depths from the surface, i.e., the intertidal zone, down to 90 fathoms. It is found in the south-western part of the Baltic, in a region where the average salinity of the surface-water is 8 to 10 ; this salinity appears to be too low for it, and in the littoral zone it is replaced by another species, B. improvisus, but it has been found in the Fehmarn Belt at depths of from 3 to 17 fathoms, where the average salinity at the lesser depth would probably not exceed 12, and has also been recorded from 15 fathoms well to the east of this (55° 16' N. 13·12' E.), where the average salinity of the water at this depth appears to be less than 12.

From this it seems clear that the salinity of the water would not prevent this species from inhabiting the greater part of the Hamilton Inlet west of the Narrows ; in such areas as Valley Bay and Etagaulet Bay, if there are rocks near the edge of the water, one might expect to see it, and provided there are rocks or other solid objects for its attachment it should be found at moderate depths a great deal farther west.

The rough periwinkle, Littorina rudis, is a widely distributed species that is found in Britain. It lives along the shore near the limit of high tides and spends a great part of its time out of the water. In the Baltic its distribution is said to be restricted to regions where the salinity is 7 or over, but elsewhere it has been found where the salinity is only 5-6 (e.g., in Randers Fiord). In face of these facts it is difficult to believe that the distribution of this species in Hamilton Inlet is limited by a salinity of 15, and further investigation may be expected to reveal its widespread occurrence west of the Narrows, wherever there are shores suitable for it.

The short lists of marine Mollusca from the Narrows and from Indian Harbour (C. pp. 1988 and 1989) include some European species. Of the bivalves Mya arenaria (sand mussel) and Mytilus edulis (edible mussel) extend in Randers Fiord into water with salinity as low as 5 to 6 ; of the Gastropods the common periwinkle (Littorina littorea) lives in the Randers Fiord in water of salinity 12 to 15, and the whelk (Buccinum undatum) in water of salinity 15 to 20. The last-named descends to considerable depths, so that for it, as for the others, the water in the greater part of the Hamilton Inlet beyond the Narrows is quite salt enough.

FLORA OF HAMILTON INLET.

The plants generally known as sea-weeds are fixed or attached marine algæ, a group of primitive plants that are primarily aquatic. Some sea-weeds live between tide-marks, others in deeper water ; they are most abundant on rocky shores, where there is a firm surface for their attachment. Many species tolerate a reduced salinity of the water ; for example, the Baltic has a considerable and varied sea-weed flora (cf. Hauck, Marine Algæ of Germany and Austria, Leipzig, 1885, and Svedelius, Studies of the Baltic Marine Algal-Flora, Upsala, 1901). Of the brown sea-weeds belonging to the Fucaceæ Hauck lists eight species for the North Sea, four of which occur in the Baltic. From these general considerations it seems that the inner part of Hamilton Inlet should have a sea-weed flora ; but there is no information on this point. Dr. Kindle tells us that a species of Fucus and the large kelp disappear from the shore west of the Narrows ; but does not the rocky shore suitable for them disappear here also ?

Completely aquatic plants, with floating or submerged leaves, are found in fresh water ; some of these are algæ and some are members of a higher group, the flowering plants ;

water-plants belonging to this group are secondarily aquatic, derived from land-plants. Dr. Kindle's list of flowering plants "believed to be adjusted to a coast-wise, lake-shore, or river habitat," includes not more than half-a-dozen that are completely aquatic (e.g., Potamogeton heterophyllum, Ranunculus reptans, Callitriche palustris, from p. 2520 Grand Lake and the Naskaupi River) and none of these is from the region between the Narrows and the mouth of Hamilton River ; there is no information at all as to the water-flora of this area.

The rest of the plants in the list may be roughly divided into two main categories. One of these includes plants that are found in marshy soil and along the edges of lakes and rivers. The other division includes the halophytes, most of which cannot well be described as "water-loving," as their adaptations to a habitat near the sea consist of devices for doing with as little water as possible, so that they do not take in much salt. The halophytes are a very mixed group, including plants that live at varying distances from the sea and on different kinds of soil. Dr. Kindle states that seven of the species in his list do not extend west of the Narrows, and he names three of them. On turning to the list we find that one of the three is "not common west of the Narrows." A second was found near Rigolet, but was "not seen elsewhere" ; the presence of this species at this particular spot and its absence elsewhere hardly justify any general conclusions. The third species was "not seen above the Narrows," but is correctly described as having a fresh-water and brackish habitat. These three species (Polygonum viriparum, Ranunculus lapponicus, and Iris setosa) are all widely distributed northern plants, and none of them is confined to the sea-shore. The Polygonum is a mountain species that extends southwards in America to the summits of mountains in New England. Ranunculus lapponicus is recorded in North America from the shores of inland fresh-water lakes, such as Lakes Nipigon and Superior. Iris setosa grows in a variety of soils, generally near fresh or brackish water, but sometimes in poor, dry sand. It is extraordinary that Dr. Kindle should write of these species that "the inability of these salt-loving plants to extend their range west of the Narrows affords very clear botanical evidence of the change that takes place in the salinity of the water west of the Narrows."

The evidence from the distribution of plants on or near the shores is so inconclusive and so remotely related to the question at issue that it does not demand further consideration.

CONCLUSION.

The general purport of the biological evidence put forward in support of the Canadian Case is to suggest that the marine fauna and flora do not extend beyond the Narrows owing to the reduced salinity of the water. I have disproved this contention by showing that the species specially selected to illustrate it are found elsewhere in water of salinity as low as, or lower than, that of the Hamilton Inlet west of the Narrows.

It is admitted that the fauna and flora of the Narrows may be in part absent from the region immediately to the west, which would seem to be unsuitable for some of the species owing to its great depth and the steepness of the shores ; this admission would not, of course, include animals that swim at the surface or in mid-water, or floating plants.

p. 2521

Dr. Kindle seems to have been so sure that salinity was responsible for the apparent disappearance in this region of certain species found in the Narrows that he did not think it worth while to find out whether they reappeared in the more shallow areas further west, in which the salinity is considerably higher than in the Baltic, where some of these species occur. The most striking feature of his report is the absence of any positive evidence as to the nature of the fauna and flora of the Hamilton Inlet west of the Narrows ; he does not record a single animal that he has obtained, nor one completely aquatic plant that he has found in this area.

In the absence of any information it may be assumed, from what happens in waters of like salinity elsewhere, that a marine fauna and flora extends nearly to the mouth of the Hamilton River.

I. The Materials upon which these Observations are chiefly based are the Dominion Government Chart No. 420 and the Hydrographic Report included in the Documents delivered with the Canadian Case. These Materials do not form so complete or satisfactory a basis for judging the characteristics of the area under discussion as they would have composed if they had included:—

(a) The Chief Hydrographer's Report;
(b) Sailing Directions for the area surveyed, published by the Hydrographic Survey Department Canada.

Moreover an expansive sheet of water with deep water throughout and a tidal stream of 5 knots in the Narrows area and extending for 20 miles in length had to be surveyed. Apart from the rigors of the climate, the Labrador season is short and there are no facilities on the spot for the conduct of survey. No Data were available from previous surveys, so that a rigid Triangulation was necessary over the whole area involving the establishment of elevated stations in a trackless and timbered country. Accordingly it is not unlikely that the Time available proved insufficient for a survey in any great detail.

II. The information published by the British Admiralty under the superintendence of the Hydrographer of the Navy appears in Vol II of the Newfoundland and Labrador Pilot 5th Edition 1917 and the Annual Supplement thereto, the last available issue being dated November 1924. The Admiralty Charts include No. 375 Coast sheet published in 1876 under the title “ Sandwich Bay to Nain including Hamilton Inlet ” :
so far as Hamilton Inlet is concerned the Chart is based on the Survey by H.M.S. Bulldog in 1860 and incorporates the survey work in the Inlet by H.M.S. Pelter in 1823. Chart No. 375 was first published in 1864 and entitled “ Hamilton Inlet ” : the
Eastern extremity to Goose Bay at the head of Lake Melville.
Charts No. 222 and 1422 though they touch the area in question are less valuable for the present purpose.

It is noteworthy that Chart No. 375 uses the term Hamilton Inlet as covering the whole of Lake Melville. The Eastern or outer portion of Hamilton Inlet extending so far as the Narrows would be properly described as a Sound, but no distinguishing name has hitherto been given to it in Admiralty publications, the description Hamilton Inlet being used as indicated above to

p. 2524

cover the whole Inlet as far as and including Goose Bay. A probable reason why no separate name has been given to the “Sound ” is that it affords no convenient shelter or stopping places for vessels. So far as I am aware the use of the term has Inlet. not been challenged until the present proceedings. It is true that the term is not so used in the Chart No. 420 included as No. 13 in the Canadian Atlas, but this chart does not clearly identify the actual geographical locality of Lake Melville and places the comparatively well known name Hamilton Inlet without prominence beyond the Narrows in the margin of the Chart. In spite of the materials disclosed in the documents appended to the Canadian Case I still consider that the descriptive Title used for Canadian Chart No. 420 is incorrect and certainly confusing.

The Narrows and Navigation.

III. For practical purposes a useful Test often adopted in determining what is an Inlet of the Sea is whether the waters in question are permanently navigable by ocean-going vessels. Such a Test is specially applicable to cases where, as here, no rivers navigable by such vessels flow into the waters under consideration. It was adopted by the Inter-Departmental Committee on the Limits of Territorial Waters appointed by the British Government in 1922. The many Government Departments concerned were represented on that Committee of which I was Chairman.

Navigation East side of Henrietta Id..

Judged by this Test the whole of Hamilton Inlet (including Lake Melville) is undoubtedly an Arm or Inlet of the Sea, for the whole of it is permanently accessible to the largest ocean-going vessels and without supplementary assistance such as tugs (see Atlas for enlargement of entrance to Lake Melville taken from Canadian Chart No. 420).

Navigation West of Henrietta Id.

The Narrows extending between Double Mer and Holme Points for a distance of 6 miles present no difficulty, there is no Tidal Bar or other natural hindrance. The Passages on both sides of Henrietta Island are navigable by large vessels. The navigable width of them is reduced for the most part to less than half a mile, but the water is deep and the coast "steep-to," nor are there any hidden dangers anywhere near mid channel.

The Passage E of Henrietta Island is 4 miles long and takes the form of the letter " S " with two sharp bends at Holme Point and the East extreme Henrietta Island, each turn amounting approximately to nine points of the compass or 101°. This Passage at its narrowest is 4 cables or 800 yards; its least depth exceeds 20 fathoms.

The West Passage following the Main Channel and passing E of Eskimo Island is 7½ miles long from abreast Holme Point to Lake Melville. It follows the general direction of the Narrows to the South West for 5 miles until half a mile North of Snook Cove then the Main Channel follows the gradually curving shore of Henrietta Island necessitating a steady alteration of course amounting to seven points of the compass or 79°, and passes to the East of Eskimo Island, and from there the channel to Lake Melville is open. From

on either side of Henrietta Id.

Strathcona Point at the South end of the Narrows the width of the navigable channel to the South West expands to 1½ miles and rapidly contracts again South of Moliak Cove to 6 cables and to 3 cables (600 yards) abreast Snook Cove a width of 3 cables being maintained till lake Melville is reached. The least depth throughout is 10 fathoms N.E. of Eskimo Island : for the rest the depth varies between 15 & 40 fathoms. Except at Moliak Cove the shores throughout are “ steep-to.” The only hidden danger—to be considered—is the 9 feet rock just North of Eskimo Island and this rock lies well to the Westward of the main track east of the island. The Tidal Streams are given as having a strength of 3½ knots at springs North and West of Eskimo Island and may be assumed in the absence of observations without much risk of error to be of the same strength east of that island. The Canadian Report states that the main body of water flowing to and from the Sound was noticed to pass West of Henrietta Island, following the more direct line : it is probable that here the streams are of the greatest strength as compared with the velocity of the flow passing East of this Island.

Sea Inlets and their General Characteristics.

There is a Passage to the west of Eskimo Island available for small ships with local knowledge but it offers no advantage over the Main Channel east of the island, though it was the Passage followed by H.M.S. Pelter in 1823.

Both the two main Passages recommended above compare favourably in their navigable features with similar Passages in every day use by large ocean-going vessels elsewhere. The East Passage, though not so direct to the head at Lake Melville and requiring two pronounced but moderate turns would probably be preferred by a stranger, as being wider and shorter than the West Passage which affords advantage to unhandy vessels when meeting passing ships, the one turn here being a gradual one and less in amount.

IV. The length of the Inlet does not make it the less an Arm of the Sea. Long Inlets of two kinds are found elsewhere. Those of the first kind are narrow in width (about 1 to 5 miles), of great depth (exceeding 100 fathoms in many places), preserving a general direction with precipitous elevated shores and branching Arms to their head, where more often an unnavigable river empties from the watershed of the mountain gorges and valleys.

Those of the second kind are found on a broken but generally less elevated coastal region, where the sea coast recedes somewhat, forming a Bay or Sound with a narrow navigable Waterway at its head ; the Waterway, which is in places restricted to less than half a mile in width, seldom exceeds and generally falls short of 20 miles in length and is subject to strong Tidal Streams, gives access to an expansive sheet of water, forming a Basin ; the Basin generally exceeds 100 fathoms in depth, reaches up to a 100 miles in length, contains scattered islands and extends to other expansive Basins with similar Waterways all of which however may not be navigable. The shores throughout Inlets of this second kind are generally moderately elevated

p. 2526

Examples of Sea

and extend from a more distant mountainous background. Many rivers, usually unnavigable, some of large size with tributaries, debouch around the head of such an Inlet and form the drainage of an extensive watershed. The Inlets of both kinds are themselves generally permanently accessible through-out their full extent to the largest ocean vessels, which may however, in those of the second kind, owing to the presence of Tidal Bars or the strength of Tidal Streams, be restricted in traversing the Waterways to times near High Water or when the Tidal Stream is at moderate strength.

Such Inlets vary greatly in size, and may, with successive Basins which they form, extend for a distance of 150 miles to their navigable head.

V. Hamilton Inlet is an example of this second kind, which is Inlets, less familiar and of less frequent occurrence than the first kind of Inlet mentioned above. Comparison may fairly be made in the present case with Sea Inlets possessing similar characteristics to Hamilton Inlet with a few examples such as:—

BURRARD and MASSET Inlets on the sea coast of British Columbia, BRAS D'OR LAKE (which is enclosed by Cape Breton Island off the Coast of Canada), and those of the south west coast of New Zealand, the west coast of Scotland the coast of Alaska, the Patagonian channels of Chile, the coast of Norway, Mediterranean, China, and Eastern Archipelago.

In particular (see Admiralty Chart 922 in Atlas) BURRARD INLET embraces two large deep water Basins extending for a total distance of 24 miles from the Sound near Atkinson Point to the head of Indian Arm : it is permanently accessible throughout to ocean-going vessels by the first and second Narrows, where Tidal Streams run 6 to 8 knots at Springs with a least depth of 35 feet at Low Water.

MASSET INLET (see Admiralty Chart 3711, Canadian Chart 305 in Atlas) extends from the Sound near Wiah Point for 45 miles at its head and is accessible to ocean-going vessels crossing the Outer Bars, the least depth being 15 feet at Low Water. It traverses Masset Sound (20 miles long) and the mean breadth is half a mile. Tidal Streams run 5½ knots. The name Masset Inlet was first authoritively assigned to this previously imperfectly known large Inlet in 1909, when it was then first delineated by the Canadian Government Survey.

SANDWICH BAY (Admiralty Chart 263) on the Labrador Coast 30 miles South of Hamilton Inlet though smaller than the latter extends 30 miles from its entrance seaward of Huntingdon Island to its head. The ship's Passage permanently accessible to ocean vessels is by the narrow channel eastward of Earl Island where the Tidal Streams are strong, when it expands to the Sandwich Bay basin 15 miles long with a general width of 6 miles and depths up to 60 fathoms.

The dimensions of SKYRING WATER (Admiralty Chart 21) in Chile are 50 miles by 10 miles with depth up to 340 fathoms. Skyring Water is accessible to ocean vessels by Fitzroy Channel (12 miles long with width under half a mile : Tidal Streams run 5 knots : Tidal Rise 5 feet : Least water 30 feet at Low Water), hence by OTWAY WATER (47 miles by 16 miles with depth up to 330 fathoms : Tidal Rise 8½ feet) and Jérôme Channel (10 miles by 1 mile wide, deep and Tidal Stream 6½ knots).

Skyring Water is an example of two large Sea Inlets directly connected by a Channel permanently accessible to ocean vessels.

Larger still though similar in essentials are :

(1) the SEA OF MARMORA (110 miles by 40 miles wide over 700 fathoms deep) permanently accessible by the Dardanelles : the channel being 35 miles long with a least width of ¾ mile and a least depth of 25 fathoms, and

(2) the BLACK SEA with a length of 630 miles greatest breadth of 330 miles and a depth up to 1200 fathoms, permanently accessible by the Bosphorus Channel 17 miles long with a width varying from 1½ miles to slightly under ½ mile and a least depth of 20 fathoms. It has been established that both in the Dardanelles and Bosphorus there is a permanent outward flow of the Upper Strata water into the Mediterranean having a velocity of 4 knots, whilst in the lower strata a counter current reaching to near the bottom prevails setting inwards from the Mediterranean having a Density and Temperature of that sea.

Tidal Observations and Slope of the Surface Water in the Narrows of Hamilton Inlet.

VI.

I now propose to consider the nature of the LEVELLING, TIDAL AND CURRENT OBSERVATIONS obtained and the scope of the conclusions to be drawn from them.

Precise Tidal observations were obtained by Canadian Officers continuously throughout two complete Lunar months during August-October 1923, as set out in Part XIV of the Canadian Government Report. Automatic Tide-Gauges, were functioning during this period at two Tidal Stations, chosen as reference points of which the first was situated near Lester Point just seaward of the Narrows and the second a short way within Lake Melville on the shore of the north entrance to the Backway.

Although the time available was short, and it was not possible to employ the test of a closure for the actual levelling observations between the two Tidal Stations, the following conclusions as to the determination of the Tide Level Slope between the two Stations mentioned may be accepted as substantially accurate during the period embraced.

(a) That at any instant throughout the period of the observations there was a Definite Slope of the water surface between the two Stations, the Mean Tide Level of the Lake Melville Station being higher than that of the Lester Point Station.

Causes for the differences of Slope of the Surface Water in the Waterway and its permanency not established.

p. 2528

(b) That the Average Difference between the Mean Tide Levels of the two Stations during this period was 5 inches.

(c) That the Difference was not always constant, but subject to variations at the times of Spring and Neap tides, being greater during the outgoing than the incoming tide, and greatest during the Neap tides.

VII. This Difference of Mean Tide Level determined between August and September is accepted in the Canadian Report as not being an unchanging quantity representing a permanent difference between the level of Lake Melville and Mean Sea Level but the Difference of Level between the Stations for that period. It is in a great measure accounted for by the volume of water in excess of the inflow, due to the accumulation, mostly near the surface, of the fresh water whose progress seaward is arrested after its discharge into Lake Melville ; the water thus held up in Lake Melville is only able to pass out with the Ebb stream ; and the longer duration and greater strength of the Ebb are not sufficient to maintain a common level throughout the system, and restore equilibrium, before the advent of the succeeding Oceanic Tidal Undulation or the commencement of the Flood stream (these two latter features being separated by a considerable interval).

The fact that the Variation of the Surface Slope found between the two Stations or Gauge Points was greatest at Neap Tides, is to a larger extent explained by the variation in the volume of the water that passes in either direction to or from Lake Melville during Spring and Neap Tides. A further contributing cause is that the Times of High and Low Water due to the same Tidal Impulse, differ by some 3¼ hours at the two Stations, the Time of each occurrence being later at the Lake Melville end of the connecting Waterway than at the Lester Point end.

It is natural to suppose (in the absence of more specific observations to determine this point) that the Turn of both Flood and Ebb streams occurs at approximately the same time at each end of the Waterway, so that the upper strata of the water throughout the Waterway must be assumed to run in one direction only at any instant, subject to slight variations near the times of Slack Water at Spring or Neap Tides. Consequently when it is High Water at the Lake Melville end of the Waterway and the Flood stream will continue throughout the Waterway for a further 1½ hours, the Tide (as measured by vertical change) has been falling at the opposite end of the Narrows, for some 3¼ hours. At Low Water the conditions are approximately reversed. Each phase would operate to retard the natural flow of the water outwards from Lake Melville, by producing a cushioning effect there, which would be greatest with the outgoing stream and with the weaker tides. This consequent increase of slope would then diminish as the cycle continued with the 40 restoration of equilibrium at the ends of the Waterway (where the physical forces operating at any moment are more often dissimilar).

Further Variations in the Slope will arise from temporary and changing local conditions, such as the volume of fresh water which Lake Melville is

p. 2529

Necessity for more prolonged and detailed observations in order to determine the permanent existence of a difference of Mean Surface Level Water of Lake Melville and the Seaward Sound of Hamilton Inlet.

receiving, the strength and duration of the wind in one direction, and any change in the normal turn of the lower strata of water in the Waterway, which, as appears from the observations, generally took place both on the Ebb and on the Flow earlier than the turn of the surface layers.

Doubtless Small Differences of Level such as are here under review occur in portions of other Sea Inlets similar in general configuration and conditions to Hamilton Inlet, and they might prove to be either of a permanent or a seasonal character, if it were expedient or practicable to determine them.

VIII. The Period embraced by the observations must also be carefully noted. They were limited to a Period of two months, at the end of the summer in a particular year, and conclusions correctly drawn for this Period may not be true for other Periods, and should not be taken as a permanent state of the physical conditions that occur. Thus the Difference in Level found may be seasonal only, and due to the fresh water accumulating in the broad expanse of Lake Melville during the summer flood and then making a gradual egress through the Narrows.

Nothing short of a Prolonged Series of Observations would suffice to establish with certainty the existence of any Permanent Difference of Level between the inner and the outer portions of Hamilton Inlet. It would be necessary to exclude all occasional and temporary variations due to the divergent character or effects of physical conditions, natural forces and seasonal changes, and to determine in isolation from all these the true Mean Sea Level of the Sound seaward of the Narrows on the one hand and of the Mean Level of Lake Melville on the other. And they would have to be determined with great precision, when the purpose was to ascertain and account for small differences. At least one year's continuous series of observations and preferably more would be required to determine the Mean Level of the seaward Sound ; and to do the same for Lake Melville, in view of the seasonal variations in rainfall, snowfall, melting of snow and ice, barometer pressure and winds affecting it, the observations should extend over a Longer Period of time and not be confined to one place in Lake Melville.

IX. When attempting to compare the Slope of the River St. Lawrence with the slope which has been deduced for the Narrows of the Hamilton Inlet, certain cautions should be regarded:—

(a) The levelling observations referred to above were not sufficiently prolonged or extensive to prove the existence of any permanent Slope in the Narrows;

(b) In the case of the St. Lawrence, the Gulf of that name an undoubted Inlet of the Sea, which gradually as it is ascended merges into the well known river system in order to define a division between the two, some more or less arbitrary line of demarcation a choice of criteria must be adopted ; in the case of the Hamilton Inlet, where all vessels have natural permanent access from the open sea free of all obstruction, by means of a short deep narrow connecting Waterway to a Sea Basin which is navigable without hindrance to its head, no river enters into the question.

The Marine Character of Hamilton Inlet including the Inner portion, Lake Melivlle and Goose Bay.

(c) Lake Melville is nevertheless an Arm of the Sea, although owing to its expanse, depth of penetration into the interior of the country and general configuration it possesses the characteristics of a Sea Inlet in a less degree than the Sound seaward of the Narrows, as is manifested by the change in the features of the Flora and Fauna within this Sea Basin.

X. The Marine Character of Hamilton Inlet in its whole extent, including Lake Melville and Goose Bay, is not merely the effect of the Oceanic Tides. If the amplitude of the Tidal Wave impinging on the Labrador coast were very much less than it is (6 ½ feet maximum), doubtless a constant outflow of surface and upper strata water, largely fresh, with a sluggish stream, of a higher temperature than that in the Sound, and liable to freeze, would, in normal weather and in the absence of easterly winds, prevail in the Water-way connecting the Sound with Lake Melville. Lake Melville would then be practically without any Tidal Rise and subject to seasonal changes of level only. At the same time the lower strata of water in this connecting Waterway would be found to be constantly running in from the Ocean, maintaining a general Salinity and Temperature of the sea water standard throughout the lower strata of Lake Melville. The Conditions would then

(a) Diminished Tidal Range in the Waterway to and in Lake Melville.

(b) Retardation of the inward progress of the Tidal Wave.

(c) Greater velocity and longer duration of the Ebb Stream in the Narrows.

Density and Temperature of the Surface and sub-Surface Water.

be similar in some aspects to those prevailing in the Dardanelles and the Sea of Marmora (referred to above in paragraph V) and in other Sea Inlets where the Tidal Rise is small. In severe winters the Waterway might freeze throughout, and all passage be barred, as in the case of Lake Melville : all the other features would remain the same.

XI. The Canadian observations establish that the Range of the Tide decreases rapidly during the retarded progress of the Tidal Wave through the Narrows to the entrance of Lake Melville; from there the now diminished Range continues at the same height as the Tidal Wave advances without restriction across the deep and expansive Lake Melville and increases slightly owing to the contracted width of the wave at Goose Bay. These are normal features for a Sea Inlet of this configuration and depth.

The Greater Velocity and Longer Duration of the Ebb Stream than the Flood Stream at Rigolet are equally normal for a Sea Inlet, where a connecting Waterway, with a moderate Tidal Range, expands into a large deep Basin, into which a very extensive drainage falls from the distant watershed of the interior.

The Difference of 3 to 3 ½ hours between the times of High and Low water in the seaward Sound and Lake Melville is of course due to the Retardation of the Tidal Wave in its progress through the Narrows. But on account of natural forces which delay the outflow of water from Lake Melville, the water does not attain its maximum height at the entrance, until some time after the arrival of the crest of the Tidal Wave.

Retardation in the advance of a Tidal Undulation is a common feature in Sea Inlets and is dependent in its degree upon the depth, width and sinuosities of any Waterways offering obstruction to its travel.

XII. The observations with regard to the Density of the water established the following conclusions:—

Surface Water (a) at the head of Lake Melville it was almost permanently fresh and fit for drinking ; (b) at the Narrows its average density near the end of the Ebb stream was 58% of the density of standard sea water, and near the end of the Flood stream 76%; (c) in the seaward Sound between Rigolet and Indian Harbour the fresh water impregnation disappeared.

The Lower Strata had the full salinity of sea water throughout the whole extent of the Inlet up to the head of Lake Melville.

The distribution of Fresh Water on the surface, due to the drainage into Lake Melville of rain water and melted ice and snow, may have been abnormally large in the 1923 season, but the presence of fresh water at the head of a Sea Inlet is a constant feature which was well known to early voyagers, was taken advantage of by them for various purposes, e.g. for cleaning the bottom, boiler water, etc., and was continued with the advent of iron and steel vessels until the world wide distribution of docks rendered this expedient no longer an economic one.

The difference in Temperature near the surface of the waters in the seaward Sound of the Inlet and those in Lake Melville may be attributed to the influence of the cold Arctic current which setting permanently southward skirts the Labrador coast, ice in some form here prevails at all seasons of the year, "field" and "bay" ice during the winter and "polar bergs" during the summer. Only a comparatively small quantity of ice in a broken form passes into Lake Melville from the sea.

The severity of Climatic Conditions on the rugged and open sea board of Labrador, fully exposed to the Atlantic, is unique for its latitude (which is the same as the Port of Liverpool) and caused by the continued presence of the ice, the Arctic current and sea fogs, is much modified in Lake Melville where these causes cease to operate. The softening of the Climatic Conditions produces changes in the Fauna and Flora to be found between the mouth of the Inlet and the head of Lake Melville, changes which are paralleled in other Sea Inlets, though the exceptional conditions prevailing on the open sea-board of Labrador together with the large drainage system emptying into Lake Melville heighten the Climatic contrast and make the changes unusually great.

Final conclusions and Remarks.

XIII. On consideration of the Hydrographical and Geographical evidence now available, especially the excellent testimony afforded by Chart No. 420 of the Canadian survey of 1921, I am unable to agree with the general description of Lake Melville or of that of the connecting Waterway or with the consequential deductions contained in paragraph 18 of the Canadian Case.

The suggestion in that paragraph that the connecting Waterway between Lake Melville and the Sound extends seaward as far as Titoralak and Turner headlands, 10 miles from the entrance to the Narrows is in my opinion entirely incorrect.

With regard to the contention that the term “ Coast of Labrador ” could not properly be used to designate the Labrador Peninsula or any considerable subdivision of it, it is not difficult to cite instances of large Districts and Countries within the British Empire which are generally and authoritatively described in their whole extent by names including the term “ coast ” e.g. Gold Coast, Gold Coast Colony, Malabar Coast.

Finally without any consideration to the preceding remarks and as viewed from another standpoint, there appear to me to be sufficient reasons of Imperial Policy against placing Lake Melville in the category of River Systems, instead of, as heretofore among the Sea Inlets, inasmuch as a new precedent would be thus set up which would involve a general re-classification of similar Water Basins joined to the sea and an alteration in the standards now applied to determine their nature, and further any such change might very likely serve to prejudice the position of the British Empire, as a maritime power, in any future Territorial disputes or Congresses with other Nations.

DOCUMENTS DESCRIPTIVE OF TOPOGRAPHY OF THE COAST OF LABRADOR AND OF CONDITIONS IN GENERAL ON THE COAST

No. 1036.TOPOGRAPHY OF THE NORTHEAST COAST OF LABRADOR.BY REGINALD A. DALY, S.D., F.R.S.E., CHAIRMAN OF THE DEPARTMENT OF GEOLOGY AND GEOGRAPHY, HARVARD UNIVERSITY.

To understand the topography of the Labrador coast, one may well take a preliminary glance at the geological history of the region.

GENERAL SKETCH OF THE GEOLOGY.

From Belle Isle Strait to Ungava Bay the island belt and mainland of Labrador are almost entirely composed of very ancient rock-formations. These formations are typical of the Basement Complex of the North American continent. While some of them have the features of the so-called Huronian Series of rocks, the larger part of the coast-belt appears to be still older and to be "Archean."

Characteristic of such old, pre-Cambrian rocks throughout the world, is their mountain-structure. So it is along the whole northeast coast of Labrador. Long ago, namely in later pre-Cambrian time, the rocks of Labrador were everywhere folded, broken, jammed together, in a way quite similar to that illustrated in the cores of any of the much younger mountain chains, like the Alps or the Coast Range of British Columbia.

After these enormous, very ancient disturbances of the Labrador formations came to an end, the peninsula was much more rugged than at present ; its steep topography was analogous to that of the Alps, but the deformation was not confined to a relatively narrow belt, like the Alps. On the contrary, the very rugged mountainous relief of this pre-Cambrian era seems to have stretched continuously from the line of the present coast all across the Labrador peninsula into Quebec and beyond.

Because this old, mountain-land was high, it was subjected to erosion or denudation. The processes of erosion were slow, but sure, so that, already in late pre-Cambrian time, the mountainous relief was worn down close to sea-level. The rugged topography finally evolved into that of a low-lying, almost plain surface. Such a surface is called, technically, a peneplain. It is probable that a few residuals of rock-masses, specially slow to yield before the attack of weathering and erosive agencies, long remained above the general levels of the peneplain surface. Yet, in general, mountain-form (great height and ruggedness) was largely lost throughout Labrador. The worn-down roots of the ancient complex remain to this day. Everywhere the dominant Labrador rocks have preserved their mountain-structure.

Along the northeast coast there is only one limited area where the preceding description needs modification. This area occurs at and near Cape Mugford. Here the dominant basement complex of rocks, after its profound erosion, was buried under a thick mass of volcanic rocks and associated strata which were laid down, in a nearly horizontal position on the old surface of erosion. This younger formation is called the Mugford Series of rocks. These have been deformed only to a moderate degree; hence, over an area of 200 or 300 square miles, around Cape Mugford the structure and relief of the coastal belt differs markedly from all the rest of the belt from Belle Isle to Cape Chidley.

Long after the Labrador peneplain was formed, the whole peninsula, including the northeast coast, was warped. Extensive areas were uplifted so as locally to reach heights of a mile or more above sea-level. Other extensive areas were warped down below sea-level.

Areas of specially strong uplift include the highlands called the Mealy Mountains (south of Hamilton Inlet) ; the Kiglapait block (between Nain and Cape Mugford) ; the Kaumajet Mountains (at and in the vicinity of Cape Mugford); and the Torngat Mountains, the highest of all. (The Torngats stretch from near Hebron to Cape Chidley).

Areas of strong downwarp or subsidence are represented by Ungava Bay and by the submerged, coastal shelf which extends from Belle Isle to Ungava Bay. In these two extensive areas the ancient peneplain is completely drowned, out of sight under the Atlantic water.

The uplifted parts of the old-mountain peneplain were immediately attacked by the erosive agents. The chief agent was running water. The rivers began to cut gorges and canyons in the new highlands.

Then came the Glacial period. With the exception of a few of the highest peaks in the uplifted land north of Cape Mugford, the whole of the Labrador was covered by an ice-cap, comparable with the Antarctic ice-cap of the present day. This Labrador glacier slowly scoured away the soil and quarried away much rock from the solid ledges of the peninsula. Such glacial erosion was most pronounced in the river canyons which had already been cut on the Torgat and Mugford uplifts, but everywhere the Labrador topography was changed in quality by this glacial attack. The huge ice-sheet worked differentially; here quickly scouring out rock-basins—there smoothing hills which it could not destroy. In this way the well-graded peneplain was transformed into a maze of rounded hills and hollows. The topography of Labrador in general had become hummocky. Since the ice-cap went out to sea and scoured and quarried the sea-floor also (where less than 100 fathoms or so in depth), the hummocky topography was developed far out on the submerged shelf all along the coast.

p. 2535

Both before and after the Glacial period, the Atlantic waves have cut into exposed headlands. Hence at many points the coast is “steep-to” with sea-cliffs reaching 100 feet to 2,000 feet in height.

Finally, it should be noted that the Labrador peninsula as a whole was temporarily depressed during the Glacial period—simply by the great weight of the ice. After the ice-cap melted away, the earth's crust did not immediately respond and rise to its pre-Glacial level. Hence for a considerable time the Atlantic water transgressed upon the coast. During this late-Glacial and post-Glacial submergence of the northeast coast, the ocean waves built hundreds of short beaches in the bays and among the islands of the coastal fringe. These beaches have recently been elevated, because the earth's crust ultimately responded to the removal of the ice-load. These elevated beaches are found at heights of from 250 feet to 400 feet above present sea-level.

The elevated beaches and those now forming represent practically the only loose material on the Labrador coast. Everywhere else along the shores of islands and mainland, hard, solid bed-rock forms the surface and that surface is characteristically strongly sloping or hummocky. There is good reason, therefore, for the common rule along the coast, that settlements and cemeteries are located on elevated beaches. The almost universal absence of a true soil along the shore is also largely explained by the severe washing of the shore-belt during the recent submergence.

TOPOGRAPHIC UNITS TRANSVERSED BY THE NORTHEAST COAST

1. Throughout the southern half of the northeast coast, that is, from Belle Isle Strait to Ford Harbor, near Wain Mission Station, the general shape of the country is determined by the seaward downwarping of the old-mountain peneplain. The downwarping of its ice-scoured surface was gentle, so that there is a more or less persistent fringe of low islands along this half of the coast. These islands are simply the hummocky hills of the peneplain where this great surface was drowned under the Atlantic water. The islands here range in height from a few feet to about 600 feet. The average height of the islands rises slowly from the side of the open ocean toward the mainland.

The mainland itself has the same hummocky quality, and its average surface level rises slowly toward the interior of the peninsula. The water divide is 20 to 100 or more miles inland from the shore of the mainland. The position of the divide or “height of land” is fixed by irregularities in the warping of the old-mountain plain, as well as by the differing amounts of glacial erosion on the peninsula. Neither of these conditions affords any clear-cut separation of a coast-belt from the main body of the Labrador peninsula. Though the old mountain structure tends to parallel the northeast coast, there is no well-defined mountain range along the coast in the region south of Nain. Occasionally, hills, somewhat higher than the average, do interrupt the coastal profiles, but they are isolated and not parts of a continuous, northwest, southeast chain.

p. 2536

HIGH MOUNTAIN BLOCK FROM NAIN TO MOUNT THORESBY (PORT MANNERS).

2. A little south of Nain, a large mass of massive, strong rock crops out in bold, steep mountains which rise directly out of the ocean water to heights of 600 to 1,500 or more feet. This bold topography may be due partly to specially great upwarping of the old-mountain peneplain, but probably the high relief is due to the nature of the rock—technically called a gabbro.

This rock covers an area, probably 40 miles long, as measured along the coast, and extending far into the interior of country. The seaward edge of this massif of “Nain gabbro” is cut by steep-walled, fiord-like valleys, some of which have been so drowned as to form through-going channels, the seaward mountains of gabbro constituting high islands with steep-to shores on all sides.

THE KIGLAPAIT MOUNTAIN RANGE.

3. Immediately north of the Nain gabbro mountains is a short, but rather spectacular range running east and west along the mainland shore. This range, called the Kiglapait by the Eskimos, has never been explored, but photographs, from the sea, show that this local, east-west range rises directly from salt water. The individual peaks appear to have heights varying from 2,000 to 2,500 feet.

KAUMAJET MOUNTAINS.

4. From the bay just north of the Kiglapait nearly to Mugford Tickle, a distance of about 30 miles, the topography is not so bold and there are a number of islands which form a fringe, analogous to the island fringe from Nain to Belle Isle Strait. However, these islands are on the average higher, some reaching 1,000 feet or so in altitude. In fact, the coast-belt all the way from Nain to Cape Chidley, may be described as high, rugged, and steep-to on its seaward side.

At and around Cape Mugford we have the remarkable and quite special topography, due to the presence of the Mugford series of rocks, above described. The relatively flat position of these beds of rock causes the sea cliffs to be here very steep. Because the bedded series is thick, the cliffs are lofty, ranging from 1,000 feet to 2,000 feet or more in height above the sea. Those elevations characterize both the mainland portion of the Kaumajet Mountains and the large island of Oqualik, which appears to be a seaward continuation of the Kaumajet Mountain group.

p. 2537

5. The remaining element in the coastal topography is the Torngat Range, which becomes individualized only a short distance north of the Kaumajet Mountain group. The Torngats represent a belt of the old-mountain peneplain, where upwarped higher than anywhere else in the Labrador peninsula. This belt of the earth's crust was hoisted up 3,000 to about 5,000 feet, either by arching or by tilting. Since then rivers and local glaciers have cut deep canyon-like valleys and true fiord valleys, the relief finally becoming much like that of western Norway, except that the Torngats are not fringed with a low coastal flat and series of low islands, as is the case with the Norwegian Mountain system.

Almost everywhere the Torngat Mountains descend abruptly into the salt water of the fiords or of the open ocean.

SUMMARY OF THE GENERAL TOPOGRAPHY OF THE NORTHEAST COAST BELT

It thus appears that the four principal topographic units of the northeast coast, north of the latitude of Nain, together represent an almost continuous mountain land. This high ground bears a water divide situated from 10 to 75 miles from the northeast coast, and probably everywhere not far from half-way between this coast and George River. With the exception of a few bay-heads and a few islands, the shore does not permit of settlement, for any purpose, the sea-cliffs and mountain slopes rising elsewhere steeply out of salt water.

Taken as a whole, the Nain-Kiglapait-Kaumajet-Torngat Mountain group is a distinct entity, a distinct topographic province of the Labrador peninsula. To seaward this province is sharply bounded directly by the Atlantic shore-line. On the west the province fades into the general, lower, more plateau-like interior of the Labrador peninsula.

Evidently this mountain land is of no value to the fishing industry except as it supplies a few harbours and sites for fishing stages in fiords and other bays. The contrast with the coast-belt south of Nain, with respect to the abundance of safe harbours, is striking. Thus, between Saeglek Bay and Nachvak Bay, the only safe anchorage is at Ramah. The climate is against the use of the rare shore flats, for the purpose of drying fish successfully. In the almost complete absence of tree growth, fire-wood and other timber, useful to fishermen, are practically non-existent in this half of the northeast coast. It is safe to assume that, in the pursuit of his business, any fisherman would not need to penetrate inland more than a few hundred of yards at any point on this part of the coast.

South of Nain, throughout the southerly half of the northeast coast, and around to Blanc Sablon, there is no similar separation of the coast belt from the rest of the Labrador peninsula.

Here the old-mountain hummocky peneplain rises rather gently to the general plateau level of the Labrador peninsula. There is a height of land or water-divide far to the westward, but this divide is not that typical of a mountain range. It has been determined chiefly by an almost insensible warping of a peneplain. Viewed geologically and topographically, I can see no reason to differentiate the coastal belt from the great interior of the Labrador peninsula.

This southern half of the coast has abundant harbours, sites for fishing stages, and locally sufficient woodland to furnish fire-wood, needed by settlers and summer fishermen. According to observation, many of the islands are of use to the fishing fleets. Many bays of the mainland are similarly useful to them. On the other hand, the fishermen appear to make no practical use of the country more than one or two miles back from any bay-head. Elsewhere it is difficult to imagine their need of at any time occupying or doing business farther from the actual shore than a quarter of a mile. Drying-grounds are practically never situated at so great a distance as 200 yards from the shore. Practically the only sites flat enough for buildings are on the rocky islands, a few rocky places on the mainland within some hundreds of yards from the shore, and on the elevated, old sea-beaches, which are close to the present shore (usually less than a quarter of a mile).

GENERAL CONCLUSION.

To me it seems clear that there is no topographic basis for distinguishing a definite coastal belt along the eastern side of the Labrador peninsula from the rest of the peninsula. The fringe of islands is a perfectly distinct entity and can be rigorously represented on a map. The difficulty is to delimit a coastal belt, inland from the actual shore of the mainland. Logically, I can see no help from the fact that the Torngat Mountains, for example, form a rather distinct range, rising from and parallel to the Atlantic shore. The only rigorous criterion for subdividing eastern Labrador on a topographic basis is the use of " heights of land " or water-divides. Yet even this mode of subdivision is not founded on any principle involving any human relations to the country ; nor is it founded on any scientific principle, when applied to the whole stretch from Blanc Sablon to Ungava Bay, for the rock formations on the two sides of any of the principal water-partings are indetical.

On the other hand, while there is no possible geological or geographical criterion for accurately defining a coastal belt or strip, yet, for the practical purpose of fishing, the Labrador coast-belt can be defined rather closely. The belt of land useful in the fishing industry must include practically all the islands, and as well the local flats, sporadically located at the actual shore of the mainland, and extending inland at each place a few hundred yards. It is possible, however, that at some points as, for example, Sandwich Bay, land situated a few miles up the rivers might be fairly included in the fishing-rights belt of coastal Labrador, if it should be found that fishermen go so far from the seashore to secure fire-wood or other timber useful in their business. The rest of the land called Labrador might as well be on the other side of the world so far as the welfare of the fishermen on this coast is concerned.

LABRADOR FISHERIES. 1892–1924.

BY WILFRED T. GRENFELL, C.M.G., F.A.C.S., M.A., M.D., F.R.S.C., LL.D., Master Mariner and Justice of the Peace.Written at Capbreton, Landes, France.
Augt. 15th, 1924.

DEAR SIR,

I have visited Labrador and cruised in my own steamer amongst the peoples of the coast for 32 years, viz. 1892–1924. I have visited many times every settlement of every kind, have known personally almost all, even its visiting, fishermen, and have many times met its Eskimo and Indians.

I have written many books, scientific and story books, about the coast, and published many articles in magazines and newspapers.

There are still one or two fyords, to the bottom of which I have not been yet, but no white man has been there yet either, and no charts exist of them. I have made and published charts of much of the north coast, and have always been captain and master of my own boat. My cruises range from the boundary line at Blanc Sablon to Port Burwell in the straits of Hudson Bay, and I have cruised the coast also, as far as Quebec. The Admiralty accepted my survey (vide 1917 Coast Pilot for Labrador and Royal Geographical Map published for their journal).

We divide its fisheries into Canadian and Newfoundland though American fishermen have fishing rights on the Newfoundland section, and it is customary for Newfoundland and Canadian Schooners, to cruise also along the whole long area.

We subdivide the Newfoundland coast for convenience into the “ Straits Fishery ”—i.e. Blanc Sablon to Battle harbour, and the East Coast or Labrador Fishery, from Battle Harbour to Cape Chidley.

THE FISHERIES BETWEEN BLANC SABLON AND BATTLE HARBOUR.

This is entirely an outside sea–coast fishery. There are no deep inlets, Chateau bay being the deepest.

It is fished by a diminishing number of fishermen, which is true of the whole coast, for the years 1892-1924. This is due to increased cost, as well as diminished markets, and personally I am convinced that the change of the method of fishing from lines and offshore work, to nets attached to the land and fished by small motor boats, has as much to do with this as the supposed diminution in the quantities of fish. This steady diminution has been a marked feature since the Great War.

This section is fished almost exclusively by Newfoundlanders and white Labrador residents. Occasional Canadians and Americans come, especially to haul bait. Rarely Canadian and American traders still visit this coast.

The chief methods used everywhere now on the Labrador coast are trap nets. Cord nets and seines, and flax gill nets are also used on this section. Bultos are used also, and handlines.

Salmon are also fished, outside the rivers only.

Indians rarely visit this coast, Eskimo never.

A whale fishery started at Schooner Cove, never functioned, and has fallen into decay.

The hair-seal fishery is only of local importance, being carried on by Labrador natives. But sealing steamers from both Newfoundland and Canada (Halifax) have hunted through the Straits of Belle Isle in March and April. Capeline, for bait, and occasionally lance fish, are taken on the shallows of the inlets.

THE FISHERIES BETWEEN BATTLE HARBOUR AND CAPE CHIDLEY.

This coast is deeply indented with estuaries, and has many large and well stocked rivers.

It is fished by Newfoundlanders, natives of Labrador, Eskimo, and occasional Canadians and United States fishermen.

The methods used are the same as in the Straits of Belle Isle. The Eskimo use trap-nets furnished mostly by Moravian Mission stations.

The salmon fishery on this section is much more extensive. It is carried on by the natives mostly. But it is customary for Newfoundlanders, the Hudson Bay Company, and the Moravians to supply nets and buy the salmon. The Canadian traders from Halifax, chiefly carried on by Mr. Robert Reed and Mr. MacConnell, have ceased to supply for this salmon fishery, for several years now. An effort by the Hudson Bay Company is now being made to export the salmon fresh to England, chilled. If successful the large sea-trout fishery would probably develop again.

For many years after my arrival on the coast, the Hudson Bay Company had a salmon fishery three miles up the Eagle river in Sandwich bay, a regular brick building, and a cannery. The Elsworthy's of Pinware in the "Straits," of which region they held special license direct from English authorities, fished inside Pinware Rivers mouth. These have both been closed up by the Newfoundland Government during my time. Commercial fishing of any kind is forbidden by Newfoundland laws within any river or estuaries, inside a line drawn from points 200 yards outside the mouths of any river. Newfoundland maintains wardens along both sections of coast to enforce this law. Indians, sportsmen, Eskimo, and others, fish these rivers with rod and line, either illegally, or by license costing ten dollars.

The herring, mackerel, and whale fisheries on this section are temporarily anyhow negligible. The Cape Charles whale station has closed down.

The local hair-seal fishery is of importance to the Labrador men by whom it is carried on, and to the Eskimo. It is mostly confined to the outer Islands, and " runs " and pursued mostly in the late fall and early spring. An important hair-seal fishery however exists in Hamilton Inlet, as far up as its head, viz., Northwest river. The salmon fishery is also carried on to the head of this bay by the Labrador settlers.

EXTENT OF FISHERIES UP ESTUARIES AND RIVERS.

The fact that cod fish are not fished commercially in fresh water precludes their being fished far up long estuaries into which flow many large rivers, such as Hamilton Inlet and Sandwich bay. The former has, besides the Hamilton, some twenty other rivers at least, while Eagle, White Bear, Dove Brook, Paradise, Muddy, and other rivers make Sandwich bay at its head of no value for cod fishing. It is safe to say that few cod fish enter Melville bay, a fact that is attested by the Eskimo cod fishery at Caravalla. This is at "the Narrows," or only entrance to Lake Melville, and is about 20 miles inside Rigolet. They have always led me to understand that all they get are Rock cod, a fish that so far has no value for Newfoundland fishermen. They are accustomed to reject these when taken by mistake amongst the cod on the outside. That no cod fishery by Newfoundlanders or Canadians, or anyone, except for Rock cod by native Labradorers, further up the Hamilton Inlet than the Narrows, or ever has been, is fairly certain. At any rate during the past 32 years I would assert with great confidence that none has been. The same is true of Sandwich bay above Divers Island, North River, and Cartwright. Our station at Muddy river fishes for food for the children, but so far as I know we catch nothing but Rock cod and possibly a stray true codfish, but nothing that could possibly repay a cod fisherman. The Rock cod are no value for export. With regard to other long inlets, however, the case is different. They too are numerous and run far into the land.

Beginning at the south, Lewis bay runs in thirty miles and though cod fishing is not carried on certainly above Hatters Cove, schooners seeking firewood do visit the head of the bay. Michaels bay is not fished above " New York " harbour, some 15 miles up, and Alexis not more than 15 miles either. In these statements I am using the farthest limits I have ever known any cod fishermen ever to go in search of cod.

In Hawkes Bay, I do not think cod has been taken commercially inside " Squashho-run " but from its very bottom fishermen in schooners seek firewood. Black bear bay, Porcupine bay, Rocky bay, Sandhills bay, Table bay, Mullens Cove, Goose bay, and all inlets to Indian Harbor, exclusive of Sandwich bay and Hamilton Inlet, have been fished to the bottom, except

Table bay, where again inside the Narrows I think no cod fish were ever taken. It is safe to say that cod fishing at the heads of these bays, however, has never been more than experimental, and that, unless by some unusual accident, has never justified the time or effort and never would. North of the White bear Islands, however, the problem is different. Here the mountains reach nearer the coast. The volume of water carried by rivers which are short and rapid is much less, and cod unquestionably can be taken in all the shorter inlets at times, quite profitably, up to the land wash at the bay heads. But the fact remains that it is very, very, seldom done, and that may be due to the prohibition of the use of steamers in the fishery by Newfoundland laws. Byron's bay, Lords-Arm, Pomiadluk, Stag bay, Makkovik, Kippekok, Adlavik, Bay of Islands, Ujutok, Kanairiktok, Adlavik, are all known to me personally, right up to their heads, and I have seen schooners fishing up all of them, except Kippekok above the narrows, Adlavik above the big mountain, and up Ujutok, which besides being unchartered is very shallow. The longest of these bays is Kippekok and I reckoned its head to be 40 (forty) miles from the mouth. I have seen cod-fishing schooners in Jack Lane's bay, and I think in Jim Lane's bay. Of the rest of the many inlets as far as Cape Chidley little is known. No cod fishery occurs in Okpatik, and none in Okkak bay, above the old station, except by Eskimo. Nain bay and Kikkeraktokak bay both run in some forty miles above the station of the Moravian brethren, but rarely or never do cod fishermen pursue their calling above the station.

I have seen schooners fishing in Port Manvers, and I know they have passed thro' the inside run to Nain looking for fish. I have seen schooners fishing inside Okkak station, and Island. I do not believe they have ever taken cod fish inside the bay itself, that opens into the inside run. This is a deep bay. Probably 35-40 miles from the head to the run.

Ryan's bay, Eclipse, Komaktorvik, Ramah bay and Rowsells bay have also all been fished a long way up. Few schooners now fish north of Saglek bay. This large bay runs in at least 35 miles from Uivuk head, which is at the southern end of the sea entrance. Fishermen have been up twenty to 25 miles fishing up this bay. Bears Gut bay has been fished to the bottom. It is not more than ten miles deep. Navak bay has been fished for cod up to the old Hudson bay station, but not to the head, or up the Tallek branch. Eskimo fish with gill nets to the heads of all these bays for sea trout for sale and barter. The long uncharted bay north of Eclipse, Eclipse itself, and Joksut inlet are practically never used for cod fishing, but the harbours in Cape Chidley Island, Lady Job, Lady Blandford and Port Burwell, have all been fished successfully for cod during my time on the Coast. Captain Saml. Blandford fished Cape Burwell for several years with success, and established a fur, seal skin, and Narwhale fishery there.

THE FISHERIES OF LABRADOR RIVERS.

The only possible fisheries of Labrador rivers are those for trout and salmon. These fish can only be caught on a commercial scale with profit

p. 2568

if nets are used. As no nets are allowed to be used nearer than two hundred yards from the mouth of a river, and no nets at all within the river, it follows there are no river fisheries unless they be illegal, or the fisheries carried on for their own support by Indians, Eskimo, or solitary Labrador settlers.

Canadian traders fitted out and traded for salmon and codfish before and after my arrival on the coast, especially in Hamilton Inlet and Sandwich bay. But none have come of late years, unless to buy furs for cash,—and the Labrador men sell mostly to the Hudson bay Company, Revillon Freres, or sporadic Newfoundlanders. These former buy up to the very heads of all bays, even to the head of Hamilton Inlet. A New-York firm, Porter and Company, have a post trading for both fur and salmon at North-West River and at Cartwright.

CONCERNING LAND NEEDED TO SUPPLY TIMBER FOR FISHERY PURPOSES.

There are no roads in Labrador, and no means for wheeled transportation. It has, therefore, never paid the Newfoundland fishermen to haul and cut their own timber needed for stages at any great distance from the high water mark.

The custom has been to buy it from Labrador men, who cut it in winter and haul it out to the landwash with dogs over snow.

This also applies to firewood, though schooners, while waiting to get north (for ice, etc.) go long distances up bays to get timber which there still grows so near the landwash, that they can cut it for themselves.

Since the nearness of timber to the landwash recedes as one goes north, it is obviously impossible to draw any line that would be suitable for all regions. North of Cape Mugford, wood is not cut by Newfoundlanders at all ; north of Hebron there is none to cut.

On the other hand he must be able to get wood, and those, who cut it and sell it to him, must be allowed to go five miles from the landwash in search of timber for spars, or large frame work in almost any part of Labrador, if they are to find it.

ON THE DISTANCE FROM HIGH WATER NEEDED IN LABRADOR FOR PURPOSES OTHER THAN OBTAINING WOOD, FOR FISHERMEN.

There being no roads, it is obvious all buildings of fishermen for summer fisheries will be as near the water as possible. I know every building in Labrador, and I cannot think of one single one that is more than 250 yards from high water mark, or one that ever has been. With regard to spreading nets, and drying fish, it is perfectly obvious that the nearer the water the better, if clean rocks and safety from seas are provided. I do not remember any time, anywhere, seeing either of these objects pursued over 250 yards from high water,—500 yards would be quite sufficient. Even of our six hospitals, inclusive of the three in Newfoundland, not one is 250 yards from the high water mark.

Eskimo, Indians, natives are in an entirely different category. They must have winter houses, and these must be in, or near, woods. Distance from high water no longer matters, for good transportation is afforded by sledges over the snow and ice—the bare ground is no longer their method of transportation, —also, they may need houses, near their wood cutting work, or their fur paths.

PERSONAL OPINION ON THE DISTANCES FROM HIGH WATER NEEDED IN LABRADOR FOR FISHERY PURPOSES.

For spreading fish to dry, for buildings, for boats, and other storage, judging by experience, not more than 250 yards is needed, or is likely to be used if available.

For cutting timber for firewood, spars and frames for buildings and stages, the distance in a country like Labrador would vary very much, if it were possible in summer to get it out. Thus, north of Hebron no timber exists till the valley of the Georges river is reached,—say 50 miles, while in Lewis' bay and southern bays it still comes to the landwash at the heads of bays.

It would never, in my opinion, pay to hold up a fishing schooner to get spars from our Labrador forests in summer. I have known vessels dismasted many times, but I never knew this attempted. The only way is to buy spars from natives, or ship spars in by mail steamer from south. Our trees make miserable spars anyhow, being too full of knots.

As there has existed in Newfoundland a reserved limit of three miles above high water for the purposes of the fishery, it is fair to suppose that that as a general average is not excessive. Labrador timber is not so plentiful or near the water, and if timber cut by settlers of the Labrador for sale in summer, but cut during winter, is to be all cut on the reserve, then I am sure five miles from high tide mark is not excessive.

PERSONAL OPINIONS ABOUT LAKE MELVILLE.

I do not think cod fishing in Lake Melville is, has been, or ever will likely be, a rational undertaking.

I do not think that any sensible skipper would go above Rigolet for cod fish. He might go to Caravalla for Rock Cods.

I know of no fishing industries possible in Lake Melville except trout, salmon and seals. It is possible that, as it has paid traders to go into Lake Melville in summer to buy salt trout, and salmon, and seal skins, caught in spring by winter settlers, it might again pay fish merchants to buy fresh salmon, trout, and seal skins for export, chilled, iced, or in some way preserved fresh. But I am convinced it would never be feasible to make a fishing schooner from south pay, fishing herself in Lake Melville. It might pay a vessel loading, say at Indian harbour, to complete a cargo, by buying salmon in Lake Melville. There is much timber in and around the head of the lake. The lake is tidal, and the water rises as far as the Grand Lake on North West river, and the

Musk Rat falls on the Grand river ; it certainly rises at Mud Lake, where Mr. Dickie's lumber mill was.

I have not considered rod fishing in the many splendid rivers in this bay—that, of course, can never be industrial fishing.

LIMITS OF SCHOONERS FROM NEWFOUNDLAND, OR ELSEWHERE ENGAGED IN FISHING IN HAMILTON INLET.

I have seen schooners from the south fishing in this inlet as far as Turners bight, Ticoralak and Double Mare. I have seen a native's schooner and a Canadian schooner trading in Lake Melville, and I have seen Newfoundland and other schooners in Rigolet, and I think in Mullioch, and certainly in Back bay.

I have never seen or heard of any genuine summer cod, or any other, fishing carried on in Hamilton inlet about Eskimo Island in the entrance to Lake Melville, that is, above the Narrows.

DISTINCTIONS BETWEEN FISHERIES CARRIED ON BY SCHOONERS COMING ANNUALLY, AND RESIDENTS OF LABRADOR.

Natives living on the coast can fish for salmon and trout in estuaries and inlets, and do so, and make it pay, while schooners from south cannot, as :

(1) It is difficult for a schooner to get north in time for the beginning of the salmon fishery.

(2) It is impossible to catch enough salmon and trout in one place to pay a schooner to come north especially for salmon and trout, and pay and feed her crew, and meet expenses.

(3) The salmon and trout fishery can only possibly, therefore, be considered, from the point of view of a southern schooner, as a preliminary to cod fishing.

(4) The season for trout and salmon passing-in is too short to make it worth while to fit out for it, and a fishing schooner coming north for cod cannot afford room, time, and expense to add estuary fishing for salmon and trout to her outfit and to her crowded space. The fact is that it is not done.

(5) The best comment on this is that in thirty-two years, I have never known it done, and if it has ever been done, it was experimental and never repeated. The experiment in a steamer from England in Sandwich Bay was a ruinous one, and never repeated.

OTHER INDUSTRIES BESIDES FISHERIES CARRIED ON IN LABRADOR.

The greatest industry in Labrador, after the fisheries, is the fur industry. It is safe to say that the whole of Labrador is at times covered by our trappers.

The men from Forteau, West St. Modeste and Red bay in the Straits of Belle Isle meet not only the men from Lewis' bay, but even men from Sandwich bay. I have known the furriers from Paradise, in Sandwich bay, meet the men from St. Augustine and the men from the North West River of Hamilton Inlet have covered the country to a hundred miles inside the Grand falls—that is, 350 miles above the mouth of the rivers. It is their custom to go up the rivers in August with supplies, and caching them in tilts, return home, refit out, and, starting in September, remain in the country till after New Year's day. These furs are mostly brought out for sale at the posts of Northwest River, or to John Groves of Goose bay, and are mostly paid for in trade ; but cash is now also given.

There are no timber companies now functioning. The Grand River Company functioned on Grand River for a few years. An English Company cut pit props on several rivers at the head of the bay, and intends to continue according to their Manager, Mr. Robinson, who told me so this summer (1924). I regret to say that many of the lumber companies who have taken up grants have been apparently bogus affairs.

I have no doubt whatever, in my mind, that successful lumber affairs can be carried out in Labrador, but indefinite grants, and no enforcements of the law, compelling holders of areas to operate, have held up the development and are still holding it up.

With regard to minerals, three gold companies have been granted concessions at various times since my knowledge of the coast. One at Hebron to a Mr. Strong. One at Porcupine, another at Stag bay. All were I firmly believe first class swindles. I have visited each district.

One iron deposit was granted to a genuine company at Rowsell's harbor, north of Ramah. Mr. Whitney worked it, through Capt. Bartlett. I visited it and saw the iron deposits. I believe they are valuable. I understood that only the isolation, with no wireless, roads, rails, etc., and with the difficulty of the ice alone, caused this mine to be shut down. The out crop is plainly visible from the vessels lying in the bay.

There are other minerals, and I am absolutely convinced, when the country is developed that the iron deposits, graphite, and possibly mica, aluminium and, possibly, gold will be worked.

We have been much interested in the development of small industries that may help to develop the country, and I have ventured to refer to these here. Weaving, basket making from native grass, embroidery especially on skin, hooked-pattern mat making, wood-carving, and clever bead and feather work, ivory carving, and toy making are among these lesser, but vastly important, industries. For it is these that carry to the homes of the poor and busy families the opportunity to earn, and to all the opportunity to fill remuneratively hours of enforced idleness, impossible otherwise to avoid in a climate like that of Labrador. We sold for these people last year about $10,000 worth of this produce,—which enables many to pay small fees to hospitals, schools, religious and other developments, otherwise quite impossible, and which help to put these on a rational and permanent and right basis ; besides putting in their reach essentials of healthy living, for lack of which they now suffer with deficiency diseases. With regard to agriculture, none has been developed, since Lord Strathcona's time. There is no reason whatever why all necessary vitamine-bearing vegetables should not be grown on the coast. We have just brought in a trained farmerette.

Domestication of Animals : A fox farm started at Muddy Bay, in Sandwich bay, has been closed. Personally, I am so convinced that it could still be made as remunerative in Labrador as in Piastre Bay, Prince Edward Island, or in Massachussets, that I have purchased the farm. I have attended the Congress of black fox and blue fox breeders in the United States, and I found they were of my opinion. The laws concerning fur-bearing animals work most uneconomically and unfairly at present, no consideration of the very wide extent of latitude, and consequent different conditions, having been allowed for.

With regard to the Domestication of Deer : My own experiment, carried on without enough backing, with no skilled management after I was obliged to allow the Lapps to return, has undoubtedly prejudiced opinion on the matter. The experiment of the Canadian government in the Peace River district, and with my small herd at Baie de Rochers, failed for want of skilled and interested management. I am so sure that Labrador can produce deer as readily as Alaska, that I have now helped to start a new herd, under an American manager, who have now received protection from the Newfoundland Government and a suitable land grant, around Hamilton Inlet.

I have ventured, sir, to include these facts in answer to your questions, because personally I believe Labrador to be very much a white man's land. It produces men of virile physique, of simple wants, and I know, as well as I know anything, that in the days to come Labrador can, and will, become as valuable to Canada as Alaska has become to America, and as the coast on the West of Canada, that has been lost to Canada by lack of faith and foresight, might surely have been. Only fear of wearying out your patience prevents my dilating further on this theme.

INDUSTRIES CARRIED ON AWAY FROM THE COAST LINE IN LABRADOR.

As I have already stated there are no buildings anywhere in Labrador between Blanc Sablon and Cape Chidley, except a few trappers huts, that are more than 250 yards from tidal water. I have made many trips into the country from various places. There is no Hudson bay station now anywhere in Labrador away from the coast—there was one, before I reached the coast, on Lake Petitsikapaw, I am told.

AREA OVER WHICH, AS JUSTICE-OF-THE-PEACE FOR NEWFOUNDLAND, I HAVE EXERCISED JURISDICTION.

I have tried cases in practically every village in the Straits, in Battle Harbour, and all along the coast as far as Port Burwell itself, where I tried a case many years ago, and removed a Labrador settler's family, named Rich, as a result.

p. 2573

I have tried a case as far inland as Muddy lake on the Grand River, below the Musk Rat falls. Sir William MacGregor, Governor of Newfoundland was present at one, at least, of the cases I tried there. I have tried cases at Cartwright, at Nain, at Davis Inlet, and on board the S.S. Strathcona many times and in practically every district where settlers reside.

I have the honour to remain

Very sincerely yours

What portions of land bordering on the Ocean are accessible by fishermen and utilisable for fishing purposes, and to what extent are they available for fishing purposes ?

I have already stated that North of Hamilton Inlet, except for shelter for vessels in the bays and for pursuit of fish in the actual water itself I do not consider the land (North of Hamilton Inlet) of any value whatever for fishermen and fisheries further than 500 yards from the high water mark. Except at Holton Tinkers and Sloop Harbours, I do not know of one single fishermen's house on the mainland—and I don't believe there ever has been one—outside the actual Eskimo and half breed settlers. There are such on the islands, but I do not believe one single one anywhere else on the mainland—possibly there may be a hut on the mainland side of Jigger Tickle in Cape Weleh Harbour, but I think not—nor do I believe that any summer fisherman has ever cut timber for fishing purposes anywhere on that North section of coast over 500 yards from high or tide water—mark. He may have purchased some wood from settlers who cut it in winter.

I know of no evidence to show that, anywhere along the coast south of this, summer fishermen have ever built houses, cut wood or used the land for fishing purposes beyond 500 yards from high water. I am open to conviction that a few fish may have been spread half a mile in—or some sporadic summer expedition have gone in half a mile. I am of opinion that a limit of one mile from high water would include every possible economic use of the Labrador land by summer fishermen—unless new ages discover new needs, altogether unknown to the fishermen of the past or present. The sale of timber to summer fishermen by winter settlers is a different matter, and south of Hamilton inlet spars would have to be sought further in the river valleys North of Hamilton inlet, though spars have been floated out of rivers by summer fishermen 500 yards from high water anywhere. As for the land being valuable in the North for drying fish, I have never known a fish dried on the land North of Hopedale except by Eskimo—and generally speaking it is not profitable to dry fish North of Cape Harrison, owing to the small amount of sunshine available after the fish have been caught—for the capture of fish gets later and later in the year as one goes further and further north, and at the same time, the onset of winter, and the scarcity of days possible for use in drying fish, becomes proportionally less.

* The earlier part of this Report in which Dr. Grenfell described the character of the mountains on the Labrador Coast and their relation to the Sea, has been omitted, as he placed main reliance upon the information on this subject published by Dr. Reginald A. Daly of Harvard University, referred to by Dr. Grenfell as " a man of world fame," and a report was afterwards obtained from Dr. Daly himself. (vide " Topography of the North East Coast of Labrador," Part XV, No. 1), which contains a detailed and scientific treatment of the whole subject.

CONDITIONS ON THE LABRADOR COAST.

No. 1041.EXTRACT FROM “NEWFOUNDLAND IN 1911.”

BY P. T. McGRATH [LONDON: 1911], pp. 169-170, 173, 174.

Newfoundland's chief dependency, where one of her greatest cod fisheries is prosecuted, is Labrador, a territory half as large as Europe, and yet containing a resident population of only 3,400 whites, or “liveryers,” though every summer 15,000 fisherfolk—men, women, and children—emigrate there for cod-catching and locate along the coast-line which forms the base of the enterprise.

* * * *

It has no settled form of Government, justice being dispensed by the medical missionaries who labour there and who hold commissions of the peace. Such trivial disputes regarding fishery matters as arise in the tiny hamlets along the coast, where a peace-loving people have their abode, are their only cases.

The shallows off the Labrador coast are the resort of countless “schools” of cod, and the fishermen net them from suitable points. The whole coast is fringed with barren islands of naked rock, engirt with wide, deep channels. Great fiords eat for miles into the granite steeps, and countless harbours are formed wherein the fishing crafts can lie in safety.

* * * *

The world has probably nothing so unique as the annual migration of these Newfoundland fisherfolk to this region, nor an industry so strange as they pursue. About May in each year they embark in their vessels with their goods and chattels, shut up their homes and sail for Labrador, where they disperse along its extensive seaboard. The fishermen are of two classes—“stationers” and “floaters.” The former have homes in certain harbours and fish near by, shipping much of their cured product direct to market from the coast. The latter carry on their venture from their schooners and cruise farther north as the season advances. About 1,000 to 1,200 vessels classed as “floaters,” are annually engaged in the Labrador fishery.

In October the season is over, and these hardy voyagers return to their homes, the 3,500 “liveryers” residing there permanently. These “liveryers” (live heres) are so called to distinguish them from the summer fishermen, and there are one or two families in every harbour. During the summer, they reside along the coast for the fishing, but in winter most of them retire to the wooded tracts at the heads of the bays, where there is shelter, warmth and a means of increasing their food supply by the killing of game which abounds there. The trapping of fur-bearing animals is also undertaken, the peltries being exchanged for food and clothing when the traders are on the coast in summer.

BY DR. WILFRED T. GRENFELL AND OTHERS, NEW ED. (NEW YORK : 1922).

The fishery as it exists in Labrador at the present day is confined practically to Newfoundlanders, Labrador settlers, or “liveryes,” as they are called, Eskimo, Americans from Massachusetts and Maine, and a few Canadians from the Maritime provinces.

* * * *

The first of the fleet that leaves for Labrador sets out as early as the end of April. Those from the outports have still, owing to the unfortunate centralization of trade at St. John's, to repair first almost to the very extreme south of Newfoundland for supplies, and thence to leave for the north again.

* * * *

On the part of the Labrador coast which is under Newfoundland jurisdiction, the first comer takes the best berths. This led to such unnecessarily early starts, with the suffering involved and risks incurred from pushing down among the floe-ice, that laws were made preventing berths being claimed till a certain date, according to the latitude. Any net set before that time is not only taken up, but the owner is fined. Every year, however, numerous disputes and quarrels arise from the eagerness to be sure of the choice of places, and never a season passes without some being brought to the travelling magistrate for settlement.

Some fishermen, without trying for more than one voyage, go direct to the spot of their choice, however long they will have to wait. These men, though living on their vessels, will always be found in the same places. Their schooners at anchor might almost be marked on the chart. These men, such as the Whites of Twillingate, the Milleys, the Lansons, the Barbours, etc., are almost always successful men.

Most of the schooners, however, are obliged to wander about, looking everywhere for “good tucks” of fish, and often so anxious to get the fish quickly that they leave the very places that later turn out to be best, only to find no others and so go home empty or “clean.”

These wandering schooners are called “green fish” catchers, and when they have taken their “fare,” or when their time is “runned up” they come south, pick up the freighters they left, and carry them to their homes. Of late, however, more “make,” or dry, their fish at the harbour, where their freighters are doing the same thing. Though curing seems an easy matter, it involves much work and infinite patience. At home the gardens left in the spring sorely need tending now, and every man is anxious to be getting ready for the winter. Yet often for a week at a time, wet and cold days prevent any work being done.

The actual number of the vessels visiting Labrador I am unable to obtain, —probably one thousand each year. Every year quite a number go down that neither “ clear ” nor “ register ” at the customs house. About twenty thousand persons all told, constitute the summer exodus from Newfoundland.

One or two steamers have been used in the Labrador cod-fishery of recent years, but the people are strongly prejudiced against their introduction. They have seen the steamers supplant the schooners entirely for catching seals. They have seen any chance of large returns pass entirely out of reach of the small fisherman. Moreover, they believe that the seals are being killed out. As yet, however, it has not been possible to get a law prohibiting the use of steam fishing-vessels sanctioned in the Upper House of the Legislature. It should be added that laws relating to the fishery are, altogether, very few, and the total number of cases where trouble arises from all causes, when added up, are so small as to be almost negligible. The use of steamers to bring fishermen and their families to the fishery and back again is greatly to be desired.

The greatest drawback to the Labrador fishery has been, and still is, the want of proper communication. A small steamer, which is used for seal-hunting in the spring, makes ten trips each year. She is supposed to complete each trip in a fortnight, but as she has ninety ports of call to make, fully fifteen hundred miles to steam, is loaded with freight, and has fog, ice, and bad storms to contend with, she is frequently unable to keep within several days of her schedule time. With a captain second to none for pluck, and acquainted with the coast as probably no other man is, she still loses time. Day and night, when possible, she travels, but the scarcity of lights, the miserable survey, and the absence of artificial assistance to enter harbours, leave no question that she has far more work than she can accomplish.

* * * *

Five Marconi stations have been placed on the coast, and these are of very great value. They cover two hundred miles of coast, but do not yet connect with Newfoundland, and only very indirectly with anywhere. When the Canadian station on Belle Isle is working, then Labrador can talk with the outside world viâ Canada. But none of these stations is opened except during the summer months. The power of the most southern station at Battle Harbour has been greatly increased and practically has put us now in touch with the outside world.

* * * *

With commendable zeal, and with great success, the Canadians have succeeded in running a wire all the way from Quebec along the north shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence to the Straits. Unfortunately the line ends at Chateau, twenty-eight miles from Battle Harbour, where the terminal Marconi stations is situated.

p. 2580

In winter, residence in Labrador is specially discouraged by lack of communication, and the permanent population, except around the newly established mills, is decreasing steadily. The existing arrangement of one or, at most, two mails carried by dogs is not sufficient to meet the needs of a population of English-speaking people during a whole winter.

Exclusive of a school grant of $2,000, the total appropriations for Labrador are under $30,000 per annum. Twenty thousand dollars of this is for the summer mail steamer and the Marconi stations ; $2,000 is for collecting revenue on the coast. All the rest is spent on summer post-offices, and providing for sick fishermen. Five hundred dollars a year appears to be the amount granted to make Labrador habitable in winter.

As the revenue from its inhabitants direct is certainly $150,000 per annum, and the indirect revenue from the fishery so large, this does not seem fair. The Labrador people must purchase every supply from Newfoundland, from a rifle, a trap, a net, to flour, pork, and potatoes.

* * * *

The testimony of hundreds of my friends who live in Labrador, among them men who have lived in the United States, England, Scotland, Canada, Norway, and elsewhere, is that Labrador is by no means a bad country to settle in, but it is handicapped by having too little government encouragement given to people to live there.

* * * *

One other great drawback to settling is the impossibility of either getting grants of land or buying land with good title in Labrador. This partly arises from the unsettled question of ownership. For nobody knows the boundary between Newfoundland and Canada. Grants of timber lands have been made to Canadian firms in Sandwich Bay and Hamilton Inlet, covering about two thousand square miles in all. Grants to fishing firms have apparently been made to Baine, Johnston & Company at Battle, to Isaac Mercer at Long Tickle, to Job Brothers at Blanc Sablon and Indian Harbour, and to a few others at other points.

The policy of the Newfoundland government has always been in theory to leave the land free to any one, so that when one man leaves it another may make use of his former situation. Presumably this is on the assumption that nothing of value will be left behind. But though no legal conveyance has been made, men who fish any particular place, and even move a stone to “spread fish on,” will claim that place, though they have not been using it for years, and the courts at home have upheld them. It leaves the land about the harbours in a very anomalous and undesirable condition. There are fishermen anxious to come and settle, there is land unused, and with no marks on it ; yet either some one refuses to allow them to settle or they dare not settle for fear some one may arise who will some day eject them. Several of these cases have come before me as magistrate on the coast.

Labrador has no representation, and no one is appointed to look after its interests. The Governor's Report for 1906 does not put the matter one iota too strongly. The following paragraph taken from it is very significant, when the varied experience of its author in other out-of-the-way parts of the world is taken into consideration :—

“ If the difficulties of representation are considered to be too great, then there remains the obvious alternative of appointing a minister, or, at least, a secretary for Labrador, whose sole and special executive duty would be to study all the questions in connection with that country. It may be stated here at once that the proper development of the Labrador coast cannot take place unless one or other of the above suggestions is adopted, or some other more or less similar arrangement is provided, such as an annual visit to the coast of a Minister of the Crown.”

Only one such has ever visited Labrador, and that one, the Honourable Minister of Fisheries, accompanied Sir William MacGregor on his trip in 1906.

Education in both Newfoundland and Labrador is another very difficult problem. It is rendered almost impossible to solve, owing to the denominational system of schools.

* * * *

The best educated people in the country at present are the Eskimo. Almost without exception they can read and write. Many can play musical instruments, share in part singing, and are well able to keep accounts, and know the value of things. These accomplishments, entirely and solely due to the Moravian missionaries, have largely helped them to hold their own in trade, a faculty for want of which almost every aboriginal race is apt to suffer so severely.

I have known an Eskimo called in to read and write a letter for a Newfoundland fisherman, and I have had more than once to ask one to help me by playing our own harmonium for us at a service, because not one of a large audience could do so. I have heard more than one Eskimo stand up and deliver an excellent impromptu speech. Reading the Newfoundland Blue Books, reporting the numbers able to read and write in Labrador, I acquired an entirely erroneous estimate of the people's accomplishments in those directions. Our white population is still very largely illiterate. Some headway has, however, been made of late years, and literature and loan libraries distributed through the Labrador Mission are now accessible all along the coast. and are creating a love of reading.

* * * *

The public health of Labrador has practically been a matter of chance. Houses are not drained. Few have even outside closets, much less one in the house. There are no sanitary officers. Very few residents have ever been vaccinated. Until recently they have had no teaching as to the dangers of infectious diseases, and especially how to deal with and avoid tuberculosis. Consumption is the main enemy of these people who live here in one of the purest atmospheres in the world. But it is fostered and propagated in every possible way by the customs of the people and by their poverty. The total number of residents is now about four thousand, inclusive of thirteen hundred Eskimo. In spite of new mills and other new industries recently introduced, the number is not increasing. This is due partly to the fact that some return to Newfoundland to benefit by the schools and other advantages, or to escape starvation or the isolation that arises from no line of communication in the winter. Those residents, who make this journey, invariably tell me they would greatly prefer to remain on the coast in winter if it were possible.

p. 2582

* * * *

The famous Ford family have, between them, carried the mail three hundred and fifty miles each way over these barren, uninhabited shores, winter after winter, where no man lives and no houses shelter them—across mountain fastnesses, over glaciated passes, and the still more dangerous sea-ice, year after year, without serious accident. The mail starts at Fort Chimo in Ungava Bay, then round and along the Labrador coast to Davis Inlet. The mail crosses the land to Nachvak Bay, and so on over a stretch of fifteen hundred miles to Quebec.

[5 June,

LABRADOR.”

BY REV. HENRY GORDON, OF CARTWRIGHT, LABRADOR.*

Internal evidence is available to show Labrador as the scene of long and bitter warfare between the Indians of the interior and the Esquimaux of the coast. Even to-day there is little love lost between the races. The first serious attempt to settle the coast of Labrador dates from the opening up of trade relations by Major Cartwright, some one hundred and fifty years ago. During sixteen years of varying fortunes, Cartwright did much to establish very friendly relations with the natives, and it may be said that from his day dates that gradual cross-breeding of English and Esquimaux which has produced the modern Labrador “ Livyere.” Out of a total population of some four thousand it is very doubtful if now one third is of pure Esquimaux blood, and the day will not be very long before the Esquimaux stock is totally eliminated from the coast.

The mode of life adopted by the Labrador native is one of extreme loneliness and isolation. Except for the few centres where the Trading Companies are established, there are scarcely any settlements of any size. Cartwright, one of the most important centres, has just fifteen families. In many cases, families are to be found as isolated units many miles from the nearest neighbour. This manner of life has tended to make the people extremely shy and adverse to society.

EXTRACTS FROM REPORT OF AN OFFICIAL VISIT TO THE COAST OF LABRADOR BY THE GOVERNOR OF NEWFOUNDLAND (SIR WILLIAM MACGREGOR), 1905.

The summer and the winter populations of Labrador are very different owing to the fact that a great many families proceed from Newfoundland to that coast for about four months, from some time in June to some time in October, for the summer fishery. I am indebted to Mr. Le Messurier (who it may be mentioned, has personal knowledge of the coast of Labrador) for information on that point. During the season last past 14,229 persons cleared from Newfoundland ports for the Labrador fishery. The same gentleman estimates “ that 6,000 or 7,000 people who, in the early part of the year fish on the treaty coast and in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, go direct to Labrador without clearing for there, and on the yearly fishing certificates issued to them in the spring.” The largest number cleared during the last twelve years was in 1894, viz., 14,651. The smallest number was in 1900, viz., 10,679. The mean number annually cleared for the last twelve years is 12,333. The total average number of people that proceed to Labrador for the summer fishery would therefore be about one score thousand, but that number was considerably exceeded last year. To this has to be added 4,000 residents. (The number given in the 1901 census is 3,947). The summer population of Labrador may therefore be fairly set down in round numbers at from 20,000 to 25,000 ; the winter population at 4,000. Of these, as shown above, some 1,300 are native Innuits, or “ settlers,” about Mission settlements.

At the present time Labrador has no direct representation in the Legislature of the Colony, nor is it the special duty of any Minister of the Crown to make any specific study of the requirements of that dependency. One may say unhesitatingly that it would have been better for Labrador, and for the Colony, that more attention had been given to this question many years ago. The matter of representation has indeed been brought up before now in a direct form. Nothing, however, came of it.

EXTRACTS FROM REPORT OF AN OFFICIAL VISIT TO LABRADOR BY GOVERNOR OF NEWFOUNDLAND (SIR WILLIAM MACGREGOR), 1908.

So far as I know, only one Minister of the Crown in Newfoundland has visited Labrador during the many years that this territory has been under the jurisdiction of this Colony ; and the residents there are still without the first and fundamental right of constitutional government, the political franchise. It is, therefore, not to be wondered at that some of the Newfoundland regulations are called in question in Labrador both as to validity and suitability ; not can it surprise one that the southern residents express a decided preference for Canada, whence they have to import many articles of food, while they pay Customs' dues on them to Newfoundland and have no representation in the House of Assembly. These difficulties are further magnified by the absence of any resident judge or stipendiary magistrate on Labrador. Last summer a magistrate was about three weeks on the coast and visited a few spots on the southern part of it that were most accessible ; but he was there apparently in connection with fishery protection service only. He never reached the Hamilton Inlet and consequently did not come into contact with any case of importance on the coast, his visits being confined to places that would certainly have been visited very soon after by Dr. Grenfell, on whom as a Justice of the Peace devolves the administration of law and justice on practically the whole Labrador coast, with its 3,000 or 4,000 permanent residents and its summer population exceeding 25,000 people. Put in other words, this means that the functions of Government, except the collection of taxes and the maintenance of some of the lights, are practically left in the hands of a private gentleman over a coast-line that may be said to extend over ten degrees of latitude, a position that is probably unique. That such a form of administration is possible speaks volumes for the peaceful and law-abiding character of the people. During the winter, when Dr. Grenfell is absent from the coast, Labrador does not even possess a Justice of the Peace. . . . Of course many cases, both civil and criminal, occur that are never dealt with, and many men are left in doubt as to what they may or may not legally do.

MISSIONS ON THE LABRADOR COAST.

EXTRACTS FROM "LABRADOR," BY DR. W. T. GRENFELL AND OTHERS.

NEW EDITION (NEW YORK, 1922), pp. 226-250.

MORAVIAN MISSIONS.

If a man in Labrador is not a fisherman, that is, a cod-catcher, he traps fur-bearing animals in winter and catches salmon in summer. The trappers form a class apart from the rest of the shore people. They seldom come out "to the coast," their winter industry keeping them far inland and their summer salmon-catching being convenient in not forcing them to transfer their families very far down the bays. There is, however, every gradation, from the mountaineer Indian, who does nothing all the year but trap and kill deer, through the Eskimo, who once only killed seals, but now even catches furs and "fishes," to the man who lives entirely "out of the water," i.e., never outfits for the winter furring.

Until 1905 the trade of all these people was carried on by two great companies, the Hudson's Bay Company and the Moravian Missions. The Hudson's Bay Company originally dealt only with Indians, but the intermarriage and settling of their own imported servants have built up a class which beats the Indians at their own industry, and now does a far larger trade in fur. The Indians are reduced to a mere handful, while the strong Scotch and Norwegian stock is steadily growing and displacing both Indians and Eskimo. Farther north, the Moravians care for the Eskimo. The Hudson's Bay Company have also made a bid for their trade, establishing posts at Nachvak (since abandoned) and at Ungava.

At present the Moravians have four stations. The most northerly station is that at Killinek, or Cape Chidley. Here the Eskimo, attracted by the excellent seal-fishery, walrus, and white-whale fishery to be had at the cape, have gathered from the northeast coast and from Ungava Bay.

* * * *

At the present time one Moravian family dwells at the station. They have themselves built a house, church, and stores.

* * * *

p. 2587

Proceeding north one passes an abandoned station of the Hudson Bay Company called Nakvak. Beyond that, near the old station of Ramah, about a hundred miles to the southwestward, the Eskimo dwell in holes in the ground with skin bowel-parchment windows that do not open, and with roofs and entrances made of sods. There are no islands near to supply birds and eggs ; the decrease in the number of seal and walrus and the low market or local value of sea-trout have seriously impoverished the people. This poverty means that they are poorly equipped for travel ; in consequence, they dawdle about the unsavoury village when they should be seeking and finding sustenance, gaining health and strength by migrating from place to place as they always did of yore. Here they are much more dependent upon the missionary, upon his supply of clothing, and upon his kahlenak or European food, than is good for them. From their physical condition it is perfectly easy to tell a Ramah Eskimo from a Cape Chidley man, though you may never have seen either previously.

A journey to the southward of nearly another hundred miles brings us to the third station at Hebron. This is still a good hunting station. Its Eskimo have been wisely taught by the Brethren to segrate and not congregate. No permanent village has come into being. A few sod houses and one or two better houses exist. This would to-day be probably far the most creditable settlement of Eskimo, had it not been for the carrying of several families to show them to the curious at the exhibitions at Chicago, Buffalo, and elsewhere. Few returned, and they richer only in those heirlooms of civilization, the germs of specific diseases, which most efficiently put a stop to the growth of the community, and left a diseased and miserable people to be a constant danger to every “ inuit ” on the coast.

Another forty miles to the south was Okkak, the largest station. It is within the northern limit of trees, and consequently houses, boats, and firing were more easily acquired. A large number of permanent wooden houses had been erected. At certain seasons of the year considerable social life was possible. The annual census shows that during the fifty years previous to 1902 the congregation was steadily growing in numbers. Some small arts and crafts were established and quite a trade done in ivory carvings, in modern skin dolls, tubiks or tents, kayaks, etc., and in wooden models of native houses, komatiks, and such like. This station was entirely blotted out in 1919 by Spanish influenza. Out of 365 Eskimo 300 perished including every single adult male. It has been temporarily abandoned, but when Nain was destroyed by fire in 1921 a large portion of that congregation returned to reopen Okkak.

Nain, the fifth station, is ninety miles farther south, and accessible by mail steamer. It is a perfect harbour, entirely shut in from the sea by countless islands, great and small. Its beautiful bay runs inland over forty miles, and one can travel by steamer for a hundred miles south without once going into the open ocean. Nain is at once the head station of the Brethren, the seat of the Bishop, who is also a German consul, and is of the oldest standing. The well-tended vegetable patches, the tidy paths through the woods so long preserved, and now so lonely looking against the otherwise absolutely naked ground, the prim flower-gardens, and the orthodox tea-houses (with more often than not the now inappropriate picture of the Kaiser), combine to transport a visitor momentarily to Europe, to the German homes which these good men have left, never to return.

Some ninety miles to the south again is Hopedale, the sixth station. It is the southern border of the tribe now, and one cannot visit the station without feeling forcibly that the fringe is ravelling out, and that the race in Labrador is facing its inevitable doom. Mixed with the dying, purer type, are an increasing and stronger element of half-breeds. It is in these that much of the hope for the future population of Labrador at present lies. Here one of the Brethren has had some medical training, and has, single-handed, done some excellent work in emergency cases. The Brethren here, also, have done a considerable amount of scientific work in the past, both in climatology, botany, and ornithology.

The last Moravian station is Makkovik, fifty miles south. It was only erected in 1900, and was put there in the hope of fostering the scattered half-breeds and settlers who are slowly beginning to populate that section of coast. It is a valuable stand for those travelling the coast in winter. It has now a small boarding school during winter. To no other people on earth does the lonely Labrador owe one-half the debt it does to these devoted servants of the Moravian Mission.

THE INTERNATIONAL GRENFELL ASSOCIATION.

In the report of the Newfoundland Chamber of Commerce for 1892, the following item appeared :—

“ A new feature worthy of mention in this report, affecting as it does, more or less, the comfort of twenty thousand to thirty thousand of our people, was the appearance on the Labrador coast of the Mission to Deep-sea Fishermen ship Albert, outfitted by a philanthropical society in England, unsectarian in its lines, and intended to convey skilled medical aid to our fishermen and provide to some extent for their mental and material wants. This essay has been an unqualified success, and has evoked from the recipients of its bounty expressions of deep gratitude. It is likely to result in well-organized co-operation by the Colony next season upon the lines along which the Mission ship is being worked.”

* * * *

With open water in spring (i.e. 1893) the Albert returned, carrying two additional doctors and nurses, together with fittings and drugs for two small hospitals. The first stationed at Battle Harbour was the gift of a merchant. The Government of Newfoundland supplied a well-skilled pilot for the ship, and excused all dues of every kind.

The second hospital was erected at Indian Harbour, 200 miles north, and a smart steam-launch supplied for use in the remote corners.

At the present time the Society has six small hospitals : one at Harrington on the Canadian Labrador, one at St. Anthony on the northeast coast of Newfoundland, one at Pitteys Island, Newfoundland, one at Northwest River N. Labrador, and the original two at Battle Harbour and Indian Harbour. Indian Harbour is situated on an island in the entrance to Hamilton Inlet, two hundred miles north of the Strait of Belle Isle ; Battle Harbour, just where the Strait meets the Atlantic Ocean.

GEOL. SURVEY OF CANADA, VOL. VIII., PART L, 1895.

INTRODUCTORY.

The present report is based mainly upon the observations made along information the routes of exploration followed during the seasons of 1892, 1893, 1894 and 1895. The knowledge so gained has been supplemented by information obtained from officers and servants of the Hudson's Bay Company, Indians, and other persons acquainted with the Labrador Peninsula. Free use has also been made, in regard to certain subjects, of the information to be found in the writings of Mr. Lucius M. Turner,* Dr. A. S. Packard,† and Mr. W. A. Stearns,‡ who have all spent some time on the southern and eastern coasts and there collected much valuable information relating to the history, physical geography and natural history of those regions. Observations on the natural resources of the peninsula made by officers of the Geological Survey in former explorations, have also, when necessary, been incorporated in the text ; a list of these explorations is given at the end of the historical notes.

assistants.

Acknowledgments are due to Mr. C. C. Chipman, Commissioner of the Hudson's Bay Company, and to Mr. Peter McKenzie, for circular letters to the various officers in charge of posts along the routes travelled, and to the following gentlemen in charge of these posts : Messrs. J. Broughton, D. Mathewson, Wm. Scott, C. Sinclair, J. A. Wilson, A. Nicholson, H. M. S. Cotter, John Ford, J. Fraser, J. Gordon, W.

Reports.

Miller, J. Iserhoff and J. Corson, for their generous hospitality, valuable information and efficient aid, to which the success of the explorations has been largely due.

Route followed
in 1892.

During the season of 1892, Mr. A. H. D. Ross, M.A., acted as my assistant and besides carrying out other varied duties, made a large collection of plants, which added greatly to the botanical knowledge of the eastern watershed. The names of these plants have been included in the list given in an appendix. In 1893, 1894, and 1895, Mr. D. I. V. Eaton, C.E., acted as assistant and topographer, and it is entirely to his careful work that the exact surveys of these years are due. Mr. Eaton, since his return to Ottawa, has also compiled the map which accompanies this report.

and 1894.

Itineraries of the various journeys made in the course of these explorations have been printed in the Summary Reports of the Geological Survey Department for 1892, 1894, and 1895, and only a brief outline of the routes followed need in consequence be given here.

In 1892, the routes traversed were from Lake St. John, up the Chamouchouan River to its head, thence north-east through three large lakes to Lake Mistassini. From that lake the east channel of the Rupert River was descended some fifty miles, to a portage route crossing through small lakes to the East Main River fifty miles northward. This stream was carefully surveyed down-ward for three hundred miles to its mouth on the east side of James Bay. James Bay was crossed to Moose River, and that stream ascended to its head, where the Canadian Pacific Railway was reached, making in all a canoe trip of over thirteen hundred miles. In 1893 and 1894, the party remained in the field during the winter. A start was again made from Lake St. John, and the chief branch of the Chamouchouan River was ascended to its head near Lake Mistassini. The same route as that followed the previous year, was taken to the East Main River, where the survey was commenced at the end of that year's work, and carried upward to the head of the river, where a crossing was made to the upper waters of the Big River, and that stream was descended to Lake Nichicun. A portage-route was then followed to Lake Kaniapiskau, and the Koksoak River, which flows out of it, was descended to its mouth at Ungava Bay. In this manner a canoe trip through the centre of the Labrador Peninsula from south to north was accomplished. From Fort Chimo, the Hudson's Bay Company's steamship "Eric" was taken to Rigolet on Hamilton Inlet. From Rigolet, canoes were taken to Northwest River, at the head of the inlet, where the early winter was passed. From the 19th January to the middle of May, the whole time was employed in hauling the outfit, canoes and provisions on sleds up the Hamilton River as far as the Grand Falls, some two hundred and fifty miles above the mouth of the river. The months of June and July were occupied in the exploration of the Ashuanipi branch of

Kaniapiskau, and with the exploration of Lake Michikamau. In August a start was made for the coast by ascending the Attikonak branch of the Hamilton River to its head, and thence crossing to the Romaine River. This stream was descended to within one hundred miles of the coast, whence a portage-route was followed to the St. John River, and by way of this river the Gulf of St. Lawrence was reached. The total mileage of travel for 1893-94 was 5,460 miles, made up as follows:—In canoe, 2,960 miles; on vessel, 1,000 miles; with dog-teams, 500 miles; and on foot, 1,000 miles.

of matter.

The summer of 1895 was spent in exploring the Manicuagan River, flowing southward into the Gulf of St. Lawrence, which it enters about 240 miles below Quebec. This stream was geologically explored to the head of Mouchalagan Lake, where the surveys previously made by the Crown Lands Department of Quebec ended. Above this lake the main stream was surveyed, by micrometer, to its head in Summit Lake in latitude 53° N., and track-surveys were carried over portage-routes on various branches of this river and the head-waters of the Outardes River and of the Big River of Hudson Bay. In so doing a good idea was obtained of the country about the central watershed of the peninsula, as well as considerable additional information in regard to the geology and natural history of the region.

Appendices.

The subject matter of this report is separated into two parts.—The first contains a general summary of the observations made, and the conclusions reached from these. It is consequently more concise and readable than the other part, which consists of detailed descriptions of the routes, the rocks noted, and other observations for the use of future explorers in the regions traversed. In the part relating to the geology, a summary of the chief observations and deductions is given in connection with each formation, before the detailed observations are entered upon.

Peninsula.

In the Appendices will be found lists and short notes on the mammals, birds, fishes and insects known to exist in the interior of the peninsula; also a complete list of plants of Labrador, compiled by Mr. J. M. Macoun, from the various collections made by members of the staff of the Geological Survey and others. A meteorological record for 1893-94 is also given in Appendix VII.

PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY.

The eastern coast of the Labrador Peninsula extends north-north-west, from the Strait of Belle Isle to Cape Chidley, a distance of about seven hundred miles, or from latitude 52° to latitude $60^{\circ} 30'$, fronting the North Atlantic. The northern boundary from Cape Chidley to Cape Wolstenholme, at the entrance of Hudson Bay, in a straight line, is nearly five hundred miles long, and runs about west-north-west in direction, forming the southern shore of Hudson Strait including Ungava Bay. A line drawn from Cape Wolstenholme to the bottom of James Bay, runs nearly north-and-south for eight hundred miles, and corresponds closely to the eastern shore-line of the peninsula. The southern boundary is arbitrary but has been taken as a straight line extending in a direction nearly east from the south end of James Bay near latitude 51°, to the Gulf of St. Lawrence near Seven Islands in latitude 50°. This line is nearly six hundred miles long, and passes close to the south end of Lake Mistassini. From where the line reaches the Gulf coast, in the neighbourhood of Seven Islands, the shore-line forms the southern boundary to the Strait of Belle Isle, with a length of somewhat over five hundred miles.

p. 2593

The total area embraced within these boundaries is approximately 511,000 square miles, of which, previous to the present explorations, 289,000 square miles were practically unknown. There still remains about 120,000 square miles of the northern portion of the peninsula, between Hudson and Ungava bays, totally unknown to anyone except the wandering bands of Eskimo who occasionally penetrate inland from the coast.

Northern coasts.

The Atlantic coast is exceedingly irregular, being deeply cut by many long narrow bays, or fiords, so that the coast-line exceeds many times the direct distance from Belle Isle to Cape Chidley. Hamilton Inlet is the largest and longest of these inlets, extending inland over one hundred and fifty miles from its mouth. Among others, Sandwich, Kaipokok, Saglek and Nachvak bays are from thirty to fifty miles deep. These narrow fiords are surrounded by rocky hills that rise abruptly from the water to heights ranging from 1,000 feet to 4,000 feet. The water of the inlets is generally deep and varies from ten to one hundred fathoms. A fringe of small rocky island extends almost continuously along the coast, with a breadth of from five to twenty-five miles. Outside the islands, the inner banks extend seaward for an average distance of about fifteen miles, and on them the water is rarely over forty fathoms deep. From this it will be seen that the fiords, as a rule, have greater depths than the banks outside the island fringe.

Dangerous currents.

Coast of Hudson Bay.

The coast adjacent to Hudson Strait and Ungava Bay has not been examined closely, but enough is known for us to state that it is generally bold, with highlands rising immediately from it. Small rocky islands form a narrow fringe in many places, especially about Ungava Bay, and the coast is indented with small bays, but not to such an extent as the Atlantic coast.

Hope's Advance is a western extension of Ungava Bay, as yet unexplored. The navigation of Ungava Bay and Hudson Strait is rendered dangerous to sailing craft by the strong currents and exceedingly high tides, the latter having a mean rise in Ungava Bay of nearly forty feet, and at exceptional spring-tides they have been known to rise sixty feet.

From Cape Wolstenholme to near Cape Jones, at the entrance to James Bay, the eastern coast-line of Hudson Bay is high and rocky. The coast between the entrance to Hudson Strait and Cape Dufferin, a distance of nearly three hundred miles, has not yet been continuously explored. Mosquito Bay is situated along this part of the coast, and was formerly supposed to connect with Hope's Advance. Such has since proved not to be the case, and Mosquito Bay has been found to extend inland not more than seventy-

p. 2594

Gulf of St.
Lawrence

five miles. Between this bay and Cape Dufferin, there is a fringe of islands stretching out from ten to twenty miles from the mainland. To the south-ward of Cape Dufferin, the coast-line remains high, and an almost continuous line of high islands of Cambrian rocks forms a safe channel for small boats, as far south as Great Whale River. This channel varies from two to eight miles in width. South of Great Whale River, to within a short distance of Cape Jones, the coast is unprotected and bold.

and contour.

The eastern shore-line of James Bay is generally low, and the waters of the bay are very shallow and dotted far out with rocky islands and bouldery reefs, between which there is a perfect labyrinth of channels, navigable with small craft, but dangerous to approach with large vessels.

The north shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, in many places, has a more or less wide interval of low land, between the shore and the rocky plateau behind. From Seven Islands to Natashquan Point, the shore is comparatively regular and the islands few in number. To the eastward of Natashquan, as far as the Strait of Belle Isle, the coast is greatly indented by small bays and coves, and islands are numerous, especially between Cape Whittle and Blanc Sablon.

Gradual slope towards James Bay.

The peninsula of Labrador is a high, rolling plateau, which rises somewhat abruptly, within a few miles of the coast-line, to heights between 1,500 and 2,500 feet, the latter elevation being somewhat greater than the watershed of the interior. The interior country is undulating, and is traversed by ridges of low rounded hills, that seldom rise more than 500 feet above the general surrounding level. From the barometer readings, taken during the season of 1894, in conjunction with stationary barometers at Hamilton Inlet and Anticosti, the general level of the interior plateau, about the Upper Hamilton River and Lake Michikamau, near the central watershed, varies from 1,600 feet to 1,800 feet, and this may be taken as the general height of much of the interior of the peninsula. The highest part of the main interior mass is near the high granite area between the head-waters of the Peribonka, Manicouagan and Outardes rivers, flowing into the St. Lawrence, the East Main and Big rivers, flowing into Hudson Bay, and the Koksoak River flowing into Ungava Bay. The general elevation of this area exceeds 2,000 feet.

Highlands of the St.
Lawrence.

The only portion in which the general level is attained by a gradual slope, is the part facing James Bay, where the land along the coast is low, and the rise eastward towards the interior is so light that one hundred miles inland it is only about 700 feet above sea-level.

Beyond this the land continues to rise gradually, so that Lake Mistassini is only 1,300 feet above sea-level. As before stated, the rise from the coast in other places is quite rapid ; and along the St. Lawrence coast there is a range of high ground extending from the neighbourhood of Quebec to below the St. John River. The larger streams have cut deep valleys through this range. Along the Saguenay, at Cape Eternity, the hills rise almost sheer 1,500 feet above the river ; while behind, in the Lake St. John region, few elevations exceed 1,000 feet. On the Bersimis River, the high range begins about forty-five miles inland and continues to about the one hundredth mile, beyond which the country is comparatively level, and somewhat lower. On the Romaine and St. John rivers, the high lands formed from a great mass of irruptive rocks, begin about twenty-five miles from the coast, and are about fifty miles broad. The general level of this belt is nearly 2,000 feet and many of the summits are more than 2,500 feet above sea-level, while the general level of the country immediately behind them is not much over 1,600 feet. H. Y. Hind* mentions similar high lands on the Moisie River, where the general level is above 1,500 feet, and some of the mountain ranges are 3,000 feet above sea-level.

Along the Atlantic coast, the land rises abruptly inland, almost everywhere, to altitudes varying from 1,000 feet to 1,500 feet, from the Strait of Belle Isle to the vicinity of Nain. To the northward of Nain the coast range is much higher, and, in the neighbourhood of Nachvak Bay, ranges of sharp, unglaciated mountains rise abruptly from the sea to heights varying from 2,500 feet to 4,000 feet ; while farther north they are reported to culminate in peaks of 6,000 feet, a few miles inland. With a slight decrease in height, this range continues northward to the barren islands at Cape Chidley. This mountain range appears to be confined to the coast region and probably is under fifty miles in width, the country on the western side sloping rapidly down to the level of the interior plateau. About Ungava Bay, the general level of the plateau is probably somewhat under 1,000 feet, and the land rises gradually towards the interior. Little or nothing is known definitely of the great northern area between Ungava and Hudson bays, but, from observations by Dr. R. Bell, made along the coasts, the land appears to rise rapidly for 1,000 feet, and then more gradually to elevations between 1,500 and 2,000 feet. From information obtained from the Eskimo at Ungava, there would seem to be a low tract of country extending westward from Hope's Advance towards Mosquito Bay on the Hudson Bay coast, and also another area of comparatively low country westward of the Leaf Lakes and of the Koksoak River valley.

The land fronting the Hudson Bay coast, as far south as Cape Jones, reaches the 1,000 feet level within a short distance from the sea, and then rises quickly to a general level between 1,500 and 2,000 feet, the latter being the maximum of elevation in this region, as determined by the few explorations in this portion of the peninsula. The gradual rise from the seaboard of the country to the east and south-east of James Bay, has already been mentioned.

To sum up the foregoing statements of levels,—the interior of the peninsula is almost flat, so that in an area of 200,000 square miles, there is not a difference of general level of more than 300 or 400 feet, and the highest general level of the interior is under 2,500 feet. A belt of land somewhat higher than the general interior follows the St. Lawrence coast, a short distance inland. The northern half of the Atlantic coast rises in a chain of mountains, considerably higher than any other portion of the peninsula. Along the northern and western coasts there is no evidence yet obtained to show the existence of a coastal ridge, but rather a probability that the general elevation increases towards the interior.

p. 2596

Like the other portions of northern Canada underlain by glaciated Archæan rocks, the interior of the Labrador Peninsula is covered with myriads of lakes that occupy, at a moderate estimate, at least one-fourth of the total area. In size, these vary from small narrow ponds, to lakes with surfaces hundreds of square miles in extent. Great Mistassini and Michikamau lakes have areas considerably exceeding 500 square miles. Among those of which the area is between 200 and 500 square miles, may be mentioned Manouan Lake, on a tributary of the Peribonka River, Pletipi Lake, at the head of the Outardes River, the Manicuagan lakes, on the headwaters of the river of the same name ; all sending their waters into the St. Lawrence. Discharging into the Atlantic are Winokapau, Petitsikapau, Ashuanipi and Attikonak lakes on the Hamilton River, and Grand Lake on the Northwest River, which also drains Lake Michikamau. On the rivers discharging northward, Lake Kaniapiskau is the only one yet partly explored, but reference to the map will show a number of large lakes on the various tributaries of the Koksoak and George rivers, which have been located from information derived from Hudson's Bay Company employees and Indians.

Rivers.

Besides the lakes mentioned, there are hundreds having a surface area between 20 square miles and 100 square miles, while smaller lakes are numberless.

* * * *

It follows, from the great number of lakes, that the country must be covered with a perfect network of streams discharging them. The discharges and lakes interlock so closely that, with a knowledge of the country, it is possible to travel with canoes in any direction, the longest portages never exceeding two or three miles.

There are four principal watersheds to the peninsula : of these the southern is the smallest, its rivers rarely exceeding 300 miles in length ; the most important are the Saguenay and its branches, Bersimis, Outardes, Manicuagan, Moisie, Romaine, Natashquan and St. Augustine. The eastern watershed drains chiefly into Hamilton Inlet, three large rivers flowing into its head. Of these the Hamilton River is much the largest, taking its rise near the middle of the peninsula and draining an area extending from latitude 52° to latitude 54° covering seven degrees of longitude. Its longest branch rises nearly 600 miles from its mouth. The other rivers of Hamilton Inlet are the Northwest and Kenamou, the former draining a large area to the north of the Hamilton River, the latter flowing in from the south-west. Apart from these three large streams, no other rivers of importance are found along the Atlantic coast, on account of the high lands of the coast cutting off the drainage of the interior and forcing it to flow northward into Ungava Bay.

The Koksoak River is the largest stream flowing northward, and is probably the largest river of Labrador. Besides the main stream, there are a half dozen tributaries, each of which drains an important basin. The longest branch flows out of the northern end of Summit Lake, on the 53rd parallel of latitude, while a branch of the Manicouagan River flows out of the southern end of the same lake, thus connecting by water the Gulf of St. Lawrence with Ungava Bay. The total area drained by this river and its tributaries is about 60,000 square miles. The George River, is another great stream which rises in large lakes close to Lake Petitsikapau on the Hamilton River, and drains a wide area westward of the Atlantic coast range. The Whale River is a smaller stream lying between the George and Koksoak rivers.

The western drainage basin is the greatest in Labrador and is emptied by large rivers, that rise far inland, close to the head-waters of the Koksoak and Saguenay rivers. Proceeding from the northward, the larger rivers flowing into Hudson Bay are :—The Nastapoka which flows out of several large lakes to the eastward of Clearwater Lake and near the head of the Stillwater branch of the Koksoak River ; the Little and Great Whale rivers, that rise close to the western branches of the Koksoak ; the Big River which rises in the mountainous area south and east of the head of the East Main River, in about latitude 52°, and close to the sources of the Peribonka, Manicouagan and Outardes rivers tributaries of the St. Lawrence. From its source the Big River flows northward nearly one hundred and fifty miles, passing through Lake Nichicun, and then turns westward four hundred miles, emptying into James Bay, near latitude 54°.

Drainage-basin of Hamilton River.

The East Main River takes its rise in a number of lakes close to Lake Nichicun and flows nearly west, discharging into James Bay a short distance north of latitude 52°. The Rupert River forms the discharge of the Mistassini lakes, and, having such large reservoirs at its head, is not subject to the same fluctuations of volume, as the other rivers. It empties into Rupert Bay close to the mouth of the Nottoway River, which drains a wide area to the south-east of Hudson Bay, and rises in a number of large lakes close to the height-of-land dividing it from the St. Maurice River, which joins the St. Lawrence at Three Rivers.

Hamilton River.

Division of river into upper and lower.

The Hamilton River is the most important stream of the eastern watershed of the Labrador Peninsula. Its drainage-basin embraces a wide area of the country extending from the head of Hamilton Inlet westward to longitude 68°, or nearly half way across the peninsula. To the northward its tributaries interlock with those of the Northwest River which also flows into Hamilton Inlet, and with the headwaters of the George River and branches of the Koksoak River that empty into Ungava Bay. The southern limit of its large tributaries is very irregular, and may be roughly taken to be near the fifty-second parallel of latitude, where the watershed separating them from streams flowing southward into the St. Lawrence, is extremely sinuous and almost impossible to trace or define.

p. 2598

The river-valley.

Westward of the Hamilton basin, the general slope of the country is northward, and the drainage is in that direction from about latitude 52°, the water reaching the ocean by the Koksoak River, which drains a considerable area of the central interior between the head of the Hamilton River and the Big River flowing into Hudson Bay.

Owing to the great difference in physical character between its upper and lower portions, the Hamilton River is naturally divided into two parts at the Grand Falls some 250 miles above its mouth. The lower part occupies a distinct valley, cut out of Archæan rocks, with the present river-level from 500 to 800 feet below the general level of the surrounding country. The valley varies in width from 100 yards to more than two miles, and the river flows down it between banks of drift, with a strong current broken by rapids in several places, especially along the upper stretches, but only in one place does it fall over an obstruction of rock.

This valley is well wooded where unburnt, and the timber is all of fair size and of commercial value, in marked contrast to the small stunted trees found partly covering the rolling country of the tableland, on either side of the valley.

* * * *

Origin of Bodwoin Cañon.

Low describes the canyon through which the river flows for a distance of some eight miles below the Grand Falls, before it enters the main valley of the river, as follows:—

The cañon is cut sharply into the surface of the table-land without any appreciable dip of the ground towards it, and there is so little indication of its presence from above, that the gorge is seen only within a few yards of its edge ; and its walls are so steep, and the bushes along the top so thick, that in most places it is necessary to hold on to an overhanging tree and lean far out in order to see the narrow white line of broken foaming water that rushes along 500 feet below. As the country slopes gently towards the main valley, the cañon does not deepen with the descent of the river in it, and the walls are everywhere from 500 to 600 feet high, varying with the undulating surface of the table-land.

Descent of the river near the Grand Falls.

There is little doubt that the cañon is a valley of erosion in an unfinished state of formation, and probably previous to the glacial period was the valley of a much smaller stream than the one at present flowing through it. At that time the main stream in all likelihood followed the main valley. There is no evidence that the valley has been cut back, or otherwise eroded since the close of the glacial period, beyond the removal of the drift, which then filled it nearly to the top, as patches of drift still remain on the inner sides of the sharp bends. From the above facts some idea can be had of the great length of time required for the erosion of the main valley of the river, from the falls to the mouth of Hamilton Inlet, which is really a submerged portion of this river-valley.

p. 2599

In his description of the Grand Falls, Dr. Low speaks of the magnitude of the fall which occurs and of the volume of the discharge of the river at this point as follows:—

Volume of water at Grand Falls.

“ Eight miles in a straight line north-north-west of the mouth of the cañon, the main branch of the Hamilton River issues from a small lake-expansion, almost on a level with the surrounding surface of the table-land, and begins one of the greatest and wildest descents of any river in eastern America. A large number of barometric readings taken in the vicinity, in conjunction with regular readings at the Hudson's Bay Company's post, at Northwest River, give the height of the river as it issues from the lake as 1,660 feet above sea-level. The height of the valley at the mouth of the gorge, determined in the same manner, is very close to 900 feet above sea-level.

the upper Hamilton River.

Consequently, in twelve miles, the total fall is 760 feet. Such a fall would be nothing extraordinary for a small stream, in a mountainous country, but is phenomenal in a great river like the Hamilton, which has been estimated to discharge at this point about 50,000 cubic feet per second, or nearly the mean volume of the Ottawa River, at Ottawa, that stream having a mean volume of 85,000 cubic feet per second at Grenville, where it includes the waters of the Rideau, Gatineau and Lièvre rivers. The descent includes a sheer fall of 302 feet, the rest being in the form of heavy rapids.

Upper Hamilton River.

“ Above the Grand Falls, the character of the river changes completely ; it no longer flows in a distinct valley cut deep into the surrounding country, but nearly on a level with the surface of the table-land, spreading out so as to fill the valleys between the long, low ridges of hills that are arranged in echelon all over the country. The river in passing around the ridges is often broken into several channels by large islands formed by separate ridges, and in other places, where there are wide valleys between the hills, it fills long, shallow lakes, with deep bays, and often studded with islands. The river is, now so divided into channels and so diversified with island-covered lakes, that without a guide it is almost impossible to follow its main channel, and much time is lost tracing its course through the lakes, which often have several channels discharging into, as well as out of them. The current instead of flowing regularly, now alternates between short rapids and long lake stretches.

“ The banks are often low, and covered with a dense growth of small willows and alders, that form a wide fringe between the water and the conifers of the higher ground behind. In other places, generally at rapids, the stream has cut a channel into the sandy drift that forms the low ridges on one or both sides. The shores of the lakes are very often low, with an interval of flat land between the water and the hills behind. These low shores and those of the islands are generally thickly strewn with boulders, piled up in ridges by the expansion and drift of the ice in the spring. The general direction of the river from the Grand Falls to Lake Petitsikapau, more than 100 miles above, is nearly west-north-west, or parallel to the direction of the glacial striae, and that of the ridges of drift. All these features give to the upper portion of the river an aspect of newness, and indicate that its present course and conditions have been determined by the post-glacial configuration of the table-land, in marked contrast to the ancient appearance of the deep, rock-walled valley of erosion below the cañon in which the river must have flowed for ages, slowly abrading the hard gneisses and granites and carrying away the results of atmospheric decay brought down from its sides by the rains and small tributary streams.”

FORMATION OF FIORDS.

In his description of the Atlantic coast of the Peninsula (quoted above), Dr. Low states that a fringe of small rocky islands extends almost continuously along the coast, with a breadth of from five to twenty-five miles; that outside the islands, submerged banks extend seaward for an average distance of about fifteen miles, and on them the water is rarely over forty fathoms deep. From this it will be seen, he observes, that the fiords as a rule, have greater depths than the banks outside the island fringe. He then observes as follows :—

“ To account for such an apparent anomaly, it is necessary to consider the formation of both the fiords and banks. The fiords appear to be valleys of denudation of very ancient origin, eroded, at least in part, when the elevation of the peninsula was considerably greater (at least 600 feet) than at present. Their remote antiquity is established by the deposition in their lower levels of undisturbed sandstones of Cambrian age. The banks are likely of comparatively recent formation, and appear to be made from material carried off the higher lands by glaciers and deposited by them as a terminal moraine among and outside the fringe of islands, to be subsequently flattened out by floating ice and currents, thus filling up the deep channels at the mouths of the fiords. ”

The channels of most of the rivers of Labrador are of very ancient origin, apparently dating back to a period before the deposition of the Cambrian rocks. These valleys are cut deep into the general level of the plateau, their depth and length apparently depending on the volume of water carried, and thus showing that they have been mainly formed by normal denudation.

The larger rivers flowing southward, have deep valleys cut through the highlands of the coast region, and the streams are often from 500 feet to 1,000 feet below the general level of the surrounding country. The heads of these valleys are from one hundred to three hundred miles from their mouths; and at their upper ends the rivers descend from the level of the interior in a succession of heavy falls, through narrow gorges where processes of erosion are at present extending and deepening the valleys. This erosion is, however, so exceedingly slow, that the change in the heads of the valleys, since glacial times, has been practically nothing, owing no doubt to the hardness and resistance to weathering of the Archæan rocks in which they are cut. The gorge of the Saguenay, with its almost vertical walls rising 1,500 feet above the surface of the water, and its great depth of more than 800 feet in places, is an excellent example of one of these ancient river-valleys. That of the Hamilton River, which is cut back from the head of Hamilton Inlet for nearly three hundred miles, and of which the depth is from 700 feet to 1,200 feet below the general level of the surrounding country, is another fine example of river erosion. The rivers occupying smaller valleys, are all of the same type. The East Main and Rupert rivers, flowing as they do on the gradual slope towards James Bay, where the marine deposits of sand and clay are found inland about one hundred miles, have not the marked valleys found elsewhere, but descend in a number of steps, where they have either cut narrow gorges out of soft Huronian schists, or fall directly over granitic ledges. The ancient valleys of these streams appear to have been filled up during the deposition of these marine beds, and the present river-courses are of post-glacial origin.

Before entering the ancient valleys above described, all the rivers in central Labrador flow almost on the surface of the country, and are broken into chains of lakes often formed by dams of glacial drift, which in other places form low ridges that divide the streams into different channels. These channels wander about on the lower levels of the interior country in a most bewildering manner, and render travel without a guide excessively difficult.

GLACIAL GEOLOGY.

Probable great thickness of ice.

The observations of striæ and other glacial phenomena taken along the different routes followed during these explorations, in conjunction with similar evidence previously obtained on the rivers flowing westward into Hudson Bay, all show that the Labrador Peninsula, with the exception of a narrow strip of highlands along the North Atlantic Coast, was completely covered with ice during a portion at least of the glacial period. The movement of the ice followed the general slope of the country outward in all directions from a central gathering-ground, or nevé, and the thickness of the ice was such that in its flow it passed over ridges and valleys unchanged, or with only minor deflections.

* * * *

The strong glaciation of the highest hills in the interior, on the edges of the nevé region, the constant directions of the striæ over hill and valley, and the fact that the general slope of the plateau from the interior outwards is very slight and does not exceed two or three feet per mile until within a few miles of the coast, all point to a considerable thickness of ice in the interior such as to cause the strong, radial flow of the ice evidenced by the glaciation of the region.

INTRODUCTION.

The present paper offers a brief general description of the more salient physiographic features of the Archean areas of Canada. The paper is based upon the reports of the many explorers who have traversed this area in its different parts. The writer's own field work in several parts of the area has served as a basis of interpretation where his method of description departs from that of the authorities from whose work this summary was prepared.

p. 124.

No attempt is made to discuss the imperfectly known geology of the very large area here under consideration. The purpose of the paper is rather to draw attention to the remarkable unity of the physiographic features of the region in its whole extent and to present a brief description of their most marked characteristics.

AREA AND EXTENT.

The Archean areas of Canada, the Canadian Shield of Suess, extend around Hudson Bay in a U form, reaching from Hudson Strait on the north-east, southward through Labrador, Quebec, northern Ontario, and then north-westward through the district of Keewatin and part of the district of Mackenzie to Coronation Gulf, in the extreme north-west.

* * * *

2. Depressions containing sedimentary deposits.—The occurrence of valleys partly occupied by sediments which have been called Cambrian has been reported by Low in Labrador and by Tyrrell in northern Keewatin and eastern Mackenzie. Outlying areas of Paleozoic sediments are found in the basins occupied in part by Lakes Nipissing, Temiscaming, St. John, and Mistassinni.

Low, in describing certain of these valleys in Labrador, mentions that the streams are often from 500 to 1,000 feet below the level of the plateau. The heads of the valleys are

p. 124. from 100 to 300 miles from their mouths, and at the upper ends the rivers descend from the level of the interior in a succession
p. 2605

p. 125. of heavy falls through narrow gorges, where processes of erosion are at present slowly extending and deepening the valleys. The valley of the Hamilton River lie describes as from 700 to 1,200 feet below the level of the plateau. Some of these ancient valleys have been more or less filled with glacial débris, and the modern streams for part or all of their lengths have taken new courses.

Some of the depressions in which these sediments lie seem to be ancient broadly open valleys and are considered by those who have had the opportunity of studying them in the field as of pre-Cambrian age.

p. 130. In the Labrador region the margins of the depressions in which the sediments occur are well defined. This is strikingly true of the lower and partly submerged valley of the Hamilton River.

* * * *

p. 131. 3. Gorge and canyon valleys.—Narrow, steep-sided valleys and gorges, some many miles in length, some extending only for a short distance, are of frequent occurrence in various parts of the peneplain. Many of them are found in the Labrador area, through which the drainage of the interior upland passes down to Hudson Bay, to the St. Lawrence River, or to the Atlantic Ocean. One of the most interesting of these is the gorge of the Hamilton River, described by Low as occurring above the more open, partly submerged valley of the second type here described, in which certain sediments lie and which forms the lower part of the valley of the same river.

* * * *

Origin of the basins, valleys, and gorges.

Given time enough there can be no question that the normal processes of river erosion could produce these deep canyons or steep-sided valleys. So far as we know at present, this seems to have been the process by which most of the deep gorges and canyons cut below the level of the Labrador peneplain were excavated. Mr. Low notes, with respect to the canyon of the Hamilton just below the Grand Falls, that the river in its erosion of this gorge has been guided by two series of joint fractures, so that the canyon has a somewhat zigzag course. Mr. Low has also drawn the writer's attention to the fact that there are several instances where an old valley has been blocked by glacial débris, and the streams flowing in the upper portion of the valley are turned aside and have already cut well-defined canyons, in some cases of considerable length, in the crystalline rocks. It is to be noted that the canyon of the Hamilton River enters a larger, broader valley, to which reference has already been made, from the north side. The old valley continues inland for a considerable distance beyond the junction of the present Hamilton River via the canyon, with the lower part of the stream in the older valley. Mr. Low regards this canyon as of post-Glacial origin and as due to the erosion by the large stream which now rushes through it.

POPULATION.

Number of Indians.

With the exception of the white settlements along the north shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and on the Atlantic coast, and the few whites employed by the Hudson's Bay Company in the interior and on Hudson Bay, the inhabitants of the Labrador Peninsula are either Indians or Eskimo.

It is very difficult to arrive at more than a rough approximation of the numbers of Indians inhabiting the interior, owing to their habits of roving from one Company's post to another ; and the consequent liability to counting the same family several times, if the returns are computed from the books of the various posts, which is the only available data for any exact enumeration.

From the returns given in the reports of the Department of Indian Affairs, the Indians of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, including those of Lake St. John, numbered 1,919 in 1888, and 1,725 in 1893. These figures exclude 2,860 under the heading of the “Nascopies of the Lower St. Lawrence,” which number is the same in both returns. According to the same source, the number of Indians of Eastern Rupert Land is 4,016 ; that of the Labrador (Canadian Interior) 1,000, and that of the Atlantic coast 4,000. The last probably refers to the Eskimo, but is not so stated. These returns would give a total native population of more than 13,000 persons, if the Indians of Eastern Rupert Land are those of the east coast of Hudson Bay.

In Appendix II., page 336, of the report of the Committee on the Hudson's Bay Company (1857), a return of the native population is given, compiled by the Hudson's Bay Company and others. The total number of natives trading at, and belonging to, the various posts in the Labrador Peninsula is given as 3,885 persons ; and this estimate, although probably somewhat high, is still much nearer to the native Indian population than that given above. The population of the St. Lawrence coast is given as 1,800 persons, which agrees closely with the Department of Indian Affairs returns for the years population.

1888 and 1893.* Of the remainder, 400 belonged to posts on the Atlantic coast, where probably a number of Eskimo are included, 950 belonged to the posts of the east coast of Hudson Bay, and the balance, 735, were attached to the posts of the interior. Since this return was made, the food resources and other conditions have changed considerably, and with them the distribution of the Indians.

Eskimo.

In 1857, there were seven trading posts in the interior of the peninsula, and at present there are but three, Waswanipi, Mistassini and Niehicun. Fort Chimo, near the mouth of the Koksoak River was not then opened. The policy of the Hudson Bay Company was then to keep the Indians away from the coast and contact with opposition traders; this has now been changed, and the great body of the natives travel annually to and from their hunting grounds in the interior, to the various coast posts. In consequence, instead of 735 persons belonging to inland posts, at present there are not above 300 attached to these posts. The number of Indians trading at Northwest River and Davis Inlet, on the Atlantic coast, is about 200 persons. At Fort Chimo the famine of 1892-93 reduced the number of Indians in that district from 350 to less than 200 persons. Connected with the posts at Great Whale River, Fort George and Rupert House, on Hudson Bay, the total number of Indians does not exceed 1,000 persons, and probably falls considerably short of that number, so that at the highest estimate the Indian population of the Labrador Peninsula does not exceed 3,500, and is more likely nearer 3,000.

Labrador coast.

The Eskimo inhabit the coast of the peninsula from Hamilton Inlet northward along the Atlantic coast to Hudson Strait, the east shore of Hudson Bay as far south as Great Whale River, while a few families live on the islands of James Bay. From the meagre returns available, only an approximate statement of their numbers can be compiled. In the census of Newfoundland (1891), the Eskimo are not separated from the white population of the Labrador coast; but, as the number of resident whites is not above 100 persons north of Hamilton Inlet, and as the Eskimo form about one-half the population of that place, from a total of 1,191 persons there, and along the coast north of Hamilton Inlet, between 900 and 1,000 may be taken as Eskimo. The following estimate of the Eskimo population living on Hudson Strait and the east coast of Hudson Bay was supplied by Mr. R. Gray, who was for upwards of ten years clerk at Fort Chimo, and is well acquainted with the Eskimo of Ungava Bay :—From Cape Chidley to Hope's Advance, 51 families; about Hope's Advance, 30 families ; from Stupart Bay to Cape Wolstenholme, 80 families ; from Cape Wolstenholme to Great Whale River, 80 families. The average Eskimo family is small and rarely exceeds five persons. Taking this as the average, the total population to the west of Cape Chidley would be 1,200 persons. This estimate is probably excessive, and 1,000 persons would be nearer the number, if not still Total population. above it. According to the Newfoundland census of 1891, the total population of the Labrador coast between Blanc Sablon and Cape Chidley is 4,106, including the Eskimo already referred to. Subtracting the 1,000 Eskimo would leave a resident white population of 3,106 greatly increased during the summer months by fishermen from Newfoundland. In 1890, 10,430 men, 2,076 women and 828 children from Newfoundland were so engaged, in 854 vessels.

According to the Canadian census (1891), there is a white population of 5,728, scattered along the north shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, to the eastward, and exclusive of those living about the mouth of the Saguenay River, who number 2,440.

To sum up, taking 3,500 Indians, 2,000 Eskimo and 8,800 whites, the total population of the Labrador peninsula is 14,300, or, roughly, one person to every thirty-five square miles.

“Planters.”

The white population along the gulf coast consists largely of French Canadians who obtain a livelihood chiefly from the fisheries, with slight help from fur hunting during the winter. On the Atlantic coast the whites, northward from the Strait of Belle Isle to Sandwich Bay, are largely English speaking, and are either immigrants from Newfoundland, or the descendants of English fishermen formerly engaged in the salmon fishery. Northward of Sandwich Bay, the white inhabitants are, for the most part, descended from Hudson's Bay Company servants, who married Eskimo women and remained on the coast after their services had expired. They are known along the coast as “planters,” and gain a fairly comfortable living from the cod and salmon fishery in the summer, and by fur hunting during the winter. They are all deeply in debt to the Hudson's Bay Company and Newfoundland fishing firms for supplies advanced. Having no capital of their own, they are compelled every spring in order to carry on their fishing, to obtain supplies and nets from the merchants. If the season is favourable, they may be able to pay off their debts at its close ; but, as a rule, of late years they have been going deeper and deeper into debt, owing to the scarcity of fish along the coast where they are accustomed to make their fisheries. The natives ascribe the failure of the fishery to the numerous trap-nets now used along the coast by fishermen employed by the Newfoundland merchants. The use of these nets is said to be contrary to the law of Newfoundland, but, as there is no strict government patrol of the Labrador coast, the law is practically inoperative.

Winter quarters.

At the close of the fishery, the greater number of the “planters” leave their small houses on the coast, and proceeding to the heads of the various bays, go into winter quarters in their small houses there. During the winter they are engaged hunting fur-bearing animals. These also are not so plentiful as formerly, owing probably, to the large areas burnt over, either from fires accidentally made, or set on purpose by the owners of schooners, who often fire the country along the shore, so as to easily make dry firewood for future seasons.

Each “ planter ” has a “ path ” or line of traps, often extending fifty miles or more inland, and as these paths cannot be covered in one day, he has small “ shacks,” or log houses, at convenient intervals along them, where he can pass the night with some degree of comfort. Some of the paths are so long that they require a week to go over and attend to the traps on the way.

p. 2609

Food supply.

During the months of April and May the planters and Eskimo are engaged s at the seal hunt. They kill these animals on the ice of the upper parts of the inlets, by watching at their holes or cracks, and spearing them when they come to breathe or sun themselves. Formerly the takes were large, but of late years they have been so small that many are abandoning the hunt. As soon as the ice leaves the bays, seals are taken in nets set along shore. The seals are used principally for local consumption, although some skins and a small quantity of oil are exported. The skins are used for outer winter clothing and other domestic purposes, while the fat and meat are preserved for dog food; for, as each “ planter ” has a team of dogs, varying in number from two to six, and as the Hudson's Bay Company keep a large number of dogs, a great quantity of seal meat is required.

Missionaries.

Notwithstanding the decrease in the fishery, furs and seals, the planters make a much better living than many of the poorer people in cities ; and, if they were to exert themselves more, and were more thrifty, they might make a comfortable and independent living. As it is, with a reasonable amount of care, thought and labour, they can procure sufficient provisions to keep their families well fed, as in the fall, after the close of the commercial fishery, they can obtain an abundance of brook trout, that swarm at the mouths of all the streams flowing into the sea. At this time, spruce partridges are very plentiful on their migration from the coast inland, while, later, ptarmigan and rabbits are generally abundant. The proceeds of their fishery would easily provide them with flour and provisions, while all living inland might raise a small crop of potatoes; then, the proceeds of their winter's hunt would, in most cases, be ample to supply clothes for a year, and leave a surplus. This is, unfortunately, not the case, and a number of families are often without sufficient food and clothing every year.

Education.

For the spiritual benefit of the whites, the Methodist church of Newfoundland has a mission station opposite Rigolet, in charge of the Rev. Mr. Pollock, who resides there a part of the time; the rest of his time being taken up with house to house visitations to the planters. As his district extends to and includes Sandwich Bay, one hundred miles to the south, where there is a large settlement, the time devoted to each family is small. The Episcopal church has a mission school at Sandwich Bay, in charge of Mr. L. Dicks, who also travels from house to house, instructing the children.

In spite of lack of educational advantages, nearly everybody can read and write, and all are very religious. As alcoholic liquors are not openly sold on the Labrador coast, cases of intoxication are exceedingly rare, and many of the younger people do not know the taste of alcohol. On the whole, these people compare favourably with those of more civilized regions, being frugal, moral, willing, good tempered, and naturally intelligent ; their only fault, want of thrift and providence, is largely due to their mode of living, absence from any market of competitive labour, and the system of credit and debt under which they live.

The Indians of the Labrador Peninsula belong to tribes of the Algonkin family. The principal tribes of Labrador are the Montagnais, the eastern and western Nascaupees, and the coastal Indians of Hudson Bay. The Montagnais inhabit the country extending south of a line drawn westward from Hamilton Inlet, to the headwaters of the St. Maurice River. The Nascaupees inhabit the interior country north of this line, or from the bottom of James Bay eastward to Hamilton Inlet. The northern limit of their territory is marked by the Koksoak River, from its mouth to the Stillwater Branch, and by this stream westward to its head on the neighbourhood of Clearwater Lake, and thence westward to Richmond Gulf on Hudson Bay. This line divides the Indian territory from that of the Eskimo, and the boundary is well observed, the latter keeping far to the north of it, when hunting deer inland, and the Indians rarely crossing it from the southward.

Iroquois.

The coastal Indians of Hudson Bay are confined to a narrow margin extending from the bottom of James Bay to Little Whale River, along the east coast.

The various tribes are closely related by intermarriage, and, although using different dialects, have many manners and customs in common. The northern Indians have apparently migrated to their present territory from a south-west direction, as their language contains many words of the Sauteaux or Ojibway tongue ; whereas the southern Indians speak purer Cree. The Nascaupees have traditions that their people originally dwelt far to the south, on the north side of a great river, with the sea to the eastward. They were driven northward by the Iroquois during the wars of the early French régime in Canada. Such was the terror inspired by the Iroquois, Montagnais.

who followed them beyond the southern watershed to the shores of Hudson Bay, and eastward along the St. Lawrence to the Natashquan River, that at present they use their name to frighten the children. The writer had two Iroquois as canoemen on the Big and Great Whale rivers, and could only with great difficulty induce the native Indians to accompany him inland along with their traditional foes and conquerors. There are several places between Hudson Bay and the Lower St. Lawrence, where great massacres of the natives were perpetrated by the Iroquois.

Coastal Indians.

The Montagnais are more or less of mixed blood, having intermarried with the old coureurs des bois and the French and English traders. This admixture of white blood is seen in the better physique of the tribe, the men being more muscular and broader than the pure Indian of the interior. As a rule, the men are of medium height, but a few are tall. The women are inclined to obesity as they advance in years, like their sisters of the northern tribes. The western Nascaupees are, as a rule, the tallest men in Labrador, many of them being six feet and over in height, straight and of light physique. The eastern Nascaupees are usually not above five feet six inches tall, slightly built and not at all muscular, being incapable of carrying half the loads of the Montagnais. They are also the dirtiest and most degraded Indians of Labrador. The coastal Indians have apparently a large admixture of white blood, as many of them have blue eyes and the men as a rule have strong beards. They bear in figure and face a certain resemblance to their northern neighbours the Eskimo, being heavily built and unlike the typical Indian. The admixture of white blood would account for this difference of physique, and it may also have been induced by their living along the sea coast. Their resemblance to the Eskimo is not likely due to a blood relationship, as the Indians and Eskimo never take wives from one another, nor have sexual intercourse together.

Very little is known definitely about the philology and ethnology of the Indians, and the present account is only from desultory information picked up among them by the writer.

Religion.

The language, as before stated, is various dialects of Cree, or a mixture of Cree and Ojibway. The dialects are more numerous than those of the four tribes given above. The Montagnais of Lake St. John speak a somewhat different dialect from that of Bersimis, and it again differs from the dialects of Mingan or Northwest River. These differences of dialect in the same tribe are slight, and are mostly in the slang and interjections. The same differences apply to the dialects of the Nascaupee, Mistassini and Nichicun, differing from that of Fort Chimo, and all from that of Whale River and Rupert House. But these differences are all so small that the Montagnais canoemen conversed readily with the natives at Mistassini, Nichicun, Fort Chimo and Northwest River, and were only slightly puzzled on the coast of Hudson Bay, where the number of Ojibway words is greater. A large majority of the Indians of Labrador are Christians, the Montagnais of the St. Lawrence and Hamilton Inlet being Roman Catholics, while the Indians of the western watershed have been converted by the missionaries of the Church of England. Only the eastern Nascaupees are pagans, and most of them have a faint tinge of Christianity, imparted on hurried visits by the Roman Catholic missionaries, between Hamilton Inlet and Ungava Bay. The christianized Indians are devoutly religious, attending strictly to the offices of the church during the long periods of absence from the eye of the missionary. While in the woods, they keep track of the weeks, ticking the days off on a rough calendar. They do not work on Sunday, and observe the fast days. Notwithstanding their careful observance of the offices, their religion is to a considerable extent leavened with old pagan superstitions, and a sneaking regard is still held for the "windago" and other evil spirits of their forefathers. It is almost laughable to see the respect with which the most religious of them treat the well-known conjurors or medicine men of the pagan Nascaupees ; and they all secretly believe that these persons can, if they wish, work harm by the aid of evil spirits. All the Christian Indians can read and write, those instructed by the English missionaries using a kind of syllabic shorthand, while those under the French missionaries make use of books printed in the ordinary way.

Honesty.

Morals.

Marriage.

Dishonesty and theft are unknown to the interior Indians; provisions and outfit can be left anywhere inland with perfect safety for any length of time. Only in a case of absolute starvation will provisions be taken, and then only a small part, for which payment will be left by the person taking them. It is to be regretted that along the coasts, where the Indians are in close communication with the whites, their honesty suffers, and a good lookout must be kept, or property will be stolen.

p. 2612

Children. As a rule, the Indians have not a strict regard for the truth, and speak it only when convenient. The missionaries have improved the moral and sexual relations of the Indians, but there is still room for improvement in the latter respect. Marriages are made early, the men taking wives as soon as they can support them, and the women being given in marriage when they are fourteen or fifteen years old. Among the Christian Indians monogamy is practised, and the marriage ceremony is performed by the missionaries, or, in their absence, by the officers of the Hudson's Bay Company. Among the pagan Indians many of the men have two wives, and some three or four, according to the number they can support by their hunt. Continence is not usual. Widows are in great demand in marriage, and often a young boy is mated to a woman old enough to be his mother. As a widow inherits her dead husband's hunting grounds, a marriage with her provides the second husband with hunting grounds as well as a wife, and in consequence widows are taken by young men without lands. The respect shown by children to parents is great, and the will of the aged father is law, even with middle-aged sons, who will not enter into any serious undertaking without first consulting the head of the family. Children are never beaten, but soon learn to obey without punishment. As a rule, the number of children borne by the women is small, rarely exceeding five. The women become wrinkled and old before they are forty years of age ; after which they often live for many years. The men show the effects of age much less than the women, and it is exceedingly difficult to tell their exact age between 50 and 70 years, as the hair rarely turns grey. The greatest mortality is due to pulmonary diseases, which are induced by exposure to cold and wet, with no covering on the feet but deerskin moccasins, which soak like blotting-paper. "Lame back " incapacitates a number of the men, and is probably due to disease of the kidneys. Complaints of the stomach are also the cause of many deaths, owing to the weakening of that organ by alternate periods of starvation and gormandizing. Scrofulous sores and ulcers are not uncommon, and appear to be inherited.

Disease.

Burial.

Mode of living.

The dead throughout Labrador are buried in the ground, and, only when death takes place during the winter, is the body placed in a tree until the frost is out of the ground. The clothing, gun and other articles belonging to the deceased are often buried with him, or placed on the grave, when the burial takes place in the woods, and no Indian would touch anything so left, or camp near one of these lonely graves. The dead are mourned for according to the position they occupied, and the grief displayed is deep and sincere. A curious custom was noted in the interior, on the arrival of the various families at the posts in the spring—instead of joyous greetings the women clasp one another and indulge in a period of silent weeping, after which they cheer up and exchange gossip.

The annual routine of an Indian life is made up of two periods, the short period, from one to three months, spent during the summer at the coast, and the long period passed inland. Those who trade at the inland posts, are engaged throughout the summer transporting to Hudson Bay the fur hunt of the past winter and bringing back the supplies to form the next season's outfit. The amount of supplies is so great and the number of men at these posts is so small, that every one capable of working is enlisted, including half-grown boys and old men. As most of the women and children accompany the brigades of large canoes, in their small canoes, the journey practically amounts to a co-operative scheme of bringing in supplies, and differs only in this respect from the annual visit to the coast of the independent families. The only Indians who do not come in contact with the white traders during the summer, are some eighteen families who reside on the shores of a large lake about two hundred miles above the mouth of the George River. These Indians never visit the coast during the summer, and their only communication with the white traders is during the early spring, when the younger men tramp to Davis Inlet on the Atlantic coast, and there trade their furs for tea, tobacco and ammunition. They do not buy clothing or provisions, and haul their purchases home on long narrow toboggans over the crusted snow. This little tribe of Indians carries on a small trade in the above mentioned articles with the other neighbouring Indians of the interior. As they reside in a district plentifully supplied with caribou, they depend upon these animals both for food and clothing, and are thus practically independent of the traders.

Summer life.

The majority of the Indians who go to the coast, congregate at convenient centres in bands of six or more families, and in company descend the rivers in their small bark canoes. The time of the spring gathering is shortly after the ice leaves the rivers, when the fur of the otter becomes “common.” Each family carries with it the packs of furs obtained during the winter, together with most of their movable property. Those living farthest inland are often more than two weeks in descending to the post, owing to the long and difficult “roads” they have to follow. On arrival at the coast, the fur-packs are handed over to the trader with whom the Indian deals, and a valuation being set upon them, the Indian is allowed credit for the value computed in “skins” or “beavers,” which are the units of value in the trade—the price of the different furs being reckoned in comparison with a medium sized beaver skin, and the traders' supplies are valued in the same manner. On the St. Lawrence coast this system of barter is falling into disuse, and cash is taking the place of the old beaver as a medium of exchange. The summer season at the posts is passed in visiting friends and in a round of gaiety. Very few of the Indians have been induced to cultivate land on their own account, although they sometimes work in the gardens of the traders and missionaries. The only work that they willingly undertake is in canoes, either attending fishing parties or transporting provisions inland. During the summer season a majority live in small cotton tents, but some of the most successful hunters own small log houses, in which they pass the summer. During the month of August, preparations are made for the journey to winter quarters, and by the end of that month most of the Indians leave the various posts.

Owing to the extermination of the caribou in many parts of the country and to an insufficiency of other game, the greater number of the Indians are now obliged to purchase a considerable quantity of flour, and carry it inland to their hunting grounds,

So much provisions, along with other outfit, are now taken by the southern Indians that they have to make two or three trips with their canoes at starting, and often they are more than two months in reaching their winter quarters. In former years, the Hudson's Bay Company and other traders annually advanced the Indians sufficient provisions and outfit to carry on their winter's hunt, and recouped themselves in the following spring. At present, to a great extent, this system of advances has been abandoned, and the Indian only gets such outfit and provisions as he can pay for in cash or fur. The change is due largely to the losses entailed by close competition, and to the dishonest practices of many of the Indians, who instead of delivering their fur to the persons who advanced to them, take it to rival traders and exchange it for cash or other articles—leaving their debts unpaid. The change is consequently justifiable where there is competition in the fur trade, but bears heavily on the Indian, who is naturally improvident and spends the proceed of his annual hunt as soon as he gets it, without thought or care. In consequence, when the hunt is a failure, which is often the case through no fault of the hunter, the poor Indian has little or nothing to buy his outfit with, and departs to the woods improperly supplied. To this cause is due much of the hardship, starvation and death reported among the Indians of the Labrador Peninsula during the past few years. With the exception of the eastern Nascaupees, all the Indians now dress in clothing procured from the trading shops, and many of the southern Indians, having acquired a taste for luxuries of civilization unknown to their fathers, must make large hunts in order to gratify these tastes.

Each family is supposed to own a portion of territory with the exclusive hunting rights to it. The territory is generally divided into three parts, each part being hunted over in successive years, and in this manner the fur-bearing animals are allowed to recuperate. In the southern country extensive fires, too close hunting, and other causes are rapidly exterminating the animals, and the families owning these grounds, in order to obtain a living, are obliged to encroach upon their northern neighbours. As the intruders care little or nothing about keeping up the stock on these lands, the result is most disastrous, and in a few years, if strict laws are not enacted, the fur-bearing animals of the province of Quebec will be practically exterminated, and the Indians, thus left without their only means of subsistence, will be reduced to beggary, or will die off from famine.

As soon as the hunting grounds are reached and the cold weather begins, the cotton tent is exchanged for the wigwam or "metswap," which is constructed by removing the snow from a circle ten or twelve feet in diameter, about the circumference of which poles six or eight inches apart are planted sloping inwards so as to form a skeleton cone. This cone is covered with cotton cloths, sheets of birch bark, or dressed deer skin, often in part by all three, and a space is left at the top about two feet in diameter for the escape of the smoke. The removal of a pole leaves the space for a door, which is generally closed with an old flour-sack split open, and bound to sticks at the ends to keep it spread out. The bottom of the tent is banked up with snow on the outside, while a thick bed of green boughs is laid over the floor. The fire is built on a few stones in the centre, raised slightly above the ground. Many of the southern Indians have small stoves made out of sheet-iron instead of open fires, and thus avoid the constant smoke which fills the interior, especially when the door is frequently opened.

Before the lakes and streams freeze up, limiting is largely carried on with the gun, the Indians shooting from their canoes beaver, otter, mink and musk-rats, and in the burnt areas, where blueberries are plentiful, bears. The northern Indians at this time are engaged in their principal caribou hunt, killing great numbers by spearing them in the rivers, as they pass on their annual migrations. After the rivers are frozen, most of the fur hunt is made with traps; these are either steel traps or dead-falls of wood. The principal animals taken during the early winter are marten, fox and lynx. During the intense cold of December, January and February, the wild animals move about very little and hunting is unprofitable. During this period the Indians do not hunt unless compelled to do so by hunger. In the month of March, the martens are once more travelling, and continue to constitute the principal hunt until the small streams begin to break up, when attention is given to the beaver and otter and, later on, to the bear. In this manner the winter routine is carried out, with the intervals mostly filled in looking for food. Ptarmigan and Canada grouse are killed during the winter, along with rabbits, which are periodically plentiful, while fish, ducks and geese aid in stocking the larder in the spring and fall.

When the St. Lawrence was first discovered, the Eskimo inhabited the north shore of the gulf as far west as Mingan. They maintained their position here until 1600, when the Indians, having procured firearms from the French, waged unequal war on their old enemies and drove them eastward to the Strait of Belle Isle, where the Eskimo maintained a fortified camp on an island near the western end of the strait until 1630. Since then, a gradual retreat has been made northward, and their present southern limit is Hamilton Inlet, which appears to have long been the headquarters of the southern Eskimo, and is named Eskimo Bay on all the older maps. From here these people are scattered along the northern coast to Hudson Strait. Several large settlements are found at the Moravian Mission stations of Hopedale, Zoar, Nain, Okak and Ramah on the Atlantic coast. There are very few families between Nachvak and George River in Ungava Bay, the coast being high, desolate and unfit to sustain a large population. The Eskimo are more numerous along the west coast of Ungava Bay and Hudson Strait, and are found along the east coast of Hudson Bay, and among the outer islands of that coast, as far south as Great Whale River. Of late years, some three or four families have hunted on the islands in James Bay.

Turner* divides the Eskimo inhabiting the coasts of the Labrador Peninsula into three or four sub-divisions, on account of sub-tribal distinctions maintained among themselves. The names given to these tribes, by Turner, are those used by the Eskimo of Ungava Bay. The first sub-division includes all those dwelling along the Atlantic coast and along the south shore of Hudson Strait to the mouth of the Leaf River, a few miles northward of the mouth of the Koksoak River. These people call themselves Suhinimyut, "those who dwell at or in the sun," or the dwellers in the east. The second sub-division embraces the Eskimo dwelling along the south shore of Hudson Strait, between Leaf River and Cape Wolstenholme, at the entrance to Hudson Bay. These people are called the Tahagmyut, "dwellers in the shade," or the western people. By the Hudson's Bay Company they are known as "Northerners." The third sub-division includes those living along the east coast of Hudson Bay, and they are designated the Itivimyut, or "the dwellers on the other side." A fourth division may be made of the Eskimo of the outer islands of Hudson Bay, who, according to the traders and missionaries, differ from their neighbours along the coast, both in language and customs. They are known as the Kigiktagmyut, or "Island people." Along the Atlantic coast, as far north as Hopedale, few or none of the Eskimo are pure blooded. To the northward the Moravian missionaries keep the natives from contact with the whites, and in consequence there are very few of mixed blood. In Ungava Bay and on Hudson Bay there are, around the Hudson's Bay posts, many half-breeds, the result of marriage between the employees and Eskimo women.

Physique.

The natives along the Atlantic coast, from Hopedale to Nachvak, have long been under the direct influence of the Moravian missionaries, and, in consequence, have abandoned many of their ancient customs. Polygamy is no longer tolerated among them ; in many cases they conform with a fair standard of civilization, and are quite religious, although very superstitious.

Temperament.

On the coast of Hudson Bay, mainly through the endeavours of the Rev. Mr. Peck, of the Church Mission Society, most of the Eskimo have been converted to Christianity. On this coast the missionaries do not reside constantly among the natives, and in consequence these people are very liable to relapse, during their absence, into some of their former pagan habits. The Eskimo of Hudson Strait have not yet been brought under the influences of Christianity, and afford a better chance for the study of their native customs and traits.

It is customary to think of the Eskimo as considerably below the stature of the average European. This is not the case with those inhabiting the coasts of Labrador. The males, as a rule, are quite as tall as the average white man, but owing to their broad, heavy build, they appear shorter than they really are; and this appearance is enhanced by their wide garments of hairy deer or seal skins. Where seen by the writer on Hudson Bay, and at Fort Chimo, George River, Nachvak, Davis Inlet

Food. and Hamilton Inlet, several of the men at each place were six feet and upwards in height, the average height being about five feet six inches. The women, as a rule, are short and stout, and look in their native dress of deerskin coat, trousers and long seal boots, much shorter than they actually are.

The temperament of the Eskimo differs much from that of the Indian,

p. 2617

Trade. the former being jovial, good-natured and very industrious. They are good workers with tools, and on the Hudson Bay coast the blacksmiths confess that the natives, without the use of a forge, can work and temper iron better than they can. These people, living as they do on the coast, depend largely upon marine animals for food and clothing. Their principal food is seal meat, together with porpoise, whale meat and fish. Habitations. They also kill many caribou, to the north of the Koksoak River. For this purpose, they travel inland from the coast, but the pursuit of this animal is chiefly for its skin, used in clothing. The hunters quickly tire of the flesh, it being not fat enough to suit their taste. During the winter, they hunt fur, to purchase what supplies they may need from the traders. The principal furs taken by them are red, cross, black, white and blue foxes, white bears, wolves and wolverines, besides deer and seals. Boats. The Eskimo have not as many civilized wants as the Indians, the principal articles of trade taken in exchange for their furs being ammunition, tobacco, knives and iron, tea, sugar and needles. They do not buy much flour or biscuit, and very little European clothing.

With the exception of the Atlantic coast Eskimo, who live about the mission stations in small log houses, the summer camp is made much like an Indian wigwam, save that it has a ridge-pole, and is covered with seal-skins. During the winter, small circular snow houses are used. For travel during the summer, two kinds of boats are used, the kaiak or men's boat is long and narrow, and formed of a wooden frame covered with seal-skins, leaving only a small circular opening large enough to admit the body of a man. The bow is long and pointed and projects above the water forward, the stern is fuller, and much lower and rounder. This craft is for one man, who propels it with a double-bladed paddle, and it is used for hunting. In these small boats the islanders of Hudson Bay frequently cross some fifty miles of open water to the mainland.

Sleds. The umiak or women's boat is much larger, and like the former is made from seal-skins stretched on a wooden frame. In shape and size it resembles a deep, flat-bottomed punt, and is capable of carrying the heavy seal-skin tent and all the other belongings of a family, when moving from one place to another. In winter, dogs and sleds are used to travel with, the Eskimo not being nearly as good a walker as the Indian. The sleds are made of two runners of wood, from nine to eighteen feet long, held in position, from eighteen to twenty-four inches apart, by numerous cross pieces. The sled is shod during the cold winter months with walrus ivory or whalebone attached to Cooking utensils.

Disease. the runners with wooden pegs, or else the bottom of the runner is coated with vegetable mould, which is frozen on and then shaped with a knife or plane so as to resemble the head of a large T rail, both in shape and size. This is coated with a thin skin of ice and answers admirably during the cold unbroken winter. In the spring time, runners of hoop-iron are preferred. During the winter, cooking is carried on in the snow houses over soapstone lamps in the form of a shallow triangular dish, about fifteen inches long and eight inches wide. These dishes are nearly filled with seal oil, and the wick is formed of dry moss placed round the sides. Formerly soapstone kettles were used for cooking, but these are almost entirely superseded by tin or copper kettles purchased from the Hudson's Bay Company.

Children.

The habits of the uncivilized Eskimo are far from cleanly, and they appear to have a decided objection to the use of water except for drinking purposes. In consequence, the principal diseases from which they suffer arise from their filthy habits and the close vitiated atmosphere in their tightly closed houses, laden with the odours of decomposing animal food and other filth. Over half the Eskimo die of pulmonary troubles due to these causes and to exposure. Many suffer and die from scurvy, caused by devitalized blood and their excessively fatty food while remaining sedentary during the winter. As a rule, monogamy is practised, although many of the better hunters among the unchristianized natives have two and some three or four wives. The women are married early, generally at about fourteen or fifteen years and often before that age, and these early marriages result in few and weakly children. The marriage ceremony is very simple. The consent of the parents or other relatives of the girl is obtained by presents or favour, and, if the girl is favourable to the union, she goes with her husband. When the girl refuses, she is soon coerced by her relatives. The marriage tie is easily broken, and it is seldom that a man lives with a woman for a number of years. Jealousy, resulting from a laxity of morals or incompatibility of temper, dissolves the marriage without ceremony, the woman returning to her relations until taken by another man. The family is usually of two or three children, although there are sometimes eight or ten, but many die in childhood. Like the Indians, the Eskimo never inflict corporal punishment on their children, who without it early learn, however, to obey and respect their elders.

Beliefs.

Conjurors.

The dead are placed in a sitting position, with the knees drawn tightly up, and the whole body covered with seal-skin or deer-skin. The body is placed in this mannner on the bare rock, and is covered with stones to prevent the birds and animals getting at it.

Like the Indians, they believe in a future state, where the spiritual conditions closely resemble those of the material world. As every object is endowed with a spirit, clothing, spears, gun, kaiak and other articles, are deposited near the grave, so that the departed may use the spirits of these articles, in his new existence separated from the body. The spirits of material objects are supposed to be released as soon as they decay and if they are found removed, it is said, that the spirit of the dead has taken them for use in the spiritual world. All objects, animate or inanimate, have both a material and a spiritual existence ; and there are other spirits, mostly of a malignant character, which can be appeased by gifts.

It is easy to understand that, holding such beliefs, they highly esteem, fear and respect the conjurers, whom they suppose to have power over the various spirits, including those that cause disease and death. The conjurers also claim to influence the movements of the deer and other animals, and are supposed to control the weather. Unlike the Indian conjurer, who performs his incantations concealed in a small tent, his Eskimo confrère invokes and exorcises the malignant spirits openly, or with only his head covered up. Some of the Eskimo while away the time during winter, by making rude carvings out of walrus tusk or bear teeth. The carvings represent various birds and animals, or models of their boats, sleds, or implements. Some of the carvings show considerable skill and artistic taste, especially those made under the direction of the Moravian missionaries.

The Eskimo are very fond of singing, instrumental music and dancing, and readily learn to play the violin. At Hopedale and Nain the natives have orchestral music to accompany part singing in the church services, and many of the Eskimo of the Atlantic coast play second parts on the violin, showing that they have a fair idea of harmony.

* * * *

Hamilton Inlet is the present southern limit of the Eskimo on the Atlantic coast. There is now a little tribe of some half dozen families living in log houses on the shore of a cove called Carawalla at the head of Henrietta Island. A few more families are scattered along the shores of the lower half of the inlet. They are in a state of semi-civilization, having adopted European dress, and all talk more or less English. They are poor and dependent on the fishery and seal hunt for a livelihood. The Hudson's Bay Company have two establishments on Hamilton Inlet; the larger, called Rigolet, is situated on the north shore at the narrows, about three miles above the entrance to Double Mer. This is the head-quarters of the Labrador Coast, or Esquimaux Bay district, the officer in charge having under his care the posts of Cartwright on Sandwich Bay, of Northwest River at the mouth of that stream, as well as those of Davis Inlet, and of Nachvak, both situated on the coast to the northward.

The post at Rigolet consists of about a dozen houses and stores, and trade for fur and fish is carried on with the Eskimo and "planters." The trade of the post at Northwest River is made with the " planters " living about the upper part of the inlet, and with the Indians, who hunt in the country drained by the Hamilton and Northwest rivers, as well as with those hunting to the southward in the Mealy Mountains. A Roman Catholic chapel was erected some years ago near this post, and a missionary priest from the St. Lawrence used annually to visit the Indians there, during the summer. These visits, it is understood, are no longer to be made, the Indians being advised to go instead to Mingan, or other posts on the St. Lawrence, to meet the missionaries. All the Indians of the region profess Christianity, and are very careful to keep all the observances of the church, even when far inland, but their beliefs seem to be inextricably mixed up with their older pagan ideas, and often their views on subjects of religion are very curious.

The Indians frequenting Northwest River post are probably the most miserable and ill-conditioned in Labrador. Being deer hunters, and consequently depending largely on the caribou, both for food and clothing, they have little inclination to trap fur-bearing animals and thus improve their condition by trade. As their wants are mainly confined to tea, tobacco, powder and shot, and some few articles of clothing, a small amount of hunting only is necessary to provide their price, and beyond this, except for the labour of following the deer, or fishing, they do nothing, spending much of their time lounging about their tents. They will not work, even when offered very high pay, and when asked so to do, simply laugh and say they are not hungry. They are so improvident that they never lay in a stock of fish in the autumn, as the Indians to the westward do, and when during the winter, from some cause or other, they fail to find the caribou, they are soon reduced to starvation, and many die.

These Indians belong in part to both the Montagnais and Nascaupee tribes. The former tribe hunts between Hamilton Inlet and the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the latter to the west and north-west of Hamilton Inlet. No great physical difference can be observed between these tribes; if there is any, the Nascaupees appear to be slightly taller and less robustly built than the Montagnais. They talk different dialects of the Cree language, but the difference is so slight, that they converse freely together, and understand one another quite readily. The name Nascaupee in the Montagnais dialect signifies "the ignorant ones" and is given on account of their lack of knowledge in regard to the works and ways of civilization, owing to their want of communication with the outside world.

CHAPTER VII.THE INDIANS.

BY WILLIAM B. CABOT.

The Indians of Labrador are all of the family stock known to ethnology as the Algonquian, which in its day occupied a vast area of the continent. From the Carolinas to the Eskimo shores of Hudson's Strait and from the Atlantic to the Mississippi and far to the northwest, the maps of the present day are dotted with the place-names of one group or another of this vanishing family.

* * * *

The northern groups are closely related. The Montagnais, or mountaineers, of the southern Labrador talk easily with the Nascaupes of the northern and eastern Crees; these latter in turn with others to the west, and so on to the Rocky Mountains. The differences are only of dialect. To the southward it is otherwise; the St. Lawrence marks so distinct a division of language that existing tribes cannot converse in Indian; and as observed by the writer upon the meeting of a Montagnais with an Abnaki acquaintance on the winter trail, conversation must proceed in some foreign language—in this instance in French. The Indians of Labrador estimate that as many as half of the people speak no language but their own. The presence of white blood is largely evident in the southwest, adjacent to the settlements and the upper gulf; and many who are counted Indians might, but for the saving effect of a hunting life inland, be reckoned as white rather than red.

Low writes:—

“ The most northern tribe has a tradition that their people originally lived far to the south, and it is probable that they were driven northward from the country about the St. Lawrence by the Iroquois, about the time of the first settlement of Canada, by the French. There are many traditions about these wars among the northern Indians, and it is surprising to what distances the Iroquois followed them, into the middle of Labrador, and up the east coast of Hudson Bay to the neighbourhood of the mouth of the Big River in north lat. 54°. As the Crees retreated before the Iroquois, they in turn displaced the Eskimo, who at one time occupied the eastern and southern portions of the peninsula as far as Eskimo Bay on the Gulf of St. Lawrence and all the territory about Hudson Bay. These wars terminated when the Eskimo became supplied with firearms, and are now traditions of the distant past ; but the memories still live, and the Eskimo and Indians, although never engaging in open hostilities, have a mutual hatred and never inter-marry.

p. 2622

The northern Indians still regard with fear the descendants of the once fierce Iroquois, and their name is used to frighten children.”

* * * *

Occasional association with modern operations along the nearer borders has not much changed the inland life of the people. The interior is still an Indian possession, where no white man makes his home, and the only law is the immemorial code of lodge and hunting-ground. The whole inland, and indeed almost all the coasts, remains given over to the hunting life.

The Indians, always diminishing in numbers, may be reckoned at some three or four thousand at the present time. Of these the Montagnais, who are all tributary to Gulf or Saguenay trading-stations, make up more than half. It is difficult to arrive at a census of such a wandering people, for in one year and another some of them appear successively upon coasts remotely apart. The lists of names at such far-distant trading-stations are rarely compared with each other, while the names of the Indians are somewhat subject to change, and at best are not always easy to identify.

About the great lakes of the central area the people meet as may happen during the hunting season, and exchange their unwritten news; slight, indeed, is the occurrence, from side to side of the country, which escapes those lodge-fire gatherings. Families hidden here and there in remote valleys may wait for their news, perforce, until late in the spring, when at various rendezvous they group together for the down-river voyages ; or even until the summer meeting on the reserve, where all subjects have their final review ; but on the far lake levels of the high interior, the hunting-place of the strong and skilful, their network of communication is seldom broken. There about the central area, gather the rivers which flow to the four coasts, and there the people converge. In the words of John Bastian of Pointe Bleue, “ At Kaniapishkau you meet Indians from all shores.”

Almost all the Montagnais families leave their hunting-grounds when the fur becomes poor—technically, “ Common ”—in the spring. About the last of the fur-hunting comes with the bear-hunt, late in May, when the snow has settled down and the bears begin to move about after their winter's sleep. By the last of June the people are gathered upon the reserves along the Gulf and on the Saguenay. Sometimes a family remains inland two years for some reason, most often because of a light neighbour usually takes down what skins there may be, and brings up purchases accordingly in the fall.

* * * *

Near Bersimis, some two hundred and twenty miles below Quebec, three large rivers converge to the coast, and all receive their customary families in the fall. The Maniquagan is the chief of these, being ascended during recent years by as many as seventy families. Near and parallel with this is the more difficult Outardes River, named by the Indians Pletipi, “Partridge-water,” from its chief lake. Many of its hunters ascend the Maniquagan some two hundred miles to the lakes, and cross to their own river by a toilsome portage route. A few pass directly up the Outardes. With the burden of provisions now necessary to the hunting of these rivers, the way up such a difficult stream as the Pletipi becomes peculiarly hard. Still, for these people, whatever their age or condition, there is little choice, inland they must go, to their own lands.

* * * *

In a country of such scanty resources and physical obstacles, these movements, involving the young and the feeble, could not be undertaken but for the intimate local knowledge of the people. Most of the Indians are actually born upon hunting-lands, handed down from their ancestors, and at an early age each knows his own ground as the farmer boy knows his father's farm. He has made the yearly passage of his river, down and back, from infancy. High water or low, he knows its every eddy and turn. As to an inn ahead, he plans his day's travel to some fishing pool or lake; or to the blueberry lands, where will be berries surely, and bears perhaps. He camps in no chance place, but where the beach is clean, the bank not too high or steep, where wood and boughs and water are to hand, and always, when may be, where the view is sightly and wide. Thus he continues his way, every resource of the barren land made his. Illness and death sometimes befall, want and misfortune tax too often the fortitude of this ever disciplined race, but sooner or later the plateau level is gained, the lake region begins, and the portages along the narrowing streams become short and easy. The great falls are behind, their jarring thunder fades in time from the ear; the roar of the long rapids is over ; the shut-in river valley has given place to the broad sunshine of the table-land. Well content are they who have safely come. The long toil is over; they are glad to be away from the reserve; above all, they are once more upon the blue lakes of their own hunting-ground.

Along the Gulf the principal trading-stations are Bersimis, Seven Islands, Mingan, and St. Augustine. From Seven Islands the Moisie is the main high-way to the interior, and several of its families make their hunts within two hundred miles of Ungava, on eastern branches of the George. Nearly parallel with the Moisie is the St. Marguerite, or Tshimanipishtuk. Its principal western branch interlocks with the Maniquagan. The network of Indian travel about and far beyond the heads of these rivers is interminable.

p. 2624

From the Gulf near Mingan, the hunters ascend the St. John, pass a difficult high portage to the Romaine, and proceed toward the Grand Falls region of the Hamilton. They know the lower Hamilton as the Winikapau Shiba, or “River of Willows,” and the falls as Pitshetonau, “It steams,” from the column of white vapour which is seen from a distance. Low gives the tradition of two maidens swept over the falls, who spend their time behind the falls dressing skins. The lower part of the Romaine is not navigated, and is perhaps unknown to the Indians of the present day. Its Indian name “Alimun,” meaning difficult, has passed through a rearrangement of sounds unusual in the adjusting of Indian names to French organs of speech. From “L'Alimun” to “La Romaine” the transition is easy, surprisingly so, considering that no less a feat is involved than the introduction of the full rolling r into a language which has not the r-sound at all.

* * * *

Eastward from Mingan the people travel the Natashquan, St. Augustine, and Eskimo Rivers. Their lands are chiefly in the region between the Hamilton and the St. Lawrence. Southward from the Mealy Mountains of Hamilton Inlet and the Sandwich Bay coast lies an indefinite, unmapped area of high territory, partly barren, where large lakes supply the rough rivers passing north, east, and south. In winter, white or Eskimo-white hunters penetrate one or two hundred miles into this area. The Hamilton River also is hunted by the shore people. These go up in the fall in boats, returning on snow. The inland life of these shore-dwelling hunters is as little like that of the Indians as well may be. Their winter method is to take what supplies can be hauled on sleds by hand, set traps along their route, the length of which is determined somewhat by snow conditions, and take up the catch of fur on their return march. They are known as “planters”; their occupation is “furring.” Cabins are built by some at strategic points, and these “tilts” may be taken as the sign of white blood in the land. The Indian, held to no base, uses the movable lodge only. The shore hunter is bound, his campaign limited, by his large dependence on transported provisions. If half-emancipated from, or better, only half-subjugated by, “the white man's burden,” he lacks yet the full inheritance, the ferity, which saves existence to the Indian born. The broad difference between the two, the fur catcher and the Indian, is that between hunting and the hunting life. The white man goes hunting, his family protected in his absence; the Indian, rarely separated from his family, takes the chances of the open for all.

During late years, few Indians have been regular visitors on the eastern coast of the peninsula. For convenience to themselves the Oblate Fathers have influenced the hunters who formerly traded at Hamilton Inlet to make the long journey to Seven Islands. Irregularly a few northern Indians from George River have visited Davis Inlet post, as few as three coming down in one or two recent summers. The northern group turns rather toward Chimo on Ungava Bay. In winter some numbers of the northern group may come to the east coast, but they do not bring their families unless under pressure of starvation, and their stay is brief. The number of lodges on the eastern side of the country depends on the movements of the caribou. These vary rather widely in the course of their migration, the main herd sometimes remaining south a year or two at a time. As already noted, a number of Montagnais families from Seven Islands hunt near the upper George River nearly west from Hopedale. The height of land there is one hundred to one hundred and fifty miles from the coast. All, or nearly all, of these families make the long journey to Seven Islands at intervals, going usually by the Upper Hamilton, Ashwanipi Lake, and the Moisie. Rather regularly some of these make a visit to the east coast in winter, and sometimes in summer.

In the northern district, tributary to Fort Chimo, there are some forty or fifty families, according to Peter McKenzie. A certain number of Indians from Whale River also come to Chimo more or less regularly, perhaps more often to Fort George or other posts on Hudson Bay. These probably belong to the division mentioned by Low in his large Labrador report as the coastal Indians of Hudson Bay. Their dialect is not very easy for the other Indians to understand, probably from its Ojibway affinities. Those who come to Chimo are strong, active people, proud of their large hunts and of the long journeys they make to the coast. They look down a little on the Chimo Indians, many of whom hunt comparatively near by. The eastern Nascaupees, in particular, are not very ambitious either in fur hunting or travel. The caribou supply nearly all their wants, so that not much effort is required to get fur enough to pay for what else they require. Indians do not enter the wide peninsula to the west of Ungava, which is Eskimo ground so far as occupied. From Koksoak River to Hudson Bay the respective areas covered by the two races are separated approximately by the line of the Nastapoka and Larch rivers, which constitute a route surveyed by Low, and pursued by Mr. and Mrs. Tasker, of Philadelphia, in 1906.

Formerly some of the southern Indians came up Northwest River and hunted on its upper waters and those of rivers flowing eastward into the Atlantic. Their country, poor at best, suffered by fire; fish were small; the caribou more and more uncertain. Finding that the deer summered in the unoccupied lake country south of the Nascaupees and west of Hopedale, they adopted that region and gave up the difficult Northwest River route. Having changed their trading-point to Seven Islands, the easier route by the upper Hamilton and Lake Michikamau was very direct. The number of these families varies from half a dozen to as many as fifteen or more. Their summer route finally reaches the east coast by the Notaquanón (“ Porcupine-hunting-place ”) River.

In winter, they can traverse the country without much reference to watercourses. The camps are in sheltered places, where there are trees enough to protect from the wind, and are almost always near water. The ice becomes too thick to be cut through easily, but whenever there is much weight of snow, the water comes over the ice in places near shore, and does not freeze when blanketed with ten or twelve inches of light snow. Such water can be cleared of slush by very little warming over the fire. In default of water, chopped ice melts much better than snow, which the people avoid. They prefer to work hard for twenty to thirty minutes chopping a hole, rather than bother to melt down an uncompacting mass of cold porous snow. They rarely, if ever, drink ice-cold water, but warm it a few degrees, even building a special fire for this purpose when travelling. In this, as in most other race peculiarities, they find their opposite in their Eskimo neighbours, who are said to eat snow and swallow frozen food with only the happiest consequences.

For winter travel, most of the people now use sheet-iron stoves a foot square and about two feet long. The snow is tramped level with the snowshoes, the tent raised and boughs laid ; then the stove is placed on four stakes which are driven some three feet into the snow, and serve as legs. Such a stove will burn almost any small wood, and in a country where good wood is scarce, will save much time and labour in heavy chopping and shovelling snow, besides enabling the traveller to camp almost anywhere and not have to go more than a mile or two out of his course to get good wood.

The Indians at Nichicun are classed by Low as Western Nascaupees. Only thirteen families traded at the post at the time of his visit. Other families in the neighbourhood go to the Gulf with their furs. Living near the geographical centre and apex of the plateau, they naturally hunt not far from Nichicun ("Otter-place") Lake. They live almost wholly on the country. Few deer are taken there, and while fish are generally plentiful, the margin of subsistence is uncomfortably narrow. All the able-bodied men go to Rupert House in summer with the brigade, while the women keep the nets out in lakes near the post. The return journey from Rupert takes about sixty days. Sometimes the start downward is made before the ice has left the lakes, but, although the stay at Rupert is only a few days, the upper lakes are sometimes frozen again before their arrival at Nichicun.

For some years Nichicun has been the only inland post in the whole peninsula, unless Mistassini, in the extreme southwest, be reckoned. The up voyage of the Mistassini brigade takes about fifty days. The lower part of its route, in common with that to Nichicun, follows Rupert River. There are seventy-five portages between Rupert and Mistassini.

The thirty families who trade at Mistassini are also counted as Nascaupees. All the Indians known by this name are properly Swampy Crees. Those at Chimo say that they came originally from southwest of Hudson Bay to get away from the Iroquois.

The hunting-lands are held by individual hunters, and are passed down from one generation to another by customs of inheritance similar to our own. The hunting naturally descends upon some man of active age; if a daughter is married, the young husband may succeed to the lands. Surviving parents, or even more distant relatives, have, by common right, their place in the lodge. In fact, all must be taken care of in some way, in one lodge or another; about the hunters group the dependent ones, widows and orphans and incapacitated; none is denied his right.

p. 2627

Infringements upon each other's hunting-grounds are probably no more frequent than the cutting of timber on another's land in civilization. The restraint of Indians in such matters is far beyond that of more advanced races. In passing across another's ground, which may take some days, the traveller has the right to take enough game for subsistence, but not to hunt for, nor to accumulate a stock of provisions.

* * * *

The people who descend the Moisie in the summer gather at Sandgirt Lake on the Hamilton, apparently for the mere sake of seeing each other, and they keep together as may be until their final separation in the fall for their individual lands. Something of an inland trade used to be done among the people, and doubtless survives still. A Seven Islands hunter would give fur to a Bersimis man at some rendezvous, and each would go his way. Months later, in the fall, one of the fine canoes for which Bersimis is known would be passed in return at some appointed place. A similar trade in canvas canoes goes on between the Gulf Indians and the Nascaupees, whose country furnishes no canoe bark.

Rolls of canoe bark are still sold at some of the northern posts of the Hudson's Bay Company, being imported from more southern districts, along with other merchandise. Nevertheless, the supply has been insufficient for some years and often of poor quality; while by some unnecessary neglect the northern posts have been short even of canvas. With the full supply of the latter laid in recently along the farther coasts, the almost distressing situation of the Indians is at last relieved.

During the period of open water there is practically no foot travel. Some of the hunting-grounds, however, cannot be reached otherwise, and these are unoccupied until late. Mistinik, for instance, is reached by sleds from as far as the lakes of the Maniquagan, only two hundred miles from the Gulf, where the canoes are laid up and a stay made until winter sets in and the foot travel comes on.

All in all, the life of these people remains singularly unchanged. It may be doubted whether another such survival of the purely primitive hunter, at the same time of so high a personality, as that of the savage of temperate America, is to be found in any part of the world. The caribou are to them what the buffalo were to the Indians of the plains. So long as continue the migrations, the old-time ways will prevail.

* * * *

The religion of the country is professedly almost wholly Christian. The people trading around Hudson Bay are Protestants, while all the Montagnais are Catholics, cared for spiritually by the various missions of the Gulf and the Saguenay.

INTRODUCTION.

Ungava bay is on the northern coast of old Labrador—the last great bight of the strait between the ocean and the mouth of Hudson bay. Its chief affluent is Koksoak or South river, which is several hundred miles long and takes its rise in a picturesque festoonery of lakes looped through the high-lands half way down to Quebec. . .

Fort Chimo is the chief trading station of the Ungava district. The Ungava district proper is the area embraced by the watershed whose outflow drains into Ungava bay. The eastern boundary is formed by the foothills on the west side of the coast range, which is the western limit of Labrador. This range has a trend northwest and south-east to latitude 60°, where it makes a somewhat abrupt angle and pursues a nearly north course, terminating with Cape Chidley and the Buttons, the latter a low group of islets some 7 miles north of the cape. The southern boundary is the “Height of Land,” near latitude 55°. This region is estimated to be from 1,000 to 3,000 feet above sea level. The greater portion of it is comparatively level, and on its surface are innumerable lakes of various sizes, some of which are quite large. The western boundary is not so well known in the southern part of the region, as it has been seldom traversed. It seems to be a high elevation extending toward the north-northwest, as numerous streams run from the southwest and west toward the central or Koksoak valley. Eskimo who have traversed the region many times report that the elevated land abruptly ends near 58° 30′, and that there is formed a wide swampy tract, estimated to be about 80 miles wide, which opens to the northeast and southwest. The north-western portion of the district is a great area abounding in abrupt hills and precipitous mountains of various heights. These heights, estimated to range no higher than 2,600 feet terminate abruptly on the western end of the strait, and the numerous islands in that portion of the water are, doubtless, peaks of this same range continuing to the northwest.

It will be thus seen that the district of Ungava is high amphitheatre opening to the north. The interior of the district is excessively varied by ridges and spurs of greater or less elevation. The farther south one travels, the higher and more irregularly disposed are the hills and mountains. These spurs are usually parallel to the main ranges, although isolated spurs occur which extend at right angles to the main range. The tops of the higher elevations are covered with snow for the entire year. The summits of the lower ones are shrouded with snow as early as the 1st of September, and by the 1st of October the snow line descends nearly to their bases. The lower lands are full of swampy tracts, lakes, and ponds. . .

ANIMAL LIFE.

MAMMALS.

The marine mammals alone appear to be well known, but the number of cetaceans can certainly be increased above the number usually reported inhabiting the waters immediately bordering upon the region.

The phocids are best known for the reason that off the shores of southeast Labrador the pursuit of species of this family is carried on each spring to an extent probably surpassing that anywhere else on the face of the globe.

At the mouth of Little Whale river, the white whale is taken to the number of 500 each year, although the capture is steadily decreasing. The Indians here do the greater part of the labor of driving, killing, flaying and preserving them. At Fort Chimo another station for the pursuit of white whales is carried on. Here the Eskimo do the driving and killing, while the Indians perform the labor of removing the blubber and rendering it fit for the oil tanks into which it is placed to put it beyond the action of the weather. The skin of the white whale is tanned and converted into a leather of remarkably good quality, especially noted for being nearly waterproof.

Of the land mammals, the reindeer is probably the most abundant of all. It is found in immense numbers in certain localities, and forms for many of the inhabitants the principal source of subsistence, while to nearly all the residents its skins are absolutely necessary to protect them from the severity of the winter.

The black, white and brown bears are common enough in their respective areas. The former rarely ranges beyond the woodlands, never being found so far north as Fort Chimo. The white bear is common in the northern portions bordering the sea and is occasionally found as far south as the strait of Belleisle, to which it has been carried on icebergs or fields of ice. Akpatok island and the vicinity of Cape Chidley are reported to be localities infested with these brutes. The brown or barren-ground bear appears to be restricted to a narrow area and is not plentiful, yet is common enough to keep the Indian in wholesome dread of its vicious disposition when enraged.

The smaller mammals occur in greater or less abundance according to the quality and quantity of food to be obtained.

The wolves, foxes, and wolverines are pretty evenly distributed throughout the region. The hares are found in the wooded tracts for the smaller species and on the barren regions for the larger species. .

THE NATIVE INHABITANTS OF THE COUNTRY — GENERAL SKETCH.

THE ESKIMO.

The northern portions of the coast of the region under consideration are inhabited by the Eskimo, who designate themselves, as usual, by the term “Innuits,” people (plural of innuk, “a person”). That they have been much modified by contact with the whites is not to be doubted, and it is equally certain that their language is constantly undergoing modifications to suit the purposes of the missionary and trader, who, not being able to pronounce the difficult guttural speech of these people, require them to conform to their own pronunciation. The region inhabited by the Innuits is strictly littoral. Their distribution falls properly into three subdivisions, due to the three subtribal distinctions which they maintain among themselves. The first sub-division embraces all the Innuits dwelling on the Labrador coast proper and along the south side of Hudson strait to the mouth of Leaf river, which flows into Ungava Bay.

These people apply the term Su hi ni myut to themselves and are thus known by the other sub-divisions. This term is derived from Su hi nuk, the sun, and the latter part of the word, meaning people (literally “those that dwell at or in”); hence, people of the sun, sunny side, because the sun shines on them first. At the present time these people are confined to the seashore and the adjacent islands, to which they repair for seals and other food. South of Hamilton inlet I could learn of but one of these people.

The Innuits of pure blood do not begin to appear until the missionary station of Hopedale is reached. Here a number of families dwell, although mostly at the instigation of the missionaries. Between this station and Hebron are several other Moravian missionary stations, at each of which dwell a greater or less number of pure Innuits. North of Hebron to Cape Chidley there are but few families, some seven in all, embracing a population of less than 40 souls. On the west side of Cape Chidley, as far as the mouth of George's river, only about eight families live. These with the George's river Innuits comprise less than 50 individuals. There is a stretch of coast bordering Ungava bay, from George's river to the Koksoak river, which is uninhabited.

The Koksoak river people include only four or five families and number less than 30 souls. The next people are those dwelling at the mouth of Leaf river, but they are more properly to be considered under the next subdivision.

The exact number of the Suhinimyut could not be definitely determined.

p. 2631

They are subdivided into a number of small communities, each bearing a name compounded of the name of their home and myut, "the people of."

The inhabitants of Cape Chidley are known as Ki lin ig myut, from the word ki lin ik, wounded, cut, incised, lacerated; hence, serrated, on account of the character of the rough rocks and mountains.

The natives of George's river are known as Kan guklúa luksoagmyut; those of the Koksoak river are known as Koksoagmyut.

The second subdivision includes the Inuit dwelling on the area lying between the mouth of the Leaf river, thence northward, and along the south side of Hudson strait. Their western and southern limit extends to about latitude 60°.

These Inuit are known by the other subdivisions as Ta hag myut. They apply the same term to themselves. The word is derived from Tá hak, a shadow; hence people of the shade or shadow as distinguished from the Su hi ni myut, or people of the light or sunshine. These people are but little influenced by contact with the white traders, who apply to them the term "Northerners." Their habits and customs are primitive, and many appear to be entirely distinct from the customs of their neighbors south and east. Huge mountain spurs and short ranges ramify in every direction, forming deep valleys and ravines, along which these people must travel to reach the trading station of Fort Chimo of the Ungava district, or else to Fort George of the Moose district.

The distance to the former is so great that only three, four, or five sledges are annually sent to the trading post for the purpose of conveying the furs and other more valuable commodities to be bartered for ammunition, guns, knives, files and other kinds of hardware, and tobacco. Certain persons are selected from the various camps who have personally made the trip and know the trail. These are commissioned to barter the furs of each individual for special articles, which are mentioned and impressed upon the mind of the man who is to effect the trade. The principal furs are those of the various foxes. Among them are to be found the best class of silver foxes, and wolverines and wolves. Those to be sent are procured the previous winter, and when the snow falls in November or early December the line of sleds starts out for the trading post. The sled which represents the wants of the more western of these Inuit speeds to where the second may be, and they repair to the place of meeting with the third, and thus by traversing the line of coast the arctic caravan is made up. Provisions are supplied by the wayside, and when all is in readiness a southern course is travelled until the frozen morasses on the south of the hills are reached. Thence the course is toward Leaf river and across to Fort Chimo. By the last week of April or the first week of May the visitors are expected at the trading post. They usually bring with them about two-fifths of all the furs obtained in the district; indeed, the quantity often exceeds this amount. They seldom remain longer than the time needed to complete their bartering, as the rapidly melting snow warns them that each day of delay adds to their labor in returning.

The homeward journey is more frequently made along the coast, as there the snow is certain to remain longer upon the ground. It is not infrequent that these travellers experience warm weather, which detains them so long that they do not reach the end of their journey until the middle of summer or even until the beginning of the next winter. Many of the Inuit who accompany these parties have never seen white men until they arrive at Fort Chimo; women are often of the party. These people are usually tall and of fine physique. The men are larger than the average white man, while the women compare favorably in stature with the women of medium height in other countries.

p. 2632

They have quite different customs from those of their present neighbors. Their language is dialectically distinct ; about as much so as the Malimyut differ from the Kaviagmyut of Norton Sound, Alaska. The Tahagmyut have a rather harsh tone; their gutturals are deeper and the vowels usually rather more prolonged. . . .

The third subdivision comprises the Inuit dwelling on the eastern shore of Hudson bay, between latitudes 53° and 58°.

The number of these Inuit could not be definitely ascertained, as they trade, for the most part, at Fort George, belonging to the Moose district. Each year, however, a party of less than a dozen individuals journey to Fort Chimo for the purpose of bartering furs and other valuables. Those who come to Fort Chimo are usually the same each year. In language they differ greatly from the Koksoak Inuit, inasmuch as their speech is very rapid and much harsher. Many of the words are quite dissimilar, and even where the word has the same sound it is not unusual that it has a meaning more or less different from that used by the Koksoak Inuit. As these people have been long under the advice and teachings of the missionary society of London, it is to be expected that they, especially those nearer the trading station, are more or less influenced by its teachings. Their customs differ somewhat from the other Inuit, though this is due in a great measure to the impossibility of procuring the necessary food, and skins for garments, unless they are constantly scouring the plains and hills for reindeer or the shore for seals and other marine creatures.

These people are called by their neighbors and themselves I'tivi'myut. I'ti'vuk signified the other, farther, distant side (of a portion of land) ; hence, the word Itivimyut means people of the other side. The northern Itivimyut are probably the most superstitious of all the Innuït dwelling in the region under consideration. . . .

In former years the Innuït extended entirely around the shore of Hudson Bay. Now there is a very wide gap, extending from the vicinity of Fort George, on the eastern coast, to the vicinity of Fort Churchill, on the western coast. At the present time the Innuït occupy the areas designated in these remarks. That they formerly extended along the Atlantic coast far to the south of their present limit is attested by an abundance of facts.

The Innuït of the eastern shore of Hudson bay, the Itivimyut, informed me that the Innuït dwelling on the islands of Hudson bay, more or less remote from the mainland to the east, are termed Ki'giktag'myut, or island people.

They relate that those islanders have quite different customs from the mainland people, inasmuch as their clothing consists of the skins of seals and dogs, rarely of reindeer skins, as the latter are procurable only when one of their number comes to the shore to trade for such articles as cannot be obtained on his locality. The spear, kaiak, bow and arrow are used, and they have but little knowledge of firearms. These people are represented as often being driven to greatest extremity for food. It is said that their language differs considerably from that of their neighbors.

THE INDIANS.

The Indian inhabitants of this region may be divided into three groups, differing but slightly in speech, and even less in habits.

(1) The Mountaineers, “ Montagnais ” of the early Jesuit missionaries, roam over the areas south of the Hamilton inlet and as far as the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Their western limits are imperfectly known. They trade at all the stations along the accessible coast. Many of them barter at Rigolet and Northwest river.

In customs they differ little from the Indians to the north of them. Their means of subsistence are the flesh of reindeer, porcupines, and various birds, such as geese, ducks, ptarmigan, and grouse.

The habits of the reindeer in this portion of the country are very erratic. They are often absent from large tracts for several years, and appearing in abundance when little expected. The scarcity of the reindeer renders the food supply quite precarious; hence, the Indians rely much upon the flesh of the porcupine, hare and birds for their principal food.

Their clothing is of the tanned skin of the deer, when they are able to procure it. As nearly all the skins of the reindeer are used for garments, few are prepared for other purposes; hence the northern stations (Fort Chimo) furnish great numbers of these skins in the parchment condition to be purchased by the Mountaineers, who cut them into fine lines for snowshoe netting and other purposes.

They procure the furs of marten, mink, fur beaver, muskrats, lynxes, wolverines, wolves and foxes. A considerable number of black bears are also obtained by these Indians. By the barter of these furs they procure the articles made necessary by the advent of the white people among them. They are quiet and peaceable. Many of them profess a regard for the teachings of the Roman missionaries, who have visited them more or less frequently for over a hundred and fifty years. I was unable to obtain the term by which they distinguish themselves from their neighbors. That they are later comers in the region than the Inuit is attested by the bloody warfare formerly carried on between them, of which many proofs yet exist. The Mountaineers applied to the more northern Indians the term of reproach, "Naskopie." This word denotes the contempt the Mountaineers felt for the Naskopies when the latter failed to fulfil their promise to assist in driving the Inuit from the country.

It was impossible to obtain a satisfactory estimate of the numbers of the Mountaineers. My stay in their vicinity was too short to learn as much about them as was desired.

(2) The Indians dwelling to the southwest of the Ungava district differ rather more than the Mountaineers, in their speech, from the Indians of the Ungava district. They average, for both sexes, slightly taller than the Naskopies. The men are spare, and have small limbs and extremities. The cheek bones are also more prominent, although this is partly due to the thin visage. The women are disposed to be stout, and in the older women there is a decided tendency to corpulence. The complexion, too is considerably darker. The men wear long hair, usually cut so as to fall just upon the shoulders. The hair of the women is quite heavy, and is worn either in braids or done up in folds upon the side of the head. . . .

(3) The third division of Indians includes those dwelling for the most part in the Ungava district. The total number of these Indians is about 350. They apply the term Ne né not—true, ideal men—to themselves, although known by the epithet Naskopie, which was applied to them by the Mountaineers of the southeastern portion of the region.

They differ slightly in customs from their neighbors, but their speech is somewhat different, being very rapidly uttered and with most singular inflections of the voice. A conversation may be begun in the usual tone, and in a moment changed to that of a whining or petulant child. It is impossible for the white man to imitate this abrupt inflection, which appears to be more common among the males than the females. . . .

THE NENENOT OR "NASKOPIE."

The Indians of the Ungava district are locally known as Naskopie, a term of reproach applied to them by the mountaineers (the Montagnais of the early Jesuit missionaries) during the earlier days when the former acted falsely in one of their concerted struggles with the Eskimo of the eastern coast.

The name given to themselves is Nenenot, a word meaning true, or ideal 30 red men. To the west of these people dwell a branch of the tribe along the east shore of Hudson bay. To the southeast dwell the mountaineers.

The western people differ greatly in customs and many words of their language from the Nenenots. The mountaineers differ but little in their customs, and only in speech as much as would be expected from the different locality in which they dwell.

These three tribes have distinct boundaries, beyond which they seldom wander. Of late years, however, a gradual influx of the western people has poured into the Ungava district, due to the decrease of the food supply along that portion of the eastern coast of Hudson bay.

The Nenenots appear, from the best information I could obtain on the subject, to have been driven to their present location during the wars waged against them by the Iroquois in times long gone by and remembered only in tradition.

p. 2635

They assert that their original home was in a country to the west, north of an immense river, and toward the east lay an enormous body of salt water. The former was supposed to be the St. Lawrence river and the latter to be Hudson bay. When they came to their present place they say that they found Eskimo alone, and these only along the coast. They are a branch of the Cree stock, as their language clearly indicates.

Many years ago war was waged upon them by the people whose name is remembered with terror even to this day. Most cruel atrocities were perpetrated, and in despair they fled from the land of their fathers, where they had lived as a numerous people, and were pursued by their merciless foes until but a remnant reached what is now known as the "Height of Land."

Being now driven to a strange land, where they found numerous Eskimo on all sides, only a few years elapsed before they encroached too greatly upon the land which the Eskimo had always held. Contention and struggles arose, culminating in a disposition to fight, and in the course of time desultory warfare carried on by single combat or organized raids. This lasted for many years, even after the advent of the white men as traders along the coast. Some of the battles were attended with great slaughter on both sides. The Eskimo seldom ventured far from the coast on their raids, but fought bravely when attacked on their own ground. In most instances they outwitted the Indians by decoying them into ambush, and killing great numbers of them. Within the present century they have been more peaceably disposed toward each other. Since the arrival of the white men at various points along the coast these troubles have ceased, and the Indians and Eskimo are now on intimate terms ; not that either party have any special regard for the new comers, but they have a mutual fear of each other, and the white man now engages their entire attention.

THE NASCOPIES—THEIR RELIGION, MANNERS AND COMMUNITY OF GOODS.

The Indians inhabiting the interior of Ungava, or, it may be said with equal propriety, the interior of Labrador, are a tribe of the Cree nation designated Nascopies, and numbering about one hundred men able to bear arms. Their language, a dialect of the Cree or Cristeneau, exhibits a considerable mixture of Sauteux words, with a few peculiar to themselves. . .

Of all the Indians I have seen, the Nascopies seem most averse to locomotion; many of them grow up to man's estate without once visiting a trading post. Previously to the establishment of this post they were wont to assemble at a certain rendezvous in the interior, and deliver their furs to some elderly man of the party, who proceeded with them to the King's posts, or Esquimaux Bay, and traded them for such articles as they required. So little intercourse have this people had with the whites, that they may be still considered as unsophisticated “children of nature,” and possessed, of course, of all the virtues ascribed to such; yet I must say, that my acquaintance with them disclosed nothing that impressed me with a higher opinion of them than of my own race, corrupted as they are by the arts of civilized life. . . .

The Nascopies depend principally on the reindeer for subsistence,—a dependence which the erratic habits of these animals render extremely precarious. Should they happen to miss the deer on their passage through the country in autumn, they experience the most grievous inconvenience, and often privations, the succeeding winter; as they must then draw their living from the lakes, with unremitting toil,—boring the ice, which is sometimes from eight to nine feet thick, for the purpose of setting their hooks, and perhaps not taking a single fish after a day's hard work. Nevertheless, they must still continue their exertions till they succeed, shifting their hooks from one part of the lake to another, until every spot is searched. They understand the art of setting nets under the ice perfectly. Towards the latter end of December, however, the fish gain the deep water, and remain still to the latter end of March. Not a fish enters the net during this period.

Partridges are very numerous in certain localities, but cannot be trusted to as a means of living, as every part of the country affords them food, and when much annoyed at one place they move off to another. . . .

As trading posts, however, are now established on their lands, I doubt not but artificial wants will, in time, be created, that may become as indispensable to their comfort as their present real wants. All the arts of the trader are exercised to produce such a result, and those arts never fail of ultimate success. Even during the last two years of my management, the demand for certain articles of European manufacture had greatly increased. . . .

The Esquimaux are so totally different in physiognomy and person, in language, manners, and customs, from all the other natives of America, that there can be no doubt that they belong to a different branch of the human race. The conformation of their features, their stature, form, and complexion, approximate so closely to those of the northern inhabitants of Europe, as to indicate, with some degree of certainty, their identity of origin. In the accounts I have read of the maritime Laplanders, I find many characteristics common to both tribes: the Laplander is of a swarthy complexion,—so is the Esquimaux ; the Laplander is distinguished by high cheek-bones, hollow cheeks, pointed chin, and large mouth,—so is the Esquimaux ; the Laplander wears a thick beard,—so does the Esquimaux; the Laplander's hair is long and black,—so is that of the Esquimaux; the Laplanders are, for the most part, short of stature,—so are the Esquimaux ; and the dress, food, and lodging of both peoples are nearly the same. The last coincidence may possibly arise from the similarity of location and climate ; and, taken by itself, would afford no certain proof of identity of origin; but taken in connexion with the aforesaid characteristics, I think the conclusion is irresistible that the Laplanders and Esquimaux are of the same race.

In manners, customs, and dress, there is a like similarity. The Esquimaux have ever remained a distinct people; the other natives of America seeming to consider them more as brutes than human beings, and never approaching them unless for the purpose of knocking them on the head. Every one's hand is against them. I have seen Esquimaux scalps, even among the timid têtes des boules of Temiscamingue ; yet no people seem more disposed to live at peace with their neighbours, if only they were allowed. Circumstanced as they are, however, they are likely to suffer hostile aggression for a long time. Even a coward, with a musket in his hand, is generally an overmatch for a brave man with only a bow or sling ; but once possessed of fire-arms, they will teach their enemies to respect them, for they will undoubtedly have the advantage of superior courage and resolution.

CHAPTER XXVII.

The country of the Nasquapees extends from Lake Mistassinni to the Atlantic coast of the Labrador Peninsula, a distance exceeding 800 miles. They occupy the table-land, and it is only lately that they have visited the coasts and shores of the Gulf and River St. Lawrence in considerable numbers. They make their way from the interior, chiefly by the Manicouagan, the St. Marguerite, the Trinity, and the Moisie rivers. . . . They speak a dialect of the Cree language, and can hold communication with the Montagnais without any difficulty. The men are tattooed on the cheek, generally from the cheek-bone to the nostril on either side. The marks which I saw consisted of slight cuts about a line long, parallel to one another, and about a line apart.

* * * *

Mr. McLean describes the Nasquapees of Ungava as very averse to locomotion, many of them growing up to man's estate without once visiting a trading port. Before the establishment of Fort Chimo at Ungava, they were in the habit of assembling in the interior and delivering their furs to an elderly man of the tribe, who proceeded with them to the King's Posts or Esquimaux Bay (Hamilton Inlet) and traded them for such articles as they required. As with other northern Indian tribes, the Slaves and Rabbit-skins excepted, so with the Nasquapees, the women are the slaves of the men. When they remove from camp to camp in the winter, the women set out first, dragging sledges loaded with their effects, and such of the children as are incapable of walking; meantime the men remain in the abandoned encampment, smoking their pipes, until they suppose the women are sufficiently far advanced on the route to reach the new encampments ere they overtake them.

p. 2639

* * * *

The Nasquapees, like their friends and allies the Montagnais, hate the Esquimaux, whom they never fail to attack when opportunity offers.

The vast extent of the country hunted by the wandering Nasquapees may be conceived when, 100 years ago, we find this people side by side with their allies the Montagnais on the Saguenay, and 100 miles west of the Straits of Belle Isle, places from 800 to 900 miles apart.

Cartwright saw two Nasquapee canoes near the mouth of Indian Tickle in 1774. He calls the Indians Nasquapicks; and he not only purchased furs from them in the same year, but he speaks of a chain of hills as Nasquapick Ridge. In 1771 he saw signs of Nasquapick Indians near Denbigh Islands, and on several points of the coast north-west of the Straits of Belle Isle. They must then have been in the immediate neighbourhood of their enemies the Esquimaux, but Cartwright does not say that any conflicts took place whilst he was on the coast.

The excellent missionary Pere Arnaud visited the Nasquapees, whose hunting-grounds lie to the north-west of Lake Manicougan in 1853.

* * * *

The Nasquapees are the most easterly division of the great Cree nation, whose hunting-grounds from time immemorial have extended from the Rocky Mountains to the Atlantic coast of Labrador, a region extending from the 51st to the 120th degree of longitude, a distance exceeding 2,500 miles, with a mean breadth of about 600 miles, and equal to seven times the area of France, or about 1,500,000 square miles. It must have required a very long time to people this vast waste with tribes speaking dialects of the same tongue, and who were far more numerous, powerful, and independent, 300 years ago, than they are at the present time. That the Nasquapees were once very numerous in the Labrador Peninsula there is every reason to believe; and famine (not wars, as with many other Indian tribes) has been the cause of their decrease in numbers. In many parts of the Peninsula the wild animals which formerly abounded have almost disappeared, and consequently the means of subsistence of the native races have been withdrawn. Rabbits were once quite common on the mainland as far east and north as the Atlantic coast of the Labrador Peninsula. The porcupine was everywhere abundant on the Gulf coast, and reindeer "covered the country." The destruction of mosses, lichens, and forests by fires has been the most potent cause in converting Labrador into a desert.

MAJESTY'S SLOOP THE “ OTTER,” WITH A PLANE-CHART OF THE COAST.
COMMUNICATED BY THE HONOURABLE DAINES BARRINGTON.

* * * *

The people of this country form various nations or tribes; and are at perpetual war with each other. Formerly the ESQUIMAUX, who may be called a maritime nation, were settled at different places upon the sea coast quite down to the river ST. JOHN'S ; but, for many years past, whether it has been owing to their quarrels with the Mountaineers, or the encroachments of the Europeans, they have taken up their residence far to the north.

A good way up the country live a people distinguished by the appellation of MOUNTAINEERS, between whom and the Esquimaux there subsists an unconquerable aversion. Next to the Mountaineers, and still farther west-ward, you come to a nation called the ESCOPICS.

* * * *

The Mountaineers are esteemed an industrious tribe ; and, for many years, had been known to the French traders. Their chief employment is to catch fur, and procure the necessaries of life. They are extremely illiterate, but generally good-natured ; and are reckoned to be less ferocious than any other of the Indians. This softness of their manners is owing to their long intercourse with Europeans; and the other nations will doubtless lose their savage disposition, in proportion as they imbibe our customs.

They come every year to trade with the Canadian merchants, who have seal-fisheries on the southern part of the coast, and have the character of just dealers. They are immoderately fond of spirits ; for which, blanketing, firearms (in the use of which they are remarkably dexterous), and ammunition, they truck the greatest part of their furs.

Their canoes are covered with the rind of birch; and, though so light as to be easily carried, yet sufficiently large to contain a whole family and their traffic. By means of the multitude of amazing ponds throughout this country, they convey themselves a vast distance in a very little time. Whenever they find a pond in their way, they embark on it, and travel by water; when its course alters, and by following it they would lengthen their distance anything considerable, they land, place their canoe on their head, and carry their baggage on their shoulders, until other water gives them an opportunity of re-embarking. They are most excellent travellers. They bear fatigue with astonishing patience, and will travel two days successively without taking any sort of nourishment.

These Indians are of a deeper colour than the Esquimaux. They are low of stature. Though of a robust constitution, their limbs are small, and extremely well adapted to the rocky country they are continually traversing.

OF THE ESQUIMAUX.

The ESQUIMAUX Indians, inhabiting the sea coast of the northern part of LABRADORE, are indisputably from GREENLAND. They are a very deep tawney, or rather of a pale copper-coloured complexion. . . .

They live always upon the sea-shores, from their dread of the Mountaineers.

EXTRACT FROM “ A SHORT NATURAL HISTORY OF THE COUNTRY.”

BY GEORGE CARTWRIGHT.

JOURNAL OF TRANSACTIONS AND EVENTS DURING A RESIDENCE OF NEARLY SIXTEEN YEARS ON THE COAST OF LABRADOR.
[NEWARK : 1782, VOL. III., pp. 229-232.]

The native inhabitants are two distinct nations of Indians; Mountaineers and Esquimaux. The Mountaineers are tall, thin, and excellent walkers; their colour greatly resembles that of our gypsies; probably occasioned, by their being constantly exposed to the weather and smokey whigwhams. In features they bear a strong resemblance to the French, which is not to be wondered at, since they have had an intercourse with the Canadians for so many years, that there are few, I believe, who have not some French blood in them. These people inhabit the interior parts of the country, which they traverse by the assistance of canoes, covered with birch-rinds, in the summer; and of rackets, or snow-shoes, in the winter. Their weapons are guns and bows; the latter are used only to kill moor-game, but their chief dependance is on the gun, and they are excellent marksmen; particularly with single ball. They are wonderfully clever at killing deer, otherwise they would starve; and when they are in a part of the country, in the winter time, where deer are scarce, they will follow a herd by the slot, day and night, until they tire them quite down ; when they are sure to kill them all. I must not be understood literally, that they take no rest all that time, for, if the night is light enough, they rest only four or five hours, then pursue again; which space of time, being too short for the deer to obtain either food or rest, they are commonly jaded out by the fourth day. The Indians paunch and leave them, then go back to their families, return immediately with bag and baggage, and remain there until they have eaten them all; when, if they have not provided another supply elsewhere, they look out afresh. But when deer are plentiful, they are quickly provided with food without much trouble, for, as two or three families usually go together in the winter time, some post themselves to leeward of the herd, while others go to windward, and drive them down ; by which means, it seldom happens that they all escape. When they have good success among the deer, they also kill most furs ; for then, they have leisure to build, and attend to deathfalls, in which they kill foxes and martens. Porcupine hunting is an employment assigned to the women, and is a good resource, where there are strong, fir woods.

Beavers they can do nothing at in the winter, on account of the frost, but they kill numbers of them in the spring and autumn; and even all the summer through: but one good English furrier will kill more than four Indians, where those animals are numerous. They kill beavers by watching for, and shooting them; or, by staking their houses ; the method of doing which, I will endeavour to explain: If the pond, where the beaver house is, be not capable of being drawn dry, they cut a hole through the roof of the house into the lodging, to discover the angles; they then run stakes through at the edge of the water, where the house is always soft, parallel to each other, across each angle, and so near together that no beaver can pass between. The stakes being all fitted in their places they draw them up to permit the beavers to return into the house, (the hole on the top being covered up so close as not to admit any light) and then hunt with their dogs, backwards and forwards, round the edges of the pond, to discover where they have hid themselves under the hollow banks; taking especial care, not to go near the house, until they can find them no longer any where else. They then approach it very cautiously, replace the stakes with the utmost expedition, throw the covering off the hole, and kill them with spears made for the purpose. When they have a canoe, they will drive the pond in the manner already described, without disturbing the house; and, when they suppose the beavers are all in, they place a strong net round it; then making an opening, they kill them as they strike out of the house. They will also place a net across a contraction in the pond, where there happens to be one, and kill them there, in the course of driving. But, as it is seldom that the whole crew or family are killed by these means, hermit beavers are always observed to be most numerous in those parts of the country which are frequented by Indians. The Mountaineers are also very dexterous in imitating the call of every bird and beast, by which they decoy them close to their lurking-places. And as the destruction of animals is their whole study, there is not one, whose nature and haunts they are not perfectly well acquainted with: insomuch, that one man will maintain himself, a wife, and five or six children in greater plenty, and with a more regular supply than any European could support himself singly, although he were a better shot.

p. 2643

As these people never stay long in a place, consequently they never build houses, but live the year round in miserable whigwhams; the coverings of which are deer-skins and birch rinds: the skins which they use for this purpose, as well as for clothes, are tainted, to take off the hair, then washed in a lather of brains and water, and afterwards dried and well rubbed: but for winter use, they will also have jackets of beaver, or deer-skins, with the hair on. As to the morals of these people, I cannot speak much in praise of them, for they are greatly addicted to drunkenness and theft. They profess the Romish Religion ; but know no more of it, than merely to repeat a prayer or two, count their beads, and see a priest whenever they go to Quebec.

The Esquimaux being a detachment from the Greenlanders, or those from them, any attempt of mine to describe them, would be impertinent ; since that has already been done by much abler pens. I will therefore content myself with saying, they are the best tempered people I ever met with, and most docile nor is there a nation under the sun, with which I would sooner trust my person and property; although, till within these few years, they were never known to have any intercourse with Europeans, without committing theft or murder, and generally both.

Gathering place of Indians.

INDIAN TRAVEL ROUTES AND POINTS OF RENDEZVOUS IN LABRADOR PENINSULA.

(EXTRACTS FROM LOW'S REPORT ON EXPLORATIONS IN THE LABRADOR PENINSULA, VIDE NO. 1047.)

Fort Nascaupée.

Sandgirt Lake is an important gathering place for the Indians of the interior, on account of the number of routes that centre here. The Hamilton River divides into two branches, the larger or Ashuanipi Branch flowing in from the northwest and the Attikonak Branch from the south. The main route from the Hamilton River to Lake Michikamau also ends here. The Indians who trade on the lower St. Lawrence and hunt anywhere in this vicinity, always congregate here in the spring, and descend to the coast in company, either by the Romaine or Moisie River.

Returning in the autumn, they travel together to this lake, where they separate into small parties for their winter hunts. The standing poles of their wigwams, scattered everywhere along the shores and on the islands of the lake, show that several families camp here.

* * * *

Hudson's Bay Post.

For many years the Hudson's Bay Company had a post called Fort Nascaupée on the second northern bay of Petitsikapau. This post was established about the time of McLean's journeys from Ungava to Hamilton Inlet, in or about the year 1841, and it is mentioned by W. H. A. Davies in an article published in 1843, as having then been lately established.* This post was erected for trade with the Nascaupée Indians of the interior, and was quite successful until after the second establishment of Fort Chimo in 1866, when the Indians began to desert it ; those from the north going to Fort Chimo, while the southern Indians traded at Mingan or Seven Islands, on the Gulf of St. Lawrence, or at Northwest River—all of them preferring to undertake the long arduous journey to and from the coast, where they could obtain better prices for their furs, and purchase provisions and other necessities at a much cheaper rate than at the interior post, where the cost of transport and maintenance added several hundred per cent to the original cost of the goods. The post was accordingly abandoned about 1873, and now the only trading posts of the interior are those situated at Nichicun and Mistassini.

Country to the north of Michikamau.

Near the mouth of this stream, the Hudson's Bay Company kept a small outpost called Michikamau during the time that Fort Nascaupee was occupied. Nothing can be learned about this outpost from the old Hudson's Bay Company journals at Rigolet or Northwest River, beyond the bare facts that a post was maintained there for a number of years, and was finally abandoned from the same reasons which caused Fort Nascaupee to be given up. This post was not visited, but, from the accounts of the Indians, some of the buildings have been accidentally burnt, and those remaining are in about the same state of decay as Fort Nascaupee.

* * * *

From the north end of Michikamats, three portages connecting narrow lakes lead to a branch of the George River, where the Indians of the region assemble in September to spear the caribou, which then cross the river in immense herds in the course of their annual migration from the high barren grounds behind Nain to the wooded region of the interior, where they pass the winter.

On the Traversin River. Sandy Banks.

Lake Winokapau. Elizabeth River.

Ancient Hudson's Bay post.

From the summit of a barren granite hill 400 feet high, close by, the discharge or Northwest River is seen to leave the lake between a number Michikamau. of large, flat-topped islands of drift about thirty feet high, that extend outwards from the shore some four miles, and along it for six miles. A long, low point of drift, passing into a ridge, separates the river from the southern part of the lake, and the river is seen extending eastward through a succession of lake-expansions, until it passes behind and is hidden by rocky ridges in that direction. Another chain of lakes extends northward from the river and passes close to the base of a high range on the horizon. By these lakes a second route leads to the caribou grounds, which is used by the Indians when they want to proceed there direct, without the delay usually caused by adverse winds on Michikamau and Michikamats. The river flowing into the Atlantic near Davis Inlet, heads in the high range to the north, and a winter-route from the George River to the coast follows its course closely. Owing to many rapids and falls, entailing several long portages, this stream is never used as a canoe-route by the Indians.

* * * *

This place is called Sandy Banks, and the Hudson's Bay Company formerly maintained a small trading-post on the north side, where the site of their clearing is marked by a new growth of birch.

* * * *

At the head of the lake, a small branch called the Elizabeth River, flows Lake in from the west, down a narrow valley, while the main valley bends to the north-west.

On the south side, at the mouth of the Elizabeth River, there is a wide, sandy plain about twenty-five feet above the river, and on it time Hudson's Bay Company formerly had a post, which was abandoned in 1873, and subsequently destroyed by fire.

EXTRACTS FROM "THROUGH LABRADOR."

BY H. HESKETH PRICHARD, F.R.G.S. (London, 1911).

Our little exploring trip from the Atlantic Coast to the George River over an unknown route may be taken as simply a phase in the predatory life, since in order to accomplish it my companions and I adopted the life of nomad hunters, carrying a bare ration and living by the chase, killing caribou and sinking the carcasses in the snow-fed lakes upon the great plateau so as to secure a line of retreat.

* * * *

The conditions we had to face while crossing the great plateau which lies between the Atlantic and the George River were entirely unforeseen by us, and such hardships as we endured on our march with packs across this stony, mosquito-haunted desolation, were largely due to this fact.

No amount of forethought could have revealed what lay ahead of us, as even at Nain local knowledge only extended to the Fraser lake-head behind Nunaingoak Bay.

* * * *

The present population of Labrador falls naturally into four divisions. The first is the permanent white community, which includes the Moravian Brethren and their families, the Hudson's Bay Company's factors, and the liveyeres (live heres) as the white settlers are called. These all dwell by the salt water.

The second division is made up of the men belonging to the fishing-fleets, who are summer visitors only, coming up through the ice from Newfoundland and the south in the early days of July and leaving in October. The lives of these men are hard and stern, and in them again we find the predatory record. From the day on which they put out from Newfoundland in their schooners to that on which they return, they toil savagely, catching and curing fish, living meanwhile in wooden shanties on the barren wind-swept islands or on the shores of lonely inlets.

* * * *

With the third division we reach the real children of the coast, the Eskimo tribes. All along the eastern littoral, from Makkovik northwards, they exist, cared for and preserved by the Moravian Brethren, whose wise policy it is to encourage them to live as nearly as possible on the lines that work, to which I have tried to bear witness in the latter part of this book.

The Eskimo are altogether predatory, a race of hunters and fishers. Fish in the summer, fur in the winter, and seal, walrus and white whale are their quarry from one year's end to another. In the early springtime also, while ice still holds the land ironbound, they make long journeys by komatik, or dog-sledge, after the herds of Barrenground caribou, the branch of the vast reindeer family which inhabits the barren uplands of North and Central Labrador.

Now we are left with the fourth, the Indians of the interior. Their numbers were, some time ago, computed to be four thousand in all, but the large majority of these hunt and trap in the southern part of the peninsula, massing at various points, and coming out with their furs to the waters of the St. Lawrence. More to the north, in the central country are the lodges of two tribes, the Montagnais and the Nascaupees. Here we find the dominant instinct of Labrador, the predatory instinct, at its fullest development. These tribes owe their food, clothing, and their habitations to the creatures of the chase, and they live a life of hardship and freedom such as was more common in the world of a hundred years ago.

It was in the year 1903 that I paid my first visit to the Labrador peninsula.

* * * *

I had gone to the country hoping to be able to pick up on the spot some craft in which it would be possible to navigate one of the many rivers whose waters flow into the Atlantic, and thus to make my way into the unexplored interior. In this also I was disappointed. Labrador possesses no boat suitable for river use, as the people never venture beyond the bay heads.

* * * *

On this first trip I found the report that settlers are unwilling to penetrate into the interior was founded on fact, and I realised that if I were to return to Labrador, as I intended to do, and to get behind the rampart of forest and mountain which had turned me back, I must bring with me both craft for river use and companions from the outside world. I discovered also that beyond the komatik or dog-sledge journeys of fur-hunters and the yearly Eskimo quest which takes place in the spring after the caribou, hardly any effort had ever been made to journey west. Of the great wilderness which represents the interior I was able to gain no information worthy of the name. "It is a place where men starve," said settler after settler, and when I questioned them as to the possibility of penetrating into its recesses I was met with a shaking of heads and with prophecies of death and disaster.

In fact, few things have struck me more than the almost universal fear which lay upon the fisher population of this barren coast with regard to the great hinterland upon whose eastern lip they live. It was the one subject upon which their imaginations never failed them. To lose the way, to be drowned in some rock-staked torrent, to die miserably of starvation—in such glib phrases they voiced their many forebodings.

p. 2648

* * * *

Luckily in 1903 I gained a certain amount of experience and knowledge which later stood us in good stead. From the day I bade good-bye to the rugged and rocky coast, I looked forward to returning and attempting a second journey into the interior, the prospect of which had taken possession of my mind. It was seven years, however, before time, opportunity and the men came together.

* * * *

I had often talked over the matter with my friends G. M. and A. C. Gathorne-Hardy, and in 1910 the former found himself able to accompany me.

* * * *

Having made up our minds to try to draw a line across the blank area which on the maps represents north-eastern Labrador, between the Atlantic and the George, we tentatively settled upon the Moravian station of Nain, which lies between 56 and 57 degrees north latitude, as the best point of departure from the coast.

* * * *

The shores of the George river in the neighbourhood of Indian House Lake are the main camping-ground of the Nascaupée Indians, while further south the Montagnais have their lodges. Both these tribes of Indians live, as I have already said, on the caribou which they kill as the animals pass in enormous herds on their spring and autumn migrations. The presenoe [sic] of the Indians and the vast herds of deer have not unnaturally attracted the attention of travellers to the George river, and its course, wholly or in part, has from time to time been followed by various expeditions. The first of these, that of Maclean and Erlandson, in the early part of the last century, discovered Indian House Lake—then called Lake Erlandson—and founded a Hudson's Bay Company's post in its vicinity. But no long time passed before this was abandoned, and for many a year, until the journeys of Mrs. Hubbard and Mr. Dillon Wallace, who succeeded in reaching it by a route from Hamilton Inlet, the lake remained unvisited. Thanks to their efforts, the course of the George was both explored and mapped ; but between it and the Atlantic coast lay the large blank area representing the north-eastern region of Labrador.

Before leaving England a study of the map had revealed to us tentative indications of a river named the Fraser, which discharged into the head of a bay some miles north of Nain. The fact, however, that on the same map was depicted a certain "Barrengrounds River," which has been proved not to exist, rather made us doubt the knowledge of the cartographer, and we were consequently delighted when Mr. Schmitt informed us that there certainly was a Fraser river, though it as certainly did not discharge into Tikoatokak, as the map stated, but into Nunaingoak Bay.

p. 2649

These Eskimo hunting trips are, as I have said, made in spring with the view of killing deer at a season when the cold will preserve the meat for an indefinite time, and when it is possible to haul out the carcasses with ease over the hard snow. The Eskimo hunters never go beyond a certain distance, as their limit is always the limit of half the quantity of dog food that they can carry with them.

* * * *

THE INDIANS OF THE LABRADOR.

The Indians of the interior are probably a diminishing people whose numbers it is difficult to compute, for they live for the most part withdrawn behind their fastnesses of wilderness and stony desert. According to the most reliable estimates they may be counted as some four thousand in all. The large majority of these hunt and trap in the southern part of the peninsula, coming out with their furs to the waters of the St. Lawrence.

In the central country are the lodges of two tribes—the Montagnais to the south and the Nascaupees further north. They have parcelled out certain districts of the interior into hunting grounds, each of which is regarded as a hereditary belonging, passing from father to son. They call no man master, and they live a life of hardship and freedom such as was more common in the world of a hundred years ago.

On their journeys their camps are set beside the waters of countless unrecorded lakes; for men, women and children follow the nomadic life. The Labrador is, as my readers will before this have recognised, a bitter mother; but all that she is unwilling to give the Indian wrings from her. In August he shoots the young Canada geese, spruce-grouse and ptarmigan. The month, in his picturesque language (on which, as on the whole subject of the Indians, Mr. William Cabot, of Boston, is incomparably the best authority) is called O-po-o Pushum, that is, the Moon of Flight.

By hunting and fishing the Indian obtains his food from the country over which he travels, and about August he pitches his shifting tepees deep in the interior, where the chief event of the year, the autumn killing of the migrating caribou, takes place.

Both to the Montagnais of the more wooded south and the Nascaupees of the Barren Ground, the caribou forms the main support of life. From time immemorial the Indians have gathered to slay them at this season, while they cross the lakes on their mysterious journeyings, the beginning and the end of which no man really knows. Even the path of the migration changes from year to year, and in some seasons the tribes fail to meet with the deer at all. All these times starvation visits the tents and sits, a grim shape, beside the fires. Such a year was 1893, when many of the people died, only half their number surviving to the spring.

* * * *

The Montagnais are a far more civilised race, partly on account of local conditions; for Southern Labrador, having a less rigorous climate, possesses

p. 2650

more settlers with whom the Indians come in contact. Further, they long ago passed under the teaching of the Oblate Fathers, and now profess the Roman Catholic faith. The Fathers keep up annual visits with their converts, who seldom move far to the north ; and in fact (particularly of late years) they spend a part of each year encamped not very far from the coast settlements.

* * * *

There is a pronounced physical difference between the Montagnais and the Nascaupes, the former being much shorter, with somewhat broad faces and blunt features, while the Nascaupes retain the tall slender forms and high features of the typical Red Indian. The tribes intermarry, for I know of at least one intermarriage, though this may be a rare instance.

The head-quarters of the Nascaupes may be said to be on Indian House Lake, the shores of which are, in truth, a battleground over which an unrecorded but terrible struggle is fought out. This battle has endured for generations; the antagonists are Nature on the one side and the little tribe of Nascaupes on the other. The Indians can hope for no aid in their conflict. Shut in upon all sides by the mighty Barrens, help cannot reach them, nor have they sought it. Few people of white race have yet set eyes on Indian House Lake, and the half-dozen expeditions which have passed up and down the River have spent but half-an-hour at the Nascaupe camp before they boarded their canoes and voyaged on.

No. 1059.EXTRACTS FROM "LABRADOR."

BY WM. B. CABOT (London, 1922).

“ We passed Kutálik or Massacre Island close and were off the Mountaineers' Rock, a small affair awash at low tide. Sam told its tale. In old days when warfare between the Eskimo and Mountaineers of the inland was unrelenting the Eskimo of the neighbourhood were camped on the smooth moss ground of the western side of Kutálik, where their old rings of tent stones are still visible. While the men were off hunting Indians descended upon the women and children, killed them all, threw them into the sea, and departed. As the Eskimo men were returning one of them saw something floating and threw his spear, finding then that he had transfixed the boot and foot of his own wife, killed with the rest. . . . It was late in the day, and the Mountaineers' Rock lay toward the sunset, some three miles away. The Eskimo noticed that the rock seemed higher than usual. As the tide came to its height they saw the Mountaineers leave the flooded rock and paddle up the bay beyond to the mainland. They had been concealed under their canoes, placed close together, and it was these which gave the rock its unusual elevation. The Eskimo followed them after dark, surrounded their camp, and speared them to a man.

Some say that Eskimo men as well as women were floating in the water that day. At all events the story shows how things went between the two races, from Maine, perhaps, around the northern shores to Alaska. They have little taste for each other to this day, although white influence at the shores has ended the fighting. There is no doubt that, man for man, with the primitive weapons, the Eskimo was at no disadvantage, but the Indians acquired guns first and gradually forced the shore dwellers out of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and to the north.

The Indians' families, back on the country, were probably not much exposed in the fighting, while those of the Eskimo were, as they could be easily found along the shores. Yet it is not likely that the initiative has always been with the Indians. The two main causes of trouble among simple people in the world at least have been infringement of territory and woman stealing ; and the Eskimo, while at a disadvantage from their shore habitat, have doubtless had some share in aggression and its proceeds.”

“ To-day, nevertheless, it is rather hard to imagine a pure Indian of north-east Labrador marrying an Eskimo. Their Eskimo seems to regard the Indian as a hateful predatory creature of the wolf or panther kind. The Indian view is not so easy to assume ; the Eskimo revolts him a little, his dirt, his lack of dignity, his diet, his smell. The Indian has given to him what to his own mind is almost as bad a name as he could, for the word Eskimo is Algonquian for Eater of the Raw. The Indian is particular in having his food cooked.

Late in the winter the Eskimo of the coast go inland for caribou nearly to the height of land, but only in strong parties, so far as I can learn. Many of the white or partly white shore people tell of going into the interior one or two hundred miles, always in winter, but really they do not go far, and 'signs of Indians' are mentioned with bated breath. Some of the shore people are pretty well acquainted with the individual Indians now, for the latter are peacable enough at the shore, but a shore person hunting alone at a distance inland would, I think, be made uncomfortable if discovered.”

* * * *

Further on Cabot tells how a projected trip inland of servants of the Hudson's Bay Company at Davis Inlet with a view to the possible establishment of a trading post inland was frustrated by the Indians. He says:

“ What turned the Hudson's Bay Company partly back was Indians, not snowshoe tracks or imaginary Indians, but the very men they were with. For some reason best known to themselves they announced to the outsiders that they did not want them to go any farther into the country and actually threatened violence. Our white man was disposed to be militant, but William's enthusiasm fell away and they turned back. This may have been well; it was then not so very long since some of the northern Indians had set out to rush Davis Inlet post, being denied what they asked.

The projected trip inland was now off, of course, I being a doubtful person. The feasibility of making an arrangement with the Indians was also lessened, for their keen observation had not missed the change of atmosphere, and they are not apt to take much trouble for a person of doubtful standing among his own people. Whether it was the prevailing talk of the shore people, or, more likely, the councils of cautious old Captain Gray, of the Pelican, that upset things, I never knew. The blocking of Cotter's vacation into the country may have been partly due to William Edmunds. The journey was a reconnoissance [sic] toward a possible inland trading post. As William's best perquisite was the boating of Indians from Opetik to Davis Inlet at a dollar each, his interest would be against the project. It was generally thought that he had intrigued with the Indians against this enterprise. It remains, however, that to the present year 1920 they have allowed no white person but myself and occasional countrymen to enter. In 1915 they ejected a party summarily.”

B.A., SC., M.D., LL.D., SCOTT. GEO. MAG., 1895, VOL. 11.

Population.—The figures in the tables below are derived from the following sources. The resident white population of the Atlantic coast, from Blanc Sablon northward, is from the Newfoundland Government census of 1891, and there has been little change since that time. Both the white and Indian populations from Blanc Sablon to the west end of Lake St. John are from the Dominion Government census of 1891, and there may have been some increase in the number of whites, but this is uncertain. The remainder of the Indian population is a good approximation to the number at present trading at the different posts of the Hudson Bay Company. Previous estimates have greatly overstated the number of the Indians of the interior. The Eskimo begin to be met with in straggling numbers at Hamilton Inlet, and they extend up the Atlantic coast, along Hudson Strait, and down the west coast as far as Cape Jones. The figure given for the coasts from Cape Chidley to Cape Jones was found by adding together my own estimates of the numbers at all their different settlements and camps, and it may, perhaps, be slightly under the mark. Some of these people hunt the reindeer at certain seasons a short distance inland on the barren grounds, but they all come to the coast as their homes. In 1860 there were 1,400 Eskimo belonging to all the Moravian settlements, and the numbers have remained almost stationary. The Secretary of the Moravian Missions in Labrador, referring to 1887, wrote to Dr. Packard: "We reckon that there are less than 1,500 Eskimo on the strip of coast from Hamilton Inlet to Ungava."

Taking the area of the peninsula as 560,000 square miles this would only give one inhabitant to each 30 square miles of territory. It is estimated that at least 1,000 schooners, mostly from Newfoundland, proceed to the Atlantic coast of Labrador every summer to fish. Many of these carry several families, but at the rate of only ten persons to each schooner this would give a floating population of 10,000 during three months of each year. In addition to these a considerable number of tourists from the United States and elsewhere visit the coast every summer.

Moravian Missions.—The Unity of Moravian Brethren, or Unitas Fratrum, has six stations on the Atlantic Coast of Labrador for the benefit of the Eskimo. They are situated in the following order from south to north :—

Station.	Founded.	Number of Eskimo in 1896.
Hopedale	1782	160
Zoar	1865	90
Nain	1771	214
Okkak	1776	308
Hebron	1830	207
Ramah	1871	71

The late Rev. B. La Trobe, secretary in London of the Moravian Missions, said that there were in 1886 less than 1,500 Eskimo on the whole coast. If we allow 350 for those residing at various places between the mission stations, and 50 for those between Ramah and Cape Chidley, the whole number becomes 1,450, which is not far from correct for the present year (1895), as the numbers appear to have remained about stationary for a long time. These people have improved very much in their moral and spiritual character under the influence of the devoted missionaries, although their self-reliance and physical stamina are not equal to those of the heathen Eskimo of Hudson Strait. The Moravians endeavour to make the missions self-supporting as far as possible, and for this end they encourage the Eskimo to hunt foxes and other fur-bearing animals, for which purposes they lend them traps and supply ammunition, and then pay them fair prices for their returns. The mission ship, of which successive ones have been called the Harmony, visits the stations each summer for the purpose of bringing the outfits and taking back the produce of the year's trade. The natives speak German, and appear to be fond of their religious exercises, especially the singing. In 1893 some enterprising Americans transported upwards of fifty of them, including men, women and children, from Nain to Chicago, where they remained during the Columbian Exhibition. On their return, these simple children of nature would doubtless have endless stories to tell to their wondering relations.

HISTORICAL SKETCH.

SECTION I.—GOVERNMENTAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS WITH THE LABRADOR INDIANS.

The peninsula of Labrador is bounded on its eastern, northern, western and southern sides by the Atlantic ocean, Hudson's Straits, Hudson's Bay and the Gulf and River of St. Lawrence. The line of division separating what may be properly called Labrador from the rest of Canada has never been authoritatively laid down. Consequently, different writers have adopted different arbitrary lines, in some cases for reasons related to the subjects, of which they were treating. Father Laure, for instance, was advocating in 1715, the founding of a great state of Labrador, with its principal outlook on the Atlantic. It was necessary for his purpose to exclude all the territory on the Gulf, which had already been appropriated ; and he declared the eastern limits of Mingan seigniorship to be the south western boundary of his proposed state. Low¹ and Hind,² for no assignable reason, assume Seven Islands or Bersimis to be the point on the St. Lawrence from which the south western limits of the peninsula should be drawn to Hudson's Bay. Recent writers, observing the course of the waterways running southward from Lake St. John to the River St. Lawrence, and of those which follow the Nottaway river to Hudson's Bay, and noting the comparatively small stretch of land which separates these systems flowing in opposite directions, consider that a line to be drawn from the mouth of the Saguenay river to the mouth of the Nottaway river, would be a more logical line of demarcation for the peninsula.

But the point is of little consequence, since the physical characteristics of Southern Labrador, and the racial and other peculiarities of the inhabitants are precisely the same as those of the regions lying far to the west of any line, that could properly define Labrador. The territory occupied by the Naskapis, the more northerly of the two races who inhabit the Labrador, extends westward to lake Mistassini.¹ The tract ranged over by the Montagnais, the second of the two races inhabiting the Labrador Peninsula, extends as far to the west as the head waters of the St. Maurice,² which empties itself into the St. Lawrence at Trois Rivières.

The Labrador peninsula is described by Mr. A. P. Low,³ whose explorations in that territory give him a unique authority, as a high rolling plateau, which rises somewhat abruptly within a few miles of the coast to levels varying from 1500 to 2000 feet. The interior is undulating, and is traversed by ridges of low, rounded hills that seldom rise more than 500 feet above the general level, which varies from 1600 to 1800 feet.

On its Atlantic side the coast is deeply indented by many long, narrow bays or fiords, which are surrounded by rocky hills, rising precipitously from the water to heights of from 1000 to 4000 feet. The deepest of these indentations is that known on its outer side as Hamilton inlet, and, in the interior, Lake Melville. To the head of Lake Melville there is a stretch of 150 miles. The most considerable among the other bays are Sandwich, Kaipokok, Saglek and Nachvack, which vary from 30 to 50 miles in depth.

The coast line on the Atlantic increases in altitude as one passes from the Straits of Belle Isle northward. From the Straits to the Moravian settlement at Nain the coast runs from 1000 to 1500 feet in height ; from Nain to Cape Chidley it rises to from 2500 to 4000 feet. North of Nachvack, there are some elevations as great as 6000 feet.

The western coast line, that is the coast on the eastern shores of Hudson's Bay, is much lower than that on the Atlantic. Between Cape Wolstenholme, the most northerly point on the west, and Cape Jones at the entrance to James Bay, the land reaches to a height of 1000 feet within a few miles of the sea, and then rises rapidly to the general level of the plateau. On James Bay the eastern coast line is low, and the rise is so slight that at a distance inland of 100 miles, the land is only 700 feet above the sea.

The highest point in the interior is towards the south and west, near the headwaters of the rivers that flow westward into Hudson's Bay, southward into the St. Lawrence, and northward into Ungava Bay.

The interior as its configuration would suggest is covered with numberless lakes, which occupy not less than one quarter of the total surface. These lakes are of all sizes, from mere ponds to great bodies hundreds of miles in extent, and so interlocked are they by the network of streams through which they find vent, that one may traverse the peninsula in any direction by canoe, with portages, where the canoes must be carried, never exceeding two or three miles.

The inhabitants of the peninsula are either Esquimaux or Indians. The regions inhabited by the Esquimaux are described by Mr. Lucien Turner, an ethnologist of the highest authority as “ strictly littoral,”¹ their habitations being found on the three northern maritime sides of the peninsula.* Those dwelling on the Atlantic coast are all within the spheres of influence of the Moravian missionaries, whose stations extend from Hopedale about 175 miles above Hamilton Inlet, to Cape Chidley. Belonging to this group are a few families living on the southern shores of Hudson's Straits as far west as the Koksoak river. From this river to the Leaf, whose waters enter Ungava Bay at its south western corner, the coast is uninhabited. The coast from the Leaf to the entrance of Hudson's Bay and thence down the eastern shore of the bay to below Fort George is inhabited, more or less continuously, by people of this race. The Esquimaux on the north western portions of the peninsula carry their furs and the products of their fisheries to the Hudson's Bay posts at Fort Chimo on Ungava Bay, and to Fort George on James Bay.

Between the Esquimaux and the Indians, who dwell in the interior of the peninsula, no relations exist except those of mutual animosity. This is a point on which all writers on Labrador dwell, and which, with possible racial predilections, accounts for the fact that the Esquimaux confine themselves to the coast regions, while the Indians remain within the shelter afforded by the interior.

Lieutenant Roger Curtis, who served under Commodore Shuldham while the latter patrolled the Labrador coast, drew up an account of the peninsula, which he published in 1772 with a dedication to the Earl of Dartmouth.² In the course of a description of the inhabitants he says : “ a good way in the country live a people distinguished by the appellation of Mountaineers, between whom and the Esquimaux there subsists an unconquerable aversion ”; and, again, the Esquimaux “ live always upon the sea shores from this dread of the Mountaineers.” In the Journal of Captain George Cartwright, who made his home on the Labrador coast for 16 years between 1770 and 1786, there are frequent references to this hostility, and to his efforts to abate, if not extinguish it, by bringing people of the two races to a better understanding through actual contact with one another.

W. H. A. Davies, who was in charge of the Hudson's Bay post at North West River in 1840, speaking of the Mountaineers in that district, in a lecture delivered before the Literary & Historical Society of Quebec,³ said : “ As they stand greatly in awe of the latter people (the Esquimaux), they rarely descend the Bay.”

* Father Arnaud, in a letter of Dec. 16, 1872, bears similar testimony. In the course of a description of his missionary journey to Ungava he says : “ The Esquimaux always remain on the coast; they do not, like our Naskapis or Moutagnais, go into the interior of our country to hunt.” See p. 3075.

The mistrust bred of these enmities had its reactions in the operations of the trading companies in the peninsula. The embarrassments it caused to the Hudson's Bay Company are repeatedly mentioned in their records. An explorer¹ sent in 1828 by the Company to make a journey from the Gulf of Richmond to Cape Chidley reported that, on reaching the South or Koksoak river, he found indications of the presence of Esquimaux ; and his Indians, who until that time accompanied him willingly, required strong inducements to proceed further ; and he gave it as his opinion that it would be of no advantage to establish a post at that point, since, as the Esquimaux frequented the country, Indians would not be found there. When in 1830, the Company, notwithstanding this warning, established Fort Chimo, on the Koksoak river, about thirty miles from the sea, the officer in charge had again and again to take account of the ill-will between the two peoples. In his first report on the conditions prevailing in the district, he observes that his efforts to induce the Indians to hunt in that vicinity proved to be futile. The Indians were afraid that in his trading with the Esquimaux, he would sell them guns and ammunition, and thus put them in a position to retaliate the many injuries they had suffered at the hands of the Indians. The Esquimaux, on their part, were afraid to go into the interior on account of the Indians. He entertained a hope of reconciling the two races.²

But the hope has hitherto proved vain— “ The memories still live, and the Esquimaux and Indian, although never engaging in actual hostilities, have a mutual hatred and “ never intermarry.”³

The Indians, who inhabit the interior of the peninsula are all of the family stock known to ethnology as the Algonquian, which in its day occupied a vast area of the continent. The Indians of Labrador are of the divisions known as the Mountaineers and the Naskapis. The former occupy the territory extending southward from the southern shores of the Hamilton river system to the river and gulf of St. Lawrence, and westward from the Atlantic ocean to limits still imperfectly defined,⁴ but including the region about the upper waters of the St. Maurice, which empties into the St. Lawrence at Trois Rivières.⁵

The chief habitat of the Naskapis is the territory known as the Ungava basin, that is, the region lying north of the watershed, separating the rivers flowing into lake Melville from those running northward to Hudson's Straits. But the Naskapis are not confined to this country. The Indians about lake Nichicun are classed by Low as Western Naskapis, and the thirty families who trade at Mistassini are also placed by him in the same tribal division.

The Montagnais have many local names—Papinachois, Bersiamites, Porcupines. Oumaniois and many others. Murray in his report of 1762, noted this, saying that “ they take as many different names as they have villages, but they are all the same people and speak the same language.”⁷

⁷ Constitutional Documents, 1918, p. 895, vol. iii.

The Montagnais and Naskapis are in most essential respects practically identical. They speak the same language with only dialectal differences⁸ and Father Lemoine after several years of life among them stated in 1895 that they now form one tribe.¹ By the Canadians, of the French regime, the Naskapis were taken to be a branch of the Montagnais²

The outstanding feature in the life of these Indians—Montagnais and Naskapis alike—is its extraordinary mobility. To the same degree, and in pursuit of the same objects, they are as nomadic as the Bedouins of the eastern deserts. They have no permanent dwellings. What Cartwright said as the result of his observations in the last quarter of the eighteenth century is equally true today : “as these people never stay long in a place, consequently they never build houses, but they live the year round in miserable wigwams, the coverings of which are deerskins and birchrind.”³

Their modes of locomotion and transportation are adapted to their habitat. To quote Cartwright again : “ These people inhabit the interior parts of the country which they traverse by the assistance of canoes, covered with on the coast, birchrinds, in the summer ; and of rackets or snow shoes in the winter.”⁴ Curtis also says : “ Their canoes are covered with the rind of birch, and though so light as to be easily carried, yet sufficiently large, to contain a whole family and their traffic. By means of the amazing ponds throughout the country, they convey themselves a vast distance in a very little time. Whenever they find a pond in their way, they embark on it and travel by water ; when its course alters, and by following it they would lengthen their distance anything considerable, they land, place the canoe on their head, and carry their baggage on their shoulders until other water gives them an opportunity of re-embarking.”^{5*}

For winter travel, snow shoes are universally employed, and for transportation, the sled. The ease with which a sled is drawn differs according to the state of the snow. In mid winter when the snow is hard and gritty, 200 lbs. drawn ten miles in a day would tax a strong man ; but as the snow settles, towards the spring, loads of 500 pounds could be hauled from twenty to twenty-five miles in the same time.

⁵ Curtis, op. cit.,

The prime object of the constant wandering of the Indians is food. Pritchard in his "Through Trackless Labrador" gives a vivid account of this aspect of Indian Life. "By hunting and fishing the Indian obtains his food from the country over which he travels, and about August he pitches his shifting tepees deep in the interior, where the chief event of the year, the autumn killing of the migrating caribou, takes place."

Both to the Montagnais of the more wooded south and the Nascaupees of the Barren Ground, the caribou forms the main support of life. From time immemorial the Indians have gathered to slay them at this season, while they cross the lakes on their mysterious journeyings, the beginning and the end of which no man really knows. Even the path of the migration changes from year to year, and in some seasons the tribes fail to meet with the deer at all. At these times starvation visits the tents, and sits, a grim shape, besides the fires.”¹ Tales of calamity due to starvation occur in the records of the Hudson's Bay Company. In 1849, the officer in charge of the Esquimaux Bay district reported the death of 90 Naskapi Indians—hunters and their families—due to the fact that the deer had not crossed the passes where they had until that time been found in large numbers.

In the midst of this life of movement, opportunities were made for the exchange of news as to the happenings in all parts of the peninsula. To quote Cabot : “ About the great lakes of the central area the people meet as may happen during the hunting season and exchange their unwritten news ; on the far lake levels of the high interior, the hunting place of the strong and skilful, this network of communication is seldom long broken. There about the central area, gather the rivers that flow to the four coasts and there the people converge.”²

Three such meeting places in this central region are, Kaniapiscaw, Petitsikapau and Sandgirt lakes. Kaniapiskau is a large lake in the Ungava basin, from which the South or Koksoak river takes the rise. Of it John Bastian, an Indian guide employed by Cabot, says : “ At Kaniapiskau you meet Indians from all shores.” Petitsikapau at the head waters of the Hamilton river system attracted the attention of the factor in charge of Fort Chimo, and he recommended the establishment of a post there. In his journal to the Company he says of this lake : “ It is surrounded by a tolerable fur country. At or near it the Indians always separate on their way to the different settlements on the Gulf.”³ Fort Nascopie was established on this lake in 1842.

Sandgirt lake forms part of the same river system, at some distance above the Grand Falls. The gatherings at this point are noticed by Cabot, who remarks : “ The people who descend the Moisie in the summer gather at Sandgirt lake on the Hamilton, apparently for the mere sake of seeing each other, and they keep together as may be until their final separation in the fall for their individual lands.”⁴ Of Sandgirt lake Low says : “ Owing to the number of canoe routes that centre here, the lake is an important gathering place for the Indians of the interior.”

Labrador an undivided whole (to Indians and Trading Companies).

To the Indians, the peninsula was a geographic unit, an indivisible whole. They travelled over it from north to south and from east to west, small advantages often determining them in their decisions as to whether they would take their furs to the posts on Ungava Bay or to those on the St. Lawrence. Fort Chimo on Ungava Bay suffered greatly from this apparent perversity of the Indians. When it was opened by the Hudson's Bay Company in 1830, there were opposition traders at Esquimaux Bay, and at the posts on the Gulf of St. Lawrence. These traders had an advantage over the officers of the great Company, in that they were their own masters and could adapt themselves to a struggle for trade more readily than the officers of the Company, who were bound by the instructions they received from London. The factor at Chimo found that the Indians of his own district were attracted by the better terms offered at the Gulf posts ; when the Gulf posts were acquired by the Company, he endeavoured to make them understand that there would be no benefit to them in carrying their furs the vastly greater distance,¹ but they were sceptical, and were not satisfied until a party visited the Gulf posts.

The accounts of the Department of Indian Affairs of Canada show the Hudson's Bay Company's agent at Davis Inlet on the Atlantic coast giving relief supplies to a large number of Indians on Canadian Government account ; also, a shopkeeper at Tessiuyaksoak between Nain and Zoar on the same coast performing a similar service for the Indians who visited his district.

As between Fort Chimo and Esquimaux Bay, although separated by nearly 600 miles, the Indians made nothing of the distance. John McLean, the officer in charge at Fort Chimo made a trip to Esquimaux Bay in the beginning of 1838. On his arrival there he found that all the Nascopie or Ungava Indians, belonging to the Fort Chimo district, numbering between 70 and 80, had carried their furs to Esquimaux Bay. He and the Company's agent at Esquimaux Bay having come to an understanding, pointed out the advantages to them of having posts so conveniently situated on their lands.²

In 1863, Donald A. Smith, who was in charge of the Esquimaux Bay district, urged upon the Company the desirability of reopening the post at Chimo. Opposition there would lead to much trouble. " The injury to the trade not only at Fort Nascopie, but in all probability of Rupert's River district and Eastmain would be incalculable." ⁴ The Post at Chimo was re-opened, and in 1867, Smith notes with much satisfaction that a good many Naskapis "frequenting Fort Nascopie have gone to hunt in direction of Fort Chimo, where they will be removed from the influence of traders from the Gulf of St. Lawrence." ⁵

(on Hudson's Straits) before long, but we can't make them go if they don't want to, and while they are in the habit of coming out on the Coast in the neighbourhood of Davis Inlet (on the Atlantic Coast) and the Missionary stations, it will be well to keep such things as they may require at D. I., otherwise their fur will be lost to the Company altogether.”

Cartwright on the Atlantic Coast). He secured quite a lot of Beavers and Otters from them. It was more than fortunate that he was in time to intercept them.

“ The same occurred at N.W. River (on Lake Melville). Three hunters arrived there last Autumn from Ungava. There appears to be no mode of checking those marauders. The only plan to save future loss to the Company is to refuse the marauders advances in toto, both on this side as well as in the Gulf. In this way they will be at liberty to trade wherever they may strike out.”

“ North West River. The returns of this Post I am sorry to say show a considerable falling off from the last outfit. There was an unusual scarcity of Martens in that section of the country. I may say also the Indians made miserable hunts. To this is to be taken into consideration that 12 or 13 families never made their appearance at all ; either two or three families, as far as could be ascertained, crossed the country towards Seven Islands (on the Gulf of St. Lawrence).

“ To S. K.

“ In my letter to you of the 15th January I drew your attention to the constant raid made upon this side by the Gulf Indians. They are becoming a perfect nuisance, and high time that the Government should deal with them most strictly. In no way can this be effected except by immediately putting a stop to the credit system. The Company should at once issue instructions that no advance be made to these Indians, especially Mingan and Musquarro (on the Gulf of St. Lawrence). This is the only check that can be laid upon them. Let them then go and trade where they please.”

“ To Officer in Charge,
Montreal,

“ Allow me to once more call the attention of the Company most earnestly to take immediate steps regarding these wandering Bohemians from the Gulf. I fully explained the matter to you in my letter dated the 20th of April last year, and apparently no steps were taken in the matter. The affair is of the utmost importance and should receive immediate attention. The Company should issue strict instructions that no advances be made to these wanderers, especially so to those from Mingan and Musquarro. This is the only effective check that can be laid upon them, and the only means of protecting ourselves and property.”

“ There were no fewer than 16 or 17 families near Cartwright about the New Year, comprising in all over 100 souls.”

“ I was very much surprised indeed to learn from your letter that the Oblat Fathers purposed discontinuing the Mission at North West River. I at once spoke to Pèrre Lemoine on the subject, and he informed me that such was truly the case, and that he had told the Indians to go out to Musquarra next year to see the Priest there. Had I known of this movement on the part of the Priests, or even had the slightest suspicion of it before Pèrre Lemoine went up to North West River, you most certainly would have been instructed not to give a single cent to any Indian on any consideration whatever. I trust that the Indians will not all go over to the Gulf, and that you have borne in mind the chances of their going there in your dealing with them this summer.

“ While recently at North West River Post, I met some of the Indians who used formerly to hunt in the country around there. They informed me they intended coming back again to hunt in that locality, and asked if debt would be given them at North West River. I told them I would write you on the matter before we could give them debt. I shall be pleased to have your advice in regard to giving them debt. I understand these Indians get debt at the St. Augustine Post.

“ To Peter McKenzie, Montreal, April 4th, 1894.”

“ On the 20th ult. I visited Davis Inlet Post, but regret to say that the fur hunt in that section is the smallest for a number of years back. Seven Indians only visited the Post during the winter for the purpose of trade. It is presumed the majority of the Indians who have been in the habit of coming out at Davis Inlet to trade of late years have worked more to the south. Report says a number of them have been seen some distance south of North West River.”

“ To Peter McKenzie, Montreal, April 4th, 1894.”

“ I trust you will succeed in attracting the Indians to the Post to trade. They seem to have deserted North West River of late years.”

As the Indians in their migrations moved about, in utter disregard of the physical divisions of the territory, so the Hudson's Bay Company showed a similar disregard of these physical divisions in the arrangements they made for the transaction of their business. The territory was subject to no divisions, except those made by the Company for their own convenience, and these were changed as circumstances seemed to require. The Rupert River district, for instance, included not only outposts within its own territory, but the post at Kaniapiskau, at the headwaters of the Koksoak river, which was in the Ungava district.¹ Fort Nascopie lying on the height of land whence flowed the waters which formed the Hamilton River system was placed under Fort Chimo, and a post opened on the St. Augustine river, which, if classed on geographical lines would have been dependent on the Gulf posts. It was attached to Esquimaux Bay.² These were the only divisions, which were recognised in the territories of the Labrador peninsula.

¹H. B. Record, Bewley to Simpson, Feb. 26, 1835. p. 2786.

Nowhere does the practice, whether on the part of the Hudson's Bay Company or of the Indians, of treating the entire Labrador as one indivisible whole, receive such signal illustrations, as in the case of the Indians, attached to the posts on the Gulf of the St. Lawrence.³

²H. B. Record, Simpson to Smith, June 26, 1860, p. 2819.

The peninsula of Labrador is described by Low as a comparatively level, rolling plateau, over which travel is easy in all directions. This is an accurate description only as far to the southward as the ranges which form the head-lands of the rivers flowing south to the St. Lawrence. The rocky and precipitous character of the country through which these rivers run, and the difficulties encountered in the ascent from the Gulf coast to the plateau to the north is the subject of observation by all travellers in those regions⁴ but there is no evidence that the route presented unusual difficulties to the Indians. From the earliest periods of which we have record, the main objective of their migrations has been the posts on the Gulf and River St. Lawrence. The routes which would have led the Indians of the interior to the sea at Esquimaux Bay (Hamilton Inlet) offered few difficulties, in comparison with those followed on the way to the St. Lawrence. Cugnet, the lessee of the King's Posts, was well aware of this fact, and when he learned in 1744 that Fornel a merchant of Quebec, had explored Esquimaux Bay, and set up the flag of France in the territory, he was full of apprehension, that his Indians in the Esquimaux Bay country would abandon his posts, and take his furs by the easier routes.¹ ⁴Cabot, op. cit., p. 2624-2625, vol. v.

But his apprehensions were groundless. How far fear of the Esquimaux who dwelt on the outer shore of Esquimaux Bay may have acted as a deterrent, and how far the influence of old habit, which turned their steps southward instead of eastward, may have prevailed, there is no means of telling, but the fact remains that the movement of the Indians towards the south, instead of towards the east,² or north, is one of the best established in the history of these Indians.

¹Corr. Generale c. 11, 109,

The two chief motives, which determine mankind to make a change in its environment, operated powerfully with the Indians in leading them to the Gulf and the River St. Lawrence. Traders to whom they might sell the products of their industry could be found on these shores, and could not be found on the shores of the Atlantic ; and priests, to minister to the spiritual needs which had been awakened, also had their centres on the coasts of the river and gulf.

²Cabot op. cit., p. 2624, vol. v.

The ancient routes, by which the Indians passed to and from the interior are well known. Hind in his “ Explorations in the Interior of the Labrador Peninsula,” says of the Moisie, one of the rivers entering the Gulf, about 18 miles below Seven Islands : “ For centuries it has been one of the leading lines of communication from the interior to the coast,—The old and well-worn portage paths, round falls and rapids and over precipitous mountains on the upper Moisie, testify to the antiquity of the route independently of the traditions of the Indians who now hunt on this river and on the table land to which it is the highway.”

Hind was shown a map constructed by seven Montagnais, which exhibited the route followed by these Indians from Hamilton Inlet on the Atlantic coast to lake Petitsikapau at the head waters of the same system ; thence by unbroken water communication through the Ashwanipi river and the lake of the same name to a point near the headquarters of the east branch of the Moisie.³

p. 1824.

Hind, also, mentions two other routes by which regular passage is made between the Gulf and the interior. “ The couriers of the Hudson's Bay Company traverse the country between Musquarro (on the Gulf) and Hamilton Inlet two or three times every year. The journey can be made in fifteen days in canoes, and this route has long been a means of communication between Hamilton Inlet and the Gulf.”

“ The St. Augustine, falling into a fine bay of the same name, has its source in the lakes and marshes of the tableland, which also gives rise to the Kenamou, which falls into Hamilton Inlet. By this route the Montagnais can journey in their canoes from the Gulf of St. Lawrence to Hamilton Inlet in seven days.”¹

In his account of the Naskapis, Hind says : “ They occupy the table-land, and it is only lately that they have visited the coasts and shores of the Gulf and River St. Lawrence in considerable numbers. They make their way from the interior, chiefly by the Manicouagan, the St. Marguerite, the Trinity and the Moisie rivers.”²

Hind's volumes were published in 1863—sixty years ago. That conditions have not changed in the intervening period will be seen from the following extracts from a chapter on the Indians of the Labrador by William B. Cabot, published in the year 1910. “ Along the Gulf the principal trading-stations are Bersimis, Seven Islands, Mingan and St. Augustine. From Seven Islands the Moisie is the main highway to the interior, and several of its families make their hunts within two hundred miles of Ungava on eastern branches of the George. Nearly parallel with the Moisie is the St. Marguerite or Tshimanipishtuk. Its principal western branch interlocks with the Maniquagan. The network of Indian travel about and far beyond the heads of these rivers is interminable.”

“ From the Gulf near Mingan, the hunters ascend the St. John, pass a difficult high portage to the Romaine, and proceed towards the Grand Falls region of the Hamilton.”³

“ Eastward from Mingan the people travel the Natashquan, St. Augustine and Eskimo rivers. Their lands are chiefly in the region between the Hamilton and the St. Lawrence. Southward from the Mealy Mountains of Hamilton Inlet and the Sandwich Bay coast lies an indefinite unmapped area of high territory, partly barren where great lakes supply the rough rivers passing north, east and south.”⁴

An interesting confirmation of this statement comes from Mr. Ernest F. Ewing, whose position as manager of the Hudson's Bay post at North West River gives the statement unusual authority. He says : “ The Montagnais or Mountaineer Indians will continue to visit North West River annually and each year we receive contingents from Mingan, Seven Islands, Masquarow and St. Augustine. These Indians are dependent on North West River for sufficient supplies to enable them to hunt furs on their way out to the above mentioned Gulf posts. The country over which Indians hunt, ranges as follows : St. Augustine Indians hunt and always have hunted from St. Augustine to Sandwich Bay. Mingan and Seven Island Indians' hunting grounds extend from Mingan and Seven Islands respectively to Lake Michikamau and the Grand or Hamilton River. Over these hunting grounds they claim their fathers and forefathers have always hunted and trapped.” Lake Michikamau is a great lake, north of Hamilton River and north west by west of Lake Melville.

There is but one direction in which Indian travel has declined. Cabot says : “ During late years, few Indians have been regular visitors on the eastern (or Atlantic) coast of the Peninsula. For convenience to themselves the Oblate fathers have influenced the hunters, who formerly traded at Hamilton Inlet to make the longer journey to Seven Islands. Irregularly a few northern Indians from George River have visited Davis Inlet post.”

The Hudson's Bay Company, as their correspondence shows, fully adopted the view expressed by the immemorial practice of the Indians, that the Gulf section was an integral part of the indivisible whole known as Labrador. In a letter from Governor Simpson to Angus McGillivray who had been appointed to manage the posts just then opened at Esquimaux Bay, he explains that the Company did not contemplate carrying competition in this quarter, but were driven to it by their Canadian opponents “ seducing our Mingan Indians in the first instance and latterly interfering with our trade generally in that quarter.” ¹

As soon as arrangements were made by which the Company's rivals withdrew from Esquimaux Bay, the Company resolved to unite Esquimaux Bay and Mingan on the Gulf of St. Lawrence under one management, the reason being that “ the Indian Transport trade and other arrangements are closely connected with those of Esquimaux Bay.” ² In another letter written a week later to the district manager at Montreal, Simpson stated : “ Mingan and Esquimaux Bay. These two districts have heretofore been under distinct managements, but on account of their proximity to each other, likewise with a view to guarding against internal opposition in trade ” it was determined to unite them.³

In January 1845, Simpson wrote to the officer in charge of the posts at Esquimaux Bay, who had reported that the Indians attached to his post desired to visit Mingan in order to meet a Roman Catholic priest, telling him that “ if they defer it for another year, we will endeavour to send a priest to their own lands.” ⁴ A few years later, Simpson gave it as his opinion that it was the high prices paid for furs at the St. Lawrence posts rather than the missions which attracted the Indians.⁵

In April 1853, Simpson pointed out to Donald A. Smith the inconveniences of allowing priests to visit Esquimaux Bay by the overland route from Mingan. Among these was that the priests would, perhaps unconsciously, act as path openers to the Esquimaux Bay for their rivals on the St. Lawrence.⁶

Even the distant Naskapis were importunate for the ministrations of the priest, and Simpson thought it better to waive his objections to resident priests than to lose his Naskapis. An intimation to this effect was given to Smith in March 1858.⁷

It is fair to the Company to point out that there was a good deal of reason in their objection to inland missions. Simpson in a letter to Hardisty and Smith, the outgoing and incoming manager of the posts at Esquimaux Bay, written on March 26, 1852, gives the reason. "With regard to the desire of the North West River Indians to obtain the ministrations of a Roman Catholic priest, we are at all times ready to promote the spread of civilization and christianity to the best of our ability and will therefore facilitate the visits or settlement of a Roman Catholic priest among those Indians if such can be done without exposing the natives, the missionary, or the Company's establishment to the danger of famine by collecting at any one point large bodies of people."

There was also the necessity of preserving a perfect impartiality as between Catholics and Protestants. The Moravians had long been settled on the coast, and since 1849, a mission of the Church of England had been opened there. The Company pointed this out to the Manager of the Montreal district in a letter of December 29, 1862. The manager was, however, able to reply : "Fortunately in the case in point, no conflict of creeds need be apprehended, as the Roman Catholics at present hold that rather unpromising field entirely to themselves."¹

The relations between Canada and the Indians of the Labrador owed nothing to chance. Governors, priests and traders all in their own way, and frequently in antagonism to one another, contributed to the creation and nurture of those intimacies. Five years before Quebec was founded, a firm alliance had been made by its founder with the Montagnais Indians.² Two years before a permanent inhabitant had set plough to land in Canada, a Recollet priest had entered on labours in a field of another sort, which extended from Tadoussac to the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Governor Murray in the report on the conditions in the District of Quebec in 1762, sums up one aspect of the age-long relations between Canadians and Indians in the following words : "The French bent their whole attention in this part of the world to the Fur Trade, they never entered heartily or with any spirit into the fisheries, most of what was done in this way was by adventurers from the ports of France ; some fish, indeed, lumber and provisions were exported to the French islands."³ colony on the banks of the St. Lawrence depended for its prosperity, and indeed for a considerable part of the period for its existence,⁴ are to be found in the trade which was carried on between the Canadians and the Indians, who hunted over the vast territory between the Atlantic seaboard and the undefined west.

But these trading relations with the intimacies springing from them, necessarily gave rise to other relations, scarcely less important in the lives of communities. The Kings of France, indeed, at once perceived and never forgot that contact with uncivilized peoples implied a duty on their part, which it was their constant endeavor to fulfil. In the commission given by Francis I to Jacques Cartier in October 1540, the King mentions a number of Indians having been brought to France on an earlier expedition “whom we have maintained for a long time in our kingdom having them instructed in the love and fear of God and of His holy law and Christian doctrine, with the intention of returning them to those countries in the company of a number of our subjects of good will, in order the more easily to induce the other peoples of those countries to believe in our holy faith.”⁵

The purpose on the part of the French rulers of evangelizing the Indians, thus initiated, continued throughout the whole period. From 1663, when the government of the country was resumed by the King, every governor was instructed to “appeal to the peoples still unconverted, by the gentlest means possible, to come to the knowledge of God and of the light of the faith and of the Catholic Apostolic and Roman religion, and to establish the worship of it to the exclusion of all others.”¹

For the first seventy years after the discovery of Canada by Cartier in 1534, these high aims remained in the realm of pious wishes. No Frenchmen, except traders, who stayed only for the season, could be induced to leave their homes to settle in a country, of which few favourable reports reached France. The fur trade, however, was steadily expanding until in the last years of the sixteenth century it had reached dimensions, which made it an object with several individuals and companies to undertake to transport and settle French people in the new country, on consideration of having secured to them the monopoly of the fur trade.

But though these people enjoyed the benefits of their agreements, they managed to evade their obligations, so that it was not until 1617 that the first permanent settler landed at Quebec, and in 1628, when the English gained temporary possession of the country, there were only two families in the country occupying land for purposes of farming.

Fortunately, in the early years of the seventeenth century a man appeared whose sympathies led him to cultivate the Indians, and, in his dealings with them he gave a note, which though sometimes pitched in a lower key, was always thereafter discernible. Samuel Champlain, who had attracted the attention of the court by the excellent account he gave of a voyage made by him in the Spanish service to the West Indies, was invited to take part in an exploratory expedition, which was being fitted out by M. de Chaste, Viceroy of Canada. He set out in March, 1603, and arrived at Tadoussac on May 27. He spent a month among the Montagnais Indians, gaining their friendship and enjoying their hospitality. He and his associate, Dupont Gravé, brought out with them two Montagnais Indians, whom the latter had taken to France with him on a former voyage. At the ceremonial feast, in which the Frenchmen were seated beside the Montagnais chief, one of the Indians who had returned from France told the audience of the kindly reception he and his companion had from the King. His Majesty informed them that he wished their nation well, and desired to have his people settle in the country. The King was prepared to secure peace for them from their enemies, the Iroquois, or to assist in crushing this race. The Montagnais chief welcomed the words of the French king, and thereupon was concluded an alliance, which endured as long as the French remained rulers of Canada.²

op. cit.

This alliance had momentous consequences for the French in Canada. In 1608, Champlain joined the united Indian tribes of Montagnais, Algonquins and Hurons against the Iroquois, gaining the steady enmity of this powerful group of tribes, and thereby bringing the colony to the brink of ruin on more than one occasion.

p. 2669

Champlain's plan for the Indians of Canada extended far beyond protection against their enemies. He would make them Frenchmen—first Christians and then Frenchmen. In addressing a body of Indians in 1635, the last year of his life, he exhorted them to embrace the Christian religion, which besides securing to them eternal salvation would be the means of cementing a close alliance with the French, who would then come readily into their country, marry their daughters, teach them the several arts and trades, and assist them against their enemies.¹

The King entered heartily into Champlain's views. In the act passed on April 29, 1627, authorising the charter of the Hundred Associates, it was provided that “the descendants of Frenchmen dwelling in that country, as also the Indians who are brought to a knowledge of the faith, and make profession of it, shall be reputed to be natural-born Frenchmen, and, as such, be at liberty to come to dwell in France, when they see fit, and to acquire, succeed to and accept gifts and legacies in all respects as if they were real inhabitants of the country and of French origin, without being obliged to take out letters of declaration of naturalization.”² This section of the act of 1627 was confirmed by a Royal decree of March 5, 1648,³ and re-enacted in the edict establishing the West India Company in 1664.⁴

The relations of the Indians to the French criminal law which prevailed in Canada were settled in characteristic fashion. An Indian was brought before the Superior Council on March 16, 1664, charged with a criminal offence against a woman. The charge was fully made out, and the Council saw themselves face to face with the question as to whether an Indian was properly subject to the jurisdiction of the French criminal law. They invited the chiefs of the several tribal bodies to meet them at the Council, and put to them the question, why the criminal should not be hanged and strangled. The chiefs began by reminding the Council of the many years of amity which had existed between the French and the Indians, and pointed out if their youth had on occasions been at fault, the French had not been always free from blame. Until that time they had not understood that the crime of which their tribesman stood convicted was punishable by death, and they pleaded that for this first offence, he should not suffer the extreme penalty of the law.

For the future they were prepared to submit to the French law as regards this crime, but it was only right that the law should be put in writing, in order that it might remain for their posterity.⁵

⁵ Edits [sic] et

What they suffered most from at the hands of the French was the oppressive acts of French creditors towards defaulting Indian debtors, and they asked that Frenchmen should be forbidden to pillage and maltreat Indians, who were unable to acquit themselves entirely of their debts, particularly as during a period of war, it was impossible to give more than half their time to the pursuit of fur bearing animals.

The Council after deliberation agreed to relieve the Indian from the penalty he had incurred, except as regards the civil interest of the woman; and in order to prevent such disorders in the future, it was ordered, with the consent of the several chiefs, that Indians should be subject to the penalties imposed by the laws and ordinances of France for murder and rape. As regards the oppressions suffered by defaulting Indian debtors, the cases would be dealt with on their merits, as they arose.

The Chiefs were desired to make known to all the people of their nations, the position in which they stood in regard to the crime mentioned. As these chiefs represented the whole body of Indians from Tadoussac on the east to Lake Nipissing on the west, the amenability of the tribes to the laws of France, in the matter of the crimes to which they were principally addicted, was firmly established.

The list of crimes regarding which Indians were brought under the French law was enlarged by a Police ordinance of May 1676. Besides those mentioned, theft, drunkenness and generally all other crimes, when committed by Indians, were brought within the scope of the French law, and the attorney general was directed to give notice of the fact to the chiefs of the several nations.¹

That the several Indian tribes who came within the influence of the French Government conceived themselves to be subjects of the French King is shown by an incident, which concluded the ceremonies connected with the election in 1668 of a successor to an Algonquian chief, Captain Noel Tekouerimat, who had died some years before.

The relatives of the dead chief, on whom devolved the duty of choosing a successor, decided upon Negaskaoust, a Tadoussac war captain. At the investiture, the new captain was placed in the most literal sense in his predecessor's shoes, and not only in his shoes, but in his clothes as well. The ceremony took place before representatives of the French, the Montagnais, the Gaspesiens, the Abnaquiois, the Etechemins, the Poissonsblancs, the Nipissineriens and the Hurons. On the day following the festival, all the Indian captains with the new chief at their head paid a visit to the Governor de Courcelle. "They asked from him the protection of the King, whose subjects they were; and his special assistance to check the disorders of vice among them. They then withdrew."²

The records of the courts show that the offences committed by Indians were dealt with in the same manner as the offences of the same sort committed by Frenchmen. Most of the delinquencies of the minor sort were disposed of in the inferior courts, the records of which are not available, but there were a sufficient number of cases in which Indians were involved heard in the Superior Council to leave no doubt on the point.

The crime to which the Indians were chiefly addicted, and which was the origin of most other crimes committed by them, was inebriety. In the words of an ordinance issued by the Superior Council on September 28, 1663, "since the beginning of the colony the selling of intoxicating liquors to the Indians has always been forbidden, on account of the frenzy to which the Indians were aroused by intoxication; it is well established that they drink for no other purpose but to produce drunkenness; that the laws on the subject, particularly that made by the King's Council of state on March 7, 1657, have been disregarded, as well as the censures of the Church ; that the Indians when under the influence of liquor, abandon themselves to every species of vice, and cease from following the chase, by which alone the colony has existed until this day.”¹

p.

Heavy penalties were imposed for the selling or giving Indians intoxicating liquors, even in the smallest quantities. But in enforcing the law, the officers of justice were confronted with the same sort of difficulty as exists today in securing convictions. Unless the person receiving the liquor can be induced to say from whom he received it, many violations of the law go unpunished. The Superior Council dealt with the difficulty in its own way. An Indian who was found intoxicated must disclose the name of the vendor or giver, or be arrested and remain in prison until he did so.

2716.

This edict which was passed on April 25, 1664,² was enforced against two Indians a few weeks later, and a day or two in jail led to the desired result.

⁴ Ibid.,
2717.

A further step was taken by an ordinance of December 6, 1667.³ The Indians, who accepted liquor were made subject to the same penalties as those who sold or gave it to them, with the additional penalty, in the case of those who became intoxicated, of three hours in the pillory. The duty of communicating this ordinance to the Indians was placed on the Jesuit missionaries. In the following June, a case⁴ involving an infraction of this law came before the Superior Council. Six Frenchmen, three of them employers, and three servants, and twelve Indians were subjected to a fine of 50 livres each. Should any of the latter be unable to pay the fine, the defaulters were to have a month each in prison, during the last fortnight of which they were to be exposed for an hour each day on a wooden horse, bearing on their persons the legend “ For having sold brandy to the Indians.”

A source of illwill between whites and Indians lay in a practice on the part of the whites, of buying or taking in payment of debts, the guns, ammunition or clothing of the Indians. Severe penalties were imposed on the whites who resorted to this practice, and the Indians who parted with any of these underwent a term in prison and the fine of a mooseskin.⁵

These laws and ordinances were enacted again and again during the period of the French possession of Canada, but as the number of officers at the command of the government for their enforcement were few, they could have but a partial application. Theoretically, the King's writ ran throughout the whole vast territory comprised in Canada or New France, but in practice it could run no further than there was an officer to carry it. But if the offence were grave or involved a large number of persons, the Government employed special means to secure respect for the laws.

On May 2, 1733, the Intendant had before him a number of complaints of disorders occurring at the post of Mingan on the Labrador coast. There were a group of Indian families dwelling about that post, who, in pursuit of their calling, were accustomed to go into the far interior in the early autumn to hunt the marten, fox and other furbearing animals, returning to the post in the early summer of the year following. These became the victims of traders from Quebec and Louisburg, who sold liquor to them in such quantities, that a number of the families had perished through the immoderate use of these liquors. To remedy this state of things, the Council sent down to Mingan, Sieur de Lafontaine de Belcourt, with instructions to reside there and enforce the several ordinances prohibiting the sale or gift of brandy or other intoxicating liquors to Indians.¹

The intimacies which had grown up between Frenchmen and Indians, and which were made the easier from certain temperamental traits in the French character, were not without their inconveniences to the rising settlements. Young men, who had gone into the depths of the forests to trade with the Indians in their own homes, found the wild life they had taken up very attractive. The freedom they acquired more than offset their repugnance to the hardships they had to endure. They remained in the woods, and were followed by others, led partly by the same motives, and partly by a desire to escape the rigid paternalism applied by the government to the settlements. The aim of the government was the establishment of a settled community, which was only possible by the clearing and cultivation of the land along the banks of the St. Lawrence. The labour of every man was required for that purpose. The coureurs de bois as these French dwellers in the wilds were called, were not only a loss so far as that purpose was concerned, but as they returned to the settlement prematurely aged, riddled by disease, and quite unfit from their habits to take up with the ways of settled life, they became a burden to the community. Ordinances were issued imposing heavy penalties on those who abandoned their homes for the life of the woods. The extent of the loss to the community may be judged from the terms of a royal edict issued in May 1681 offering amnesty to those who would return to their homes. It states that “ the majority of the inhabitants of the country (la plupart des habitans du dit pays) having been found engaged in the prohibited commerce with distant Indians, have abandoned their homes and the cultivation of their lands.” Throughout the whole French period the government had to struggle with this evil, alternating penalties and pardons, and acknowledging that the latter had not the measure of success the government was entitled to expect.

An interesting consequence of the sojourn of the coureurs de bois in the profondeurs is noted by Cartwright. He says, speaking of the Mountaineers:—" In features they bear a strong resemblance to the French, which is not to be wondered at since they have had an intercourse with the Canadians for so many years that there are but few, I believe, who have not some French blood in them." On this point Low says: " The Montagnais are more or less of mixed blood, having intermarried with the old coureurs de bois and the French and English traders."

The missionary bodies in France gave their loyal services to the Government in its efforts to introduce Christianity among the Indians, and to lead them into the ways of settled life. The relations between the Church and the Indians are, however, so important that the subject is being reserved for separate treatment.

p. 2673

The foregoing, however, relates largely to one only of the great races that inhabit the Labrador interior: the race whose home is in the regions between the Gulf and River St. Lawrence and the shores of Hamilton River and Lake Melville.

What of the other race, whose habitat is, in general, to the north of that occupied by the Montagnais? The Naskapis are not so frequently mentioned in the early records, but is it to be assumed that they did not at that time come at all in contact with the missionaries and traders? We hear of a great annual fair at Nekoubau and know that the Mistassins who were within the same area are of the Naskapi race ; ¹ of Father Bailloquet in 1661, visiting seven or eight different nations at the mouth of the St. Lawrence—Papinachois, Bersiamites, the Nation of the Monts Pelés, the Oumamiousk and others allied to these; of the twenty nations, who were represented at a great assembly at Lake St. John ; of the meetings between the hunters and the shore Indians at lake Manicouagan,² all of which places were within the pastoral labors of the Jesuit priests. Knowing, as we do, the nomadic character of all the Indians in the Labrador, the facilities for travel, the practical identity of the languages of the two races, the unvarying friendliness which subsisted between them, the eagerness manifested by the Naskapis at a later date to attend the ministrations of the priests, the question is rather, why should the Naskapis not have been in contact with the missionaries and traders in early times?

Hocquart the intendant of Canada in an exhaustive report on the King's Domain,³ gives a bit of evidence, which would indicate that the Naskapis visited the post at Mistissini. He states that Dorval the officer in charge of that post had traded with a nation dwelling to the north of the lake, called the Pays Peles from the circumstance that there was no timber to be found in their country. As he says: “ These Indians have no canoes nor any bark to make them from.” This is a fact commonly noted by those who have written on the Naskapis. In the words of the report: “ They formerly traded with the Indians of the northern sea; this year they traded with Dorval and the result was an output of 1300 martens at this post, which produced only about 200 before the establishment of the winter post.” Dorval, also, reported that he had been visited by 30 men from the northern sea.

Much more direct evidence comes from the King's Post in eastern Labrador. Hocquart in this report states that René Cartier, who had a half interest in the posts at River Moisie and Seven Islands “ intends forming a wintering post at the Lake of the Naskapis, where the nation of the same name are residing. They are a docile tribe and easy to manage, numbering about forty families. They have no canoes; and are not sparing of their peltries in trading.” The Lake of the Naskapis is not shown on any modern map, but a map drawn by Father Laure about 1730, on which the name appears, makes it practically certain that this lake is the one now named Ashuanipi, a large lake on the historic Indian route from the mouth of the Moisie to the interior of Labrador. Whether the evidence tending to establishing the identity be regarded as conclusive or not, the important fact remains that a section of the Naskapis inhabited a portion of the King's Domain, and necessarily had regular relations with the traders who leased these domains.

Hocquart's report was made in 1733. The lessee of these posts ten years later, in a remonstrance addressed to the court, furnishes quite convincing evidence that Naskapis as well as the Montagnais traded with him. In 1743, M. Fornel, a Quebec merchant, was furnished with authority to explore and, in the name of the King, take possession of Esquimaux Bay. He succeeded in his undertaking, and thereupon applied for a grant of the territory about the bay. M. Cugnet, the lessee of the King's Posts made a vigorous protest, asserting that Fornel's purpose was not discovery but trade, and that if the application were acceded to, it would ruin the King's posts, inasmuch as the Indians who had been accustomed to trade at the Posts on the Gulf would be diverted to Esquimaux Bay. He further stated that Fornel's assistant would attract the Indians of the Domain “ des Lacs, des Nascopies, Atchouanipi, Manicoujan, Mistassins.” The route to the Bay was an easy one, while that to the St. Lawrence was difficult and toilsome.¹ The anticipations he formed were not realized either then or at any time later, as the dwellers about Esquimaux Bay—Montagnais and Naskapis alike—have always had their reasons for taking the more arduous journey to the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

p. 2748.

But, although there is sufficient in the facts cited to warrant the statement that the relations between traders and the Indians embraced both Montagnais and Naskapis during the French regime, the latter appear more distinctly on the scene at a later period.

An explanation of the fact that, though they had well established trading relations with the posts in the Gulf, they were seldom seen there in numbers is found in a statement respecting them made by John McLean, who was in charge of Fort Chimo from 1837 until 1842. In the chapter of his work "Twenty-five Years in the Hudson's Bay Territory" he says:—"Of all Indians I have seen the Nascopies seem most averse to locomotion; many of them grow up to man's estate without once visiting a trading post. Previously to the establishment of this post they were wont to assemble at a certain rendezvous in the interior, and deliver their furs to some elderly man of the party, who proceeded with them to the King's Posts or Esquimaux Bay, and traded them for such articles as they required."

This statement is confirmed by an entry in the Journal kept by the Hudson's Bay Company's agent at Richmond Fort. It is dated April 10, 1753, and here reproduced:—"Mr. Isbester has taken great pains in giving me a particular account of the natives round us, in particular ye Nashcopy Indians, wherein he informs me (which I have already been informed by our Indians) that ye said Nashcopy Indians, never comes to trade with ye English or French but trafficks with the other Indians, which trade with both Nations and that a trade may be got with you in winter, they being nearer to us than any English or French Settlement and that if I could prevail with any Indians bordering near you to go and acquaint you that we are settled in ye Gulph (that is Richmond Gulf) he is persuaded it will turn out to great advantage.” *

The relations between the Governments, first of France, afterwards of Great Britain, with the Labrador Indians, in matters concerning trade have now to be considered. In 1653 during the period when Canada was under the government of the Company of New France (or the Company of One Hundred Associates), the Government took into its own exclusive possession an extensive tract of land, which became known as the King's Domain. This domain was described by Hocquart the Intendant in his memorandum of 1733 as follows¹ :—“ On the north shore of the St. Lawrence from Isle aux Coudres to a point two leagues below Seven Islands, within which limits were comprised the posts of Tadoussac, Malbaie, Bondesir, Papinachois, Islets-de-Jeremie and Pointe-des-Betsiamites, Chekoutimi, Lac Saint Jean, Nekoubau, Chomonthouane, Mistassins, and beyond the Mistassins as far as Hudson's Bay and in the lower river the domain will be limited by our said ordinance of the 12th of the present month by Cape Cormorant up to the height of land in which territory will be comprised the Moisie river, the Lac des Kichestigaux, the Lac des Naskapis and other lakes and rivers, which empty therein.” Within these limits, the persons having the authority of the King to carry on trading operations, had the exclusive right to such trade.

This King's Domain with the exclusive right to trade within its borders subsisted throughout the French regime, and was carried into the English period until 1860.²

It is to be regretted that no document has so far been discovered, in which is set forth the purpose of the King in thus withholding this territory from public use. But if obvious consequences of a policy can be taken as an indication of its purpose, then the purpose is fairly clear. To begin with, the solicitude of the Government that no intoxicating liquors should be sold or given to Indians is well known. It was difficult to make the laws preventing the sale of intoxicating liquors effective even in the settled communities. But what was difficult in these communities would have been impossible in those wild, inaccessible regions. In no way could this be in any measure effected except by limiting the intercourse of the Indians to persons in whom the Government had confidence, and whose self-interest would restrain them from debauching the people on whose wellbeing their own prosperity depended. Then it provided the Indians of the Labrador with the only substitute for the reputable merchant to be found in Quebec, Montreal or Trois Rivières, to whom the more westerly Indians disposed of their furs. Again, the scheme provided the means by which the Indians could be furnished with the necessities of life, while carrying on their hunting, and be taken care of when ill. This provision was not confined to Indians residing in the King's Domain but was extended to Indians from all parts of the Peninsula, who resorted thereto, for the sale of their furs.*

* Cartwright in 1774 observed that Nascopies were found at Sandwich Bay, that they spoke broken French, and had traded with the Canadians many years. (Letter to Lord Dartmouth, Sept. 12, 1774.)

That the Government was not unmindful of its duties towards those distant peoples is shown by the ordinance of 1733, appointing Lafontaine de Belcourt as a special officer to prevent the importation of intoxicating liquors into Mingan, which was beyond the King's Domain, from Louisburg and Quebec.¹ As regards maintenance while engaged in the chase, it was the practice for the holder of the King's Posts to give the Indians such supplies as were necessary for them and their families on credit, to be paid for when the Indians brought in their furs in the early summer.

The King's Posts were leased to individuals from 1653 until 1733, and while it is true that among the lessees there were some so avaricious and short-sighted as to disregard the welfare of the Indians in their own pursuit of wealth, there were others who accepted the obligations, while seeking the advantages of their position. In the Jesuit Relation of 1667-8, the thanks of the Church are proffered to “ the Gentlemen of the Company of the West Indies (the Company to which the country was for the time conceded) for the obligation it is under to them for having entrusted the commerce of those regions to persons so faithful to God and man.”

But on the whole the leasing system did not work well. Hocquart in his memorandum, points out certain weaknesses inherent in the leasing system, and recommended that the management of the posts be taken directly into the hands of the Government. He pointed out that the primary objects to be kept in view—the preservation of the Indians, and of the fur bearing animals—could never be attained while the posts were left in the hands of private merchants. The temptation to neglect the welfare of the Indians, and ruthlessly to destroy the moose and the beaver would be too great with men absorbed in their profit and loss accounts. A serious disadvantage under which the lessee suffered was the competition of interlopers, who had no scruples about using the strongest allurements to which the Indians were susceptible—brandy. In the King's Posts, the regulations permitted the distribution of intoxicating liquors once a year ; and liquor was not allowed on these occasions until trade with the Indians was completed.

The Government took over the conduct of the business of the posts in 1733, placing M. Cugnet in charge. Three years later, the posts were leased to Cugnet, but under restrictions that safeguarded the essential interests to be conserved.

When Montreal was surrendered to the British arms on September 8, 1760, the Articles of Capitulation which included the whole of Canada or New France, make express provision for “ the savages or Indian allies of his most Christian Majesty.” Article 40 stipulates that they “ shall be maintained in the Lands they inhabit, if they choose to remain there; they shall Mindful of the Indians, who were in a peculiar sense the objects of the care of the French King, Governor Murray applied himself to making provision for those who were dependent upon the King's Posts. He first took the management of these posts into his own hands, employing agents to carry on their affairs for the King's use.²

In 1762, however, he reverted to the French system, and granted a lease to Messrs. Dunn and Gray, two Quebec merchants, the conditions as to Governors exclusive rights being the same as those in the French leases.

That his action in this case was dictated solely by consideration for the welfare of the Indians is shown by the terms of his communication to General Amherst, Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in North America, under whose orders Murray was performing his duties at this time.

In his report, made in 1767, on “ The State of the King's Posts in Canada,” Murray says:—

“ After the reduction of Canada in 1760, the Indians of the Domain deputed their chief and missionary to address General Murray in their favor, and represent to him that they might be taken under the protection of His Britannic Majesty, and supplied and maintained in the same manner they had been in the time of the French.”

³ Const. Docs.

The Proclamation of October 1763 had not then informed Murray of the King's intention that “the trade with the said Indians shall be free and open to all our subjects whatever, provided that every person who may incline to trade with the said Indians do take out a licence for carrying on such trade from the Governor or Commander in Chief of any of our Colonies respectively where such person shall reside.”³

The lease which was given in 1762, was for one year certain, and thereafter for fourteen years, if the King did not disapprove.⁴

The question whether the Indians of the Labrador should not be withheld from the application of the order respecting freedom of trade with Indians in general was considered by the British Government. At the expiration of the first year of the lease held by Dunn and Gray, these gentlemen presented a memorial to the Lords of the Treasury, setting forth the peculiar conditions existing among the Labrador Indians, and their own reasons for asking for a continuation of the lease of the King's Posts. The statement could not be bettered as a description of conditions among, and a justification for the special treatment of, the Labrador Indians.⁵ It follows :—“ Your Memorialists being Residenters in Canada, have for some time farmed the Posts of the King's Domain, situated on the north side of the River St. Lawrence, commonly known by the names of Tadoussac, Chicoutimy, Jeremies and Seven Islands which are places of Rendezvous for some Tribes of Indians inhabiting the northern parts of lower Canada, whither they resort to trade for European Commodities and provisions ; for which Your Memorialists pay at the rate of four hundred Pounds p annum, being the highest offer. The Country these Indians inhabit being altogether incapable of Cultivation, and the hunting Season lasting but for about Six months in the year, they are reduced to an entire dependance for support, the rest of the time, upon the supplies brought them by the Traders.”

“ They are naturally a very inconsiderate people, and were they indulged with Spirituous Liquors and other superfluities, to which they are unconquerably addicted, they would in a few weeks, consume the whole produce of their years labour, and on the approach of the rigorous winter find themselves naked and exposed to the utmost misery, and wreck their vengeance indiscriminately on the first Europeans or other white people they met with, as the immediate authors of their misfortune. On this Account the Persons farming these Posts, are obliged by the tenor of their Lease to furnish them with necessaries and provisions, in proportion to their real wants and circumstances and as they are often sick or unsuccessful, to give them credit, and support their Families, until Fortune puts it in their power to pay, and in case of death, to maintain their Widows and Orphans, till they are capable of providing for themselves. But should these Posts be laid open, numbers of people void of principle and who have no Characters to Lose, would crowd in among them, with a view to take advantage of their simplicity, and deprive them of those Resources they are now often obliged to have recourse to, for one half of the year.”

“ The French who more than any other Nation, seem to have study'd the nature and genius of the Indians were sensible of these disadvantages, and therefore established Factors, or obliged the Farmers to do so, at the Posts above mentioned, to supply the Savages abundantly with what their necessities reasonably Required, Common rates were fixed and agreed upon, for the exchange of every Commoditie, so that the Indian knew the Standard value of whatever he brought to market. The leasees were restricted as to the quantity of Spirits, they were allowed to distribute among them. All others were excluded from a Commerce in these Posts, for the better maintenance of Good order, and Securing their affections, for by this means the Offenders could be immediately detected, in case any injury or injustice were offered to this ignorant, unwary but vindictive people.”

“ The present Governor General Murray sensible of the propriety of this method of managing the Indians, in that quarter of the Country, and in consequence of their own solicitations, as well as to prevent abuses, which might have had dangerous effects, thought proper hitherto, to continue them on the same footing as formerly. He has by this means, conciliated the minds of the Savages to his Government, in so much, that when an universal revolt appears to have been entered into, by all the other Indian nations in North America (they refer here to the uprising known as the Pontiac Rebellion) those immediately under his jurisdiction, have not only remained faithful and peaceable, but when earnestly solicited to join the disaffected Tribes, they firmly declared they had no wish to change their Masters, as they had at no time before, met with better treatment or more Justice, than since the English have been in possession of Canada,”

p. 2679

The apparent conflict between the policy of free trade announced by the Proclamation, and the terms of the lease of the King's Posts produced a temporary vacillation on the part of the British Government. Certain traders appealed to the Government to be supported in the right given under the proclamation, to trade with the Indians on the territories of the King's Posts. The appeal was heard favourably, and during the years 1765, 1766 and 1767, the lessees were subject to the competition of traders operating under general licences.¹ The question was not allowed to rest, however, and on a report of the Lords of the Committee for Plantation Affairs, that His Majesty's rights in the King's Posts “ ought to be considered as excluded from the general right of Free Trader, granted by the said Proclamation and ought to be carried on only by Your Majesty's lessees, under your particular licence for that purpose,” an Order in Council was adopted on June 26, 1767, accepting this view, and the buildings which had been erected at the posts were ordered to be demolished, and the goods sent there by merchants not associated with the lessors, returned to them.² Thereafter, the rights of the lessees of the King's Posts remained unchallenged.

In 1785, as the lease mentioned was about to expire, the lessees presented a memorial for its renewal. Among the pleas set forth were the following: “ That at their sole expense, they have carefully attended to, supported and maintained the aged and infirm, the widows and orphans; the distressed Indians residing on the King's Domain have been relieved and supported by your memorialists, without becoming a burden or expense to the Government.”³ The lessees were not so fortunate as to secure a renewal of their lease, but Governor Hope, in acquainting them of the fact stated that “ the regrets of the Indians, with whom, by virtue of your lease, you have been connected, at losing the good offices they have so long experienced from your friendship and care, are natural, and, I doubt not, perfectly just. These cannot, however, you must be sensible, prove a bar against a new lease to other persons to whom His Majesty has been pleased to order the same to be granted, who, enjoying this mark of the Royal favour, must be bound by every tie to treat favourably the Indians thus entrusted in some measure to their protection, and it shall be my busines to state to them in the strongest terms the force of this obligation.⁴

On the expiration in 1801 of the contract of 1786, the question of the terms of the contract about to be made was considered by the Executive Council on August 21, 1801. A contingency for which provision was necessary, was the safeguarding of the Indians during the period between the termination of the old contract and the commencement of the operation of the new one. On this point the Council, addressing the Governor, say :

“ With a view of following up Your Excellency's known Intentions to provide effectually for the Necessities Comforts and Tranquility of the Indians resorting to the said Posts after the Expiration of the present Lease when a possible change of Lessees might interrupt their regular yearly Supplies in Provisions and Merchandize in case the necessary facilities for that purpose should be in the Summer 1802 be withheld from the new Lessees.

The Committee conceived it highly expedient to obtain from the present Lessees an explicit Declaration whether they would or would not extend those facilities to the new Lessees? The proposition made to and the answer given by Mr. Monro are inserted in the Annexed Journals to which they beg leave to refer in this Report and the Committee cannot refrain from remarking to Your Excellency that the answer given on the part of the Lessees to the Proposition made to Mr. Morro at the same time that it extricates the Government from Embarrassment, is fair and proper on the part of the Lessees.

Finally the Committee humbly recommend that by Your Excellency's Directions such measures as in your Discretion shall be deemed meet be adopted to assure the Indians resorting to the King's Posts that notwithstanding there may possibly be a change of Lessees, Care will be taken that they shall regularly receive their necessary supplies. All which is most humbly submitted to Your Excellency's Wisdom."

The duty, which lay on the Government with regard to a body of Indians, so peculiarly situated as those of Labrador, was never lost sight of, nor did the successive lessees of the King's Posts fail in carrying out the obligations, which their position as semi-trustees imposed on them. Passing over the period from the beginning of the nineteenth century and stopping at a comparatively modern instance, there may be noted a communication regarding the renewal of the lease of the Hudson's Bay Company in 1839.

This is a letter written on September 20, 1839, by Sir J. H. Pelly, Governor of the Company, to Lord John Russell.¹ It contained extracts from an approved report of the Governor and Executive Council of Lower Canada. Among other statements in this report are the following:

“ The Indians of the King's Posts, in number about 400 souls, having for a long period of years been accustomed to the protection and fostering care of the different lessees, it would neither be wise nor just to allow them to be abandoned at once without some provision being made for them. They are generally of a mild and tractable disposition, and a Majority of them have been converted to Christianity. The Lessees supplying the Means for an Annual visit of a Missionary of the Roman Catholic Faith to the different Posts, where small Churches have been erected, chiefly by the late order of Jesuits. They have moreover no Agricultural pursuits, and it is not likely that the present generation would be induced to forsake their Indian habits, sojourning as they do, alternately in the forest and on the Coast of St. Lawrence, to which latter they resort in the Winter Season for the purpose of killing Seals, living chiefly on the Oil, which these animals produce. It may be proper to add that these Indians are not included in the Schedule annexed to an approved Report of Council on Indian Affairs dated 13th June, 1837, nor have they ever received assistance in provisions or outfits of any kind from the Government.”

of the Indians, else they would of necessity turn idle and dissolute, and become a burthen to Society. The proposal of the Hudson's Bay Company seems to offer the most convenient and least expensive mode of protection and employment, and the Committee are therefore humbly of opinion that it may be expedient to grant them a new lease for an additional twenty one years to be limited to an exclusive right of hunting and trading with the Indians, including also the Seal Fishery.”

A movement was set on foot in 1845, to secure certain tracts of land to be set aside for them as Indian Reserves. The movement began by a petition from the Montagnais Indians in 1845, for a grant of land for this purpose at the Baie des Outardes. This was supported by their missionary Father Durocher in 1848.¹ In 1850, a strong plea to the same end was made on behalf of the Archbishop of Quebec. In the course of his letter the Bishop of Sidyme says : “I do not doubt that your Excellency considering that these poor Indians have been deprived gradually of part of their means of living by the industry and trade which since a few years are exploiting the territory inhabited by their fathers (a state of things which the Government has been obliged to approve and even encourage in the interests of the country as a whole) recognizes that it would be unjust to let them die of destitution, while the Government withdraws from the exploitation of timber and from the sale of a few parts of that territory, revenues more than sufficient to enable it to prevent that misfortune and the extinction of a race of men who have all the more right to its protection in that it is weaker and of a minor importance in the mind of the community.”²

In consequence of these several representations there was appropriated and set apart for the benefit of the Montagnais Indians 90,000 acres of land divided into three reserves, namely, a tract of 5 miles on the river Peribonka north of lake St. John, comprising 16,000 acres ; a tract of 4,000 acres on the Metabetchovan. These two reserves were specially assigned to the Montagnais Indians of Lake St. John and Tadoussac.

There was also a grant of 70,000 acres on the north shore of the St. Lawrence between the River des Vases and the River des Outardes at Manicougan, about 11 miles in breadth by 10 miles in depth, which was expressed to be for the benefit of the “Montagnais, Tadoussacs, Papinachois, Nauthapie and other nomadic tribes in the interior of the King's Posts.”

In 1851 began the systematic appropriation of annual sums by the Government of Canada for the relief of the Indians, whose hunting grounds were in the Labrador territory.³ Until 1879, when the Department of Indian Affairs appointed a resident agent whose duty it was to devote himself to the welfare of these Indians, these sums were distributed to needy Indians under the authority of the Vicar General of the Diocese of Quebec, or such officers of the Government as were required to visit the Lower St. Lawrence in pursuance of their business. The sums granted in the first years were not large. They ranged from £125 currency or $500 in 1851 to $600 in 1857. In the accounts of the Department they were marked as for “ clothing and provisions.” During this period, in addition to the sums mentioned as given for relief there were certain other expenditures for other purposes. In 1862 and 1863 there was an epidemic of smallpox among these Indians and rather more than $1,200 was expended for vaccination.

An effort towards inducing the Indians to accept a more sedentary form of life was made in 1863 and 1864. A reserve of 30 acres was purchased at Bersimis, and seed was provided for garden vegetables. In these two years $386.50 was laid out for this purpose, and an item for seed for Bersimis appeared for many years in the accounts of the Department.

The establishment in 1879 of a regularly appointed agent at Bersimis, with a jurisdiction extending from the Saguenay to the eastern limits of the Province, enabled the Department to discharge the duties the Government had undertaken with regard to these Indians, with a degree of knowledge, until that time unobtainable. Two years after his appointment, the agent had the assistance of a constable; and the amounts expended in the prosecution of violations of the acts respecting the sale of liquor to the Indians show the activity of both agent and constable in this regard.

After the appointment of the agent, the accounts begin to show the particular purposes to which the expenditure was devoted. Thus, in 1880, besides the amount of $1071.00 marked specifically as “ Relief,” that is food and clothing, there is the further sum of $189.50 for medicine. In 1884 physicians accounts begin to appear.

The desirability of making the physician's services always available to the Indians led, in 1907, to the combination of agent's duties with those of the physician, and in that year a qualified physician was appointed as agent, under the title of “ Agent and Medical Officer.” Two of these officers were fixed on the Gulf coast in 1912, one at Bersimis, the other at Seven Islands. In addition to these officers, there was an agent stationed at Bersimis, and a medical officer at Escoumains.

In 1907 there began a particularly valuable form of assistance to the Indians engaged in hunting and fishing. An item appears in the accounts of that year “ Hunting Outfit—Hudson's Bay Company—St. Augustine—14 persons, $486.38.” This means that there was distributed through the agency of the Hudson Bay Company to 14 hunters whose dwellings were at St. Augustine, $486.38 in the form of supplies to assist them in the maintenance of themselves and their families during the period when they were engaged in hunting in the interior. The sums thus distributed were not gifts, but loans to be repaid on the return of the hunters with their furs in the following summer.

The importance of this assistance lay in the fact that it placed the Indians in an attitude of independence towards the merchants or companies, who purchased their furs. The practice which was as old as the fur trade itself, was for the merchants or companies to supply the Indians, who hunted in their interest, with such commodities as they required for the livelihood of themselves and their families during the several months when they were in the interior when they would otherwise have been dependent on the precarious chances of killing wild animals for food.

The commodities were supplied on credit which was to be discharged by the results of the season's returns. The system though the only one possible had obviously unsatisfactory features for both the supplying merchant and the Indians. In bad seasons which were not infrequent the Indian had not trapped sufficient furs to enable him to discharge his debt to the merchant; and if, as sometimes happened, the Indians fraudulently took their furs to a rival merchant who gave cash for them, the merchant who supplied the Indians lost on the transaction. But it was no less unsatisfactory to the Indian. Work as assiduously as he would to relieve himself of his burden, the accounts when balanced had the bad habit of showing the Indians still indebted to the merchant. This is a matter of experience wherever the credit system is in operation. With the accounts in the hands of the creditor, the debtor being ignorant and improvident, often no doubt unjustly conceives that he is being wronged by the merchant. This situation, involving the habitual dependence and frequently the practical slavery of the Indian, could not fail to breed discontent.

When the Government took on itself the advancing of these supplies, the position of the Indian was at once changed. He had a creditor whom he could not suspect of fraud. He could approach the person desiring to purchase his furs, with an independence and bargaining freedom which he had not until that time experienced.

The number of Indians taking advantage of this form of temporary assistance increased rapidly. In 1912, there were 26 Indians to whom hunting outfits were lent to the amount of $1001.08. In 1915, the number was 191, and the amount distributed, $7900.86. These figures have not since been equalled, but they would naturally vary in accordance with the requirements of the hunting Indians.

The fishing Indians, who stand in the same relation to the purchasing merchants as the hunters did were granted loans of the same sort. In 1917, $5346.57 was distributed among the fishing Indians for supplies and outfits. In 1918 the amount so distributed rose to $6924.36.

In 1918, the paternal beneficence of the Government towards its wards advanced another step. The amount of $563.12 was expended on repairs to widows' houses. In each of the years following, amounts for this purpose are noted in the accounts. In 1920, the expenditure was $868.66.

The accounts respecting the amounts granted under the heading of Relief will repay a moment's attention. As has been noted, the sum allocated for this purpose was in 1851 quite small—$500. These sums were increased as years passed until in 1921 the figure reaches a total of $31,821.76. Even more interesting is the fact, of which the accounts furnish abundant proof, that the Indians in every part of the peninsula came within the scope of the Government's benefactions. For many years the amounts granted for relief were distributed at the posts on the Gulf. Those enjoying the benefit of these grants were no doubt largely of Montagnais stock, though there is satisfactory evidence that a certain number of Naskapis came to the posts on the Gulf every year.

In 1893, information reaching the Department of Indian Affairs compelled it to widen its scope in the distribution of relief. On November 10 of that year, the Department wrote to Mr. P. McKenzie, Agent of the Hudson's Bay Company at Montreal,¹ stating that it had learned from the preliminary report of Mr. A. P. Low, which was written from Fort Chimo on September 9, that there was much destitution among the aborigines of that district. As it was the earnest desire of the Department to take some immediate action to relieve this pressing necessity, Mr. MacKenzie was asked whether Fort Chimo could be reached before the setting in of winter or in time to offer these Indians some relief. Although the Department had no funds appropriated for Indians in that locality still it did not desire that any suffering which might be prevented should occur. If it were possible to instruct the factor at Fort Chimo, the Department desired that he should be instructed to issue whatever ammunition was necessary to supply the Indians on their hunts; and in cases where ammunition would not be any practical benefit, to issue such relief in the shape of provisions as would prevent actual starvation.

² Reed to

p. 2950.

On June 15, 1894, the Department wrote to the Commissioner of the Hudson's Bay Company² stating that as it was always too late to forward assistance when the Department heard of destitution, the Superintendent General had decided to authorize the Company to give assistance to the Indians of that country when in extreme cases of need, and to have such expenditure as the Company might be put to in that way recouped on the presentation of an account supported by vouchers in detail.

³ Scott to Chipman,
Dec. 16, 1895,
p. 2961.

The Department placed no limit on the amount to be expended in that way but thought it ought not to exceed $800.

The Hudson's Bay Company accepted this duty, and sent in an account for $120.17 for ammunition &c., supplied to the Indians, which was paid on December 1895.³ The Company having inquired as to whether the Department desired such aid to be continued, were informed that provisions, such as flour and meat might be supplied to a limited extent to deserving Indians who might be unable to provide for themselves, and also ammunition, if necessary, in small quantities.

In the following year (1896) the Department was moved by an article in the Toronto "Globe" relating the distressing circumstances of the Labrador Indians, to ask the Company for advice as to how best to ameliorate the conditions described, and reminded the Company that it had already authorized the giving of relief by their officers at their discretion.⁴

Chipman,

From this time, one or more items appear each year in the accounts for the relief of the Indians of the Interior. The accounts presented are occasionally incomplete in that they do not show the number of Indians who received supplies; and, in 1898, the amount which was sent to the Company in payment of these supplies is not mentioned. But taken together the accounts make an impressive showing as to extent to which the Department went in relieving distress among the Indians. Noting only the larger sums given at these northern posts, in 1904, $385.25 was distributed among 161 Indians at Fort Chimo on Koksoak River, near its entrance into Ungava bay; in 1912, 86 Indians received through the agency of the Hudson's Bay Company and Revillon Brothers at Fort Chimo, and on the shore of Ungava Bay $998.96; in 1915, 138 Indians received through the posts at Chimo, Whale River and George River, $1183.06. In 1916, the amounts distributed through the Hudson's Bay Posts at Chimo and George River and the Revillon Brothers reached a total of $3037.08. In presenting the bills for this year the agent of the Hudson's Bay Company was moved to remark "Fort Chimo is gradually becoming the dumping ground for all the infirm and sick in northern Ungava; every year the Northern Esquimaux and Nascopie Indians bring in additions to the large number already there."

But the grants made through these northern posts in 1916 were greatly exceeded for the years 1919, 1920 and 1921, the amounts being $3293.48 ; $4803.37 and $6319.58 respectively. There was, also, an addition to the distributing points in this northern area. The Hudson's Bay Company's agents at Port Burwell, on the extreme north east coast of Ungava Bay ; at Whale River, and Leaf river, near the points where these rivers enter the southern shore of the same bay, and at Stupart's Bay on Hudson's Straits, all act as distributors of relief to the Naskapis and Esquimaux in the upper parts of the peninsula.

That none of the Indians of the interior of the Labrador peninsula might suffer from want so far as it was in the power of the Canadian Government to prevent it, distributions were made at two points in the interior north of Lake Melville, and at two others immediately on the Atlantic coast of Labrador.

The accounts for 1915 show that 26 Indians received relief from the agents of the Hudson's Bay Company and the Revillon Brothers at North West River, amounting to $290.33. North West River empties into Lake Melville on its northern side. Here are met the Naskapis from the Ungava Basin and Montagnais some of whom dwell in the neighbourhood of Lake Melville, while others come up from the Gulf of St. Lawrence posts, and sojourn here until the time for returning to the Gulf arrives. Accounts from these posts appear each year, that of 1920 amounting to $1202.40. In 1908, the Hudson's Bay Company's agent at Fort McKenzie, a post far up the Koksoak river, and in the centre of the Naskapi country, sent in an account for $90.98 for relief distributed by him. His account for 1920 was for $691.04 distributed among 80 Indians ; and in 1921, 7 Indians received $508.70 from the same source.

From the Atlantic coast of Labrador, came in 1901 a small account for $5.95 presented by the agent of the Hudson's Bay Company at Davis Inlet for assistance rendered by him to one or more Indians (the number does not appear in the account). It was paid by the Department of Indian Affairs. Nothing more was heard from this post until 1909, when another account was received. This time the number of persons to whom supplies were given by this agent on Canadian account was 94, and the amount charged was $376.92. In the years 1912, 1914 and 1915, further accounts were sent to the Department from the same source—in 1912 for $690.10 furnished in supplies to 14 Indians ; in 1914, 15 Indians were relieved at a cost of $210.10; and in 1915, 27 Indians received goods to the amount of $593.57.

p. 2686

As regards the other point on the Atlantic coast, the Department of Indian Affairs received a letter from Mr. Richard White, who resides at Tessiujaksoak, a point on the coast between the Moravian Settlements at Zoar and Nain, stating that he had issued relief supplies to 23 Naskapi Indians of the Canadian Labrador, and presenting an account for the same which amounted to $110.70. Since that time, accounts for supplies of the same nature have been received from Mr. White every year, and paid by the Department. In 1916, $281.73 was paid for supplies given to 18 Indians; in 1917, $215.00 for supplies to 9 Indians; in 1918, $287.75 for the relief of 26 Indians; in 1919, for $114.10 for 31 Indians; in 1920, $448.80 for 81 Indians; in 1921 for $437.95 for 59 Indians; and in 1922 for $393.85 for 76 Indians.

The very considerable proportions that the supplies issued from the posts on Ungava Bay, Hudson's Straits, the interior of the Labrador and the Atlantic Ocean bears to the total amount of the relief granted to the Indians of the Labrador peninsula will be seen from a view of the figures furnished with the accounts. In 1921, the total amount paid by the Department of Indian Affairs for relief to these Indians was $31,821.76—$24,870.73 at the Gulf posts, $6,951.03 at the others. That is, nearly 22% of the total outlay was expended at posts in the upper parts of the peninsula, in the regions where 20 the Naskapis dwell.

The following analysis of the accounts for 1921, the last complete year, will show the several forms which the paternal care of the Canadian Government takes, in its relations with the Indians of the Labrador Peninsula.

There is no evidence to show that the Newfoundland Government granted any relief to the Indians of Labrador. Indeed the evidence points conclusively in the opposite direction. As the agents of the Hudson's Bay Company distributed relief for both the Canadian and Newfoundland governments, the correspondence of these agents shows clearly to what classes the reliefs were granted by the respective governments.

In a letter describing the trade at the several posts in the Esquimaux Bay district, the agent at Rigolet says:—

“The Newfoundland Government was again compelled to come to the assistance of the population (Esquimaux and Planters) along the whole seaboard as otherwise the destitution and suffering would have been most frightful.” (Letter Book of Rigolet Post, pp. 361-371.)

In his report to the Commissioner of the Hudson's Bay Company at Winnipeg dated January 5, 1899, the agent at Rigolet states:—

“I caused provisions (flour, tea, molasses, only) and in a few cases, a little ammunition to be issued from time to time at Rigolet, Cartwright and Davis Inlet to such people—planters, Esquimaux—as were known to be in a destitute condition, and who had no means of supporting themselves and their families. The above accounts were forwarded to Messrs. Robert Prowse & Sons, St. John's, for collection, and I am informed by them were duly paid.”

In his report for the following year dated January 15, 1899, the agent at Rigolet says:—

“ During the last winter and spring in accordance with instructions from the Newfoundland Government, I caused to be issued to destitute planters and Esquimaux, provisions and a little ammunition to the following amounts:—

At Rigolet	$302.16
At Cartwright	341.94
At Davis Inlet	28.91

The accounts were forwarded to Messrs. Robert Prowse & Sons, St. John's for collection, on 3rd August, and were duly paid, Mr. Prowse remarking that the Government were well pleased with the management of this matter.”

Nowhere is there an indication that any of the relief granted by the Newfoundland Government was intended for, or reached, starving Indians. Indeed, three letters from the Agent of the Hudson's Bay Company at Rigolet to the Agents of the Company at Davis Inlet, Cartwright and Northwest River, dated July, 1899, establish beyond question the fact that, when relief was given to distressed Indians, it was the Canadian and not the Newfoundland Government that supplied the means.¹

On the position in which the Montagnais Indians consider themselves to stand towards the Sovereign of the British Empire, the following incident told to Abbé V. A. Huard during a visit to Betsiamis, and related by him in his volume “Labrador et Anticosti,” throws much light.

“ Although living in isolation, each family by itself, during so great a portion of the year, the Montagnais have nevertheless a certain autonomous civil organization. It would be much too savage to have none at all. Each tribe has its chief, who exercises the sovereign power under the sanction of the Canadian Government, and, rather more remotely, of the Crown of England. Father Durocher, one of the Oblates, who formerly labored in the Montagnais missions, once obtained from the Government four or five large silver medals, which were distributed to the chiefs of the several tribes. It is the emblem of their authority, and it is nearly all they possess by way of sovereignty. It is not that the people themselves settle important public affairs, as was the case in certain ancient republics. Let it be admitted: among these natives, there are no affairs to settle. The very objects for which a government exists were almost entirely absent. Such is the state of decadence into which a race may fall! There are not even clearly defined rules for the transmission of the supreme dignity, when the death of one of these potentates comes to pass; for they are not less subject to death than their colleagues, emperors, czars, or any monarchs whatsoever. Their power is not hereditary, and, in order to replace them—so far as that is possible—there is held, amid formalities which depend much upon circumstances, an election of a new chief, to whom is delivered as a substitute for enthronement, the large medal emblem of sovereignty.”²

The statement respecting the donation of the medals is fully borne out by the records of the transaction in the Department of Indian Affairs.

On October 1, 1853, the Reverend C. F. Cazeau, Vicar General, wrote to the Department reminding them of the request made by Father Durocher that three medals bearing the effigy of the Queen be donated to three Chiefs of the Montagnais Nation—John Baptiste Estlo, Thomas Colard, and Louis Bacon, Senior. The Department approving, the three medals were sent to Father Cazeau on October 29. In his letter of transmittal, Colonel Bruce, Superintendent General of Indian Affairs desired Father Cazeau to request Father Durocher “ to impress upon the Chiefs the high honor conferred and the paramount obligation it imposes on them to exhibit on all occasions unhesitating loyalty and obedience to their Sovereign and to offer an example of industry and of a moral and religious demeanour to the other members of the tribe.”

p. 2689

Father Cazeau informed Colonel Bruce that he had carried out this request, and had sent a copy of Colonel Bruce's letter to Father Durocher in order that the latter might communicate its contents to those who were to be thus decorated in the name of Her Majesty.

SECTION II.—THE ECCLESIASTICAL RELATIONS WITH THE LABRADOR INDIANS.

The root-idea in Champlain's mind, when he conceived the design of founding a New France beyond the Atlantic, was to make the natives of the country Frenchmen. The permeation of the country with French religion and civilization was the object he set before him. His letter to the King, dedicating to His Majesty the third volume of his voyages, explains his point of view. In speaking of the powers given to him he says: “ This is an occasion for enhancing the desire we have long cherished of sending groups and colonies over there, to instruct the people in the knowledge of God, and inform them of the glory and triumphs of Your Majesty, so that, with the French language, they may be also possessed of a French heart and spirit, which, after the fear of God, will breathe nothing so ardently as the desire to serve you.”¹ These words were largely a paraphrase of the injunctions given to Champlain in his commission as Commandant in New France which was issued on October 15, 1612.

How he proceeded in giving effect to this part of his Commission, he relates in the same volume.² He approached the Provincial of the Recollet Fathers, who manifested warm sympathy with his proposals, and discussed them with the cardinals and bishops of France, who happened to be in Paris attending the sittings of the States General then in session. These dignitaries were equally zealous in their desire to see efforts made to christianize the Indians of Canada, and set on foot a subscription to defray the necessary expenses of the undertaking. Success in this regard having been assured, the King issued letters patent giving to the Recollet Fathers the sole right to establish missions in Canada, and these were confirmed by the papal nuncio under directions of the pope. Finally, the merchants composing the company controlling the trade to Canada, agreed to feed, support, and carry free every year, to the number of six, the Recollet Fathers who might be chosen to carry on the missions among the Indians of New France.

The preliminaries having been thus satisfactorily settled four Recollet fathers sailed for Quebec, reaching the infant settlement in the beginning of June 1615. After a slight survey of the field, the priests held conferences at Quebec, in which with the approval of the Governor, they divided the territory between them. The first year was occupied in studying the temper, disposition and habits of the Indians with reference to their amenability to the teachings of the Church. A post was opened at Tadoussac, the point of assemblage of the Labrador Indians in their dealings with European traders, by Father Dolbeau who toiled among the Montagnais, following them to the woods and partaking of the hardships of their life. His journeys took him as far east as Seven Islands.¹

In July 1616, the priests assembled at Quebec to consider the situation. They drew up a report of their observations, in which the following remarks were made as regards the mission to the Montagnais Indians: “ That with regard to the nations down the river and those of the North, including the Montagnais, Etchemins, Betsiamites and Papinachois, the great and little Esquimaux, they occupy an uncultivated, barren, mountainous country; abounding however in all kinds of wild beasts, seals, beaver, moose, bear, marten, otter, lynx—the Indians are nomadic, wandering in the woods, excessively superstitious, attached to their juggleries, with no form of religion, and, so far as regards the most part, it would require a long time to civilize them.”¹

In spite of these unpromising conclusions, however, Fathers Huet, Caron or Irenaeus dwelt among these people nearly, if not every, winter until the Recollet missions were superseded by those of the Jesuits. They laboured assiduously, but it was rather in preparing the ground than in gathering the fruits. Some intimacies were established. Father Caron was adopted by a Montagnais chief as his brother. The same priest opened a school at Tadoussac in order, as he says, to attract the Indians, and accustom them to the French ways of living.¹ More important, however, was the compiling of a Huron and Montagnais dictionary,¹ to which Father Irenaeus, who had been instructed by Father Caron, made a considerable contribution.

The results achieved after 9 years of steady labour are summarised in a letter written in 1624 by the Superior of the Mission to the Provincial in Paris, “ I shall not give you much satisfaction by a great number of souls converted. Few real conversions are made among our Indians; the time of grace is not yet come, although nothing is spared to dispose them for the Faith. It must be hoped that as the colony is peopled we shall civilise the Indians. This is necessary first; their minds will open and their good sense, of which they have the base . . . ”

“ We have thus far traversed more than six hundred leagues inland, and even wintered with the principal nations. They do not lack good sense in what concerns the public or private interest of the nation; they reach their end and even adopt very fit means and measures; and it is the subject of my surprise that, being so enlightened for their petty affairs, they have nothing but what is extravagant and ridiculous when you treat of religious dogmas or rules of morality, laws and maxims. We have visited eight or ten different nations down the river towards Tadoussac, and we have found that almost all the Indians of New France acknowledge no divinity, and are even incapable of ordinary and natural reasonings on this point, so material and benighted is their intellect.”²

A conference of the fathers was called in Quebec in 1625. After a consideration of the vastness of the field, the paucity of laborers, and the smallness of their means, the fathers decided to call upon the wealthier and more powerful order of the Jesuits.¹ The overtures of the Recollets were heard favourably by the Provincial of the Jesuits in Paris, and five members of the order were assigned to duty in Canada.

p. 2691

Before the Jesuits were fairly settled down as co-laborers with the Recollets, Canada had fallen into the hands of the English, and from 1629 until 1632, when the country was restored to the French, all missions were suspended. When the missions were re-opened, they were taken over entirely by the Jesuits, the Recollets not returning until some years later.

The Recollets had four sedentary stations established before they left Canada—at Quebec, Trois Rivières, among the Hurons, and at Tadoussac. When the Jesuits returned they devoted themselves for some years almost exclusively to the Indians in the west. The reason would appear to be that the western Indians being more sedentary in their habits could be brought more readily under the continuous efforts of the missionaries. The Jesuits referred repeatedly to the difficulties of exercising influence over the eastern Indians, owing to their nomadic habits. They sought to make these Indians more sedentary by various means. A settlement was established near Quebec, where the missionaries hoped to induce the Montagnais to come and make their homes. On one occasion the Montagnais appealed to the Governor for assistance against the Iroquois. The Governor promised them what they asked on condition that they would agree to live in a settlement at Trois-Rivières.

vol. xxi, chap. 12,
p. 2974.

The decision to open a mission for the Indians of Eastern Canada and Labrador at Tadoussac was eventually brought about by negotiations between some Christian Montagnais dwelling at the mission of St. Joseph and some eastern Indians. The former had urged the eastern Indians to give up their wandering life, and live at St. Joseph, where they would be within hearing of the missionaries. The latter objected for several reasons, among them being fear of the Iroquois, and insisted on a missionary being sent to them at Tadoussac. This was conceded. The priest was well received, and the mission was opened.²

The missionaries did not, however, easily relinquish the idea of making the eastern Indians sedentary. Father Le Jeune, who gave the foregoing account of how the mission came to be established, indulged in the same letter, in a bit of prophecy. He said: “I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet; but, seeing what God has done in one France and in the other for the salvation of the Savages, I scarcely doubt that one day will be seen what I am going to remark.

“ First I expect St. Joseph will be peopled by Abnaquiois, by Bersiamites, by Savages from Tadoussac, by the Porcupine Tribe, by the Oupapinachiwekhi, and the Oumaniwekhi.”

The Bersiamites, Oupapinackiwekhi, and the Oumaniwekhi all dwelt on the Labrador coast, the Oupapinachiwekhi being better known as the Papinachois, and the Oumaniwekhi as the Oumamiwek.

The success which attended the services of the missionary at Tadoussac greatly encouraged him. Each annual Relation is a record of pious practices on the part of the Christian Indians, and of growing interest among those who were still pagans.

p. 2692

Tadoussac, however, was but a first step. It was nearer to the Eastern and North Eastern Indians than Quebec, but there were tribes down the St. Lawrence a hundred leagues and more beyond Tadoussac, whose trade would not take them to that port; and there were many others in this region, who dwelt far in the interior, from lake Mistassini to the Atlantic ocean, who had no occasion to visit ports on the St. Lawrence. These also were calling for missionaries, with an insistence that would not be denied. Inland journeys became a necessity, if the missions were to be counted successful.

xxxii.,
p. 2981.

The first journey into the interior was made by Father De Quen in 1647. He ascended the Saguenay to its source at Lake St. John, to make a pastoral visit to the Christian Indians of the Porcupine nation. He was warmly welcomed by the people as the first Frenchman who had set foot in their land.¹ Lake St. John was, like Kaniapiskau, Petitsikapau, and Sandgirt, a gathering place for the Indians from all parts of the Peninsula. One of the missionaries related having met Indians from twenty nations at that place.² Another states that he ministered to two Christian Indians, who had travelled 200 leagues to make confession.

² Jes. Rel.
vol. lvi.,
p. 2990.

The influence of the missionaries did much to break down the barriers, which had separated the different nations from one another. The father in charge of the missions in 1649-50, reported that “ the Christians with their chiefs, formerly so jealous of their country and port of Tadoussac, that they denied it intercourse with other nations, seeing that the Fathers could not go with them into the depths of their vast forests, invited them to dwell near them.”³ But the influence did not end here. “ These people who formerly concealed from the French the highways to the nations to whom they went for traffic, not being willing that even we should approach them, press us now that they are Christians, to follow them into the vast forests, in order to baptize and confess the nations who cannot reach their country.”³

xxxv.,
p. 2982.

That the invitation to the other nations was not without response is evident from the fact reported in the same Relation that the Papinachois “ who inhabit lands in the neighborhood of Anticosti ” began to appear at Tadoussac. A regular mission was established among this nation in 1667.

In 1661, Fathers Druillettes and Dablon made preparations for a journey much beyond anything until that time attempted. Hudson's Bay was the point at which they aimed. The Bay had many attractions for the fathers, both as missionaries and Frenchmen. As the director of the missions says in his report of that year : “ We have long known that we have the North Sea behind us, its shores occupied by hosts of Savages entirely unacquainted with Europeans ; that this sea is contiguous with that of China to which it only remains to find an entrance ; and that in those regions lies that famous bay, 70 leagues wide by 27° long, which was first discovered by Husson, who gave it his name,—Upon this bay are found, at certain seasons of the year, many surrounding nations embraced under the general name of Kilistinons ”⁴ They obtained much information regarding Hudson's Bay from a Nipissirien captain, and on the strength of it determined to see the bay.

They set out on June 1, 1661, and after many hardships managed to reach lake Nekouba, near the watershed separating the waters flowing into Hudson's Bay from those whose outlet is in the St. Lawrence. Reports of Iroquois onslaughts in the neighbourhood dispersed the Indians guiding the party, and they got no further. But the journey was far from fruitless. Nekouba was also a gathering place for the exchange of furs between the Indians of the far interior, and those who visited Tadoussac and other points on the St. Lawrence. “ Nekouba ” in the language of the report, “ is a place noted for a market which is held there every year, to which all the Savages of the surrounding country resort for the purpose of conducting their petty traffic.”¹ “ Furthermore, we saw people from eight or ten nations, some of whom had never beheld a Frenchman, or heard of God.”

xlvi.,
p. 2985.

So far, the expeditions inland had been up the Saguenay to the country to the North and northwest. The height of land on the way to Hudson's Bay was the farthest point reached in any direction.

In the same Relation, the Provincial of the Order in Paris is informed of a journey made by Father Bailloquet as far to the north-eastward as the mouth of the river St. Lawrence. He visited seven or eight different nations—the Papinachois, the Bersiamites, the Mont Pelés, the Oumamiowek, and others allied to these.² Two years later—in 1663—Father Nouvel paid a pastoral visit to the Papinachois in their territory in the interior. He accompanied a French merchant and a number of coast-dwelling Papinachois, who were engaged in the exchange of European commodities for the furs taken by their kinsmen of the interior. This procedure for the procuring of furs is mentioned by Father Coquart, who, in the course of a memorandum written in 1750 on the King's Posts, states that “ at the beginning of June the Agent at Jeremi Islets departs for Manicouagan and goes up the river to a certain place, where he meets the savages who inhabit these lands; he trades with them and brings back their peltries.”³

vol.
p. 2987.

The region towards which the party made their way was in the neighborhood of lake Manicouagan, at the head of Manicouagan river.⁴ The usual route inwards was along the Outardes River which runs roughly parallel to the Manicouagan. When the party reached their destination at the head-waters of the Manicouagan river, Father Nouvel was greeted as the first European who had ever appeared in that country. He found there sixty-four Papinachois who had just returned from the remote interior and were awaiting the arrival of compatriots in order that they might dispose of their furs.

Father Nouvel remained at lake Manicouagan two weeks, ministering in the meantime to a large party of Ouchestigoetch, a nation whose habitations were farther north than those of the Papinachois. Among those baptized was an Oumaniois captain with his wife and children. This zealous captain expressed his determination to visit the tribes on the shores of Hudson's Bay, and carry the good news to them. From him Father Nouvel obtained so precise an account of the people, who dwelt on the shores of Hudson's Bay that he was resolved to make a journey thither, in the following year.

The wide range of the contact established by these early fathers with the Indians of the Labrador peninsula is evident from a view of a map of New France, published in Historia Canadensis, a volume which appeared in 1664. On this map are shown the position and names of villages, tribes and lakes as far north as Hudson's Straits. That it is incorrect in many particulars is not to the point. These names and details could have been obtained from one source only, apart from the Jesuits themselves, that is, the Indians, who ranged over the remoter parts of the peninsula, and who attended the annual fairs or other places where trading between the interior and coast Indians took place.

The decision of the Jesuit Father to make an expedition to Hudson's Bay was confirmed by news received from Father Albanel, who was in charge of the Tadoussac mission. Albanel was making a pastoral visit to the Papinachois, and among those who attended his service, was an Indian from Hudson's Bay, who told him that a French vessel had been seen in the Bay. Its crew had pillaged and grievously maltreated the natives, and the captain of the vessel told him that he would be in the Bay on the following year, and that the people must all be directed to bring their peltries to him.¹

vol. liii.,
p. 2988.

This was a piece of news of consequence to others besides the missionaries. Talon, the Intendant of Canada, determined to send an expedition to the Bay, which would be under the charge of Paul Denis de St. Simon, one of his ² Jes. Rel.

vol. lvi.,
p. 2989.

officers, and the Jesuit Father Albanel.² In the party was a Canadian merchant, M. Couture. The expedition set out in August 1671. On reaching the upper waters of the Chamouchouan river, they met a party of Indians from the far north, who told them of trading ships anchored in Hudson's Bay, and of hostilities between those on the vessels and the natives. Believing it necessary to obtain credentials from the government, they despatched messengers to Quebec, and were thus delayed until the following Spring. On June 10, 1672, they resumed their journey, but on passing over the height of land were challenged by a chief, whose consent was held to be necessary to their further progress. Albanel took a high tone with the chief. He denied the right of any person to prevent Frenchmen from travelling where he pleased in Indian country. The French had driven their enemies the Iroquois from the country and it was due to them to have a free passage where they would. The Indian assented, and the party again moved forward. They reached lake Mistassini on June 18, lake Nemiskau, an expansion of the Rupert river on the 25th, and on the 28th came upon a small vessel of 10 or 12 tons flying an English flag. From the Rupert the party pushed on up the shore of Hudson's Bay till they reached the Eastmain river, which was the end of their journey. On the return journey Albanel planted the French standard on the shore of lake Nemiskau, and another at Minahigouskat river.

The hold obtained by Albanel over the Indians at lake Mistassini was strengthened by a visit made by Father Crépéul, in charge of the Lake St. John's mission, to the lake in 1674. He remained at Mistassini several weeks, and baptized more than 100 persons. Among these was a band from Hudson's Bay, who were so impressed that they promised to visit the mission again and bring with them as many as they could induce to accompany them.¹

In the same year (1675) the missions along the coast were extended by Father Nicholas, who made a short visit to Seven Islands, near the mouth of the Bersimis river, a place which he observes is “noted on account of the large concourse of Savages who after having hunted in the forests on the mainland resort from time to time to a river quite near the islands, to trade with the French. This region is properly the country of the tribes whom we call Oumaniois.”²

The publication of the annual Relations having been suppressed by the Pope in 1672, the account of the activities of the Jesuits in North America must be looked for in other quarters. Fortunately many manuscript copies of the later Relations, as well as numerous letters from missionaries are to be found in the archives of several libraries in Europe and America. By the enterprise of the Burrows Brothers Company of Cleveland, many of these have been unearthed and published in their monumental work “Travels and Explorations of the Jesuit Missionaries in New France.” But some idea of the extent of what is still missing may be gathered from the fact that, in this work, 56 volumes are occupied with the Relations between 1610 and 1672, whereas all the material considered pertinent to the subject that could be gathered between that date and 1791 is contained in 15 volumes.

The consequence is that the information as to the mission work of the Jesuits after 1672 is fragmentary, that obtained from the Relations being supplemented by facts gleaned from other sources. The only complete piece of information is the list of missionaries who served on the Tadoussac mission from 1640 until 1863. This list is contained in the report of the Missions of the Diocese of Quebec published in March 1864.³ Read in connection with the Journal of Father Laure,⁴ it shows that, with a gap of about twenty years between 1701 and 1720, there had been, at the time the list was compiled, no break in the continuity of evangelizing effort among the Montagnais and allied nations for upwards of two centuries.

In 1677, Father Boucher made a pastoral visit to the Papinachois at Ile Jeremie and at Seven Islands. He mentions that so eager were these Indians to take advantage of his ministrations that those who were no more than twelve or fifteen leagues away came to him at once. On this occasion he spent the winter with them.⁵

Father Crépéul spent the winter of 1671-1672 among the Papinachois, and notes the fortunate circumstance that he “happened to be there at a time when these Indians came in large numbers from the depths of the woods to carry on their small trading with the French.⁶

As already intimated there was a period of about twenty years when these missions were abandoned. Various more or less obscure circumstances may have accounted for this lapse in missionary labor in the regions under consideration ; but a statement of the revenues of the Order and their sources, published by the heads of the Order in Canada in 1701 makes it clear that lack of means was the principal contributing cause. Out of a total revenue of 13,135 livres, 9,000 was derived from France, partly from the King, partly from the estates of the Order. It is stated that when conditions were all favorable, the revenues might rise to as much as 1000 livres beyond the figure mentioned. On the other hand, the revenues might diminish and the expenses increase, if such untoward events as bad seasons or war supervened.¹

p. 2696

This is exactly what happened during this period. The war of the Spanish Succession had exhausted the French treasury, to the point that it could no longer make it customary contributions to the church in Canada. The consequences are reported to the Court. The Governor and Intendant state in 1700: “ Several Cures have already left, and others are preparing to do so” ; and the Intendant himself in the previous year informed the Minister that “ there are many people without religious succour, owing to the lack of priests and of funds.”²

The missions with headquarters at Tadoussac were resumed in 1720 by Father Laure and continued by him until the year before his death in 1738. He was succeeded by Father Maurice who commenced his work in 1740 by a journey to Iles Jeremie in company with M. Cugnet the lessee of the King's Posts. He died in 1745, and Father Coquart followed, beginning his mission where his predecessor had left it. He served in the same region until his death in 1765. His successor Father La Brosse began at Isle aux Coudres in 1766, passed down the River St. Lawrence in 1767, and after continuous service, partly on the North Shore of the St. Lawrence and partly at Gaspé and Nova Scotia, died at Tadoussac in 1782. During the period of Father La Brosse's service, there was a missionary, M. Parent, at Mingan and St. Augustin, on the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Father La Brosse was the last Jesuit missionary in Canada.

Details of the voyages made and work done by these evangelists are contained in the report made by Father Laure in 1730, and the Journals of Father Maurice and Coquart, which run continuously from 1740 to 1750. Fathers Laure and La Brosse, besides their purely missionary activities, both left works of lasting usefulness to those who followed them in this particular field. Both prepared dictionaries of the Montagnais language, and of the latter it has been said : “ La Brosse, the last of his order at Tadoussac, instructed many of his flock to

After the departure of the Jesuits from the mission fields, the work among the Labrador Indians was carried on under the immediate direction of the Bishop of Quebec ;⁴ and at some period not long after, if not coincidentally with, the new direction, an arrangement was made by the Bishop with the lessees of the King's Posts, and of the posts at Mingan and Masquarro, by which the latter paid the salary of the missionary, and all his expenses for conveyance and maintenance during the time of the mission.⁵ This arrangement continued under several lessees until the termination of the ancient scheme for the leasing of the exclusive trade of these territories to companies or individuals, in 1860.⁵ When the North West Company secured the lease in 1802, the Bishop of Quebec wrote Mr. McTavish one of the members of the Company, imposing certain obligations on the Company as a condition upon which the missionary would be sent, as the Indians desired. The Company were not to permit the Indians to receive liquor in quantities sufficient to intoxicate them ; nor were the servants of the Company to be permitted to have any communication with the Indians that was not strictly necessary. It had been customary, the Bishop went on to say, for the lessees to pay the missionaries 1500 livres or 50 guineas a year ; to provide means of transportation for the missionary from Rimouski to the nearest post by canoe ; and to restore him to Rimouski at the end of July. Food and lodging were also provided by the lessees.

The posts of Mingan and Masquarro, which formed part of the mission were leased to W. Grant, who paid 16 guineas out of the total of 50 guineas, and provided transportation and maintenance while the missionary was on service east and north of Seven Islands.

The Imperial Act of 1809 having restored to the Newfoundland Government the jurisdiction it enjoyed over the whole coast from river St. John, which enters the St. Lawrence at a point adjacent to the western end of Anticosti, to Cape Chidley at the south eastern end of Hudson's Straits, the question arose as to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction over this stretch of Coast. On September 10, 1809, the Bishop of Quebec wrote to the Vicar Apostolic of Newfoundland sending him a copy of the Imperial Act, and stating that if, as he hoped, the commission of the latter extended over the whole Government of Newfoundland, it followed that the territory attached to the Government of Newfoundland by that act no longer formed part of the diocese of Quebec.¹

Vicar Apostolic the papal brief, giving effect to this measure, the Bishop of Quebec stated that it had been his practice to send a missionary to make a pastoral visit to the Montagnais as far down as Mingan and Masquarrou. He would propose continuing this practice as Vicar General of the Bishop of Newfoundland, so long as the latter deems it proper for him to do so.

This arrangement worked satisfactorily, until the advent of the Reverend Mr. Fleming who succeeded to the Vicariate Apostolic in 1830. The Bishop of Quebec on learning of the change of dignitary wrote asking Mr. Fleming to give him authority as vicar general to attend to the spiritual needs of the Indians and others dwelling within the Newfoundland jurisdiction east of river St. John, but he could obtain no reply.

His first letter was written on March 19, 1832.³ This was followed by two reminders, but his letters remaining unanswered and the offices of the missionaries in relations to the Indians being seriously limited by want of power, he wrote to and obtained from, the Court of Rome an indult dated August 18, 1833, giving him all the powers he required in this part of the Newfoundland jurisdiction.⁴

Of the work done by the secular priests under the direction of the Archbishop of Quebec during the period between 1782 and 1844, few particulars are to be found. A letter written by Father Durocher in 1845, when he entered the field shows that it had not been neglected by his predecessors. Writing to Father Guigues, he states that the last of those missionaries, Father Boucher, had by his indefatigable and persistent zeal brought about the regeneration of the Montagnais, by inducing them to accept total abstinence from intoxicating liquors. During the three or four years prior to the arrival of Father Durocher, there had not been an instance of an infraction of the pledge taken by these Indians.²

Father Durocher carried on the temperance work among these Indians, with an ardour apparently equal to that manifested by Father Boucher. Father Arnaud writing to the Bishop in September 1850 says : “ It is Father Durocher who has completed the work among them, so courageously began by the indefatigable and zealous M. Boucher, whose memory is so dear to all the Indians of the coast ; and they have been even more steadfast in their promises than they were formerly easy to be misled by the love of firewater.”³ country. On May 9 of that year he informed the President of the Propaganda of the Faith of his intention to found at Grand Bay on the Saguenay a house of priests of the congregation of the Oblates, the mother house of which was at Marseilles, to take care of the settlements which were being rapidly formed on that river ; ⁴ and on October 4, he confided to Father Honorat the Superior of that Order, (1) the mission of St. Alexis de la Grand Baie on the Saguenay ; (2) the Indians of the King's Posts and of Mingan Seigneurie; (3) the Indians frequenting the shores of the St. Maurice ; (4) generally, all the Indians, Christian and pagan, who inhabit the northern part of the diocese beyond the parishes which have been formed there.⁵

The Oblate fathers entered on their work with praiseworthy zeal. They labored in every part of this difficult and extensive field, and their reports made annually or as opportunity offered, give an exact account of the Indians under their care. Taken in connection with the records of the Hudson's Bay Company, these reports enable us to construct the story of the Nascopies and other tribes so far as they emerged from the obscurity of the wilderness.

In 1845, Governor Simpson had before him a report made the year before, by the officer in charge of the post at North West River, stating that the Indians about the Bay (Esquimaux Bay or Lake Melville) were determined to go to Mingan to attend the services of the priest there.⁶ He was much perturbed by the news, and directed the agent to promise the Indians that if they would defer their visit to the Gulf, the Company would procure for them the services of a priest near the post in the following year. This same year, Father Durocher reported that the post at Seven Islands was occasionally visited by a few families of Naskapis, “ an infidel nation the members of which have for thirty years eagerly sought to be enlightened by the beacons of faith. They are too poor to stand the expense of the journey.” ¹

With these two statements must be coupled a third made by Father Durocher in his report for 1853. In a letter to the Superior of the Order he says : at Mingan “ there were waiting for me our dear neophytes and a large number of Indians from Esquimaux Bay. Nearly three years ago, these Indians left their country to come and be instructed in our holy religion. Most of them were still infidels and none, even those who were Christians, had ever seen the black robes.” ²

It is clear that the work began by the missionaries was being pursued by native converts—Montagnais, Naskapis or both—in regions at that time unvisited by ministers of the Church. The Jesuit Relations contain many references to the evangelizing zeal of the Indian converts. A striking instance—one of many—is recorded by Father Bailloquet on the occasion of his visit already mentioned to the mouth of the river St. Lawrence in 1661. Here he states that he was petitioned for baptism by some “ who believed that they fully deserved that happiness for having of their own accord learned the prayers, with no teacher but the Holy Ghost, through meeting with some Christian savages.” ³

The circumstances relating to the founding of the mission at Esquimaux Bay (Lake Melville) require to be told. In 1838, the Bishop of Quebec wrote to the Vicar Apostolic of Newfoundland. He first reminded the Vicar Apostolic that he had written to him several times during the preceding five years, without receiving a reply, and that, in order that the Indians and others residing beyond river St. John which was within the jurisdiction of the Vicar General, might have the full benefit of the services of his missionaries, he had been compelled to obtain vicar general's powers from the Holy See. Since obtaining these powers, merchants had informed him that other Indians belonging to the jurisdiction of Newfoundland and residing at Esquimaux Bay would be disposed to receive the seed of the faith, if a priest were sent to them. He had until that time declined to entertain the request that his priests should be sent into that distant region, partly because the pagans there did not belong to his fold, and partly because he had no priest available for this service. The Bishop of Quebec let the Vicar Apostolic know these facts in order that the latter might make provision for this part of his territory. If, however, there were no Newfoundland priests, who could undertake the mission, the Bishop would be prepared to send one or more from among his priests.⁴

In December of the same year, the Vicar Apostolic breaks silence for the first time, to give the Bishop the necessary powers to minister to the dwellers in that part of his jurisdiction situated on the mainland. But the Bishop found that his wishes to serve the Indians about Esquimaux Bay exceeded his resources, and on April 1847, he wrote to the Vicar Apostolic that he had not been able to take further advantage of those powers than to send missionaries to the Mingan Indians, who were nearest to his diocese.⁵

could not go so far inland, and as the Indians could come out to the Gulf, they were imperilling their eternal happiness by refraining from doing so. When the Hudson's Bay Company heard of this, they were alarmed at the imminent exodus from the fur country, and offered to take the missionaries into Esquimaux Bay in their trading vessels, and carry them back to Quebec at the end of the season.

In 1852, the subject became matter for discussion between the Archbishop and Father Durocher, who was serving on the North Shore. Father Durocher was opposed to sending missionaries to so distant a field as Esquimaux Bay, which was not in the diocese of Quebec, while many Naskapis, who were in this diocese were being neglected.¹ The Archbishop agreed with Father Durocher ; but an event was in course of realization, which presented the question to the Archbishop under a different aspect. The Archbishop of Quebec had shortly before received a letter from the Bishop of Newfoundland, asking him to join in a petition to the Holy See to attach to the Quebec diocese the section of the Labrador Coast between St. John River and Blanc Sablon.² In December 1852, the Archbishop informed the Secretary of the Propaganda at Rome of his willingness to take over this new territory.³ Thereupon, the desire to serve these Indians at Esquimaux Bay was translated into a binding duty.⁴ He conceived that the extension of his jurisdiction embraced the district about Esquimaux Bay and that he had no option but to provide missionaries for it.

In 1853, it was determined to send a missionary into the interior. Father Arnaud who was chosen to " follow the Indians in their remotest forests," made his preparations for the journey. He made prompt preparations, and set out from Les Escoumains, the head-quarters of the Oblate Missions. Reaching the Manicouagan river, he commenced the ascent, but the over-turning of his canoe and the dispersion of his Indians compelled him to return to Les Escoumains. Some Naskapis who had come down from the interior, learning of the mishap, persuaded him to make another attempt. This time he got as far as Lake Mushualogan, preceded by six canoes manned by Naskapis, and accompanied by eleven other canoes. Lake Mushualogan is one of the lakes at the headwaters of the Manicouagan, and was a notable gathering place of the Naskapis. Father Arnaud could get no further, however, and after wintering there, returned to Quebec.⁵

In the following year (1855) Father Arnaud made another attempt, but the upsetting of his canoe, and the loss of his supplies obliged him to abandon the journey.⁶

It was not until 1859, that preparations were made for another effort to reach the Naskapis in their homes, and again the undertaking ended in failure. On this occasion it was the combined representations of the chiefs of the Montagnais and Naskapis, whom he met at Seven Islands, that induced Father Arnaud to give up the attempt. At Fort Nascopie, said the Nascopie chief, starvation awaited him. He could not reach that point until winter had set in. The chief would not accompany him. Indeed, in words that voiced hopes long deferred, he declared: “ Father, I have left these places because the clerks have for a long time deceived me; they have led us to hope that the black robe would come and teach us the holy prayer. We have waited in vain every Spring; we have grown old ; our children have grown up, and still we do not know how to pray or sing the Holy Prayer. I told my children, we shall never return to this place, we shall go down towards the sea, where we shall see the black robe every year.” The Naskapi chief advised him to go by way of the sea to Esquimaux Bay, from which place he could reach Fort Nascopie in a fortnight.¹

In 1866, Father Babel managed to reach the Hamilton River at Lake Winokapau after a journey of 510 miles up the St. John's and Romaine rivers and across the height of land. On sight of the river he recommended “ to the Holy Mother's protection the many Naskapis frequenting the shores.” But at the post disappointment awaited him. The post was entirely deserted, the officer in charge having gone to North West River, and the Indians “ tired with waiting for the Missionary and believing that they had been once more deceived,” accompanied him. From the observations he was able to make, he formed a high opinion of Lake Winokapau as a mission site. He expected to meet fifty families there at once, and an increasing number thereafter.²

It fell to Father Babel to win success in 1867 after the many fruitless attempts to reach Esquimaux Bay and establish a mission there. The Hudson's Bay Company made this possible by extending their hospitality to him, and conveying him in their steamer to Esquimaux Bay. He is generous in praise of the kindness and good will shown him by Mr. D. A. Smith, and the captain of the steamer. After a week spent at Rigolet, he pushed on in a canoe to North West River, where he met a number of Montagnais, and, also, twenty-two Naskapis. He was undecided as to whether he would go on to Ungava or Fort Nascopie, but the Naskapis insisted that he should accompany them to the latter place. He spent 39 days in these labors. The result in baptisms, marriages and in the discouragement of irregularities of life gave him great satisfaction. He returned to the Gulf by an overland route.³

The next pastoral visit paid by missionaries to the Naskapis in the interior was made by Father Arnaud in 1871. From his report it would appear that a principal object in this visit was to inspect the several sites for a permanent station. His conclusion was that the site chosen by Father Babel had all possible advantages. It was close to the post opposite which he steamer anchored ; was nearer to St. Augustine by the overland route; was a good centre for the assembling of Montagnais and Naskapis, and could be reached from Sandy Lake, Petitsikapau and Winokapau.⁵

Arnaud went to Esquimaux Bay in 1872, and was gratified with everything he saw. Mr. Connolly, the factor of the Hudson's Bay had superintended the building of a church at North West River, and presented the mission with a bell, weighing 110 pounds, which he procured in England. The mission was given the name of Notre Dame des Neiges, Baie des Esquimaux.

p. 2702

The Montagnais and Naskapis welcomed him as a father. Arnaud proceeded from his mission centre to Ungava, but he had little or no success to report. He took the opportunity of confirming a statement made in his report of 1871.¹ In that report he noticed that at Rigolet there were a few Esquimaux families ; “ they never go up any further in the bay, as they are not on good terms with our. Montagnais, who come here to do their trading.” While at Ungava he observed that, “ the Esquimaux always stay on the coast, and unlike our Nascopies or Montagnais do not venture inland to hunt.”²

It is clear from the foregoing that in the past the Canadian missionaries had a large share in the establishment and maintenance of relations between Canada and the Indians of Labrador. They labored among them at the posts on the coast, and at the places of exchange up the great rivers ; followed them into the woods ; and founded missions in the centre of the peninsula to which they attracted them from the remotest parts.³ The influences they set up were felt by many who had never seen a missionary, and were so potent that numbers abandoned their hunting grounds in order to be near the priests.

The activities of the Church among these Indians are still continued.⁴ The district of Labrador was erected into a vicariate apostolic in 1906 and its boundaries are thus described in Canada Ecclésiastique (1921) the official list of the Roman Catholic Church :—“ On the South, from Portneuf river (including the Island of Anticosti) to Blanc Sablon ; on the east, from Blanc Sablon to the northern extremity of Labrador ; on the north, from this extremity to the entrance of Hudson's Bay; on the west, from the shore of Hudson's Bay to James Bay.”⁵ Within this territory there are 12 priests settled, besides the Vicar Apostolic. These include missionaries to the Montagnais, Naskapis and Esquimaux. The relations that were established by the Church with the Indians of Labrador are indicated by the fact that, in all representations to the Government respecting them, it was a member of the Church who was their spokesman. In 1760, after the reduction of Canada, when the Indians were in deep distress, through the suspension of the leases of the King's Posts, it was the Indian Chief and the missionary who were deputed to call upon the Governor to ask that the Indians might be taken under the protection of his Britannic Majesty, and supplied and maintained as they had been in the time of the French.⁶

The petitions of the Indians to have certain sections of territory assigned to them as reserves were vigorously supported by the Archbishop in representations to the Governor General ;⁷ and the first funds were appropriated for the relief of destitute Montagnais in 1851, on the report of Father Arnaud which was transmitted to the Department of Indian Affairs by the Archbishop.

Acte pour l'établissement de la Compagnie des Cent Associés pour le commerce du Canada, contenant les articles accordés a la dite Compagnie par M. le Cardinal de Richelieu, le 29 avril, 1627.

Le roi continuant le même désir que le défunt roi Henri-le-Grand, son père, de glorieuse mémoire, avoit de faire rechercher et découvrir ès pays, terres et contrées de la Nouvelle-France, dite Canada, quelque habitation capable pour y établir colonie, afin d'essayer, avec l'assistance divine, d'amener les peuples qui y habitent à la connoissance du vrai policer et instruire à la foi et religion catholique, apostolique et romaine ; monseigneur le cardinal de Richelieu grand-maître, chef et surintendant-général de la navigation et commerce de France, étant obligé par le devoir de sa charge de faire réussir les saintes intentions et desseins des dits seigneurs rois, avait jugé que le seul moyen de disposer ces peuples à la connoissance du vrai Dieu, était de peupler le dit pays de naturels françois catholiques, pour, par leur exemple, disposer ces nations à la religion chrétienne, à la vie civile, et même y établissant l'autorité royale, tirer des dites terres nouvellement découvertes, quelque avantageux commerce pour l'utilité des sujets du roi. . .

II. Sans toute fois qu'il soit loisible aux dits associés et autres, faire passer aucun étranger ès dits lieux, ains peupler la dite colonie de naturels François catholiques; et sera enjoint a ceux qui commanderont en la Nouvelle-France, de tenir la main à ce qu'exactly le présent article soit exécuté selon sa forme et teneur, ne souffrant qu'il y soit contrevenu pour quelque cause ou occasion que ce soit, à peine d'en répondre en leur propre et privé nom.

III. En chacune habitation qui sera construite par les dits associés, afin de vaquer à la conversion des sauvages et consolation des François qui seront en la dite Nouvelle France, y aura trois ecclésiastiques au moins, lesquels les dits associés seront tenus loger, fournir de vivres, ornements, et généralement les entretenir de toutes choses nécessaires, tant pour leur vie que fonction de leur ministère, pendant les dits quinze années, si mieux n'aiment les dits associés, pour se décharger de la dite depense, distribuer aux dits ecclésiastiques des terres défrichées, suffisantes pour leur entretien. Même sera envoyé en la dite Nouvelle France plus grand nombre d'ecclésiastiques, si métier est, et que la compagnie le juge expédient, soit pour les dites habitations, soit pour les missions: le tout aux dépens des dits associés durant le temps des dites quinze années ; et icelles expirées, remettra Sa Majesté le surplus à la dévotion et charité tant de ceux de la dite compagnie, que des François qui seront sur les lieux, lesquels seront exhortés de subvenir abondamment, tant aux dits ecclésiastiques, qu'à tous autres qui passeront en la Nouvelle-France pour travailler au salut des âmes. . . .

XVII. Ordonnera Sa Majesté que les descendants des François qui s'habitueront au dit pays, ensemble les sauvages qui seront amenés a la connoissance de la foi et en feront profession, seront censés et réputés naturels françois, et comme tels pourront venir habiter en France quand bon leur semblera, et y acquérir, tester, succéder et accepter donations et légats, tout ainsi que les vrais regnicoles et originaires françois, sans être tenus de prendre aucunes lettres de déclaration ni de naturalité.

COMMISSION OF LIEUTENANT-GENERAL OF NORTH AND SOUTH AMERICA.

FOR M. PROUVILLE DE TRACY, NOVEMBER, 19, 1663.

EDITS ET ORDONNANCES, VOL. III, 1856.

Louis, par la grâce de Dieu, roi de France et de Navarre, à tous ceux qui ces présentes lettres verront, salut.

Ayant considéré que pendant que le sieur comte d'Estrades, viceroi et notre lieutenant-général en l'Amérique, est en Hollande en qualité de notre ambassadeur, occupé pour nos affaires en ce pays-là, pour satisfaire au désir que nous avons, non seulement de veiller à la conservation des lieux qui sont sous notre obéissance dans l'Amérique, mais d'y faire de nouvelles découvertes et de nouvelles colonies, il est nécessaire d'y établir quelque personne d'autorité qui en l'absence du dit sieur comte d'Estrades puisse régir, augmenter et conserver les dits lieux et puisse en attendant notre domination dans le pays, y servir principalement à l'accroissement du christianisme et à l'amélioration du commerce. Et sachant que le dit sieur de Prouville Tracy, conseiller en nos conseil d'état et privé, ci-devant commissaire-général de notre armée d'Allemagne et lieutenant-général en nos armées, a toutes les qualites propres pour s'acquitter dignement de cet emploi, et qu'après les preuves qu'il a données de sa valeur clans les commandements qu'il a eu sur nos troupes en Allemagne et ailleurs, et de sa prudence clans les négociations qui lui ont été commises, nous avons tout sujet de croire que nous ne pouvions faire un meilleur choix que de lui pour commander au dit pays.

A ces causes et autres considérations à ce nous mouvans, nous avons le dit sieur Prouville de Tracy, constitué, ordonné et établi, constituons, ordonnons et établissons par ces présentes signées de notre main, notre lieutenant-général clans toute l'étendue des terres de notre obéissance situées en l'Amérique Méridionale et Septentrionale, de terre ferme, et des isles, rivières, ports, hâvres et côtes découvertes et à découvrir par nos sujets, pour en l'absence du dit sieur comte d'Estrades, vice-roi, avoir commandement sur tous les gouverneurs et lieutenans-généraux par nous établis daps toutes les dites isles de terre ferme de Canada, Acadie, Terre-neuve, Isles des Antilles et autres; comme aussi sur tous les officiers et conseils souverains établis clans toutes les dites isles et sur les vaisseaux français qui navigueront aux dits pays, soit de guerre à nous appartenans, soit marchands; faire prêter nouveau serment de fidélité, taut aux gouverneurs et conseils souverains qu'aux trois ordres des dites isles; enjoignant aux dits gouverneurs, officiers, et conseils souverains et autres, de reconnoître le dit sieur Prouville de Tracy, et de lui obéir en tout ce qu'il leur ordonnera; assembler quand besoin sera les communautés, leur faire prendre les armes, prendre connaissance, composer et accommoder tous différends qui pourroient être nés et à naître dans les dits pays, soit entre les seigneurs et principaux d'iceux, soit entre les particuliers habitans; assieger et prendre des places et chateaux selon la nécessité qu'il y aura de la faire, y faire conduire des pièces d'artillerie et les faire exploiter; établir des garnisons où l'importance des lieux le demandera; faire selon les occurrences, paix ou trêves, soit avec les autres nations de l'Europe établies dans le dit pays, soit avec les barbares; faire descente soit en terre ferme, soit dans les isles pour s'emparer de nouveaux pays et pour établir de nouvelles colonies, et pour cet effet, donner combats et se servir des autres moyens qu'il jugera à propos pour telles entreprises; commander tant aux peuples au dit pays, qu'à tous nos autres sujets, ecclésiastiques, nobles, gens de guerre et autres, de quelques condition qu'ils soient, y demeurant, dont et si avant qu'il pourra faire étendre nos limites et notre nom, avec plein pouvoir d'y établir notre autorité et d'assujétir, soumettre et faire obéir tous les peuples des dites terres, les appelant par toutes les voies les plus douces qu'il se pourra à la connoissance de Dieu et lumière de la foi et de la religion catholique, apostolique et romaine, et en établir l'exercice à l'exclusion de toute autre; défendre les dits lieux de tout son pouvoir, maintenir et conserver les dits peuples en paix, repos et tranquillité, et commander tant par mer que par terre; ordonner et faire exécuter tout ce que lui ou ceux qu'il commettra, jugeront le devoir et pouvoir faire, pour l'étendue et conservation des dits lieux, sous notre autorité et notre obéissance, et généralement faire et ordonner par lui, en l'absence du dit comte d'Estrades, vice-roi, tout ce qui appartient à la dite charge de notre lieutenant-général au dit pays, la tenir et exécer, en jouir et user aux honneurs, pouvoirs, autorités, prérogatives, prééminences, franchises, libertés, droits, fruits, profits, revenus et émolumens y appartenans, et aux gages et appointemens qui lui seront

Le conseil assemblé où étoient Monsieur le governor, Monsieur l'évêque, Messieurs de Villeray et Damours, le procureur-général du roi présent, et depuis Messieurs de la Ferté et de Tilly. Sur ce qui auroit été représenté par le procureur-général du roi qu'ensuite du viol commis en la personne de Marthe Hubert, femme de . . . dit Lafontaine, habitant de l'Isle d'Orléans, par ... dit Robert Hache, sauvage, lequel pour cet effet ayant été constitué prisonnier et ensuite fait évasion des prisons; pour s'accommoder en quelque façon à la manière des sauvages nos alliés, lesquels ignorent nos lois et les peines ordonnées pour le châtiment de la plupart des crimes et notamment du viol, il auroit fait assembler par-devant le dit conseil les nommés Noël Tek8erimat, chef des Algonquins de Québec ; Kaetmaguechis, vulgairement Boyer, chef de Tadoussac ; Mangouche, chef des sauvages Nepissiriniens; Gahyk8an, chef des sauvages Iroquois; Nauck8ape8ith dit le Saumonnier, chef des . . . et Jean-Baptiste Pipouikih, capitaine Abnakiois, afin de répondre pour le dit Robert Hache et voir dire que, pour réparation du dit viol, le dit Robert Hache auroit mérité d'être pendu et étranglé. Ce qu'ayant été donné à entendre aux dits sauvages par Nicolas Marsollet, pris pour interprète en présence du Père Drouillettes, de la Compagnie de Jésus, les dits sauvages, par la bouche du dit Noël Tek8erimat interprété par le dit Marsollet, auroient dit que depuis un long cours d'années ils s'étoient toujours maintenus en amitié avec les François; que si leur jeunesse n'avoit pu si bien se comporter en quelque rencontre qu'elle n'eût donné quelque sujet de plainte, la jeunesse française n'en avoit pas été non plus exempte; que jusqu'à présent on ne leur avoit point donné à entendre que le viol fut puni de mort, mais bien le meurtre, et qu'ainsi la faute du dit Robert Hache, dont même il ne convient pas, ne devoit pas être pour une première fois envisagée à la rigueur, ni donner atteinte à une amitié si ancienne; mais que pour l'avenir ils s'y soumettroient volontiers, et que pour cet effet ils requéroient que la chose fut rédigée par écrit, afin qu'elle demeurât à leur postérité; et afin de continuer à vivre en amitié et ôter les obstacles qui pourroient s'y opposer, il fût fait défense aux François, créanciers des sauvages, de les piller et excéder faute de payment, d'autant que pendant ce tems de guerre il est impossible aux sauvages de satisfaire entièrement, ne pouvant faire leur chasse qu'à demi :

Le conseil, après avoir mis l'affaire en délibération, a remis et remet au lit Robert Hache la peine qu'il avoit méritée pour raison du dit viol, sauf es intérêts civils à la dite Marthe...; et pour empêcher à l'avenir tels désordres, du consentement des dits Tek8erimat, Kaetmaguechis, Mangouche, Gahyk8an, Nauch8ape8ith et Pipouikih, ordonné et ordonne que les dits sauvages subiront les peines portées par les lois et ordonnances de France pour raison du meurtre et du rapt, lesquelles leur ont été données à entendre par le dit interprète, et à eux enjoint de le faire savoir à tous ceux de leurs nations ce qu'ils n'en ignorent ; et au regard des contraintes que les François, créanciers des dits sauvages, leur font pour en être payés, il y sera fait droit selon l'exigence des cas.

Etablissement de la

mai 1664. Ins.
Cons
Sup. fol. 14 Ro.No. 1073.*ESTABLISHMENT OF THE COMPANY OF THE WEST INDIES.

EDITS ET ORDONNANCES (1854), VOLUME I.

Louis, par le grace de Dieu, Roi de France et de Navarre, à tous présents et avenir, salut.

La paix dont jouit présentement cet Etat, nous ayant donné lieu de nous appliquer au rétablissement du commerce, nous avons reconnu que celui des colonies et de la navigation sont les seuls et véritables moyens de le mettre dans l'éclat où il est chez les étrangers, pour à quoi parvenir et exciter nos sujets à former puissante compagnie, nous leur avons promis de si grands avantages, qu'il y a lieu d'espérer que tous ceux qui prendront quelque part à la gloire de l'état et qui voudront acquérir du bien par les voies honorables et légitimes, y entreront très volontiers, ce que nous avons reconnu avec beaucoup de joie par la campagne qui s'est formé depuis quelques mois pour la terre ferme de l'Amérique, autrement appelée France équinoctiale; mais comme il ne suffit pas à cette compagnie de se mettre en possession des terres que nous leur concédons et les faire défricher et cultiver par les gens qui y envoient avec grands frais, si elles ne se mettent en état d'y établir le commerce, par le moyen duquel les Français qui s'habitueront aux dits pays communiquent avec les naturels habitants en leur donnant, en échange des denrées qui croissent dans leur pays, les choses dont-ils ont besoin. Il est aussi absolument nécessaire pour faire ce commerce d'équiper nombre de vaisseaux pour porter journellement les dites marchandises qui se débitent au dit pays et rapporter en France celles qui s'en retirent, ce qui n'a point été fait jusqu'à présent par la compagnie ci-devant formée, ayant reconnu que le pays de Canada a été abandonné par les intéressés en la compagnie qui s'étoit formée en mil six cent vingt-huit, faute d'y envoyer annuellement quelque léger secours, et que dans les Isles de l'Amérique où la fertilité des terres y a attiré un grand nombre de François, ceux de la compagnie à laquelle nous les avons concédées en l'année mil six cent quarante-deux, au lieu de s'appliquer à l'agrandissement de cette Colonie et d'établir dans cette grande étendue du pays un commerce qui leur devoit être très-avantageux, se sont contentés de vendre les dites Isles à divers particuliers, lesquels s'étant seulement appliqués à cultiver les terres, n'ont subsisté depuis ce temps-là que par le secours des étrangers, en sorte que jusques à présent ils ont seuls profité du courage des François qui ont les premiers découvert et habite les dites Isles et du travail de plusieurs milliers de personnes qui ont cultivé les dites

p. 2715

terres. C'est pour ces considérations que nous avons repris des intéressés en la dite Compagnie de Canada la concession qui leur avoit été accordée du dit pays par le feu Roi notre très honoré Seigneur et père de glorieuse mémoire, laquelle ils nous ont volontairement cédée par acte en leur assemblée du vingt-quatrième février, mil six cent soixante-et-trois et que nous avons résolu de retirer toutes les Isles de l'Amérique qui ont até vendues aux dits particulier par la dite compagnie en remboursant les propriétaires d'icelles du prix de leurs acquisitions et des améliorations qu'ils y auront faites: mais comme notre intention a été en retirant les dites Isles, de les remettre entre les mains d'une compagnie qui put les posséder toutes, achever de les peupler et y faire le commerce que les étrangers y font présentement, nous avons estimé en même temps qu'il étoit de notre gloire et de la grandeur et avantage de l'état de former une puissante compagnie pour faire tout le commerce des Indes Occidentales, à laquelle nous voulons concéder toutes les dites Isles, celles de Cayenne et de toute la terre ferme de l'Amérique, depuis la rivière des Amazones jusqu'à celle d'Orenoc; le Canada, l'Acadie, Isle de Terre-neuve et autres Isles et terre ferme, depuis le nord du dit pays de Canada jusqu'à la Virginie et Floride, ensemble toute la côte de l'Afrique depuis le Cap Vert jusqu'au Cap de Bonne-Espérance, soit que les dits pays nous appartiennent pour être ou avoir été ci-devant habités par les François, soit que la dite compagnie s'y établisse, en chassant ou soumettant les sauvages ou naturels du pays ou les autres nations de l'Europe qui ne sont dans notre alliance, a[?]n que la dite compagnie ayant établi de puissantes colonies dans les dits pays, elle les puisse regir et gouverner par un même esprit, et y établir un commerce considérable tant avec les François qui y sont jà habitués et ceux qui s'y habitueront ci-après, qu'avec les Indiens et autres naturels habitants des dits pays dont elle pourra tirer de grands avantages, pour cet effet nous avons jugé à propos de nous servir de la dite compagnie de la terre ferme de l'Amérique; laquelle compagnie étant déjà composée de beaucoup d'intéressés et munie de nombre de vaisseaux, peut aisément se mettre en état de former celle des Indes Occidentales et se fortifiant de tout ceux de nos sujets qui voudront y entrer, soutenir cette grande et louable entreprise.

. . . .1. Comme nous regardons dans l'établissement des dites colonies principalement la gloire de Dieu en procurant le salut des Indiens et sauvages, auxquels nous désirons faire connoître la vraie religion, la dite compagnie présentement établie sous le nom de Compagnie des Indes Occidentales, sera obligée de faire passer aux pays ci-dessus concédés be nombre d'ecclésiastiques nécessaire pour y prêcher le Saint-Evangile et instruire ces peupler en la créance de la religion catholique, apostolique et romaine, comme aussi de bâtir des églises et d'y établir des curés et prêtres, dont elle aura la nomination, pour faire be service divin aux jours et heures ordinaires et administrer les sacremens aux habitans, lesquels églises, curés et prêtres la dite compagnie sera tenue d'entretenir décemment et avec honneur, en attendant qu'elle les puisse fonder raisonnablement, sans toutefois que la dite

p. 2716

compagnie puisse changer aucun des ecclésiastiques qui sont à présent établis dans les dits pays, sur lesquels elle aura néanmoins le même pouvoir et autorité que les mêmes gouverneurs et propriétaires des dites isles. . . .

XXXIV. Et pour favoriser d'autant plus les habitans des dits pays concédés, et porter nos sujets à s'y habituer, nous voulons que ceux qui passeront dans les dits pays jouissent des mêmes libertés et franchises que s'ils étaient demeurant en ce royaume, et que ceux qui naîtront d'eux et des sauvages convertis à la foi catholique, apostolique et romaine soient censés et réputés regnicoles et naturels françois, et comme tels, capables de toutes successions, dons, legs et autres dispositions, sans être obligés d'obtenir aucunes lettres de naturalité, et que les artisans qui auront exercé leur art et métier au dit pays pendant dix années consécutives, en rapportant certificats des officiers des lieux où ils auront demeuré, attestés des gouverneurs et certifiés par les directeurs de la dite compagnie, soient réputés maîtres des chefsd'oeuvres en toutes les villes de notre royaume où ils voudront s'établir sans aucune exception.

. . . .Après que le Pere Nouvel fut retourné de sa Mission des Papinachois, l'on prit enfin la resolution de remplir la place du fameux Capitaine Noel Tekoüerimat qu'on auoit laissé par l'honneur qu'on rendoit à sa vertu, & à son courage, sans successeur depuis plusieurs années, selon la coutume des Sauvages.

Les parents du defunct, à qui il appartient de nommer celui qui doit succeder au mort, jetterent les yeux sur Negaskaoüat Capitaine de guerre de Tadoussac : ils le presenterent à toutes les Nations assemblées à ce dessein à Sillery. C'est la que l'on cré le premier Capitaine, & où il a coutume de resider. Cependant l'on avoit préparé un grand festin pour regaler toutes ces Nations au despens des parents qui devoient adopter Negaskaoüat, & luy donner le nom de Tekoüerimat avec sa charge; ce qui s'appelle parmi eux ressusciter un Capitaine.

Pour commencer la ceremonie, on déchaussa le nouveau Capitaine, & on luy osta les anciens habits, ensuite les parents luy en donnerent de nouveaux. Mais il y eut icy quelque chose de changé des solemnitez ordinaires, car le nouveau Teykorimat fut entierement habillé à la Françoise, & au lieu du tour de teste, que la femme du deffunt avoit accoustumé de mettre sur la teste de celuy qui ressuscite son feu Mary, la femme de l'ancien Teykorimat mit sur la teste de Negaskaoüat un chapeau orné d'un fort beau tour de plumes. L'affection que l'ancien & le nouveau Teykorimat ont tousiours temoignée aux François, a esté rune des causes du changement de cette ceremonie.

Le festin estant préparé, on fit les harangues ordinaires, avec les presents qui les accompagnent. Le Pere Nouvel fit l'ouverture, où il representa trois choses au nouveau Capitaine.

Premierement il l'exhorta à la mesme pieté que son Predecesseur avoit tousiours fait paroistre. Secondement il le porta à continuer d'avoir pour les François la mesme affection que son Pere qu'il ressuscitoit, autant par ses exemples, que par son nom de Teykorimat. En troisiéme lieu, il luy remontra l'obligation qu'il avoit de maintenir les siens clans la Foy & Bans l'obeissance, qu'ils doivent à nostre invincible Monarque.

Les presents de Colliers de Porcelaine estant faits, le Pere Albanel harangua à son tour, & se conjouit avec le nouveau Capitaine, d'avoir en sa personne un autre Teykorimat, avec ses vertus, & son affection pour les François: puis se tournant vers toutes les Nations qui estoient presentes, il les exhorta à aymer la Foy que thus avoient embrassée & à fuir le vice, qui les feroit infalliblement perir, s'ils n'y renonçoient. La ceremonie du jour finit par le festin.

Le lendemain tous les Capitaines Sauvages ayant à leur teste Teykorimat habillé à la Françoise, la cane à la main, allerent saluer Monsieur de Courcelle nostre Gouverneur, & le reconnoistre. Il luy demanderent la protection du Roy, dont ils sont les sujets, & son assistance particuliere pour empescher parmi eux les desordres des vices: puis tous se retirerent.

DE PAR LE ROI.

Sa Majesté étant informée que quelques habitans établis dans son pays de Canada ou Nouvelle-France, se rendent vagabonds dans les bois sous prétexte de chasse ou de commerce de pelleteries avec les sauvages, ce qui étant entièrement contraire à l'établissement de la colonie du dit pays ; Sa Majesté a fait très-expresses inhibitions et défenses à tous François habitans au dit pays domiciliés ou non domiciliés, de sortir ni abandonner leurs maisons et vaquer dans les bois plus de vingt-quatre heures sans la permission expresse du gouverneur et lieutenant-général au dit pays, à peine de la vie.

Mande et ordonne Sa Majesté au sieur comte de Frontenac, gouverneur et lieutenant-général, aux officiers du conseil souverain établis au dit pays, ensemble aux juges ordinaires des lieux d'exécuter chacun en droit soi la présente ordonnance et de la faire registrer et publier partout où besoin sera.

DE PAR LE ROI.

Sa Majesté étant informée que les permissions qui ont été cidevant données à plusieurs habitants de son pays de la Nouvelle-France, pour aller à la traite des pelleteries dans les habitations des Sauvages et dans la profondeur des bois, chez les nations les plus éloignées, sont très préjudiciables au bien et à l'avantage du dit pays, non seulement parce que ces permissions causent la désertion des habitants, mais empêchent le trafic et utilité que les mêmes habitants retirent des sauvages, lorsqu'ils viennent eux-mêmes porter leurs pelleteries dans les habitations Françaises, qu'il arrive même que ceux à qui on a accordé ces sortes de permissions étant des vagabonds et libertins, portent leurs pelleteries aux étrangers, au lieu de les venir vendre aux François; et comme il importe d'empêcher à l'avenir que ce desordre n'arrive, Sa Majesté a fait et fait très expresses inhibitions et défenses à toute personnes de quelque qualité et condition qu'elles soient, d'aller à la traite des pelleteries dans les habitations des sauvages, et profondeur des bois, et à ses gouverneurs et lieutenants généraux et particuliers du dit pays de la Nouvelle-France d'en délivrer et expédier aucune permission à peine contre les particuliers pour la première fois qu'ils iront à la dite traite, de confiscation des marchandises dont ils seront trouvés saisis, tant en allant qu'en revenant de leurs voyages, et deux mille livres d'amende, applicable moitié à Sa Majeste et l'autre moitié aux pauvres de l'hôpital de Quebec, et en cas de récidive, en telle peine afflictive, qu'il sera jugé par le sieur Duchesneau, intendant du dit pays de la Nouvelle-France. Sa Majesté étant informée que les défenses qu'elle a faites par son ordonnance du quinzième avril mil six cent soixante-seize à tous les habitans du pays de la Nouvelle-France d'aller à la traite des pelleteries dans les habitations des sauvages et profondeur des bois, sont éludées par les congés et permissions que l'on accorde facilement aux dits habitans pour aller à la chasse, et que ces permissions nonseulement causent la désertion des dits habitans, mais encore servent de prétexte pour faire la traite chez les nations les plus éloignées, et même pour porter les pelleteries aux étrangers, au préjudice des sujets de Sa Majesté qui sont frustrés de l'utilité qu'ils retireroient des sauvages, s'ils venoient eux-mêmes porter leurs pelleteries dans les habitations françoises; et Sa Majesté voulant remédier a ce désordre, Sa Majesté a fait et fait très expresses inhibitions et défenses à toute personnes, de quelque qualité et condition qu'elles soient, de chasser hors l'étendue des terres défrichées et habitées par ses sujets habitans du dit pays et une lieue à la ronde, et aux gouverneur et lieutenants-généraux pour Sa Majesté au dit pays d'en expédier et délivrer à l'avenir aucune permission, à peine contre les particuliers qui contreviendront aux présentes défenses de deux mille livres d'amende, applicable moitié au roi et moitié à l'hôpital de Québec, pour la première fois, et de peine afflictive, tel qu'il sera jugé à propos par le sieur Duchesneau, intendant au dit pays, en cas de récidive.

DE PAR LE ROI.

Sa Majesté s'étant fait représenter son ordonnance du douze mais mil six cent soixante-dix-huit, portant défenses à tous ses sujets du pays de Canada de chasser hors l'étendue des terres défrichées et habitées, et une lieue à la ronde, et aux gouverneurs et lieutenans généraux pour Sa Majesté au dit pays d'en expédier et délivrer à l'avenir aucune permission ; et Sa Majesté étant informée qu'encore qu'il soit propos d'empêcher la traite qui se fait dans les habitations des sauvages et profondeur des bois sous prétexte des congés de chasse, néanmoins l'exécution de cette ordonnance causeroit quelque préjudice à la colonie : à quoi Sa Majesté voulant pour voir, Sa Majesté a fait et fait très expresses inhibitions et défenses à tous ses sujets habitans du dit pays, de chasser hors l'étendue des terres défrichées et habitées et une lieue à la ronde, aux peines portées par l'ordonnance du douzième mai mil six cent soixante-dix-huit. Et néanmoins permet au sieur comte de Frontenac, gouverneur et lieutenant général pour Sa Majesté au dit pays, de donner des permissions de chasser depuis le quinzième janvier jusques au quinzième jour d'avril de chacune année, à condition que ceux qui les obtiendront seront de retour dans le dit jour quinzième avril et qu'ils ne pourront porter aucunes marchandises de traite, ni se faire payer aucunes dettes par les sauvages, et qu'il sera procédé contr'eux en cas de contravention suivant la rigueur de la dite ordonnance du douzième mai mil six cent soixante-dix-huit ; et à cet effet ils seront tenus de faire déclaration du jour de leur départ et retour pardevant les plus prochains juges des lieux, qui en donneront avis au dit sieur comte de Frontenac et au sieur Duchesneau, intendant de police, justice et finances au dit pays, auquel Sa Majesté mande de tenir la main à l'exécution de la présente ordonnance, qui sera lue publiée et affichée, afin qu'aucun n'en prétende cause d'ignorance.

EDITS ET ORDONNANCES. VOLUME I. 1854.

Louis, par la grâce de Dieu, roi de France et de Navarre, à tous présents et à venir, salut.

Les soins que nous avons pris de la colonie de notre pays de la Nouvelle-France, nous ayant fait connoître que pour la rendre florissante, il étoit nécessaire d'empêcher le commerce que plusieurs habitans du dit pays foisoient dans les habitations des Sauvages les plus éloignées, et dans la profondeur des bois, nous l'aurions défendu par nos ordonnances des quinze avril mil six cent soixante-seize, et douze mai mil six cent soixante dix-huit, nonobstant lesquelles la plupart des habitans du dit pays s'étant trouvés engagés par ce commerce illicite, auroient abandonné leurs maisons, et la culture de leurs terres, pour se mettre à couvert des poursuites de nos officiers, et éviter les peines qu'ils avoient encourues ; mais ayant enfin reconnu leur faute, et nous ayant fait supplier très-humblement de leur en accorder le pardon pour pouvoir retourner dans leurs maisons, nous avons bien voulu user envers eux de notre clémence.

A ces causes, de l'avis de notre conseil, et de notre pleine puissance et autorité royale, nous avons par ces présentes, signées de notre main, accordé et accordons aux dits habitans de notre pays de la Nouvelle-France, qui ont fait commerce avec les Sauvages, sans permission de ceux qui ont pouvoir de la donner, amnistie jusqu'au jour de l'enregistrement des présentes. Voulons et nous plait qu'ils soient rétablis en tous leurs privilèges, libertés, franchises, immunités et droits dont ils ont jouï paisiblement et ont droit de jouir, sans qu'ils puissent en être troublés à l'avenir, que les jugemens qui pourroient avoir été rendus contre eux pour raison de ce, soient de nul effet, et que les dites contraventions à nos ordonnances soient pardonnées, éteintes et abolies, comme de notre grâce spéciale, pleine puissance et autorité royale, nous les pardonnons, éteignons et abolissons, imposant sur ce silence perpétuel à nos procureurs généraux, leurs substituts et tous autres.

Si donnons en mandement à nos ames et feaux conseillers, les gens tenant notre conseil souverain de Québec, que ces présentes ils fassent lire, publier et enregistrer, garder et observer selon leur forme et teneur et de tout le contenu en icelles jouir et user les dits habitans de la Nouvelle-France, pleinement et paisiblement. Car tel est notre plaisir. Et afin que ce soit chose ferme et stable à toujours, nous avons fait mettre notre scel à ces dites présentes.

ROYAL ORDINANCE, GRANTING FULL AMNESTY TO THE INHABITANTS OF NEW FRANCE,

WHO HAVE BEEN AMONG THE INDIANS WITHOUT PERMISSION.

EDITS ET ORDONNANCES. VOL. I. 1854.

DE PAR LE ROI.

Sa Majesté ayant été informée que contre les défenses qu'elle a ci-devant faites par ses ordonnances, plusieurs habitans de la Nouvelle-France, excités par l'espoir du gain et par libertinage, ont été parmi les nations sauvages sans congés ni permission des gouverneur général et intendant du dit pays pour faire la traite des marchandises et des pelleteries; lesquels, craignant la rigueur des dites ordonnances et d'être condamnés aux peines y portées, n'osent point revenir dans leurs familles et domiciles.

A quoi Sa Majesté désirant pourvoir, et sur les représentations qui lui ont été faites par les dits gouverneur général et intendant de la Nouvelle-France, voulant donner le moyen à ceux des dits habitans coureurs des bois, que leur légèreté a jetés dans ce mauvais parti, de ressentir des effets de sa clémence, Sa Majesté a ordonné et ordonne, veut et entend que tous les habitans de la Nouvelle-France qui ont été courir les bois et faire le commerce avec les nations sauvages sans congé ni permission, et qui reviendront dans leurs domiciles dans le cours de l'année mil sept cent quinze, pourront le faire sûrement, sans crainte d'être poursuivis pour raison de leur désobéissance et contravention aux dites ordonnances; Sa Majesté les quittant et déchargeant des peines établies par icelles et leur en accordant une amnistie entière, à condition toutefois qu'avant de revenir chez eux ils se rendront au fort de Missilimakina et qu'ils y serviront suivant les ordres qui leur en seront donnés par l'officier qui y commande, en cas qu'il soit jugé à propos pour le bien et la tranquillité du pays de faire la guerre à quelque nation sauvage, auquel cas ils seront tenus de se fournir de vivres, armes, poudre, plomb et canots pour la dite guerre, et pour raison de quoi ils rapporteront des certificats du dit officier commandant au dit Missilimakina, justifiant qu'ils se sont présentés et qu'ils auront exécuté ses ordres, lesquels certificats ils seront obligés de faire enregistrer au conseil supérieur de Québec dans la dite année mil sept cent quinze au plus tard, pour jouir du contenu à la présente ordonnance. Et à l'égard de ceux qui n'auront point été à Missilimakina, et qui seront pris après le dit terme expire, et ceux qui à l'avenir iront sans congés courir les bois et faire le commerce, vent et ordonne Sa Majesté qu'ils soient punis suivant la rigueur des ordonnances en quelque lieu qu'ils soient rencontrés, comme aussi ceux qu'on justifiera avoir favorisé ou aidé ou entretenu correspondance avec les dits coureurs de bois.

Enjoint Sa Majesté aux sieurs marquis de Vaudreuil et Bégon, lieutenant général et gouverneur, et intendant de la Nouvelle France, aux gouverneurs particuliers d'icelle et aux officiers des conseil supérieur et des juridictions qui y sont établis, de tenir la main et de se conformer à la présente ordonnance, laquelle sera enregistrée au conseil supérieur de Québec, et lue, publiée et affichée partout où besoin sera.

EDITS ET ORDONNANCES. VOL. II. 1855.

GILLES HOCQUART, Etc.

Sur les différentes plaintes qui nous sont revenues, qu'il se passe des désordres considérables dans le poste de Maingan, par la traite qui s'y fait d'eau-de-vie aux sauvages par plusieurs particuliers de Québec et même de Louisbourg, qui y vont avec leurs bâtimens, de manière que quantité de familles sauvages qui étoient établies dans le dit poste, y sont péries par l'ivresse et l'usage immodéré de cette boisson, ce qui est également contraire à la religion, aux bonnes moeurs, et aux défenses qui ont été faites par Sa Majesté à ce sujet en différens tems, et notamment à celles portées par ses ordonnances du 6e. mai, 1702, 30e. juin, 1707, et 6e. juillet, 1709.

Pour à quoi remédier, nous avons commis et commettons le sieur de Lafontaine de Belcourt, qui doit se rendre au premier jour au dit Maingan et y résider, pour veiller à l'exécution des dites ordonnances ; en conséquences, lui ordonnons, dans le cas du flagrant délit, de saisir et arrêter les eaux-de-vie et autres boissons enivrantes dont seront chargés les traiteurs, d'en dresser des procès-verbaux présence de deux témoins, ainsi que de veiller aux autres contraventions aux dites ordonnances, pour, sur les dits procès-verbaux à nous envoyés et rapportés, être prononcé la confiscation et autres peines de droit.

Défendons au dit sieur Lafontaine de faire aucun commerce d'eau-de-vie au dit poste, ni par lui ni par ses engagés, sous les mêmes peines, et en outre de cinq cents livres d'amende applicable aux hôpitaux de cette ville.

Et sera la présente lue et publiée au dit lieu de Maingan, et partout où besoin sera, à ce que personne n'en prétende cause d'ignorance. Mandons, etc.

Fait à Québec, le deux mai, mil Sept cent trente-trois.

TRAITES DE TADOUSSAC.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES OF CANADA.
SERIES C 11. VOL. 59

Le Traite de Tadoussac consiste clans le droit de traiter seul à l'exclusion de tous autres clans l'etendüe des terres réservées pour le Domaine du Roy, étably par les articles 358 du bail de Domergue et 413 du bail de Carlier.

L'étendüe des terres réservées pour les traittes de Tadoussac avait été réglé par l'arrest du Conseil d'Etat du Roy du 15 May 1677, suivant lavis de Mr. Duchesneau l'ors Intendant en Canada conformément aux beaux faits par le Conseil souverain de Québec les 30 Octobre 1653 et 19 Octobre 1658, depuis deux lieues audessous des sept isles remontant dans le fleuve St. Laurent nord et Sud, jusque dans la Rivière du Saguenay, et au dessus des Lacs qui s'y déchargent avec deffenses an fermier d'envoyer des canots et des hommes hors d'icelle.

Par ordonnance du dix Avril 1684, il à été deffendu a tous ceux qui étoient habitués dans les dites limites d'y faire aucune traite avec les sauvages.

Par autre ordonnance du mois de Juin 1685, Sa Majesté voulant donner moyen aux habitans de la coste du sud de subsister aux termer de leurs concessions, et d'augmenter leur commerce sans avoir égard à ladite ordonnance du 10 Avril 1684 a permis aux habitans de la coste du Sud du fleuve St. Laurent de trait ter dans leurs habitations seulement avec les Sauvages de ladite coste à prendre depuis le lieu de Matane jusqu'à la coste de Lauzon, avec deffenses aux habitans de ladite coste du Sud du fleuve St. Laurent de traiter directement n'y indirectement dans l'étendtüe et les limites de la Traitte de Tadoussac, et avec autres sauvages que ceux de ladite coste du Sud a peine d'être déchus de leurs concessions et de mille livres d'amande.

Ainsi les limites de la Traitte de Tadoussac se renferment aujourd'huy clans le nord du fleuve St. Laurent depuis l'isle aux Coudres, jusqu'à deux lieues au dessous des sept isles, dans laqu'elle étendüe sont les Postes de Tadoussac, Chécoutimy, Lac St Jean, Nekouban, Mistassins, Papinachois, ou islets de Jérémie, les sept isles, La Rivière Moizy et lieux en dépendans. Les sous-fermiers des traittes ont toujours traite dans ces postes, soit par des commis et Engagés qui y residioient, ou par des françois qu'ils y envoioient tous les ans, faire la traite des le printems, personne n'a contesté ces postes au Domaine, mais les habitans des Trois Rivieres et ceux des costes de Batiscan et Champlain qui peuvent aller par leurs rivière jusqu'au Lac St. Jean et Nekouban, les Srs Jolyet et Bissot concessionnaires de Mingan, voisins de la Rivière Moizy et divers particuliers naviguans le long du fleuve St. Laurent, y ont fait un commerce préjudiciable aux traittes de Tadoussac, par eux-mêmes ou par des sauvages.

Les habitans des Trois Rivières. de Batiscan et de Champlain ont envoyé des sauvages Abénakis et Algonkins par les terres jusque dans les Postes de Checoutimy, du Lac St. Jean et de Nekouban où ils se rendent facilement par les rivières. Ces sauvages chassent dans les terres du Domaine, y détruisent les animaux et remportent à ceux qui les ont équipés des pelleteries qui ne devoient être traitées que dans les postes du Domaine, non contents de cela, ils traitent avec les sauvages montagnais habitués des terres du Domaine, et au moyen de l'Eau de Vie qu'ils leur fournissent, ils emportent une partie de leurs pelleteries, et enfin debauchent les sauvages du Domaine pour les engager à venir en traite aux Trois Rivieres et autres endroits, ce qui cause un double préjudice aux traittes du Domaine, ils en enlèvent une partie de pelleteries et font perdre aux Postes du Domaine, les Prets qu'on y avoit faits aux sauvages, et qu'ils ne sont plus en état de payer lorsqu'ils traittent leurs pelleteries à d'autres qu'à ceux qui les ont équipés.

Les sous-fermiers des Traittes de Tadoussac en ont dans tous les tems porté leurs plaintes ; en 1707 le Sr Hazeur lors sous fermier des Traittes, présenta requête à Mr Raudot, Intendant sur ce que plusieurs sauvages Abenakis et Hurons, s'étoient ingérez des 1705 d'aller chasser contre la coutume et nonobstant les deffenses aux environs du lac St Jean, et avoient porte. leur désordre dans l'hyver de 1706, au point d'obliger les sauvages habitués d'abandonner et de se retirer ailleurs. M. Raudot par son ordonnance du 26 7bre 1707 a fait deffenses à touter personnes de traiter n'y chasser dans le Domaine de Sa Majesté, renfermé dans les limites de Tadoussac, directement n'y indirectement à peine de confiscation de leurs armes, chasse et marchandises, et de la somme de mille livres d'amande, et en tous les dépens dommages et intérests envers le Roy et la Compagnie aux droits duquel elle est enjoint aux missionnaires des sauvages d'informer les chefs de leurs missions des intentions du Roy à ce sujet, afin qu'ils défendent à ceux de leurs nations, de contrevenir à ladite ordonnance, et en cas de contravention d'icelle, permis au sous fermier de faire informer à sa diligence contre les contrevenans.

En l'année 1720, le Directeur du Domaine informé par les commis préposés a l'exploitation des Traittes que plusieurs particuliers des Trois Rivieres envoioient des marchandises et surtout de l'Eau de Vie par des sauvages Abénakis et Algonkins à eux affidés dans les Postes du lac St Jean et de Nekouban et faisoient de commerce si ouvertement, qu'il se trouvoit dans les Postes autant de marchandises venans des Trois Rivières que de celles du fermier, que plusieurs particuliers descendans le long du fleuve St Laurent, sous prétexte de faire ou d'entretenir des Etablissemens du coste de la bras d'or ou d'aller en pêche au petit nord en canot ou en bastiment, faisoient la traite sur les terres du Domaine présenta requête à Mr. Begon qui rendit son ordonnance sur icelle le 5 avril 1720, par laqu'elle en conséquence du privilège des fermiers, il est ordonné qu'ils auront seuls à l'exclusion de tous autres, le droit de traite, chasse, pesche et commerce dans l'étendue du Domain du Roy depuis l'isle aux Coudres, jusqu'à deux lieues au dessous des sept isles dans les Postes de Tadoussac, Checoutimy, lac St. Jean, Nekouban, Mistasins, Papinachois, Riviere Moizy et sept isles, et lieux en dépendans, fait deffenses à toutes personnes de quelque qualité et condition qu'elles soient tant aux particuliers établys dans l'étendue du dit Domaine, qu'aux marchands et habitans des villes de Québec et des Trois Rivières, capitaines et maîtres de charroys, barques, batteaux et navires, Gens de leurs Equipages et passagers et à tous autres généralement quelconques, de traiter, chasser, pescher n'y faire aucun commerce sous quelque prétexte que ce puisse être directement n'y indirectement par eux mêmes ou en envoyant des marchandises, vivres, boissons et munitions par des sauvages affidés dans les Pays dépendans des Traittes du Domaine de Sa Majesté, si ce n'est par commission expresse et par écrit du fermier, à peine de confiscation des armes, chasse, marchandises, pelleteries et effets traittés, canots, chaloupes, barques, charroys, batteaux et autres batimens généralement quelconques, et de la somme de mille livres d'amande applicable, les deux tiers au fermier, et l'autre tiers au dénonciateur. Permis au fermier de saisir et arrester à ses risques périls et fortune tous les canots qui se trouveront dans l'étendue dudit Domaine, chargés de marchandises de traite ou provenans de ladite Traitte, ensemble celles qui seront trouvées dans les Pays dépendans du dit Domaine à quelques personnes qu'elles puissent appartenir, comm'aussi de saisir et arrester à ses risques, perils et fortunes, tous les bastimens généralement quelconques qui se trouveront traiter ou avoir traitté avec les sauvages dans l'étendue dudit Domaine pour en poursuivre la confiscation sur les procès-verbaux de ses commis dûement affirmez et répétez.

Des deffenses n'ont point empêché les marchands et habitans des Trois Rivières, Batiscan et Champlain de continuer le même commerce par les sauvages Abénakis et Algonkins.

Le Directeur du Domaine de l'avis et approbation de Mr. Begon, prit le party en 1724 d'envoyer le Sr Amelin La Ganière par la Rivière des Trois Rivières jusqu'au lac appelé Choioatoissin qui pouvoit faire la borne des limites du Domaine afin que ce cornmis pût se rendre dans les Postes en même temps que les sauvages des Trois Rivières parce que les Rivières étant praticables du costé des Trois Rivières trois semaines avant qu'elles puissent l'être à Checoutimy doù le fermier du Domaine envoyoit des Engagés dans les Postes du Lac St Jean et de Nekouban. Les sauvages envoyez des Trois Rivières sont rendus aux dts. lieux y ont fait leur traite et en sont repartys avant que les engagés envoyés de Checoutimy puissent y être arrivés. En 1726 Jean Gagnis engagé pour le voyage de Nekouban y trouva à son arrivée les sauvages des Trois Rivières qui avoient fait leur traite, quoy qu'il fut party de Checoutimy aussitost que les Rivières furent libres, en sorte qu'il ne peut faire aucune Traitte.

p. 2734

Le voyage du Sr de la Ganière a donné lieu aux contestations entre la Directeur du Domaine et les marchands des Trois Rivières renvoyées à la Cour, sur lesquelles il a été ordonné que les limites de la Traitte de Tadoussac seroient régléz par l'Intendant.

Cette affaire a demeuré en suspens jusq'à l'année 1730, que le Sr Hocquart pour régler les limites de la Traitte de Tadoussac en connoissance de cause, a envoyé dans tous les Postes jusqu'à la hauteur des Terres, pour reconnoître qu'elles sont les rivières, et Lacs qui se déchargent dans la Rivière du Saguenay.

Sur les journaux des Srs de la Chenay et Normandin qui y ont été il a fait dresser une carte du Domaine et en conséquence a réglé les limites de la Traitte de Tadoussac du costés des Trois Rivières par son ordonnance du

May dernier par laquelle le fermier est maintenu dans son droit exclusif de faire la traite, chasse, pesche et commerce dans toute l'Etendüe du Domaine aux termes de l'Ordonnance de Mr. Begon du 5 avril 1720.

Par autre ordonnance du 12 du dit moil de May dernier, le Sr Hocquart en donnant acte aux Srs Bissot, de la Gorgendière et Gourdault concessionnaires de la Seigneurie de l'isle aux oeufs de labandon par eux fait du terrain concédé à deffunt François Bissot de la Rivière leur auteur par la compagnie de la Nouvelle France, le 25 Fevrier 1661, depuis l'isle aux oeufs jusqu'à la rivière Moizy, et ayant égard à la demande du Directeur du Domaine a réuni au Domain de sa Majesté le dit terrain concédé au dit Sr Bissot depuis et compris ladite isle aux oeufs jusqu'à la pointe des Cormorans qui est à quatre ou cinq lieues au dessous de la Rivière Moizy.

Ce faisant deffend auxdits Srs Bissot, de la Gorgendière et Gourdault et à tous autres de faire directement n'y indirectement aucune traite, chasse pêche, commerce n'y Etablissement dans l'étendüe du terrain cy dessus réuni n'y dans la dite Riviere Moizy et autres lacs et rivières y affluantes, et de troubler le fermier du Domaine dans la jouissance, possession et exploitation des dits terrains sous les peines de droit. Ordonne que pour l'établissement fait aud lieu de Mingan par le dit Sr. Bissot et ses ayans cause, les parties se retiréront par devers Sa Majesté pour obtenir un nouveau titre de concession du dit lieu de Mingan sur tel front et profondeur et sous telle redevance qu'il plaira à Sa Majesté leur accorder.

Le Pays dont les Srs. Bissot et consort demandent un nouveau titre de concession ne peut servir qu'à la traitte et à la Pêche de lous marina et morties. On ne peut y établir d'habitans, ainsi il paroist qu'il doit être concédé en censive. Mais quelque étendue qu'il plaise à Sa Majeste [sic] d'accorder au Sr Bissot, il convient que sa concession ne commence qu'à la rivière des islets environ dix lieues audessous de la Pointe des Cormorans pour faire une séparation entre le Domaine et la concession des particuliers de manière qu'ils ne puissent se nuire n'y préjudicier les uns aux autres, cette Etendue de dix lieues qui restent non concédée ne peut être d'aucune utilité. Le Sr Hocquart rendra compte par une depêche particulière de la demande du Sr Bissot et consorts s'il la faut.

Au moyen des deux ordonnances cy dessus, les limites des Traittes de Tadoussac sont certaines et invariables, et elles mettent le domaine à labry du commerce qui se fait à son préjudice parce qu'on peut l'empêcher en établiissant des Postes sur les bornes desdites limites. C'est le seul moyen d'y remédier. Les sauvages sont maîtres d'aller où bon leur semble, ils sont indépendans et ne peuvent être assujettys à aucunes deffenses. D'ailleurs il est impossible d'apporter obstacle à une contravention qui se passe dans la profondeur des bois, et on ne peut la prévenir que par des engagés résidens dans les Postes où les sauvages ont leur rendez-vous ; pour empêcher les étrangers de venir sur les terres du Domaine et ceux du Domaine d'aller traiter ailleurs sans quoy le même commerce subsistera toujours, ceux qui le font ont l'avantage de faire leur traitte en eau de vie. Ils font entendre aux sauvages qu'ils leur donnent leurs marchandises à plus bas prix que dans les postes du Roy, par ce qu'ils se dédommagent du bon marché qu'ils leur font de certaines marchandises sur les pelleteries qu'ils ont pour de l'eau de vie, c'est le plus grand attrait des sauvages, ils gardent leurs meilleures pelleteries pour en avoir et ne sont satisfait que quand ils se sont enyvres. Le voyage ne leur coute rien pour en trouver, et ils iront toujours préférablement à ceux qui leur en donneront leur discretion. L'on juge aisément que quand ils sont yvres on leur fait croire ce que l'on veut et l'on traite leurs pelleteries à vil prix, cela ne se peut pratiquer et ne se pratique point effectivement dans les Postes. On n'y donne d'eau de vie aux sauvages que dans le festin qui se fait une fois par an. Du reste on ne leur en traite qu'après qu'ils ont payé leurs prêts et traité les munitions et marchandises qui leur sont nécessaires.

Par bail passé devant Roger, notaire à Quebec, le 8 octobre 1698, les Traittes de Tadoussac, Papinachois et Rivière Moizy dans toute leur étendue ont été sous fermées pour trois ans, commencés au premier dudit mois d'Octobre 1698, par le vinssent à augmenter ou diminuer de prix, les parties s'en feroient raison respectivement.

Par bail passé devant Chambalon, notaire à Québec le 2 Octobre, 1701 la ferme et traite de Tadoussac. Chécoutimy et lieux en dependans, Papinachois et Rivière Moizy en toute leur étendue a été sous fermée pour huit ans commencés au premier Octobre 1701 par les Directeurs de la compagnie de la colonie etante aux droits de Louis Guigues, fermier général du Domaine d'Occident aux Sr Riverin et Hazeur pour la somme de 12,700 monnoye de france, payables le tiers en argent ou menües pelleteries, et les deux autres tiers en castors à raison de trois livres cinq sols la livre de castor gras demy gras et veule, trois livres, la livre de castor moscovite, et quarante sols la livre de castor sec hyver et robbes neuves, le tout argent de france et quitte des droits du quart, au fur et à mesure que les retours viendroient des dites traittes et dans le cours du mois de septembre de chaque année du bail sous l'hypotéque spéciale des effets venans desdites traittes et ou les retours ne seroient suffisans, les entrepreneurs tenus d'y suppléer en argent ou lettres de change bonnes et valables sur la Rochelle ou Paris, avec convention que les castors provenant desdites traittes des qualités cy dessus seroient reçus au bureau de ladite Compagnie aux prix cy dessus réglés pour le payement des deux tiers du prix de ladite ferme, l'excédent des dits castors 20 payé aux preneurs en lettre de change sur France aux termes de celles qui étoient fournyes pour le payement du castor de tout le pays et sur le pied desdits prix cy dessus, et que les castors d'été gras et sec ainsi que les rogneures et mitaines venant des traittes seroient rejettées de la recette des castors.

L'expiration de ce bail tomboit an premier Octobre 1709; on n'a point trouvé de nouveau bail fait à Mr Hazeur, mais seulement une adjudication faite le 16 Mars 1709, à la requeste des Srs Drouart, Robert, stipulant pour les Srs Pierre et Thierry Hazeur et Jean Soumande, tuteur de Delle Marie Anne Hazeur syndics des créanciers de la succession dudit feu Sr Hazeur au Sr Nicholas Pinaud, marchand à Québec de la sous fermes de Tadoussac et 30 dépendance d'icelle pour la somme de 6100 à commencer la jouissance au premier Octobre 1708 et finir à pareil jour de l'année 1710.

On n'a point trouvé non plus le bail qui a dû être fait de la sous ferme des traittes au premier Octobre 1710. On scait que le Sr Riverin en a été sous fermier depuis ladite année 1710 jusqu'en 1714.

Le 30 Aoust 1714, ladite sous-ferme a été adjudgée par Mr Begon Intendant à la requeste du Sr Demonseignat Directeur du Domaine au même Sr. Riverin, précédent sous fermier moyennant 16,000 monnoye du pays faisant 12,000 de france pour quatre années consécutives à commencer au premier Octobre 1714 sous les clauses suivantes :

1st, de payer le prix de l'adjudication en argent, monnoye de cartes ayant cours dans le pays au Directeur du Domaine, dans le quinze Octobre de chaque année et de donner bonne et suffisante caution. (2nd) de payer au précédent fermier toutes les marchandises, vivres, ustancils, et meubles qui étoient actuellement aux Postes de Chécoutimy, Lac St. Jean, Nekouban, Mistassins, Tadoussac, Papinachois et Rivière Moizy dans le 15 Octobre, 1715,

p. 2737

les dites marchandises payables sur le pied des factures du précédent sous fermier, et en cas de difficulté, ainsi qu'elles se vendroient en détail à Québec. Tous les prêts faits aux sauvages dans les dits Postes à raison de 20 sols par castor et de 10 sols par martre monnoye de France moitié en lettres de change des castors des quelles il demeureroit grand et moitié, en monnoye de cartes sur le pied des Inventaires et Etats qui seroient certifiés véritables et sincères par les Commis et préposés au dit précédent sous fermier sans aucune garantie desdits prêts tous les bastimens desdits lieux de Tadoussac Chécoutimy, Lac St. Jean et Papinachois suivant l'estimation qui en seroit faite par experts choisis par l'adjudicataire et le précédent sous fermier même le prix de la maison de la rivière Moizy. (3rd) de porter à la recette du bureau des castors ceux qui proviendroient de la traite des Postes de ladite sous ferme.

Et que l'adjudicataire du bail subséquent seroit tenu de prendre les marchandises qui resteroient aux Postes de ladite sous ferme à la fin du dit bail sur le pied du détail qui se feroit pour l'ours à Québec ainsi que l'adjudicataire étoit tenu de prendre celles du précédent sous fermier.

Le Sr Riverin, adjudicataire ayant été précédent sous-fermier n'eut point de difficulté pour les remboursements. Le Sr Guillemain se rendit caution du Sr Riverin par acte du 18 Octobre 1714, et ledit Sr Riverin étant mort pendant son bail, le Sr Guillimin a resté sous fermier au lieu et place dudit Sr Riverin.

A l'expiration du dit bail en 1718, le Sr Rivet faisant les fonctions de Directeur du Domaine fit afficher la sous ferme des traites pour une année aux charges suivantes.

1° de payer au fermier du Domaine le prix de l'adjudication dans le 15 Octobre 1719 en cartes réduites, et de donner bonne et suffisante caution et certificateur d'icelle, sans pouvoir prétendre aucune diminution du prix de l'adjudication sous prétexte de guerre, incendie, perte de bastimens et autres cas imprévus.

2° que l'adjudicataire ne pourroit à la fin de son bail obliger ceux qui se feroient adjuger la dite sous ferme de prendre de luy les effets qui se trouveroient dans les Postes qu'autant qu'ils luy conviendroient.

3° de porter à la recette du bureau des castors ceux qui proviendroient de la dite sous ferme.

Elle fut créée à ces conditions à la somme de 500 livres pour trois publications et ne s'étant présenté aucun enchérisseur, Mr Begon par son ordonnance du 9 9bre 1718, sur la représentation du Sr Rivet de la nécessité d'envoyer incessamment des vivres et marchandises dans les Postes la saison étant fort avancée, ordonna au Sr Rivet de faire faire la régie de la dite sous ferme jusqu'au premier Octobre 1719 commettant le Sr Pierre Normandin pour faire la dite régie sous les ordres du dit Sr Rivet dont il rendroit compte au dit Sr Rivet ou autres qu'il appartiendroit, au moyen de quoy il luy seroit payé par

p. 2738

le fermier du Domaine 750^l monnoye de France pour la dite année et que le Sr Guillimin comm'étant aux droits du feu Sr Riverin précédent sous fermier seroit remboursé des vivres et effets à luy appartenans, étans dans les postes conformément à l'article 2 du bail du Aoust 1714 fait audit Sr Riverin.

On doit présumer que le Sr Guillimin n'avoit trouvé aucun profit dans cette sous ferme pendant la durée de son bail puisqu'il ne se présenta point aux publications, la clause de ne pouvoir obliger le nouvel adjudicataire de prendre de luy les effets qui se trouveroient dans les Postes qu'autant qu'ils luy conviendroient n'étoit pas pour luy un obstacle, parce qu'il auroit pu consommer les marchandises qui restoient dans les postes pendant l'année qu'il auroit joüy, et que s'il s'étoit ; rendu adjudicataire, il auroit pû s'en faire continuer l'adjudication l'année suivante.

Mais il n'étoit pas étonnant que cette clause empêchat tout autre de se presenter aux Enchères. On sçavoit que Mr. Guillimin avoit envoyé des marchandises de rebut, et personne que luy ne pouvoit se charger de les rembourser sans espérance de prétendre un pareil remboursement.

Le Sr Cugnet arrivé en Canada en 1719 fit publier la dite sous ferme pour cinq années commencées au premier Octobre 1719, finissante à pareil jour 1724, aux charges, clauses et conditions suivantes :

1° que l'adjudicataire seroit tenu de payer le prix en espèces sonnantes en donnant bonne et suffisante caution, sans pouvoir prétendre aucune diminution de prix sous prétexte de guerre, incendie, perte de bastimens et autres cas imprévûs.

2° que la quantité et qualité des marchandises, vivres, ustancils et meubles lors restantes dans les Postes de Chécoutimy, Lac St. Jean, Nekouban, Mistassins, Tadoussac, Papinachois et Rivière Moizy seroit constatée entre le fermier du Domaine et l'adjudicataire sur les factures d'envoy faites pour le compte du dit fermier par le Sr Normandin et sur les inventaires et Etats des commis des Postes, et le prix des marchandises, vivres, ustancils, et meubles réglés sçavoir : pour celles envoyées par ledit Sr Normandin pendant le tems de sa régie sur le pied du détail à Québec en espèces pendant la mois d'octobre 1720 et pour celles qui pourroient être restées du tems des précédents sous fermiers suivant le prix qui en auroit été remboursé par le fermier général aux précédents sous fermiers, le tout payable dans le 15 8bre 1720, en espèces ou lettres de change des castors au choix de l'adjudicataire en demeurant par luy responsable des dites lettres de change.

3° que l'adjudicataire seroit tenu de payer outre le prix de l'adjudication la somme de 150' pour loyer et jouissance des maisons et bastimens des postes, au moyen de quoy il n'en seroit fait aucun remboursement à la charge par l'adjudicataire de les entretenir de menües réparations à ses frais, et d'y faire les grosses réparations de la moitié desquelles grosses réparations il luy seroit tenu compte sur le prix de son bail, en avertissant par luy le fermier du Domaine de la nécessité d'icelles et justifiant de ce qu'elles auroient couté.

p. 2739

4° De rembourser au fermier du Domaine dans le 15 Octobre 1720, les prêts faits aux sauvages dans les dits Postes pendant le bail du Sr Guillimin précédent sous fermier, et pendant l'année 1719 seulement, non ceux faits avant le bail du dit Guillimin ; lesdits prêts payables à raison du vingt sols par castor et dix sols par martre, monnoye de France, en espèces sonnantes ou en lettres de changes des castors conformément à l'article deux.

5° De porter à la recette du bureau des castors ceux qui proviendroient de la dite sous ferme.

Et enfin que l'adjudicataire du bail subséquent seroit tenu de faire à adjudicataire les mêmes remboursemens, et de la même manière qu'il est stipulé aux articles 2, 3 et 4, bien entendu que le dit adjudicataire du bail subséquent ne rembourseroit que les prêts faits aux sauvages pendant le bail proposé, non ceux faits pendant le bail de Guillimin et pendant l'année 1719, sauf à l'adjudicataire d'en faire le recouvremont pendant les cinq années de jouissance.

La sous-ferme créée par trois publications à la somme de 13000' personne ne se présenta aux enchères et Mr. Begon autorisa le Sr Cugnet par ordonnance du 6 9bre 1719, à continuer la régie de la dite sous ferme pendant une année, ainsy que le Sr Cugnet luy avoit demandé pour prendre de l'état de cette sous ferme une connoissance plus certaine, qu'il n'avoit pû l'acquérir depuis un mois qu'il étoit arrivé en Canada.

Les clauses de remboursement avoient été stipulées dans les affiches pour engager les marchands à enchérir, ce qui n'avoit point esté fait par les affiches du Sr Rivet. Le Sr Cugnet ne pouvant se dispenser de rembourser le Sr Guillimin conformément au bail fait au Sr Riverin le 30 Aoust 1714 lout Guillimin estoit caution, et à l'ordre de Mr. Begon du 9 9bre 1718, et par conséquent de stipuler dans la nouvelle adjudication le remboursement au fermier du Domaine, on avoit stipulé un pareil remboursement à faire au nouvel adjudicataire à la fin de son bail.

Le prix de 13000' ne fut pas un obstacle à l'adjudication, il avoit été mis suivant les instructions des fermiers généreux qui avoient donné ordre au Sr Cugnet de porter cette sous ferme au prix des précédents baux, peu instruit du détail des Traittes, il crut que le seul objet du remboursement avoit empêché d'encherir l'année précédente, et que les marchands pouvoient s'entendre pour faire tomber le prix de cette sous ferme, qui que ce soit ne se présenta, pas même le Sr Guillimin qui pouvoit plustôt qu'un autre s'en rendre adjudicataire parce qu'il auroit compensé le remboursement à faire au fermier du Domaine avec celui qui étoit encor à luy faire par le dit fermier, ce qui donne lieu de juger que le bail du Sr Guillimin ne lui avoit pas esté avantageux et qu'il ne trouvoit de profit que dans le remboursement par lui prétendu ; il avoit fait ce remboursement à 64346' 4^d en cartes à la réduction du quart seulement ; faisant de France 48259' 13^d pour les marchandises, vivres, ustancils meubles et maisons, et 6451' de France pour les prêts faits aux sauvages; ce remboursement fut réglé par Mr Begon à 302501' de France.

On peut donc penser que c'est la diminution du produit des traittes qui a seule empêché de trouver alors des enchérisseurss, puisque l'on void que le prix de la sous ferme en étoit tombé à chaque renouvellement de bail.

Elle avoit été en 1698 à 15200' en 1701 à 12700', en 1714 à 12000' qui valoient à la vérité cette somme au fermier du Domaine, mais qui ne coutoit au sous fermier des Traittes que 8000' le prix étant aux termes du bail du Sr Riverin payable en cartes qui n'étoient que pour le quart de leur valeur clans le commerce par ce que les marchandises s'y vendoient à 400% du prix de leur achat en France. Les Traittes avoient encor dépéry pendant le bail du Sr Guillimin et il est à présumer que si la sous ferme en eût été continuée à quelque prix qu'elle eut été donnée, on se seroit trouvé à la fin du bail dans la même nécessité de les mettre en régie ou de les abandonner.

Cette diminution a eu plusieurs causes.

La plus considérable a été la destruction totale des originaux dans l'étendue du Domaine. Le Sr Riverin pendant le cours de son bail depuis 1710 jusqu'en 1714 fit passer dans les traittes quantité de sauvages hurons, Abénakis, et Mikmaks qui y ont entièrement détruit les originaux ; cette manoeuvre a enrichi le Sr Riverin et a détruit le fond du Domaine, depuis le tems le fermier n'a retiré que 5 ou 6 peaux d'originaux par an, et depuis 5 ans, il n'en a pas sorti une seule.

Le destruction de ces animaux a été suivye de la perte de plusieurs des sauvages du Domaine qui sont morts de faim dans le bois ; ils sont exposés à jeuner lorsque les hyvers sont rudes, et dans les autres tems ils sont obligés de chasser aux lièvres aux perdrix pour subsister, au lieu que s'ils trouvoient abondamment leur nourriture, ils s'occupoient à chasser aux martres; leur misère les met hors d'état de payer leurs dettes qu'ils payent aisément quand la chasse est abondante.

Les feux qui ont couru dans les bois ont esté une autre cause de dépérissement des Traittes. Les incendies qui arrivent fréquemment détruisent ou cloignent les animaux de tout espèce, il y en a plusieurs depuis que les Traittes sont en régie, il brusla l'année dernière plus de deux cens lieues de Pays, le Printems les feux ont été jusqu'à la maison de Checoutimy et le commis s'est vû dans la nécessité d'enterrer les poudres.

Celuy qui est au Lac des Mistassins a tenu ses marchandises pendant tout l'été dernier sur le bord du lac pour les sauver du feu, il n'y a point de remède a ses accidens.

Enfin la mauvaise régie des sous fermiers des Traittes a aussi beaucoup contribué à les ruiner. Ne trouvant plus de profit dans les Traittes par l'abondance des pelleteries, ils se sont attachés à s'en procurer par de fausses Epargnes, ils n'ont envoyé que des marchandises de rebut qu'ils ont portees à des prix exorbitans, ils y ont fourny des armes et des munitions de mauvaise qualité ce qui a détruit nombre de sauvages et éloigné les autres. L'eau de vie a esté le principal objet de leur traite parce qu'ils ont eu pour cette liqueur les pelleteries à très vil prix. Plusieurs sauvages dénués des munitions nécessaires pour leur chasse d'hyver après avoir consommé leurs pelleteries en boisson sont morts de faim dans le bois: Le Sr Guillimin a abandonné plusieurs Postes. Les anciens sous-fermiers avoient des Commis et Engagés résidens au Lac St Jean, à Nekouban et aux Mistassins, il y avoit au Lac St Jean et au Lac des Mistassins des maisons tant pour les Engagés que pour les missionnaires qui y hyvernoient. On voit encor dans ces deux endroits, les restes des maisons des Jesuites dans chacune desqu'elles il demouroit un prestre avec un frère. Labandon de ces Postes a accoutumé les sauvages à aller en traite à la mer du nord, du costé des Trois Rivières, et de la rivière du lièvre. Le Poste des Papinachois avoit été abandonné celui de Tadoussac ne s'en trouvoit pas plus abondant, parce que les sauvages des Papinachois alloient traiter à la coste du Sud aux sept isles, à Mingan, et aux bastimens qui cotoyoient le nord du fleuve St. Laurent, en un mot les sous fermiers n'ont eu en vue que le profit qu'ils pouvoient se faire par le remboursement qui devoit leur être fait à la fin de leur bail des marchandises qu'ils auroient dans les Postes.

On ne peut guerres espérer d'autre régie de la part de quelque marchand que ce soit qui sous fermera les Traittes.

Elles ne peuvent se soutenir que par deux objets, également nécessaires, et que l'on ne doit jamais perdre de vue, la conservation des sauvages, et celle de l'espèce des animaux.

Pour conserver les sauvages, il paroist nécessaire d'avoir des françois dans les postes qui y résident pour empêcher les sauvages du Domaine d'aller en traite hors de l'étendue du Domaine, ramener ceux qui s'en sont écartés et en attirer de nouveaux. Lorsqu'ils sçauront qu'il y a des françois à leur portée et de qui ils pourront avoir leurs besoins, ils se tiendront sur leurs terres et viendront apporter leurs pelleteries. Les françois résidens dans les Postes, empêchent en même tems les sauvages étrangers d'y venir apporter de l'eau de vie par le moyen de laqu'elle ils traittent avec ceux du Domaine, les détournent de payer leurs crédits, et les débauchent pour aller ailleurs.

Le Sr Cugnet a rétably des hivernemens de Nekouban et des Mistassins. L'expérience a fait reconnaître l'utilité de ces hivernemens, ils ont produit des pelleteries que l'on n'auroit point eu si l'on s'étoit contenté com'auparavant d'y faire faire un voyage au printems d'où on rapportoit trois ou quatre cens martres, au lieu que depuis les hivernemens, il en vient un millier.

L'hivernement des Mistassins est rétably depuis quatre ou cinq ans, Joseph Dorval, engagé, y a découvert au delà du Lac des Mistassins, une nation habituée dans un espace de terre que les sauvages appellent pays pelés parcequ'il n'y a point de bois. Ces sauvages n'ont point de canots n'y d'ecorce pour en faire, ils ne peuvent aller à Checoutimy, n'y aller à la mer du nord, ils traittoient avec les sauvages de la mer du Nord ils ont traite cette année avec D'orval, et c'est ce qui a produit treize cens martres dans ce poste qui n'en donnoit qu'environ deux cells avant les hivernemens. Cc poste pourra augmenter en continuant d'y tenir des françois.

L'hivernement de Nekouban n'est pas moins nécessaire par rapport à la proximité des sauvages des Trois-Rivières et de la rivière du lièvre. Il a été rétably depuis deux ans. Jean Baptiste Dorval des Groseliers qui y a hiverné marque par sa lettre du 19 juin dernier qu'il a eu trente hommes de la mer du Nord qui se sont retirés avec une partie de leurs pelleteries faute de marchandises, qu'il les a arrêtés pendant dix jours, mais que la disette de vivres les a fait partir, les marchandises n'avoient pû être rendües à son poste, parce qu'il ne s'est point trouvé ce printems à Checoutimy de sauvages pour monter les canots d'assez bonne heure. Le produit de ce poste auroit approché de celui des Mistassins sans ce contretemps.

p. 2742

On peut espérer que la résidence des françois dans ces deux postes bonifieroit encor plus par la suite le produit des traittes. Mais il faut du tems pour y attirer les sauvages, et il est difficile d'avoir des françois qui veuillent y demeurer continuellement plusieurs années de suite. Le Pays est extrêmement dur: ils n'y vivent qu'au poisson pendant l'été; l'hiver ils ont du lièvre et des perdrix blanches, mais ils manquent souvent de l'un et de l'autre ainsi quand ils ont passé deux hyvers, ils veulent revenir à Québec pour se rétablir. L'interruption d'une année détruit l'ouvrage de deux ans, ce qui retarde l'avantage qu'on en peut tirer. D'ailleurs ces hivernemens coutent beaucoup de frais, on ne peut avoir des commis et Engagés qu'à gros gages, il faut faire monter huit canots de trois places et demy dans chacun des deux postes pour y porter les marchandises et munitions. Chaque canot monté de deux hommes coute quatre vingt castors sçavoir: vingt pour le canot et trente pour chaque homme sans compter les vivres. Ces frais absorbent une grande partie du bénéfice de la traite, et font qu'il ne reste qu'un profit très médiocre, ainsi il n'est pas étonnant que des marchands se déterminent plus volontiers à abandonner ces postes qu'à des avances considérables dont le produit est peu de chose. Cependant labandon cause un préjudice considérable aux Traittes, lorsqu'on a cessé d'hiverner, il falloit envoyer tous les printems trois françois à Nekouban et autant aux Mistassins, l'Equipement de ces six engagés coutoit 1500' en gages et vivres. Les frais de canots étoient à peu près les mêmes ainsi ce que l'hivernement coute de plus est compensé par l'utilité qu'on en retire, à quoi il faut ajouter que pour les voyages annuels, on se sert de nouveaux Engagés chaque année, et que dans le nombre il s'en trouve plusieurs peu fidels qui peuvent aisément emporter avec eux en revenant à Québec des menües pelleteries dans leurs coffres ou sac d'Equipages sans que les commis des postes puissent y remédier parce qu'ils les cachent dans les bois; des Engagés volontaires ne peuvent point tomber dans ces malversations parce qu'ils ne sortent point du Poste au retour de leur voyage et que quand ils quittent, on les visite en sortant du Poste.

Suppose que l'on voulût retrancher même les voyages du Printems à Nekouban et aux Mistassins pour en épargner les frais, le Poste de Chécoutimy tomberoit de plus de moitié de son produit.

En second lieu il faut que les Postes soient garnys de bonnes marchandises et munitions, et avoir attention que les sauvages traittent de celles qui leur sont le plus nécessaire par préférences à celles qui ne sont que d'ornemens ou de plaisir comme l'eau de vie ; il y a des années ou la chasse est peu abondante, et ne peut sufire à entretenir les sauvages, on est obligé dans ce cas de les équiper de nouveau pour les mettre en estat de chasser l'année suivante, alors l'attention des commis des postes doit estre de ne leur prêter que ce qui leur est nécessaire, et de veiller à ce que ces sauvages payent leurs dettes après la chasse. Ces prêts sont sujets à des inconvéniens mais ils sont indispensables à moins de laisser périr les sauvages et leur perte entraineroit celle du Domaine.

p. 2743

On ne doit pas compter sur ces attentions de la part d'un sous fermier marchand qui n'aura en vüe que son profit au risque de laisser dépérir le fonds de la Traitte. Il cherchera à traiter préféablement l'eau de vie et les bagatelles qui sont l'ornement des sauvages dont ils sont plus avides que de ce qui leur est nécessaire, parce que la traitte d'eau de vie donne bien plus de profit que celles des munitions et des hardes nécessaires.

Enfin il faut que les commis et Engagés principaux dans les pontes soient affectionnés, sages, entendus pour la traitte, accoutumés à vivre avec les sauvages, qu'ils sachent la langue de la nation, et soient capables de s'en faire également aimer et craindre.

Le succès de la Traitte dépend entièrement des sujets qu'on y employe, on ne peut y employer que des canadiens voyageurs instruits des manières des sauvages par l'habitude de vivre avec eux, ce sont par conséquent gens grossiers, difficiles à ménager, prêts à quitter au moindre sujet de mécontentement qu'ils s'imaginent avoir, qu'il faut traiter doucement parcequ'on ne trouve pas à les remplacer sur le champ, et qu'il est rare d'en trouver de bons, ils sçavent à peine écrire, leur capacité se borne à la langue et à sçavoir conduire les sauvages, ainsi on ne peut point exiger d'eux un compte exact de leur gestion, ils ne peuvent que recevoir les marchandises qui leur sont envoyées, et remettre les effets qu'ils ont traittés avec les inventaires des marchandises qui leur restent en magasin et des prêts des sauvages. L'on ne peut sçavoir s'ils régissent bien ou mal que par une attention très suivye à balancer les retours qu'ils donnent avec les dépenses pour juger si le défaut de retour doit leur être imputé ou aux événemens des saisons. Leurs gages étoient autrefois à bien meilleur prix qu'aujourd'huy tout est devenu plus Cher en Canada.

Les Commis et Engagés ont eu jusqu'à présent outre leurs gages et leur nourriture l'a moitié de leur chasse sçavoir: les pelleteries au prix qu'elles sont vendües et des huiles à trente livres audessous de leur prix de Québec pour indemniser le fermier des frais de Tonnelier et du transport des huiles. L'usage de leur accorder cette moitié de chasse est fondé sur ce que la moitié réservée au fermier dédommage d'une partie de leurs gages à proportion de la chasse qu'ils peuvent faire, et qu'ils ne s'y attacheroient pas s'ils n'y avoient leur intérêt.

Le missionnaire des Traittes pent aussi contribuer beaucoup à affectionner les sauvages au bien de la Traitte ou à les aliéner; l'autorité que lui donne son caractère, et les fréquentes conversations qu'il a avec les sauvages sans que les commis puissent s'y opposer n'y même en avoir connoissance et mettent en état de servir ou de nuire autant qu'il le veut, ainsi on est obligé de se l'attacher par des égards, d'autant plus qu'il est plus maître de sa conduire et que les régisseurs ne peuvent pas en changer. Le missionnaire peut aussi être d'une grande utilité pour contenir les commis et Engagés dans leur devoir, pour quoy on est obligé de soutenir son autorité à laquelle cependant il faut avoir attention de ne pas laisser trop d'étendue.

Pour la conservation de l'espèce des animaux it est nécessaire d'empêcher que les sauvages étrangers viennent chasser sur les terres du Domaine, et même que les sauvages du Domaine chassent ailleurs que sur leurs terres. On conservera par ce moyen l'espèce des animaux dans chaque canton, pour en retirer année commune la meme quantité de pelleteries, et si le produit est moins considérable on est certain qu'il subsistera plus longtems.

On pourroit ne point s'assujettir à toutes ces précautions dans un pays ou la Traitte seroit abondante par le quantité d'animaux et de sauvages, mais elles sont indispensables dans les terres du Domaine ou la quantité des uns et des autres en sont diminuée. L'on doit conclure de tout ce qui vient d'estre expliqué que l'on ne peut avoir trop d'attention pour la régie de cette traitte ou trop veiller à ce qu'un sous fermier se conduise sur ces principes, on ne peut guerres l'attendre d'un marchand qui n'a pour but que de faire en peu de temps plus grand profit parce que les pertes à venir ne tomberont point sur luy.

La Traitte est exploitée dans les postes de Tadoussac de Checoutimy, Nekouban, et Mistassins, dependans du poste de Checoutimy, des islets de Jeremie et de la Riviere Moizy.

* * * *

Les sauvages de Nekouban ou Chabmouchouane qui est le même pays sont au nombre de trente sept chefs de famille.

Les Grands Mistassins et les gens de la hauteur des terres sont quarante trois chefs de famille.

Ces deux derniers postes de Nékouban et des Mistassins ont été rétablys depuis quelques annees ainsi qu'on la explique cy dessus, on marque icy seulement les sauvages qui y sont habitués. On ne sait point encor le nombre de ceux qu'on espère y attirer, la nécessité d'entretenir les Postes de Nekouban ou Chabmouchouane et du Lac des Mistassins a été expliquée cy devant.

Le Poste des Islets de Jérémie ou Papinachois s'étend depuis le bord de la mer jusqu'à la hauteur des terres, il s'y fait des huiles de loup marin et quelques pelleteries de petite quantité. La chasse du loup marin se fait à la pointe des Bersiamistes dans l'automne et dans le printemps, on ne peut la faire l'hiver parce que les ances gèlent et qu'on ne peut s'y embarquer pour aller au large chercher le loup marin sur les glaces qui dérivent.

Le Commis fait tous les ans un voyage dans les terres pour faire la traite avec les sauvages des terres. Ce poste a donné du profit depuis qu'il est rétably, il avait été abandonné sur l'idées qu'il pourroit être exploité par les commis de Tadoussac; on a reconnu que le Poste de Tadoussac n'était pas d'un plus grand produit lorsque les Papinachois y étoient joints, qu'il n'a point diminué par le rétablissement des islets de Jérémie, et que ce dernier dont on ne retiroit rien, donne du profit, il faut être près des sauvages pour avoir leur traite, et dès qu'on en est éloigné, ils viennent bien emprunter mais ils vont payer ailleurs. Au reste les sauvages des islets de Jérémie sont les plus aisés et ceux qui payent le mieux.

Il y a au bord de la mer vingt quatre chefs de famille, et vingt dans les terres.

Le Poste de la Rivière Moizy s'étend aussi du bord de la mer à la hauteur des terres, il s'y fait des huiles de loup marin et de la pelleterie. La chasse de loup marin ne s'y fait comm'aux islets que dans l'automne et le printemps parce que les ances y gèlent.

On pourroit y faire aussi une pêche de saumon très abondante dans la Rivière Pacaasseeschame, on ne sy attache point à cause du peu de debit de cette marchandise dont on ne trouve plus la défaite quand il en a plus de douze ou quinze barriques à Québec.

Le Poste de la Rivière Moizy est celui où se trouvent les plus belles martres de la partie de Tadoussac, il a toujours donné du profit.

Il y a quarante chefs de famille tant au bord de la mer que dans les terres.

Lordonnance du Sr Hocquart du 12 May dernier pourra rendre ce poste meilleur. Le Sr René Cartier a projeté d'établir un hyvernement au lac Des Naskapis où sont habitués les sauvages Naskapis, nation douce et facile à gouverner, nombreuse d'environ quarante familles qui n'a point de canots, et qui ne menage point ses pelleteries pour traiter. Ils s'habillent de peaux de caribou et de castors, et leurs enfans de martres et menües pelleteries. En faisant un Etablissement près d'eux on leur fournira les munitions et hardes nécessaires moyennant quoy on aura leurs pelleteries, et on les engagera à chasser plus qu'ils ne font.

Le Poste de la Rivière Moizy et sept isles est exploité par le Sr René Cartier de compte à moitié avec le Domaine qui fait les avances d'Equipement et s'en rembourse sur les retours, il y a pour l'exploitation de ce Poste un bastiment particulier appartenant par moitié au Domaine et au Sr Cartier. Il en a été construit un neuf l'hyver dernier, celui qui y servoit étant hors de service.

Le Directeur tant en cette qualité qu'en celle de receveur général et particulier a esté chargé du soin de toute la régie tenir la main à ce que les employés fassent fidèlement et diligemment leur devoir, prévenir et empêcher les fraudes, poursuivre les redevables, suivre et soutenir les procès et contestations tant en demandant qu'en deffendant pour les droits du Domaine soit d'entrée ou de sortie ou Domaniaux et requérir pour ces derniers la jonction du Procureur Général du Roy, exécuter et faire exécuter les ordonnances, arrêts et règlements concernans la régie du Domaine et à cette fin requérir devant l'intendant et poursuivre tous jugemens nécessaires. Poursuivre les contrevenans jusqu'à jugement définitif, transiger de l'autorité et aveu de l'Intendant, en conséquence donner main levée des saisyés et composer des amendes et confiscations, faire par devant luy la vente des choses saisyés et confisquées, après la confiscation prononcée, demander la séquestration en ses mains de tous biens vacans, désereances aubaines et bastardises et jusqu'à jugement définitif pour en rendre compte à qui il est ordonné et généralement veiller à la conservation de tons et chacuns les droits du Domaine.

Toutes les parties concernant la conservation des droits du Domaine seront d'orenavant suivies immédiatement et par les ordres de l'Intendant.

En la même qualité de Directeur et Receveur Général, il estoit chargé de payer les dépenses assignées sur le Domaine par l'Etat du Roy et pour les frais de justice sur les ordonnances de l'Intendant et de payer aussi les appointemens de commis et gardes et frais ordinaires de bureau et en retirer quittances valables.

Aujourd'huy ce sera le Trésorier de la marine qui sera chargé de tous ces payemens suivant les ordres qui luy seront donnés par l'Intendant.

Les fonctions du Contrôleur sont de tenir un contrôle exact de toutes les recettes et dépenses faites pour la régie du Domaine, recevoir les déclarations de l'arrivée et du départ des vaisseaux, expédier les congés d'embarquement et débarquement, les certificats de décharge des acquits à caution, et les états de chargement des navires conjointement avec le Directeur, et sous les ordres et en l'absence du Directeur de gérer pour luy les affaires du Domaine.

Les fonctions du visiteur sont de faire la vérification et visite de toutes les marchandises qui entrent en Canada et de celles qui en sortent et de tenir registre, ainsi qu'il a été expliqué cy dessus, empêcher les fraudes des droits du Domaine, veiller à la conduite des capitaine, brigadier et Gardes de la Brigade, et dresser les procès verbaux de saisie des marchandises qui se trouvent en contravention.

ROYAL PROCLAMATION OF AMNESTY FOR COUREURS DE BOIS.

EDITS ET ORDONNANCES. VOL. 1. 1854.

Louis, par la grâce de Dieu, roi de France et de Navarre; à tous présens et à venir, salut.

Le feu roi notre très-honoré seigneur et bisaïeul aurait, par sa déclaration du vingt-un mai, mil six cent quatre-vingt-seize, défendu sous peine des galères à toutes sortes de personnes d'aller en traite avec les sauvages de la Nouvelle-France, dans la profondeur des terres; et cette défense eut pour motifs non seulement les débauches des Français qui alloient courir les bois et traiter indifféremment chez toutes les nations sauvages, mais encore le préjudice que la colonie de la Nouvelle-France souffroit de ces courses, tant par rapport à la culture des terres, que par rapport au commerce du castor; il voulut cependant bien, en différens tems, accorder à ceux qui y avoient contrevenu, des amnisties pour les mettre en état de revenir avec sureté dans la colonie ; et quoique ce parti de douceur n'eut pas eu le succès que l'on devait en attendre, nous voulûmes bien, à l'exemple du feu roi, accorder par notre edit du mois de mars, mil sept cent seize, une nouvelle amnistie à ceux de ces coureurs de bois qui dans un an reviendroient à leur domicile, en faisant défenses par le même edit à tous Francais de rester dans les bois avec les sauvages et d'y monter pour y aller faire la traite sous quelque prétexte, ni pour quelque cause que ce fût, à peine du fouet et des galères contre les contrevenans, nous avons été informé que plusieurs de ces coureurs de bois ont profité de cette amnistie ; mais il nous a été représenté qu'il y en a encore qui, touchés de leur faute, ne demandent qu'à pouvoir la réparer en revenant à leur domicile, c'est pour leur en procurer les moyens, que, sensible à leurs instances, nous voulons bien user encore de notre clémence envers eux.

A ces causes et autres à ce nous mouvans, de l'avis de notre conseil et de notre certaine science, pleine puissance et autorité royale, nous avons remis et remettons aux habitans de la Nouvelle-France qui ont été courir des bois et faire le commerce avec les nations sauvages sans congé ni permission, la peine du fouet et des galères portée par notre edit du mois de mars, mil sept cent seize, qu'ils ont encourue ; à la charge par eux de revenir dans leur domicile, dans le terme et delai d'un an, à compter du jour de l'enrégistrement des présentes, et de se présenter devant le gouverneur et lieutenant-général pour nous au dit pays ; voulons en conséquence qu'ils jouissent de la présente amnistie, sans qu'ils puissent à l'avenir être recherchés pour avoir contrevenu aux défenses portées par notre dit édit ; imposons sur ce silence perpetuel à nos procureurs-généraux, substituts et autres ; faisons très expresses inhibitions et défenses à tous Francais de rester, après le dit tems passé, dans les bois avec les sauvages, et d'y monter pour aller faire la traite sous quelque prétexte ni pour quelque cause que ce soit, à peine du fouet et des galères contre les contrevenans, ainsi qu'il est porté par notre dit édit du mois de mars, mil sept cent seize, lequel sera exécuté en ce qui n'y est dérogé par les présentes.

Si donnons en mandement à nos amés et féaux les gens tenant notre conseil supérieur à Québec, que ces présentes ils fassent lire, publier et régistrer, et le contenu en icelles garder et observer selon leur forme et teneur, nonobstant tous édits, déclarations, arrêts, ordonnances et autres choses à ce contraires, auxquels nous avons dérogé et dérogeons par ces présentes. Enjoignons au sieur marquis de Beauharnois, notre gouverneur et lieutenant-général en la Nouvelle-France, au sieur Hocquart, intendant au dit pays, et à tous autres nos officiers qu'il appartiendra, de tenir la main à l'exécution des présentes, et à tous autres nos sujets de s'y conformer; et afin que ce soit chose ferme et stable à toujours, nous avons fait apposer notre scel à ces dites présentes.

MEMORIAL

OF THE LESSEE OF THE KING'S POSTS ON THE EFFECT OF THE ESTABLISHING OF A TRADING POST IN ESQUIMAUX BAY.

CAN. ARCH. C. ¹¹/₁ 109, p. 287.

MÉMOIRE.

Le Sr Fornel négociant de Québec avoit obtenu depuis deux ans la permission de faire un Etablissement de Pêche a loup marin dans la Baie del Kitchechatsou.

Le veritable but de son projet a Eté de former dans les profondeurs des Terres au dessus de cette Baie un Etablissement de Traitte ou il espéroit attirer les Sauvages qui commercent dans les postes Etablis sur la coste du nord du fleuve St Laurent. Et Encor plus ceux qui vont dans les postes du domaine. Et par la s'attribuer à l'Exclusive des fermiers du Domaine Et des Concessionnaires des postes de la Coste du nord la Traitte avec les Sauvages repandus dans cette partie du Canada.

Les Sauvages Montagnais divisés En plusieurs nations sous les nonis particuliers de Mistassins, chichertigaux, Papinachois, Nascapis &^a habitués dans la profondeur des Terres du Domaine ne peuvent se rendre dans les Postes qui y ont Eté Etablis qu'avec beaucoup de difficultés. Les Rivieres aux postes françois et anglois sont d'une difficile navigation, pleines de sauts et de rapides qui les obligent a des portages presque continuels et tres longs. D'ailleurs il ne se trouve point dans ces Pais d'Ecorces propres a faire des canots. En sorte que ces Sauvages n'ont que les canots qu'ils peuvent avoir des françois et des anglois En petite quantite, Et que la plupart sont obligés de faire presque tout le chemin a pied. ils auroient au contraire beaucoup de facilité a serendre a l'Etablissement que le Sr fornell se proposoit par la Riviere de Kitchechatsou aussi large et aussi profonde que le Saguenai pourvû qu'on leur portât des Ecorces pour faire les Canots qui leur seroient necessaires.

Ceux de ces Sauvages qui occupent toute L'Etendue de Pais depuis le lac des Naskapis Jusqu'au detroit de Bellisle tant du coste de la Baie d'hudson que du coste du fleuve St Laurent S'attachent Seulement a la chasse des animaux qui peuvent les nourrir et ne tuent que le Caribou Et les ours blancs. Ils ne connoissent les françois et les anglois que par relation des autres Sauvages qui Traitent avec les uns et les autres ; lorsqu'ils tuent des martres et des Renards, qu'on assure y Etre abondans et plus beaux que ceux de Mingan et de toute la coste de labrador, Et dont ces Sauvages negligent la chasse, ils en consomment les Peaux a leur habillement Et a ceux de leurs Enfants.

Le S. Cugnet fermier des Traittes de Tadoussac a Eû ces Connoissances par le rapport de ses commis quil avoit chargés depuis plusieurs années de suite a sen instruire avec les Sauvages memes, Et par les informations qu'il en a prises de plusieurs voïageurs de la Coste du nord qui ont Eû occasion devior plusieurs fois les Sauvages des Terres on lui a même apporté une Carte de Toute l'Etenduë de ce Pals tracée par les Sauvages mêmes.

Le prejudice que l'Etablissement du S. fornell causeroit a l'Exploitation des Traittes du Domaine a determiné, Monseigneur, a Expliquer a Mrs. de Beauharnois et hocquart les Intentions de Sa Majesté Sur l'Entreprise du Sr. fornell, Les ordres qu'ils ont reçûs a cet Egard ne Sont point Encor connus.

Le Bien du Service de Sa Majesté Et l'augmentation de son domaine de Tadoussac En Canada sont des motifs suffisans de rendre compte a Monsiegnur, des avantages que la Baie de Kitchechatsou peut procurer et des moyens de s'assurer de la possibilité ou impossibilité du succès.

On peut former a quarante lieües dans la profondeur de la Baie de Kitchechatsou sur une riviere venant du Nordouest qui S'y decharge un Etablissement de Traitte qui deviendroit en quelques années avantageux parce que non seulement on attireroit les Sauvages accoutumés a Traitter avec les françois, mais que l'on parviendroit par la suite a accoutumer les Sauvages qui ne connoissent point Encor les marchandises francoises a Enfaire usage par ou on les Engageroit a faire plus de Pelleteries, Et a les menager mieux pour se procurer le secours de ces marchandises, on pourroit aussy y attirer les Sauvages qui vont a la Baie d'hudson parce qu'ils trouveroient la même facilité que les autres a venir a l'Etablissement de Kitchechatsou.

Cet etablissement se faisant a quarante lieües dans la profondeur des Terres seroit hors de portee des Eskimaux qui Se tiennent ordinairement a l'Entree de la Baie, Et ne remontent jamais dans la profondeur, ni ne vont dans les bois par la crainte qu'ils ont des autres Sauvages avec lesquels ils sont toujours En Guerre.

p. 2750

Quatre ou cinq hommes suffiroient pour garder ce Poste et y faire la Traitte, il Seroit Seulement necessaire de les y transporter avec leurs vivres Et les marchandises de Traitte dans un bâtiment de Soixante Tonneaux an moins. Ce bâtiment serviroit tous les ans a apporter les Pelleteries de Traitte, Et porter les vivres Et les marchandises de l'Equipment.

Le Bâtiment Seroit obligé de passer devant les Endroits ou les Eskimaux Se tiemient; mais ils ne seroient point a craindre, pour vû que personne de l'Equipage n'y descende a terre, que Pon Evite avec Soin de les harceler, Et que l'on s'attache au contraire a leur donner toutes les démonstrations d'amitié qui pourront les rassurer, en se tenant cependant tres Exactement Sur Ses gardes, pourquoi ce batiment doit Etre armé de dix a douze hommes avec quatre Pierriers, les fusils et autres munitions Suffisantes pour leur defense en cas d'attaque.

Les Eskimaux paroissent naturellement plus ouverts et plus Gais que les Sauvages montagnais et Naskapis, mais l'Envie qu'ils ont de s'emparer impunement des Ustancils françois qu'ils sont curieux d'avoir les rend voleurs et Traîtres il Est moralement certain que l'on les affranchiroit En leur fournissant les Ustancils Et les marchandises qu'ils souhaitent, et leur faisant Connoître qu'ils peuvent S'assurer de les avoir de bonne Volonté. On ne doute point de trouver dans la baie de Kitchechatsou des Endroits propres a la Pêche du loup marin, de la Baleine et de la Vache marine, il y a des isles vis a vis les deux pointes qui en forment l'Entrée. Le batiment En feroit la decouverte en allant a L'Etablissement de la Traitte Et a son retour. Lors-qu'on aura un endroit certain pour un Etablissement de Peche, il sera necessaire d'y construire un fort a l'Epreüve des Surprises des Eskimaux, Garny de six pierriers, armes et munitions avec vint hommes pour le Garder commandés par un maître Sage Et habile, Capable d'empêcher Son monde de s'Exposer Indiscretement aux attaques Imprevües des Eskimaux En S'Ecartant soit pour la chasse ou la pêche, Et de prevenir en même tems toutes les insultes que l'on pourroit faire imprudemment a ces Sauvages, les recevant au contraire humainement lorsqu'ils se presenteroient pour demander ce qu'ils voudroient avoir. Par ce moïen on les affranchiroit seurement En quelques années au point de S'en Servir utilement pour les pêches. Les nommés Augustin Raby et Charles Le Cour navigateurs canadiens les ont vûs plusieurs fois, ont Eté plus d'une Journée de suite au milieu d'Eux, et ont traité avec Eux amiablement. Ces Sauvages les Connoissent et paroissent flattés de les Entendre nommer l'On ou L'autre.

En reunissant au Domaine du Roi Et a la Traitte de Tadoussac La Baie de Kitchechatsou Et les Rivieres qui S'y dechargent, les Etablissements de Traitte que l'on pourroit y faire ne porteroient aucun prejudice a la Traitte de Tadoussac des qu'ils en feroient partie.

Le Succès de l'Etablissement de Traitte dans la profondeur de la Baie peu Etre regardé presque comme indubitable. La réussite de ceux de Pêche est tres vraisemblable. Les uns et les autres par conséquent Sont un moïen d'augmenter de beaucoup les fonds du Domain vulgairement appellé La Traitte du Tadoussac. Mais comme le Succès n'en est pas encore connu, qu'il Est indispensable d'y hazarder des depenses Tant pour la decouverte que pour les Etablissemens La Traitte de Tadoussac jointe pour neuf années à l'Entreprise de ces Etablissemens au prix actuel du Bail de cette Traitte, faciliteroit les moiens d'y parvenir et dédommageroit En partie des depenses a y faire, Supposé que le succes ne repondit pas aux Espérances qui S'y presentent.

Les Etablissemens de Traitte et de Pêche reussissans Sa Majesté En retireroit l'avantage de se former En neuf années de tems Sans aucune depense Et meme sans rien diminuer de son revenu actuel, un Etablissement qui amelioreroit de beaucoup le fonds de son Domaine de Tadoussac et dont Elle tireroit apres les neuf années Expirées un prix de ferme plus avantageux qu'elle ne pourra jamais l'avoir de la Traitte de Tadoussac seule.

Les S^{rs} Cugnet actuellement Fermier de La Traitte de Tadoussac, Et Estèbe Garde des magazins de Sa Majesté a quebec offrent d'Entreprendre les Etablissemens cy dessus proposés dans la Baie de Kitchichatsou et Rivieres y affluantes Et d'en avancer les Depenses, S'il plaisoit a Monseigneur leur accorder pour neuf années consécutives a commencer au premier octobre 1747 Et finir a pareil jour de L'année 1756 Le bail de la Traitte de Tadoussac En y reunissant et y Compris la Baie de Kitchichatsou avec les Isles et Islets adjacens, Lacs et Rivieres qui S'y dechargent, Et toutes les Terres non coneedées contentües En l'Etenduë de Païs depuis la d. Baie de Kitchichatsou, la pointe de Bellisle Jusqu'a la baie d'Hudson moyennant le prix et Somme de 4,500 fr. de ferme par chaque année, Et a la charge par Eux de former pendant la premiere anneé du bail l'Etablissement Sedentaire de Traitte dans la riviere et profondeur et la Baie de Kichechatsou dont ils Seront tenus d'Envoyer un plan a Monseigneur dans la seconde année du d. bail avec un proces verbal du d. Etablissement dressé par le maître du bâtiment qu'ils y Envoieront Et par le Commis qui y sera Etabli pour la Traitte a l'Effet d'en Certifier Sa Grandeur, Et d'y faire pareillement dans le Cours de leur bail les Etablissemens possibles de Pêche de Loup marin, Baleine, Et vache marine dont ils rendront Egalement Compte a Monseigneur par proces verbaux de visite et d'Etablissement dans l'anneé qu'ils pourront Etre faits, Et En outre aux autres charges, clauses, Et conditions du bail de la Traitte de Tadoussac fait an S. PROCLAMATION

BY THE HONORABLE GUY CARLETON, LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR AND COMMANDER IN CHIEF OF THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC, ON SUBJECT OF VIOLENCE TOWARD INDIANS AND ILLEGAL OCCUPATION OF THEIR LANDS.

QUEBEC GAZETTE, December 29, 1766.

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas Advices have been received That several unprovoked Violences and Murthers have been committed upon the Indians under His Majesty's Protection in the Countries adjoining to His Majesty's Provinces in North-America, and that Settlements have been made in the said Countries, beyond the Limits prescribed by His Majesty's Royal Proclamation of 1763, in the Grounds therein allotted to the Indians: Whereby the said Indians have been greatly and justly discontented : His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor and Council of this Province, do hereby strictly enjoin and command all the Inhabitants of the same, to avoid every Occasion of giving the Indians Offence, and to treat them as Friends and Brothers intitled to His Majesty's Royal Protection; and, if any of the said Inhabitants have made any Settlements on the Indian Grounds, to abandon them without Delay, under Pain., in case of Failure herein, of being prosecuted, as Disturbers of the Peace of the Province, with the utmost Rigour of the Law.

And to the End that the Persons guilty of the above-mentioned Violences may be speedily discovered and brought to Justice, His Excellency the the Lieutenant-Governor and the Council of this Province, do hereby give publick Notice, That if any Person will make Discovery of any Murther or Imprisonment, or other illegal Violence, committed upon any of the Indians on the Borders of this Province ; or of any Destruction made of their Houses, Settlements, or Goods ; or of any violent Interruption of them in their hunting upon the Grounds allotted to them by His Majesty's Royal Proclamation, dated at St. James's, the Seventh Day of October, 1763 ; or of any Settlement illegally made by any of His Majesty's Subjects of this Province on the said 11 Grounds, so that any of the said Offenders may be convicted of such Offence, upon a legal Prosecution, the Person making such Discovery, shall, upon the Conviction of the Offender, receive a Reward of Fifty Pounds.

Given Under my Hand, at the Castle of Saint Lewis, in the City of Quebec, this 22d Day of December, in the Seventh Year of His Majesty's Reign, and in the Year of Our Lord 1766.

STATE OF THE POSTS OF THE KING'S DOMAIN IN CANADA,

WITH AN ABSTRACT OF THE PROCEEDINGS RELATING THERETO SINCE THE REDUCTION OF THAT COUNTRY.

CAN. ARCHIVES, C.O. 42, Vol. 6, p. 117.

The Posts of the Kings Domain vizt. Tadoussac, Islets de Jeremie, Chicoutimy and Sept Isles situated on the north side of the River St. Lawrence were during the French Government under the immediate management of the Director thereof who was appointed to that charge by the Governor & Intendant of Canada. He furnished them at the Kings expence with the merchandize & effects proper for the Indian trade or fisherys which were carried on at these several Posts, and received from thence likewise upon the Kings account, the furs, oyl, fish or other produce of the same. They had formerly been farmed but the lease expiring in 1756 they were advertised and no one bidding for them on account of the war the Intendant lest the savages should quit their usual haunts ordered them under the before-mentioned direction, which continued until our arrival altho the expence far exceeded the produce. When they were let out to farm the highest rent paid for them under the french government was 7000 livres or £291.13.4 Str.

After the reduction of Canada in 1760 The Indians of the Domain deputed their Chief & Missionary to adress General Murray in their favor, & represented to him that they were in the utmost misery & distress since the Conquest, destitute of provisions & every necessary, begging that they might be taken under the protection of His Britannick Majesty and supply'd & maintained in the same manner they had been in the time of the french.

The General after enquiring into the nature and establishment of the Domain, reported a state of it to General Amherst who ordered it to be continued on the same footing as formerly, and an Agent or Director was appointed to supply them with merchandize &ca. & to receive the returns on the Kings Account. An Officer & Party was also ordered to the Posts to preserve order & prevent abuses and irregularity. In the year 1762 when the Accounts of the Domain were made up after a two years supply the clear Revenue arising to His Majesty appeared to be very trifling, which the General reported to the Board of Trade & to the Treasury, and recommended the letting them out to farm as the most advantageous measure for the public. He received in answer that he might dispose of them as he should judge most expedient. They were accordingly let out at lease to those who offered the highest price vizt. £400 p. annum. The terms of this lease were that the Leasees should enjoy the Posts of the Kings Domain for one year certain commencing from the first day of October 1762, and for fourteen years if no orders to the contrary should arrive from Great Britain, and if such contrary orders should not arrive before the month of June in the next or any of the subsequent years, that the Leasees should enjoy the same until the first of October in the year following. The General reported his proceedings in this behalf to the Boards of Trade & Treasury for their approbation but received no answer at that time.

7 Octr. 1763.

His Majesty was pleased to issue His Royal Proclamation signifying his pleasure with regard to North America and enjoining that the Trade with the Indians described therein might be free & open to all His Subjects

Genl. Murray issued a proclamation in consequence of that of the King last mentioned setting forth that hostilitys were now ceased with the several Indian nations who had lately appeared in arms against His Majesty and a friendly intercourse between His Majesty's Subjects and them thereby restored, declaring that the trade with the several Indian nations living under his Protection was free and open to all His Subjects under the restrictions mentioned in said Royal Proclamation.

V.C. Book.
p. 80.

The General having been doubtful whether the Kings Domain in Canada & the lease thereof granted on behalf of His Majesty was or was not affected by the Kings Proclamation as no express mention was therein made of the same, had reported his thoughts on that subject to the Board of Trade and received for answer in general terms that the fate of the Posts of the Kings Domain was determined by the said Royal Proclamation of 7th Octr. 1763.

p. 2762

Octr. 1765.

Several merchants in Quebec misunderstanding the purport of the Kings Proclamation (as the Leasees apprehend) apply'd to the Governor & Council for liberty to trade to His Majestys Domain. The Leasees did not conceive their Lease to be in any respect invalidated by the Royal Proclamation but rather strengthened as they apprehended the Proclamation could only be understood to give His Majestys American subjects a free passage over his ungranted & unleased lands which yield him no profit, but by no means to destroy such leases as produce a considerable annual rent to His Majesty and thereby render the lands so leased of no advantage to His Revenue; but as said Leasees had very considerable property at stake which by laying open the Domain would be greatly injured, and in order to gain time until His Majestys further pleasure should be known they Represented their case to the Governor & Council praying that they might be supported in their possession until the last day of September following. In Council it was resolved that as their request appeared highly just & reasonable an advertisement should be inserted in the Quebec Gazette forbidding all persons from interrupting them in their trade to the Domain under any pretext whatever until the last day of August following which was giving sufficient time for any traders to avail themselves of the same for the succeeding year if the Domain should finally be laid open.

2 June 1766.

Messrs. Alsop, Chinn & Co. apply'd to government for a special permission to trade with the Indians of the Domain in particular. The General on this occasion equally as tender of injuring the individuals concerned in the lease by any act of his, as zealous to comply with the letter of the King's Proclamation granted to Messrs. Alsop & Co. a general permission to trade with the Indians within the Province in conformity to the same.

Thomas Mills Esquire upon his appointment to the Office of Receiver General for the Province of Quebec being among other things charged with the Superintendancy of the Kings Domain and Estates in Canada to receive the rents & Revenues thereof and to enquire into the state & nature of the lease of the Posts of the Domain granted as before mentioned by General Murray and to report thereon, wrote to the Acting Receiver

General for the time being, directing him to apply to the Governor & Council to support the Leasees in the uninterrupted possession of their Lease until His Majesty's pleasure should be further known.

The Acting Receiver General in conformity to the above directions laid Mr. Mills's letter before the Council & joined the Leasees at same time in representing that Messrs. Alsop & Co. had prepared two vessels laden with matterials for Building on the Domain contrary to the spirit & meaning of the King's Proclamation, praying that such proceedings might be prevented and that the Leasees might remain in peaceable possession agreeable to the tenor of their lease. In consequence of the aforesaid representation the Governor & Council altho they did not consider Mr. Mills's letter to the Acting Receiver General as of sufficient authority to forbid any persons but the Leasees from trading to the Domain, ordered that Messrs. Alsop & Co. should be warned & forbid at their peril to erect buildings on the lands reserved by

July 1766.

His Maj^s Proclamation to the savages within the Province, & that they or others transgressing in such case should be prosecuted according to law.

The Receiver General arrived from England, and having examined into the state of the Kings Domain & the lease thereof granted, and finding that Mr. Alsop & Co. still persisted in erecting buildings thereon to the great hurt of the Leasees and detriment of the Kings Revenue notwithstanding the notice that had been given them, moved the Governor & Council to reconsider the case & grant protection to the Leasees who had on their parts in every respect fulfilled the conditions of the Lease, begging it might be made known to all His Maj^s subjects that the Posts of the Domain were by no means laid open & that all other persons whatsoever might be strictly forbid to trade thereto. At same time an affidavit of Mr. Peter Stuart a Justice of the Peace residing at the Posts as Agent for the Leasees, was laid before the Council setting forth, that Messrs. Alsop, Chinn & Co. had traded with the Indians of the Domain, supply'd them with quantitys of spirits the preceeding winter which kept them idle instead of hunting as usual for their support & rendered it dangerous to reside at the Posts & that they actually had erected buildings there contrary to the King's Proclamation & the orders of the Governor & Council, and further that Mr. Chinn had declared he did not value the Orders of the Governor & Council and would proceed with his buildings.

15 August 1766.

The Honble Paulus E. Irving, Esq^r. Commander in chief & President of the Council for the time being taking the matter further into consideration with consent & advice of the Council ordered a warrant to issue to said Mr. Peter Stuart authorising him to take down & remove all buildings which were or should be erected by Messrs. Alsop, Chinn & Co., their agents or others on His Majestys Domain and a party of men was dispatched to see the warrant put in execution.

9th October 1766.

Lieut. Governor Carleton being arrived, application was made to him by Messrs. Alsop, Chinn & Co., requesting a suspension of the warrant granted by Col. Irving to take down & remove their buildings, which suspension was granted and another party of men sent to recall the other, and to put Messrs. Alsop, Chinn & Co. into possession with free liberty to trade with the Indians of the Domain.

I do certify the above to be a true state of the case.

JA: MURRAY.

As Messrs. Alsop, Chinn & others may have complained of the Posts being farmed as a measure detrimental to the trade of the Province and may have insinuated that their being laid open would occasion a greater consumption of British manufactures, it may not be improper here to remark

That the country those Indians inhabit being altogether incapable of cultivation and the hunting season lasting but for about six months of the year, they are reduced to almost an entire dependance the rest of the time on the supplies brought them by the person farming the Posts. It is well known that all savage people are naturally indolent and calculate only for the present moment, and were they indulged at pleasure with spirituous liquors to which they are unconquerably addicted, and which the introducing a general trade among them must inevitably occasion from the natural competition that would arise among contending adventurers they would in a few days perhaps often in a few hours consume the whole produce of their years labour, and on the approach of the rigorous winter finding themselves, wives & children naked, destitute & exposed to all the miseries of that climate, would wreck* their vengeance indiscriminately on the first Europeans or other white people they met as the immediate authors of their misfortune. To prevent these impending consequences which were seen & proved by many examples to be inseparable from the plan of laying the Posts open, the French who more than any other nation seem to have study'd the temper and genius of the Indians, adopted this plan of farming out the Posts & it is plain they succeeded in it. Clerks or Factors were established at the different Posts to supply the savages with what their necessities reasonably required, rates were fixed for the trade—when an Indian family came to a Post, whether they had been successful in their hunting or had nothing to exchange, they were alwise* supplyd with necessarys until the chance of the hunt should enable him to pay, and in case of sickness or death, their wives and orphans were maintained & supported until capable to provide for themselves. This created the strongest ties of gratitude, friendship & interest in both parties. The Indian was spurr'd to industry & eagerly pursued the most probable means of obtaining wherewith to repay his Benefactor, & to fit himself & family out anew for another season. The merchant farming the Posts, his agents or factors on the other hand were bound by interest to supply the Indian, to keep him sober & support him in distress as the only means to recover his property, for if the poor savage is abandoned in the hour of want, or dyes by means of intoxication, as he leaves no property behind him so the merchant loses his debt. By this friendly intercourse, by this fatherly treatment of the Indians, which the French have alwise found it their interest to practice and encourage, the Indians saw the exchange or traffick they made with the eyes of sober reflection, looked forward with joy for the returning season of meeting with the trader whom they considered as their Father friend and benefactor, were pleased upon a re-view of their past transactions, and formed in the course of them such an attachment to the Trader & the nation to which he belonged as neither time, change of power, the address of the English nor any other consideration could efface. The proof of this is undeniable in the late troubles when the* massacred almost every English subject they could lay hands on, and at same time allowed the French Canadian Traders not only a free access as their friends, but were by their interposition prevailed on to release or ransom such of the prisoners as were alive when they came to a parley at the late affair of Michilimackinac. By this system of management the affections of the Indians were also secured to the Crown without any expence to Government besides a clear revenue arising to the King. By laying them open every

*sic

*sic

p. 2765

the lowest of the people whose credit may extend to a cask of spirits will have access to them & take advantage of their simplicity. All those salutary purposes above mentioned will be frustrated, for it is irreconcilable to reason & the nature of things, that it can consist with the interest of any individual to keep large storehouses with quantities of provisions & merchandize for the supply of the Indians without being assured of the produce of their hunting to pay the expence which cannot be while he is liable to be robbed of his returns by the first stragler who is wicked enough to intercept the Indian on his way to his Post & by alluring him with liquor, deprive the Indian of a future credit. And yet without such a sure & permanent resource of a fixed storehouse, the savages must often perish in numbers from mere want, so that in a little time almost the whole of the trade to the Domain will be confined to selling spirits to the Indians which from the contiguity of the Posts to the inhabited parts of the Province will be utterly impossible to hinder the lower sort of people from carrying among them. The Indian who has thus invested his produce, glutted himself with liquor, & on the return of reason sees himself & family naked & abandoned, now destitute of the resource of a certain credit he formerly was sure of in all circumstances, will naturally inveigh against the man he has been injured by, and if he happens to survive the misery he is by this means exposed to, will be sure to revenge himself the first opportunity on the first of the color he meets with. Hence murders, rapine and devastation must ensue. An instance has already happened by a New England Vessel putting into these Posts since we have been in possession of the Country when several Indians were murdered, and had it not been for the timely interposition of the General who with trouble got them soothed & ordered a recompence to the suffering familys of the Indians who were killed, it's hard to say where the vindictive spirit of these people might have carried them. On the whole it is plain that instead of increasing the consumption of manufactures as may be pretended, the sure & inevitable consequences that must follow the measure of laying the Posts open, will be fatal in their immediate effects, will depopulate the country and end in almost the total extirpation of these unhappy people in a few years time, will bring the present consumption of manufactures to nothing & by losing the people will follow a total loss of the returns to Britain.

The above remarks coincide entirely with my Notions and Opinions of the matters in Question.

May the 26th, 1767.

My Lords

The lands of the Kings Domain were never ceded to nor purchased by the French King, nor by His Britannick Majesty; but by compact with the savages inhabiting the said lands, the particular Posts or Spots of ground, whereon the Kings buildings are erected and now stand, were ceded to the French King, for the purpose of erecting storehouses & other conveniences for the Factors, Commis or Servants employed to carry on the trade ; and the savages residing within the limits of the Domain, & who resort to the said Posts of His Majesty at certain seasons of the year, were adopted as Domicile Indians under the sole & immediate protection of the King, & so remained till the reduction of the Province, & a Missionary was sent to reside constantly among them. The lands of the Domain therefore, are to all intents & purposes reserved, as hunting grounds to the savages, of which they are ever jealous, on the least appearance of an encroachment even amongst themselves.

With what propriety therefore, could the Governor have complyd with Mr. Alsops petition for grants of land there? would it not have been in direct contradiction to His Maj's. Proclamation? & I flatter myself the contempt he has shown to the said Royal Proclamation & his Maj^s. Government; will be far from entitling him to the favour he claims from the Kings servants here. I must further add that this man has been the author of all the disputes, factions, & jealousies which have taken place, since the establishment of civil government in the colony, and I firmly believe his enterprize to these Posts was with a view to augment the same, he being the only man who attempted it corroborates this opinion.

I have the honor to be with great Truth and Regard

My Lords your Lordships most obedient, and most humble Servant,

JA: MURRAY.

OF KING'S POSTS.

THE QUEBEC GAZETTE,
October 20, 1768.

BY THE HONORABLE GUY CARLETON, LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR AND COMMANDER IN CHIEF OF THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC,
BRIGADIER-GENERAL OF HIS MAJESTY'S FORCES, &c., &c.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas I have received an Order of his Majesty in Council, dated the 26th of June, 1767, in the Words following, viz.

At the Court at St. James,

The 26th Day of June, 1767.

PRESENT:

The King's Most Excellent Majesty.

Arch-Bishop of Canterbury.	Earl of Harcourt.
Lord President.	Earl of Shelburne.
Duke of Grafton.	Viscount Townshend.
Duke of Queensberry.	Viscount Howe.
Lord Steward.	Viscount Barrington.
Earl of Huntingdon.	Viscount Clare.
Earl of Denbigh.	Viscount Villiers.
Earl of Litchfield.	Lord Sandys.
Earl of Cholmondeley.	James Stuart Mackenzie, Esq.
Earl of Marchmont.	James Oswald, Esq.
Earl of Bristol.	Sir Edward Hawke.
Earl of Ashburnham.

WHEREAS there was this Day read at the Board, a Report from the Right Honorable the Lords of the Committee of Council for Plantation Affairs, dated the 12th of this Instant, in the Words following, viz.

“Your Majesty having been pleased, by your Order in Council, of the third of December last, to refer unto this Committee, the humble Petition of Anthony Merry, of London, Merchant, in Behalf of himself, George Allsopp, Joseph Howard, and Edward Chinn, Merchants, and Inhabitants of your Majesty's Province of Canada, in North-America, setting forth, amongst other Things, That, in Consequence of your “issued in your Majesty's Name, by his Excellency General MURRAY, GOVERNOR of Quebec, on the 31st of January, 1765, the Petitioners were encouraged to load a Vessel with sundry Merchandize, provide Canoes, and every Thing necessary and proper for carrying on the Trade with the Indians, at a Place called the King's Posts of Tadousac and Chegotimi, on the River Saguenay, in the Neighbourhood of Lake St. John, and having built a Shed, or Ware-house, for the Reception of their Goods, and at a very considerable Expence, established themselves, gained the Indians to their Interest, and made a Settlement on Lake St. John, they were prohibited from prosecuting their Plan, by your Majesty's Receiver-General, and the President and Council of Quebec; and humbly praying, That your Majesty will be graciously pleased to grant them an Order for Liberty to dispose of such Goods as they had sent up, or your Majesty's Royal Mandate for a Grant of such Lands as are mentioned in a Petition presented by them to Governor MURRAY, or to be otherwise relieved in the Premises.

“The Lords of the Committee, in Obedience to your Majesty's said Order of Reference, this Day took the said Petition, together with a Report made thereupon, by the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, dated the second of this Instant, into their Consideration, and do agree humbly to report to your Majesty, as their Opinion, that the Petitioners had no Right, by your Majesty's Proclamation of the 7th of October, 1763, to trade at the Posts of the Royal Domain at Tadousac and Chigotimi, on the River Saguenay, in the Province of Canada, or to erect any Magazines, or make any Establishment for the Purpose of Trade there, and that your Majesty's Right thereto ought to be considered as excluded from the general Right of Free Trade, granted by the said Proclamation, and ought to be carried on only by your Majesty's Lessees, under your particular Licence for that Purpose, and that the Buildings and Magazines erected at the said Posts by the Petitioners should be demolished, and that the Goods sent there by the Petitioners be returned to them, notwithstanding the Manner in which they conveyed them thither: And their Lordships humbly submit to your Majesty, that the said Petition of Anthony Merry, and others, should be dismissed.”

His Majesty taking the same into Consideration, was pleased, with the Advice of his Privy Council, to approve thereof, and to order, as it is hereby ordered, that the Buildings and Magazines erected at the said Posts by the Petitioners be demolished, and that the Goods sent there by the Petitioners be returned to them: And it is hereby further ordered, That the said Petition of Anthony Merry, and others, be dismissed this Board, whereof the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, or Commander in Chief of his Majesty's Province of Quebec, for the Time being, and all others whom it may concern, are to take Notice and govern themselves accordingly.

W. BLAIR. 12th July, 1768.
p. 2769

ALL PERSONS are therefore required to pay due Obedience to this his Majesty's Order, in Council, and govern themselves accordingly, as they will answer the Contrary at their Peril.

12th Sept. 1774.

My Lord

I am sorry to acquaint your Lordship that notwithstanding all my endeavours I have not been able to meet with any Fossils worthy your Lordships acceptance.

* * * *

As your Lordship kindly gave me leave to inform you of the success, and progress of the fisheries on this Coast, I think myself particularly happy in enjoying such an indulgence, and shall endeavour to give your Lordship all the information in my power.

When first I came, in the year 1770, the fisheries were on the decline; all the Newfoundland Merchants, except Noble & Pinson were grown tired of; them, finding it would not answer their end to carry on business here without erecting a variety of buildings, and being liable to loose them all the next Season, if any other vessel should arrive before them; they therefore contented themselves with sending their boats to catch fish when the season was over in Newfoundland, and withdrew all their people towards the latter end of September. Mr. Pinson hearing that great voyages of Seals had always been kill'd on this Coast, and finding that codfish were as plentiful about Chateau as in Newfoundland, determin'd to remove the greatest part of their business from Conch hither; they having four vessels, and determining to send them out every Spring as early as possible, were not afraid of loosing their possessions by the prior arrival of any other and saw they should be able to sieze all the best Posts, by getting first on the Coast, but the murder of Mr. Darby's crew at Cape Charles, by the Indians, deter'd him from extending their business farther from Chateau than Bad Bay, a place not quite a mile's distance from the Blockhouse ; that, and Seal-island Chateau, were the only Sealing Posts, without the Streights of Belleisle in possession of the English when I came, and they had not one Salmon Post.

I settled in Charles River, the Salmon season being then over made preparations for the Winter ; fix'd a Sealing crew at Seal-island Cape Charles, & kept a sawing, and a Furing crew in Charles River. In 1774 I establish'd a Salmon fishery in Charles River, a Cod fishery at this place, kept one crew Sealing on the Island, and an other Boat building in St. Lewis's Bay. The same year Noble & Pinson built a Cod fishing room in Lance-Cove Temple Bay, kept a Boat building crew, and combined their two Sealing Posts as before.

The next Spring (1772) finding that I liv'd undisturbed by the Indians, and observing how much those people were reform'd by the pains I had taken with them, they took the advantage of my vessel's not arriving, owing to her being cast away on the Island of Fogo on the Coast of Newfoundland, and seiz'd upon both my Sealing, and Salmon Posts, which oblig'd me to establish new ones, the former in White Bear Sound; the latter in the River Colleroon, which empty's itself into the Head of St. Lewis's Bay. Noble & Pinson the same year held their former Possessions except Seal-island Chateau (which was taken from them by Mr. Slade) and flx'd an other Sealing crew in Lance Cove: These viz: four Sealing, and two Salmon Posts were all that were occupied at the time I first troubled your Lordship for redress and protection; at the same time setting forth that the establishing property was the only effectual way to encourage adventurers, and make the fisheries flourish. The event has fully prov'd the truth of my assertions, for the resolution of your Lordships Board, and his Majesty's order in Council in consequence thereof, were no sooner known than no less than two Salmon, and five Sealing posts were added to the former number, yet, notwithstanding the above order, Noble & Pinson took the advantage of my misfortune last year in being delay'd coming out, by the sickness and death of the Indians, and dispossessed me of my Salmon Post in the Colleroon, but this summer the Governor has been pleas'd to restore both that, and Charles River to me again, and confirm'd them in the possession of Seal-island, to which, I cannot help thinking, I have a prior, and better title than they.

This year seven new salmon rivers have been occupied, and there will also be some more Sealing Posts, but how many I do not yet know, our House have taken up one.

Last Winter prov'd a very bad one for the Seal fishery, all the adventurers in that branch lost a deal of money. This summer has turn'd out well for both salmon and codfish: the latter begins to revive again, and your Lordship may depend upon it 'tis not only unnecessary, but even impolitic to force people into that branch of business, as it must of course encrease in proportion to the Sealing with all adventurers from Great Britain, but those from Quebec, I fancy, will never enter much into it, as their Servants are hired on different terms, and they rather chose to return to their familys in summer, than remain here to go through the drudgery of a Codfishery. The obliging all who keep business here, to have annually, one, or more vessels regularly clear'd out from Great Britain &c. is a point which, in my private opinion, ought by no means to be dispenc'd with.

I find that this coast is now annexed to Quebec, and that the Canadians are to be reinstated in all their former possessions. This, I'm afraid, will affect many of us greatly, particularly our House, as we have put ourselves to a very great expence in erecting Houses, and other conveniences, and may possibly be oblig'd to quit all, in favor of a Canadian, who may produce an old, unhear'd of Grant which he never made use of. Charles River is the only place we have that ever was occupied by them, and that only occasionally. As it will be a difficult matter for all the British adventurers to meet in order to consult on a Memorial, I take the liberty of humbly requesting the favor that your Lordship and your Board will take us under your protection, and do with us as it shall seem best.

His Majesty having now an incontestible right of disposing of any part of this Coast by Grant, I once more renew my request to your Lordship to procure me all that part of the Coast, contain'd between Cape Charles, and Cape St. Lewis, and the Islands which ly within those limits, reserving to all People a right of carrying on a Codfishery in any part thereof, and cutting what wood they may have occasion for, for the use of the same.

We have lately sent a Crew to Sandwich Bay to take possession of the rivers there, and kill Furs this Winter. The Esquimeaux Indians have not been near us this Summer, the great indulgencies the Moravians met with from Government have enabled them to engross all the trade of those People, to our no small disappointment and loss, for we have upwards of £300 in goods on our hands which are not saleable any where else.

We should have occupied three more Salmon-rivers this summer but unfortunately the vessel which one of my Partners and myself were coming out in, ran upon a Rock off the Landsend, and 'twas a miracle she carried us safe into Cork where we were oblig'd to leave her and purchase an other, in which we proceeded to this place, and had the misfortune to carry away our Masts about half seas over; these accidents caus'd so much delay, 'twas too late in the Season to attempt new Rivers.

Our Shalloway is this instant return'd from Sandwich Bay where she left our Furriers in possession of the Salmon Rivers; they saw no sign of any Uropean having dwelt there; it is a place much frequented by the Nescaupick Indians, a People who subsist by hunting, they are good Furriers, speak broken French, are Roman Catholics, and have traded with the Canadians many years. One family have been here this Summer and sold us about fifty pounds worth of Fur.

p. 2773

Next Summer I propose taking a cruise as far to the Northward as the season will permit, to visit all the Indian Tribes, and try if I can find out proper places for Summer Fisheries, and a whale fishery. Enclos'd is a list of all the Forts occupied by those British Merchants who carry on business without the Straights of Belleisle.

Wishing your Lordship a good Winter, and that Health and Happyness may attend yourself, and family, I beg leave, with the utmost respect, and gratitude, to subscribe myself

My Lord
Your Lordships Much oblig'd and Most obedient Humble Servant

ANNO DECIMO SEPTIMO GEORGE III. REGIS.

TO PREVENT THE SELLING OF STRONG LIQUORS TO THE INDIANS IN THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC, AS ALSO TO DETER PERSONS FROM BUYING THEIR ARMS OR CLOTHING AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES RELATIVE TO THE TRADE AND INTERCOURSE WITH THE SAID INDIANS.

No strong liquors to be sold or distributed to Indians.

Whereas many mischiefs may be occasioned by the practice of selling rum and other strong liquors to the Indians, and of buying their cloaths and Preamble. arms, and also by trading with the said Indians, or settling amongst them, without a license, It is ordained and enacted by his excellency the captain general and governor in chief of this province, by and with the advice and consent of the legislative council of the same, that

ART. I.

From and after the publication of this ordinance, no person or persons whatsoever shall sell, distribute, or otherwise dispose of, to any Indian or Indians within this province, or to any other person or persons for their use, any rum or other strong liquors, of what kind or quality soever, or shall knowingly or willingly suffer the same, in any manner, to come to the hands of any Indian or Indians, without a special license in writing, for that purpose first had and obtained, from under a penalty of £5 and 1 month's imprisonment for the first offence and £10 and 2 month's imprisonment for the second, besides forfeiture of the licence if a publican.

No person to purchase the cloaths or arms of Indians under a penalty of £5 and 1 month's imprisonment for the 1st offence and £10 and 2 month's imprisonment for the 2d.

No person to settle in any Indian country or village without a licence, under a penalty of £10 for the 1st offence and £20 for the 2d.

Manner of inflicting and levying the said penalties.

different forts in this province, or from such other person or persons as the governor, lieutenant governor, or commander in chief of the province for the time being, shall authorise for that purpose.

Every person offending herein shall, for the first offence, forfeit the sum of five pounds, and suffer an imprisonment for any time not exceeding one month, and for the second, and every subsequent offence, shall forfeit ten pounds, and suffer an imprisonment for any time not exceeding two months.

If the person so offending, be a publican, inkeeper, or retailer of strong liquors, he shall, over and above the said penalty and imprisonment, be rendered incapable, from the day of his conviction, of selling or retailing liquors to any person whatsoever, notwithstanding any licence that he may have for that purpose, which licence is hereby declared to be null and void from the day of his conviction.

ART. II.

From and after the publication of this ordinance, no person or persons whatsoever shall purchase, or receive in pledge ; or in exchange, any cloaths, blankets, firearms, or ammunition belonging to any Indian or Indians within this province, under a penalty of five pounds and imprisonment for any time not exceeding one month, for the first offence, and of ten pounds and imprisonment for any time not exceeding two months, for the second, and every other subsequent offence.

ART. III.

From and after the publication of this ordinance, it shall not be lawful for any person to settle in any indian village or in any indian country within this province, without a licence in writing from the governor, lieutenant governor, or commander in chief of the province for the time being, under a penalty of ten pounds for the first offence, and twenty pounds for the second, and every other subsequent offence.

ART. IV.

It shall and may be lawful for any person or persons whatsoever, to sue for the penalties and forfeitures aforesaid, by information before one or more of the commissioners of the peace of the district, in which any offence against any of the above articles of this ordinance, shall have been committed; who is, and are hereby authorized and required to hear and determine such information, in a summary manner, and upon the oath of one credible witness (being some other than the informer himself) and to inflict the said imprisonment, and to levy the said penalties or forfeitures, together with the costs of suing for the same, by a warrant to seize and sell the goods or lands of the offenders. Provided always that such informations shall be brought within six calendar months from the time that the offence shall have been committed, and not after different forts in this province, or from such other person or persons as the governor, lieutenant governor, or commander in chief of the province for the person or persons intrusted as aforesaid, shall recover the possession of all such goods so seized.

All commandants of posts, not being commissioners of the peace, are hereby required to send such security, together with all informations and papers relative to such seizure, and for want of such security, to send the goods, wares, merchandizes, provisions, boats, battoes, canoes, or other carriages so seized, together with a certificate of the cause of seizure, to the commissioners of the peace residing nearest the place where such seizure shall be made, who shall proceed therein in manner herein before mentioned.

upon giving security.

If any person or persons shall think him or themselves aggrieved by the judgment or determination of the said commissioners of the peace, it shall and may be lawful for such person or persons to appeal therefrom, at any time within twelve months from the time of giving such judgment or determination, to the governor and council of this province, any five or more of whom (the commissioners of the peace who shall have given such judgment or determination only excepted) with the governor, lieutenant-governor, or chief justice, shall constitute a court of appeals for that purpose ; who are hereby authorized fully to examine into the grounds and nature of the appeal, and the judgment or determination of the said commissioners of the peace to reverse, or affirm, according to the opinion of the major part of the said court of appeals :—and in case the same shall be reversed, the appellant shall be restored to all that he has lost by such seizure and condemnation, and be allowed such costs and charges as the said court shall award and adjudge.

Execution suspended until the determination of the appeal.

Distribution of the forfeitures.

But no person shall be intitled to such appeal, unless he shall have first given good and sufficient security for prosecuting the same, and paying all such condemnation money and costs, as shall be awarded by the court of appeals, in case the judgment and determination of the commissioners of the peace shall be affirmed.

Upon such security so given, the levying of the penalty, and the sale of the goods, wares, merchandizes, boats, battoes, canoes, or other carriages seized, shall be suspended, and be made to abide the final determination and judgment of the court of appeals.

ART. VII.

All penalties and forfeitures recovered by virtue of this ordinance, shall be divided and applied in the manner following, that is to say, after deducting the charges of

PETITION FOR RENEWAL OF LEASE OF KING'S POSTS.

[14 May, 1785.]

CANADIAN ARCHIVES, Q. 24

To the Honorable Henry Hamilton Esquire, Lieutenant Governor and Commander in Chief in and Over His Majesty's Province of Quebec, &c.

The Memorial of Thomas Dunn, William Grant, and Peter Stuart Esqrs. Lessees of the Posts of the Kings Domain situated on the North side of the River Saint Laurence.

Humbly Sheweth

That your Memorialists became possessed of the Right to the trade with the Indians at the Kings Posts in virtue of Lease bearing date the Twentieth day of September 1762. That since that period they have been at very great charge & trouble in supporting their trade and in their care of the Indians, residing in and near and resorting to the said Domain and Posts.

That at their sole expence, they have carefully attended to, supported and maintained the aged, and infirm, the Widows and Orphans; the distressed Indians residing on the King's Domain have been relieved and supported by your memorialists, without becoming a burthen or expence to Government, and which Your Honor must be sensible is not the case with any tribe of the Indians in the Province except those above mentioned, and this they have done without obligatory conditions expressed in their lease, and by it they hoped to have obtained the most ample protection when in their occupancy, and the favor of the Crown to continue its lessees on a renewed lease when the first expired.

His Majesty is pleased by the Terms of Your Memorialists Lease to assure to them a peaceable, secure and uninterrupted enjoyment of the benefit of their situation in Trade as His Lessees, they have been permitted to remain on the Domain as Lessees for five years after the expiration of their Lease, and they have supported the Indians during the late Rebellion & War without expence to the Crown, and it was with reason they claimed a merit to its favor in continueing Lessees, upon a renewed lease, so soon as public tranquility was restored to the Province.

p. 2778

Your Memorialists beg your Honor to believe, what they can support with full testimony, that during the late Rebellion, they were not only interrupted in their Commerce by the frequent and almost continual depredations of American Armed vessels, and their crews, but they have been plundered of their property to a sum exceeding three thousand Pounds Sterling, they however remained in possession, performed the conditions of their Old Lease, and supported the Indians, in the dayly expectation of Peace, and in the firm relyance on the political justice of Government, and the favor and reward of His Majesty in continueing their possession by a renewed and long lease.

Your Memorialists, as consequent to their possession claim, and expectations, were under the necessity to keep a constant and sufficient quantity of Goods and Provisions at the Posts to supply the wants of the Indians, and prevent their occasioning that trouble & expence to the Crown, that all other Tribes have done in this Province; those objects Your Memorialists pursued & these Services performed to Government at the risque of their own ruin, in effect to a very considerable loss and distress, after the expiration of their Lease.

Your Memorialists pray that Your Honor will take into consideration their situation and their reasonable right to Petition His Majesty for a Renewal of their lease, as a justice due to their sufferings & losses, and claim to the Kings favor for their services.

That Your Honor will be pleased to Grant unto Your Memorialists, a renewal of the Lease of the said posts for One Year, from the first day of October next, and for nine years afterwards if the same should not meet His Majesty's disapprobation, to be signified by the Right Honble. the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury. And that Your Honor will do Justice to their prayer & claims, by that representation of their situation & petition. which reason & merit may entitle them to expect with Justice from His Majesty's Government, under your Honors Command

And Your Petitioners shall as in duty bound

Ever pray

REPLY TO LESSEE'S PETITION.

[6 June, 1786.]

CANADIAN ARCHIVES, Q. 26.

Quebec, 6th June, 1786.

Gentlemen:

In answer to your Memorial which I received this morning regarding the Posts commonly called the Kings Posts whereof you are now Lessees under a Lease which will expire on the 30th of September next, I must acquaint you, that His Majesty's Commands signified to me by the Right Hon'ble Lord Sydney, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State to grant a new lease of the said Posts to Messrs. Alexander and George Davison and Francois Baby to commence from the 1st of October next, are positive and explicit and must be obeyed.

The circumstances you represent shall nevertheless meet with due attention.

The regrets of the Indians with whom by virtue of your Lease, you have been connected, at losing the good offices they have so long experienced from your friendship and care, are natural, and I doubt not perfectly just, these cannot however, you must be sensible prove a bar against a new lease to the other persons to whom His Majesty has been pleased to order the same to be granted, who enjoying this mark of the Royal favor must be bound by every tie to treat favourably the Indians thus entrusted in some measure to their protection, and it shall be my business to state to them in the strongest terms the force of this obligation.

I am not at this moment sufficiently informed on the nature of the Lease in question to give a definitive answer to your claim on the new Lessees for reimbursement of your expenditures in buildings, &c. and for payment of the debts due to you—but you may rest assured that your rights in these matters shall be maturely considered, and that justice shall be rendered to you therein.

I am with regard, Gentlemen,

Your most obedient, humble Servent,

RECORDS, HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

Sir: —

I have pleasure at this time in having to communicate to you the success of the inland expedition so far as regards the ascertainment of the precise situation of the mouth of Canniappuscaw, otherwise distinguished by name of South River...I have to remark a circumstance occurring at this period which tended considerably to intimidate our Indians—while being engaged taking a Meridian Altitude of the Sun with the Indian Ouscucher present, Mr. Atkinson having ascended the hill with the other Indians to survey the Country—an Esquimaux Dog passed us on the beach which for the moment excited a little confusion—the Indian however seeing no Esquimaux near kept his station and the circumstance only occasioned us at present to trim and load guns & make preparation for sudden surprisal but subsequently together with other traces of Esquimaux inhabitants blighted occasionally every hope I had warmly cherished of being able to accomplish the primary object of the Expedition. At 3 p.m. encamped on the west side of the River in supposed latitude 57° 50' N. at which place noticed some decayed poles of an Indian tent which evidently had been pitched there many years ago and it may be well to remark these were the last traces of

p. 2781

Indians tenting seen in our travels. At 7 a.m. on the 14th embarked & proceeded down the River with a strong current in favour, since leaving the encampment till noon long and narrow Islands were situated on each side of the River bearing wood

chiefly of Juniper. At Noon put onshore and observed in Latitude 57. 56. 33 N. being the situation of two strong Ripples and the River since our entering it to this period having increased in width from $\frac{1}{4}$ to $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile. At 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ p.m. the Indians put onshore and expressed their unwillingness to proceed further as the Country and River both at this period began to exhibit appearances of our approaching the Coast and they were evidently under fearful apprehensions of the Esquimaux—however at 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ p.m. they were again prevailed upon to re-embark and at 6 passed two or three high and rocky islets which considerably straiten the channel of the River and upon which was seen a water mark several feet above the level of the River at the time of observation these Rocks are in supposed Latitude 58. 12 N. At 7 p.m. encamped on the East side of the River having since passing the above mentioned Rocks, seen Esquimaux piles of stones, Ducks, Deer horns with portions cut with the saw—a seal and several white whales which latter come into the river with the flood. Observed time of high water this night about $\frac{1}{4}$ to 12—rise not less than 14 feet to appearance. Water not salt probably in consequence of our being out of the way of current. At 7 a.m. on the morning of the 15th the Indians were prevailed on with much difficulty to embark—proceeding downwards passed several rocks. At 9 observed a strong flood tide to make. At 9 $\frac{1}{2}$ water became brackish. At 10 quite Salt, and sea weed floating with the tide. At 11 $\frac{1}{2}$ put onshore on the Eastern side of the River on some low rocky projections of the Main Shore. Observed in Latitude at Noon 58. 20. 15 North being about the situation where the vessel from the Labrador settlements in 1811 cast anchor as denoted by the Charts. Having communicated which to Mr. Atkinson and others all of us ascended a hill adjacent and were much gratified with a fair prospect of the Sea—the outlet of the River was distinctly seen at about a distance of several miles due North—the Eastern side of which appeared partly closed either by a point of Main land or a chain of rocks and on the western side a small bight in which could be discerned a stream of ice....

At 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ p.m. date as above having made fruitless endeavour to induce the Indians to follow out the but few miles now seen before us, embarked—bound on return. At 6 p.m. seeing some Esquimaux workmanship laying upon the top of the rocks, exposed to view—disembarked to examine the nature of it—which proved to be the frame of an Esquimaux canoe—part of the skin was found laying near and probably had been torn away by the wolves—several implements consisting of arrows iron barbed after the manner of those of the East Main Indians—a lance made out of a large file—a fine British made clasp knife, $\frac{1}{2}$ worn and the haft set with Mother of Pearl or imitation, a British made dart or harpoon after the Esquimaux fashion—a fish dart consisting of 5 or 6 iron prongs with alternate ones barbed and others indicative of the owner being deceased were also found & apparently had not lain 12 months—the Indians were about to make a prize of the property but being dissuaded from such intentions re-embarked and proceeded until 1 a.m. on the 16th & encamped, at which place saw a quantity of wood chips and portions of deer horn,

Having entered the mouth of Natwakamee River about noon on the 17th and subsequently being favoured considerably both by winds and weather—arrived at Little Whale River at 4 p.m. on the 28th July—All well.

From what has already been stated there is not the least reason to doubt but that Esquimaux frequently resort to this part of the country & Metakartche relates that traces of them are more numerous up the river in the vicinity of the Falls and from which I suppose our Indians had no inclination to visit there as it was left optional to them.

Having seen no recent traces of Indians I cannot think there is any likelihood of a post near the mouth of the river being visited to advantage by this class of people in this part of the country the population cannot be so numerous as must have been imagined otherwise in some situation or other we must surely have met with greater proofs—Mr. Atkinson has frequently expressed that to his knowledge and the opportunity he has had of acquiring information Indians are scarce throughout the Country and believes there are very few but who either visit the Company's posts in person or send in their furs by others and such as do not are mostly superannuate for active labor. He also acquaints me that the Indians personally known to himself and who frequently resort to Nepeethjee and parts of the country south seldom now beyond the height of land to the eastward....

How a situation may hereafter be deemed eligible for erecting an establishment upon I cannot as yet tell having viewed no piece ground which under that distinction I should be inclined to recommend neither am I able to point out any particular place where the least hope might exist for a vessel laying up in safety during the winter....

Hoping these endeavours will meet your perfect satisfaction,

I am, Sir,

Your most obedient and faithful servant,

WM. HENDRY.

LETTER TO THE GOVERNOR AND COMMITTEE OF THE HONBLE. HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

[20 Sept., 1830]

RECORDS, HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

Fort Chimo, Sept., 20th, 1830.

Honble Sir:

I had the pleasure to see the Brig. Montcalm, Captain Robert Royal Commander anchor abreast of us on the 13th of this month, having been piloted from the outlet of this river by Mr. Erlandson who had sounded it previously ; there is water for vessels of any burden to come up with a fair wind. Altho' the Montcalm lost the whole of her false keel—this was owing, I believe to the mate's mistaking an eddy for sunken rocks and steering into shallow but smooth water contrary to Mr. Erlandson's advice. This gentle-man manned a boat and sounded fathoms outside about 50 yards from the ships. He has received however, no material injury.

* * * *

I endeavoured in vain to hire some Indians as hunters here, no inducement could prevail upon them to go and hunt at South River. This was contrary to my expectations. Our canoes being small, I was obliged to leave part of my outfit at this place, provisions as well as other necessaries—we carried heavy packed in along with us to Richmond Gulf where we arrived on the 13th July, but were detained at Little Whale River three days by our guides refusing to accompany us farther—the seed of this discontent was sown by an old Esquimeau hunter and his band whom we met there and who endeavoured to persuade us to return, saying we never could get to South River and giving a very frightful picture of the country and its inhabitants—although they failed with us they were more successful with my guides and people, who got quite low spirited and I believe would have mutinied had they dared, the cause of this disaffection to the Expedition in these Indians was a fear that we should supply the Esquimaux, their ancient enemies, with the means of retaliating the many injuries they have received at their hands.

* * * *

Having arrived at a river which empties itself in Natwakamy from the S.ward our guides absolutely refused to accompany us further and rather than be pestered with their murmurs, I sent them back from this branch. I found my way down without meeting any accident and arrived here on the 1st August and having examined the River for nearly a week, pitched on this spot as the most eligible situation for the establishment, the most convenient for the vessels from Europe to be at and the best wintering berth for a sloop but greatly destitute of wood and clay, being situate about half way between the Pulgewah of the Moravian Mission and Mr. Hendry's "best ground seen" both which are not at all convenient.

* * * *

I have only seen two parties of Esquimaux consisting of about ten families but as they had visited Okkak, the nearest Missionary Settlement in the course of the summer, had nothing to trade. Our meeting was friendly in the extreme and when I told them by the interpreter that they would be supplied with every necessity for furs, oil &c., &c., their joy was unbounded—foxes they say of color as well as white are plentiful, but the fear of meeting any of the inland Indians prevents them from going into the interior in search of other fur animals—am sanguine in the hope that a reconciliation may be effected between the two nations—the Indians, I should imagine will not be averse to a peace, as they must know that the Esquimaux will have it now in their power to retaliate.

* * * *

Enclosed Your Honors will find copy of a certificate I gave Captain Royal signed by Mr. Erlandson and myself, and which I thought necessary to send to you for your satisfaction—the last of the ships cargo was landed yesterday and he is to break ground today—Mr. E. is to pilot her out of the River—to whose active services I am much indebted—Mr. Taylor also has been useful. Having nothing else worth communicating except a sincere wish for the prosperity of your undertakings, I have the honor to be

FACTOR AT FORT CHIMO TO W. ERLANDSON.

RECORDS, HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

Dear Sir:—

You are hereby directed to proceed into the Interior and establish a trading post some where up the Wasquash River which empties itself into South River a little above Clouston's falls—from this place you will take up an Indian to guide you to the lake or the place you may deem most eligible for the establishment—on arriving at which it would be prudent to get a store built provided you think the canoes would be back here by the 25th or last of July to take up the rest of the supplies—to accomplish which you will of course be under the necessity to send all the men down.

As you are well acquainted with the manners and habits of the Indians who hunt to the N.ward of Eastmain and whose habits are nearly similar to those we have seen here—it is unnecessary in me to give you instructions regarding your mode of dealing with them. Your own good sense and long experience in the trading department will point out the best mode—tho' I cannot help observing that they must have seen strong Opposition and must be curtailed of many things usually lavished upon Indians at such places, especially now that the King's Posts are in the hands of the Honble. Hudson's Bay Company.

I would certainly recommend Pettastickopau lake as the most eligible place for an inland Post principally because it is surrounded by a good Fur Country.

If a communication with the Mingan Deptm't be an object of importance, no post could be better situated for facilitating such a measure, because the Indians invariably pass thro' that Lake, when visiting at the N.W. River, Mingan, Seven Island Bay or even Port Neuf.

There is a Lake near the Height of Land Pettaustickopau by name, which would be an eligible situation for an Outpost. It is surrounded by a tolerable good fur country. At or near it the Indians always separate on their way to the different Settlements on the Gulf.

JOS. BEWLEY, RUPERT HOUSE, TO GOVERNOR SIMPSON.

RECORDS, HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

Rupert House, Feby. 26th, 1835.

Dear Sir:

I received on the 15th inst. advices from the several posts comprehended within the Ruperts River district—and with as little delay as possible, after devoting the requisite attention to matters of business immediately pressing thereon—and getting dispatches written and sent off to the Officers in charge of the respective stations, I joyfully avail myself of the first few moments respite from application to the local concerns of the district—to endeavour to communicate to you every information which present circumstances enable me to do in regard to the Honble. Company's affairs in this quarter. . . .

Mr. Kellock, with the party under his command, succeeded in reaching Nitchiquon Lake on the 12th Aug.—their 46th day from Ruperts House—and on the 19th of that month he dispatched two of his people to establish the post at Kaunaiaubiskau Lake—which is the source or head waters of the Kaunaiaubiskau or South River of Ungava Bay. The 2 men in company with their guide reached the lake on the 7th September, having been—owing to the difficulties experienced on the route—no less than 20 days on 30 the journey from Nitchiquan—although the distance between the 2 Lakes is supposed not to exceed 100 miles. As the letter I received from

Mr. Kellock may probably be interesting to you to peruse, I take the liberty to forward it to you, and to request reference thereto—merely observing that from all that I have ever heard, particularly from Indians whose hunting grounds lie in that direction, I think Mr. Kellock under-rates the distance between Ruperts House and Nitchiquon. In former times Nisquiscon used to be reckoned 300 miles from the coast, and every Indian who knows anything of the distance between Nisquiscon and Nitchiquon says that it considerably exceeds the distance between Ruperts House and Nisquiscon.

At Nitchiquon the furs collected up to the 21st December amounted to M. Beaver; and

At Kaunaiaubiskau the furs collected up to the 10th December amounted to 15 M. Beaver. . . .

I am most unfeignedly glad that we have succeeded in establishing the posts in question—as a regular and annual communication with Ungava district may now be established by water thro' the Interior—I have in my letter to Mr. Kellock dated 21st inst. which he will probably receive on or about the 15th April—directed him forthwith to endeavour to open a communication if possible with Mr. Chief Trader Finlayson—by dispatching to Ungava two of the servants that will then be at his disposal—in company with any Indian or Indians whom he can get hired to guide and assist them on their route thither and back again to Kaunaiaubiskau Lake. I have likewise apprised Mr. Kellock that it is requisite he should be down at Ruperts House as early as possible in the summer for the purpose of receiving the temporary charge of the district on my departure hence—but as the summer may probably be far advanced before Nitchiquan Lake opens, I cannot form any opinion as to the date on which he may possibly arrive here. . .

I have addressed the Chief Trader Finlayson by letter dated 23rd inst. apprising him of our having succeeded in establishing last summer the posts at Nitchiquon & Kaunaiaubiskau Lakes—and of the probability of Mr. Kellock's being able to open a communication with Ungava district in course of the summer. I have stated to him that “in event of the communication being opened, as I am in expectation of, between the two districts by route through the Interior—it will ensure, if such is considered desirable, a regular and annual transmission of intelligence—as letters conveyed from Ungava to Kaunaiaubiskau prior to the 10th December in any year will be received at Mistassiny by the 8th January following—and at Ruperts House on or about the 14th February; on the other hand letters for Ungava that may be at this place on the 22nd or 23rd February may be lodged at Kaunaiaubiskau by the middle of April. Further—Letters from Ungava that may be brought to Kaunaiaubiskau between the 10th December and the opening of the Lakes in the Nitchiquon Quarter in the summer following—will be received at Ruperts House per canoe bringing down the Nitchiquon and Kaunaiaubiskau returns—and letters that may then be at Ruperts House for Ungava will be sent to Nitchiquon by the canoes conveying up the outfit.”

With the ardent hope that from all parts of the extensive territories under your Superintendence and government—you may receive favourable intelligence in regard to affairs of the current outfit, and that for very many years you may continue to manage and direct the multifarious concerns with which you are entrusted by the Governor & Committee of the Honble. Company,

I have the Honor to be,

Dear Sir,

Very respectfully,

Your most obedient humble Servt.

SIR GEORGE SIMPSON TO SIMON MCGILLIVRAY.

(RECORDS, HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.)

Ship St. James, 18th April, 1836.

Simon McGillivray Esq.,

Dear Sir:—

An opposition having lately been established at Esquimaux Bay by some people belonging to Quebec and Boston, with the view of benefitting by an encroachment on our trade with the Indians of the King's Posts and Mingan Seigniorie and of anticipating us in the occupation of the district of country situated between Ungava and Esquimaux Bay behind the Moravian Settlements on the Labrador Coast the Govr. & Committee have determined on establishing such posts as may be necessary to watch and protect the interests of the Honble. Company in that quarter and to that end an expedition will be outfitted from Montreal & Quebec as early in the course of the summer as possible which is intended to be placed under your command. The expedition will consist besides yourself of two Clerks and twelve servants, say, fifteen in all, a sufficient complement for two Posts, which are as many as you can establish with safety and advantage the first year, a sufficient quantity of goods & provisions will be in readiness at 3 Quebec for shipment and Mr. James McKenzie the Company's agent there has been instructed to have a vessel in readiness about the latter end of May to take the people, goods and provisions to their destination.

I have to request you will accompany the expedition and proceed direct to Mingan without touching or losing time at the King's Posts. At Mingan you will find Mr. Cumming whom I have requested to provide you with two or three small canoes and a couple of Indian guides, so as to enable you to proceed across land with six or eight men to Esquimaux Bay and as the distance is short, you will get there before the vessel and have an opportunity of examining the country, and of acquiring much information which may be useful on entering into the contest, in which you are likely to be engaged. If there be any difficulty in procuring canoes or guides or that after your arrival at Mingan it be considered inexpedient to quit the vessel, I do not wish you to do so. In this matter you will therefore use your own discretion....

Your principal establishment should be formed sufficiently close to the principal establishment of your opponents to enable you to watch their movements and operations and your outposts in like manner placed alongside their principal outposts and instead of pursuing the violent course which usually characterises opposition in their fur-trade, I beg you will use every proper endeavour to keep on good terms with your neighbours and endeavour to show your superiority as an Indian trader by activity, address and good management & on no consideration allow yourself be drawn into misunderstandings, quarrels or violence of any kind—unless in defence of lives and property. Great address, activity and good management however will be necessary to ensure success in your present mission and you are appointed to conduct this enterprise because you are known to possess these requisites while I have to recommend strict economy in all your arrangements particularly in the expenditure of provisions and in mens' wages which are the heavy items of expense in opposition, I think it will be good policy to raise the standard of trade and to pay the Indians so liberally for their furs that they can gain nothing by going to another market with them. There is another branch of business to be attended to from Esquimaux Bay, and that is in the articles of seal skins, oil, feathers & furs, collected by some Canadians & other settlers on the Labrador coast known by the designation of Planters with whom I understand our opponents carry on a profitable trade. This branch of business we should never of thought of meddling with had not these people driven us to it by seducing our Mingan Indians in the first instance and latterly interfering with our trade generally in that quarter....

I have to beg you will address me from time to time as frequently as opportunities offer reporting fully on the business under your management and conveying every information in regard to the country, trade &c. which you may consider likely to be useful or interesting and you will by the last conveyance of the season forward an Indent for the goods, provisions &c. &c., you may require for next year with a prospective scheme of your arrangements for next outfit.

With Esteem

I remain, Dear Sir,

Your most obedient Servt.

(Sgd.) GEO. SIMPSON.

GOVERNOR SIMPSON TO JOHN SIEVRIGHT.

RECORDS, HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

Lachine, 7th May, 1836.

John Sievright, Esq.,

Sir:—

With reference to the different verbal communications we have had on the affairs of the Montreal Department, I beg to call your attention to a few points which will require particular notice—

The Gov^r. & Committee have determined on meeting the opposition that has recently been commenced at Esquimaux Bay by Stuart of Quebec acting it is said for himself and on behalf of some people in Boston, United States, with the view of encroaching on our trade with the Mingan Indians and anticipating us on the occupation of the back country situated between Esquimaux & Ungava Bays and to that end an expedition consisting of Mr. McGillivray, the gentleman appointed to the charge thereof, two clerks and twelve men is to be fitted out this season with a sufficient quantity of trading goods, provisions &c. which you will forward as early in the season as possible, say in the course of the month of May. . . .

The goods ordered from England will be brought from Quebec by one of the first vessels of the season and you have no doubt provided the provisions and other supplies required, as that I am in hopes that Mr. McGillivray may get away before the close of May which is very desirable in order that he may have time to arrange his plans for the winter to erect his buildings and attend to all his preparatory measures before the close of the season. A batteau with rigging complete may be provided from Mingan and material for building are* other likewise, bark, wattap & c. and I have suggested the propriety of Mr. McGillivray crossing over by land from Mingan with a couple of Indian guides and four men in two or three small canoes in order that he may require* a knowledge of the country and have time to look about him at Esquimaux Bay before the arrival of the vessel.

I am very anxious that this expedition should be well fitted out and provided with every requisite for an animated contest and that it should be despatched as early in the season as possible (certainly not latter than the middle of June) in order that Mr. McGillivray may have time to acquire information respecting the country, trade and natives and to erect his buildings and make other preparatory arrangements before the favourable season for such work draws to a close. Let Mr. McGillivray be provided with a copy of the agreement entered into by Mr.

Keith with Lampson in regard to the trade of Esquimaux Bay and of Mr. Taylor's legal opinion that that agreement with Lampson is not binding on the Company now that Lampson is no longer connected with the business nor would it be binding on them even had the business been still in Lampson's hands as the interference with our Mingan trade was a breach of contract on their side liberating us from its engagement. . . .

... .. "The accounts of Ruperts River District are not yet closed, but I am apprehensive they will show a falling off in the Trade, there being a material reduction in the quantity of Furs as compared with that of the preceding year. This has arisen from a variety of causes, but mainly from the absence of a number of Indians who have crossed over towards Ungava and others who have pushed their way across the height of Land (separating the waters that pass through the Honble. Company's territory from those that fall into the St. Lawrence and Esquimaux Bay) and traded their hunts with some of our own people, belonging to the King's Posts and with the opposition at Esquimaux Bay—and I regret to say that the upper parts of the District suffer much from the encroachments of Abenikie trappers and traders, who cross over from the S. Maurice. We have frequently warned those people off and I have this season considered it advisable to instruct C. T. Miles to use the best endeavours to seize any Furs that may be found in their possession, as the most effectual means of checking such encroachments. The Posts now occupied in the District are Ruperts House and East Main on the Coast, and inland, Mistassiny, Temiscamay, Waswonaby, Michiskan, Pike Lake, Nichiquon and Caniapiscaw. The Post of Pike Lake has of late barely collected furs enough to cover its expense, and it is thought it may be vacated without injury to the trade or inconvenience to the Natives, as they can be divided between the posts of Mistassiny and Waswonapy; I have therefore authorised the abandonment of that establishment next spring, and in order to bring back some of the Indians who have gone to Ungava and are likely to fall into the hands of the Esquimaux Bay opposition ; likewise in order to give another chance to the Esquimaux who occupy the Coast North of Richmond Gulph of doing some thing in the Oil trade I have instructed Mr. Miles to establish a small post next summer at Whale River which I think is likely to be productive of some benefit.... ..”

GOVERNOR SIMPSON TO SIMON MCGILLIVRAY.

RECORDS, HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

Lachine, 10th Sept., 1836

Simon McGillivray, Esq.,

Dear Sir:—

I yesterday had the pleasure of receiving your favors of 5th and 16th July with the accompanying papers and am glad to hear you reached your destination in sufficient time to make the necessary preparatory arrangements for the winter. . . . The trade with the Indians I wish particularly to be watched closely & protected & that every endeavour should be used to prevent the opposition from obtaining a footing in the interior.

The Planters I understand pick up a good many skins; it is desirable you would get as many of these as possible in barter for goods, provisions and other supplies ; you will likewise take oil, seal skins & any other marketable article of which you may be a judge & know the value at as cheap a price as possible, to be paid for in goods, provisions &c. out of your outfit, but we cannot make any money or cash transactions' of any kind in the way of trade as our operations must be entirely confined to barter as in other parts of the Indian country.

Your family have not yet arrived from the interior nor can they be here before the Tadousac sails for Mingan so they must remain until next summer, when they will be sent down by the earliest conveyance.

With esteem, &c.,

(Sgd.) GEO. SIMPSON.

Simon McGillivray, Esq.,

Dear Sir:—

With reference to a letter I had the pleasure of addressing you on the 20th ultimo upon the affairs of Esquimaux Bay, I beg to apprise you that in consequence of the indisposition of C. T. Cummings which renders it necessary to afford him leave of absence for the benefit of medical advice, C. F. Bewley has been appointed to the charge of Mingan, and that as the Transport Indian Trade and other arrangements of that District are closely connected with those of Esquimaux Bay, it is considered advisable in many respects to unite those two Districts, and place them together under the same superintendence, and he is now about to proceed to Mingan by the Tadoussac schooner. That vessel is to return with as little delay as possible to Quebec for the Esquimaux Bay supplies, it is intended she shall be dispatched for Esquimaux Bay about the middle of June, and Mr. Bewley will either proceed thither through the Interior, or by the Tadoussac on her return from Quebec. I have handed to Mr. Bewley copy of all the correspondence that has passed between us, on the affairs of Esquimaux Bay, by which he is made acquainted with the views of the Governor and Committee in establishing that District, and I have to beg you will afford that Gentleman every information in your power connected with the business under your management and act in all matters and things in reference thereto, as he may direct.

. . . . “Mingan & Esquimaux Bay. These two districts have heretofore been under distinct managements but on account of their proximity to each other, likewise with a view to guarding against internal opposition in Trade and in order to facilitate the management of both it is determined that they shall now be united under the direction of Chief Factor Bewley who after visiting Esquimaux Bay in the course of this summer will make Mingan his headquarters, relieving Mr. Cumming who is allowed leave of absence on the ground of ill-health and leaving Mr. McGillivray in charge of Esquimaux Bay. The principal object of establishing Esquimaux Bay was to check the encroachments of opposition in the trade of the King's Posts, Mingan, the Company's Territories and Ungava.”

TRANSACTIONS OF THE HISTORICAL SOCIETY OF QUEBEC, 1843-1862.

GENERAL REMARKS—INHABITANTS, &C.

Davis, in his Second Voyage of Discovery in 1586, is the first that appears to have noticed this extensive bay ; for there can be but little doubt, that the large opening which he saw in Lat. 54° 30', “Entering in between two lands, the lower all islands,” was the mouth of this bay, answering as it does, both in appearance and situation to it. The French however, were the first who gave the bay its present name, and resorted to it for trade, which they appear to have done at an early period, for the bay appears under its present name, in maps published by them very early in the last century ; and in some of them, the form of the Bay is laid down pretty correctly. After the loss of their possessions in Canada, they abandoned the trade to Esquimaux Bay, and some time elapsed before the English took it up, for it was only in 1777, that the first Englishman wintered in the Bay—his son was still living there a year ago—he found the remains of the old French establishments in many parts. In 1785 a Canadian from Quebec, wintered there, since that date, establishments have always been kept up in the Bay, by merchants and others of Quebec; after undergoing numerous changes, these establishments fell in 1837, into the hands of the Hudson's Bay Company, in whose possession they still remain. In the meantime, the knowledge of the Bay, possessed by the French geographers seems to have been gradually lost, as well as the name given to the inlet—instead of which the native name of Invucktoke appears to have been appropriated to it, and the entrance only marked in the map, until the last edition of Arrowsmith's Map of British North America, where the Bay once more resumes its form, with the name of Hamilton's Inlet tacked to the native designation. It is not however, very accurately laid down, the distance from the entrance to the head of the inlet being made much shorter than it really is.

p. 2795

The residents of Esquimaux Bay may be classed as follows, viz.: Persons in the employ of the trading companies, Planters or freemen, Esquimaux and Mountaineer Indians.

The first class are now confined to the servants of the Hudson's Bay Company, who are now the only Company that have permanent establishments in the Bay—they amount to fifteen or twenty individuals.

The Planters or freemen, are composed of persons who have come out in the service of the different mercantile establishments, and at the expiration of their engagements have remained in the country, hunting and fishing, on their own account, receiving the necessary supplies from the nearest establishment, and giving in the produce of their hunt, &c., in return ; a great portion of this class is now composed of the offspring of former planters with the Esquimaux women. The mode of living of these two classes is in some degree similar—the following is a short sketch of the annual routine pursued by the first class.

Immediately after the business of the summer season is closed, by the departure of the vessel, generally about the middle of September, the men are sent into winter quarters; that is, they are sent in parties of two each, up the different rivers, to pass the winter in trapping martens and other animals; they live in small huts, warmed by a stove; their work consists in visiting their traps, keeping them free from snow, and in hunting for a part of their subsistence. Their traps are either steel ones, or made of wood, technically called “dead falls”—these latter traps are constructed in such a manner, that the animal on taking the bait, pulls down a heavy piece of wood that crushes him. The traps for martens are placed along a blazed path (called a “cat path”) leading into the interior, and varying in length from one to three days' walk, according to the address and activity of the hunter—the traps for foxes are placed along the borders of the rivers or bays. The men, on leaving the main Post, are furnished with a certain quantity of pork, flour, and ammunition, which is expected to last them until they return in the spring, generally about the first or second week in June. On the breaking up of the ice, they return to the post, when preparations are immediately commenced for the salmon-fishery, and when that is over the cod fishery is pursued until the end of the summer season. Such is the general routine followed in Esquimaux Bay—but, in places where the seal-fishery is pursued, the men do not go into winter quarters before that fishery is finished, which it seldom is before December—other local variations take place, but such is the general routine of the year. The life the planters lead is one very similar to the above, with the exception, that having generally large families, they most commonly winter on the immediate shores of the Bay if possible, for the convenience of hunting ducks in the spring, for the subsistence of their families. Their number may be on an average, about forty-five souls, of these eight are white men, the remainder half-breed Esquimaux. They are very uncertain in their movements, often; wintering in places widely remote from their former habitations, for as they invariably carry all their property with them, in their annual migrations to and from their summer residence, they are not at all under the necessity of returning to the winter-house they last occupied, unless the situation should happen to be a favourable one ; their migrations are performed in open whale boats, in which they will often make voyages of a month's duration, the women managing the boats as well as the men, and pulling an equally good oar. Even in summer, some of them are continually changing their quarters; passing the first part of the summer in fishing salmon, in the neighbourhood of Rigolet, and then going to the entrance of the Bay, to pursue the cod fishery, until it is time to return to winter quarters. The life these people lead is one of great hardship and fatigue, from their constant exposure to the weather, and the necessity of using the most strenuous exertions, to subsist their families, for the provisions they are enabled to purchase from the traders are never sufficient to support them during the long winter; the constant decrease of the hunt and fisheries of late years has also greatly augmented their misery.

The Bay was formerly the principal residence of the Esquimaux, from the facilities that it offered for living, the seals frequenting it in great numbers, and remaining in the Bay during the whole winter. But the number of seals has been greatly diminishing of late years, this has caused many of the tribe to leave the place; we must however look to the combined effects of the rum and the vices, imported by the Europeans, for the great diminution that has taken place within the last sixty years in the number of the Esquimaux belonging to the Bay; even as late as the beginning of the present century, they numbered upwards of 300—they are now reduced to eight families, consisting of thirty-four individuals, viz:

[28 Jany., 1845]

nineteen males and fifteen females The Mountaineers, whose hunting-grounds are in the vicinity of the Bay, are a branch of the Cree Nation, a dialect of whose language they speak. They are very much reduced in number; of the thirty-two families that frequented the Bay in 1840, only nine belonged to it, that is, whose hunting-grounds were in the neighbourhood, the remainder were from the Posts on the St. Lawrence, from whence they had been attracted by the great number of Reindeer in the vicinity of the Bay. These nine families comprised of 48 individuals, in which however are included several orphans and widows. They resemble in every respect the Indians of the King's Posts. From the great abundance of Reindeer throughout the whole of this country, they might, if they would keep from rum, make themselves perfectly independent of the whites; but allured by that pernicious liquor, they are sunk into a state of abject slavery; and their intercourse with the whites has but served to degrade them even more than it has done the Esquimaux. As they stand greatly in awe of the latter people they rarely descend the Bay; passing the summer in the vicinity of the Post of North West River, at the head of the Bay, where the Mountaineer trade is carried on. In winter, their time is chiefly spent in the chase of the Reindeer—in summer, when the deer retire to the north or to the tops of the high mountains, out of the way of the flies, they generally subsist on fish, wild-fowl and seals. Resembling as they do, the Indians of the King's Posts in every respect little need be said on the subject of their manners and customs.

. . . . “If the Indians persist in a desire to visit Mingan in order to meet a Roman Catholic Priest, you may state that, if they defer it for another year, we will endeavour to send a Priest to their own lands, without putting them to the trouble or inconvenience of so long a journey. This can be done hereafter without inconvenience when the vessel winters in the St. Lawrence; but, if the Priest were to go this season by the second trip of the “Marten” his stay would necessarily be so short, that he could only see a few of the Indians immediately round Rigolet. . . .”

EXTRACTS FROM “NOTES OF A TWENTY-FIVE YEARS' SERVICE IN THE HUDSON'S BAY TERRITORY,”

BY JOHN MCLEAN (LONDON:1849). VOL. I, p. 32.

The Company having learned, through a pamphlet published by the Moravian missionaries of Labrador, that the country produced excellent furs, were induced by the laudable desire of “ameliorating the condition of the natives,” to settle it; and a party was accordingly sent overland from Moose Factory to take possession in the summer of 1831. The Moravians, finding their intention thus anticipated, left both the cure of souls and trade of furs to the Company.

Whatever may have been the Company's real motives in forming a settlement in this quarter, the profits derived from it added but little to the dividends; the substance that glittered at a distance like gold proved to be but base metal. Beavers were nowhere to be found ; and although the martens brought an extraordinary high price, they were far from plentiful; while the enormous expense of supplying the district by sea, and supporting it on imported provisions, rendered the “ Ungava adventure ” a subject of rather unpleasant discussion among the partners, most of whom were opposed to the measure from the first.

Mr. Simpson was, in fact, the prime mover of the project, and aware of the discontent caused by its failure, determined on making every effort to reduce the expense, and, if possible, to increase the returns. Accordingly, I was directed to push outposts into the interior, to support my people on the resources of the country, and at the same time to open a communication with Esquimaux Bay, on the coast of Labrador, with the view of obtaining in future my supplies from thence by inland route; “there being no question of the practicability of the rivers.” So said not he who had seen those rivers.

Mr. Erlandson had traversed the country in the spring of 1834, and represented to me the utter impossibility of carrying my instructions into effect. Meantime, the Committee, having learned by despatches from York Factory that the vessel intended for the business of the district had been lost, and the other, in which I made my passage, placed in so critical a situation as to render her safety in spring a very doubtful matter, considered it advisable to provide for the worst by freighting a small schooner to carry us out our supplies. This vessel very unexpectedly made her appearance on the 22d of September, and we thus found ourselves supplied with goods and provisions for two years' consumption.

Having, as above mentioned, learned from Mr. Erlandson the difficulties of the inland route, and also that a great number of the natives had gone to Esquimaux Bay, with the intention of remaining there, I considered it incumbent upon me to visit that quarter at an early period of the winter, and I accordingly set out from Fort Chimo on the 2d of January. I submit the following narrative of my journey to the reader.

“Donald Henderson, Henry Hay, and two Indian guides, who are to accompany me throughout the journey ; Pierre Neven and M. Ferguson go part of the way, each driving a sled of two dogs, loaded with provisions, the other men having sleds drawn by themselves.

“Wednesday, the 3d.—Left our encampment before dawn of day. Excessively cold—some of us got frost-bitten, but not severely. Our principal guide, finding his companion unable to keep up with us, set off to his lodge in quest of a substitute. Encamped early, having proceeded about nine miles.

“Thursday, the 4th. Started at seven A.M. Reached High Fall Creek at nine A.M. Halted to wait for our guide, who soon joined us, alone, finding no person willing to accompany him. Resumed our march at half-past nine; had not proceeded far, when we perceived that our young guide, Pellican, was left considerably in the rear. We waited till he overtook us, and the miserable creature appearing completely exhausted with fatigue, we encamped at an early hour. Eight miles.

“Friday, the 5th.—Lightened Pellican's sled, and set off at five A.M.; fine weather, though sharp. Advanced sixteen miles.

“Saturday, the 6th.—As the ice was covered with water close to our encampment, it was deemed advisable to await the light of day. Set off at eight A.M., but found it impossible to move forward in consequence of the immense quantity of snow that had fallen during the night. It continuing still to snow, and blowing a violent gale at same time, I gave up the struggle. Advanced about a mile.

“Sunday, the 7th.—Got up about three A.M., literally buried in snow. Our blankets being wet, we waited in our encampment drying them till eight o'clock, when we started with only half loads, with which we intended to proceed to the first lake, and then return for the remainder; but to our great satisfaction we soon discovered that the tempest which had incommoded us so much last night had cleared the ice of snow ; we therefore returned for the property we had left; then proceeding at a fine rate, having beautiful weather, we soon reached the lake ; when my guides, discovering a herd of deer on an adjacent hill, immediately set off at a bound, followed by Pellican and my two brules. I saw at once my day's journey was at an end, and accordingly directed my encampment to be made. Our hunters joined us in the evening with the choice parts of three deer they had killed. Proceeded eight miles.

p. 2800

“Monday, the 8th.—Very cold, tempestuous weather. Our progress was much retarded by the great depth of snow in the woods through which our route lay. Thirteen miles.

“Tuesday, the 9th.—Blowing a hurricane; the cold being also intense, we could not venture out on the ice without incurring the risk of being frost-bitten; we therefore remained in our quarters, such as they were, until the weather should moderate.

“Wednesday, the 10th.—My guides appeared very unwilling to quit their encampment this morning, pretending indisposition. They might have been really ill; but the beastly manner in which they had been gorging themselves for the past two days being well known to be the cause of their illness, no one felt disposed to pity them. I therefore sprang into their encampment, and pitching the remainder of their choice morsels into the snow, drove them out before me. Travelled through woods the whole day. Encamped at half-past three. Eighteen miles.

“Thursday, the 11th.—Started at five, A.M. Soon fell on a large lake, on which we travelled till three, P.M., when we encamped. Thus far the lake extends S.E. and N.W., being about two miles in width. As Mr. Erlandson was the first European who had traversed these inhospitable wilds, I had the gratification of giving his name to the lake. It is reported by the natives to abound in fish of the best quality; rein-deer are also said to be numerous at certain seasons of the year. Proceeded fifteen miles.

“Friday, the 12th.—Being immoderately cold, and the wind blowing direct in our faces, we could not attempt travelling on the lake.

“Saturday, the 13th.—Weather fine. Left Erlandson's Lake about one, A.M.; it still stretched out before us as far as the eye could reach, and cannot be less than forty miles in length; its medium breadth, however, does not exceed two miles and a half. The circumjacent country is remarkably well wooded, even to the tops of the highest hills, and is reported by the natives to abound in martens. A few industrious Indians would not fail to turn such advantages to good account; but they can avail the Company very little, while the natives alone are in possession of them. Went on twenty-four miles.

“Sunday, the 14th.—Set off at five, A.M. Passed over several small lakes; the country well wooded. Entered upon a small river about noon, the banks covered with large pine. Encamped at three, P.M. Advanced sixteen miles.

“Monday, the 15th.—Took our departure at seven, A.M. Travelled without halting the whole day. Eighteen miles.

p. 2801

“Tuesday, the 16th.—Decamped at five, A.M.; the snow very deep in the woods. Fell on Whale River at ten, A.M. The face of the country presents scarcely any variety; from Erlandson's Lake to this river it is generally well wooded, but afterwards becomes extremely barren, nothing to be seen on both sides of the river but bare rocks. Proceeded sixteen miles.

“Wednesday, the 17th. —Started at five, A.M. Our route in the morning led us through a chain of small lakes, and brought us out again on Whale River, on which we travelled till four, P.M. The appearance of the country much the same as described yesterday. Proceeded eighteen miles.

“Thursday, the 18th.—P. Neven being unable to travel from indisposition, I resolved on passing the day to await the issue, deeming his malady to be of no very serious nature. In the meantime I took an exact account of my provisions which I found to be so far reduced, that no further assistance was required for its conveyance. I accordingly made the necessary arrangements to send the men back.

“Friday, the 19th.—Early in the morning, P. Neven (being now convalescent) and Mordoch Ferguson set off on their return, whilst I and my party proceeded on our onward route. I retained a sled of dogs, intending to drive them myself. We travelled eleven miles on Whale River, then struck across the country to the eastward. Encamped at four, P.M. Fourteen miles.

“Saturday, the 20th.—The moon affording no longer light to find our way in the night, we must now wait till daylight. Started at seven A.M.; crossed a point of wood, chiefly larch, of a miserably small growth; then came out on a large lake (comparatively speaking), on which we travelled till four, P.M. Thirteen miles.

“Sunday, the 21st. —Set off at seven A.M. About eleven, we fell on the fresh tracks of a large herd of deer, which my guides carefully examined; their experience not only enabling them to determine the precise time they had passed, but the very spot where they were likely to be found, which they affirmed was close to us. My dogs being very much reduced, and not having the means of increasing their present modicum of food, I determined on availing myself of an opportunity which might not again occur of procuring a supply. The Indian accordingly set off in quest of them, desiring us at their departure to make no fire until the sun had reached a certain position in the heavens which they pointed out to us. We made our encampment at the time appointed, and were soon joined by our hunters, dragging after them a fine doe; they had got only one shot at the herd, which immediately took to the bare hills, where pursuit was in vain. Our guides being encamped by themselves, I was curious to ascertain by ocular evidence the manner in which the first kettle would be disposed of, nor did I wait long till my curiosity was gratified. The cannibals fell upon the half-cooked flesh with a voracity which I could not have believed even savages capable of; and in an incredibly short space of time the kettle was disposed of ;—and this, too, after their usual allowance, which is equal to, and sometimes exceeds, that of the other men who say they have enough. Proceeded seven miles.

“Monday, the 22d.—On examining the remains of the deer this morning I found my quadrupeds would benefit but little by my good intentions loss of time, our guides having applied themselves so seduously to the during the night, as to leave but little for their canine brethren. We started at seven, A.M., the travelling very heavy in the woods. About noon we came upon a large lake, where we made better speed. Thirteen miles.

“Tuesday, the 23d.—Travelled through woods the greater part of the day encamped at four o'clock. Sixteen miles.

“Wednesday, the 24th.—Decamped at seven, A.M. Our route through swamps and small lakes, with strips of wood intervening. Martens appear to be numerous, but beavers must be extremely rare, for we have discovered no traces whatever of their existence anywhere along our route though innumerable small lakes and rivers, such as beavers frequent, are be met with in every direction; but the country produces no food for them At ten A.M. we arrived at a considerable lake, where my guides told me we had reached the highest land. On asking them if this were the lake where we intended to build, they pointed to the south-west, saying it was four days journey off in that direction!—so far had I been led from the route I intended to have followed, notwithstanding the perfect understanding I had with my perfidious guides prior to our departure from the establishment. Encamped at three, P.M. Twelve miles.

“Thursday, the 25th.—Immediately on leaving our encampment, we fell on a large river flowing to the north-east, which I took to be George's River. We followed it for a short distance, and then directed our course over bare hills. Encamped at three, P.M. Eleven miles.

“Friday, the 26th.—Having passed the night in a clump of small pines which sheltered us from the inclemency of the weather, we were not aware of the violence of the storm which was raging around us, until, pursuing our route over a ridge of bare hills, we were completely exposed to its fury. We found the cold intense, the wind blowing in our faces, so that it was impossible to proceed. Observing a hummock of wood close to us, we shaped our course for it, where we were no sooner arrived, than it began to snow and drift. The few trees to which we had retreated being far apart, and the wind blowing with the utmost violence, we experienced the greatest difficulty in clearing an encampment. The storm continuing unabated, we passed a miserable day in our snow burrow. Two miles.

“Saturday, the 27th.—Arose from our comfortless couch at half-past four. The snow having drifted over us, and being melted by the heat of the fire in the early part of the night, we found our blankets and capotes hard frozen in the morning. Thawing and drying them occupied us till nine A.M., when we set off. Snow very deep. Proceeded nine miles.

“Sunday, the 28th.—Set off at seven, A.M. Snow still increasing in depth, and our progress decreasing in proportion. At one, P.M., we came upon a large river flowing to the north, on which we travelled a short distance; then followed the course of a small stream running in an easterly direction. Leaving this stream, our route lay over marshes and small lakes; the country flat, yielding dwarf pine intermixed with larch. Encamped at half-past four; advanced eight miles.

“Monday, the 29th.—Started at seven. Appearance of the country much the same as yesterday. Fifteen miles.

“Tuesday, the 30th.—Decamped at seven. Weather mild, and walking heavy. Our principal guide appears rapidly declining in strength, which does not surprise me, considering the laborious duty he has had to perform ; always beating the track a-head, without being once relieved by his worthless associate. Fourteen miles.

“Wednesday, the 31st.—Started at seven. Still very mild. Observed a few small birch trees. Encamped at four, P.M. Fifteen miles.

“Thursday, the 1st of February.—Started at the usual hour. We have been travelling through a very rough country for these two days past. The fact is, that our guides, having only passed here in summer, are unacquainted with the winter trace. We are, therefore, pursuing a circuitous course, which, with every other disadvantage, subjects us to the risk of running short of provisions,—a contingency which our reduced stock warns us to prepare for ere long. We can afford no more food to the dogs; their load is now transferred to the men's sleds. Fifteen miles.

“Friday, the 2d.—Decamped at seven, A.M. Pursued our route over extensive swamps and small lakes, where there is scarcely any wood to be seen. The face of the surrounding country being level, the least elevation commands a most extensive view; but the eye turns away in disgust from the cheerless prospect which the desolate flats present. I deemed it expedient to curtail our allowance of provisions this evening. Eighteen miles.

“Saturday, the 3d.—Set off at seven, A.M. Reached Michigama Lake at one, P.M.; on which we travelled till five o'clock, when we camped on an island. Proceeded twenty miles.

“Sunday, the 4th.—Left our encampment at the usual hour. Halted for our scanty meal at ten, A.M. After an hour's delay we resumed our march, and encamped at four, P.M., on an island near the mainland on the east side of the lake, having performed about twenty miles. I here repeated to the Indians my earnest wish to proceed to Esquimaux Bay, by North River, which takes its rise in this lake. They replied that nothing could induce them to comply with my wishes, as inevitable starvation would be the consequence; no game could be found by the way, and we would have, there—tore, to depend solely on our own provisions, which were barely sufficient for the shortest route. I had thus the mortification to find, that I should entirely fail in accomplishing the main object I had in view in crossing the country.

p. 2804

“Monday, the 5th. —Decamped at seven, A.M. Reached the mainland at half-past eight; then ascended a river flowing from the north-east, which discharges itself into Michigama Lake, Pellican taking the lead, being the only one acquainted with this part of the country. The Indians shot an otter. No wood to be seen, but miserably small pine, thinly scattered over the country. Encamped at Gull Lake. Fifteen miles.

“Tuesday, the 6th.—Left our encampment at seven. Our guide lost his way about noon, which after an hour's search, he succeeded in finding; when we resumed our slow march, Pellican proceeding at a snail's pace, which neither threats nor entreaties could in the least accelerate. Encamped at five, P.M. Eleven miles.

“Wednesday, the 7th.—Started at half-past six, A.M. Arrived at the site of an extensive Indian camp, which appeared to have been recently occupied. Our guides knowing the Indians to be their friends from Ungava, and their trail leading in the direction of our route, required no longer to be urged on. An immediate impulse was given to Pellican's sluggish motions, increasing his speed to such a degree, that it required our utmost exertions to keep up with him. Encamped near a high fall on North-West River, which is here walled in by inaccessible precipices on both sides. The view above the fall is interrupted by stupendous rocks; the natives say that the appearance of the river and surrounding country is the same from this fall to Michigama Lake; the river is deemed to be impracticable for any kind of craft. Eighteen miles.

“Thursday, the 8th.—Set off at seven, A.M. Fine travelling on the river. We passed two portages and rapids. Encamped at forty-five minutes past five. Twenty miles.

“Friday, the 9th.—Decamped at seven. Travelling good; the banks of the river high and precipitous, and almost destitute of wood. We observed, however, a few birches. Encamped at six, P.M. Twenty miles.

“Saturday, the 10th.—Started at eight, A.M. About noon we arrived at a wide expansion of the river, where it suddenly bends to the west. Here we again quitted the river, directing our course to the eastward. The navigation of this part of the river is represented by the natives to be impracticable, and similar to the upper part. Our snow-shoes being the worst for wear, we encamped at an early hour for the purpose of repairing them. Advanced fifteen miles.

“Sunday, the 11th.—Decamped at seven, A.M. Pursued our course through the roughest country I ever travelled. The appearance of it struck me as resembling the ocean when agitated by a storm, supposing its billows transformed into solid rock. We commenced ascending and descending in the morning, and kept at it till night. The men complained much of fatigue. Proceeded fourteen miles.

p. 2805

“Monday, the 12th.—The weather being so much overcast that we could not find our way, we remained in our encampment till eight, A.M. Encamped at a quarter past five. Fifteen miles.

“Tuesday, the 13th.—Set off at half-past seven, amidst a tremendous snow-storm, which continued without intermission the whole day ; we sunk knee-deep in the snow, and found it not the most pleasant recreation in the world. About noon we passed a hut, which my guide told me had been the residence of a trader, two years ago. Late in the evening we arrived at another hut, on North West River, where we found two of Mr. McGillivray's people, who were stationed there for the purpose of trapping martens. Nine miles.

“Wednesday, the 14th.—The weather being unpropitious, and finding ourselves very snug in our present quarters, we passed the day enjoying the comfort of a roof.

“Thursday, the 15th.—Left our Canadian hosts at early dawn; the snow very deep on the river. Proceeded till ten, A.M., when D. Henderson was suddenly seized by a violent fit, which completely incapacitated him from travelling. Discovering a hut close by, a fire was immediately kindled in it, and a place prepared for our invalid to lie down; in our present circumstances nothing more could be done. I waited by him till two, P.M., then pursued my route, accompanied by the Indians, leaving H. Hay to take care of him. Accomplished fourteen miles.

“Friday, the 16th.—Set off at four, A.M. Arrived at dusk at Fort Smith, where, although I was well known, my Esquimaux dress and long beard defied recognition, until I announced myself by name.

“Saturday, the 17th.—An Indian was despatched early in the morning, to meet my men with a supply of the north-west panacea, Turlington Balsam; and I was glad to see them arrive in the evening, more in want of food than medicine.”

Two days after our arrival, all the Nascopie or Ungava Indians, at present residing in this part of the country, numbering seventy or eighty souls, came to the establishment, with the produce of their winter hunts. Mr. McGillivray and myself having come to an understanding regarding them, we both addressed them, representing to them the advantages they would derive from having posts so conveniently situated on their lands, &c. After some deliberation among themselves, they expressed their intention to be guided by our advice, and to return forthwith to their lands. Having sent off my despatches by Indian couriers, for Mashquaro, on the 3d of March, to be forwarded thence to Canada, via the Company's posts, along the Gulf and River St. Lawrence, I sent H. Hay for my guides (who had gone to pay the kettles of their friends a visit), preparatory to my departure hence, which has been deferred to a much later period than I had calculated upon, from the prevalence of excessively bad weather for a fortnight.

Hay, having met the Indians on the way, returned the same evening ; but they were so emaciated that I could scarcely recognise them, looking like so many spectres—a metamorphosis caused by the influenza, at that time prevalent in the country. My principal guide, however, declared himself able to proceed on the journey, with a light load; and it was arranged that Pellican should accompany his relative. Two young men, who came in with my guide, appearing not quite so much reduced as the others, I proposed to them to accompany me as far as Michigama Lake, to assist in hauling our provisions, which they consented to do; and they accordingly took their departure along with my guide, on the 4th of March. Myself and two men, along with my “husky” interpreter, followed next morning ; but as we are to retrace our steps by the same way we came, it will be unnecessary to narrate the occurrences of each day.

We arrived in the evening at the first Indian camp, where I found one of the young men I had hired, relapsed into his former malady, and unable to proceed further. This, although a disappointment, did not affect me, as I had hopes my guide would be able to continue his route, from the circumstance of his having passed on to the farthest camp. When we arrived, about noon next day, and found, not only our guide, but every individual in the camp, suffering under the fatal malady,—this was the climax to my disappointment. I determined on returning to Fort Smith, with my guide, where, by proper treatment, I hoped he might yet recover in time to admit of my returning before the end of the season.

I accordingly returned, accompanied by H. Hay, who conducted the dog-sledge, on which I had placed my sick Indian, leaving D. Henderson in charge of the provisions, along with the Esquimaux. On the morning of the 9th, I despatched H. Hay to join Henderson, with directions to haul the provisions on to McGillivray's hut, there to await further orders.

My guide, for a few days, appeared to be in a hopeless state, refusing sustenance of any kind, and became delirious. This was the crisis of the malady; for he soon began to take some food, and recovered strength daily. He at length proposed to attempt the journey, to which I joyfully assented; and once more took leave of Fort Smith, on the 19th of March, and joined my men next day.

Remaining two days, to give the guide time to recruit his strength, I started on the morning of the 23d; the Indians had recovered strength enough to enable them to proceed towards their winter deposit of provisions, near Michigama Lake, leaving us an excellent track. We overtook them on the 26th. I found it impossible to separate my guide from his relatives while we pursued the same route. We arrived on the 30th at their last stage, and encamped together.

Next morning as we were about to start, a message arrived from my guide, announcing his determination to proceed no farther, unless Pellican were permitted to accompany us. I sent for him immediately, and endeavoured to impress on his mind the unreasonableness of such a proposition, our provisions being scarcely sufficient for ourselves—that it would expose the whole party to the risk of starvation ; but I addressed a thing without reason and without understanding, and was accordingly obliged, once more, to yield.

We reached the highest land on the 2d of April, where, on examining our remaining stock of provisions, the alarming fact that it was altogether insufficient to carry us to the establishment, was but too apparent. It was therefore necessary to take immediate measures to avert, if possible, an evil that threatened so fearful consequences ; and the only course that presented itself was to divide into two parties,—the one to proceed with all possible despatch to the fort, by the shortest route, and to send forward a supply to the other, which it was anticipated would reach them ere they were reduced to absolute want.

Pursuant to this resolution I set off, accompanied by the guide and H. Hay; leaving D. Henderson to make the best of his way, with the Esquimaux and Pellican. Having taken but a very small share of the provisions with us, and meeting with no game on the way, we were soon reduced to the utmost extremity. One of our dogs being starved to death, we were ultimately obliged to knock the surviving one on the head, to supply ourselves with what we considered, in present circumstances, “food for the gods.” Such as it was, it enabled us to keep soul and body together till we reached Fort Chimo, on the 20th of April, where we found all the Nascopies of this part of the country assembled to greet the arrival of their long-expected friends—our guides. I immediately selected a couple of smart-looking lads to go to meet my rear guard,—the other servants about the establishment, who were accustomed to snows-shoes, being absent, watching the deer.

On the third day after their departure the couriers returned, with Pellican. On inquiring of the latter what had become of my men, he replied that he had left them encamped at a lake about sixty miles distant, where the Esquimaux, abandoning himself to despair, could not be prevailed upon to go a step farther; and that he (Pellican) had been sent forward by Henderson to urge on the party whom they expected. They were within a day's journey of them; and yet the wretches returned immediately on meeting Pellican, leaving the others to their fate. No Indians I had ever known would have acted so basely; yet these are an “unsophisticated race” of aborigines, who have but little intercourse with the whites, and must, of course, be free from the contamination of their manners. Our hunters being now arrived, were sent off, without delay, in quest of the missing ; and I had the satisfaction to see my famished compagnons de voyage arrive, on the 26th of April.

BISHOP OF SIDYME TO LORD ELGIN.

A Son Excellence
le Comte d'Elgin & Kincardine Gouverneur General.

Québec, 14 février 1850.

Milord,

J'ai l'honneur de transmettre à Votre Excellence une pétition des sauvages Montagnais qui habitent la partie nord du fleuve St Laurent au-dessous de l'embouchure de la rivière Saguenay. Une députation envoyée de leur part était venue ici l'automne dernier, se proposant d'aller présenter cette pétition à Votre Excellence, et de l'appuyer de leurs commentaires. Mais la saison étant bien avancée et le voyage à Toronto trop long et trop dispendieux, elle renonça à aller troubler Votre Excellence, et je pris l'engagement de recommander de mon mieux à Votre Excellence la cause de ceux qu'elle était chargée de représenter.

C'est pour accomplir ma promesse que je m'adresse aujourd'hui à Votre Excellence, et je le fais avec toute la confiance qu'inspire une des causes les plus justes qui puissent être soumises à son Gouvernement.

Votre Excellence n'ignore pas que les sauvages Montagnais ne trouvent plus dans la chasse et la pêche des moyens suffisants de subsistance, que d'ailleurs les établissements qui se forment partout sur le territoire qu'ils habitent font disparaître peu à peu ces deux ressources, les seules qu'ils avaient pour vivre; qu'il est de fait que la pauvreté en a déjà fait périr un grand nombre et que les autres ne peuvent tarder d'éprouver le même sort, dans un temps plus ou moins éloigné, si on ne vient à leur aide. Je ne doute pas que Votre Excellence, considérant que ces pauvres sauvages ont été dépossédés peu à peu d'une de leurs moyens de vivre par l'industrie et le commerce qui depuis quelques années exploitent le territoire habité par leurs pères (état de choses que le Gouvernement s'est vu forcé d'approuver et même d'encourager dans l'intérêt du pays en général) ne reconnaisse qu'il seroit injuste de les laisser périr de misère. tandis que le Gouvernement retire de l'exploitation du bois et de la vente de quelques parties de ce territoire des revenus plus que suffisants pour le mettre en état de prévenir ce malheur et empêcher l'extinction d'une race d'hommes qui a d'autant plus de droits à sa protection qu'elle est plus faible et d'une moindre importance aux yeux de la société.

Les Sauvages se proposoient dans l'origine de demander que la rivière Papinachois avec le terrain environnant fut comprise dans l'étendue de.

territoire qu'ils réclament du Gouvernement ; mais voyant que Mr Price a été autorisé à bâtir des moulins sur cette rivière et à prendre du bois dans le voisinage, ils ont renoncé à la comprendre dans leur réclamation.

Cependant ils m'ont prié de demander pour eux à Votre Excellence, et comme par compensation, une étendue d'une mine carrée de territoire, à l'endroit appelé Bon désir, situé entre le Saguenay et les Escoumains, puis le droit exclusif de pêche dans la rivière Betsiamis. Ce qui les engage à faire ces deux demandes c'est que le territoire qu'ils réclament offre peu de facilités pour l'agriculture et n'est à peu près favorable qu'à la pêche du loup marin, tandis que Bon désir leur procurerait un terrain très propre à l'agriculture, et la rivière Betsiamis une ressource précieuse pour la pêche au saumon.

Je pense qu'il n'est pas inutile que je fasse connaître à Votre Excellence que l'arpenteur actuellement employé par le Gouvernement dans ces parages juge que ce terrain leur conviendrait très bien et est prêt à en donner la circonscription dès qu'il lui sera intimé de le faire.

Mais c'est en vain qu'on donnerait aux pétitionnaires les plus grands encouragements pour se livrer à l'agriculture si on ne forme pas au milieu d'eux un établissement religieux qui les force, pour ainsi dire, d'en profiter. Il n'y a que les efforts persévérants des missionnaires qui puisse les engager à se livrer à un genre de travail si contraire à leurs habitudes, et encore ne peut-on compter sur un succès entier. C'est à Bon désir que devrait se faire cet établissement, parce que c'est là que les Sauvages feroient leur principale demeure: ils ne résideroient sur leur territoire qu'ils demandent dans leur pétition que pour le temps de la chasse et de la pêche ; tout au plus s'établirait-il quelques familles. J'ose en conséquence émettre la pensée qu'il seroit digne de la sollicitude du gouvernement d'aider de tout son pouvoir la formation de cet établissement religieux auquel ces pauvres sauvages sont très certainement incapables de contribuer par eux-mêmes. Ce serait là d'ailleurs pour le gouvernement un moyen efficace de rendre utiles les sacrifices qu'il pourra faire dans le but d'améliorer leur condition.

Je me flatte que Votre Excellence qui a déjà montré un si vif intérêt au sort de nos pauvres Montagnais voudra bien leur continuer sa protection et prêter une attention favorable à leur pétition, ainsi qu'aux demandes que je prends la liberté de faire en leur faveur.

J'ai l'honneur d'être &c.

PLEA OF ARCHBISHOP OF QUEBEC

ON BEHALF OF MONTAGNAIS INDIANS

L'Hon. Lafontaine, 1851.

Proc. Gen., Toronto.

Québec, 1 mai,

Monsieur,

Mgr l'Archevêque vient d'adresser une lettre au Gouverneur pour le prier de nouveau de s'occuper du sort de nos sauvages Montagnais des Postes du Roi sur le St Laurent.

Comme cette lettre sera probablement soumise aux délibérations du Conseil exécutif, permettez-moi de vous faire connaître les différentes démarches qui ont été faites depuis quelques années en faveur de ces pauvres sauvages et les espérances qu'on leur a données.

En 1845, ils adressèrent une pétition à la Législature pour demander qu'on leur fit une réserve de terre à la Baie des Outardes ; mais il ne leur fut fait aucune réponse.

En 1846, ils envoyèrent une députation à Montreal pour réitérer leur demande. La députation arrivée à Montreal pendant la session de la Législature fut bien accueillie par le Gouverneur Général qui promit qu'on feroit justice à la demande qu'elle étoit chargée de renouveler.

En 1848, le Rev. Père Durocher, leur missionnaire, fut délégué par eux au siège du Gouvernement pour presser l'exécution des promesses qu'on leur avait faites. La Législature étoit alors en session. Interpelé dans l'Assemblée législative par Mr Latarrière, représentant du Saguenay, vous déclarâtes que deux terrains seraient donnés aux sauvages Montagnais, l'un sur le lac St Jean, et l'autre sur les bords du St Laurent ; mais que quant à un octroi d'argent pour aider les sauvages à former un établissement, cette question étoit encore sous considération.

En 1850, les Sauvages présentèrent une nouvelle pétition à l'Exécutif, accompagnée d'une carte du territoire dont ils désiroient avoir la propriété; mais cette nouvelle démarche de leur part n'eut pas plus de succès que les précédentes.

Il importe de vous faire observer que la Baie des Outardes demandée par les Sauvages est le dernier endroit du nord du fleuve, plus bas que le Saguenay, dont les terres soient propres à la culture et qu'au-delà le climat est trop rigoureux pour qu'on en puisse cultiver la terre avec quelque chance de réussite. Cependant depuis que les Sauvages ont commencé à faire des démarches auprès du Gouvernement pour demander qu'on leur donne la abattis, l'un à l'embouchure de la rivière des Vases, l'autre à quelque distance dans l'intérieur, auprès d'une chute qui présente un pouvoir d'eau assez considérable. Ils ont même fait ouvrir une ferme à un mille environ de la rivière Papinachois, à l'entrée du territoire demandé par les Sauvages.

Le Gouvernement peut avoir des renseignements certains sur le terrain dont je viens de parler de l'agent des Terres de la couronne, Mr George Duberger, qui a entre les mains les plans du terrain demandé par les Sauvages, et qui est Bien au fait de leurs besoins.

Je ne dois pas vous cacher que, d'après les rapports qui nous arrivent, les Sauvages, à l'instar des blancs qui leur en donnent l'exemple et le conseil, sont disposés à empêcher qu'on ne s'empare du terrain qu'ils réclament et dont ils se sont mis en possession depuis plusieurs années et où même ils ont déjà fait quelque culture. Etant les premiers occupants, ils ne feraient que pratiquer tous ceux qui s'établissent sans permission préalable sur les terres du Gouvernement, et au sçu même du gouvernement. Cependant il seroit à craindre qu'il ne fut commis sur les lieux des actes de violence déplorables; et il est digne de la sollicitude du Gouvernement d'empêcher ce desordre, tout en rendant à nos pauvres Sauvages la justice qu'il leur a promise solennellement.

J'ai l'honneur d'être &c.

DIRECTIONS RESPECTING DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENT GRANT TO MONTAGNAIS INDIANS.

Québec, 26 décembre 1851.

Rev. Père Durocher, Grande Baie, Saguenay.

Mon Rév. Père,

Le compte-rendu par le P. Arnauld de l'état de détresse des pauvres Montagnais du bord de la mer, et par vous transmis à Mr le Gr. Vicairo Cazeau, a eu l'effet que vous en attendiez. Le Gouvernement consent à avancer sur les mille livres courant allouées aux Sauvages la somme de £125 qui peut être employée immédiatement en provisions de bouche. Mr le Grand Vic. Cazeau écrit à ce sujet au bon Pere Arnauld par la malle d'aujourd'hui.

Malheureusement à la saison où nous sommes, et on il va falloir prendre ces provisions soit dans les chantiers, soit dans les magasins de la Compagnie de la Baie d'Hudson, ces provisions vont couter bien cher; mais il faut Bien se résoudre à payer le prix qui sera demandé puisu'il n'y a pas à faire autrement.

* * * *

Je fais d'avance à vous et à votre communauté mes souhaits de bonne et heureuse annee et suis &c.

C. F. CAZEAU, VICAR-GENERAL, TO LIEUT.—COL. BRUCE.

Québec, 26 décembre 1851.

Lt Colonel Bruce,

Surintendant du Départerm. des Sauvages.

Monsieur.

J'ai reçu l'honneur de votre lettre du 23 du courant, m'informant qu'il a plu à Son Excellence d'autoriser la distribution d'une somme de £125 en faveur des sauvages Montagnais, et demandant que Mgr l'Archevêche veuille bien faire ses suggestions pour aider le Gouvernement à faire cette distribution.

Je suis chargé par Sa Grandeur de vous faire savoir que si Son Excellence le trouve convenable, elle se chargera volontiers de recommander au Père Arnauld, missionnaire des Montagnais, d'acheter à meilleurs composition possible les provisions et effets nécessaires a ces pauvres sauvages et d'en tenir compte au Gouvernement, pourvu qu'il ne dépasse pas dans cet achat la somme ci-dessus mentionnée. A cette époque de l'année, il n'est pas possible de faire de semblables achats dans la localité qu'habitent les Montagnais en question, à moins de payer un haut prix; mais il est certain que le missionnaire y mettra tout le discernement possible.

J'ai l'honneur d'être &c.

GOVERNOR SIMPSON TO D. A. SMITH.
(EXTRACT.)

[1 April, 1853.]

RECORDS, HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

1st April 1853.

. . . . "You seem very desirous that arrangements should be made with the Roman Catholic Missionaries in Canada to proceed to Esquimaux Bay by way of Mingan, but after duly considering the matter I think we had better leave things as they are. It is very doubtful that any benefit would result from the proposed flying visit of the Canadian Missionaries, while it is quite certain they would be productive of expense and inconvenience in many respects, not the least of which would be the opening up a communication between Mingan and NW River, by which route we would soon find that a great part of our Esquimaux Bay trade made its way into the hands of our Rivals on the St. Lawrence. Another reason for not encouraging Romish priests from Canada to form a footing on the Labrador Coast is that, the Bishop of Ruperts Land has established a Church of England mission at East Maine, to which it would be both desirable and convenient that the Indians of F. Nascopie and other parts beyond the height of lands (who it seems are so particularly anxious to obtain instructions) should resort, more especially, as it is in contemplation to have the Ungava country re-explored this year, and with a view to the re-establishment of a Post at Ungava Bay, in which case, it may be found expedient to abandon F. Nascopie and to withdraw the Indians further into the Interior and consequently nearer the Eastmain Mission. . . ."

GOVERNOR SIMPSON TO A. COMEAU AT SEVEN ISLANDS.

RECORDS, HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

Lancine, 9th Sepr. 1857.

. . . "I fear we cannot prevent the Esquimaux Bay Indians visiting the St. Lawrence posts occasionally, while we pay such high prices for furs. I believe those high prices rather than the missions are the chief attention. I observe you have raised the tariff for furs at Seven Islands, and that 35/- is now paid for Martens at that rate the business cannot be remunerative. . . ."

[26 March, 1858.]

GOVERNOR SIMPSON TO D. A. SMITH.

(EXTRACT.)

RECORDS, HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

Lachine, 26th April 1853.

. . . . "I should be glad to learn you have arrived at some understanding with the Moravians, whereby in consideration of the Companys good offices in extending their missions in the direction of Esquimaux Bay, they should relinquish their trading operations to us. It is evident we must extend our posts in a Northerly direction along the Coast, in order to protect the interior trade from the encroachments being made upon it by Hunts people from that quarter; but before coming so close upon the Moravian Settlements, it would be advisable to have established a friendly understanding with them. I shall be glad to hear further from you on these matters.

I have consented to assist the Roman Catholic Priest in his Missionary tour to the Nascopies and thence to the Labrador Coast, from a variety of reasons. First we could not prevent his going if so disposed; secondly, it would have been a very impolitic thing to have thwarted the plans of the R.C. Bishop of Quebec, who would have found means to retaliate on the Company and thirdly, as the Nascopies are so bent on seeing a Priest that they come out to the St. Lawrence for that purpose, it is better to meet their wishes in the hope that they may rest quietly at their hunting grounds, instead of wasting their time in travelling to the Mission at Mingan etc.

With regard to the Bishop of Newfoundland you must be very civil and obliging in your reply to his communication; but be careful to bind the Company to nothing, in the shape of support to his missions, if established.—Hospitality, civility, interest in the cause he has at heart etc. is as much as you can promise...."

REVEREND J. B. A. FERLAND TO BISHOP OF TLOA.

A Monseigneur l'Evêque de Tloa.

MONSEIGNEUR

Au mois de juillet dernier, Votre Grandeur me chargeait d'aller au secours du R. P. Coopman, O.M.I., tombé malade à Mécatina sur la côte du Labrador, et de continuer la visite des familles catholiques de cette partie du diocèse, si je le trouvais trop faible pour achever sa mission.

* * * *

Je laissais Québec, le 20 juillet, pour aller m'embarquer à Berthier sur la goëlette Marie-Louise, prête à faire voile pour la côte du Labrador.

* * * *

Le 29, nous entrions dans le port de Mingan, pour étayer notre mat de misaine, qui s'était rompu, pendant le gros temps de la veille.

* * * *

A 7 lieues au-dessous du poste de Mingan, se trouve la Pointe aux Esquimaux, où une vingtaine de familles acadiennes se sont établies depuis trois ans. Elles viennent des îles de la Magdeleine, d'où elles se sont expatriées pour améliorer leur condition. Pêcheurs, agriculteurs et matelots, les acadiens ont fait un excellent choix en transportant leur résidence en ce lieu.

* * * *

De Mingan au grand Nataskouan, l'on compte un peu plus de trente lieues.

* * * *

Dans l'après-midi de ce jour, nous pûmes laisser Nataskouan, et nous mettre de nouveau en route. De ce havre à Wapitugan il y a environ vingt-cinq lieues: dans cette étendue de pays sont le poste de Kegashka où se termine la seigneurie de Mingan et ceux de Maskouara, de la Romaine, de Coucouthou

A Wapitugan, situé à vingt-sept ou vingt-huit lieues de Nataskouan, la côte qui, depuis Mingan, a couru de l'est à l'ouest, se replie vers le nord-est.

* * * *

L'histoire du Labrador, n'est pas longue. Ce pays, à l'arrivée des Européens, était dans la possession des Esquimaux, qui soutenaient déjà et continuèrent longtemps après à soutenir une guerre assez vive, contre les Montagnais, et les Souriquois ou Micmacs, habitants des côtes de l'Acadie, de la Gaspésie et de Terre-Neuve. Les Esquimaux qui semblent appartenir à, la famille des Samoyèdes et des Lapons se défendaient courageusement ; mais quand les Français se mirent de la partie contre eux, ils durent céder peu à peu et se retirer sur la côte septentrionale du Labrador.

* * * *

Abondante en poissons, cette mer continua d'être fréquentée, et le port de Brest devint le rendez-vous d'un grand nombre de pêcheurs français. Lewis Roberts dans son Dictionnaire du Commerce, imprimé à Londres en 1600, dit que c'était le principal poste de la Nouvelle France, la résidence d'un gouverneur, d'un aumônier et de quelques autres officiers: que les Français en exportaient de grandes quantités de morues, des barbes et des huiles de baleine, ainsi que des castors et autres fourrures précieuses. Il ajoute que les Français entretenaient un fort à Tadoussac, pour y faire le trafic des pelleteries avec des sauvages. Il est difficile de déterminer ce qu'il y a de vrai dans l'assertion de l'auteur cité; mais il est bien sûr que sur la baie de Saint Paul se trouvent des ruines qui ont conservé le nom de Vieux Fort. Le même nom est donné à ce lieu dans les cartes attachées à l'histoire du Canada par Charlevoix.

Quand la colonie de la Nouvelle-France eut commencé à s'affermir, des compagnies, à la tête desquelles étaient les sieurs Aubert de la Chesnaye et Riverin, obtinrent des concessions de terres sur la côte du Labrador, au nord de Blanc Sablon. Peu de temps après, le sieur Le Gardeur de Courtemanche était mis en possession de la baie de Phelypeaux, aujourd'hui nommée la baie de Brador; et le sieur Amador Godefroy de Saint Paul obtenait cinq lieues de côtes, de chaque côté de la grande rivière des Esquimaux, à laquelle il donna le nom de Saint Paul, et qui est aujourd'hui appelée Rivière aux Saumons.

Dans les limites de la seigneurie de sieur du Saint Paul, se trouvait renfermé l'ancien port de Brest. Le but des concessionnaires, tel qu'il est exprimé dans leurs demandes, était de faire "la pêche des molues, baleynes, loupsmarins, marsouins et autres."

* * * *

Sous le gouvernement britannique toutes ces pêcheries passèrent à des marchands anglais et écossais qui employaient un certain nombre d'hommes pour faire la pêche et la chasse. Le chef de la dernière compagnie qui fit valoir ces postes fut le sieur Adam Lymburner, alors un des premiers marchands de Québec.

Il y a quarante ans, l'on ne rencontrait pas sur la côte une seule femme d'origine européenne; les six ou sept postes du Labrador ne renfermaient que des hommes, presque tous originaires de Berthier.

* * * *

La langue française est la plus généralement répandue dans la partie supérieure du Labrador, depuis Mingan jusqu'à Saint Augustin; elle est aussi ordinairement en usage à Blanc-Sablon ; mais depuis Saint Augustin jusqu'à la baie de Brador, on parle habituellement l'anglais. Beaucoup d'habitants de la cote se servent facilement des deux langues.

On rencontre peu de Montagnais; ceux qui paraissent dans [sic] ces quartiers pendant quelques semaines ne font qu'y passer, pour se rendre à leurs quartiers d'hiver et en revenir par le sivières [sic] d'Itamamiou, de Saint Augustin ou des Saumons. Quant aux Esquimaux, j'en ai vu trois ou quatre, qui vivent à l'Européenne: tous les autres se sont retirés vers le Nord.

* * * *

En laissant Wapitugan, j'entrais dans les limites de ma mission.

* * * *

Le 4, nous nous arrêtons à Natagamiou, tout près d'une chute que fait la rivière de même nom en se jetant dans la mer.

* * * *

En laissant la Tête à la Baleine, nous franchissons un étroit passage au milieu des îles et nous cotoyons le pied du Gros Mecatina, morne élevé, qui sert d'amarque aux vaisseaux arrivant de la haute mer sur la côte du Labrador.

* * * *

Le dimanche après midi, (8 aout), je terminai la mission.

* * * *

Je partis le même soir de la Tabatière, avec Monsieur Francois Lévêque, maître du poste de la Grosse-Ile de Mecatina, pour aller donner la mission à sa famille.

* * * *

De la Grosse Ile à Blanc Sablon, l'on ne compte que vingt-deux lieues en ligne droite, mais par les détours qu'il faudra faire au dedans des îles, il y a à peu près trente lieues. Le douze, je fis mes adieux à mon hôte, qui me fournit une Berge pour continuer mon voyage.

* * * *

Le soleil allait se coucher, lorsque nous arrivâmes à Chikapoué.

* * * *

La rivière Saint Augustin tombe dans la baie du même nom; à son embouchure elle est partagée en plusieurs bras par des îles nombreuses, qui occupent sur la côte une longueur de sept ou huit lieues; c'est sur une de ces îles qu'est le poste de St. Augustin.

* * * *

La rivière sort de la hauteur des terres, où quelques-unes de ses sources se croisent avec celles de la rivière Kenamou, qui va tomber dans la baie des Esquimaux. Par cette voie l'on peut passer des bords du golfe de Saint-Laurent à la baie des Esquimaux, dans l'espace de sept jours.

lumières de la foi aux Nascapis de la hauteur des terres et aux sauvages de la baie des Esquimaux. Si Votre Grandeur les chargeait de cette mission, ils pourraient se rendre à la baie des Esquimaux, soit par la rivière Saint Augustin, soit en faisant le tour du Labrador sur la goëlette que la Compagnie de la Baie d'Hudson envoie annuellement dans son poste. De là il serait plus facile aux missionnaires de saisir une occasion favorable, pour remonter la grande rivière près de laquelle se tiennent les Nascapis.

* * * *

Comme on m'informait que le Père Coopman avait repris sa mission, il ne me restait plus qu'à gagner Blanc-Sablon, pour prendre passage à bord de la Marie-Louise ou de quelque autre vaisseau qui pouvait se trouver en partance;

* * * *

Le 17, nous nous mettons en route avec un vent favorable; notre navigation se fait au milieu des îles jusqu'à Chicataka, ancien poste de pêche établi par les français avant la conquête du pays.

* * * *

Les vents et la brume nous retinrent en ce lieu pendant trois jours, et ce ne fut que le 20 que nous pûmes reprendre la mer; le soir même, j'arrivais au Havre de Blanc Sablon, où je trouvai la Marie-Louise prête à mettre à la voile le lendemain;

* * * *

La baie de Blanc Sablon tire son nom des sables blancs d'une petite rivière, qui lui apporte le tribut de ses eaux. La baie et la rivière forment une extrémité de la ligne qui sépare le Labrador Canadien, du Labrador uni au gouvernement de Terre-Neuve.

* * * *

Blanc Sablon est situé à l'entrée du détroit de Belle-Isle; il n'y a que sept lieues de l'Isle à Bois aux côtes de Terre-Neuve, que l'on aperçoit clairement. La partie la plus étroite du détroit est à Forteau, où il n'y a que dix milles d'une pointe à l'autre.

* * * *

Le 21 août, la Marie-Louise laissait le port de Blanc Sablon pour son voyage de retour;

Pendant deux jours notre goëlette reste mouillée dans la baie de Brador, pour attendre du fret qui ne vient pas.

* * * *

Le Sieur de Courtemanche avait obtenu du Gouvernement français, la concession de la baie à laquelle fut donné le nom de Phéliepeaux; le fort qu'il bâtit à l'entrée fut appelé fort Pontchartrain. Pendant longtemps il y fit des affaires importantes. Après la mort de Monsieur de Courtemanche, qui avait épousé, non pas une fille de Henri IV, comme le prétend une tradition du Labrador, mais la fille d'Etienne Charest, seigneur de la côte de Lauson, l'établissement passa à son gendre le Sieur Foucher, et au Sieur de Brouague, commandant sur la côte. Un des fils du Sieur Foucher ajouta à son nom celui de Labrador; et je crois qu'il y a aujourd'hui en France une famille portant le nom de Foucher de Labrador.

* * * *

La cargaison de la goëlette se trouva à peu près complétée a la Tabatiere, d'où nous partimes le 31 août, pour voguer directement vers Québec.

J'ai l'honneur d'être,
Monseigneur,
avec un profond respect,
de Votre Grandeur,
le très-humble et très-obéissant serviteur,

You were at one time desirous of placing a small post on the Coast, near the confines of Mingan (St. Augustines), to secure a considerable trade in furs and oil which now passes into other channels. It has occurred to me that, by means of such an outpost from Esquimaux Bay and probably another at some good inland Station between North West River and Mingan, we might secure a considerable share of the trade of the Seigniory. The Company are the owners of the Isles and Islets of Mingan, and I think it may be practicable to establish ourselves, when our lease expires, on the island at the entrance of Mingan harbour, that is the island opposite the house forming the harbour, which is the Company's property. I am about having that island properly examined, to ascertain its capabilities, as regards water, fuel, etc. If the trade of Mingan Coast be of sufficient value in 1862, to warrant the outlay necessary in building on the island in question, I have no doubt it may be as easily collected there as at the post we now occupy, on the mainland.

An impression appears to prevail with yourself and other of our officers that, the time has arrived when the Company should extend their operations into the interior country between Eastmain and Labrador, and in the direction of Ungava, in order to prevent strangers making a footing there. Our former experience of Ungava indisposes me from sanctioning any but a gradual and cautious occupation of that district again. But I presume a better knowledge of the country, its resources, physical characteristics, etc., is now possessed than when we formerly went there.

[29, Dec., 1862.]

The protection of our trade has already rendered necessary stations to the Northward of our old posts, at Indian Harbour and Nain; and some further means would appear necessary, now, to prevent inland Indians visiting the Labrador Coast, whereby losing the greater part of the year in travelling, and exposing themselves to the temptations and sickness to be met with at the settlements. This object might be gained, by a well situated inland post, beyond Indian Harbour and Nain; and thus by cautious' advances we might re-occupy the valuable marten grounds of Ungava. I should be glad to hear from you on this matter also more fully.

. . . "It has already been arranged that Mr. Thomas Hardisty, Appce. Clerk at present temporarily employed here, shall be sent, by the first conveyance that may offer, to Esquimaux Bay at the request of C. F. Smith. I daresay we could spare another clerk in spring from this Department; but, as we have very few that can be considered efficient, I should hesitate about sending, to so remote a district as Esquimaux Bay, any one who did not give perfect satisfaction here; where they can be so easily discharged or exchanged.

If the Board determines on sending the Esquimaux Bay outfit via Canada this ensuing spring, it might be desirable to advise Mr. Smith thereof in a advance; and by the same conveyance, the necessary instructions might be given to him respecting the new posts. This is practicable, by means of an overland express from Mingan; but I shall not incur the expense of such an express, except by orders from the Board.

I duly note your very judicious remarks as to avoiding grounds of jealousy on the part of Protestant Missionaries, by securing the support of the Roman Catholics. Fortunately in the case in point, no conflict of creeds need be apprehended, as the Roman Catholics at present hold that rather unpromising field entirely to themselves....”

. . . "In any case, but especially in view of the much greater quantity of goods and provisions which will be required on the increase of the business by the establishment of additional posts, I do not think it will be at all for the interest of the Company to continue the existing arrangements for introducing the supplies. I shall however now fully consider this matter and shall hereafter speak more at length regarding it and some other subjects to which time will hardly now permit me to refer, but in case the Board should in the meantime take any action in the matter, I would beg to say that for some years back Messrs. Hunt and Henley have been in the habit of chartering vessels in Canada, on much more favourable terms than those exacted from the Hudsons Bay Company, and I cannot see why there should be any difference, in this respect. However in the event of Ungava being re-established, the Company will, I presume, require to have a vessel of their own for the voyage, which will at same time bring in the supplies for Esquimaux Bay.

Operation at Lake Winebegan (Willow Lake) ought to have been, and but for the unfortunate detention here, of course would have been commenced at a much earlier date, but I shall lose no time after my return to North West River, in despatching a party to form an establishment there, placing it in charge of one of the gentlemen now in the District, altho' we can at present ill spare for the purpose any officer fit for the charge. I shall if possible also proceed thither myself to assist in choosing a site for the post.

My suggestions to the late Sir George Simpson with regard to the enlargement of the business of Esquimaux Bay district, embraced the re-occupation of Ft. Chimo, Ungava Bay, or should this not be considered desirable, then the formation of a station in the interior of Fraser's River near to Nain, the former being however in my opinion much preferable, and during the past winter we prepared a quantity of logs, boards and other building materials which would be available for the repair or re-erection of buildings at Ft. Chimo. Even had I not heard from the Board on the subject, it was my intention this season to have brought it to their notice, feeling satisfied that if we do not shortly make a move in that direction, others will do so, as I believe there are several on this coast who have for years back had an eye on that quarter, and amongst them Mr. N. Norman who I have been told, went so far as to engage one or more persons for the trip. This I repeatedly urged upon the attention of Sir George Simpson once or twice officially, but more generally under private cover, and he appeared to be fully alive to the importance of protecting the Company's interests by again occupying that place hesitating only as to the comparative advantages of forwarding the supplies from Hudson Bay (Whale River) or this district. To the former I was at first inclined to give the preference, thinking that it would less attract the attention of Mr. Norman and others in this quarter who might be inclined to follow us thither, but on more mature consideration I am now of opinion that it would be better it should be outfitted from and form a part of this district, believing that a divided charge would cause very great inconvenience owing to the propensity of the natives for wandering from one district to another believing that by so doing they were relieved from the necessity of liquidating what on their return to either district had become old debts, the baneful effects of which I have too frequently seen while I was stationed at the King's Posts as well as in the relations between Mingan and Esquimaux Bay. I am of opinion that the business at Ungava should for some time at least be conducted on a more limited and consequently more economical scale than formerly, confining it in the first instance to Fort Chimo. That it will be very profitable for some years I do not think, but on the other hand if parties inimical to the Company were to find their way there, the injury to the trade not only of Ft. Nascopie, but in all probability likewise of Ruperts River District and East Main would be incalculable, and I am consequently most happy to learn that the request of the Moravian Brethren to be permitted to settle there, either as Missionaries, or Missionaries and Traders conjoined has not been acceded to by the Board.

The "United Brethren" on this Coast appear year after year to be more and more laying aside the character of Missionaries of the Gospel and assuming that of ordinary merchants or traders; and I have lately heard that they are now forming a new station about half way twixt Hopedale and Nain, in front and within a few hundred yards of a small outpost occupied by us from 1858 till the autumn of 1861. since which time owing to the irregularity in receiving our supplies and partly from having had no competent person available for the charge it has been left unoccupied, altho' in fact some of the Company's property is still in store there. I would however mention that the place is not of much importance and that I had no intention of sending any of our people there this season owing to the great depreciation in the value of Trout which formed a principal item of returns, still it would have been no undue stretch of courtesy on the part of the Missionaries to have at least informed us of their intention before proceeding with the erection of buildings, and as I hope to have an opportunity of meeting them next winter I shall then speak to them on the subject.

A rumour is current here that a large number of Esquimaux from Ungava and Richmond Gulf have found their way to Hebron in course of the past year, but I have not yet been able to ascertain how far this may be correct. . . .”

EXTRACTS FROM “EXPLORATIONS IN LABRADOR,”

BY HENRY YOULE HIND. VOL. I. (LONDON, 1863.)

The vast peninsula which commonly bears the name of Labrador—a term more correctly applied to the north-eastern portion—occupies an area between the Atlantic and Hudson's Bay, lying within the 49th and 63rd parallels, and between the 55th and 79th meridians. The Gulf of St. Lawrence, the North Atlantic, Hudson's Straits and Hudson's Bay are its boundaries on three sides; Rupert's River, the Mistassini, and the Bersamits River may be considered as forming the approximate limits to the south-west. From the mouth of Rupert's River on Hudson's Bay, to the mouth of the Bersamits on the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the distance is about 470 miles; and from Cape Wolstenholme—the most northern point of the country, to the Straits of Belle Isle, it is 1,110 miles. Travelling northwards, from the Hudson's Bay Company's post at Bersamits, in a direct line to Ungava Bay, the distance would be about 650 miles; while to Cape Wolstenholme, to the west, it is not less than 1,000. The area of the Labrador Peninsula is approximately 420,000 square miles, or equal to the British Isles, France, and Prussia combined, and the greater portion of it lies between the same parallels of latitude as Great Britain.

The whole of this immense country is uninhabited by civilised man, with the exception of a few settlements on the St. Lawrence and North Atlantic coasts, and some widely separated posts of the Hudson's Bay Company. It is thinly peopled by nomadic bands of Montagnais, Nasquapee, Mistassini, and Swampy Creek Indians, and by wandering Esquimaux on the northern coasts. Taken as a whole, it is a region unfit for the permanent abode of civilised man; and although once rich in fur-bearing animals, and in caribou or reindeer, it is now in many parts almost a desert. It derives great importance however, from the remarkable richness of the fisheries on its coasts; hence the establishment and maintenance of permanent fishing villages on the main land becomes a subject of great importance to Canada and Britain.

The condition, character, customs, and traditions of the aboriginal inhabitants of so large a portion of the earth's surface, many of whom have never visited the coast, are full of interest; and the geography and geology of so vast an extent of country form proper subjects of enquiry at the present day.

In the absence of any definite boundaries, the entire peninsula is divided special name have been given. The area draining into the river and gulf of St. Lawrence belongs to Canada, whose eastern boundary is at Blanc Sablon, near the mouth of the North-West River. The country, supposed to be drained by rivers which flow into the Atlantic, is called Labrador, and is under the jurisdiction of Newfoundland. The remaining part of the peninsula, which drained by rivers flowing into Hudson's Bay, has received the designation the East Main. The names and position of the mouths only of the many rivers which flow into the Gulf of St. Lawrence, from the Bay of Seven Islands to the Straits of Belle Isle, are correctly given in published maps of the country ; and nearly the whole of our present knowledge of the east side of the Labrador Peninsula is derived from Captain Bayfield's surveys, which, are limited to the coast. No map to which I have been able to obtain access exhibits a correct geographical picture of the interior of the country.

The mouth of the Moisie or Mis-te-shipu River—the 'Great River' of the Montagnais Indians—enters the Gulf of St. Lawrence in longitude $66^{\circ} 10'$, about eighteen miles east of the Bay of Seven Islands, and has its source in some of the lakes and swamps of high table land of Eastern Canada. For centuries it has been one of the leading lines of communication from the interior of the coast, travelled by the Montagnais during the time when they were a numerous and powerful people, capable of assembling upwards of "a thousand warriors" to repel the invasion of the Esquimaux, who were accustomed to hunt for a few weeks during the summer months, a short distance up the rivers east of the Moisie, as they do now on the Coppermine Anderson's, and Mackenzie's Rivers, in the country of the Hare Indians and the Loucheux. The old and well-worn portage paths, round falls and rapids and over precipitous mountains on the Upper Moisie, testify to the antiquity of the route, independently of the traditions of the Indians who now hunt on this river and on the table land to which it is the highway.

My attention was first drawn to the Moisie by the Abbe Ferland, of Laval University, Quebec, who showed me a chart constructed by seven Montagnais Indians at the request of Pere Arnaud, a zealous missionary among the aborigines of this part of British America. The chart exhibited the route followed by these Indians from Hamilton Inlet on the Atlantic coast up Esquimaux River, a continuation of the Ashwanipi, to a great lake in the interior called Petshikupau—thence by an unbroken water communication through the Ashwanipi River and a lake of the same name to near the head waters of the east branch of the Moisie, which they reached by crossing a low water parting, and descended to the Gulf of St. Lawrence. According to the Indian chart, the Ashwanipi must flow through five degrees of longitude, traversing the elevated table land of the Labrador Peninsula in a direction roughly parallel to the coast of the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

The chart is a curious and instructive illustration of the remarkable capabilities possessed by Indians to delineate the general features of a country through which they have passed; and as far as we were able to compare it with our own surveys, it is singularly exact and accurate.

A Mgr Têtu,

Monseigneur,

Si j'étais obligé de le faire, il me serait facile de me justifier de ne pas vous avoir écrit depuis deux ans, après vous avoir promis un rapport sur les missions du Golfe; et d'abord, pour ne pas parler des autres raisons, je devais prendre To temps do me renseigner, comme il faut moi-même, en faisant deux voyages aux missions dont j'avais à vous entretenir. Maintenant ad rem.

Ces missions sont Maskuaro, Mingan, les Sept-Iles et Godbout. Elles sont fréquentées par des Montagnais et des Naskapis, qui ont tous la même langue et ne forment plus qu'une seule tribu. Ils sont essentiellement chasseurs et ne viennent à la mer qu'une fois l'année dans les mois de juin et juillet, pour y passer cinq à six semaines. Durant tout le reste du temps, ils sont disséminés dans les bois, occupés à chasser le caribou et les animaux à fourrure, tels que l'ours, le loup-cervier, le renard, le castor, la loutre, la martre, le vison, etc.

EXTRACT FROM "LABRADOR ET ANTICOSTI,"

Par l'abbé V.-A. HUARD, A.M. (Montreal and Paris, 1897).

Quoique vivant isolés, famille par famille, durant une si grande partie de l'année, les Montagnais ne laissent pas d'avoir une certaine organisation civile autonome. Ce serait être par trop sauvage, que de n'en avoir aucune. Chaque tribu a donc son chef exerce le souverain pouvoir sous l'égide du gouvernement canadien et, d'un peu plus loin, de la Couronne d'Angleterre. Le P. Durocher, l'un des Oblats qui s'occupèrent autrefois des missions montagnaises, obtint un jour du gouvernement quatre ou cinq grandes médailles d'argent qu'on distribua aux chefs des diverses tribus. C'est l'insigne de leur autorité, et c'est bien près d'être tout ce qu'ils possèdent de souveraineté. Ce n'est pas que le peuple règle à lui seul les affaires importantes, comme cela se faisait dans certaines républiques anciennes. A vous-le: il n'y a plus, dans ces nations, d'affaires à régler. L'objet même du gouvernement fait presque entièrement défaut. Voilà jusqu'où la décadence peut atteindre une race ! Il n'y a pas même de règles nettement définies pour la transmission de la dignité suprême, lorsque survient le décès de l'un de ces potentats: car ils ne sont pas moins sujets à la mort que leurs collègues, empereurs, tsars, ou monarques généralement quelconques. Leur pouvoir n'est pas héréditaire, et, pour les remplacer—autant que cela se peut—on fait, suivant des formalités qui dépendent beaucoup des circonstances, l'élection d'un nouveau chef, à qui l'on remet en guise d'intronisation la grande médaille, emblème de la souveraineté.

Il paraît—car il faut se garder d'ajouter trop de foi à l'histoire contemporaine, non plus qu'aux autres histoires—il paraît donc qu'à Betsiamis il y a quelques années, les Montagnais ne furent pas tous, à un égal degré, charmés du choix que, sous la direction des missionnaires, on avait fait d'un nouveau chef. Et, comme il n'y a pas ici à tant tourner autour du pot, disons-le franchement: il y avait eu de l' "influence indue" dans cette élection. C'est là, comme on sait, un crime épouvantable, propre à detraquer irrémédiablement tout le mécanisme électoral! Or, s'il n'y a pas de juges à Betsiamis, il y en a à Berlin, je voulais dire à Ottawa; et une délégation de Montagnais, accompagnés d'un interprète, se rendit à Ottawa, pour contester l'élection, et obtenir le choix d'un autre chef. Je ne sais vraiment s'il régnait alors, au ministère des Sauvages, à Ottawa, un conservatisme outré, ou si, par une incompréhensible aberration d'esprit, l' "influence indue" n'y inspirait pas toute l'horreur qu'elle mérite. Toujours est-il que l'administration, dont ce cas était justiciable, se régala de l'huître, comme le plus gourmet des magistrats, et donna les écailles aux délégués de la tribu de Betsiamis, qui s'en revinrent à la bourgade, enchantés de toutes les belles choses qu'ils avaient vues dans un si long voyage, mais condamnés pourtant à se soumettre au chef qu'ils avaient tenté de détrôner. Du reste, la paix ne fut pas autrement troublée par l'incident, et, après comme avant, la tranquillité de l'ordre fut complète à Betsiamis.

Mais il ne faut pas croire que ces principicules n'ont pas, à l'occasion, l'exact sentiment de leur dignité. On raconte à ce sujet le trait que voici. Un jour, à Mingan, le gouverneur général, Sir Edmund Head, arrive, accompagnant un prince d'Angleterre, qui devait bien être le prince de Galles lui-même. Dès le débarquement du prince, le chef de la tribu du lieu s'en vient à sa rencontre. Le chapeau sur la tête, et lui frappant sur l'épaule, il dit a [sic] Son Altesse: "Toi chef ?—Oui!—Moi chef aussi." Puis, en lui montrant sa grande médaille d'argent "Tiens! vois ta mère!" On dit que le prince fut très surpris de l'incident et le trouva tout à fait charmant. Il est sûr que, pour un personnage de la cour royale, l'aventure avait de l'originalité.

BUREAU OF AMERICAN ETHNOLOGY, BULLETIN 30, WASHINGTON, 1907

Montagnais (French 'mountaineers,' from the mountainous character of their country). A group of closely related Algonquian tribes in Canada, extending from about St. Maurice r. almost to the Atlantic, and from the St. Lawrence to the watershed of Hudson bay. The tribes of the group speak several well-marked dialects. They are the Astouregamigoukh, Attikiriniouetch. Bersiamite, Chisedec, Escoumains, Espamichkon, Kakouchaki, Mauthaepi, Miskouaha, Mouchaouaouastiirinioek, Nascapee, Nekoubaniste, Otaguottouemin, Oukesestigouek, Oumamiwek, Papinachois, Tadousac, and Weperigweia. Their linguistic relation appears to be closer with the Cree of Athabasca lake, or Ayabaskawiniwug, than with any other branch of the Algonquian family. Champlain met them at the mouth of the Saguenay in 1603, where they and other Indians were celebrating with bloody rites the capture of Iroquois prisoners. Six years later he united with them the Hurons and Algonkin in an expedition against the Iroquois. In the first Jesuit Relation, written by Biard (1611-16), they are spoken of as friends of the French. From that time their name has a place in Canadian history, though they exerted no decided influence on the settlement and growth of the colony. The first missionary work among them was begun in 1615, and missions were subsequently established on the upper Saguenay and at L. St. John. These were continued, though with occasional and long interruptions, until 1776. The Montagnais fought the Micmac, and often the Eskimo, but their chief and inveterate foes were the Iroquois, who drove them for a time from the banks of the St. Lawrence and from their strong-holds about the upper Saguenay, compelling them to seek safety at more distant points. After peace was established between the French and the Iroquois they returned to their usual haunts. Lack of proper food, epidemics, and contact with civilization are reducing their numbers. Turner (11th Rep. B.A.E., 1894) says they roam over the areas s. of Hamilton inlet as far as the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Their western limits are imperfectly known. They trade at all the stations along the accessible coast, many of them at Rigolet and Northwest r. . . .

The bands and villages of the Montagnais are: Appeelatat, Assuapmushan, Attikamegue, Bonne Esperance, Chicoutimi, Esquimaux Point, Godbout, Ile Percee (mission), Itamameou (mission), Islets de Jeremie (mission), Kapiminakouetiik, Mauthaepi, Mingan, Moisie, Mushkoniatawee: Musquarro, Nabisippi, Natashquan, Pashasheebo, Romaine, and St. Augustine.

Nascapee (a term of reproach applied by the Montagnais). The most north-easterly of the Algonquian tribes, occupying the elevated interior of Quebec and Labrador penin. n. of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and extending from the vicinity of L. Mistassini to Ungava bay on the n. They call themselves Namenot, 'true, real men.' Many of them have inter-married with their congeners the Montagnais, and when they visit the coast the two tribes frequent the same stations. When in the neighbourhood of Ungava bay they are known as Ungava Indians.

The dwellings, for both winter and summer, are tents or tipis of reindeer skins sewed together, and measuring 10 to 18 ft. at the base and 10 to 14 ft. high. The floor is carpeted with young spruce branches, except around the central fireplace ; the smoke escapes through an opening in the top of the tipi where the supporting poles are brought together.

Transportation and travelling are conducted by means of canoes made of slats or ribs covered with birchbark, sleds or toboggans (tá-bas-kan), and snowshoes of four styles framed with wood and netted...

On account of their wandering habits, the nature of their country, and their mixture with the Montagnais, it is impossible to give an exact statement of their numbers. In 1858 they were estimated at about 2,500. In 1884 the Naskapee of the Lower St. Lawrence were officially reported to number 2,860, and the Indians of Labrador and e. Ruperts Land were returned as 5,016. In 1906 there were 2,183 Montagnais and Nascapee officially noted as such, and 2,741 unnamed Indians in the interior, 1,253 of whom were in the unorganized territories of Chicoutimi and Saguenay. See Montagnais, Nitchequon..

THE INDIANS OF THE LABRADOR.

The Indians of the interior are probably a diminishing people whose numbers it is difficult to compute, for they live for the most part withdrawn behind their fastnesses of wilderness and stony desert. According to the most reliable estimates they may be counted as some four thousand in all. The large majority of these hunt and trap in the southern part of the peninsula, coming out with their furs to the waters of the St. Lawrence.

In the central country are the lodges of two tribes—the Montagnais to the south and the Nascaupes further north. They have parcelled out certain districts of the interior into hunting grounds, each of which is regarded as a hereditary belonging, passing from father to son. They call no man master, and they live a life of hardship and freedom such as was more common in the world of a hundred years ago.

On their journeys their camps are set beside the waters of countless unrecorded lakes; for men, women and children follow the nomadic life. The Labrador is, as my readers will before this have recognised, a bitter mother; but all that she is unwilling to give the Indian wrings from her. In August he shoots the young Canada geese, spruce-grouse and ptarmigan. The month, in his picturesque language (on which, as on the whole subject of the Indians, Mr. William Cabot, of Boston, is incomparably the best authority) is called O-pó-o Pfishum, that is, the Moon of Flight.

By hunting and fishing the Indian obtains his food from the country over which he travels, and about August he pitches his shifting tepees deep in the interior, where the chief event of the year, the autumn killing the migrating caribou, takes place.

Both to the Montagnais of the more wooded south and the Nascaupes of the Barren Ground, the caribou forms the main support of life. From time immemorial the Indians have gathered to slay them at this season, while they cross the lakes on their mysterious journeying, the beginning and the end of which no man really knows. Even the path of the migration changes from year to year, and in some seasons the tribes fail to meet with the deer at all. At these times starvation visits the tents and sits, a grim shape, beside the fires. Such a year was 1893, when many of the people died, only half their number surviving to the spring.

It is no exaggeration to say that the Nascaupees depend for their very existence upon the caribou. They rely on the meat for their winter provision; with the sinews they sew; the clothes which protect them against the Arctic cold are fashioned from the pelts, the hair worn inside against the wearer's flesh; their lodges are covered with hides of stags, and the very sparse store of civilised luxury which finds its way to the tents on the lake promontories is largely gained by barter of smoked skins and mocassins made from the same material.

About the season when the caribou may be expected in their long-drawn battalions many thousands strong, all becomes activity in the Indian camps. Up and down the George River the scouts are watching, and when the leading deer make their appearance, he who sees them signals to his fellows, for the first deer must not be turned.

All is quiet until the advance-guard has entered the water and a fair proportion of caribou have crossed ; then the Indians flash out in their canoes and harry the herds, often slaying as many as a thousand. There is no sport in the killing—merely a massacre of helpless swimming creatures. But for days after the battle the hunters sit by their fires and enjoy the greatest of all the luxuries the wilderness provides—the marrow of the deer. Countless multitudes of caribou have been slain upon Indian House Lake; so many indeed, that the place has become historic.

This raiding of the herds, with trapping, partridge and ptarmigan shooting and freshwater fishing, makes up the Indian's hunting for a successful year. But there are few years when one month or another of the twelve does not see these nomadic people face to face with famine. This is more especially the case with the Nascaupees, who pass their lives in the most remote part of the interior, some of them probably never coming into touch with white men.

The Montagnais are a far more civilised race, partly on account of local conditions; for Southern Labrador, having a less rigorous climate, possesses more settlers with whom the Indians come in contact. Further, they long ago passed under the teaching of the Oblate Fathers, and now profess the Roman Catholic faith. The Fathers keep up annual visits with their converts, who seldom move far to the north ; and in fact (particularly of late years) they spend a part of each year encamped not very far from the coast settlements. During the winter of 1909-10 a lady of the Moravian Mission, while travelling by komatik southwards from Nain, visited the tent of a Montagnais some distance behind Hopedale. The old Indian received her with much hospitality and apologised for not offering her tea, as his supply was exhausted.

There is a pronounced physical difference between the Montagnais and the Nascaupees, the former being much shorter, with somewhat broad faces and blunt features, while the Nascaupees retain the tall slender forms and high features of the typical Red Indian. The tribes intermarry, for I know of at least one intermarriage, though this may be a rare instance.

The head-quarters of the Nascaupees may be said to be on Indian House Lake, the shores of which are, in truth, a battleground over which an unrecorded but terrible struggle is fought out. This battle has endured for generations ; the antagonists are Nature on the one side and the little tribe of Nascaupees on the other. The Indians can hope for no aid in their conflict. Shut in upon all sides by the mighty Barrens, help cannot reach them, nor have they sought it. Few people of white race have yet set eyes on Indian House Lake, and the half-dozen expeditions which have passed up and down the River have spent but half-an-hour at the Nacaupee camp before they boarded their canoes and voyaged on.

It is believed that the Nascaupees came from the far south, being driven north before the onslaughts of the Iroquois about the date when Canada was first occupied by the French. They fled through the wooded south of Labrador, still pursued by their remorseless enemies, who were not shaken off till they had pursued the flying tribe up to those naked table-lands that occupy so much of the central regions of the country. These are dented with innumerable lakes and marshes, and covered with gigantic boulders ; enormous tracts being entirely timberless and exposed to the cruel forces of the Arctic.

* * * *

In those days the country was virgin and deer plentiful. The latter are still so, and it is certain that during many years the Indians must have fared well, for Indian House Lake appears to be the favorite crossing-place in all Labrador for the migrating caribou. Thus they learned to live by the deer ; and so, while the herds held to the old migratory route, all went well on the George. After 1828, when McLean visited them, a veil dropped over their life by the Lake for more than seventy years. No one, save a single Roman Catholic priest, saw them in their home camps ; the tribe lived secure behind their impenetrable ramparts. It can hardly be doubted that they gorged and starved alternately. At any rate, they survived in numbers not too much lessened ; and so they continued to exist until the dreadful winter of 1893, when, as I have said, deer and game failed.

The Nascaupee families were for many years in the habit of coming out to the Atlantic at Davis Bay Inlet to barter at the post of the Hudson's Bay Company which is situated there. But in 1910, for some reason, they made a change ; and a trading party of fifteen, of whom some four or five were Montagnais, came out at Voysey's Bay as usual ; but there, abandoning their canoes, they hired the resident settlers to take them by trap-boat to Nain to transact their business at the Moravian Mission store. Some travellers have dwelt upon the Indian terror of salt water ; but if this fear existed at one time it would now appear to have passed away : the Indians who came to Nain showed no symptoms of any feeling of the kind, as in coming and going from Voysey's Bay they must have covered some sixty miles of sea-water.

GOVERNMENT OF THE PROVINCE OF CANADA
(1840-1867) AND BY THE GOVERNMENT OF THE DOMINION OF CANADA FOR THE RELIEF AND BENEFIT OF THE INDIANS AND ESQUIMAUX OF THE LABRADOR PENINSULA.

PREPARED BY G. M. MATHESON IN CHARGE OF RECORDS OF DEPARTMENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, CANADA.

NOTE A.—RELIEF.

Since the year 1851 the Province of Canada and the Dominion of Canada, through the office of the Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs and the Department of Indian Affairs have continued to furnish relief, annually, to the Montagnais Indians at Lake St John, on the Saguenay River and on the north shore of the Lower St Lawrence.

These Indians, for the most part, make their living by fur hunting in the interior of the Labrador Peninsula, leaving for their annual hunt as early as August and September and returning with their furs in the following spring. All the able bodied Indians go on these trips taking their families with them, only the sick and infirm being left behind. (Dr. McDuff makes mention of this on several occasions).

Since the year 1893 this relief has been extended to the aborigines at the trading posts in the northern and eastern portions of the peninsula where the Esquimaux and the Montagnais and Naskopi Indians forgather.

It was the custom of the Department for years to send annually to Father Arnaud 55 pairs of blankets for distribution to destitute Indians on the north shore of the lower St Lawrence. In 1897 this number was increased to 75 pairs.

NOTE B.—MISSION GRANT.

After the termination of the lease of the King's Posts (November 15th 1860) the Hudson Bay Coy. discontinued their grant of $500.00 a year to the Roman Catholic Missionaries of the Bersimis and the north shore. The church then appealed to the Government for aid and the sum of $500.00 was paid to them annually from the "Lower Canada Grant" under authority of his Excellency the Governor General in Council dated September 11th 1861 and of his Excellency the Administrator in Council dated November 22nd. 1861 (Copies herewith—Appendices A and B).

p. 2836

It would appear that the Naskapis as well as the Montagnais received the benefit of this mission work. (Vide excerpt from the letter of January 21st. 1871 from Rev. Edmond Langevin—Vicar General—file L-294 of 1871—copy herewith Appendix “C”).

The Department of Indian Affairs continued to pay this grant until 1911 when Father Arnaud left Bersimis. This money was sent to Rev. C.F. Cazeau Vicar General, Bishop Langevin and Father C. Arnaud. (See files 1294 of 1861, O. 93 & O. 30 of 1862, O. 64 & 113 of 1863, O. 80 of 1864, O. 1 of 1865, O. 43 of 1866, O. 77 of 1867, O. 104 of 1868, O. 162 of 1869, O. 204 of 1870, O. 251 of 1871, 385 of 1872, 1689, 4444, 4489, 7646, 9280 and 141989).

NOTE C.—EDUCATION OF INDIANS.

Since 1874 the Department of Indian Affairs has borne the cost of the education of the Indians at Pointe Blue, Lake St. John, with its increasing annual expenditure for salaries, buildings and repairs, fuel and general maintenance. Last year (1921) this amounted to $1192.00 and the attendance roll numbered 78. The sum of $200.00 was also paid for tuition of one of these Indians at the Convent of Notre Dame de Bellevue, St. Foy, Quebec in 1922. (Files 21-15, 21-1-3 and 103-21.)

A school for Indians has been maintained at Bersimis since 1901. The number of the pupils on the roll for 1921 was 58 and the cost for that year amounted to $1722.13. (File 3-1-3 and 3-1-5.)

At Escoumains tuition fees have been paid for Indians attending a white school since 1911. (File 3-2-3.)

At Lake Mistassini there has been an Indian school since 1911 and in 1921 there were 54 pupils in attendance. (Files 255284-1 and 3.)

NOTE D.—LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

The Department of Indian Affairs has for many years employed constables on the north shore of the Lower St Lawrence for the purpose of suppressing the liquor traffic carried on with the Indians by unscrupulous Whites in order to obtain their furs. Each Indian Agent has the powers of two Justices of the Peace and the prosecutions are conducted under the provisions of the Indian Act.

NOTE E.—STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURE.

The following Statement of Expenditure is divided into the calendar years in which the payments were made; the supplies in some cases were delivered the previous year. In the first column is the given nature of the expenditure and the reference file numbers.

p. 2837

The second column gives the name of the payee. In the earlier years the money was sent to the Roman Catholic Bishop, the Vicar General, the Missionary Priest or some other responsible person, for disbursement but later on orders were given to merchants through agents and vouchers sent to the department for payment. These merchants names appear in this column.

The third column gives the locality of the Indians who were benefited.

The fourth column shows the number of Indians effected, when given. In the case of vaccination, hospital expenses, insane Indians and burials &c. the number denotes individuals but in most cases of relief the numbers here are of families.

The fifth and last column shows the amount of expenditure.

The term "Lower St. Lawrence" as used in this statement refers to the north shore of the St Lawrence River below Bersimis.

As the annual grant to the missionaries and the cost of education of Indians have been dealt with generally in notes "B" and "C" the detail expenditure has been omitted from the statement.

NOTE.—In many cases it is impossible to estimate the number of families or of individual Indians receiving relief supplies as the information given on the vouchers is indefinite. In accounts from Fort Chimo such expressions are made use of as "supplies given to natives from Leaf River who arrived hungry," "A party of Eskimos," "A party of Indians," "Destitute Widows," "Widows receiving weekly rations," &c. Many vouchers are for relief both of families (often of unstated number) and of individuals, including widows, sometimes with one or more children. Sometimes it would be misleading to give any number as the greater part of the voucher is indefinite in this particular. For the most part, however, the numbers given denote families, except in the case of vaccination, burial, insane Indians and hospital treatment.

This concludes what I have been able to find of the expenditure made, up to December 31st, 1922, by the Department of Indian Affairs, for the benefit of the Indians at Lake St John, the Unguentary river, the Lower St Lawrence and in the Labrador Peninsula with the exception of such trading posts as Wakeham Bay, Wolstenholme, Port Harrison, Great Whale River, Fort George and East Main in the west along the Hudson Bay.

I hereby certify that the foregoing statistics and data have been extracted and compiled by me from original records of the Department of Indian Affairs of the Government of the Dominion of Canada, which are in my charge or in the Public Archives of Canada, and that the same are in true and faithful accord with the statistics and data exhibited by the said original records.

REPORT OF COUNCIL RESPECTING PETITION ON BEHALF OF INDIANS ON LOWER ST. LAWRENCE.

File 1473 of 1861.

File 1294 of 1861.

COPY OF A REPORT OF A COMMITTEE OF THE HONOURABLE THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL, APPROVED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL IN COUNCIL ON THE 11TH
SEPTEMBER, 1861.

The Committee have had before them a Report dated 9th October, 1860, from the Commissioner of Crown Lands on the subject of certain petitions from the Administrator of the Diocese of Quebec and Indian Missionaries to the Lower St. Lawrence tribes.

His Lordship the Bishop of Tloa represents that the Hon. Hudson's Bay Company has formerly contributed towards the support of the Indian Missions upon the St. Lawrence Coast and interior some Five Hundred dollars per annum ; and that on the termination of the Lease of the King's Posts (15th Nov. last) and a partial withdrawal from the trading stations within that Territory, the customary allowance has been discontinued. His Lordship prays that the Government may, in consideration of deriving rents through this resumption and the disposal otherwise of fisheries within such territory, assume the obligations from which the Company conceive themselves to be released.

The Petition of the Rev. Charles Arnaud asks for further relief on behalf of the Montagnais and Naskapis Tribes—also that the River Bersimis be granted for the exclusive use of the Bersimis Indians.

With respect to the foregoing applications the Commissioner refers to the Act 14 & 15 Vic. Cap. 106, and appropriations made thereunder and suggests that should any balance remain for such purpose under control of the Indian Department, it might be applicable to the wants therein set forth.

That the principle of setting apart any River Salmon Fishery for the especial profit of Indians has already been denied by the terms of an Order in Council passed (14th May, 1858) upon an application on behalf of the Montagnais and Naskapis bands. That it was however ordered that some portion of the rent derivable from the leasing of Salmon fisheries should inure to the advantage and support of Indians frequenting the Lower St. Lawrence and the interior.

The commissioner recommends to Your excellency that any allowances so made for the aid of Indians in want of succor be made payable through the Fisheries Branch of his Department and that it be intimated to all concerned that the continued payment of same must depend somewhat on the strict observance by the several tribes of the Laws and Regulations for the preservation and the protection of Salmon and other fisheries.

He further recommends that an exact statement of the numbers and actual conditions of the unsettled tribes on the St. Lawrence coast and through the interior be officially procured, to serve as data for the future distribution and application of whatever material aid may please your Excellency to approve.

The Committee concur in the Report of the Commissioner of Crown Lands and submit the same for Your Excellency's approval.

ORDER IN COUNCIL ON PETITION FOR RELIEF FOR INDIANS ON LOWER ST. LAWRENCE.

[Copy.]

COPY OF A REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE HONOURABLE THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL, APPROVED BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE ADMINISTRATOR IN COUNCIL ON THE 22ND NOVEMBER, 1861.

On the application of The Very Reverend C.F. Cazeau for the usual grant in aid of the Indians of the Lower St Lawrence and the report of the Indian Department thereon.

The assistant Commissioner of Crown Lands suggests that as the Indian Department is now under the control of the Provincial Government, an Order in Council be passed sanctioning the appropriation of the usual sums that is $600 for the Indians and $500 for the Missionaries (the warrant for the latter amount having already issued) out of the Annual grant of £1,000 provided by the Provincial Statute 14 & 15 Vict : Cap.
106, Sec. 2, for the Indians of Lower Canada, which suggestion is concurred in by the Hon. the Attorney General for L.C. acting in the absence of the Hon. The Commissioner of Crown Lands.

The Committee recommend that the appropriations suggested be made and that a Warrant for $600 issue in favour of the accountant of the Indian Department.

(Montagnais Indians of Moisie and Seven Islands).

* * * *

These Indians spend the winter in the woods hunting and gathering furs for trade.

From the high-lands a certain number of Naskapis Indians come also to receive religious and civil instruction from the Missionaries who though residing in Bersimis, attend these Missions at fixed dates. They also show themselves zealous in learning to read and to write, under the care of the priests who volunteer their services and receive no remuneration but the free offerings of these poor people.

SIR,

I have the honour to enclose herewith a copy of an extract from the preliminary Report of Mr. A. P. Low, of the Geological Survey, dated Fort Chimo, 9th of September, 1893. From it you will gather the state of destitution in which the aborigines of this district are at present. It is the earnest desire of the Department to take some action at once to relieve this pressing necessity, and I write now to enquire whether your post at this point could be reached before the setting in of winter or in time to afford these Indians some relief. Although, this Department has no funds appropriated for Indians of this locality, still it does not desire that any suffering which might be prevented should occur. If it is possible to reach this post by your ordinary practice I would like you to instruct your Factor to issue whatever ammunition is necessary to supply the Indians on their hunt ; and in cases where ammunition would not be any practical benefit to issue such relief in the shape of provisions as would prevent actual starvation.

Your obedient servant,

DEAR MR. CHIPMAN :—

This Department was advised that there was great destitution among the Indians in the country about Ungava Bay in the winter of 1892-93 and a report has recently appeared in the Brandon Mail of destitution among the Indians in that country. I am under the impression that the report refers to what occurred in the winter of 1892-93 and that the scarcity of food which was experienced in that year is not likely to be experienced again for some considerable time ; but as it is always too late to forward assistance when the Department hears of destitution, the Superintendent General has decided to authorize your company to give assistance to the Indians of that country when in extreme cases of need and to have such expenditure as your Company may be put to in that way recouped on the presentation of an account supported by vouchers in detail. Would you kindly therefore arrange to have such supplies given to any of these Indians who may be in actual destitution during next winter. The amount should, it is thought, not exceed in any event $800.

Yours very truly,

SIR:—

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 2nd instant in regard to the assistance rendered by your Officers at Ungava to the sick and destitute Indians in that vicinity ; and in reply I enclose herewith cheque (No. 2922) for $120.17, being the amount of the account forwarded by you for ammunition, etc., distributed.

With regard to your desire to be informed as to whether aid should be continued, I may say that if it should prove necessary, which the Department hopes may not be the case, provisions, such as flour and meat, may be supplied to a limited extent, to deserving Indians who may be unable to provide for themselves, and also ammunition, if necessary, in small quantities.

Ottawa, 18th September,

SIR,

With reference to your letter of the 2nd January last and previous correspondence on the subject of the distribution of relief supplies to destitute Indians of Ungava Bay, and other remote points, I would draw your attention to an article entitled "A Perishing Race" which appeared in the Toronto "Globe" of the 17th instant, and in which a most distressing description is given of the Indians along the Labrador coast. It is stated that aid will be absolutely necessary to preserve the lives of these people during the coming winter, as owing to the prohibition of beaver trapping, the practical depletion of the Coast of other fur-bearing animals and game, and the trade which has recently sprung up in sea-fowls' eggs, upon which the Indians formerly depended largely as a means of subsistence, they are without any resources whatever. The traffic in intoxicants with them by unprincipled traders who visit the Coast is also spoken of as another and most serious cause of destitution.

The Department would be glad to have a report from you as to whether the condition of affairs indicated is corroborated by your officers in the District referred to, and if so, as to what you think had best be done to ameliorate the condition of these unfortunate people. I might in this connection remind you, that the Department has already signified its desire (by letter of the 16th December last) to help them as far as possible by authorizing, to such extent as its resources would allow, the giving of relief by your officers at their discretion.

May I look forward to an early reply.

Dear Sir :

I am in receipt of the following extract from a letter addressed by the Commissioner to Mr. Peter McKenzie on the subject of Relief to destitute Indians :

“Relief may be given in cases of absolute necessity, but should not, if possible, transpire that it is Government aid which is being given. Accounts for any such relief should be made out in triplicate, certified to by the officer in charge, and give details of the supplies, name of the party to whom given, and the reasons for the distribution”, which are to be sent to this office for transmission to Winnipeg for collection.

It might happen that a band of Indians destitute and starving would come out at your post during the winter, in which case, after convincing yourself that they were in a genuine state of destitution, and had actually nothing with which to purchase provisions then you would issue to each family a small amount of provisions to enable them to return to the interior.

The Government referred to in the above is the Canadian, and not the Newfoundland Government.

The Commissioner requests that these instructions be carefully and judiciously carried out.

Yours faithfully,

It might so happen that a band of starving Indians would come out at Paradise, in which case you would naturally go to that out-Post, and after convincing yourself that they were in a genuine state of starvation, and had nothing whatever with which to purchase provisions, then you would issue to such families a small amount of provisions to enable them to return to the interior.

The Commissioner requests that these instructions be carefully and judiciously carried out.

OF THE INDIANS.

OEUVRES DE CHAMPLAIN PAR L'ABBE C. H. LAVERDIÈRE (1870), Tome iv, p. 483. Dedication of Voyage of 1615.

SIRE,

Voicy un troisieme liure contenant le discours de ce qui s'est passé de plus remarquable aux voyages par moy faits en la nouvelle France, à la lecture duquel i'estime que V.M. prendra un plus grand plaisir qu'aux precedents, d'autant qu'iceux ne designent rien que les ports, haures, scituations, declinaisons, & autres matieres plus propres aux Nautonniers, & Mariniers, que non pas aux autres. En celuy-cy vous y pourrez remarquer plus particulièrement les moeurs & façons de vivre de ces peuples, tant en particulier que general, leurs guerres, munitions, façons d'assaillir, & se deffendre, leurs expeditions, retraicte en plusieurs particularitez, seruant à contenter un esprit curieux ; Et comme ils ne sont point tant sauuages, qu'avec le temps, & la frequentation d'un peuple civilisé, ils ne puissent estre rendus polis : Vous y verrés pareillement quelle & combien grande est l'esperance que nous auons de tant de longs & penibles trauaux que depuis quinze ans nous soustenons, pour planter en ce país l'estendart de la Croix, & leur enseigner la cognoissance de Dieu, & gloire de son Saint Nom, estant nostre desir d'augmenter la Charité enuers ses miserables Creatures, qui nous conuient supporter patiemment plus qu'aucune autre chose , & encore que plusieurs n'ayent pas pareil dessein, ains que l'on puisse dire que le desir du gain est ce qui les y pousse : Neantmoins on peut probablement croire que ce sont des moyens dont Dieu se sert pour plus faciliter le saint desir des autres : Que si les fruicts que les arbres portent sont de Dieu, à celuy qui est Seigneur du Sol, où ils sont plantez, & qui les a arrousez, & entretenus, avec un soing particulier, V.M. se peut dire legitime Seigneur de nos trauaux, & du bein qui en reüssira, non seulement pour ce que la terre vous en appartient, mais aussi pour nous auoir protegé contre tant de sortes de personnes qui n'auoyent autre desseing qu'en nous troublant empescher qu'une si sainte deliberation ne peust reüssir & nous ostant la permission de pouuoir librement negotier, en partie de ses païs, & mettre le tout en confusion, qui seroit en un mot tracer le chemin pour tout perdre, au preiudice de vostre estat, vos suiects ayant employé à cét effect tous les artifices dont il se sont peu aduiser, & tous les moyens qu'ils ont creu nous y pouvoir nuire, qui tous ont esté leués par V.M. assistée de son prudent Conseil, nous autorisant de son nom, & soustenants par ses arrests qu'elle a rendus à nostre faveur. C'est un occasion pour accroistre en nous le desir qu'auons dés long-temps d'enuoyer des peuplades & colonnies par delà, pour leur enseigner avec la cognoissance de Dieu, la gloire & les triumphes de V.M. de faire en sorte qu'avec la langue François ils consoient aussi un coeur, & courage françoise, lequel ne respirera rien tant après la crainte de dieu, que le desir qu'ils auront de vous seruir : Que si nostre desseing reüssit, la gloire en sera premierement à Dieu, puis à V.M. qui outre mille benedictions qu'elle en reçeura du Ciel, en recompense de tant d'ames ausquelles elle en donnera par ce moyen l'entrée, son nom en sera immortalisé pour auoir poeté la gloire, & le sceptre des François, autant en Occident que vos deuanciers l'ont estendu en Orrient, & par toute le terre habitable : ce sera augmenter la qualitié des Tres-Chrestien qui vous appartient par dessus tous les Rois de la terre, & montrer qu'elle vous est autant deuë par merite, comme elle vous est propre de droit, ayant esté transmise par vos predecesseurs depuis qu'ils se l'acquirent par leurs vertus, d'auoir voulu embrasser avec tant d'autres importans affaires le soing de celle-cy grandement negligée par cy-deuant, estant une grace speciale de Dieu d'auoir voulu reseruer sous vostre regne l'ouuerture de la prediction de son Euangille, & la cognoissance de son Saint Nom à tant de nations qui n'en auoient iamais oüy parler, qu'on iour Dieu leur fera la grace, comme nous, de le prier incessamment qu'il accroisse son empire, & donne mille benedictions à vostre Maiesté.

.... Mais auparavant il est à propos de dire, qu'ayant recogneu aux voyages precedents, qu'il y a auoit en quelques endroits des peuples arreztez, & amateurs du labourage de la terre, n'ayans ny foy ny loy, viuans sans Dieu, & sans religion, comme bestes brutes. Lors ie iugay à part moy que ce seroit faire vne grande faute si ie ne m'employois à leur preparer quelque moyen pour les faire venir à la cognoissance de Dieu. Et pour y paruenir ie me suis efforcé de rechercher quelques bons Religieux, qui eussent le zele, & affection, à la gloire de Dieu : Pour les persuader d'enuoyer, où se transporter avec moy en ces pays, & essayer d'y planter la foy, ou du moins y faire ce qui y seroit possible selon leur vacation, & en ce faisant remarquer & cognoistre s'il s'y pourroit faire quelque bon fruct, d'autant que pour y paruenir il falloit faire vne despence qui eust exedé mon pouuoir, & pour quelque raison i'ay negligé ceste affaire pour vn temps, me representant les difficultez qu'il y auroit au recouurement des choses necessaires, & requises en telle affaire, comme il est ordinaire en semblables voyages. D'ailleurs qu'aucunes personnes ne se presentoient pour y contribuër. Neantmoins estant sur ceste recherche, & la communiquant à plusieurs, il se seroit presenté vn homme d'honneur, duquel i'auois la frequentation ordinaire, appelé le Sieur Hoüel Secretaire du Roy, & Contrerolleur General des Sallines de Broüage, homme adonné à la pieté, & doué d'un grand zele, & affection, à l'honneur de Dieu, & à l'augmentation de sa Religion, lequel me donna vn aduis qui me fut fort agreable. A sçauoir qu'il cognoissant de bons Peres Religieux, de l'ordre des Recollez, desquels il s'asseuroit, & auoit tant de familiarité, & de creance enuers eux, qu'il les feroit condescendre facilement, & entreprendre le voyage, & que pour les feroit condescendre facilement, & entreprendre le voyage, & que pour les commoditez necessaires pour trois ou quatre Religieux qu'on y pourroit enuoyer, on ne manqueroit point de gens de bien qui leur donneroient ce qui leur seroit de besoing, offrant de sa part les assister de son pouuoir, & de fait il en rescriuit au Pere du Verger, lequel gousta & prit fort bien ceste affaire & suiuant l'aduis du Sieur Hoüel, il en communiqua & parla à aucuns de ses freres, qui tous bruslants de charité s'offrirent librement à l'entreprise de ce Saint voyage.

Or estoit-il pour lors en Xaintonge, dequel lieu il en enuoya deux à Paris, avec vne commission, non toutesfois avec vn pouuoir absolu, remettement

p. 2969

le surplus à Monsieur le Nonce de nostre Sainct Pere le pape, qui pour lors estoit en France, en l'année 1614. & estans iceux Religieux en leur maison à Paris, il les fut visiter, estant fort aise & content de leur resolution, & lors tous ensemble fusmes trouuer ledict Sieur nonce, avec laditte commission pour la luy communiquer, & le supplier d'y interposer son auctorité. Mais au contraire il nous dist qu'il n'auoit point pouuoir pour telles affaires, & que c'estoit à leur General à qui ils se deuoient adresser. Neantmoins laquelle rent entreprendre le voyage, sur le pouuoir du Pere du Verger, craignant qu'il ne fust assez authentique, & saditte commission valable, à caufe dequoy l'affaire fut remise à l'autre année suiuite. En attendant laquelle ils prirent aduis & resolution, fuiuant laquelle on disposa toutes choses pour ceste entreprise, qui se deuoit effectuer au printemps lors prochain : en attendant lequel, les deux Religieux seroient retournez en leur Couuent en Broüage.

Et moy de mon costé, ie ne laissay de mettre ordre à mes affaires, pour la preparation de ce voyage.

Et quelque mois après le departement des deux Religieux que le Reuerend Pere Chapoüin Provincial des Peres Recollez, (homme fort pieux) fut de retour à Paris. Ledit Sieur Hoüel le fut voir, & luy fit le discours de ce qui s'estoit passé, touchant le pouuoir du Pere du Verger, & la maison qu'il auoit donnée aux Peres Recollez. Sur lequel discours ledit Pere Provincial commença a loüer ce dessein, & le prendre en affection, promettant d'y faire ce qui seroit de son pouuoir, n'ayant auparauant bien pris le subiect de ceste mission, & est à croire que Dieu l'inspira de plus en plus à poursuiure ceste affaire, & en parla dés lors à Monseigneur le Prince de Condé, & à tous Messieurs les Cardinaux, & Euesques, estans lors à Paris assemblez pour la tenuë des estats, qui tous ensemble loüerent & approuuerent ce dessein, & pour montrer qu'ils y estoient portez, assurerent ledit sieur Prouincial qu'ils trouueroient entr'eux, & ceux de la Court, vn moyen de leur faire un petit fonds, & leur amasser quelque argent pour assisster quatre Religieux, qu'on choisiroit, & furent dés lors choisis pour l'execution d'une si sainte oeuvre. Et affin d'aduancer le facilité de ceste affaire, ie fus trouuer aux estats Nosseigneurs les Cardinaux & Euesques, & leur remonstray, & representay le bien & utilité qui en pouuoit vn iour reuenir, pour les supplier & esmouuoir à donner, & faire donner à autres, qui pourroient y estre emulez par leur exemple, quelques aumosnes & gratifications, remettant le tout à leur volonté & discretion.

Les aumosnes qu'on amassa pour fournir aux frais de ce voyage, se monterent à prés de quinze cent liures, qui furent mis entre mes mains, & furent dés lors employez, de l'aduis & en la presence des Peres, en la despence & achat des choses necessaires, tant pour la nourriture des Peres qui feroient le voyage en ladite nouvelle France, qu'habits, linges, & ornemens qui leur estoit de besoing, pour faire, & dire, le service Diuin, lesquels Religieux furent enoyez deuant à Honfleur, où se deuoit faire leur embarquement.

Or les Peres Religieux qui furent nommez & designez pour ceste sainte enterprise, estoient le Pere Denis, pour Commissaire, Jean Delbeau, Joseph le Caron, & Pacifique du Plessis, chacun desquels estoit porté d'une sainte affection, & brusloient de faire le voyage, moyennant la grace de Dieu, affin de voir s'ils pourroient faire quelque bon fruit, & planter en ces lieux l'estendart de Jesus-Christ, avec une deliberation de viure & mourir pour son saint Nom, s'il estoit necessaire, & que l'occasion s'en presentast. Toutes choses preparées, ils s'accommoderent des ornemens d'Englise, & nous des choses necessaires pour nostre voyage.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE FIRST MISSIONARIES IN NEW FRANCE.

FIRST ESTABLISHMENT OF THE FAITH IN NEW FRANCE BY FATHER CHRISTIAN LE CLERQ, RECOLLECT MISSIONARY. Translated by John Gilmary Shea, volume I.

CHAPTER III.

Beginnings are always difficult, and the greater the work the greater the difficulty. They also meet stronger opposition, especially in a religious establishment, even when it is proposed to push them on in a convenient country, where it should be easy to find all that is necessary for this design.

* * * *

Father John Dalbeau, having arrived at Quebec, had there, in concert with Monsieur de Champlain, traced the plan of our first establishment, a little chapel and a house to shelter the religious, on the very spot where the lower town is now. The whole was soon ready, for there was nothing but what was most simple and comfortable to evangelical poverty. Father Denis, the superior, had merely passed by Quebec, and had set out at the same time for Three Rivers with Father Joseph le Caron, leaving to Father John d'Olbeau the charge of the work, which being finished, and the chapel in a fit state, he had, on the 25th of June, 1615, the privilege of celebrating there the first Mass ever said in Canada.

* * * *

While at Quebec they had many conferences with monsieur de Champlain and the most intelligent Frenchmen, who unanimously, after frequently invoking the aid of Heaven, made a kind of capitulary assembly, a little conclave, where, after the example of the disciples of the Son of God upon the descent of the Holy Ghost, these new apostles had to divide among them

p. 2971

this vast country and this New World, which they were going to subdue to the empire of Jesus Christ.

* * * *

The result of this assembly, and the division made, were approved by the governor. The reverend father-commissary remained at Quebec, as the centre of the country, to administer the sacraments to the French in the colony and to form a mission for the Indians ; to extend his solicitude as far as Three Rivers, and establish others further down the river, over which he might watch. Father John d'Olbeau was selected for the Montagnais ; Tadoussac being named as his post, whence he should extend to the end and mouth of the river St. Lawrence. Father Joseph le Caron had as his share the Hurons and other Western tribes ascending the river.

Father John d'Olbeau accordingly left Quebec the 2d of December in the same year, to proceed to the spot appointed for his Montagnais district, in order to learn their language and to be able to labour seriously for their conversion. He devoted himself to it during the winter with unwearied zeal, and devoured with pleasure all difficulties found in familiarizing one's self in the knowledge and practice of the language of these barbarians, of which in a little while he learnt the elements. He built a small hut there, in which he arranged a chapel in the form of a cabin, to assemble the French and Indians for instructions and prayer ; all was neat, though poor. During the winter he endeavoured to test the soil of the country, the natural temper and disposition of the Montagnais Indians; and as this nation is almost always errant and vagabond, he underwent great hardships in seeking them and visiting them in all the principal places where they had assembled. He even went as far as the Bersiamites, Papanachois Eskimaux, and other savages, up to and beyond the Seven Islands, everywhere planting the sign of salvation, so that many years after there were found, in many spots, vestiges and marks of this course and of the zeal of the first missionary.

The Indians a second time, by the usual presents, invited Monsieur de Champlain to go to war with them against the Iroquois, but he did not deem proper to do so. His presence was necessary at Quebec, whither he descended to gain the first jubilee ever published in Canada.

Father John d'Olbeau had obtained it of His Holiness during his stay in France. It was opened with the usual ceremonies in the chapel of Quebec, July 29, 1618.

A holy dispute arose between Fathers John and Joseph. The latter, burning with the desire of devoting his toil to the conversion of the Indians, which he always hoped to advance, although they could not remark only very remote dispositions, besought Father John d'Olbeau to relieve him of his office superior, which subjected him to a more sedentary residence at Quebec. Father John consented, the more as he was given to understand that his eyesight would not stand the great smoke of the cabins. Father Joseph accordingly set out from Quebec for Tadoussac, with a young Frenchman and four Indians, on the 9th of November in the same year, not finding any opportunity of returning to his mission of Carragouha in the Huron country.

This Father had a hard enough wintering and underwent great hardships. God did indeed raise him up one of the chiefs of these nations, who adopted him as a brother, so that by this means he gained ground with these barbarians and acquired credit to dispose them better and gain them more effectively to Christ. Such is the holy artifice used by the missionaries who go to winter with savage nations. They seek the most esteemed chief and the best inclined to the French. This Indian begets him (as the people say) amid a feast made expressly. This chief adopts him as a son or brother, according to the age and rank of the person, so that all the nation considers him as actually a native of their country and a relative of their chief, entering by this ceremony into an alliance with the whole family in the same degree—brother, sister, uncle, aunt, nephews, cousins, and so on.

* * * *

I have thought that the reader would be glad to see here a natural portrait of the general disposition of the Indians, such as I have found it in the fragments of the memoirs of the Superior of the mission sent to the Reverend Father-Provincial in France this present year, 1624:

FRAGMENTS OF THE MEMOIRS OF FATHER JOSEPH LE CARON,

Addressed to France on the Disposition, Character, Superstitions, Good and Bad Qualities of the Indians.

“FATHER :

“As you are curious about the natural affairs of this country, and still more about what concerns the conversion of souls, and you ask me some account of both, I have deemed it proper not to mingle sacred and profane, but am obliged to separate the two subjects in two different answers.

“I shall not give you much satisfaction by a great number of souls converted. Few real conversions are made among Indians; the time of grace is not yet come, although nothing is spared to dispose them for the Faith. It must be hoped that as the colony is peopled we shall civilize the Indians. This is necessary first; their mind will open and their good sense, of which they have the base. They will be regulated by French laws and modes of living, in order to render them capable of understanding such profound mysteries; for all that concerns humane and civil life is a mystery for our Indians in their present state, and it will require more expense and toil to render them men than it has required to make whole nations Christian. It does not follow that the work must be abandoned; on the contrary, we must apply ourselves more stedily and await the fruit in patience.

* * * *

“We have thus far traversed more than six hundred leagues inland and even wintered several years with the principal nations. They do not lack good sense in what concerns the public or private interest of the nation ; they reach their end, and even adopt very fit means and measures; and it is the subject of my surprise that, being so enlightened for their petty affairs, they have nothing but what is extravagant and ridiculous when you treat of religious dogmas or rules of morality, laws, and maxims. We have visited eight or ten different nations down the river towards Tadoussac, and we have found that almost all the Indians of New France acknowledge no divinity, and are even incapable of ordinary common and natural reasonings on this point, so material and benighted is their intellect.

* * * *

Our missionaries who were then at Quebec, after having invoked for some days the light of the Holy Ghost to concert what was most expedient for the establishment and the propagation of the faith in these countries which have been committed to their care, casting their eyes on the great number of different nations, and seeing that the colony began to form, decided that the harvest was too great for so small a number of workmen, and that the members of the Company thought they were making a great effort in supporting annually six Recollects ; that for the rest they must rely on Providence ; that their salaries were scanty for the establishment of the missions; that it would be enough for us, supported by little succors and alms from France, to maintain five missions, which promised some success; and that finally, if some religious community could be found willing at its own expense to sacrifice to this New World a number of missionaries, some advantage might be expected.

With this view our Fathers did not hesitate; having no share but uprightness, simplicity, the glory of the Almighty, a sincere desire of furthering it, without envy, by the conversion of these tribes, they all agreed to depute some one of their number to France to propose it to the reverend Jesuit Fathers, whom they judged best fitted to establish and amplify the Faith in concert with us in Canada.

ESTABLISHMENT OF MISSION AT TADOUSSAC.

THE JESUIT RELATIONS AND ALLIED DOCUMENTS CLEVELAND, THE BURROWS BROTHERS COMPANY, 1900. Vol. XXI.

RELATION DE CE QUI S'EST PASSÉ EN LA NOUVELLE
FRANCE, ÉS ANNÉE 1640 ET 1641.

D'UNE MISSION FAICTE À TADOUSSAC.

Encor que les Sauvages de Tadoussac soient quasi premiers que nos vaisseaux recontrent, si est-ce qu'on ne leur a porté les bonnes nouvelles de l'Euangile qu'apres plusieurs autres, & encor faut-il confesser que ce n'est pas nous qui les auons attirés; mais nos Neophytes, ou nouveaux Chrestiens de la Residence de Saint Joseph. Comme ils se sont visités de part & d'autre, & qu'ils ont veu que les principaux Sauvages de cette Residence, faisoient profession publique de la foy, ils s'en sont mocqués au commencement; mais efin, le bon exemple & le bon discours de leur Compatriotes leur ont fait aimer ce qu'ils haïssoient, & rechercher ce qu'ils abhorroient. L'an passé nos Neophytes, comme i'ay remarqué, les allerent inuiter par vn beau present, de venir demeurer avec eux à Saint Joseph, pour entendre parler des biens de l'autre vie; Ils respondirent par vn autre present, qu'ils n'estoient point allienés de la foy; mais qu'ils desiroient qu'on les vint instruire en leur païs; En effet, ils deleguerent Charles Meiachka8at, qui n'estoit pas encor baptisté, pour venir querir vn Pere de nostre Compagnie, & l'emmenèrent à Tadoussac, où quelques Sauvages des peuples du Sagné, se deuoient aussi trouver; comme le Pere qu'ils demandoient estoit occupé ailleurs, on leur promit qu'on ne manqueroit pas de la secourir au Printemps.

Le douziesme de May, le Capitaine de Tadoussac vint sommer nostre Reverend Pere Superieur de sa promesse, le Pere luy accorda tres-volontiers celui de nostre Compagnie qu'il demandoit: si tost que nos Chrestiens de Saint Joseph eurent connoissance de ce voyage, ils vindrent trouver le Pere le suppliant de parler à Tadoussac, c'est à dire, de faire des presens pour attirer à Saint Joseph le reliqua de ces pauvres peuples. Prie Monsier nostre Capitaine, luy disoient-ils, qu'il parler aussi, peut-etre qu'ils respecteront sa parole, s'ils viennent demeurer avec nous, nous parlerons de nostre costé, c'est à dire, nous leur ferons des presens pour applanir la terre, su laquelle ils placeront leurs cabanes, ou leurs maisons.

que ce dessein tendoit à la gloire de nostre Seigneur, fit son present avec lequel nous ioignismes le nostre, pour les offrir selon l'instruction que nos Neophytes nous avoient donnée; car ils nous informerent par le menu, comme il falloit parler. Cela fait, le Pere monte dans vne barque, qui desendoit à Tadoussac, les vents contraires le retarderent assés long temps en chemin, mais écoutons-le parler de son voyage.

Le Mercredy veille du tres-Saint Sacrement, vn canot de Sauvages nous vint aborder, comme ie vy que les vents, qui sembloient vouloir faire quelque tréue avec nous, recommençoient leur guerre, ie m'embarquay avec eux, promettant à nos François, que ie leur viendrois dire la saintes Messe le iour suivant, si le temps le permettoit; les Sauvages m'emmenèrent en vn lieu où il n'y avoit ny terre ny bois; c'estoit sur des roches, où ils auroient passé la nuict sans autre couuerture que le ciel, si ie ne me fusse trouué avec eux; ie les excite incontinent à chercher quelque meschant lieu pour nous cabaner; en ayant fait recontre, ils jettent leurs écorces sur cinq ou six perches: & bien leur en prit, & à moy aussi, dit le Pere; car nous fusmes battus tout la nuict du vent & de le pluïe.

Le lendemain ne pouuant aborder la barque, ie passay la grande feste de nostre Seigneur dans cette maison tres-pauvre des biens de la terre, mais richement pourueü des biens du ciel: La meilleure partie des Sauvages estoient Chrestiens; ie leur parlay de l'honneur qu'on rendoit ce iour là au Fils de Dieu avec pompe & magnificence, dans toute L'Europe: Là-dessus ie dresse vn petit Autel pour dire la sainte Messe; ils m'aidoient avec tant d'affection que i'en estoit tout attendry: voyans que le lieu où ie deuois marcher, estoit tout humide and fangeux, ils jettent par terre vne robe pour me seruir de marchepied. J'estendy vne petite nappe de communion au travers de la cabane, pour separer les fideles d'avec les infideles: Là dessus ie commence la sainte Messe, non sans estonnement, que le Dieu des dieux s'abaissast vne autre fois, dans vn lieu plus chetif que l'estable de Bethleem; ce bonnes gens se vouloient confessor & communier, mais ie les remis au Dimanche suiuant; les Sauvages qui n'estoient pas baptistés, garderent vn profound silence pendant ce diuin Sacrifice; aussi ont-ils bonne enuie d'estre Chrestiens.

La tempeste nous retint deux iours & deux nuicts prisoners sous ces écorces, plus ouuertes qu'une porte cochere; Comme nous songions à nostre depart, le sieur Marsolet qui commandoit la barque, m'escriuit ce peu de mots par vn ieune Sauvage, qui m'apporta la lettre; le Sauvage surnommé Boyer, est arriué en nostre barque, il dit, qu'il vous est venu querir tout exprés, pour vous mener à Tadoussac; il vous attend icy, faites luy, s'il vous plaist, vn petit mot de response; i'ay donné au present porteur vn peu de pain & de pruneaux, sçachant bien que vous en auiés besoin.

Aiant receu ce petit mot, ie vais trouuer la barque, le

Sauuage qui estoit venu au deuant de moy, me presse d'entrer à Tadoussac, disant, que tous ceux qui estoient là, souhaitoient ardemment d'estre instruits: Je m'y transporte dans les canots qui me vindrent querir; estant arriué, ils me témoignèrent toute sorte de bonne volonté, ils m'accueillirent tous avec beaucoup de bienueillance; ie visite les malades, ie trouue vne femme en danger, ie

p. 2976

l'industry, ie la baptiste, & Dieu l'enleue au ciel: Cuius vult, miseretur. Dieu choisit ceux qui luy plaist; cette pauvre femme attendoit ce passaport pour entre en Paridis.

Si tost que ie fus arriué, poursuit le Pere, les Sauuages me bastirent vne maison à leur mode, elle fut bien-tost dressée, les ieunes hommes vont chercher des écorces, les filles & les femmes, des branches de sapin pour la tapisser d'un beau verd, les hommes plus âgés, en font la charpente, qui consiste en quelques perches qu'ils arrondirent en berceau; in iette là-dessus des écorces de fresne ou de prusse; & voila vne Eglise & vne maison bien-tost bastie; Au commencement ie songeois, où on couperoit les écorces pour faire des fenestres: mais la maison estant faite, ie reconnu qu'il ne falloit point prendre cette peine; car il y auoit assés de iour & de lumiere sans fenestres, ie dresse là dedans vn Autel, ie fay ma petite retraite tout auprès, & ie me trouue plus content, & aussi bien logé, que dans un Louure; la porte seule me mettoit en peine, car ie desirois la pouuoir fermer quand je sortirois, les Sauuges qui ne se seruent que d'une ecorce, ou d'une peau pour fermer leurs cabanes, ne me sembloient pas assés bons charpētiers pour fermer, mon palais; Mais Charles Meiachkašat, me monstra que si; il s'en va chercher deux bouts de planche, les cloüe par ensemble, faite vne petite porte: j'auois avec moy vn cadenat pendu à vn petit sac, il trouue l'inuention de s'en seruir pour fermer ma maison à clef: me voila done logé comme vn petit Prince dans vn Palais, basty en trois heures: comme ie craignois l'importunité des enfans, le Capitaine fait vn grand cry par les cabanes, & recommande à la ieunesse de ne point entrer en ma demeure, que par ma permission: Jeunesse, disoit-il & vous enfans, respectés nostre Pere, allés le visiter: mais quand il priera, ou qu'il sera empesché, retirez vous sans bruit, portés luy du poisson, quand vous en prendrés; les enfans me suiuoient par tout, & m'appelloient leur Pere; ils m'apportoient de leur pesche, & ie leur donnois vn peu de galette; en vn mot, i'estois en paix quand ie voulois, dans ma maison d'écorce; car ie pris la liberté dès le premier commencement, de renuoyer tous ceux que je voudrois, quand j'auois quelque empeschement: encor que ce soit chose inouïe, qu'un Sauuage refuse la porte de sa cabane à vn autre Sauuage, personne neantmoins ne se formalisoit de la façon d'agir du Pere: Il faut dès vostre premiere entrée donner le ply que vous desirés à ces bonnes gens, capables de raisons, & ils ne s'estonnent pas que nous ayons des façons de faire differentes des leurs.

Quelque temps apres mon arriué ie fis festin avec les Sauuages d'un bled d'Inde, qu'ils aimēt beaucoup, ie l'auois fait apporter exprés dans la barque pour ce sujet, ie voulu parler pendāt ce festin, mais les Sauuages ayans éuenté mon dessein, me remirent en vn autre temps; sur le soir le sieur Marsolet & moy, voulans produire les presens de Monsieur le Gouverneur & les nostres, le Capitaine nous courut au deuant, & me parla en ces termes. Mon Pere, il n'est pas besoin de nous faire des presens pour nous inuiter à croire en Dieu, nous y sommes desia tous resolu: le Ciel est vne assés grande recompense, nous ne desirons point d'estre orgueilleux, ny nous vanter d'estre honorés de vos presens, pour toute parole suffit, que vous nous enseignés le chemin du ciel: Sans entrer en d'autres discours, tous ceux que vous voiés icy sont dans la resolution de prier, mais non pas de quitter leur païs pour monter là haut; il apporta plusieurs raisons, pour faire voir qu'il leur estoit important, de ne se point retirer de Tadoussac: En effet, son discours estoit bon, mais fondé sur les considerations humaines & temporelles: Voila donc nos presens arrestés, Charles Meïachka8at, qui s'est retiré, comme i'ay desia dit, de Tadoussac pour viure en enfant de Dieu, à Saint Joseph, leur parla plusieurs fois tres-fortement, mais pardessus leur portée; car les hommes ne se deprennent pas si tost des interests de la terre, quoy qu'elle ne soit qu'un point, à comparaison du ciel. Ah! ie voy bien, fit ce bon-homme, que le Diable vous arreste icy, il vous donne des pensées, que vous serés pauvres, si vous quittés vostre païs, il vous fait apprehender que les richesses de la terre sont de grande importance; & que vous seruira tout cela à l'heure de la mort? il voit bien qu'il ne sçauroit vous raurir la volonté que vous aués de croire en Dieu; il vous iettera dans l'impossibilité de l'executer, vous attachant en un lieu, où vous ne pouués estre instruits : Si tost que vous ne verrés plus le Pere, vous ne penserés plus à Dieu; qui vous conseillera dans vos difficultes? qui vous empeschera de retomber dans vos chants superstitieux, & dans vos festins? Si quelqu'un a un tambour, qui prendra la hardiesse de luy oster? Nous les auons tous iettés, dirés-vous? comme si vous n'en pouués pas refaire d'autres: Moy mesme, encor que ie croye de tout mon coeur, il me semble que quand ie suis long-temps absent des Peres, que mes vieilles idées veulent retourner; voila pourquoy, quand ie deurois estre le plus pauvre du monde, ie ne le quitteray iamais. Ce bon Neophyte ne cessoit matin & soir, & la nuit mesme, de presser ses Compatriotes, de venir demeurer auprès de ceux qui enseignent le chemin de salut. Les Sauuages pressés de ces raisons, ne concludoient pas qu'il a fallust monter à Kebec, mais qu'il estoit à propos que nous descendissions à Tadoussac, pour y dresser vne Maison, afin de les instruire: Les Nations voisines y viendront demeurer, disoient ils, elles embrasseront la foy sans contredit: Mais ce païs est si miserable, qu'à peine y trouue-t'on de la terre pour leurs sepulcres, ce ne sont que rochers, steriles & affreux, si neantmoins Monsieur le general, & la flotte de Messieurs de la Nouvelle France, qui passe tous les ans quelque mois à Tadoussac, y faisoit bastir vne maison par leur ordre, comme Monsieur de Plessis Bochart auoit commencé, cela feroit du bien à tout son équipage & aux pauvres Sauvages; car quelques Peres de nostre Compagnie se pourroient retirer là, depuis le Printemps iusques au depart des vaisseaux, pour secourir les François & les Sauvages dans leurs besoins spirituels; d'y demeurer pendant l'hyuer, c'est chose que ie ne conseillerois à aucun François; car les Sauvages s'en éloignent pendant ce temps-là, abandonnans leur rochers au froid, & à la neige, & aux glaces, dont on voioit encor quelques reliquats, cette année bien auant dans le mois de Iuin. Au reste, ie ne doute nullement, que si la fureur des Hiroquois peut estre arrestée, que tous les sauvages de Tadoussac, du Sagné, & de plusieurs autres petites Nations, ne montent plus haut, si on continuë de les secourir; mais voions toutes les remarques du Pere.

p. 2977

p. 2978

Pendant le seiour que i'ay fait là, ces bonnes gens, dit-il, m'appelloient ordinairement à leurs conseils, ils me communiquoient leurs petites affaires, ils m'inuitoient à leurs festins, me traitant comme leur pere: Ils firent vn festin sur les fosses de leurs morts, incontinent apres non arrivée, auquel ils emploierent huict originaux & dix castors; le Capitaine haranguant, dit, que les ames des defuncts prenoient grand plaisir à l'odeur de ces bonnes viandes, ie voulus parler pour refuter cét erreur; mais ils me dirent, ne te mets pas en peine, ce n'est pas cela qui nous empeschera de croire, nous allons bien-tost jeter à bas nos vieilles façons de faire.

Voicy comme i'emploiois le temps avec eux, dés le petit jour, qui estoit enuiron trois ou quatre heures du matin, ie m'en allois faire prier Dieu par les cabanes; puis ie disois le sainte Messe, où tous les Chrestiens qui estoient descendus à Tadoussac, pour aller en traicts, assistoient tous les iours, se confessans & communians assés souuent. La Messe estans dite, ie me retirois à l'écart, hors le bruit des cabanes, pour vacquer un petit à moy mesme, i'allois en suite visiter les malades, puis i'assemblois les enfans pour leur faire le Catechisme, le Soleil ne regloit ny mon leuer, ny mon coucher, ny l'heure de mes repas : mais la seule commodité qui n'estoit guere auantageuse ny favorable au corps.

Je donnois vn temps apres le disner, tantost aux hommes, & puis aux femmes qui s'assembloient pour estre instruites, & sur le soir, apres m'estre retiré quelque temps, ie faisois faire les prieres avec vne instruction publique, où les enfans rendoient compte deuant leurs peres & meres, de ce qu'ils auoient appris au Catechisme, cela les encourageoit, & consoloit infiniment leurs parens.

I'en ay veu de si ardens à se faire instruire, qu'ils ont passé les nuicts auprès de nos Chrestiens, se faisans dire & redire vne mesme chose, pour la mettre dans leur memoire.

L'interrogeois les plus âgés publiquement comme des enfans, & tous me rendoient compte de ce que ie leur auois enseigné: En vn mot, si cette Mission est penible, elle est assaiionnée de beaucoup de consolation.

Le leur disois certain iour, que quelques François m'auoient dit à mon depart de Kebec, que ie ferois d'eux tout ce que ie voudrois deuant le venuë des Vaisseaux; mais qu'à l'abord des Navires, on ne les pourroit plus retenir, qu'ils seroiēt yures depuis le matin iusques au soir: L'vn d'eux prenant la parole, me dit avec bonne grace; Mon Pere, fay gageure avec ceux qui t'ont dit cela, & nous te ferons gagner; car assurément nous ne nous enyurerons point, demeure avec nous iusques à la flotte, & nous t'apporterons toutes les boissons que nous aurons, tu en seras l'Echanson & le distributeur, tu nous en verseras de tes mains, & nous ne passerons point la mesure que tu nous donneras.

Le vy aborder icy quelques ieunes gens du Sagné, qui n'auoient iamais vue de François; ils furent bien estonnés de m'entendre parler leur Langue: Ils demandoient de quel païs j'estois; on leur dit, que j'estois de Kebec, & de leurs parens; mais ils n'en pouuoient rien croire: car nos barbes mettent vne difference quasi essentielle, pour ainsi dire, entre un European & un Sauuage: l'ay communiqué avec quelques familles, venuës des Terres, ce sont gens simples, & tres-capables de recevoir le bon grain, & la riche semence de l'Euangile.

Estant certain iour en vne assemblée, où les Sauuages traitoient d'enuoyer la ieunesse en marchandise vers ces Nations plus éloignées; ie me presentay pour les accompagner, afin de parler de Dieu à ces pauvres peuples; cela les mit vn peu en peine, car ils ne veulent pas que les François ayent connoissance de leur commerce, ny de ce qu'ils donnent à ces autres Sauuages pour leurs pelteries; & cela se garde si bien que personne ne le sçauroit découurir: Ils me faisoient les chemins horribles & épouvantables, comme ils le sont en effet; mais ils en augmentoient l'horreur pour m'etonner, & pour me divertir de mon dessein. Aiant reconnu leur crainte, ie me mets à discourir des malheurs, & des biens eternels; les voiant touchés, ie leur demanday, s'ils seroient bien aises que ces pauvres peuples de leur connoissance, tombassent dans ces feux: Ils respondent, que non. Il les faut donc instruire, reparty-je, Qui le fera si vous me fermés la porte? Il est vray, dit l'vn des principaux, il faut qu'il soit permis au Pere d'aller par tout, il n'est point chargé ny de cousteaux, ny de haches, ny d'autres marchandises, c'est nostre Pere, il nous aime, ie suis d'auis qu'il aille où il voudra. Tous les autres s'y estans accordés; un Capitaine s'écria: Va où tu voudras, mon Pere, la porte t'est ouuerte dans toutes les Nations dont nous auons connoissance, nous t'y porterons dans nos canots; mais demeure avec nous pour ce Printemps: car estant venu pour nous instruire, il ne faut pas nous quitter que nous ne sçachions les prieres, tu pourras aller visiter ces bonnes gens vne autre année. Les voiant dans cette apprehension de leur dis, qu'ils sçavoient bien mon dessein; Il est vray, fit l'vn des principaux, le Pere ne vient pas icy pour nos pelteries, il n'a aucune marchandise entre les mains, il nous aime, c'est nostre Pere, il faut que la porte luy soit ouuerte par toutes les Nations dont nous auons connoissance; Tous les autres furent de mesme auis; mais ils me prièrent neantmoins de rester là; Ceux qui n'estoient pas baptistés, me demanderent des Chrestiens pour les embarquer & pour parler de ma part à ces peuples. Je mis des presens entre les mains de deux Chrestiens pour inuiter deux Nations à venir prester l'oreille aux bonnes nouvelles de l'Euangile; Ils me renuoyerent d'autres presens avec parole, que si ie voulois m'arrester à Tadoussac, qu'ils y viendroient, l'vn de nos Chrestiens de Saint Joseph, frere d'vn Capitaine des Sauuages qui sont dedans les Terres, l'inuitant de venir vois leurs champs, & leur bleds, pour l'inciter à cultiuier la terre; celuy-cy respondit: travaillés courageusement, priés les François de vous aider fortement à defricher la terre, si tost que vous aurés des bleds, pour nous pouuoir secourir, nous irons tous vous voir, & demeurer auprès de vous; mais nous craignons les Hiroquois.

Quelque temps apres Charles Meiachk8at alla de luy mesme, inuiter une autre Nation, de croire en Dieu, il trouua ces gens si bien disposés, qu'il s'en estonna; voicy comme il entra en discours avec eux: comme ils auoient desia ouy parler de nostre creance, par le bruit qui en court par tout ces grands bois; ils luy demanderent s'il en auoit quelque connoissance: Ouy dea, fit-il, moy mesme ie suis baptisté, & ie croy en celuy qui a fait le ciel & la terre; Instruy donc, dirent-ils, ce pauure malade, que tu as visité, & qui s'en va mourant, il l'aborde, luy parle du pouuoir de Dieu sur tous les hommes, du

p. 2980

recours qu'il deuoit auoir en luy, le fait prier, & demãder secours à sa bonté; Le malade apres cette priere, se trouue à demy guery, il se leue, il marche, auec l'estonnement de ses Compatriotes, Charles les voyant attentifs, leur parle de la creation du mōde, de l'Incarnation du Verbe; en vn mot, leur enseigne ce qu'il a appris; & nous estans las de parler, il se retiroit seul, recitoit son chapellet, & s'entretenoit en quelque sainte pensée, se pourmenant à l'écart; sans auoir égard si ses gens s'en estonnent, ou non, imitant ce qu'il auoit veu faire au Pere, qui instruisoit les Sauuages de Tadoussac. Si tost qu'il rentroit dans la cabane du malade, tous les autres Sauuages accouroient, ils se mettoient en rond à l'entour de luy, dans vn profond silence, & luy instruisoit selon sa portée, ne sçachant plus que dire, il se mit à crier si fort contre leurs superstitions, contre leurs festins à tout manger, monstrant la brutalité de leurs moeurs, & benissant Dieu, d'auoir quitté son ancienne barbarie, il dit tant de chose contre l'inutilité, & la foile de leurs tambours que tous ceux qui en auoient, les allerent tout soudainement querir, & les mirent en mille pieces en sa presence, cela l'estonna, & le consola fort: quand il fut de retour, il ne sçauoit se comprendre: Nikanis, me faisoit-il, ie les ay pensé amener icy auec moy; s'il eussent eu dequoy acheter des viures pour pour passer l'hiuer, ils m'auoient suiuy, tous ceux que i'ay veus sont dans la resolution de se faire instruire, & de quitter leurs anciennes coustumes, pour embrasser les nostres. Enfin, ie ne doute point que toutes ces pauures petites Nations qui sont dans les bois, où nos Chrestiens frequentent, ne se viennent ranger au bercail de l'Eglise, si on les peut secourir.

Pour conclusion, le Pere arriua à Tadoussac le secound iour de Iuin, & en fut rapellé le vignt-neuf, il baptisa quatorze ou quinze Sauuages, notamment des enfans & des personnes âgées; il en auroit baptisé bien dauantage, si ces pauures gens eussent esté en un lieu, où ils pourroient estre conserués en la foy, tout cela arriuera en son temps: Le Dieu qui les a touchés, & qui les appelle, leur ouurira la porte, & leur donnera le moyen d'executer ses saintes volontés. Ainsi soit-il.

JESUIT RELATIONS, ETC. Vol. xxxi. Relation of 1647.

Deuât que de conclurre ce Chapitre. ie diray deux mots d'un voyage que fit le P. de Quen dans le pays de la nation du Porc-espig.

nous auions nauigé contre le courant de l'eau dans les deux precedentes riuieres, nous commancasmes icy à descendre dans le lac Piouagamik, sur les riuies duquel habite la nation du Porc-Epic que nous cherchions. Ce lac est si grand qu'à peine en voit-on les riuies, il semble estre d'une figure ronde, il est profond & fort poissonneux, on y pesche des brochets, des perches, des saumons, des truittes, des poissons dorés, des poissons blancs, des carpes & quantité d'autres especes.

Il est enuironné d'un plat pays, terminé par de hautes montaignes éloignées de 3. ou quatre ou cinq lieuës de ses riuies, il se nourrit des eaux d'une quinzaine de riuieres ou enuiron, qui seruent de chemin aux petites nations, qui sont dans les terres pour venir pescher dans ce lac, & pour entretenir le commerce & l'amitié qu'elles ont par entr'elles. Nous vogasmes quelque temps sur ce lac, & enfin nous arriuasmes au lieu où estoient les Sauuages de la nation du Porc-Epic. Ces bonnes gens nous ayans aperceus, sortirent de leurs cabanes, pour voir le premier François qui ait iamais mis le pied dessus leurs terres. Ils s'estonnoient de mon entreprise, ne croyans pas que iamais i'aurois eu le courage de fanchir tant de difficultez, pour leur amour.

GROWING INFLUENCE OF JESUIT MISSIONARIES AMONG THE MONTAGNAIS INDIANS.

JESUIT RELATIONS, &C., VOL. XXXV, Relation of 1649-50.

Les Chrestiens avec leurs Chefs, jadis si ialoux de leur païs, & leur port de Tadoussac, qu'ils en refusoient la cognoissance aux autres Nations, voyans que les Peres ne pouuoient pas les aller trouuer dans le fonde de leurs grands bois les ont inuitées de venir demeurer aupres d'eux pour apprendre le chemin du Ciel, apportant pour raison, que'estans amis en cette vie, il ne falloit pas estre diuisez en lautre. Les 8papinachi8ek ont desia recue la Foy. Les 8mani8ek qui habitēt les terres voisines de l'Isle d'Anticosti ont commencé cette année de paroistre à Tadoussac, & de prester l'oreille à la doctrine de Iesus-Christ. Ces bons Capitaines leur ont fait des presens pour les attirer aupres d'eux, afin de leur donner enuie d'embrasser leur creance.

Ce n'est pas tout. Ces peuples qui cachotent iadis aux François les chemins des Nations où ils vont trafiquer, ne voulans pas mesme que nous en abordassions, nous pressent maintenant qu'ils sont Chrestiens, de les suiure dans ces vastes forests, pour baptiser & pour confessor les Nations qui ne peuuent approcher de leur pays. Ils ont mené le Pere Gabriel Druillettes dans ces contrées par vn chemin nouueau, mais tres-affreux, afin qu'il visitât & qu'il consolât ceux qui ne le pouuoient venir trouuer à Tadoussac.

Résumé des négociations pour l'établissement d'un évêque en Canada.

“Les grâces & les bénédictions infinies que Dieu verse continuellement sur notre personne & sur notre état, dit le jeune monarque, nous obligent, sur tous les Souverains de la terre, de prendre un soin particulier d'employer pour l'avancement de sa gloire & de son honneur la puissance qu'il nous a donnée. C'est pourquoi, désirant rendre à Sa Majesté divine une partie des reconnaissances que nous lui devons pour tant de faveurs , nous avons estimé que nous ne pouvions mieux nous acquitter de ce devoir qu'en soutenant les intérêts de la religion, & en étendant même nos soins sur les nations barbares & infidèles, pour coopérer à ce qu'elles soient appelées à la connaissance de son nom & dans le sein de son Eglise: sachant d'ailleurs que Dieu n'élève les Rois sur la terre, pour le gouvernement des peuples, que dans le dessein d'en faire les instruments de sa Providence, en se servant de leur zèle & de leur autorité pour établir son empire & étendre le culte de la vraie religion. C'est à quoi nous sommes encore excité par les exemples de piété que nous a laissés le feu Roi, notre très-honoré seigneur & père, & par les instructions que nous a données, dès notre enfance, la Reine, notre très-honorée dame & mère, qui n'a pas eu plus de soins de maintenir notre autorité & la grandeur de cette couronne que de nous inspirer par sa vertu singulière, avec ces saintes maximes, le zèle du service de Dieu & la gloire de son Eglise.

“Ainsi, ayant été averti que la religion, qui commence à s'établir & à se répandre dans les provinces de Canada, ne peut être avancée ni maintenue qu'en y faisant l'érection d'un évêché, afin d'en pourvoir quelque personne d'un grand mérite, qui puisse, avec l'autorité de ce divin caractère & par l'usage de sa juridiction, donner la perfection à cet ouvrage si heureusement commencé: cette considération nous a porté à inviter notre Saint-Père le Pape à faire l'erection d'un siège épiscopal dans ces provinces éloignées. Mais Sa Sainteté ayant jugé que les choses nécessaire à cet établissement ne se trouvaient pas encore en ce pays, & qu'il y avait danger que, la

“Ayant donc mis cette affaire en délibération dans notre Conseil, où la Reine, notre très-honorée Dame & Mere, notre très-cher & très-aimé Frère le duc d'Anjou, & autres princes & seigneurs, nous avons, de notre autorité royale, déclaré & nous déclarons par ces présentes, signées de notre main, que nous voulons & qu'il nous plaît que le sieur de Laval de Montigny, évêque de Pétrée, soit reconnu par tous nos sujets, dans les dites provinces, pour faire les fonctions épiscopales, sans préjudice des droits de la juridiction ordinaire; & cela, en attendant l'érection d'un évêché, dont le titulaire sera suffragant de l'archevêque de Rouen, du consentement irrévocable duquel nous avons accepté la dite disposition de notre Saint-Père le Pape; car tel est notre bon plaisir.

* * * *

Nous sçavons, il y a long temps, que nous auons à dos la Mer du Nort, habitée par quantité de Sauuages, qui n'ont iamais eü connoissances des Europeans; que c'est cette Mer, qui est contiguë à celle de la Chine, & qu'il n'y a plus que la porte à trouuer; que c'est là que se voit cette fameuse baye, large de soixante & dix lieües, & profonde de deux cens soixante, découuerte, pour la première fois, par Husson, qui luy a donné son nom, sans qu'il en ait receu d'autre gloire, que d'auoir le premier frayé un chemin, qui se termine à des Empires inconnus; c'est en cette baye que se trouuent, en certains temps de l'année, quantité de Nations circonuoisines, comprises sous le nom general des Kilistinons.

Tout l'hiuer dernier, vn Capitaine Nipissirien nous entretint amplement du nombre de ces peuples, de la situation, & du temperament du païs, & sur tout d'une foire generale, qui s'y deuoit tenir l'Esté suiuant, à laquelle nos Sauuages de Kébec, & de Tadoussac estoient invitez. C'estoit là une belle occasion, pour aller nous-mesmes prendre les connoissances, que nous n'auons eu iusqu'à present, que par le rapport, assez peu fidele, des Sauuages: Connoissances, au reste, importantes, & curieuses; tant pour sçauoir au vray les longitudes, et les latitudes de ce nouveau païs, desquelles dépend en partie le fondement qu'on a d'y trouuer passage vers la Mer du Japon; comme aussi, pour voir les lieux, les moyens de trauailler efficacement à la conuersion de ces peuples.

De Nekouba, à cent lieues de Tadoüssac, dans les bois, sur le chemin de la Mer du Nort, ce deuxiême de Iuillet 1661.
Mon R. Pere,

PAX CHRISTI

* * * *

Les trois iours suiuaus, s'employent à passer des Lacs, puis à chercher dans le bois, des riuieres, puis rentrer dans d'autres Lacs, & dans d'autres riuieres, qui nous portent enfin à Nekouba, qui est, comme i'ay dit, le milieu des deux Mers, de cette du Nort, & de celle de Tadoussac. Nous trouuons pour la latitude quarante-neuf degrez, vint minutes, & pour sa longitude trois cent cinq degrez, dix minutes, puisque de Tadoussac, tirant au Noroüest quart d'Oüest, nous rencontrons le Lac S. Iean, après trente-cinq lieües du plus court chemin; & de ce Lac, dont la latitude est quarante-huit degrez, trente minutes, & la longitude trois cent sept degrez cinquante minutes, tirant encore au Noroüest quart d'Oüest, nous nous trouuons icy, ayant fait enuiron quarante-cinq lieües en ligne droite.

Au reste, Nekouba est un lieu celebre, à cause d'une Foire qui s'y tient tous les ans, à laquelle tous les Sauuages d'alentour se rendent pour leurs petit commerce. Voicy l'accueil que nous firent soixante hommes, qui nous y attendoient, & qui se mirent en estat de nous receuoir à la mode du pays.

Au reste, nous auons veu des peuples, de huit ou dix nations, dont les vnes n'auoient iamais ny veu de François, ny entendu parler de Dieu; les autres, qui auoient esté baptisées autrefois à Tadoussac, ou au Lac de S. Iean, gemissoient depuis plusieurs années, après le retour de leurs Pasteurs. Nous auons donc la consolation, d'auoir fait entendre l'Euangile, pour la premiere fois, à diuerses nations, dont plusieurs enfans ont esté baptisez, plusieurs adultes instruits, plusieurs penitens reconciliez par the Sacrement de Confession, et toute cette pauvre Eglise vagabonde, a esté fortement encouragée à perseuerer dans la Foy.

AUTRES ACCIDENS ARRIUÉZ A QUELQUES FRANCOIS, & SAUAGES, CAPTIFS.

Mais, quoy que nos ennemis empeschent d'aller par tout, pour recueillir des fruits si doux & si meurs; nous n'auons pas laissé cette année, malgré tous les Iroquois, & tous les Demons, d'étendre nos Missions dans les quatre parties de ce Nouveau Monde, & d'aller quasi par tout, chercher ces pauvres brebis errantes. Au Midy, le Pere Simon le Moine est allé chez ces mesmes Iroquois, peut-estre pour arrouser de son sang, ces terres que nous auons baignées de nos sueurs. Au Couchant, le Pere René Menard est à plus de trois cent lieuës d'icy, ou mort, ou vif; car depuis deux ans qu'il est entré dans cette grande Moisson, nous n'en auons pas pû sçavoir de nouvelles; c'est assez que sa vie soit immolée à toutes les miseres imaginables, & à mille sortes de morts, pour le salut de ces Infideles. Au Nort, les deux Peres, dont nous auons décrit le voyage au Chapitre troisiéme, ont poussé leur pointe aussi loin que la famine, & l'Iroquois l'ont permis. A l'Orient, tirant au Nort, le Pere Pierre Bailloquet a donné jusqu'à l'emboucheure de nostre fleuee S. Laurent, à cent soixante lieuës d'icy; il y a visté sept ou huit Nations differentes, les Papinachiois, les Bersiamites, la Nation des Monts pelez, les Oumamiouek, & autres alliées de celle-cy. C'est là, que les uns ont pressé le Pere de les baptiser, croyant bien meriter ce bonheur, puisqu'ils auoient appris d'eux-mesmes les prieres, sans autre Maistre que le S. Esprit, par le rencontre de quelques Sauages Chrestiens; les autres luy ont presenté leurs enfans pour receuoir le saint Baptesme de ses mains, ne iugeans pas le leurs assez saintes pour ce sacré Ministere; les autres ont rallumé dans leurs coeurs le feu de deuotion, qui ne s'éteint pas tant par la vehemence des froids, & par l'abondance des neiges, que par le grand éloignement des Eglises, & des Pasteurs.

L'onzieme du mesmes mois nous arriuasmes à la riuere que les Sauuages appellent Kouakoucou; nous vismes en passant les rauages que le Trembleterre à fait aux riuieres du Port neuf; l'eau qu en sort est toute iaune, & elle garde cette couleur bien auant dans le grande fleuue, aussi bien que celle des Bersiamites: Les Sauuages ne sçauoient plus nauiger dans ces deux riuieres.

Quittant ce dernier poste nous fismes rencontre de deux Canots qui descendoient des terres bien chargez de pelleteries, ils rebrousserent chemin, & s'en vinrent avec nous. Nos Sauuages firent leur traite avec ces nouueaux venus, en suite dequoy ils acheuerent les Cantos qui nous estoient necessaires pour nostre voyage. Quelques iours apres estant arriuez a la riuere de Peritibistoukou, où nous arrestasmes iusques au deuxieme de Juin, deuant entre dans les terres par cette riuere, la disposition de nostre voyage fut, que les femmes, les enfans & quelques hommes resteroient sur le bord du grand fleuue, tandis que le reste monteroit au Lac de Manikougan.

SECOND LETTRE DU PERE AU ALBANEL AU SUPERIEUR DES MISSIONS.

Comme ie me disposois le premier iour de May, à remonter à Quebec, après avoir passé l'hyver dans nos forests avec nos Sauvages; ie receus ordre de V.R. de visiter les Missions qui sont au Nord, de l'autre costé de la Riviere Saint Laurent, où ie me rendis le 12. iour de mesme mois.

* * * *

Le dernier iour de May nous partismes de Tadoussac pour aller aux Papinachois, qui en sont éloignez d'environ trente lieuës, du costé du Nord, le long de nostre grande Riviere de S. Laurent.

Le troisieme iour de Iuin, nous arriuâmes au lieu où ils estoient assemblez au nombre de cent cinquante personnes, Ie trouvay là un Sauvage, de la grande & celebre Baye du Nord, qui m'a dit qu'on avoit veu un vaiffeau Francois dans son païs, & qu'il les avoit pillez & fort mal-tra(i)tez. Que le Chef qui commandoit le Navire, les avoit asseurez que l'année prochaine il viendroit se poster dans cette Baye, & qu'on donnast advis à tous leurs gens de s'y rendre, & de luy apporter leurs pelleteries; qu'il estoit le maistre de la paix & de la guerre, & qu'il ameneroit avec luy quantité d'Iroquois pour les destruire, s'ils ne luy obeïssoient.

CHAPITRE VI.

VOYAGE DE LA MER DU NORD PAR TERRE, & LA DÉCOUVERTE DE LA BAYE DE HUTSON. MISSION DE SAINT FRANÇOIS XAVIER EN 1671. & 1672.

La mer que nous avons au Nord, est la fameuse baye, à qui Hutson a donné son nom, & qui a piqué, de puis long-temps, de curiosité nos François pour en faire la découverte par le terres, & pour sçavoir sa situation à nostre égard, sa distance, & quels sont les peuples qui l'habitent. Le desir de prendre connoissance de cette mer, s'est augmenté depuis que nous avons appris par nous Sauvages, que tout fraîchement quelques navires y avoient paru, & mesme y avoient commencé le commerce avec ces Nations, qu'on nous a toujours dit estre nombreuses & riches en pelteries.

C'est pour cela, que Monsieur Talon nostre Intendant a jugé qu'il ne devoit rien obmettre de ce qui seroit en son pouvoir, pour faire cette decouverte; & parce qu'il sçait que l'intention de sa Majesté est, que tous les Peuples de Canada soient instruits dans le Christianisme, il a demandé quelqu'un de nos Peres, qui pust ouvrir le chemin à nos François vers cette baye, en mesme-temps qu'il y porteroit l'Evangile.

On jetta donc les yeux sur le Pere Charles Albanel ancien Missionnaire de Tadoussac, parce que depuis long-temps, il a beaucoup pratiqué les Sauvages, qui ont connoissance de cette mer, & qui seuls peuvent estre les conducteurs par ces routes, jusqu'à present inconnuës.

Monsieur de saint Simon avec un autre François ayant esté choisis pour cette entreprise, & Monsieur l'Intendant les ayant tres-bien fournis de tout ce qui estoit necessaire, pour la faire reussir, le Pere partit de Quebec le 6. Aoust 1671. & leur donna rendez-vous à Tadoussac, où il devoit faire choix d'un Sauvage adroit, & intelligent pour luy servir de guide pendant tout ce voyage.

Nous le suivrons pas à pas, & nous sçaurons mieux tout ce qui s'est passé en cette expedition, mettant icy son journal, tel qu'il l'a dressé pendant sa marche.

* * * * *

Le I. de Septembre, nous couchames au delà d'un petit lac qu'on appelle Kinougamichis, renommé pour la multitude des grenouilles à longues queues qui l'habitent, & qui y font un croacement continuel ; on tient qu'elles sont fort venimeuses, quoy qu'en ces païs les crapaux, les serpens, & les viperes ne le soient pas.

p. 2990

Le 2. nous logeames sur l'entrée du la S. Jean nommé Pingagami, qui a 30. lieuës de longueur, 10. de largeur, 12 rivieres entrent dans ce lac, & il n'y en a qu'une seule, qui en sorte, laquelle forme cette belle, & grande riviere qu'on appelle le Saguenay. Ce lieu est beau, les terres sont fort unies, & paroissent bonnes, il y a de belles prairies; c'est le païs des loutres, des originaux, des castors, & principalement du porc epi; c'est pour cela que les Sauvages; qui y font leur residence, s'appellent Kakouchac, prenant leur nom du mot Kakou, qui en leur langue signifie porc epi: c'estoit autrefois l'endroit, ou toutes les Nations, qui sont entre les deux Mers, de l'est, & du Nord, se rendoient pour faire leur commerce, j'y ay veu plus de vingt Nations assemblées.

* * * * *

Le 17. cinq canots s'Attikamegues, ou poissons blancs, & de Mistasirinins nous vindrent joindre; ils nous apprirent pour nouvelles que 2. navires avoient mouillé dans la baye de Hutson, & qu'ils avoient fait grande traite avec les Sauvages, s'y estant establis pour le commerce, ils nous firent voir une hache & de tablac, qu'ils avoient en d'un Papinachois, qui avoit esté en traite vers la mer du Nord, cet Esté même. Ils adjoustoient qu'il n'y avoit point d'assurance de vie pour nous, qu'ons s'y battoit rudement, qu'un Sauvage avoit esté tué dans leur demelé, & qu'un autre avoit esté emmené prisonnier. Ils en avoient assez dit pour jeter l'epouvante dans l'esprit de tous nos gens, mais comme ce n'estoit plus le temps de continuer nostre route, à cause de l'Hyver, qui nous pressoit, ce discours ne fit aucune impression sur nom esprit.

Neantmoins pour ne pas agir sans conduite en cette affaire, voyant que je n'avois aucun passeport, je pris resolution d'envoyer à Quebec, pour m'en pourvoir, donnant en même-temps advis de tout ce que je venois d'entendre, & pour sçavoir quelles mesures je devois garder en ce circonstances.

Deux Sauvages, & un François partirent le 19. Septembre avec mes lettres: je m'occupay cependant à instruire cette petite bande, que Dieu m'envoyoit bien à propos; je baptisay un petit enfant, & deux adultes, apres les instructions necessaires, & m'employay a cultiver ceux qui estoient Chrestiens jusqu'aux dixième Octobre, nostre canot estant retourné ce jour là, avec des patentes de Monseigneur nostre Evesque, & des passeports de Monsieur de Courcelles nostre Gouverneur, & de Monsieur Talon nostre Intendant, je reçeus aussi leurs advis, qui m'ont servy dans cette conjoncture d'affaires.

La saison estant trop avancée pour se rendre à la mer avant les neiges, & les glaces, par lesquelles nous fumes arrestez le dernier jour d'Octobre, nos Sauvages choisirent ce lieu pour y passer l'hyver à cause de la chase, qui s'y trouve abondante.

* * * * *

p. 2991

Le dixieme (Juin) sur les six heures du matin nous arrivames à Paslistaskau, qui divise les terres du Nord & du Sud, c'est une petite langue de terre d'environ un arpent en largeur, & de deux en lōgueur, les deux bouts de cette pointe sont terminez par deux petits Lacs, d'où sortent deux rivieres, l'une descend à l'Est, & l'autre au Noroüest, l'une entre dans la mer à Tadoussac par le Saguenay, & l'autre dans la baye de Hutson par Nemeskau, où est le milieu du chemin entre les deux mers. Sur le soir, nous fimes rencontre de trois Mistassirinins dans un canot, qui estoit en fort bon estat, ils venoient au devant de nous, ayant apperceu de grandes fumées que nous faisons de temps en temps approchant de cette Nation, pour signal de nostre arrivée. Ce canot prit congé de nous sur l'entrée de la nuit, feignant de pousser plus avant, & tout soudain apres avoir tourné l'Isle, dans laquelle nous estions placez, il se vint joindre à nous dés le soir mesme, considerant de pres le plus âgé des trois, qui s'appelle Moukoutagan, comme qui diroit cousteau crochu, j'entray dans la défiance, qu'il ne nous voulut faire achepter le passage, mais s'estant apperceu de ma défiance, il essaya de cacher son dessein, & ce fut le matin en partant, qu'il s'en expliqua, en me disant, Robe noire, arreste icy, il faut que nostre viellard, maistre de ce païs, sçache ton arrivée, je m'en vay l'avertir.

Ce n'est pas d'aujourd'huy que les Sauvages, par une maxime de leur politique, ou de leur avarice, sont extremement reservez à donner passage par leurs rivieres aux estrangers, pour aller aux Nations éloignées. Les rivieres sur sont ce que sont aux François leurs champs, dont ils tirent toute leur subsistance, soit pour la pesche & la chase, foit pour le traffic. Je fis neanmoins semblant de m'offenser de ce langage; c'est pourquoy je luy repondis un peu brusquement, est-ce toy qui m'arreste? Non ce n'est pas moy, & qui donc? Le Vieillard Sesibaourat; où est-il? bien loin d'icy, me dit-il, hé bien tu luy feras sçavoir, qu'aujourd'huy je me veux reposer estant fort fatigué, mais si demain au matin, ton Vieillard ne paroist, tu luy diras que je suis pressé, & que je continueray ma route. Il s'embarque, & part à l'heure mesme, mais je fus tout estonné que le soir quatre canots parurent, qui me vinrent prier de la part du Vieillard, de l'excuser, s'il n'estoit pas venu, qu'un vent contraire l'arrestoit jusqu'au lendemain.

Ce fut le 13. de Juin que dix-huit canots arriverent, la pluspart ayant peints leurs visages, & s'estant parez de tout ce qu'ils avoient de precieux, comme de tours de teste, de colliers, de ceintures, & de brasselets de porcelaine. Ils vinrent descendre tout proche de nous, & le Capitaine mettant pied à terre, je le fis saluer de dix coups de fusils en signe de réjouissance, & dés le mesme soir je le fis appeller, avec les principaux d'entr'eux. pour leur parler par deux riches presens. En cette maniere.

Sesibahoura, ce n'est pas pour achepter le passage de cette riviere, & de ton Lac, que je te veux regaler de deux presens. Le François ayant deslivré tout ce pais des incursions de Iroquois vos ennemis, merite bien qu'on luy fasse un droit d'aller, & de venir avec toute liberté sur cette terre, qu'il a conquis par ses armes. De plus, Dieu, que vous dites vous mesme estre la maistre de toutes choses, puisque c'est luy qui a tout fait, & qui gouverne tout, m'en voyant pour le faire connoistre par toutes ces contrées; me donne le droit de passer librement par tout. L'Annié, L'Oneiout, L'Onontagueronon, l'Oiogouen, ny le Sonnontouan, le Nepissirininin, l'Outaouac, ny toutes les Nations estrangeres, n'ont jamais rien exigé de mes freres, lorsqu'ils passent & repassent librement sur leurs terres pour les intruire, & les informer des Loix de l'Evangile.

p. 2992

En qualite de vostre amy, de vostre allié, & de vostre parent, ce present est une natte pour couvrir les fosses de vos morts, qui ont este tuez par l'Iroquois vostre ennemy, & à vous, qui avez échapé leurs feux, & leur cruauté, il vous dit, que vous vivrez à l'avenir; Onnontio luy a osté des mains la hache d'arme; vostre pais estoit mort, il l'a fait revivre, il a arraché les arbes, & les rochers qui traversoient vos rivieres, & interrompoient le cours de leurs eaux; peschez, chassez, & trafique par tout, sans crainte d'estre découverts de vos ennemis, ny par le bruit de vos armes, ny par l'odeur du tabac, ny par la fumée de vos feux, la paix est generale par tout.

Ce deuxieme present vous dit que l'Iroquois prie Dieu maintenant, depuis que le François luy a donné de l'esprit, & qu'il pretend aussi que vous l'imitiez maintenant qu'il vous a rendu vostre liberté. J'aime Dieu, vous dit le François, je ne veux point avoir d'alliez, ny de parens, qui reconnoissent le Demon pour leur maistre, & qui recourent à luy dans leurs besoins. Mon amitie, mon alliance, & ma parenté ne doit pas estre seulement sur la terre, & en ce monde, je veux qu'elle soit de durée en l'autre, apres la mort, & qu'elle subsiste dans le Ciel.

Et pour cela quittez le dessein d'avoir commerce avec les Europeans, qui traitent vers la mer du Nord, où on ne prie point Dieu, & reprenez vostre ancien chemin du Lac S. Jean, où vous trouerez toujours quelque robe noire pour vous instruire & baptiser.

Tout ce soir là ne fut qu'un grand festin pour nous bien recevoir, & nous faire part à leur mode, de tout ce qu'ils avoient de meilleur; & sur la nuit s'estant tous assemblez apres le cry qu'en fit le Capitaine, pour nous mieux témoigner les transports de leur joye, on ordonna une danse publique, ou joignant quelquefois la voix & le tambour, ils passerent la nuit dans cette réjouissance, en laquelle ne se passa rien que dans l'honesteté.

Le jour suivant, le Capitaine parla à son tour apres un beau festin, en cette maniere.

C'est aujourd'huy, mon Pere, que le Soleil nous luit, & que nous favorisant de ta douce presence, tu nous fais le plus beau jour que ce païs ait jamais veu; jamais nos peres, ny nos grands peres n'ont eu tant de bonheur. Que nous sommes heureux d'estre naiz en ce temps, pour jouïr à plaisir des biens que tu nous fais! Le François nous oblige bien fort, en nous donnant la paix, il nous fait tous revivre.

Mais il nous oblige bien plus en nous voulant instruire, & nous faire Chrestiens, nous le regarderons comme celui par le moyens de qui, nous pouvons, apres nostre mort, éviter les peines eternelles. Il conclut par un present qu'il me fit, en me disant, mon Pere, nous t'arrestons icy pour nous instruire, & nous baptiser tous, à ton retour tu diras à Onnontio que nous prions tous Dieu, & que nous avons écouté sa parole.

p. 2993

Il me seroit difficile d'exprimer quelle fut nostre joye, de voir en ce païs de si bonnes dispositions pour la Foy, & quel fut nostre zele pour seconder l'affection qu'ils faisoient paroistre pour le Christianisme. Apres les remereimens qui se pratiquent icy en ces occasions. Je leur dis que pour les enfans, je les baptiserois, parce qu'il leur seroit trop incommode de les porter au Lac de S. Jean. Mais que pour les Adultes, estant pressé de partir, je ne les pouvois pas informer pleinement de tous nos mysteres, & que ceux qui parloit tout de bon, allans au Lac de S. Jean pour leur trafic, m'y pourroient attendre, & qu'à mon retour je les satisferois tous, à quoy ils s'accorderent.

Le 15. tous les particuliers nous regalerent à leur mode, & je continuay à faire nos fonctions, & à les instruire.

Le. 16. apres avoir dit la sainte Messe, nous partismes & arrivasmes à Kimaganusis. Le 17. à Pikousitesinacut, c'est à dire, au lieu où l'on use les souliers, c'est ainsi qu'il est nommé pour expliquer la difficulté du chemin.

Le 18. nous entrasmes dans ce grand Lac des Mistassirinins qu'on tient estre si grand, qu'il faut vingt jours de beau temps pour en faire le tour, ce Lac tire son nom des rochers dont il est remply, qui sont d'une prodigieuse grosseur, il y a quantité de tres-belles Isles, du gibier, & du poisson de toute espece, les orignaux, les ours, les cariboux, le porcepy, & les castors y sont en abondance. Nous avons déjà fait six lieuës au travers des Isles qui l'entrecouperent, quand j'apperçeus comme une eminence de terre, d'aussi loin que la veuë se peut estendre; je demanday à nos gens, si c'estoit vers cet endroit qu'il nous falloit aller, tais-toy, me dit nostre quide, ne le regarde point, si tu ne veux perir. Les Sauvages de toutes ces Contrées s'imaginent, que quiconque veut traverser ce Lac se doit soigneusement garder de la curiosité de regarder cette route, & principalement le lieu où l'on doit aborder; son seul aspect, disent-ils, cause l'agitation des eaux, & forme des tempestes, qui font transir de frayeur les plus asseurez.

le 19. nous arrivasmes à Makoïamitikac, cest à dire, à la pesche des Ours, c'est un lieu plat, & l'eau y est fort basse, au reste fort abondante en poissons, les petits esturgeons, le brochet, & le poisson blanc y font leur demeure; il y a du plaisir à voir les ours qui marchent sur les bords de cette eau, & qui prennent de la patte en passant avec une adresse admirable, tantost un poisson, & tantost un autre.

Le 22. nous allasmes à Oüetataskouamiou, cette journée nous fut bien rude, il fallut quitter la grande riviere, les cheutes d'eau, & les rapides estants trop violens, & prendre nostre route parmy des petits lacs, à la faveur de dix-sept portages pour retomber dans la mesme riviere. Ce fut icy, où nostre guide s'égara par deux fois, ce qui nous obligea de faire un portage de deux grandes lieuës, par des rivieres, des descentes, & des montagnes, des plaines noyées, & des ruisseaux qu'il fallut traverser ayant l'eau jusqu'à la ceinture.

Le 23. & le 24. nous trouvasmes un païs qui n'est pas si montagneux, l'air y est bien plus doux, les campagnes sont belles, & les terres y produiroient beaucoup, & seroient capables de nourrir de grands peuples, si on les faisoit valoir. Ce païs, le plus beau de toute nostre route, a continué jusqu'à Nemiskau, où nous arrivasmes le 25. Juin sur le midy.

Nemiskau est un grand lac de dix journées de circuit, entouré de grandes montagnes, depuis le Sud jusqu'au Nord, formant un demy cercle, on voit à l'emboucheure de la grande riviere, qui s'etend de l'Est au Nordest, des vastes plaines, qui regnent mesme au dessous des montagnes qui font le demy rond, & toutes ces campagnes sont entrecoupées si agreeablement d'eau, qu'il semble à la veuë que ce soient autant de riveres, qui forment un si grand nombre d'Isles, qu'il est difficile de les pouvoir conter. On voit toutes ces Isles tellement marquées des pistes d'originaux, de castors, de cerfs, de porc-epy, qu'il semble qu'elles soient le lieu de leur demeure, où ils font leurs courses ordinaires; cinq grandes rivieres se déchargent dans ce lac, qui font que le poisson y est si abondant qu'il faisoit autrefois la principale nourriture d'une grande nation sauvage qui l'habitoit, il n'y a que huit ou dix ans. On y voit encore les tristes monumens du lieu de leur demeure, & les vestiges sur un islet de roches, d'un grand fort fait de gros arbres, par l'Iroquois, d'où il gardoit toutes les avenues, & où il fait souvent des meurtres; il y a sept ans qu'il y tua ou emmena en captivité, quatre-vingt personnes, ce qui fut cause que ce lieu fut entierement abandonné, les originaires s'en estant escartez. Il y avoit grand trafic, & on y abordoit de divers endroits à cause de la riviere qui est grande, & du voisinage de la mer. Cette riviere fait un grand coude tirant au Nordest, il nous fallut faire quatre portages de tresmauvais chemin, par des petits lacs, pour la couper droit au Nordest, & nous fusmes coucher a Nataoüatikoüan.

Le 26. à Tehepimont, país fort montagneux. Le 27. nous achevasmes de franchir les portages. Jusques icy nous n'avions point senti les incommoditez qu'apporte la persecution de ces petites mouches fort picquantes, qu'on nomme mousquites & maringouins; mais ce fut icy où il nous fut impossible de pouvoir dormir, estans continuellement occupez à nous deffendre par les fumées, que nous faisons de tous costez, de la cruelle guerre que nous faisoient ces petits animaux, dont le nombre paroissoit infiny.

Le 28, à peine avions nous avancé un quart de lieuë, que nous rencontrames à main gauche dans un petit ruisseau, un heu avec ses agrez de dix ou douze tonneaux, qui portoit le Pavillon Anglois, & la voile latine; delà à la portée du fusil, nous entrasmes dans deux maisons desertes; un peu plus avant on découvrit que les Sauvages avoient hyverné là proche, & que depuis peu, ils en estoient partis, nous poursuivismes donc nostre route, jusques à une pointe esloignée de six lieues de la maison des Europeans. Là, la marée estant basse, & le vent contraire, nous nous en retirasmes les vases jusqu'au ventre, dans une petite riviere à main droite, tirant au Nordest, ou en tournant, & cherchant, nous rencontrâmes deux ou trois cabanes, & un chien abandonné, qui nous firent connoistre que les Sauvages estoient proche, & qu'il n'y avoit que deux jours qu'ils avoient délogé. Tout ce soir nous arrestames-là, tirant de grands coups de fusils pour nous faire entendre, & nous divertissant à considerer la mer que nous avions tant recherchée, & cette si fameuse baye de Hutson, de laquelle nous parlerons cy-apres.

Le 29. un de nos canots partit pour aller à Miskoutenagachit, là où nos gens pensoient que les Sauvages devoient estre. Le 30, mon host s'estant mis en mauvaise humeur, perdit coeur de passer outre, & ne songeant plus qu'à son retour, disoit qu'il estoit en peine de sa petite fille agée de quatre mois, qu'il avoit laissée, nous retournasmes à la maison des Anglois, il me fallut faire violence pour condescendre à cette humeur brutale, & dissimuler mes ressentimens.

p. 2995

Le matin du premier de Juillet apres avoir dit la sainte Messe, je taschay de luy représenter que nostre canot n'estant pas de retour, il falloit par consequent qu'il eust rencontre des Sauvages & qu'il nous attendit.

Il proposa d'abord de grandes difficultez pour faire une traverse de vingt lieuës en canot sur la mer, je crus deslors qu'il estoit gagné; neanmoins pour l'obliger de se declarer davantage, je luy repartis; il est de ton honneur, & de ceux qui t'envoyent de ne te point arrester, estant si proche; apres tant de fatigues passées, il n'est rien de si difficile que tu ne puisse aisément vaincre avec le secours de Dieu. S'il n'y a rien de si noble, & de si grand que de porter la Foy parmy les infideles, & d'estendre l'Empire de Dieu, tu te devrois estimer heureux de cooperer au salut de quelque personne, qui s'en ressouviendra même apres sa mort, & priera Dieu pour toy, & au contraire tu auras juste sujet de craindre à l'heure de ta mort, les reproches qu'on te pourra faire, si quelqu'un perit par ta lâcheté; ce fut ce qui le gagna entierement, & l'apprehension des jugemens de Dieu à ce dernier passage, luy fit resoudre de continuer la route. J'ay toujours experimenté que les Sauvages sont fort susceptibles des impressions des peines de l'Enfer, & de l'attrait des delices de Ciel.

Alors tout brusquement, il me repartit, dépeche-toy donc, embarquons-nous. Nous partimes ce mesme jour sur les six heures, & à dix lieuës de là sur les deux heures, nous rencontrasmes un canot que le Capitaine, sçachant nostre arrivée envoyoit en diligence au devant de nous, pour nous conduire.

Du plus loin qu'on nous vit approcher, ils sortirent tous de leurs cabanes, & se rendirent sur le bord de l'eau, le Capitaine s'écrie à pleine teste pour nous complimenter, la Robe noire nous vient visiter, la Robe noire nous vient visiter, & soudain une bande de jeunesse se détache du gros, qui accourut à nous ayant l'eau jusqu'au ventre, les uns nous porterent à terre, les autres s'attachèrent à nos canots, & le reste à nostre équipage. Le Capitaine me prend d'une main, & de l'autre se saisit de mon aviron, me conduit droit à son logis, fait porter toutes nos hardes, & met les deux François à mes deux costez. Nous restâmes là, jusqu'à ce qu'il nous eust fait dresser une cabane, à laquelle pendant que les femmes travailloient, ie tiray un beau calumet, & trois brasses de tabac, & les donnay au Capitaine pour petuner, & regaler sa jeunesse. C'est le plus grand plaisir, & la plus grande civilité qu'on puisse faire à un Sauvage de luy donner à petuner principalement en ce pays-là & dans un temps, ou le petun estoit tres-rare.

Dés que nous fumes logez le Capitaine prepara un beau festin, chacun tascha à l'envy de nous caresser, nous apportant ce qu'ils avoient de meilleur, ils vinrent tous l'un apres l'autre, pour nous visiter, les femmes mesme, menoiert leurs enfans pour voir une robe noire, n'en ayant jamais veu.

Je n'estoit pas pourtant pleinement satisfait de ces civilitez extra-

p. 2996

ordinaires. Une chose me tenoit au coeur, i'avois fait reflexion, dans l'en entretien que i'auois eu avec ceux du canot, qui estoient venus au devant de nous, que sous pretexte de quelque interest de la Nation, avec laquelle ils avoient commerce ces gens entr(er)oiert en ombrage de nostre visite, & de nos pretentions, nostre intention ne leur estant pas bien connue.

Pour leur faire prendre les justes sentimens de nostre conduite, ie me resolus de leur persuader que j'estois parfaitement desinteressé dans la visite, que ie leur rendois, & que ie n'estois pas venu pour exercer aucun trafic. n'y m'enrichir à leurs despens, ou au prejudice du peuple avec lequel ils trafiquoient, mais plustost pour les enrichir en leur distribuant liberalement tout ce que nous avions apporté de si loin, avec tant de peine.

Je fis donc assembler tous les Capitaines, & tous les principaux, & leur parlay de cette sorte.

I. present. Kiaskou, c'est le mon du Capitaine, qui veut dire, mauve. Nous jöüissons souvent, & avec plaisir d'un bienfait sans en connoistre l'auteur, & sans en sçavoir la cause. Le bien de la paix avec l'Iroquois que tu gouste maintenant est de cette nature, tu ne connois pas celuy qui te donne cette paix, ny ce qu'il a pretendu en te la donnant.

Regarde ce present, qui t'ouvrira les yeux pour connoistre ton bien-facteur. C'est moy, te dit Onnontio, qui ay fait la paix à ton insceu; l'Iroquois depuis cinq ans ne vous inquiete plus, il ne fait plus d'incursions sur vos terres, je luy ay ravy son Pakamagan, sa hache d'arme, & même j'ay retiré du feu tes deux filles, & beaucoup de tes parens; à la bonne heure vivez en paix, & en assurance, je te rends ton pais, d'oü l'Iroquois t'avoit chassé. Peschez, chassez, & trafiquez par tout, & ne craignez plus rien.

II. present. Ce n'est point l'attrait du traffic, ny du commerce qui m'amene icy. Si j'ay souffert le fatigue d'un si long voyage au travers de tant de hazards, ce n'est point pour autre motif, que pour vous éclairer de la lumiere de la Foy, vous enseigner le chemin du Ciel, & pour vous rendre bien-heureux apres cette vie, ce sont mes pensées, & ce sont les pensées mesme des François, qui m'ont envoyé icy, pour te dire, par ce present que la raison, pour laquelle ils vous ont procuré la paix, avec l'Iroquois, c'est pour vous obliger à prier Dieu tout de bon; vostre conversion au Christianisme doit estre la reconnoissance de ce grand bien, c'est le deuxiesme present.

Je sçay bien qu'il n'appartient qu'à Dieu seul de toucher les coeurs, & de rendre efficace la parole de ses ouvriers, qui l'annoncent en son nom, & pour sa gloire. Mais ces presens eurent un tel effet sur leurs esprits, qu'ils prirent sur le champ, par le mouvement du Saint-Esprit, qui les touchoit, la resolution de se faire tous instruire ; tous ensuite ont voulu embrasser la Foy, & estre baptisez; & celuy qui en est le chef a frayé le chemin à tous les autres, ne m'ayant point voulu laisser partir que je ne l'eusse baptisé.

Je prenois plaisir de disputer avec ce bon vieillard quand il me pressoit pour recevoir le baptesme, & de luy faire beaucoup d'oppositions pour l'affermir davantage dans ses bonnes resolutions.

Vous estes si chancelans, luy disois-je, & si peu fermes dans la croyance d'un Souverain esprit, qui gouverne toutes choses, qui fait tout, & de qui tout dépend, qu'au moindre danger de la vie, de la santé, ou de quelque mauvais succez dans les affaires, qui ne dependent que de la seule volonté de cet esprit souverain, tu auras recours aussi-tost au malin esprit, & to retomberas dans tes anciennes coutumes, & ce genereux dessein, qui t'anime maintenant à prier, à la moindre disgrâce, qui t'arrivera comme un beau-feu au moindre vent, s'esteindra, & s'en ira en fumée.

p. 2997

Cela seroit bon, si j'estoit un enfant, respondit il, tu aurois sujet de eraindre que ie ne fusse pas ferme, dans la resolution que ie prens de prier tout de bon. Celuy qui me donne ces bons sentimens maintenant, me les conservera à l'avenir par sa grace, & s'il a esté si bon, & si puissant pour allumer en moy le feu de ce bon dessein, il ne ; l'esteindra pas, & qui le peut esteindre, puisque luy seul fait tout, & gouverne tout!

Attends, luy repartis-ie, à une autre fois, ie suis pressé de songer à mon retour, il me faudroit trop de temps pour t'instruire à fonds; l'année suivante, ou moy, ou quelque autre viendra, & demoura icy pour vous enseigner tout ce qu'il faut croire, faire, ou éviter pour aller au Ciel, ouy mais, dit il, & qui t'a assure que tu seras en vie l'année suivante, ou que celuy, qui partira de Quebec pour venir icy, y arrivera? & qui t'a dit qu'on me trouvera moy-mesme en vie? ie suis desia vieux, & malade depuis deux lunes, si je meurs sans baptesme, veux to que je sois bruslé? ie diray à celuy, qui a tout fait, que ie voulois estre baptisé, & prier tout de bon, mais que tu n'as pas voulu m'accorder cette grace.

Ce bon-homme disoit cela, d'un si bon coeur, qu'il me tira les larmes des yeux, il estoit toujours apres moy, pour que je le ba(p)tisasse, & il m'avoit déjà retenu trois jours faisant naistre divers incidens pour m'arrester. Le soir ie luy dis resolument demain ie partiray, ha! me repartit-il, je ne suis pas baptisé, he bien demain matin avant mon depart ie te baptiseray; voila qui va bien, dit-il, tu n'es pas menteur.

Le soir nous ayant assemblé, il parla de la sorte. Ce n'est pas la difficulté de parler, qui m'a fait differer de tenir ce Conseil, mais le rapport que tu dois faire aux François, qui me met fort en peine; les presens nous servans de paroles pour declarer nos sentimens, comment veux tu expliquer à Quebec, ce que ie dis, situ ne peux porter, ny recevoir ce que je veux donner? on dira à Quebec, que je n'ay point de bouche, que je suis en enfant, qui ne sçais pas parler. Comme tu es tout epuisé de force, que tu fais grande diligence pour te rendre au plustost, & que les chemins sont si penibles, ce seroit achever de ruiner la santé qui te reste, si je t'allois charger de beaucoup de paquets. Adieu donc, adieu va t'en, quand tu voudras, prens seulement ces lourtres pour dire au François, que voulant menager le reste de tes forces, & pour luy temoigner l'estime que j'ay fait de tes riches presens, ma jeunesse portera ma parole, & mon remerciement au lac de saint Jean l'année suivante.

Le quartriesme Juillet on luy accorda sa juste demande, je le baptisay, il fut nommé Ignace. Un vent contraire nous ayant arrêté toute cette journée luy donna moyen de faire paroistre qu'il y avoit quelque chose d'extraordinaire en luy, & que ce n'estoit pas en vain qu'il avoit receu le baptesme, il fit assembler tout son monde en nostre presence, & paroissant comme tout transporté d'une secrette impression due Ciel:

p. 2998

Mes neveux, dit-il, vous sçavez tous le bonheur qui m'est arrivé de matin, j'ay esté baptisé. Je prie Dieu maintenant, je suis Chrestien, une forte pensée de vouloir eviter les peines eternelles, & de jouir un four des delices du Ciel, m'a touche tout de bon; ie ne suis plus ce que i'ay esté autrefois, ie desavoue tout le mal que i'ay fait, i'ayme de tout mon coeur celui qui a tout fait, c'est en luy seul, que ie veux croire, c'est en luy seul que ie veux esperer; voila ce que ie dis, chacun y est pour soy, & ainsi que chacun pense pour soy, ce qu'il aura à faire.

Il anima ce discours d'un air si plein de l'esprit de Dieu, & l'accompagna de tant de devotion, que tous ses gens en furent si emeus & si fort penetrez, qu'il est certain que si i'eusse voulu condescendre à l'extreme envie de tous tant qu'ils estoient, ie leur aurois donné le saint baptesme, apres quelques iours d'instructions, cependant il nous falloit partir.

Le cinquiesme, ce me fut un sujet de douleur bien sensible, de nie voir obligé de quitter si soudainement le lieu d'une Mission si belle, principalement apres avoir gousté ces premieres douceurs, ie ne cru pas pourtant la quitter tout à fait les laissant dans l'attente de mon prochain retour. Cette separation ne fut pas moins sensible à tous ces bons Sauvages, plusieurs versans des larmes, en me disant adieu, firent assez paroistre la douleur de leur coeur. Ils nous accompagnerent iusques sur le bord de l'eau, & suivirent long-temps de veuë notre canot, il plut à Dieu nous donner assez bon vent, nous fismes voile, & avançâmes nostre chemin iusqu'à la demeure des Anglois où nous couchâmes.

Avant que de sortir de la baye de Hutson, il faudroit vous en donner le plan. Mais le peu de sejour que j'ay fait à Meskoutenagasit ne m'a pas donné le loisir de la visiter, ny de m'instruire à fond des particularitez de cette baye, & du pays voisin, outre que j'ay esté obligé d'employer la meilleure partie de ce temps à instruire & a baptiser soixante-deux personnes tant enfans, qu'adultes ; C'est pourquoy je n'en feray pas icy l'exacte description qu'on peut trouver dans les cartes, qui en ont esté faites.

* * * *

Nous avons trouvé que l'embouchure de la riviere est au cinquantesme degré d'élevation, & nous avons veu, que dés son entrée, elle coupe la baye par quantité de detours, qui forment des Isles propres pour estre habituées.

A la pointe de l'Ouest sont logez les Kinistinons, & dans la baye, les Mataoïakirinouek, & les Monsounik ; chaque nation est separée par de grandes rivieres. Les gens de la mer habitent au coste du Nordest sur la riviere de Miskoutenagasit où nous avons esté, & avancé vingt lieuës dans la mer, c'est une longue pointe de roches, située au cinquanteunesme degré, où de tout temps les Sauvages s'assemblent pour faire leur commerce ; & plus avant, en prenant au Nordest, sont placez les Pitchiboutounibuek, les Koïakoïïkoïesioïiek, & beaucoup d'autres nations; à trois journées dans le profondeur de la baye au Norouest, est une grand riviere, que quelques Sauvages appellent Kichesiou, & quelques autres, la riviere des orignaux, Mousousiou; sur laquelle il y a beaucoup de nations, & sur le chemin on laisse à main gauche l'Isle fameuse de Ouabaskou, qui est de quarante lieues de long & de vingt lieues de large, remplie de toute sorte d'animaux, mais principalement recommandable pour les ours blancs; on dit, qu'il y a une petite baye, où l'eau ne gele jamais, & dans laquelle les navires peuvent hyverner fort commodement.

* * * * *

Nous fumes quatre jours à gagner Nemiskau, où nous arborâmes les armes du Roy sur la pointe de l'Isle, qui coupe ce Lac, le neufiesme de Juillet.

CHAPITRE I.

JOURNAL DU P. DE CRÉPIEUL.

Après être demeuré deux jours avec eux, je retournai à ma cabane, pour me disposer au voyage que je devais entreprendre chez les Mistassins et chez les Papinachois.

Le 2 février, je rencontrai encore une fois le P. Albanel.

Le 6, je le quittai, et j'allai avec les Sauvages qui m'accompagnaient me loger auprès d'une, très-belle rivière où nous fûmes quelques jours en paix, jusqu'à ce que le P. Albanel m'envoya un Français pour m'avertir que l'épouvante était partout, qu'on croyait que les Iroquois étaient en marche et qu'ils avaient surpris un parti de nos Sauvages au lac de Kinougami; que les Outabitibecs et autres tribus se rassembloient dans une enceinte fortifiée, afin de s'y mettre à couvert et en defense. Ces tristes nouvelles m'obligèrent de les aller trouver pour les confessor et les encourager, parce que le P. Albanel était encore incommodé de sa blessure. Je me mis en chemin, accompagné d'un Français.

Nous fîmes vingt lieues dans les bois, avec des peines incroyables, et dans la crainte continuelle d'être rencontrés par les Iroquois. Nous trouvions sur notre route grand nombre de cabanes que la peur avait fait abandonner.

Le 3 mars, nous arrivâmes à l'endroit où les Sauvages s'étaient fortifiés. Ils étaient bien au nombre de quatre-vingts hommes bien décidés. Ils furent ravis de nous voir. Je les consolai de mon mieux et je les confessai. Cependant un de leurs chefs était allé avec trois jeunes gens pour découvrir l'ennemi; en attendant, nous passâmes quatre nuits dans l'épouvante, et pendant les deux premières nous couchâmes dans leur fort et sur la neige.

Le 5, ceux qui étaient allés à la découverte revinrent et nous rassurèrent un peu. Ils nous apprirent que le meurtre qui avait causé cette panique générale ne s'était pas fait si près de nous, mais au lac de Piécouagami, et que les Sauvages qui demeuraient sur ces bords allaient se fortifier et s'assembler en grand nombre pour attaquer les Iroquois, le printemps prochain.

Ces nouvelles, qui nous tranquillisaient, me permirent de retourner à ma première cabane. J'y étais depuis quelques jours, lorsque cinq Sauvages envoyés par le chef des Mistassins vinrent m'avertir de sa part de l'aller trouver pour l'instruire. Il leur avait fort recommandé de m'aider autant qu'ils pourraient pour adoucir les difficultés et la longueur du chemin qu'il y avait à parcourir pour arriver jusqu'à lui.

Je partis avec eux le 26 mars. Nous fûmes obligés de marcher dans l'eau jusqu'à mi-jambes et avec bien de la peine. Nous établîmes notre cabane au haut d'une colline qui borde la rivière qu'on nomme Emenipemagua, à cause de sa rapidité et de plusieurs ilots dont elle est entrecoupée. Elle est en outre très-large et très-profonde, et extrêmement poissonneuse. Elle descend vers le nord-ouest, où, perdant un peu de sa largeur, elle prend le nom de rivière des Papinachois.

Nous marchâmes deux grandes journées pour trouver la chute d'eau dont elle est coupée. Ce ne fut pas sans de grandes fatigues, parce que nous étions obligés de marcher continuellement sur les glaces, qui étaient extrêmement unies et glissantes. Enfin nous arrivâmes à la belle rivière de Mauchautraganich. J'y trouvai plusieurs Sauvages qui me reçurent avec tous les témoignages de joie dont ils purent s'aviser. Ils n'épargnaient ni les festins, ni les danses, ni les chants, et ils venaient incessamment me visiter, au point que je trouvai ces pauvres gens tout disposés à recevoir mes instructions, et j'admirai les miracles de la grâce, qui les avait ainsi préparés à m'écouter. Je me mis à les instruire, en particulier et en public, pendant six ou sept semaines, qui me semblèrent bien courtes. J'en baptisai cent deux, tant enfants qu'adultes, et entre autres deux de leurs chefs. Ces bons Sauvages me témoignèrent publiquement leur joie et ne savaient de quelle manière me remercier du bien que je leur avais fait en leur conférant le baptême. Quatre vieillards à qui je l'avais différé depuis un an étaient du nombre de ceux qui me reçurent dans cette bourgade; ils déclarèrent par un discours public combien ils s'estimaient heureux, et me convièrent à les instruire plus pleinement et à les revenir trouver, ce que je leur promis.

Parmi ces Sauvages, plusieurs, qui étaient descendus de la baie du Nord, furent fort surpris de voir des Français venir de si loin, et furent ravis d'entendre les discours que je leur adressai sur la religion. Ils promirent tous de se rendre au printemps prochain à l'endroit où ils apprendraient que je ferais la Mission, afin d'être instruits plus à loisir qu'ils ne pouvaient l'être pour lors; ils ajoutèrent même qu'ils s'efforceraient d'amener avec eux grand nombre de leurs compatriotes pour le même dessein.

p. 3001

Cependant une partie des Mistassins partirent peu de temps après pour Québec, afin d'aller présenter leurs respects à M. de Frontenac, gouverneur du Canada. Ils avaient aussi intention de lui demander sa protection contre l'Iroquois, de l'assurer qu'ils le prenaient pour leur père, et qu'afin de porter mieux la qualité de ses enfants, ils voulaient continuer d'aimer la Prière, pour laquelle ils savaient qu'il avait tant de zèle. Je m'embarquai avec eux. Pendant notre voyage, nous fûmes presque tous malades, et quatre ou cinq des plus âgés moururent. Ces bons Sauvages n'avaient point encore vu de missionnaires avant moi, et, comme ils s'étaient convertis dès les premières instructions qu'ils avaient reçues, Dieu voulut récompenser ainsi leur promptitude à obéir à la grâce, en leur accordant la grâce de mourir peu de temps après leur baptême. J'étais assez abattu par la faim que j'avais soufferte en diverses rencontres, et par les fatigues que m'avaient causées tant de voyages si difficiles, mais Dieu me donna encore assez de force pour achever le reste.

Partis le 6 de mai, nous fîmes trois grands portages avant que de nous rendre à la rivière des Mistassins et à celle des Papinachois. Le mauvais temps, la pluie et les marinois, nous incommodèrent beaucoup. Je visitai cependant quelques pauvres malades et quatre grandes cabanes, que je trouvai sur les bords du Manaouni, rivière extrêmement poissonneuse, qui nourrit quantité de brochets d'une grosseur extraordinaire. Après être demeuré quelques jours auprès du grand et profond lac d'Etchitagameth, où je baptisai trois personnes, je me remis en chemin, accompagné de vingt canots de Sauvages. Nous franchîmes heureusement douze rapides, où les eaux étaient si basses qu'il fallut nous mettre à l'eau pour trainer nos canots nous-mêmes, ce qui ne se put faire sans beaucoup de peine.

Le 24 mai, nous arrivâmes à Chécoutimi; j'y trouvai quelques Français et grand nombre de Sauvages, auxquels j'expliquai les vérités de notre Foi. Je conférai le baptême à trois enfants et je le différai à quelques adultes qui le demandaient; je voulais qu'ils en connussent encore mieux l'importance, et que j'eusse moi-même plus de loisir de connaître s'ils en étaient dignes.

Le 21, je quittai Chécoutimi, accompagné seulement de douze canots. Nous arrivâmes à Québec peu de jours après, et les Sauvages que j'avais emmenés allèrent sur-le-champ rendre leurs respects à M. le comte de Frontenac, qui les reçut avec bien de la bonté, et qui les exhorta fortement à continuer de vivre en véritables chrétiens.

MEMORANDUM ON THE KING'S POST BY P.
CLAUDE GODEFROI COQUART, 1750.

JESUIT RELATIONS, &C., VOL. LXIX.

LES ISLETS DE JEREMIE.

Le Poste des Islets de Jeremie scitu  30 lieues plus bas que Tadoussak produit de L huile de Loup marin et des Pelleteries. on fait la chasse du Loup marin aux premieres glaces, jusque vers les Rois, et on le reprend vers le 15 de mars quelquefois plutost jusqua ce que les glaces disparaissent. elle se fait a la pointe de Betsiami tes a deux lieues du poste. Lespace de temps que se trouve entre le 15 de janvier et le 15 de Mars les sauvages le passent dans le bois pour chasser. ainsi ce poste est Mixte 35 a 40 Barriques c'est le produit des ann es Communes: Je ne scay pourant quel sera celui de cet hyver, car ayant perdu Lannée dernière beaucoup de monde par la maladie, Il pourroit bien se faire que cette année ne seroit pas d'un grand produit quant a lhuile quoiqu'il en soit, il ne faut pas beaucoup de temps pour raccommoier ce poste: le commis peut en arreter pour la mer de ceux qui ont continue de chasser dans le bois, a moins qu'il ait l'experience que la chasse du bois soit plus avantagieuse que celle de la mer.

p. 3007

Non seulement il recoit les Pelleteries de sauvages domiciliés du Poste, mais encore celles des sauvages de la profondeur des terres qui les luy apportent a son poste et cest la querelle qui a toujours été entre les commis de Chek8timi et des islets: celui la reproche a celui ci de luy Enlever ses sauvages et veu proprement; L'un et L'autre s'attribuent les sauvages de Mana8an et d'8nichtagan—entre eux le debat: ceux qui ont les postes ne peuvent que gagner puis que L'un et L'autre commis travaillent pour le même maitre: mais la noble Emulation de leur postes sur son camarade, lenvie de montrer de bons retour entretient cette petite guerre. Ils se volent reciproquement des sauvages. Ils inventent mille petites ruses pour les attirer. Il n'y a pas grand mal a tout cela. de plus au commencement de Juin, les commis des Islets part pour Manik8agan, il remonte la Riviere jusqu'a un certain endroit ou se trouvent les sauvages qui habitent ces terres, il traite avec eux, et Rappelle leurs Pelleteries. ainsi le poste des islets produit raisonnablement de Castor 4 a 500 belles martres quelquefois 800 et davantage. Des peaux de Caribou bien passées, et des peaux de loup marins. quand les Renards donnent le long de la mer, il n'est pas celui qui en fait le moins.

Dailleurs ce poste nest point de depense, il na point de passages a essayer qu'un canot au printemps qu'on envoie des Sept isles a Quebec et le commis ne donne rien pour Rien. aussi M. Cugnet disoit de ce Poste des islets etoit celui qui luy fesoit le moins de depense, et Luy rapportoit proportion gardee plus de profit.

Je remercie la divine Providence, mes enfants, qui me fournit l'occasion d'aller vous voir pour vous communiquer les grâces et les bénédictions que le Seigneur veut bien accorder à ma visite pastorale. J'irai d'autant plus volontiers chez vous que je suis persuadé que vous ne mettrez point d'obstacles aux grâces de cette première visite de votre évêque dans votre pays. Rendezvous donc bien attentifs aux instructions que vous fera votre missionnaire à ce sujet. Il ne manquera pas de vous dire que pour attirer les bénédictions de Dieu sur vous, il faut l'aimer, le servir en vrais chrétiens; il faut avoir horreur du péché et ne plus le commettre.

Votre missionnaire vous instruira aussi de ce qui regarde le sacrement de confirmation, que je ne donnerai qu'à ceux qui seront instruits, et qui par une vie chrétienne seront en état de recevoir le St Esprit. Car il ne sauroit demeurer dans une conscience criminelle; ainsi, les impudiques, les ivrognes, les voleurs, ceux qui ne payent pas leurs dettes, enfin les mauvais chrétiens ne doivent pas s'attendre à recevoir ce sacrement. Ce seroit pour eux le plus grand malheur s'ils le recevaient avec ces mauvaises dispositions.

[21 March 1803.]

Appliquez-vous donc, mes enfants, à vous purifier du péché afin que j'aie la consolation de ne refuser personne. C'est à quoi je vous exhorte de tout mon coeur. Je ferai la visite pastorale le 21 juillet à Portneuf.

BISHOP OF QUEBEC TO MR. McTAVISH, MONTREAL.

A Mr McTavish, Ecr.

à Montréal

1803.

Longueuil, 21 mars

Monsieur,

Je n'ai pu vous rencontrer à Montréal la première fois: vous étiez à votre seigneurie de Terrebonne. Deux autres fois on m'avoit flatté du plaisir de vous voir au diner de quelques uns de vos amis, et j'en ai été frustré. Je prends le parti de vous écrire au sujet du missionnaire qui a toujours été chargé de la mission des Postes du Roi pendant le régie de ces fermes sous l'ancienne société. Si vous êtes d'avis que j'envoye encore ce missionnaire aux Sauvages qui le désirent , je dois vous observer que, si l'on veut que le missionnaire y fasse quelque bien, et que les sauvages retirent de son ministère les fruits qu'on en doit attendre, tant pour le maintien des bonnes moeurs parmi eux que pour l'avantage de votre société, il est absolument nécessaire, d'après l'expérience, que vos agents tiennent la main aux précautions suivantes.

1.—de ne permettre jamais qu'il soit vendu, ou donné, ou livré aux sauvages une quantité de rum suffisante pour les enivrer, et que cela soit observé même dans leurs jours de fêtes, tel que le nouvel an, les jours gras, les festins publics au retour de la chasse et quand l'huile s'apporte; 2.—que l'on ne permette aux engagés canadiens et autres aucune communication avec les sauvages, excepté celles qui sont absolument nécessaires; parcequ'on a reconnu que ces fréquentations inutiles tournoient toujours au prejudice des sauvages et de la société. Le moyen de procurer les choses ey-dessus demandées seroit de choisir pour commis des hommes de bonnes moeurs, assez fermes pour en imposer à leurs engagés, et assez soigneux pour verser eux-mêmes, ou faire verser devant eux, le rum aux sauvages dans tous les cas où il est raisonnable de leur en donner.

Quant à la subsistance et aux appointements du missionnaire, voici ce que pratiquoit l'ancienne compagnie. Elle lui donnoit annuellement la somme de 1400^l ou 50 guinées, payable au ler d'octobre. Elle l'envoyoit chercher au printemps, à Rimouski, ou payait sa traversée, le faisant conduire en canot de poste en poste pendant tout le temps de la mission; et à la fin de juillet, le fesoit reconduire à Rimouski, ou payoit encore sa traversée. Pendant tout le temps de la mission, il étoit nourri, logé et fourni de lit par la Compagnie. Il espère que les nouveaux associés ne feront pas moins.

Les postes de Mingan et de Maskouarau, qui font partie du total cette mission, ne se trouvant pas compris dans votre lot, mais en la possession de Mr Grant, ce Monsieur est convenu de payer pour sa part la somme annuelle de deize guinées en déduction des 50, de faire prendre le missionnaire par ses canots aux Sept Iles, dans le temps qu'il a coutume d'y arriver, et de le faire reconduire, après le voyage de Mingan et de Maskouarau, pendant lequel il le defrayoit, nourriroit &c, comme feront les associés des autres postes.

Les anciens Bourgeois aidoient à batir les chapelles. Il n'y en a pas à la riviere Godbout, aux Sept Iles, à Napensipon; et ce défaut gêne beaucoup le missionnaire. Un mot de votre part aux commis et engagés de chacun de ces endroits suffiroit pour leur faire lever à très petit frais une batisse d'environ vingt pieds sur quinze: le reste, l'église le feroit à ses propres frais.

Voilà, Monsieur, ce que j'avois à vous dire, si j'avois pu me procurer le plaisir de vous voir. Je vous prie d'être bien convaincu que tout ce que je vous écris, ce que j'observe, ce que je désire, ne tend, dans mes motifs, qu'à l'avantage des Sauvages et au bien de la Société. Je souhaite votre réponse avant jeudi.

Je suis &c.,

Monseigneur,

J'ai l'honneur de vous transmettre l'extrait d'un statut du Parlement impérial de la Grande Bretagne, qui annexe au Gouvernement de Terre-neuve l'Isle d'Anticosti et une partie considérable de la côte Labrador. Si la commission que vous avez du St. Siège en qualité de Vicaire Apostolique s'étend, comme je l'espère, sur tout le gouvernement de Terre-neuve, il s'ensuit que ce gouvernement étant accru, votre juridiction épiscopale doit s'accroître dans la même proportion, et que cette Isle d'Anticosti ainsi que la partie de la côte Labrador qui est au-delà de la rivière St Jean ne sont plus de mon diocèse. Je bénirai Dieu de ce raccourcissement et consentirais bien volontiers à en subir quelques autres. Le tout, au reste, dépend des termes dans lesquels est conçue la Bulle qui vous établit Vicaire Apostolique. J'ose espérer que vous voudrez bien m'en donner information.

My Lord,

I enclose here an Apostolical Brief I brought from Rome, which adds to your Lordship's jurisdiction the Island of Anticosti with the part of Labrador Coast lying at the north of the St John's river. Hitherto I sent every year a missionary to pay a visit to the Montagnais Indians as far as Mingan & Maskwaru, which ports are both below St John's river. In my quality of your Vicar General I intend to continue the same in the future, as long as you deem it proper and I'll be able to answer the spiritual wants of that part of the coast.

Nothing may be more agreable to me than to hear of your Lordship and the progress of the kingdom of God in your extensive mission.

à St Jean, Ile de Terreneuve.

Monseigneur,

J'ai appris que la divine Providence vous avait appelé à succéder à Mgr Scallan dans le Vicariat Apostolique de l'Ile de Terreneuve. Ayant eu plusieurs fois des relations avec le vénérable défunt pour ce qui concernait la bien de mon troupeau et du sien, je me flatte que Votre Grandeur voudra bien continuer avec moi les mêmes relations, pour le même objet.

Je vous adresse des lettres de Grand Vicaire qui vous mettront en état de secourir ceux de mes diocésains qui se trouveroient par la suite dans les limites de votre juridiction. Je prie V. G. de vouloir bien m'en adresser de semblables afin que je puisse rendre le même service aux fidèles de votre Vicariat Apostolique qui pourraient venir dans mon diocèse. J'aurai besoin prochainement de ces pouvoirs de votre part pour qu'ils puissent être exercés par un missionnaire que j'envoie tous les ans dans cette partie de mon diocèse qui avoisine la Rivière St. Jean. Cette rivière étant la ligne de séparation entre votre diocèse et le mien, il s'en suit qu'il ne peut exercer aucun pouvoir au-delà sans y être autorisé par Votre Grandeur. C'est pour cela spécialement que des lettres de grand Vicaire de votre part me seraient nécessaires. Comme je suis dans un âge bien avancé et qu'il pourrait arriver au premier moment que Dieu me retirât du monde, je prie Votre Grandeur d'adresser de semblables lettres à Mgr. Joseph Signay, évêque de Fussala, mon Coadjuteur, afin qu'à ma mort il se trouve ici quelqu'un qui puisse exercer vos pouvoirs en votre nom, en cas de besoin.

Je n'ai pas encore reçu réponse à la lettre que j'eus l'honneur d'écrire à Votre Grandeur dans le mois de décembre dernier, vous demandant des pouvoirs en faveur des Missionnaires que l'Evêque de Québec envoie tous les ans dans les Postes du Roi, et qui ont occasion d'exercer leur ministère en faveur d'un assez grand nombre de familles sauvages qui se trouvent dans les limites de votre juridiction. J'écris de nouveau à Votre Grandeur pour cet objet dont elle sait apprécier l'importance, et je lui fais passer des lettres de Grand Vicaire afin qu'elle puisse secourir mes diocésains. L'indult mentionné dans ces lettres est un indult imprimé, comprenant 29 articles, que la cour de Rome a soin d'envoyer, si je ne me trompe pas, à tous les Evêques de l'Amérique. BISHOP OF QUEBEC TO APOSTOLIC VICAR,

Québec, 4 avril 1834.

A Mgr M. Fleming, Ev. de Carpa, Vic. Apostolique de Terreneuve.
Monseigneur,

Ne recevant point de réponse aux différentes lettres que j'ai eu l'honneur de vous écrire depuis que j'ai l'administration du diocèse de Québec, je m'étais adressé à la cour de Rome pour obtenir le permission d'autoriser le missionnaire que j'envoie, chaque année, dans les Postes de Roi, à exercer les fonctions du saint ministère en faveur des sauvages de Portneuf, Mingan et autres lieux au-delà de la rivière St Jean qui se trouvent sous votre juridiction, et qui ont reçu régulièrement jusqu'à présent la visite d'un prêtre. J'ai en effect obtenu un Indult du St Siège, en date du 18 août 1833, qui me donne toute la latitude que je désirais. C'est pour me conformer à une disposition de cet Indult que j'ai l'honneur d'informer V. Grandeur de ce que le St Siège vient de faire en faveur d'une partie de votre troupeau. Il m'aurait été néanmoins bien plus agréable de recevoir de votre part les pouvoirs dont j'avais besoins, et que j'ai réclamés depuis près de deux ans, en plusieurs circonstances, surtout depuis le voyage que vous avez fait en Europe. Au reste, V.G. voudra bien demeurer persuadée que je n'ai demandé ces pouvoirs au St Siège pour cette partie éloignée du territoire confié à votre jurisdiction que parce que je désespérais d'en recevoir de Terreneuve, et parce qu'il me faisait peine de voir privés de secours spirituels de pauvres sauvages qui faisaient partie, il n'y a pas encore longtemps, du troupeau de l'Evêque de Québec. Présument que V.G. n'a pas un nombre suffisant de prêtres pour en envoyer à ces sauvages, j'ai lieu de croire qu'elle aura pour agréable de voir un de ses confrères aller à son secours.

BISHOP OF QUEBEC TO MGR. FLEMING, APOSTOLIC VICAR, NEWFOUNDLAND

Québec, 6 mars 1838.

A Mgr Fleming, Ev. de Carpa,
Vic. Apost. de Terreneuve.

Monseigneur,

J'eus l'honneur d'écrire plusieurs fois à V. Grandeur, il y a près de cinq ans, afin de solliciter pour les prêtres que j'envoie visiter, chaque été, les sauvages de cette partie de mon diocèse qui est séparée du votre par la rivière St Jean le pouvoir d'exercer le saint ministère en faveur des sauvages soumis à votre juridiction, qui sont établis dans le voisinage de cette rivière. Ne recevant de V. G. aucune réponse à ces lettres, je fus obligé de recourir au St Siège qui, par un indult du 18 août 1833, m'accorda les pouvoirs dont j'avais besoin, comme je me fis un devoir de vous en informer par la lettre du 4 avril 1834.

Depuis cette date, des marchands m'ont appris que d'autres sauvages appartenant aussi à votre juridiction (ils habitent la Baie des Esquimaux), mais bien éloignés de la limite qui sépare votre juridiction de la mienne, seraient disposés à recevoir la semence de la foi si quelque prêtre leur était envoyé, et me pressent de leur rendre ce service. Jusqu'à présent je me suis défendu sur ce que ces pauvres infidèles n'appartiennent point à mon diocèse, et sur ce que je n'avais point de prêtre dont je puisse disposer en leur faveur, quand même ils feraient partie de mon troupeau. Comme ils sont sujets de Votre Grandeur, je crois devoir vous faire connaître leurs dispositions afin que vous leur procuriez l'assistance d'un ministre évangélique, si vous en avez à votre disposition. Il n'est pas hors de propos que vous sachiez que des Frères Moraves sont établis parmi eux, et s'efforcent, sans beaucoup de succès à la vérité, de leur enseigner leurs erreurs.

Cependant, comme V. Grandeur n'a peut-être pas de prêtre à leur envoyer, j'aimerais à être autorisé à la suppléer, dans le cas où le nombre de mes prêtres venant à augmenter, j'en pourrais trouver un ou plusieurs qui fussent assez zélés pour entreprendre une si pénible besogne. C'est pourquoi je prie V.G. de m'envoyer des pouvoirs suffisans, non seulement pour les sauvages dont je viens de parler, mais encore pour tous les fidèles ou infidèles qui habitent le territoire qui a été annexé au Vicariat Apostolique de l'Isle de Terreneuve par la Bulle de N.S. Père le Pape Pie VII, en date du 1 février 1820. Le prêtre qui seroit envoyé à la Baie des Esquimaux

Votre Grandeur peut être convaincue que ce n'est par aucun esprit d'empiétation que je lui fais la présente demande, mais par le seul désir de procurer la gloire de Dieu, en le faisant connaître par de pauvres âmes qui sont peut-être exposées à ne le connaître jamais, ou à tomber, en le connaissant, dans des erreurs qui ne leur seraient guères plus favorables que l'infidélité.

Toutefois, Votre Grandeur voudra bien comprendre que je ne me charge point de pourvoir aux besoins spirituels des sauvages en question, mais que je m'efforcerai d'y pourvoir autant que mes moyens me le permettront, si leur évêque est privé des moyens de le faire.

V.G. voudra bien me faire la faveur de répondre aussitôt que possible à la présente.

J'ai l'honneur &c.

ans, le 1 juin 1834, à la place de celui du 13 mars 1833 qui est mentionné dans cet article, et vous aurez égard aux autres clauses du même article. Ceci s'entend des Postes du Roi.

Quant à Portneuf, Mingan, &c., vous observerez la teneur du 8e article de vos pouvoirs, excepté qu'au lieu de citer dans vos actes l'indult du 13 janvier 1833, vous citerez celui de 18

C

BISHOP OF QUEBEC TO MONSIEUR DE JESSÉ.

Québec, 9 mai 1844.

A Monsieur de Jessé,

Présid. de la Prop. de la foi, à Lyon.

Monsieur le Président,

J'ai l'honneur de vous accuser réception des deux lettres que vous avez eu la bonté de m'écrire par ordre du Conseil de Lyon, la première le 4 décembre 1843, et la seconde le 4 mars dernier.

A la réception de la première, j'ai été heureux d'apprendre que le Conseil avait bien voulu se rendre aux observations que je m'étais permis de lui faire dans ma lettre du 10 octobre 1843, et qu'il laissait à la libre disposition du Conseil de Québec la totalité des sommes recueillies dans la diocèse jusqu'à l'époque de la cloture de ses comptes, au 1 novembre 1843. Avant l'arrivée de cette lettre, Mr le trésorier Parant s'était conformé aux désirs du Conseil en envoyant à Lyon l'état de sa recette à l'époque cidessus mentionnée.

Monseigneur de Juliopolis, à son retour d'Europe, m'a communiqué les propositions qui lui avaient été faites par le Conseil de Lyon touchant l'accession de notre oeuvre à l'oeuvre générale, sauf toutefois l'approbation du

p. 3018

Conseil de Paris. Comme il m'a informé en même temps que le Conseil de Paris n'avait pas jugé à props d'approuver toutes ces propositions, j'ai dû attendre qu'il m'en fût communiqué de nouvelles approuvées des deux Conseils. Votre lettre du 4 mars m'ayant fait connaitre les conditions sur lesquelles les deux Conseils désirent quel'union soit basée, je me suis empressé de les communiquer aux membres de notre Conseil particulier et il m'est agréable de vous annoncer que ceux-ci les ont acceptées sans hésitation, persuadés que les Conseils centraux ne négligeront pas les intérêts de nos missions chaque fois qu'il sera question de faire la répartition des aumônes de l'association entre les missions des deux mondes. La résolution que j'ai l'honneur de vous transmettre avec la présente vous donnera la preuve de l'acquiescement de notre Conseil à l'union telle qu'elle est proposée par les Conseils centraux.

Le diocèse de Quebec, quant à la partie de son territoire colonisée depuis longtemps, étant un diocèse régulièrement établi et se trouvant à peu près sur le même pied que les diocèses de France, je suppose que les renseignements que vous me demandez doivent se borner aux missions du diocèse qui ont besoin d'être secourues par l'Oeuvre de la propagation de la foi.

Les missions du diocèse comprennent (je ne parle pas des missions de la Rivière Rouge et de la Colombie qui viennent d'être séparées de mon diocèse et aux besoins desquelles les Conseils centraux de Lyon et de Paris veulent bien pourvoir) le territoire habité par les sauvages infidèles ou convertis à la foi et les établissements nouvellement colonisés, soit par nos compatriotes canadiens, soit par des émigrés venus de la Grande Bretagne et surtout de l'Irlande. Sept prêtres sont employés chez les sauvages, et quinze dans les nouveaux établissements du pays, soit permanemment, soit pendant une partie de l'année seulement. Je dois dire que ce nombre de prêtres est insuffisant; il en faudrait un plus grand nombre pour répondre à tous les besoins.

Il y a 26 chapelles dans ces missions, et 6 sont sur le point d'être construites ou sont déjà commencées. Je m'efforcerais d'en faire construire beaucoup d'autres si j'avais des prêtres en nombre suffisant pour les faire visiter, persuadé que le Conseil de Lyon me viendrait en aide avec libéralité dans cette entreprise.

Deux des missions chez les Sauvages se font exclusivement aux frais de l'Association. Quant aux autres, l'Association ne fait qu'ajouter aux contributions des fidèles ce qui est nécessaire tant pour le soutien et les frais de voyage des missionnaires que pour l'érection et l'ornement des chapelles; quelques missionnaires ne reçoivent qu'une juste indemnité pour leurs frais de voyage.

Comme je vous l'ai dit plus haut, le nombre des prêtres que j'ai à ma disposition est insuffisant pour les besoins de mon diocèse. Il s'y forme incessamment de nouveaux établissements, et je vois bien clairement que si les vocations ecclésiastiques ne deviennent pas plus nombreuses bien des âmes seront en souffrance. Pour remédier à ce mal, je me propose de me servir des secours que les Conseils de Lyon et de Paris voudrant bien allouer à mon diocèse pour faire étudier des jeunes gens pauvres qui montreraient des dispositions à se consacrer à l'oeuvre des missions. J'en ai déjà un bon nombre sur mes charges, mais il n'est pas en proportion avec les besoins que je vois dans l'avenir. Je pour porter un secours plus efficace aux fidèles parlant la langue anglaise, j'ai dessein d'envoyer quelques uns de mes jeunes clercs faire une partie de leurs études théologiques dans quelque Séminaire des Etats Unis, pour qu'ils puissent s'y mettre au fait de cette langue dont la connaissance devient de plus en plus nécessaire au clergé canadien.

J'ai encore dessein de fonder à la Grande Baie sur la rivière Saguenay, poste situé à environ 60 lieues de cette ville, une maison de prêtres de la congrégation des Oblats (dont la maison-mère est dans le diocèse de Marseille) pour prendre soin des sauvages des établissements qui se forment rapidement sur les bords de cette grande rivière. J'espère que dès l'automne prochain deux et même trois de ces bons Pères pourront aller y établir leur résidence.

Vous voyez, Monsieur, par les projets que j'ai en vue, par le nombre de nos missions, de nos chapelles finies ou en construction, par l'accroissement rapide de la population dans les terres encore vierges de notre pays, quelle est à peu près la mesure des secours que nous attendons des conseils centraux. Nous avons d'autant plus de besoins d'avoir part à sa libéralité que les ministres de l'erreur soudoyés par des sociétés formées en Europe, font plus d'efforts pour pervertir nos co-religionnaires, surtout dans les nouveaux établissements où les catholiques étant mêlés avec les protestants courent plus de dangers pour leur foi. Quelques uns de ces ministres ont été mondés de la Suisse dans le but avoué de travailler à la perversion des Canadiens français.

Maintenant si le Conseil désire savoir sur quelle allocation nous croyons pouvoir compter pour faire face aux dépenses de nos missions pour l'année prochaine, je me permettrai de lui exprimer qu'une somme égale à celle dont nous lui avons rendu compte en 1842 ferait probablement notre affaire, et nous mettrait surtout en état de réaliser mes projets par rapport à l'établissement d'une maison d'Oblats sur le Saguenay. Au reste, si j'émetts un semblable voeu c'est que j'y ai été encouragé par le rapport que m'a fait le digne évêque de Juliopolis des dispositions favorables des deux Conseils à l'égard de nos missions.

La population catholique de tout mon diocèse est d'un peu plus de 200,000 âmes; mais je n'ai pas assez de données pour vous faire connaître celle que renferment nos missions. Quant aux infidèles qui y sont renfermés, il m'a été impossible jusqu'à présent de pouvoir en connaître le nombre parce qu'il n'y a pas de rapport entre le pays où ils habitent et l'intérieur du diocèse. Mais il doit être très restreint à présent que le territoire du Nord-Ouest et celui de la Colombie n'appartiennent plus au diocèse de Québec.

Les ballots qui renferment les Annales qu'on a bien voulu nous envoyer de Lyon ne nous sont pas encore parvenus; mais nous les attendons de jour en jour de New York. Ceux qui ont été expédiés il n'y a pas longtemps, du Havre à New York par Mr Legros à MM. Lasalce et Cie, ont été soumis à un droit de 45 piastres à la douane de cette dernière ville; mais nous avons fait faire des démarches pour obtenir, s'il est possible, la remise de ce droit exorbitant. Je prie Mr le Secrétaire du Conseil de Lyon de vouloir bien adresser les ballots qu'il nous enverra à l'avenir à Mr. Cazeau, Secrétaire du diocèse, Québec, Canada, plutôt qu'à Mr le trésorier Parant qui a demandé d'être déchargé de la correspondance que ces envois lui occasionnaient. Les ballots doivent être recommandés à Mr. R. Desrivières, Commission Merchant, No. 71, Front Street, New York.

BISHOP OF QUEBEC TO FATHER Fiset.

Nicolet, 10 mai 1844.

Rév. P. Fiset,
de la Congrégation des Oblats, Québec.

Mon Révérend Père,

J'aurais bien désiré me trouver à Québec à votre départ pour les postes où vous allez bientôt exercer votre zèle, afin de vous témoigner la satisfaction que j'éprouve de pouvoir vous envoyer conjointement avec Mr. Boucher y porter secours aux sauvages et autres de cette partie éloignée de mon diocèse. Mon digne Coadjuteur ne manquera pas de la faire en mon nom.

Je me fais devoir de vous autoriser par la teneur de la présente à exercer dans les lieux susdits tous les pouvoirs qui vous seront nécessaires. Ces pouvoirs sont les mêmes que ceux dont jouit Mr. Boucher comme missionnaire pour ces mêmes lieux, et mon secrétaire vous en donnera communication.

De plus, en ma qualité de Vicaire Général de Mgr Fleming, évêque de l'Isle de Terre-Neuve et autres lieux, je vous autorise à exercer ces mêmes pouvoirs au-delà de la rivière St Jean, excepté celui de faire des mariages mixtes, que ce digne prélat ne m'a pas communiqué.

p. 3021

Je prie le Seigneur de bénir l'oeuvre sainte que vous entreprenez pour sa gloire, et de disposer les peuples que vous visiterez à recevoir sa divine parole dans le même esprit que vous allez la leur annoncer.

Je suis &c.

BISHOP OF QUEBEC TO FATHER HONORAT.

Québec, 4 octobre 1844.

Révd. Père Honorat, Oblat, Québec.

Mon Rêvérend Père,

Je vous confie par la présente, jusqu'à révocation de ma part de celle de mes successeurs, le soin 1.—des fidèles de la mission de St Alexis de la Grande Baie, sur le Saguenay, et de ceux de tous les autres établissements qui se sont formés ou qui se formeront par la suite sur les bords de cette rivière; 2.—des Sauvages des Postes du Roi et de la seigneurie de Mingan; 3.—des Sauvages qui fréquentent les bords de la rivière St Maurice; 4.—enfin de tous les Sauvages fidèles et infidèles qui habitent la partie nord de mon diocèse, au-delà des paroisses qui y ont été formées.

Je joins à la présente des écrits où se trouvent détaillés les pouvoirs que vous pourrez exercer soit en faveur des colons du Saguenay, soit en faveur des Sauvages.

Comme curé missionnaire vous aurez droit de percevoir de tous les colons du Saguenay les dîmes et autres oblations autorisées dans le diocèse. J'ai lieu de croire que ceux des colons qui ne se livrent pas à l'agriculture s'empresseront de contribuer, comme les autres, à votre soutien par des souscriptions libérales.

Comme missionnaire des sauvages des Postes du Roi et de la seigneurie de Mingan, vous recevrez de l'honorable Compagnie de la Baie d'Hudson un traitement de cent guinées par année. La Compagnie se charge de faire conduire le missionnaire dans les différents postes où se réunissent les sauvages, et pourvoit à sa subsistance durant la mission.

La mission chez les Sauvages du St Maurice et autres se fait au moyen des allocations de l'Oeuvre de la propagation de la foi. Chaque printemps l'on vous remettra entre les mains la somme allouée pour cet objet.

p. 3022

L'établissement de Chicoutimi renfermant une population assez considérable, je serai bien aise qu'il reçoive de fréquentes visites de votre part ou de celle de vos dignes auxiliaires. Il sera à propos d'y ériger une chapelle aussitôt que possible, parce que les colons ne savent où s'assembler pour remplir leurs devoirs religieux. Quant aux autres établissements le long du Saguenay, vous voudrez bien faire en sorte qu'ils soient visités au moins deux fois par année. L'Oeuvre de la propagation de la foi a coutume de faire les frais de cette visite, mais il serait à désirer que les intéressés fussent chargés de ce soin. La visite que vous ferez chez eux dans le cours de l'automne vous fera connaître s'ils en sont capables.

Je prie Dieu qu'il répande sur vous et sur vos excellents confrères ses plus abondante bénédictions, et je demeure &c.

4.—Vota quaelibet, exceptis votis casitatis perpetuae et religionis ingrediendae, in alia pia opera commutandi;

5.—Omnes omino benedictiones quae non requirunt ordinem episcopalem faciendi;

6.—Super bannorum proclamatione, ac super prohibito nuptiarum tempore dispendandi;

7.—Dispensandi cum conjugibus super impedimentis matrimonio supervenientibus ac ipsius usum auferentibus;

8.—Super impedimentis publicae honestatis, criminis etiam (in casibus occultis tantummodo) utroque contrahentium machinante et morte secuta; cognationis spiritualis, etiam inter levantem et levatum, necnon inter baptizantem et baptisatum, dummodo sint laici; affinitatis et consanguinitatis in secundo, tertio et quarto gradu pro matrimoniis vel contractis vel contrahendis, ea tamen lege ut quaecumque juxta hunc octavum articulum dispensaveris exprimas in registris seu actibus publicis (nisi agatur de impedimentis occultis) te dispensasse vi facultatis Nobis ad decennium per indultum Apostolicum Romae datum die 6 martii 1842 concessae, tibi per Nos commicatae, et mulierem non fuisse raptam, vel si rapta fuerit, in potestate raportis non existere;

9.—Dispensandi cum hujus dioecesis habitantibus super primo affinitatis gradu ex copula illicita per lineam collateralem sive rectam resultantis, dummodo nullum subsit dubium quod conjux possit esse proles ab altero contrahentium genita, in matrimoniis ignoranter vel scienter quoque contractis, sicuti etiam in contrahendis, ubi rationabilis et legitima causa concurrat, in occultis tamen et in foro conscientiae tantum, impositis pro modo culpae poenitentis privatis salutaribus;

10.—Dispensandi cum catholicis memoratis super primo affinitatis gradu ex copula illicita tam in linea transversali quam in linea recta proveniente, dummodo constet neutrum ex contrahentibus esse alterius filium, in matrimoniis ignoranter vel scienter quoque contractis, sicuti etiam in contrahendis, in publicis et in utroque foro, impositis pro modo culpae poenitentis salutaribus;

11.—Dispensandi catholicum ut licite possit matrimonium contrahere cum acatholica, et vicissim; et si jam contractum fuerit, in eodem licite manere, praescriptis conditionibus debitis;

12.—Super disparitate cultus dispensandi;

13.—Dispensandi cum infidelibus plures uxores habentibus, ut, post conversionem, quam ex illis maluerint, si etiam ipsa fidelis fiat, retinere possint, nisi prima voluerit converti;

14.—Permittendi parti fideli cohabitandi cum parte infideli propter probabilem spem conversionis illius;

15.—Dispensandi partem fidelem ab interpellatione primae conjugis infidelis, quoties aut fieri reipsa nequeat, aut si fieret, nullius utilitatis fore reputetur;

16.—Recitandi Rosarium vel alias preces si Breviarum tuum deferre non poteris, vel divinum officium ob aliquod legitimum impedimentum recitare non valeas;

17.—Dispensandi, quando expedire videbiture super esu carnum, ovorum et lacticiniorum, tempore jejuniorum et Quadragesimae;

18.—Missam in domibus privatis vel sub dio, quando necesse erit, per unam horam ante auroram et etiam post meridiem, etiam sine ministro, eamque bis in die, in sequentibus tantummodo circumstantiis, videlicet; ut in die festo sive dominico a pluribus familiis audiatur, vel ut aegroti sacrum viaticum ministraretur alias sine communione morituro, celebrandi;

19.—Erigendi pium exercitium Viae Crucis in loci tuae jurisdictionis;

20.—Benedicendi coronas precatorias, cruces et sacra numismata, eisque applicandi indulgentias juxta folium typis impressum ac insertum, necnon divae Birgittae nuncupatas;

21.—Adhibendi pro adultis baptizandis formam in Rituali praescriptam pro baptismo infantium;

22.—Praedictas aucto facultates non tantum erga dictos sylvicolas, sed etiam erga quoscumque dioecesanos nostros quos in praefatis locis repereris, exercendi;

Supradictae facultates exerceri poterunt a presbyteris praesentibus et futuris dictae Congregationis a te vel successoribus tuis, tamquam eorum superioribus, designatis.

.....“If the Indians persist in a desire to visit Mingan in order to meet a Roman Catholic Priest, you may state that, if they defer it for another year, we will endeavour to send a priest to their own lands, without putting them to the trouble or inconvenience of so long a journey. This can be done hereafter without inconvenience when the vessel winters in the St. Lawrence; but if the Priest were to go this season, by the second trip of the “Marten,” his stay would necessarily be short, that he could only see a few of the Indians immediately round Rigolet.....”

MISSION AMONG THE MONTAGNAIS.
FATHER DUROCHER TO FATHER GUIGUES, SUPERIOR OF THE OBLAT MISSIONARIES.

RAPPORT SUR LES MISSIONS DU DIOCÈSE DE QUÉBEC, July 1847, No. 7.

Grande-Baie, 17 septembre 1845.

Mon Reverend Pere,

Conformement au désir que vous m'avez manifesté, je vous envoie le rapport succinct de notre mission chez les Montagnais. puisse cette légère esquisse vous être agréable et vous servir de délassement au milieu de vos nombreuses occupations!

Comme vous le savez, les Montagnais, une des tribus de la grande famille algonquine, occupent le vaste territoire dont la longueur s'étend depuis le Saguenay jusqu'au dé de Belle-Isle, et la profondeur jusqu'à la hauteur des terres. Depuis la mort du R.P. De la Brosse, vingt-unième et dernier missionnaire jesuite, décédé à Tadoussac en 1782, les Montagnais avaient été desservis par des prêtres seculiers du diocèse de Québec. Le dernier de ces missionnaires M. Boucher de St. Ambrose (diocèse de Québec), avait, par son zèle infatigable et persévérant, régénéré cette tribu indienne naguère dégradée, en la faisant entrer dans la société de tempérance totale. Le langage de ce digne apôtre de la tempérance a été tellement persuasif que, depuis trois ou quatre ans que s'est opérée cette heureuse transformation, il ne s'est encore reconstruit qu'un seul cas d'infraction grave aux engagements qu'ils avaient pris.

p. 3026

A notre arrivée, nous dûmes nous livrer à l'étude de la langue de nos sauvages, pour pouvoir exercer notre ministère avec plus d'efficacité. Nos premiers maîtres furent les ouvrages des RR. PP. De la Brosse et Laure; mais malheureusement ces livres, composés il y a plus d'un siècle, ne sont plus en harmonie avec la langue actuelle. Deux mois consacrés à l'étude de ces anciens ouvrages ne servirent qu'à nous convaincre que tout était à refaire: grammaire, dictionnaire et catéchisme. A l'aide de quelques interprètes que nous trouvâmes à Chicoutimi, ancienne résidence des RR. PP. jésuites, où nous passâmes l'hiver, nous pûmes composer un petit catéchisme et un cahier d'examen de conscience. Les rapports continuels que nous eûmes avec les Montagnais des Islets, en quartier d'hiver à Chicoutimi, nous mirent en état d'exercer avec fruit le saint ministère parmi eux. Comme la plus grande partie de ces pauvres Indiens n'avaient pas encore été admis à la participation de la divine eucharistic, nous les disposâmes à remplir ce devoir avec le respect dû à la dignité de ce sacrement.

Nous laissâmes la Grande-Baie le 13 mai, pour nous rendre à Tadoussac où nous devions nous embarquer pour nous rendre en droiture à Maskwaro; mais des raisons pressantes appelèrent à Montreal le R.P. Fisette, mon compagnon de voyage: j'eus ordre de faire, en attendant son retour, des missions dans les environs de ce poste. Des souvenirs précieux me faisaient chérir Tadoussac, jadis chef-lieu des missions montagnaises. C'est là que reposent les cendres du R.P. De la Brosse; c'est là qu'il avait composé la plupart de ses ouvrages montagnais. Les Indiens ne parlent qu'avec la plus grande vénération de cet homme vraiment apostolique. Leur devise était: Ne rien innover dans la religion que nous a prêchée le grande Tshitshisahigan; c'est ainsi qu'ils l'appellent.

Nous arrivâmes à Godbout, accompagnés d'un grand nombre de nos chers Montagnais. Tous nous auraient suivis, si nous eussions fait le trajet en canot d'écorce. Notre séjour dans ce poste ne fut que de trois jours. Nous devions nous embarquer à bord de La Tadoussac, goëlette appartenant à la Compagnie de la Baie d'Hudson, et qui devait nous transporter à Mingan, en touchant aux Sept-Iles. Le temps que nous passâmes à la rivière Godbout fut employé à préparer les Indiens de ce poste à la mission que nous devions leur donner au retour de Mingan.

* * * *

Le 28 juin, le temps étant favorable, nous levâmes l'ancre pour nous rendre aux Sept-Iles. A notre arrivée dans ce poste, il nous fallut préparer les Indiens demandent, avec instances, que l'on construise une chapelle. Une croix avait été élevée sur le terrain où elle devait être érigée. Il serait à désirer que ce projet fut promptement exécuté; c'est à ce poste que viennent, de temps à autre, quelques familles Naskapis, nation infidèle qui demande, depuis vingt ans, d'être éclairée du flambeau de la foi. Ils semblaient nous dire, comme autrefois le Macedonien à l'apôtre des nations: Transiens in Macedoniam, adjuva nos. Leur pauvreté les empêche de faire les frais du voyage. Que ne sommes-nous assez nombreux pour voler à leur secours! Parmi ces pauvres infidèles, j'en trouvai un qui était venu plusieurs fois aux Sept-Iles, pour se faire instruire de la religion et recevoir le baptême: jamais il n'avait pu rencontrer le missionnaire à temps. Toute sa science se bornait à savoir dire le chapelet: cette dévotion fut pour lui la cause de son salut. Après quelques instructions, il me dit: "Nama tehika shuelimen ni shéwélin? Est-ce que tu "ne me feras pas miséricorde, je n'ai plus rien à manger, je désire m'en retourner." Je l'interrogeai sur les principaux mystères. Comme il ne pouvait répondre d'une manière précise, je me voyais dans l'impossibilité de lui accorder ce qu'il me demandait. Jetant un profond soupir, il se retire, gardant un morne silence. A huit heures, je vins dans le lieu de nos réunions pour y réciter l'office divin. Peu après mon arrivée, mon Naskapi entre avec sa femme, qui est chrétienne; tous deux récitent le chapelet à haute voix, puis se retirent. Le lendemain, de grand matin, ils se réunissent dans le même lieu, et récitent la même prière. Je ne doutai plus que celle qu'on n'implore jamais en vain, n'eût écouté ces humbles supplications. J'interrogeai de nouveau mon pauvre catéchumène; réponses précises à toutes demandes. Je lui conférai le sacrement de baptême en présence de nos Montagnais, puis je réhabilitai son mariage. Après la célébration des saints mystères, il donna, suivant l'usage du pays, l'accolade fraternelle, à la porte du lieu saint, à tous nos bons Montagnais qui avaient pris part à son bonheur.

* * * *

A dix heures, nous étions devant Mingan, à 136 lieues de Québec. Les Indiens, qui nous attendaient sur le rivage, m'étendant parler leur langue, s'écriaient: "Nehilowe anna! (Quoi! il parle notre langue)." Nous ne trouvâmes à ce poste que neuf familles montagnaises. Trois jours auparavant, un grand nombre de ces pauvres sauvages, pressés de la faim, avaient laissé le poste pour se rendre sur les îles voisines.

* * * *

Etant arrivés trop tard pour faire la mission de Maskwaro, et les Indiens ne venant pas nous rejoindre, nous résolûmes de terminer notre mission le plus tôt possible, afin de nous embarquer sur La Tadoussac, qui faisait voile pour les Sept-Iles. Nous annonçâmes notre départ à notre petit troupeau; nous ne pûmes les consoler qu'en leur promettant qu'à une autre visite notre séjour parmi eux serait de plus longue durée.

* * * *

La mission de Maskwaro que nous n'avons pu faire, celle de Mingan à-peu-pres nulle; les missions de Chicoutimi et du lac St. Jean, confiées à un prêtre zélé mais ne sachant pas la langue, et surtout les Naskapis, peuple infidèle qui demande, depuis si long-temps, d'être éclairé du flambeau de la foi, démontrent évidemment que le nombre des missionnaires devrait être au moins double.

Je dois encore vous faire observer, mon révérend Père, que les dons volontaires de nos pauvres Indiens ne peuvent plus suffire pour la réparation et la construction de leurs chapelles.

Daignez porter un regard sur nos pauvres missions, et agréer l'assurance du profond respect avec lequel.

Je suis,

Mon révérend Père,

Votre très-humble et très obéissant serviteur,

FATHER DUROCHER TO THE ARCHBISHOP OF QUEBEC.

MISSIONS DU DIOCESE DE QUEBEC.

Tadoussac, 25 juillet

1846.

Monseigneur,

L'Interet particulier que Votre Grandeur prend aux missions indiennes de son diocèse, me porte à croire qu'elle accueillera, avec bienveillance, le rapport de celles que nous venons de terminer. par son entremise, nous recûmes les secours de l'association de la Propagation de la Foi pour la construction d'une chapelle et l'impression de cantiques en langue montagnais; j'ose faire passer, par la même voie, l'expression de la reconnaissance de nos Indiens et la nôtre, et faire connaître à messieurs du conseil de l'oeuvre les bénédictions que le Seigneur se plait à répandre sur ces premiers habitants du sol canadien.

* * * *

Le 5 mai, nous arrivâmes aux Ilets de Jérémie; nous annonçâmes à ces bons habitants des forêts la visite épiscopale. C'était pour la première fois que le sacrement de confirmation allait être administré à la tribu montagnaise: déjà, il est vrai, un des illustres prédécesseurs de Votre Grandeur avait daigné se rendre à Portneuf, pour y célébrer la fête de Ste. Anne; mais, alors, les Indiens, livrés à l'intempérance et aux désordres qu'elle traîne à sa suite, ne purent recevoir les dons de l'Esprit-Saint: même à une époque plus rapprochée il y a quatre ans, un évêque eut-il paru parmi ces peuples, il n'aurait pas donné la confirmation à une seule personne...chez le sauvage, les autres vertus sont les compagnons inséparables de la vertu de tempérance.

* * * *

La mission terminée, nous eûmes pendant dix jours consécutifs des vents contraires. Je profitai de ces moments de loisir pour traduire en montagnais les prières et les cantiques du chemin de la croix. Ce petit ouvrage imprimé serait chez nos Indiens d'un grand secours pour la sanctification du dimanche: au fond de leurs forêts, ils sanctifieraient ce saint jour par les exercices si touchants du Via crucis, et satisferaient à la justice divine, en gagnant les indulgences qui y sont attachées.

Le 7 juin, nous mouillâmes à mingan, diocèse de Terre-neuve. Tous les sauvages vinrent nous recevoir au rivage, avec de grands transports de joie. Campés depuis quinze jours à ce poste, ils y attendaient notre arrivée: vainement le commis du lieu avait essayé de les envoyer à la chasse du loup-marin. "Nous ne partirons pas, lui dirent-ils, que nous n'ayions vu la robe noire. C'est pour avoir suivi de tels conseils que nous fûmes privés l'été dernier, des avantages de la mission." En effet, l'an dernier, la plupart de ces pauvres gens n'arrivèrent au poste qu'après notre départ.

Nous nous disposions à quitter ce poste pour celui de Masquaro, qui est à 180 lieues de Québec, lorsque huit berges américaines vinrent mouiller dans le port de Mingan. Nos bons Indiens de Masquaro, impatients de voir les missionnaires, venaient à leur rencontre. Pour se procurer cet avantage, ils avaient franchi une distance de 57 lieues; belles dispositions nous firent bénir la divine providence qui accélérât ainsi notre retour aux Ilets de Jérémie.

L'arrivée des Masquaroniens, en nous comblant de joie, fut pour nous un surcroît d'occupations: deux cents Indiens se pressaient autour de nous pour entendre, avec avidité, les paroles de la vie éternelle. Le jour ne suffisant plus à entendre les confessions, il fallut y donner une partie des nuits. Comme c'était un temps précieux pour la chasse du loup-marin, nous nous hâtâmes de terminer la mission. La plupart de ces sauvages n'avaient pas encore fait leur première communion; il fallait les y disposer. C'était pour la première fois qu'ils entendaient un missionnaire parler leur langue; ses paroles faisaient une vive impression sur leurs cœurs bien disposés: les nouveaux cantiques répétaient les vérités du salut qu'ils avaient entendues dans nos instructions, et les gravaient dans leur esprit et dans leur cœur. Nous étions aidés par les Indiens de Mingan, qui faisaient la fonction de catéchistes, et ils continuaient leurs instructions bien avant dans la nuit. Sept jours après l'arrivée des Masquaroniens, les trouvant suffisamment instruits, nous les admîmes à la participation de la divine eucharistie.

Deux jours après l'octave de la Fête-Dieu, nous étions aux Sept-Iles, à lieues au-dessus de Mingan. Nous ne trouvâmes dans ce poste qu'un petit nombre de familles mantagnaises; la plupart étaient parties pour les Ilets de Jérémie. Nous conférâmes, aux Sept-Iles, le baptême solennel à un adulte d'origine naskapite; les autres membres de sa famille étaient déjà chrétiens.

* * * *

Le 8 juillet, nous aperçumes les établissements du poste des Ilets de Jérémie ; nous arborâmes notre pavillon, et nous vîmes bientôt flotter celui de la place. Il fallut lutter contre vent et marée : à la nuit close, nous étions encore à un mille du lieu désiré. Nous saluâmes le poste par des décharges de mousqueterie, et l'artillerie de la place y répondit aussitôt; nos Indiens firent un feu roulant qui dura près d'une demi-heure. Deux canots légers, conduits par des bras vigoureux, vinrent à notre rencontre ; le Père Garin s'élança sur l'une de ces embarcations, et l'autre me reçut à son bord. Une course navale s'engagea entre ces deux canots rivaux ; ils fendirent les flots avec rapidité ; tantôt ils vont de front, tantôt l'un devance l'autre de quelques coudées : en un instant nous touchons le rivage, et nous entrons dans la chapelle dédiée à notre sainte protectrice, pour lui témoigner notre reconnaissance.

Nous n'avions que onze jours pour disposer nos Indiens au spectacle imposant que la religion allait offrir pour la première fois à leurs regards. Chaque jour, les rangs devenaient plus serrés par l'arrivée de nouvelles familles ; la marche de la mission prenait un aspect plus imposant ; des Naskapis catéchumènes ou néophytes, descendus de leurs montagnes, entendaient avec admiration des chants sacrés, inconnus à leurs oreilles : ils formaient des vœux ardents pour que le bonheur dont ils jouissaient fût enfin communiqué à leurs compatriotes encore assis dans les ombres de la mort. Hélas! depuis plus de vingt ans, cette tribu encore infidèle demandait d'être éclairée des lumières de l'évangile : leurs prières n'ont pas encore été exaucées. Généreux associés de la Propagation de la Foi, priez donc avec nous le maître de la moisson d'envoyer des ouvriers travailler à cette partie de la vigne qui est encore inculte.

Quatre familles de la mission de Chicoutimi, enrôlées, à Noël dernier, sous la bannière de la société de tempérance totale, fuyant leurs anciens compagnons de débauche, s'étaient rendues aux Ilets de Jérémie : là elles servaient Dieu au sein d'une nombreuse compagnie de frères, s'édifiant les uns les autres par la pratique des vertus chrétiennes.

Il était beau, Monseigneur, le spectacle de 74 familles s'instruisant les unes les autres, et chantant jour et nuit les louanges du divin Maître et de son auguste mère ! Ces jours de bonheur se succédaient avec rapidité: préparer les catéchumènes à recevoir solennellement le baptême ; disposer les néophytes à la première communion ; mettre toute cette chrétienté en état de recevoir les dons de l'Esprit-Saint, tel était le cercle de nos occupations.

* * * *

Une jeune Naskapie reçut des mains de Monseigneur l'évêque de Sidyme, le baptême solennel. Elle bénissait mille fois le Seigneur de l'avoir préférée à tant d'autres de la même tribu qui gémissent sous le dur esclavage de satan.

p. 3031

Un jeune anglais, après avoir renoncé aux erreurs du protestantisme, reçut la même faveur que cette jeune Naskapie. Le prélat voulut donner audience aux Naskapis et les féliciter de leur fidélité à la grâce de Dieu qui les avait appelés des ténèbres de l'infidélité à la lumière de l'évangile. Il les chargea de porter à leurs frères la bonne nouvelle et l'assurance d'être prochainement visités par les missionnaires.

* * * *

Le moment du départ étant arrivé, il fallut enfin nous séparer de nos chères ouailles. Nous avions l'espoir de les revoir à Port-neuf ou Sa Grandeur devait mettre pied à terre. Mais la divine Providence en avait disposé autrement. Le vent qui soufflait avec violence eut infailliblement poussé notre embarcation contre les bancs de sable qui bordent l'entrée de la rivière, si nous eussions essayé de gagner le rivage. Il fallut continuer notre route jusqu'à Tadoussac où finit notre mission.

J'ose supplier votre Grandeur d'agréer, etc.
P.F. DUROCHER, O.M.J.

ARCHBISHOP OF QUEBEC TO MGR. FLEMING, APOSTOLIC VICAR, NEWFOUNDLAND.

Québec, 19 avril 1847.

A Mgr Fleming,
Vic. Apost. de Terre-neuve.
Monseigneur,

Votre Gr. se rappelle sans doute qu'elle a bien voulu m'autoriser à donner juridiction pour la partie de son diocèse qui appartient à la terre ferme aux prêtres de mon diocèse qui pourraient s'y rendre dans l'occasion; Depuis qu'elle a bien voulu m'écrire à cet effet, (sa lettre est du 4 décembre 1838) je n'ai été en mesure de profiter des pouvoirs qu'elle m'a communiqués qu'en faveur des sauvages de Mingan seulement les plus rapprochés de mon diocèse ; mais il m'a été impossible de pouvoir les faire exercer à l'égard des catholiques répandus sur le reste de la côte, J'ai appris néanmoins avec plaisir qu'un prêtre député par V.G. avait fait une visite à ceux-ci il y a quelques années.

Depuis cette visite, plusieurs Canadiens des différents postes de la côte de Labrador que des affaires de commerce appellent à Québec sont venue me supplier chaque année de leur envoyer un prêtre qui puisse leur parler dans leurs langue et instruire leurs enfants dont un grand nombre n'ont pas été baptisés. Pressé d'un côté par les instances de ces pauvres gens, et encouragé de l'autre par la bienveillante autorisation que V.G. a daigné m'accorder, j'ai chargé un prêtre zélé, le Rév. M. Desruisseaux, missionnaire de la Baie des Chaleurs, d'aller visiter les différents établissements de la côte, et de rendre à ceux qui y sont établis tous les secours spirituels en son pouvoir. Je vais lui recommander de prendre toutes les connaissances désirables sur l'état de la religion dans les différentes localités qu'il doit visiter, et je me ferai un devoir de communiquer à V. Grandeur le rapport qu'il me fera.

J'ai lieu de présumer que V.G. me pardonnera volontiers cette espèce d'intrusion que je ne me permets que parce que je sais qu'elle est dans l'impossibilité de pouvoir secourir cette partie de son diocèse.

J'ai l'honneur, &c.,

Missionnaire à Carleton.

Monsieur,

Avec l'agrément de Mgr Fleming, Vicaire Apostolique de Terre-neuve, je vous confie jusqu'à révocation le soin de visiter les divers établissements disséminés le long de la côte de Labrador et de la seigneurie de Mingan, dépendantes de la juridiction de ce prélat, et d'y exercer toutes les fonctions du saint ministère envers les fidèles et les inhales que vous y rencontrerez. Je joins à la présente un écrit renfermant d'amples pouvoirs, lesquels joints à ceux dont vous jouissez déjà comme missionnaire des Isles de la Madeline, &c., vous mettront en état d'exercer votre zèle avec plus d'efficacité

ARCHBISHOP OF QUEBEC TO REV. FATHER DUROCHER.

Québec, 25 septembre 1849.

Rév. Père Durocher, Oblat, Saguenay.

Mon Révérend Père

Je vous confie par la présente, jusqu'à révocation de ma part ou de celle de mes successeurs, 1.—le soin des fidèles de tous les établissements du Saguenay, à partir de l'embouchure de cette rivière jusqu'à la mission de Chicoutimi qui est sous les soins de Mr Gagnon, spécialement de l'établissement de St Alexis de la Grande Bale chef-lieu de la mission ; 2.—de tous les 10 sauvages fidèles et infidèles qui habitent la partie nord de mon diocèse audelà des paroisses qui y ont été formées.

Vous exercerez, outre les pouvoirs accordés au R. P. Honorat et à ses successeurs par le décret d'établissement des Révérends Pères Oblats de Marie dans le diocèse, tous ceux qui furent accordés spécialement au même Père, pour lui et pour tous les membres de son Institut, par deux actes du 4 octobre 1844.

Comme curé missionnaire, vous aurez droit de percevoir des cultivateurs les dîmes et autres oblations autorisées dans le diocèse. Quant à ceux qui ne se livrent pas à l'agriculture, vous les exhorterez à contribuer, comme les autres, au soutien des prêtres chargés de les desservir.

Comme missionnaire chargé des Sauvages des Postes du Roi et de la seigneurie de Mingan, vous recevrez de l'honorable Compagnie de la Baie d'Hudson un traitement annuel de cent guinées. C'est à elle qu'il appartient de faire conduire le missionnaire aux différents postes où se réunissent les Sauvages et de pourvoir à sa subsistance pendant la mission.

Quant aux petits établissements qui existent depuis Tadoussac jusqu'à la Grande Baie, vous les visiterez ou ferez visiter au moins deux fois par année, et vous engagerez les gens qui les habitent à contribuer aussi au soutien des prêtres qui vont leur porter les secours de la religion, ou du moins à payer leurs frais de voyage.

Je prie Dieu, mon Révérend Père, qu'il daigne bénir vos travaux et ceux de vos chers confrères, et je demeure bien cordialement votre tres obéissant &c.

Mon Rév. Père

Dans la lettre que je vous ai écrite le 25 du présent, j'ai fait une omission qu'il est important de réparer.

Outre les différents postes qui vont être mis sous vos soins par la lettre précitée, je vous confie de plus 1.—tous les établissements qui se sont formés ou qui se formeront à l'avenir sur la rive nord du St Laurent depuis le Saguenay jusqu'à la rivière St Jean ; 2.—le soin des différents postes qui se trouvent depuis la dite rivière jusqu'à la ligne est de la seigneurie de Mingan et de tous les Sauvages qui les fréquentent, conformément à un indult du 18 août 1833 qui m'autorise à envoyer des missionnaires dans ce territoire, quoiqu'il fasse partie du Vicariat Apostolique de l'Isle de Terre-Neuve.

Je vous autorise en meme temps à exercer dans ces différentes localités tous les pouvoirs extraordinaires qui vous sont accordés par ma lettre ci-dessus mentionnée du 25 du courant.

[23 May, 1850.]

Québec, 23 mai 1850.

Mr Al. Bélanger, Iles de la Madeleine.

Monsieur,

J'ai reçu votre lettre du 3 du courant où vous me témoignez votre disposition à vous charger de la mission de la côte de Labrador, au moins pour cette année. Je vous envoie en conséquence les pouvoirs dont vous pouvez avoir besoin dans l'exercice de vos fonctions apostoliques.

Vous avez reçu diverses instructions lorsque vous avez été chargé de la desserte des Isles de la Madeleine ; vous les suivrez, autant que faire se pourra, dans le cours de votre mission.

Les gens que vous allez visiter se sont chargés de défrayer les dépenses du missionnaire qui a la charité d'aller leur porter les secours de la religion. Je tâcherai de vous faire tenir la liste de leurs souscriptions que je ne retrouve plus ici, mais qui doit probablement se trouver entre les mains de Mr Bonenfant qui a fait la mission de l'année dernière.

Vous ne manquerez pas de me donner de vos nouvelles quand vous en trouverez l'occasion, et surtout de me faire savoir si vous revenez ou non parmi nous l'automne prochain. Je crains que les accidents ne l'emportent dans la balance.

Je souhaite bien du succès à votre mission et je suis

SAGNUENAY MISSION.

RAPPORT SUR LES MISSIONS DU DIOCÈSE DE QUÉBEC, Mars, 1851,
No. 9.

Baie des Ha! Ha! 30 septembre 1850.

Monseigneur,

Tout en remplissant un devoir, je satisferai en même temps à un besoin de mon coeur, en entretenant Votre Grandeur des missions qu'elle nous a confiées de long de la côte, et que nous venons de visiter, le révérend père Garin et moi.

Cet fut pour acquiescer à vos désirs qu'au commencement de mois de mars dernier, je quittai la Grande-Baie, pour aller visiter les différentes familles canadiennes qui se trouvent échelonnées à de grandes distances, les unes des autres, depuis la Baie des Ha! Ha! jusqu'à Papinachois.

* * * *

Après que les différentes missions canadiennes furent achevées, je partis pour me rendre à Maskuaro, afin de rejoindre le R. P. Garin, qui était chargé en chef des missions sauvages. Ce ne fut qu'après avoir été ballotté, pendant plus de quinze jours, sur une mer qui paraissait ne vouloir point s'apaiser, que j'eus le bonheur de retrouver ce cher compagnon.

A Maskuaro nous trouvâmes une chrétienté, avide de la parole de Dieu. Tous les chasseurs nous y attendaient avec impatience, depuis plus de trois semaines, aimant mieux supporter la faim que de s'éloigner, de crainte de ne point rencontrer les robes noires.

* * * *

A Mingan, nous avons trouve une chrétienté bien nombreuse, dont la docilité à correspondre à la grâce, a fait la plus grande consolation des missionnaires. Ce sont surtout ces sauvages qui désireraient voir leur père, le grand-chef de la prière, car les deux ou trois familles qui se trouvaient aux Ilets, lors de la visite de Votre Grandeur, en ont parlé longuement à leur retour; et aujourd'hui encore, lorsqu'ils sont tous réunis, ils se plaisent à s'entretenir du grand-chef de la prière (Kaiamituatset), de son beau costume, de ce qu'il avait prescrit; ils se rappellent surtout combien il paraissait les aimer, puisqu'il était venu de si loin pour visiter ceux qui habitent dans les forêts.

Aux Sept Iles, il n'est rien arrivé d'extraordinaire, se ce n'est la conversion de trois Naskapis, âgés de vingt à vingt-cinq ans, admis au saint baptême

* * * *

Pres de quatre-vingt à cent familles ont assisté à la mission des Ilets. Tous les sauvages de Port-Neuf et des Escoumins y étaient accourus pour voir la fameuse procession où l'on porte en triomphe la statue de la Vierge au milieu des chants d'allégresse, dans des chemins bordés de jeunes arbrisseaux, chargés de couronnes et de guirlandes en fleurs.

Il est beau et édifiant, le spectacle qu'offre depuis quelques années cette chrétienté. C'est celle qui s'est attirée d'une manière toute particulière, la prédilection de ses missionnaires; aussi s'en sont-ils montrés dignes en correspondant si généreusement à leurs soins. C'est parmi eux que le révérend père Flavien Durocher a passé un hiver, où tout en se perfectionnant dans leur langue, il les a instruits si solidement sur leurs devoirs d'hommes et de chrétiens. Il leur a composé un livre de prières, un catéchisme, un magnifique recueil de cantiques et un livre de chant noté ; ces différents ouvrages dans une langue où il n'avait pour toute aide que les vieux manuscrits des anciens missionnaires, dont les mots se trouvaient déjà vieilles, ont dû coûter beaucoup de veilles et de fatigues. Aussi, en bons sauvages, ils ont su apprécier ses peines, et grande a été leur tristesse, lorsque cet été ils n'ont point vu paraître leur père.

C'est le R. P. Durocher qui a achevé parmi eux l'oeuvre de la tempérance, si courageusement commencée par l'infatigable et zélé M. Boucher, dont le souvenir est si cher à tous les indiens de la côte; et ils sont d'autant plus fermes à leurs promesses qu'ils avaient été auparavant faciles à se laisser séduire par l'amour de la liqueur de feu.

Ces sauvages sont les plus instruits de la côte; ils savent tous lire et écrire. Il est beau de les voir à l'église, les hommes d'un côté, les femmes de l'autre, le livre de prière à la main, rivalisant, pour ainsi dire, de modestie et de ferveur.

* * * *

De Votre Grandeur,
l'enfant soumis et respectueux,

CH. ARNAUD, O.M.I.

[30 Oct., 1850.]

ARCHBISHOP OF QUEBEC TO FATHER BELANGER.

Québec, 30 octobre 1850.

Rév. Mr. Bélanger,
Miss. Isles de la Madeleine.

Monsieur,

J'ai reçu vos lettres du 24 et du 27 août écrites de l'Anse au Blanc Sablon et de Labrador, et j'ai lu avec intérêt tout ce que vous me marquez du résultat de votre mission dans les différentes postes que vous avez visités. Je regrette que vous avez rencontré tant de gens qui montrent une si coupable indifférence pour les secours de la religion, dont ils ont pourtant un si grand besoin, et qu'ils devraient d'autant mieux apprécier qu'ils leur sont plus rarement offerts. Espérons toutefois que, témoins des efforts constants que l'on fait pour leur salut, ils en comprendront davantage l'importance, et qu'ils ouvriront leurs coeurs à la grâce qui leur est présentée par votre ministère.

Je serais bien aise que vous continuiez sur le territoire du Labrador l'oeuvre que vous y avez commencée, et j'applaudirai de bon coeur à la proposition que vous me faites d'y retourner le printemps prochain. Mais comme ce territoire est sous la juridiction de Mgr l'Evêque de Terre-Neuve et que vous vous trouvez dans le voisinage de ce Prélat, il convient que ce soit de lui que vous receviez cette mission. Vous aurez donc soin, aussitôt la présente reçue, de recourir à son autorité. Dans le cas que vous n'aurez pas reçu sa réponse à temps, je vous autorise à renouveler le printemps prochain votre expédition apostolique dans ces lieux abandonnés, et à user pour cet effet de tous les pouvoirs que vous aviez comme missionnaire des Isles de la Madeleine. . . .

Je suis bien édifié du zèle des habitants de à bâtir une chapelle, mais je regrette d'avoir à vous dire que le fonds de notre société pour la propagation de la foi sont dans un état qui ne permet pas de leur venir en aide. Peut-être aurez-vous plus de succès auprès de Mgr de Terre-Neuve qui pourrait épargner pour cette bonne oeuvre une petite partie de l'allocation qu'il doit recevoir du centre de l'association de Lyon.

Dès que vous en aurez le loisir faites un rapport au même Prélat de l'état de la religion dans les différents postes que vous avez parcourus, car c'est bien lui qui est le premier pasteur. Informez-le en même temps que si je prends la liberté d'exercer quelque autorité sur cette partie de son diocèse, je ne le fais qu'à son défaut, en vertu d'un indult du St Siège accordé à l'Archevêque de Québec, à cause de l'impossibilité où se trouvoit son prédécesseur de visiter ces mêmes postes. Sa Grandeur trouvera sans doute parmi les papiers laissés par celui-ci plusieurs lettres qui lui furent adressées à ce sujet par Mgr Signay.

p. 3040

Au retour de votre prochaine visite, faites-moi connaître ce que vous avez fait dans chaque mission, ce qui s'y seroit passé de plus remarquable et de plus édifiant, le nombre de confessions entendues, de communions administrées, de baptêmes données, de mariages célébrés, le nombre des communicants qui n'auroient pas été à confesse, celui des familles catholiques de l'endroit; c'est une espèce de journal que je vous invite à tenir. Par ce moyen on pourra édifier nos associés de la Propagation de la foi sur le compte des pauvres catholiques que renferme le Labrador.

Quand la présente vous parviendra, vous aurez probablement appris par les papiers publics la mort de Mgr Signay arrivée le 3 du courant. Une attaque de paralysie l'a enlevé au bout de deux jours de maladie. Il m'a laissé sur les bras un fardeau bien pesant.

Je vous salue, Monsieur, &c.

Québec, 28 juin 1852.

Mgr l'Evêque de Terre-Neuve.

Monsieur,

Deux hommes de la côte Labrador, les nommés Gaumont et Boulé, résidant à l'endroit appelé Tabatière, sont venus me trouver en l'absence de Mgr l'Archevêque et de son coadjuteur, tous deux en visite pastorale, pour m'exprimer leur regret de ce qu'ils n'ont pas reçu la visite d'un missionnaire l'année dernière et leur crainte d'être encore privés du même bonheur cette année. Ils rapportent que, conformément aux instructions qu'ils avaient reçus de l'un de vos prêtres, Mr. Al. Bélanger, en 1850, ils ont préparé tout ce qu'il faut pour l'érection d'une chapelle, et qu'ils n'attendent plus que la présence d'un prêtre et ses directions pour terminer l'ouvrage. Mgr l'Archevêque pensait que Mr Bélanger devait continuer l'oeuvre qu'il a commencée et dont il s'était chargé avec beaucoup de plaisir. Il faut que ce brave prêtre en ait été empêché par des raisons importantes. Quoi qu'il en soit, Mgr l'Archevêque, à qui j'en ai écrit, me recommande de faire connaître à Votre Grandeur la triste position où se trouvent les catholiques de la côte de Labrador et leur ardent désir qu'elle soit améliorée par la visite régulière d'un prêtre. Ils seraient bien aise que ce prêtre put aller passer l'hiver avec eux, parce que tout le monde étant revenu de la pêche, un plus grand nombre de fidèles pourraient profiter de son ministère. Je sou mets le tout humblement à la considération de V. G. qui, s'il en est besoin, pourra recevoir de Mr Bélanger tous les renseignements propres à l'éclairer sur cette partie de son diocèse.

p. 3041

Veillez agréer, &c.

Quant à la mission à faire chez les Esquimaux, je suis bien aise qu'elle se fasse certainement, mais je vous prie de remarquer qu'elle est tout en dehors du diocèse de Québec et que je ne vois pas que notre association de la Propagation de la Foi puisse en faire les frais. Il est bien vrai que Mgr l'Evêque de Terre-neuve vient de m'écrire pour me prier de me joindre à lui dans une supplique qu'il fait au St. Siège pour faire attacher au diocèse de Québec la partie de la côte du Nord qui l'avoisine jusqu'à l'endroit appelé le Blanc Sablon, mais avec cet ajouté, s'il a lieu, nous n'atteindrons point encore ce qui s'appelle vraiment le pays des Esquimaux. Peut-être n'est-il question pour vos Pères que de faire la mission depuis la rivière St. Jean (limite actuelle du diocèse de Québec) jusqu'au Blanc Sablon; mais je ne vois pas encore que mon diocèse puisse en faire les frais que l'Evêque de Terre Neuve estime devoir monter à la somme de £150. Puis il faudrait que deux missionnaires fussent adjoints à ceux qui font aujourd'hui la mission de notre côte et qui, suivant les apparences, auront désormais de quoi s'occuper sans aller au-delà des limites du territoire jusqu'à présent commis à leurs soins. Inévitablement nous aurons à correspondre sur ce sujet d'ici à l'été porchain.

p. 3042

On vous avait promis d'écrire au bureau principal de l'hon. compagnie de la Baie d'Hudson pour avoir raison du refus qui vous étoit fait du paiement du salaire accoutumé de 100 guinées; on l'a fait et la réponse a été assez satisfaisante puisque l'on promet de payer, mais sur l'ordre qu'en donnera Mr. Gladman. Je suppose que ce Monsieur n'aura besoin que d'attester que la mission a été faite. On ajoute que si, à l'avenir, le salaire doit être supprimé, on en avertira d'avance.

Quant au résultat de la supplique présentée, il y quelque temps, par le bon Père Arnaud et les six députés, tout ce que je puis vous dire pour le moment est que le colonel Bruce est très bien disposé en faveur de vos sauvages et qu'il promet de faire ses efforts pour leur envoyer quelque secours de provisions avant la clôture de la navigation. Mais je vous avoue que ceci ne me plaît qu'à demi parce qu'il n'annonce rien de stable pour l'avenir.

Mgr. L'Evêque de Terreneuve.

Monsieur,

J'ai reçu bien longtemps après sa date la lettre que Votre Grandeur a bien voulu m'écrire le douze juillet dernier de l'Anse au Blanc Sablon pour me faire connaître les raisons qui l'ont engagée à demander au St Siège de vouloir bien détacher du diocèse de Terreneuve pour l'annexer à celui de Québec la partie de la côte de Labrador comprise entre l'Anse ci-dessus mentionnée et la rivière St Jean. Si je n'ai pas répondu plus tôt à Votre Grandeur, c'est que je voulais auparavant recueillir tous les renseignements désirables sur les moyens qui peuvent être à ma disposition pour porter le fardeau que vous voulez m'imposer.

Tout bien considéré, Monseigneur, je vois qu'il m'est difficile de me soustraire à ce fardeau, et si le St Siege juge à propos de m'en charger, il faudra bien que je courbe les épaules. Je comprends que j'ai plus de facilité que Votre Grandeur de faire desservir les postes disséminés sur la partie de Labrador dont je viens de parler; mais il n'en est pas moins vrai que ma part est assez large, et que l'augmentation qu'on veut lui faire subir ajoutera de nouvelles difficultés à celles que j'éprouve déjà par suite de la rareté des prêtres. Si la divine Providence veut que mon troupeau devienne ainsi plus nombreux, elle me procurera sans doute de nouveaux moyens de pourvoir à ses besoins spirituels. Dans tous les cas, je ne puis en vouloir à V. G. de travailler à se décharger en ma faveur de la partie de son diocèse avec laquelle elle ne peut communiquer.

Mon Révérend Père,

Je profite avec bonheur d'un moment de loisir, que me laissent mes nombreuses et pressantes occupations, pour vous donner quelques détails touchant nos courses de cette année chez les Montagnais qui occupent la rive nord du Saint-Laurent, sur un littoral de quatre cent-cinquante lieues environ.

Je descendis, le printemps dernier, accompagné de deux charpentiers qui devaient construire, à l'entrée du Labrador, une chapelle pour la desserte de nos Montagnais de Maskuaro, et des pêcheurs [sic] établis sur la côte.

* * * *

Itamamiou, ou rivière branchue, me présentant les avantages que je désirais, attira mon choix.

* * * *

Pendant mes excursions sur la côte du Labrador, je recontraï quelques familles de Montagnais qui, à cause de la maladie dont ils étaient atteints, ne pouvaient se rendre à Mingan lieu destiné pour la visite épiscopale.

* * * *

Le temps de me rendre à Mingan était arrivé, et je m'en trouvais à 75 lieues, sans embarcation pour m'y transporter: la divine providence vint à mon aide, et m'envoya le Doris, steamer du gouvernement en croisière sur la côte, qui me fournit la plus belle occasion possible. Les capitaines Fortin et Talbot me reçurent avec la plus grande politesse, me traitèrent avec la plus franche cordialité, et me firent débarquer à Mingan. J'y étais impatientement attendu par nos chers néophytes, et par un grand nombre d'Indiens venus de la Baie des Esquimaux. Permettez-moi, ici, mon révérend père, de vous entretenir un moment de ces derniers, pour vous les faire un peu connaître, à la confusion de bien des chrétiens civilisés. Il y avait près de deux ans que ces pauvres sauvages avaient laissé leur pays pour venir se faire instruire de notre sainte religion. La plupart d'entr'eux étaient encore

p. 3049

infidèles; mais aucun, même de ceux qui étaient chrétiens, n'avait vu de robes-noires. Arrivés à l'un de nos postes, l'année précédente, après la clôture de la mission et le départ des missionnaires, ils ne perdirent pas courage, et résolurent, pour ne pas éprouver le même désappointement l'année suivante, de passer l'hiver à la chasse sur les terres des Montagnais.

* * * *

Il y a environ quatre ans, un de nos Indiens de Maskuaro, touché de l'état malheureux de quelques-uns de ses proches, qui vivaient dans l'infidélité au milieu de ces contrées lointaines, se sentit poussé à faire le voyage de la Baie des Esquimaux, dans l'espoir de les amener à nos réductions; c'était un voyage d'environ trois cents lieues. Il s'ouvrit à moi de son dessein: je l'approuvai, lui donnai quelques objets de piété, l'assurant que nous ne cesserions de nous souvenir de lui au saint autel, afin qu'il réussit dans sa pieuse entreprise. Je le chargeai de dire aux sauvages de cette baie qu'il était impossible aux missionnaires d'étendre leurs courses jusque dans ces lieux reculés: mais que pouvant venir à nos missions ils s'exposaient à un malheur éternel, s'ils faisaient la sourde oreille à nos invitations; et que d'ailleurs nous les recevions avec la plus grande bonté, qu'elle qu'eut été auparavant la grandeur de leurs désordres. Muni de ces instructions, notre cher Ishita partit avec toute sa famille, animée du même zèle que lui. Il se rendit en effet à la Baie des Esquimaux, et revint le printemps suivant avec quelques-uns de ses proches, qui n'hésitèrent pas à faire ces trois cents lieues pour venir entendre la parole du salut. Quelle leçon pour tant de chrétiens qui craignent de faire trois cents pas pour le même objet! Les commerçants de pelleterie s'opposèrent, il est vrai, autant qu'ils purent à l'émigration des autres Indiens, les assurant que les missionnaires se rendraient certainement à la baie, sur leur invitation. Mais pressés qu'ils étaient de répondre à la grâce, ils ne tinrent nul compte de cette opposition. Déjà précédemment quelques-uns des membres de l'honorable compagnie de la Baie d'Hudson nous avaient fortement engagés à entreprendre ce voyage, nous promettant que le gouvernement de leur compagnie nous accorderait volontiers, tous les ans, un passage sur leur vaisseau qui part de Québec au mois d'août pour revenir en novembre. Comme vous le savez, mon révérend père, cette partie du Labrador ne fait point partie du diocèse de Québec. Monseigneur l'Archeveque, cependant, ayant été mis au courant de ces propositions et ne pouvant y donner suite alors, nous ne punies, malgré notre désir, nous rendre à l'invitation qui nous était faite; mais nous conservâmes toujours l'espérance d'attirer ces Indiens à quelqu'une de nos réductions. Vous le voyez, l'événement est venu réaliser nos espérances; et il ne reste plus à la baie qu'un petit nombre d'infidèles, qui finiront par suivre l'exemple du reste de la tribu.

* * * *

Le révérend père Babel devant partir pour faire la mission du Lac Saint Jean, et accompagner sa Grandeur Monseigneur de Tloa dans la visite des différents postes jusqu'à Mingan, je me trouvai seul pour disposer les néophytes et les catéchumènes à la visite épiscopale.

* * * *

Le 20 juillet, M. Comeau, de retour de la rivière Saint-Jean, à 6 lieues de Mingan, nous annonça qu'il avait aperçu à quelque distance de l'embouchure de cette rivière un petit navire bien pavoisé, et qu'il avait tout lieu de croire que Mgr de Tloa était à bord.

* * * *

Le lendemain, Monseigneur fit son entrée solennelle.

* * * *

Les catéchumènes de la Baie des Esquimaux, qui n'avaient jamais vu aucune de nos grandes solennités, étaient tout émerveillés, et nos chrétiens, qui voyaient pour la première fois un Evêque, mitre en tête, la crosse à la main, et revêtu d'une étole magnifique, le suivaient du coin de l'oeil, veillant bien cependant à ne pas laisser paraître leur étonnement; en agir autrement c'eut été trahir le flegme national.

* * * *

Monseigneur de Tloa voulut également donner une audience particulière à nos Indiens de la Baie des Esquimaux.

FATHER DUROCHER, O.M.I., TO FATHER SANTONI.

MISSIONS DU DIOCESE DE QUEBEC, No. 11.

Escoumains, 31 décembre 1853.

Mon Reverend Pere,

Les exercices de la visite épiscopale aux Ilots de Jérémie viennent; d'être terminés; près de cent familles les ont suivis avec beaucoup d'assiduité;

* * * *

Nos chers Indiens des Ilots avaient préparé avec goût des arcs de triomphe sur le chemin, depuis le débarcadère jusqu'à l'église. James Anderson, escr., un des membres les plus distingués de la compagnie de la Baie d'Hudson, avait mis toute sa maison à la disposition de Mgr de Tloa. On remarquait, à la cérémonie d'entrée, quelques familles de la tribu indienne des Nascapis; mais ils se tenaient à l'écart, observant cependant tout avec un vif intérêt. Ces pauvres gens n'osaient se mêler à la foule, parce qu'ils sachant bien, par les instructions qu'ils avaient reçues de quelques-uns de nos meilleurs chrétiens, qu'il fallait renoncer à certaines pratiques superstitieuses et idolatriques fort en usage dans leur tribu, comme le respect religieux qu'ils ont pour les ossements de certaines bêtes fauves, etc., ils ne les avaient point encore abandonnées.

* * * *

et me separant d'eux je les confiai à notre cher père Arnaud, en leur disant que ce bon père allait les suivre jusque dans leurs forêts les plus reculées. Il m'est impossible de vous dire, avec quel transport de joie, ces hommes reçurent l'annonce que le courageux missionnaire allait monter avec eux, et pousser ses courses évangéliques jusqu'au lieu de réunion de leur tribu.

* * * *

Tous nos sauvages ont reçu cette nouvelle avec allégresse. Les Nascapis aussi vont donc enfin être instruits de la prière.

* * * *

Mgr Baillargeon consulté sur cette mission du père Arnaud en eut l'âme inondée de joie. Il se chargea de vous en faire connaître de vive voix toutes les particularités. Au milieu de cette joie commune, la visite épiscopale des Ilots s'est faite avec un véritable enthousiasme. Nos Indiens ont saisi cette occasion pour demander à Sa Grandeur, Mgr de Tloa, l'autorisation de construire une église sur le terrain que le gouvernement leur réserve dans la Baie de Betsemites. Depuis longtemps le besoin d'une église plus spacieuse se faisait sentir ici; celle de Jérémie ne peut contenir au delà de la moitié de nos Indiens, tous réunis au temps de la mission. L'autorisation donnés, le R. P. Babel accompagné des chefs fit sur le champ au milieu de nos sauvages une collecte, qui se monta à £50.

FATHER ARNAUD, O.M.I., TO THE ARCHBISHOP OF QUEBEC.

MISSIONS DU DIOCESE DE QUEBEC, No. 11.

Québec, 10 novembre 1854.

Monseigneur,

Lors de mon départ pour les terres des Nascapis, Votre Grandeur a bien voulu me témoigner le désir d'avoir à mon retour quelques détails sur le voyage que j'entreprenais. Je viens donc aujourd'hui m'acquitter d'un devoir, en vous faisant le récit de ce que, cette fois, je ne puis appeler que mon exploration chez les Nascapis.

* * * *

Les préparatifs terminés, nous nous mîmes donc en route. C'était vers la fin de juin 1853. Dès notre arrivée à Manikugan, nous trouvâmes une dizaine de familles montagnaises, que le vent contraire retenait sur la côte; Comme ils étaient là depuis plusieurs jours, ils souffraient de la faim. Nous leur fîmes part de quelques petites provisions.

* * * *

Sous ces heureux auspices, le lundi dès la pointe du jour, nous entrâmes dans la rivière. La navigation était tantôt facile et agréable, tantôt fatigante et périlleuse, selon le cours plus ou moins difficile de l'eau des rapides.

* * * *

Nous naviguions ainsi, lorsque dans un rapide le canot cédant à la force du courant est entraîné, chavire et renversé dans sa chute hommes et bagages. Cet accident avait glacé d'effroi mes sauvages; ils étaient immobiles de stupeur.

* * * *

Lorsque mes sauvages furent revenus un peu de leur frayeur, on se mit à la recherche des autres effets, on en trouva une partie; mais mes hommes n'en étaient pas moins découragés; Je les engageai à faire un nouvel effort; mais ce fut en vain. Que faire? Nous n'avions que peu de vivres; je crus leur conseil sage et le retour prudent.

* * * *

Quelques Nascapis, que j'avais baptisés l'année précédente dans les postes, avaient encore quitté leurs forêts cette année pour venir voir leur grand père, le grand chef de la prière, le grand priant (Tshe ka iamituat set); c'est ainsi qu'ils désignent l'évêque.

Ayant appris que j'avais tenté de visiter leur nation et que par le découragement de mes conducteurs j'avais été obligé de rebrousser chemin, ils vinrent me prier de commencer de nouveau le voyage, s'offrant de me conduire.

* * * *

Ce jour même, le R. P. Durocher fit part à Monseigneur de la demande et du désir des sauvages. Sa Grandeur touchée des beaux sentiments qu'exprimaient ces Indiens qui, sous un extérieur si simple, pour ne pas dire si repoussant, cachaient un coeur si noble, accéda à leur demande.

* * * *

Dès ce moment, on s'occupa des préparatifs du voyage. Quelques jours plus tard, Monseigneur de Tloa, après nous avoir tous bénis, reprenait le chemin de Québec; et nous, après un dernier adieu au R. P. Durocher, mon supérieur, et au R. P. Babel, nous nous dirigions vers les bois. Nous devions bientôt voguer sur des rivières et des lacs connus seulement des Indiens.

Le 29 août, nous arrivâmes à l'embouchure de la rivière Manikuagan. Notre petite flottille se composait de onze canots d'écorce; six autres canots, montés par des Nascapis, nous avaient devancés de quelques jours dans la rivière, afin d'avertir de notre prochaine arrivée les sauvages qui se trouvaient dans l'intérieur.

* * * *

Notre voyage sur la rivière Manikuagan n'offrit aucune particularité intéressante;

* * * *

Après un mois de fatigues et de marche, nous arrivions sur les bords du lac Muskualagan. Nous étions alors au commencement d'octobre. Les Montagnais qui m'accompagnaient avaient choisi cet endroit, comme le plus favorable pour passer l'hiver, et y rencontrer en plus grand nombre les infidèles au printemps, époque à laquelle ils ont l'habitude de se réunir; époque aussi par conséquent à laquelle je devais commencer ma mission auprès d'eux.

* * * *

Avec mes Montagnais, nous dressâmes donc nos petites huttes auprès du lac Mushualagan, dans l'intention d'y passer l'hiver peu après notre arrivée, mes Montagnais levèrent leur camp pour aller tenter fortune ailleurs.

Les Nascapis, qui étaient également montés avec moi depuis la mer, m'avaient quitté depuis plusieurs jours, pour aller rejoindre ceux de leur nation qui s'étaient fixés sur les bords du lac Pletpi, à trois journées de marche de Mushualagan; et je restai là, seul avec une famille montagnaise.

J'avais déjà passé trois semaines dans cet isolement, et alors seulement arriva la petite caravane que nous avions laissée derrière nous en partant.

* * * *

Bientôt les Indiens, ceux-mêmes qui m'avaient quitté, il y avait quelques semaines seulement, et s'étaient transportés dans les bois avec leurs familles pour faire la chasse, ne réussissant pas, se remirent en marche pour venir me rejoindre et me faire part de leur désappointement.

Les nouvelles qu'ils donnèrent de la chasse étaient bien tristes; à eux tous, ils n'avaient tué que deux cariboux.

* * * *

En attendant, comme il fallait trouver des vivres pour tout ce monde, et afin de ne pas épuiser le peu de provisions qu'on avait, chaque matin tous nos chasseurs se dispersaient et parcouraient la forêt dans toutes les directions. Mais peu ou point de gibier. Il leur faut donc avoir recours aux provisions d'hiver.

* * * *

Le temps du caribou arrive enfin; on lève le camp;

* * * *

Nous étions alors aux premiers jours de mai; dix familles d'Indiens, misérables comme nous, se trouvaient déjà réunies sur les glaces de notre lac, avec leurs petits effets, et leurs canots chargés sur des traines, comme pour descendre à la mer; pour le moment, elles étaient indécises si elles continueraient leur route, ou si elles attendraient la mort sur cette glace. Tel était notre état, lorsque nous nous décidons au départ, et que ces familles prennent aussi le parti de nous suivre. Entre tous, nous n'avions pas une bouchée de provisions, et nous étions à une distance de 90 à 100 lieues du terme de notre voyage, obligés de nous trainer nous-mêmes et de trainer aussi nos canots et nos bagages; les lacs et les rivières étaient encore tout couverts de glace.

* * * *

Chaque jour nous donnait quelque nouveau malade, qui devenait même incapable de se conduire seul. Il nous fallut alors nous défaire de tous nos effets; je laissai, moi-même, ma chapelle dans le bois, pour mettre, sur nos traines, les malades et les enfants. Nous étions alors à moitié chemin seulement. Nous continuâmes ainsi notre route, non sans beaucoup de peines et de dangers. La glace devenait de jour en jour plus mauvaise; aussi était-ce avec la plus grande attention qu'il fallait marcher.

* * * *

Trois ou quatre jours après, un sauvage signale l'odeur de la fumée. Dieu soi béni! nous allons échapper aux atteintes de la faim. Le chasseur n'avait pas été trompé par son odorat, nous étions en effet dans le voisinage d'un campement indien. La joie devient générale, on oublie les fatigues; là nous comptons recevoir quelqu'assistance. Nous ne fûmes pas déçus dans notre attente; les braves gens nous reçurent à bras ouverts, et quoiqu'ils n'eussent de provisions que ce qu'il leur en fallait pour se rendre au poste, ils voulurent les partager avec nous et s'associer à notre sort.

A partir de cet endroit, la rivière est libre; et nos canots, mis à flot et entraînés par le courant, descendent avec la plus grande vitesse.

Pendant ce trajet, qui ne fut que de quatre jours, nous rencontrions ça et là quelques bon sauvages, qui se faisaient un bonheur de nous assister.

* * * *

p. 3055

On a pu remarquer que, dans ce voyage, j'ai rencontré peu de sauvages Nascapis. Le lac Mushualagan est cependant le lieu où ils devaient se réunir ; mais il paraît que ces pauvres gens ne s'attendaient plus à la visite du missionnaire, vu que, depuis plusieurs années, on leur avait fait espérer cette visite d'un printemps à l'autre. J'ai même appris qu'un bon nombre avaient prouvé leur bonne volonté, mais se voyant ainsi frustrés dans leurs espérances, les quelques familles qui, dans l'espoir de cette visite, étaient venues de loin se fixer en attendant sur les environs du lac, avaient repris le chemin de la baie d'Hudson, ou s'étaient établies sur le versant, de l'autre côté de la hauteur des terres. Aussi, les sauvages qui, cette aimée, étaient partis avant moi de la mer tout exprès pour leur annoncer ma venue, ne les retrouvèrent plus. Ces derniers Indiens sont ceux qui ont tant souffert des horreurs de la faim, cette année.

Egalement, d'après ce que j'ai pu conclure des observations des Nascapis, étant au milieu d'eux, ce lieu aurait été mal choisi pour point de réunion d'un grand nombre de familles, vu le manque total de ressources de chasse ou de pêche, à certaines époques, et l'absence totale de magasins où les sauvages puissent échanger leurs pelleteries pour les objets les plus indispensables, tels que poudre, plomb, fusils, haches, couvertes, etc. Aussi se portent-ils naturellement du côté où sont les postes, car là en cas de besoin, ils reçoivent toujours quelques secours.

Il resulterait de ces mêmes rapports que les Nascapis sont nombreux sur la côte orientale de la baie d'Hudson et sur le versant de la hauteur des terres. La chasse y est abondante; les magasins de la compagnie y sont disséminés de distance en distance.

RAPPORT SUR LES MISSIONS DU DIOCESE DE QUEBEC,
MARS, 1855. No. 11.

Rivière Manikouagan (de la Cabane de Grégoire Pistapesh),

3 Juillet 1855.

Monseigneur,

Il y a peu de temps, après avoir reçu ordre de monter dans les terres pour aller évangéliser les sauvages infidèles Naskapis, je me mis en route au temps marqué, avec trois Montagnais et deux Canadiens Nous avons manqué perdre la vie dans un rapide. Au milieu du tourbillon, nos provisions et nos effets sont tombés à l'eau; on a ramassé ce que l'on a pu de ce qui est venu à terre. Je me suis jeté à l'eau pour sauver une poche de farine, tandis que mes hommes, courant à toute hâte, faisaient tous leurs efforts pour sauver le canot, seul moyen que nous eussions pour nous transporter à la mer. Ils furent assez heureux pour le ressaisir au bout du rapide.

C'est ainsi, Monseigneur, que nous avons été forcés d'abandonner notre voyage. . . . J'espère qu'à une autre époque nous serons plus heureux.

Ce qui avait beaucoup contribué à retarder notre voyage, c'était le hauteur des eaux. Les sauvages ne se rappellent point avoir jamais vu les eaux si grosses dans les rivières.

J'ai l'honneur d'être,

Monseigneur,

De Votre Grandeur,

Le fils très-soumis et obéissant,

HISTORICAL NOTES ON THE MISSION OF STE CROIX AT TADOUSSAC.

[1857.]

 RAPPORT SUR LES MISSIONS DU DIOCÈSE DE QUEBEC, 1857.

NOTICE HISTORIQUE SUR LA MISSION DE SAINTE CROIX DE TADOUSSAC.

En 1672 le P. de Crespieul qui avait hiverné à Tadoussac l'hiver précédent écrivait à son supérieur: Vous ne verrez dans le petit journal de notre voyage, qu'une suite de biens et de maux, de douceurs et de rigueurs, que la divine Providence a fait succéder les uns aux autres d'une façon bien aimable. Je partis de Québec le 25 octobre et nous nous rendîmes en 3 jours à Tadoussac où je trouvai les sauvages ravis de ma venue: ils me donnèrent des marques bien consolantes de leur piété pendant tout le temps que je fus avec eux, mais particulièrement le jour de tous les saints, ayant consacré cette grand fête par toutes les dévotions qui se pratiquent au milieu du christianisme le plus saint. Nous quittâmes ce lieu le 6 novembre pour entrer dans la rivière du Saguenay . . . Le 17 mai suivant nous revîmes avec joie Tadoussac que nous avions quitté six mois auparavant. C'était le temps d'entreprendre la mission des Papinachois pour laquelle Notre Seigneur m'avait conservé assez de force. C'est à 30 lieues audessous de Tadoussac, et je m'y trouvai heureusement au temps que ces sauvages y abondent du fond des bois pour y faire leur petit commerce avec les française.

Dans une note écrite sur les Régistres, le Père Crespieul fait connaître qu'il était chargé de la mission Montagnaise le long de la rivière Chicoutimi, et en partie de celle de S. Charles au lac S. Jean (ou Peok8agamy) ; de la mission de S. Ignace sur la rivière Nekouban, de celle de la Ste. Famille au and lac des Mistassins. Le Sieur Nicolas Bonhomme y est allé, dit-il, avec 10 français et les montagnais Kicherini8 et Ra8chin, pour rebâtir la maison de S. Nicolas et le cimetièrè commun ainsi que celui des enfants. L'église de S. François Xavier (Chicoutimi) a aussi été rebâtie de mon temps aux frais du Sieur Hazeur par Paul Quartier, charpentier, Cotté et Baiargeon sous la direction du Sieur Robert Drouïard. " Ces petits détails ne manquent pas d'intérêt. . . .

Le Père Jean Baptiste Boucher, Jésuite, natif de Paris, vint à Québec en juin 1674. Il apprit au couvent les langues sauvages et fut envoyé à Tadoussac en 1675 ; il en revint en 1677. Ce fut le premier missionnaire qui passa l'hiver avec les Papinachois, dont le pays était audessus de Tadoussac, Papinachois. Accompagné du P. Crépieul il se rendit au lac St. Jean, à la résidence de St. Charles de Métabetchouan. Au mois de Janvier ils allèrent loger ensemble sur la rivière des Iroquois, visitèrent et instruisirent les sauvages et ne revinrent à Chicoutimi que dans le mois de Juin. Revenu à Tadoussac après des fatigues inouïes, le P. Boucher s'embarqua immédiatement pour se rendre chez les Papinachois et aux Sep.-Isles. “ J'y ai trouvé, dit-il, des sauvages qui temoignaient un grand désir d'être instruits et d'autres qui ne sont plus chrétiens que de nom, ayant été fort longtemps sans voir aucun missionnaire. La Providence est admirable sur quelques uns de ces pauvres abandonnés, qui sans le secours des sacrements et sans aucune instruction passent plusieurs années dans une merveilleuse innocence. Si ces projets qu'on a fait d'aller passer avec eux une partie de l'année s'exécutent, j'espère qu'on rétablira les anciens chrétiens dans leur première ferveur et que bon nombre d'infidèles entreront dans l'Eglise.”

Ceux qui ont lu les lettres des Missionnaires résidant chez ces sauvages savent que les prévisions du Père Boucher se sont parfaitement réalisées. . . .

Le Père Pierre Laure, natif d'Avignon, fut ordonné prêtre à l'Hôpital Général par Mgr. de St. Valier le 23 juin 1719. Il fut chargé de la mission de Tadoussac de 1720 à 1737; il visita quelquefois aussi les Abénakis. Après 1737 il fut nommé missionnaire des Eboulements, et au rapport du P. Maurice, il y mourut le 22 novembre 1738 à 64 ans. Il a laissé une carte exacte du territoire du Saguenay; qui est au dépôt de la marine, et dont il existe plusieurs copies. A défaut d'une relation suivie, voici quelques extraits de son journal.

1721.

1724.

J'hivernai encore à la mer, à Notre Dame de Bon-désir.

JOURNAL DU PERE J. B. MAURICE, S.J.

1740.

Je suis parti de Québec le 14 de juin 1740 pour venir prendre la place du Rev. Père Laure morte deux années auparavant aux Eboulements.

1742.

Sur la fin du mois de May, je m'embarquai de Québec en canot pour m'en retourner dans ma mission parfaitement guéri. Après avoir resté quelques jours à la Malbaie et près de deux semaines à Tadoussac j'arrivai le 15 de Juin à Chikoutimy. . . .

Le 14 d'octobre après avoir séjourné environ un mois à Québec au retour de ma mission, je me suis embarqué dans la petite barque des Sept-Isles nommé le St. François, dans le dessein de venir hiverner cette année là dans ce poste où je suis arrivé pour la 1ère fois, le 10 de novembre. Nous avons mouillé le 27 d'octobre dans le Havre de St. Nicolas pour y mettre les provisions nécessaires pour l'hivernement qui se fait à la pointe à la croix à une lieue environ plus haut que ce Havre.

Le 10 de novembre j'ai enfin mis pied à terre aux Sept Isles où j'eus le bonheur de célébrer la messe pour la première fois ce même jour là, qui était un dimanche. Le 12 de Mars 1744, Joseph Philibot que j'avais pris l'automne d'auparavant avec moi et que j'avais mené aux Sept Isles pour y hiverner avec moi avec Michel Drapeau un des engagés de ce poste ont été des premiers à équarrir le bois pour la chapelle que j'ai dessein de faire lever dans cet endroit avec la grâce de Dieu; l'après diné de ce jour je fus moi même dans le bois où ils étaient à travailler donner quelques coups de hache pour animer nos ouvriers et avoir la consolation d'avoir mis aussi la main à l'ouvrage.

Le 14 d'avril je partis des Sept Isles pour aller à Mingan, où M. Volant m'avait invité plusieurs fois de l'aller voir. J'y arrivai le 12 du même mois sur les six heures du soir. Le 3 de mai, quatrième dimanche après Pâques et jour de l'invention de la Ste. Croix, j'eux la consolation d'y voir planter par M. Volant et tous les français qui étaient pour lors dans ce poste, une croix de 26 pieds de haut que je bénis ce jour là, à la grande satisfaction de tout le monde. . . .

NOTA.—Le P. Coquart était natif de Melun et arriva à Québec en 1734. Il fut envoyé sur la rivière St. Jean; suivant M. Shea (history of the C. Missions) il visita les Abénakis en 1760; ce qui s'accorde avec les Registres de Tadoussac; mais sa principale mission fut celle des Montagnais. . . .

Notice sur la vie du Pere LaBrosse.

Jean Baptiste de LaBrosse, Jésuite, natif de Trémouille en Poitou, arriva à Québec le 24 septembre 1754, et après avoir desservi des paroisses, fut envoyé à Tadoussac où il arriva le 11 juillet 1766. Il continua à en être chargé jusqu'à sa mort arrivé le 3 avril 1782: Il avait 68 ans, et était dans la compagnie depuis 25 ans et 2 mois; le P. Coquart avait reçu sa profession religieuse à Québec, le 2 fevrier 1758. . . .

Il mourut à Tadoussac le 11 Avril 1782, à l'âge de 70 ans, et fut enterré dans la chapelle par M. Compain, curé de l'Isle aux Coudres. Son corps a été depuis, dit-on, transporté à Chicoutimi.

C'est le Père LaBrosse, dit M. Tache dans ses Forestiers et Voyageurs, qui a mis la dernière main à cette belle chrétienté montagnaise si pleine de foi et de piété. Il a écrit la plupart des livres religieux qui sont encore en usage chez les Montagnais, a composé un dictionnaire de la langue de ce peuple et traduit des passages considérables de la Sainte Ecriture dans cette langue. Le Père LaBrosse a encore répandu chez ses bons et chers sauvages, l'usage de la lecture et de l'écriture qui s'est transmis de génération en génération dans toutes les familles de cette tribu jusqu'à ce jour."

REPORT TO FATHER ARNAUD ON HIS MISSION TO THE NASKAPIS.

 RAPPORT SUR LES MISSIONS DU DIOCESE DE QUEBEC,
Avril, 1859. No. 13.

A Mgr. l'Administrateur de l'Archidiocèse de Québec.

Après avoir reçu vos paternelles instructions concernant la mission des Naskapis encore infidèles, dont vous me chargiez, et surtout fortifié par ce zèle que vos paroles faisaient pénétrer dans mon coeur, je me dirigeai plein de joie vers les Sept-Iles, qui devaient être mon lieu de départ et où je devais compléter tous mes préparatifs de voyage. Mon esprit se portait habituellement vers ces endroits sauvages où j'étais envoyé; la pensée que mon évêque, que des pères et des frères chéris et tant d'âmes pieuses qui s'intéressent à la conversion des infidèles prient pour moi, me remplissait de courage et de confiance.

* * * *

Je mis pied à terre aux Betshiamits pour faire construire mon canot; dans les postes plus éloignés on ne trouve que difficilement de l'écorce propre à cet usage. C'était juste le temps où les sauvages descendaient des terres ; un grand nombre d'entr'eux n'avait pas revu la mer depuis la dernière mission, ils avaient passé l'année entière dans les forêts. La joie était peinte sur tous les visages : c'étaient des parents, des amis qui se revoyaient après une assez longue absence. Pour plusieurs elle avait été remplie de dangers; les uns étaient rayonnants de santé, d'autres paraissaient dans un état moins prospère et enfin quelques uns portaient les empreintes de la misère et de la faim; mais tous paraissaient heureux de/se revoir. Leur première visite était pour leur humble chapelle, ils allaient remercier le Seigneur par l'intermédiaire de Marie, de les avoir ramenés encore une fois sains et saufs : bref, toutes leurs peines étaient oubliées, car ils venaient d'entonner le cantique d'action de grâces.

Je quittai cette intéressante mission en leur recommandant l'oeuvre que Votre Grandeur m'avait confiée, et ils promirent le secours de leurs prières pour une entreprise si belle : "Nous sommes heureux, me disaient les uns, de ce que tu vas instruire nos frères les Naskapis, qui ignorent encore la sainte prière ; comme ils seront heureux, de voir la robe noire, eux qui la désirent depuis si longtemps! tous les jours nous penserons à toi et aux infidèles; que le bon Dieu bénisse tes pas! D'autres vieux cerfs des forêts, accoutumés à parcourir de longues distances et qui devinent du regard toutes les sinuosités du terrain et des rivières, ne me rassuraient guère sur les difficultés du chemin. “ Père, me dit l'un deux, juste au moment du départ: tu ne seras jamais capable de faire ce voyage dans un été. Notre père le Grand Priant aura été trompé sur la distance que tu as à parcourir; les sauvages des terres; vu le désir ardent qu'ils ont de voir la robe noire, auront exagéré beaucoup en diminuant la distance qu'il y a pour se rendre jusqu'à leur poste. Tu n'arriveras pas à Petshikupau avant Noël ; je te donne ces renseignements pour que tu te précautionnes afin de ne pas trop souffrir dans ton voyage; en quittant la mer tu te rendras à Ashuanipi, qui est à un mois de marche des Sept-Iles; ce lac est à moitié chemin des Sept-Iles à Petshikupau. Arrivé là au commencement d'Août, tu seras obligé de te remettre entièrement à la discrétion des Naskapis pour le reste du trajet, car aucun de nous n'a été à Petshikupau ; c'est le temps où ils sont occupés à faire des amas de poissons et je crains que tu n'en trouves pas un pour t'accompagner dans la route ; ils savent qu'au poste, ils ne reçoivent point de nourriture et aucun ne voudra se mettre en chemin avant d'assurer à sa famille le moyen de vivre en son absence. Les lacs de l'autre côté de la hauteur des terres prennent en glaces dès le mois de décembre; le canot est mis alors de côté, il faut attendre que la neige soit bonne pour la raquette ; que feras-tu pendant tout ce temps? Tu mangeras tes provisions, et tu seras ensuite obligé d'errer d'un côté et d'autre avec les sauvages pour gagner ta vie ; peut-etre tu n'arriveras au poste que dans l'hiver très-avancé. Père, crois à ma parole, je connais aussi les lieux puisque c'est là que j'ai été élevé.” Ces paroles dites avec l'accent de la persuasion étaient loin de m'animer. “ N'importe je voyagerai, lui répondis-je ; je ferai tout ce qui est en mon pouvoir pour correspondre aux vœux de notre père le Grand Priant ; si je ne puis pas me rendre tout-à-fait où je suis envoyé, je tâcherai d'instruire sur ma route ceux que je rencontrerai; puis lorsque je ne pourrai aller plus loin, je retournerai sur mes pas.”

* * * *

Aux Sept-Iles je rencontrai trois autres familles descendues des terres, qui quoique éprouvées par la faim n'avaient pas été réduites à ces fâcheuses extrémités.

Le jour de la St. Pierre onze canots descendaient, armes et bagages, de la rivière Moisy; huit hommes formaient le parti de Dominique, chef des Sept-Iles, et trois celui de Marc, chef des Naskapis. Ils s'étaient donné rendez-vous sur les bords du lac Ashuanipi, et venaient en caravanes (flottille de canots) apporter le produit de leur chasse et assister à la mission. La chasse ayant été peu abondante, les deux chefs et leurs gens ne paraissaient pas beaucoup embarrassés de leurs pelleteries; plusieurs avaient allégé leurs paquets en mangeant les peaux de castor afin de s'empêcher de mourir de faim.

Monseigneur, vous connaissez déjà le costume et les mœurs de nos Montagnais; permettez-moi de vous faire en deux mots le portrait de nos pauvres Naskapis, qui se trouvent deux filles et un garçon ; ils ont laissé leurs familles sur les bords du lac Ashuanipi avec quelques autres sauvages ; ils ne les ont point amenées avec eux afin de faire le voyage avec plus de célérité. Ils sont tous grands, assez bien faits, paraissent souples et alertes, à l'exception de leur chef que l'âge commence à appesantir. Les uns portent une longue chevelure, qui leur tombe négligemment sur les épaules et au milieu du dos. D'autres se sont coupé les cheveux, mais d'une manière bien irrégulière, et paraissent avoir mis leur petite vanité à se laisser de longues mèches de cheveux, qui leur cachent la vue. Un autre, sans doute plus original, ayant trouvé que ma tonsure produisait un bon effet à ses yeux, s'en est fait faire une semblable à la mienne et se promène la tête nue, semblant prendre plaisir à faire admirer sa couronne. Quand ils sont arrivés, leur mise répondait à leur personne; une peau de caribou agraffée sur la poitrine cachait tant bien que mal les épaules et les reins; un brayer, des mitasses et des souliers de caribou composaient toute leur toilette. A la mer, ils ont reçu en présent chacun une chemise, un capot et un pantalon, qu'ils ont aussitôt revêtus sans quitter les vêtements qu'ils avaient déjà. Ils se dédommagent amplement de la privation où ils avaient été en achetant de nouveaux; en les essayant, s'ils trouvent que le vêtement leur va, ils le gardent et ne le quittent point. Ici on en voit qui se promènent avec deux ou trois pantalons; un pauvre malheureux est boutonné jusqu'au menton dans deux gros capots d'hiver; le chef, qui a ordinairement trois chemises, a passé toute la journée de Dimanche avec cinq, les unes par-dessus les autres. Va sans dire qu'ils transpirent par la chaleur qu'il fait, comme s'ils étaient sous un étouffoir ; mais ils tiennent bon.

Après les premiers moments passés à se donner et demander des nouvelles, je réunis tous les hommes pour leur exposer les désirs de Votre Grandeur, et priai en même temps les chefs de choisir eux-mêmes les guides et les hommes qui devaient m'accompagner, afin de pouvoir fixer le jour du départ et terminer les préparatifs.

“ Père, me dit Dominique, nous serions heureux de retourner aussitôt avec toi, de t'accompagner, afin de prouver à notre père le Grand Priant que nous aimons et respectons sa parole; mais aucun de nous ne pourra te conduire jusqu'à Petshikupau dans l'intérieur des terres, parce qu'il ne pourrait pas revenir cet automne de ce voyage ; on serait obligé de laisser pour trop longtemps les femmes et les enfants. Le poste où tu veux te rendre est à deux mois de marche de la mer. Nous mettrions un mois pour nous rendre au lac Ashuanipi; on y arriverait au commencement du mois d'août. Ce lac est à moitié chemin entre les Sept-Iles et Petshikupau ; de Ashuanipi à Petshikupau on mettrait encore un mois à faire le trajet; on arriverait au poste vers le commencement de l'hiver. Ces lacs gelant, la navigation pour les canots est fermée, et pour y revenir il nous faudrait prendre les raquettes, et faire ensuite à pied tout le trajet qu'on a parcouru en canots. J'ignore la distance de Petshikupau à la Baie des Esquimaux ; les Naskapis présents te donneront là-dessus des renseignements justes et précis.” Le vieux Marc, chef des Naskapis, parla comme les sauvages des Sept-Iles, sur la distance à parcourir et les difficultés à surmonter ; il s'offrait bien à me conduire jusqu'au lac Ashuanipi, où il se propose de passer une partie de l'hiver, parce que ses eaux lui offrent une ressource certaine. Si les caribous viennent à faire défaut, il trouvera sous la glace du lac des poissons nécessaires pour le sustenter, lui et sa famille. Mais il ne voulut point entendre parler d'aller plus loin. “ Père, me dit-il, je n'irai point à Petshikupau, parce que je n'y trouverais rien pour vivre ; on peut mourir aux portes du poste sans recevoir le moindre secours. Le commis ne reçoit dans son poste que des objets pour échanger avec la pelleterie, mais il n'a des vivres, des provisions que tout juste ce qu'il lui en faut pour lui-même. Souvent il a, eu besoin d'avoir recours aux sauvages, pour s'empêcher de mourir de faim, et lorsque quelqu'un d'entre nous se trouve sans vivres, il n'est pas assuré en gagnant le poste de recevoir une bouchée; il mourra sans secours, parce que le gardien se trouve aussi dépourvu que lui.

“ Père, j'ai abandonné ces lieux, car depuis longtemps les commis m'ont toujours trompé, ils nous faisaient toujours espérer que la robe noire viendrait nous apprendre la Saint Prière. Nous l'attendions chaque printemps, nous avons vieilli, nos enfants sont devenus grands et nous ne savons pas encore prier, ni chanter la Sainte Prière. J'ai dit à mes enfants ; nous ne retournerons plus à ce lieu, nous descendrons vers la mer où chaque année nous verrons la robe noire.

“Père, écoute encore mon conseil : suppose qu'on pût même te mener à Petshikupau, tu ne pourrais pas te rendre cet hiver jusqu'à la Baie des Esquimaux, car tu trouverais le poste désert ; tous les sauvages sont alors dispersés dans le bois. Le commis se trouve seul avec un ou deux hommes, quelques fois davantage, mais ces derniers chaque automne prennent aussi ; leurs quartiers d'hiver dans différentes places pour dresser des attrapes aux martres, renards, etc. Tu serais alors contraint de passer l'hiver dans le poste à moins que le commis ne se charge lui-même de t'emmener à la Baie. Père, écoute encore un conseil : ton voyage serait bien plus certain et moins pénible, si tu te dirigeais d'abord à la Baie des Esquimaux, et remontais ensuite la Grande Rivière ; le trajet est moins long et plus facile, en moins de quinze jours tu te rendrais à Petshikupau, tu pourrais visiter ceux de nos frères qui sont sur les bords du détroit, où de nouveaux marchands viennent d'établir des comptoirs. Les sauvages attirés par la nouveauté s'y rendent de bien loin, j'ai visité ces lieux il y a à peine quatre ans. Robe Noire, montre à notre Grand Père, le chef de la prière, le chemin qu'on vient de te tracer sur le papier, il jugera de la distance ; tu lui expliqueras notre parole, tu lui diras combien nous sommes contents de savoir qu'il pense à notre pauvre nation."

Monseigneur, après avoir entendu tous ces sauvages, et pesé leurs raisons, je ne savais comment me décider : je connaissais le désir que vous avez de faire instruire cette pauvre nation, la seule de votre immense Diocèse qui n'a pas encore été éclairée du flambeau de la foi. Je fis de nouveaux efforts, auprès des anciens et des jeunes gens, forts et courageux, qui aiment ordinairement ces voyages lointains ; mêmes objections et mêmes refus. Je dus dès lors renoncer, non sans peine à ce projet, que vous aviez tant à coeur, Mgr, et que vous désiriez si ardemment de voir réussir. Ne pouvant suivre ces sauvages dans le bois, je m'occupais à les instruire pendant les quelques jours qu'ils passèrent à la mer. Ceux qui étaient descendus pour la première fois étaient ravis de ce qu'ils voyaient et entendaient ; ils assistèrent avec une modestie angélique à la sainte messe, que je disais sous la tente, et aux autres exercices. Ils promirent tous de revenir le printemps prochain avec leurs femmes et leurs enfants, afin de se faire instruire et de recevoir le baptême, car plusieurs d'entre ceux qui étaient présents sont encore infidèles.

p. 3065

Après avoir passé huit jours ensemble à la Rivière Moisy, on se dit adieu ; ils reprirent le chemin du bois, contents de ce qu'ils avaient vu et entendu.

FATHER BABEL TO THE PROVINCIAL OF CANADA.

RAPPORTS DE L'ASSOCIATION DE LA PROPAGATION DE LA FOI, MONTREAL. 3. 1869-1870.

Betsiamits, 27 Octobre 1866.

Révérénd Et Bien Cher Père.

Me voilà enfin de retour de ma longue et pénible excursion dans l'intérieur des terres. Devant, comme vous le savez, me trouver à Mingan, au commencement de juin, d'après les ordres laissés par M. Smith, je saisis la prochaine occasion de gagner ce poste qui se présentât à moi. Ce fut le 30 avril que je quittai Québec, en compagnie du P. Arnaud, pour me rendre à Mingan, à bord de la goëlette du capitaine Turgeon. . . . Après avoir touché à Tadoussac, aux Escoumins, au Sault-du-Cochon, à Betsiamits, à Godboud, à la Trinité, la Pointe-des-Monts, les Sept-Iles, elle arriva heureusement à Mingan, et m'y laissa avec le P. Nédelec, mon compagnon de route. Je trouvai à Mingan M. Dorey, commis du poste de Natashkwaw, qui gardait celui de Mingan en l'absence de M. Peter Mackenzie, récemment parti en goëlette afin d'acheter des pelleteries sur les côtes du Labrador. Je demandai à ce monsieur s'il avait reçu des ordres relativement à ma mission dans l'intérieur des terres, s'il avait un canot et les autres choses nécessaires pour un tel voyage. "M. Smith, me dit-il, est encore en Angleterre; je n'ai reçu aucun ordre concernant votre mission, et beaucoup d'effets nécessaires pour un tel voyage me manquent. J'attends moi-même avec impatience l'arrivée de la goëlette, car elle doit m'apporter des choses dont j'ai un besoin pressant. Si vous n'avez pas reçu d'ordres, dis-je à mon tour, ils ne tarderont à venir, et comme vous n'avez pas de canot, vous ferez bien de vous procurer de l'écorce à bord de la goëlette du capitaine Turgeon; il en est amplement pourvu pour faire la traite aux sauvages."

Pendant ce temps, nos sauvages de Mingan commençant à arriver au poste, je dus me disposer, ainsi que mon compagnon, à leur donner les exercices de la Mission J'avais cent trente-six enfants bien ignorants auxquels il me fallait apprendre la lettre du catechisme. . . .

Quand tous ces travaux furent terminés, je songeai à partir pour mon excursion dans l'intérieur des terres; mais plusieurs obstacles me retinrent d'abord. J'allais partir enfin, j'avais trouvé deux hommes, deux sauvages de la baie des Esquimaux, Jean Maskouaro et Jean-Marie, quand le commis du fort reçut une lettre de M. Smith, qui lui disait que, dans dix jours, il serait à Mingan avec le steamer de la compagnie, et que si je n'étais pas encore parti, je ferais mieux de l'attendre pour me rendre avec lui à la baie. Ce plan me souriait beaucoup, parce qu'il assurait le succès de mon excursion. Six ou sept jours auraient suffi au steamer pour me transporter à la baie des Esquimaux avec mon canot et mes hommes; de là, je serais monté par la rivière Pétastekoupaw jusqu'au poste de Winnaukoupaw, et de là j'aurais gagné Mingan sans être inquiet de mes hommes, qui auraient ramé avec courage pour rejoindre au plus vite leurs familles. J'attendis vainement ce steamer jusqu'au 17 juillet: ne le voyant pas arriver, et n'en recevant aucune nouvelle, je dis à M. Mackenzie de me préparer mes effets de voyage, de façon que je fusse en état de partir le lendemain par la rivière St. Jean. "Mes sauvages, lui dis-je, commencent à s'ennuyer, et s'ils me laissent, il sera absolument inutile de me rendre à la baie, où, probablement, je ne trouverais personne pour me conduire dans l'intérieur des terres."

La Compagnie n'avait rien envoyé pour mon voyage, et le poste de Mingan ne pouvait me fournir que des provisions grossières, telles qu'il les auraient données à un sauvage. Que dois-je faire, me dis-je, dois-je remonter à Québec ou entreprendre un voyage dans de telles conditions? M. Smith n'agit pas en gentilhomme à mon égard, et c'est la première fois que la Compagnie traite ainsi un Missionnaire. Mais, si je n'entreprends point ce voyage, je ne pense pas qu'on fasse une nouvelle tentative; je l'entreprendrai donc. Je sais qu'il est tard, bien tard pour rencontrer les sauvages, mais ne ferais-je que paraître chez eux, mon voyage aura un bon resultat, car, une autre année, je les trouverai réunis en grand nombre. Le 18, au soir, je quittai Mingan, et le lendemain matin j'entrai dans la rivière St. Jean. Là, je rencontrai vingt-cinq familles qui se disposaient à suivre la même route. . . . Je fis, pendant la matinée, tracer par un sauvage une carte de chemin à suivre jusqu'au poste de Winnaukoupaw ou nouveau Mingan. . . .

p. 3067

Le portage Atsouk pakatagan (portage du loupmarin: ces amphibies ne montent pas plus haut) m'attendait, et j'avais hâte de faire sa connaissance. . . .

Mon voyage, dans la rivière Saint-Jean, s'effectua sans autre incident; et le 22, nous la laissions à soixante-trois milles de son embouchure, pour fixer notre tente à l'entrée du portage Ratisch pakatagan (portage fréquenté). Nous entrons alors dans une chaîne de lacs et de portages que nous avons à franchir avant de pouvoir entrer dans la rivière Romaine. . . .

Nous avons devant nous cent quatre milles à franchir avant d'arriver à la rivière Romaine. Dans ce trajet, nous avons vingt-neuf portages longs et difficiles à travers les montagnes. . . .

Le 30, nous arrivions enfin à la rivière Romaine, que je devais suivre jusqu'à la hauteur des terres. . . .

Le 3 août, nous quittâmes momentanément la rivière Romaine. Son humeur voyageuse la portant à faire un contour qui ne nous allait pas, nous coupâmes au plus court, traversant jusqu'au grand lac Apouabowshkaw une suite continue de lacs et de portages. Ce lac une fois traversé, nous remontâmes de nouveau la rivière Romaine jusqu'au- grand lac Thsinikamaw, que nous devions traverser avec elle. Nous la suivîmes encore trois ou quatre milles au-dessus. . . .

Le 9, nous suivîmes quelque temps la rivière Natouakamou, puis nous nous engageons de nouveau dans une suite de lacs et de portages qui devaient nous faire atteindre un affluent de la grande rivière Petastekoupaw. . . . A trois heures du soir nous arrivions à la hauteur des terres, à cinq heures, nous descendîmes jusqu'à sept ou huit milles l'affluent dont j'ai parlé, puis nous entrâmes dans le lac Mouakosteton (nid des huards). . . .

Le 13, dès l'aurore, nous sommes en route; . . . à onze heures nous apercevons à trois milles la rivière Petastekoupaw, ce fleuve roi de la côte nord. A la vue de cette grande rivière, j'entonnai le Salve Regina pour recommander à la bonne Mère les nombreux Naskapis qui la fréquentent. . . . A trois heures, nous étions devant le poste de Winnaukoupaw, à cinq cent dix milles de Mingan. Mais, ô cruelle déception ! je devais renouveler, à ce poste, nos provisions de voyage et ce poste est vide. Le commis et tous les sauvages sont descendus à la baie avec leurs berges, pour remonter leurs provisions et les effets.

Les sauvages, fatigués d'attendre le missionnaire et se croyant encore trompés, sont partis, et je ne trouve que leurs campements. D'après leurs dimensions, il devait y avoir ici une centaine de sauvages. Mes deux hommes me regardent et semblent me dire: Qu'allons-nous faire?—“Voulez-vous, leur dis-je, me descendre à la baie? En suivant le cours de la rivière nous y serons dans deux ou trois jours.” Xavier me dit, après avoir jeté les yeux sur Jean-Marie: “C'est impossible.” Jean-Marie, en effet, était fatigué; tous les jours il saignait du nez et laissait à Xavier les lourds fardeaux. “Alors, dis-je, nous passerons ici la journée de demain, et après-demain nous partirons.”

La rivière Petastekoupau ou Rivière de la baie des Esquimaux, bien

qu'elle soit rapide et profonde, a bien un demi-mille de largeur: elle roule trois fois autant d'eau que l'Ottawa. C'est sur ce fleuve que sont bâtis tous les postes de la Compagnie, pour traiter avec les Naskapis. Winnaukoupau se trouve à moitié chemin entre la baie des Esquimaux et le poste Naskapis ou Petastekoupau. . . . A Winnaukoupau, l'an prochain, une bonne partie des Naskapis de Petastekoupau se trouveront réunis; ils savent qu'un Missionnaire y est monté, car les Naskapis descendus à la baie, pour monter les affaires du poste de Petastekoupau, doivent passer à Winnaukoupau, et le commis du fort ne manquera pas de leur montrer ma chapelle de Mission que j'y ai laissée, ainsi qu'une lettre.

Ce poste est-il bien situé pour une Mission naskapise? Non, et cela pour une raison majeure. Il faut absolument aux Naskapis et à tous les sauvages des terres poissonneuses et une place abondante en gibier, en caribou. Winnaukoupau n'a rien de tout cela. . . . Je ne comprends pas comment la Compagnie a fixé là un poste quand il y a, à une vingtaine de lieues plus loin, sur la même rivière, deux grands lacs très poissonneux et abondance de toute sorte de gibiers. Ces deux lacs sont les lacs Atikonak et Michikoman; ils sont bien plus rapprochés de Petastekoupau et de Mingan. Les Naskapis sont obligés de traverser ces lacs quand ils descendent à la baie. . . .

MISSIONS DU LABRADOR.

MISSIONS DES OBLATS, 1869

Betsiamits, le 10 novembre 1867.

Mon Révérend et bien cher Père,

Je suis enfin de retour de ma longue excursion dans l'intérieur du Labrador. Je suis rentré à la maison de notre chère mission des Betsiamits, le 28 octobre, après une absence de cinq mois et demi.

* * * *

Pour me conformer aux instructions que j'avais reçues de m'avancer dans l'intérieur du Labrador et de visiter les diverses peuplades qui l'habitent, je me suis rendu à Mingan, dès les premiers jours du printemps, afin de donner la mission aux sauvages qui fréquentent ce poste.

* * * *

p. 3069

Je quittai Mingan le 9 juillet à bord d'un steamer de la compagnie de la baie d'Hudson, qui devait me conduire à la baie des Esquimaux. Le temps était calme et beau, j'étais sur un superbe bateau à vapeur, entourée des prévenances et des attentions les plus délicates, par M. Smith, officier de la compagnie, et par l'excellent capitaine de notre navire, qui avait eu la gracieuseté de me céder sa propre cabine. J'étais Missionnaire à bon marché, nous verrons plus tard les choses changer de tournure; mais je me fais un bonheur et un devoir de dire ici que l'honorable compagnie de la baie d'Hudson ne néglige rien pour nous aider dans nos différentes voyages, et nous comptons sur cette bienveillance dans toutes nos courses apostoliques.

Arrivés au delà du détroit de Belle-Ile, nous nous trouvâmes au milieu des glaces. Les ice bergs (montagnes de glaces) sont loin d'y rechauffer la température, aussi nous fûmes obligés d'y reprendre nos vêtements d'hiver. Après cinq jours d'un froid très-vif, nous jetâmes enfin l'ancre devant un poste de la compagnie appelé Rigoulette.

Ce poste se trouve au fond d'une large baie à 40 milles de l'Océan.

* * * *

Quelques Irlandais qui s'occupent de la pêche reçoivent de temps à autre la visite d'un prêtre de Terre-Neuve dont ils dépendent.

Je vis arriver avec grand plaisir le moment du départ de Rigoulette pour North-West-River, poste situé à 90 milles plus haut dans l'intérieur des terres. C'était là que je devais rencontrer les premiers sauvages Montagnais que j'avais mission d'évangéliser. J'y trouvai quatorze familles chrétiennes et deux familles infidèles. Après quinze jours de travail j'eus la consolation de donner le baptême à quinze adultes et sept enfants. Il y avait aussi à North-West-River vingt-deux Naskapis infidèles, venus du poste de Pettaustickopau pour monter les effets de traite.

Une double route s'ouvrait alors devant moi, celle de Hungava et celle de Pettaustickopau, mais je ne pouvais être longtemps indécis sur le choix que j'avais à faire, parce que mes Naskapis me demandaient d'aller les instruire et j'étais sûr de faire bon voyage en leur compagnie; il n'y avait de difficulté que pour mon retour. Cette fois encore M. Smith, par son obligeance, me vint en aide, il me promit deux hommes pour me ramener à la mer. Je me mis donc en canot avec les Naskapis et pendant trente-neuf jours que dura le voyage, j'eus le loisir de les instruire, je parvins même à leur apprendre à lire.

* * * *

Dans un petit poste qui se trouvait sur mon passage et qui s'appelle Winnaukapau, je m'arrêtai trois jours; j'y étais connu et j'eus le bonheur d'y baptiser quelques enfants.

* * * *

Je quittai Pettaustickopau et mes bons Naskapis, le 17 septembre, et je pris la route de Mingan en compagnie de deux sauvages. J'avais à faire un voyage de 575 milles, c'est-à-dire près de 200 lieues avant d'y arriver. J'aurais pu avec deux hommes robustes faire ce trajet en treize ou quatorze jours, mais je n'avais malheureusement avec moi qu'un vieillard et un tout jeune homme; il me fallut endurer avec eux un long martyre de trente-trois jours.

p. 3070

FATHER BABEL TO HIS SUPERIOR ON THE MISSION AMONG THE NASKAPIS, ESQUIMAUX BAY.

Betsiamits, le 3 novembre 1868.

Mon Révérend Père,

Me voilà enfin de retour de ma longue excursion; c'est le 22 octobre que le suis arrivé à Betsiamits, heureux de déposer la tente et l'aviron. J'ai pu visiter tous les postes que j'avais vus l'année précédente, parcourir la même route, seulement au lieu de descendre du poste de Pétatstèkupau à Mingan, je suis descendu aux Sept-îles par la rivière Moisie. En suivant cette nouvelle route, j'ai abrégé mon chemin de quatre-vingt-dix milles en canot et quatre-vingt-sept milles par mer. Mon voyage a été heureux, bien qu'il n'ait pas été exempt de fatigues et de privations; ma santé a été excellente; je n'avais pas le temps d'être malade.

Je ne vous parlerai pas des péripéties de mon voyage que les tempêtes continuelles, qui ont régné pendant l'été, ont rendu un peu difficile. Je n'ai pas eu d'été; de fréquentes giboulées de neige et de pluie entretenaient dans les terres une température glaciale; et le 3 octobre, jour où je revoyais la mer à Moisie, j'avais déjà reçu quinze fois la visite de la neige, et deux fois nous avons dit briser la glace devant notre canot.

La première mission que j'ai faite, est celle de Mingan, où j'ai passé un mois. Je trouvai là quatre-vingt-onze familles montagnaises, trois cent cinquante-trois âmes qui souffraient de la faim. Le gouvernement, avec ses lois de pêche, tue ces pauvres sauvages et les réduit à la misère. J'ai entendu deux cent soixante-cinq confessions, donné deux cent vingt-quatre communions, administré treize baptêmes d'enfants et béni quatre manages.

De Mingan, je me suis rendu avec le steamer de la compagnie, à la Bais. des Esquimaux, jusqu'à N.W.-River; là je trouvai trente-six familles, cent cinquante-quatre âmes, avec lesquelles je demeurai quinze jours. Parmi elles se trouvaient trente-deux Naskapis, pour la plupart infidèles et venus d'Hungava. Ils avaient appris que l'année précédente j'avais pénétré jusqu'à Pétatstékupau, et ils n'avaient pas hésité à faire trois cents lieues pour me voir. Je les trouvai déjà passablement instruits; un bon sauvage chrétien s'était emparé d'eux à leur arrivée à N.W. River, et leur avait fait régulièrement le catéchisme et l'école. J'ai entendu cent quatre confessions, donné cinquante-une communions, baptisé cinq enfants, sept adultes, béni six mariages. J'aurais pu baptiser quinze hommes de plus, si leurs femmes avaient été à N.W. River, mais elles se trouvaient à Pétatstékupau.

Là je pris les deux Naskapis qui devaient me conduire à Pétatstékupau et me redescendre aux Sept-îles. En passant je m'arrêtai un instant à Winnaukupau. Ce poste était désert, j'avais laissé les sauvages qui le fréquentent à N.W. River. Le 30 août, nous arrivâmes à Pétatstékupau, où je trouvai cent-soixante âmes. Douze familles d'Hungava fatiguées de m'attendre étaient reparties; une quinzaine de familles n'avaient pas encore pu s'y rendre, à cause des tempêtes continuelles qui régnaient à la hauteur des terres. Voici le résultat de ma courte visite: trente confessions, trente-un baptêmes d'enfants, quarante-deux baptêmes d'adultes, six mariages, quatre bigames séparés. Si j'avais pu attendre l'arrivée de la berge que montaient les Naskapis que j'avais vus à N.W.-River, j'aurais eu trente baptêmes d'adultes de plus à faire.

Lorsque j'arrivai à N.W.-River, je trouvai là un certain nombre de Naskapis venus d'Hungava, qui me priaient de me rendre chez eux. Il y a là, me disaient-ils, bien des sauvages qui te demandent. Pour m'engager à m'y rendre ils disaient: "le pays est couvert de caribous; tu seras bien." Ils pensaient me donner une raison très-forte, car manger du caribou, est le nec plus ultra du bonheur pour le Naskapis. Je désirais ce voyage et visiter ce poste, mais je ne pouvais le faire qu'avec l'autorisation de Monsieur Smith, gouverneur de ce district; je lui fis part de mon projet. Je désirerais beaucoup, lui dis-je, descendre de Pétatstékupau à Hungava au lieu de prendre la route des Sept-îles. J'espère pouvoir gagner ce poste, avant l'arrivée du steamer avec lequel je reviendrai et gagnerai St. Jean de Terrebonne, etc. Tout en approuvant beaucoup mon projet, il me dissuada de le mettre à exécution cette année-ci. Le steamer, me dit-il, manque de charbon, et ne se rendra pas à Hungava cette année; de sorte que, si vous faites le voyage que vous me proposez, vous serez obligé d'hiverner à ce poste. N'étant pas préparé à passer l'hiver dans les terres, je dus renoncer à mon projet.

FATHER ARNAUD, O.M.I., TO HIS SUPERIOR.

Rivière des Naskapis, 6 Août, 1871.

Mon Révérend Père,

Me voici arrivé au fond de la baie des Esquimaux, à l'embouchure de la rivière Nord-Ouest, que l'on appelle aussi la rivière des Naskapis. Avant de vous entretenir de cet endroit, laissez-moi vous raconter les divers incidents de mon voyage. Après avoir quitté les Betsiamits, ma première visite fut à Mingan. Cette mission qui comptait autrefois 120 familles [sic] a beaucoup diminué. Un grand nombre de familles [sic] se sont dirigées vers la baie des Esquimaux. Je me suis recontre à Mingan avec M. Perron, délégué de Mgr. l'Evêque de Rimouski, qui a donné la confirmation à 70 de mes sauvages, dont il paraît très content. Ne sachant encore quel parti prendre pour rencontrer les Naskapis, que le R.P. Babel a trouvés, une fois, sur leurs terres, et qu'ensuite il n'a plus retrouvés deux ans de suite, je pris les informations nécessaires pour le succès de cette mission. L'on croit absolument inutile de songer à former une mission à Sandy Lake; et une bonne raison de penser que c'est la vérité, c'est que la Compagnie a abandonné Winnekapau et Peterskapau, parcequ'il était trop difficile d'approvisionner ces postes. Elle a ramené les sauvages à la baie des Esquimaux, où la pêche et la chasse sont plus abondantes.

De Mingan, je me suis rendu à St. Augustin en berge avec les sauvages. Le trajet peut être de 100 lieues. J'ai pu voir tous les sauvages qui étaient restés sur la côte. En passant à Natashkouan, j'ai fait faire la mission à un certain nombre de Montagnais.

* * * *

De St. Augustin, je suis parti avec le vapeur de la compagnie qui alla me déposer à Rigolet, poste suitée a 20 lieux dans la baie des Esquimaux.

* * * *

Et au milieu de ces affreux déserts, il y a de distance en distance des habitants, que l'on nomme planteurs : ils sont fixés sur cette côte affreuse pour s'occuper de chasse et de pêche.

C'est là que viennent s'approvisionner tous les grands commerçants de poisson. Il y a plusieurs de ces établissements dans la Baie des Esquimaux. Cette baie est immensément profonde et très-large à l'entrée; elle va se retrécissant jusqu'à Rigolet: ensuite elle s'élargit de nouveau et forme une petite mer intérieure, jusqu'à l'endroit où elle reçoit la décharge de la grande rivière de Naskapis. A Rigolet, j'ai trouvé quelques familles Esquimaux: elles ne montent jamais plus avant dans la baie, car elles ne sympathisent pas avec nos montagnais, lesquels viennent traiter ici, au petit fort qui se trouve au fond de la baie; les Naskapis y viennent également. En voyant ces pauvres esquimaux j'ai senti en moi le plus vif désir d'aller les voir chez eux. c'est-à-dire à Hungava, Nackvak, Lampson, à l'extrémité nord du Labrador. . . . J'ai rencontré ici plusieurs vieilles connaissances, qui me prêteront volontiers tout leur concours pour me faciliter un voyage par terre, jusqu'à Hungava. A ma grande satisfaction, j'ai retrouvé ici des amis de Betsiamits: Mr. Mathieu Fortescue, en charge du poste de Rigolet, et Mr. Cummins, qui m'ont accablé de politesse. Je puis compter sur eux; aussi je fais déjà mes plans pour l'année prochaine. De Rigolet au fort des Naskapis, il doit y avoir de 20 à 30 lieues. Je fis ce trajet en canot conduit par deux sauvages.

* * * *

Le poste de la rivière des Naskapis est dans un site magnifique, et le Vapeur de la Compagnie mouille juste devant le fort. C'est un poste central; il est à 48 lieues dans les terres, car la baie s'avance jusqu'à 50 lieues en gagnant le nord-ouest, de manière que nous défaisons notre chemin pour regagner St. Augustin, qui se trouve n'être séparé de la baie des Esquimaux que par une langue de terre de 60 à 70 lieues.

J'ai trouvé en cet endroit des Montagnais et des Naskapis; malheureusement ils n'étaient pas au complet. Je crois néanmoins cette place centrale pour les y attirer chaque année en grand nombre. L'on s'y rendrait de Sandy lake, de Peterskapau, et de Winnekapau. A mes yeux il ne s'agit que de les encourager et de régulariser la mission.

Sur la demande que je lui en fis, M. Connolly, me promit de faire construire une chapelle cet hiver. Je suis donc assuré de trouver ici tout le concours désirable pour la mission; la Compagnie a tout intérêt à me prêter son appui, et j'espère qu'il ne nous fera pas défaut. M. Connolly m'engage fortement à faire le voyage de Hungava, soit dans l'intérêt des âmes, soit dans l'intérêt de la Compagnie. Je serais donc le plus heureux des hommes, si vous vouliez me charger de cette expédition; je ne crains ni la fatigue, ni les privations; je compte sur le bon Dieu, qui n'abandonne jamais ses missionnaires.

Me recommandent à vos ferventes prières, je demeure, mon Rév. Père, etc.

N.D. des Neiges-Baie des Esquimaux 10 Aout 1872.

Mon Reverend & bien cher Père,

* * * *

Je ne veux pas me mettre en route pour Ungawa Sans vous envoyer un petit mot de lettre pour vous rassurer sur mon compte si toutefois je ne suis pas de retour sitôt cette automne que de coutume et vous envoyer en même le salut le plus affectueux que je puisse exprimer en langue Esquimaude.

* * * *

Vous dire mon Révérend père avec quelle joie j'ai été reçu à la baie des Esquimaux par tous nos sauvages et la famille de Mr Connoly bourgeois en charge de tout le district, c'est impossible. Nos bons Montagnais et Naskapis nous reçoivent comme un père.

* * * *

J'ai pu faire la mission dans notre nouvelle chapelle. L'année passé il n'y avait rien de fait, aussi je ne puis trop louer l'empressement que Mr Connoly a montré à satisfaire notre demande, la place a été déblayée, le bois de la charpente coupé et ce printemps il y avait six hommes en oeuvres, il a dirigé lui-même les travaux et tout a été si bien conduit qu'à l'arrivée des Sauvages du bois, ils ont tous été étonnés de voir une petite chapelle dont ils n'avaient pas encore entendu parler dans un endroit couvert de bois quelque temps auparavant. Là ne s'est pas borné le zèle de ce bon Monsieur, il a fait venir d'Angleterre par le Labrador une magnifique cloche du poids de cent dix livres dont il a fait don à la mission.

* * * *

Les Esquimaux sont assez nombreux ici sur la côte, mais le gros de la population se trouve réunis auprès des Moraves et surtout à Ungawa et sur les bords du détroit qui conduit à la baie D'Hudson.

* * * *

Tous les Esquimaux qui habitent le bois parlent Anglais. Ils ont des rapports continuels avec les planteurs et les gens du poste quelques uns même ont entièrement perdu l'usage de leur langue primitive; plusieurs ont

p. 3075

contracté mariage avec les blancs et perdu une partie de leurs anciens usages et se sont créés de nouveaux besoins.

Mon bien aimé Père,

En partant de Québec j'apprenais que vous vous dirigiez vers le Minesota. Je vous avais écrit la veille, vous ne trouverez probablement ma lettre qu'au retour de votre long voyage.

* * * *

Dans une de mes lettres datée je pense de N.D. des Neiges, au fond de la Baie des Esquimaux, je pense vous avoir mis au courant de cette mission et je vous annonçais mon futur départ pour Ungawa- je l'ai accompli heureusement mais sans succès pour l'établissement de nouvelles missions. Je suis cependant satisfait d'avoir visité tous ces lieux, j'aurais à présent le coeur tranquille, car je ne penserai plus à ces lointaines contrées.

Les Esquimaux ne sont pas si nombreux que je me l'étais figuré et qu'on me le disait je ne pense pas qu'ils nombrent au delà de deux cent familles sur tout le littoral que j'ai parcouru.

* * * *

Les Esquimaux se tiennent toujours sur le littoral, ils ne vont point comme nos naskapis ou montagnais dans l'intérieur du pays pour chasser; cependant tous les hivers ils tuent une grande quantité de renards, d'un prix très haut. le loup marin abonde dans ces parages, c'est leur nourriture quotidienne, ils mangent la chair et l'huile avec délice, et se vetissent de la peau, hommes, femmes et enfants;

MISSIONS DES OBLATS 1878.

Notre-Dame de Betshiatmits, 29 décembre

Mon Tres-Reverend et Bien-Aime Pere,

....Comme votre paternité m'a fait exprimer le desir d'avoir quelques détails de notre résidence, je ne pourrai mieux faire que de vous donner d'abord la topographie des lieux que nous parcourons pour nous y rendre.

* * * *

Notre-Dame de Bethsiamits est devenue le centre de nos missions montagnaises. C'est d'ici que partent, tous les printemps, les Missionnaires qui vont évangéliser les sauvages.
Les principaux postes où nous avons construit des chapelles sont Good-Bout, les Sept-Iles, Mingan, sur le littoral nord ; Notre-Dame des Neiges, au fond de la baie des Esquimaux, la pointe Bleue, sur les bords du lac Saint-Jean, dans le haut Saguenay. Nous avons encore bien des postes intermédiaires où le Missionnaire groupe les familles des environs et célèbre la sainte Messe sous la tente ou dans quelque petite maison en bois. Nous devons faire ainsi quand nous rendons à la baie aux Outardes, à la pointe aux Outardes, à Manikuagan, à la pointe des Monts, à la baie de la Trinité, à Islet-Caribou, aux Cailles-Rouges, etc., etc.

FATHER LACASSE TO FATHER TETU

REPORTING ON THE NASKAPI MISSION.

ANNALES DE LA PROPAGATION DE LA FOI POUR LA PROVINCE DE QUEBEC, JUIN 1878.

St. Sauveur, 1er Avril 1878.

Révérénd M.H. Têtu, Ptre.,
Aumônier de l'Archevêché de Québec,
Monsieur L'Aumônier,

Comme nos missions ne vivent que par les secours de la Propagation de la Foi, il est bien juste que je fasse connaître aux lecteurs de vos Annales que Dieu s'est plu à bénir leur générosité. Excusez le retard apporté à l'envoi de ces quelques notes promises depuis longtemps. Mais l'homme propose et Dieu dispose: j'avais tenu un journal des dix-huit longs mois passés au milieu des tribus infidèles; un naufrage est venu l'engloutir. La mer rend ses victimes, dit-on ; oui, mais les manuscrits exceptés. Sans autre préambule, je commence de suite, car je vois que le temps ne me permettra même pas de finir ce rapport.

Les Sauvages que les Révérends Pères Oblats de Bethsiamites ont à visiter, habitent un littoral de plus de neuf cents lieues, si on y comprend le pays des Esquimaux qui ont aussi été les objets de leur zèle et au milieu desquels ils ont l'espoir d'établir une résidence. Les Montagnais habitent le littoral du golfe depuis Bethsiamites, distant de soixante-et-dix lieues de Québec, jusqu'au Détroit de Belle-Isle. Ils sont disséminés par petites bourgades, vivent dans l'été à l'embouchure de certaines petites rivières qu'ils remontent pendant l'automne. Ils hivernent dans les bois, y font la chasse et reviennent au printemps vendre leurs pelleteries et se munir de provisions. Pendant leur séjour à la mer, ils font leur mission là où le prêtre va les attendre et se hâtent de retourner dans leurs bois. Comme ces Sauvages sont catholiques depuis longtemps et qu'ils n'ont rien qui les distinguent de la classe des Sauvages connus de vos lecteurs, je me hâte de vous introduire au milieu de mes chers Naskapis, autre tribu qui vit dans l'intérieur des terres. Quelques uns d'entre eux qui vivaient à la hauteur des terres des Sept-Iles et de Mingan, viennent maintenant faire leur mission à ces postes respectifs. Mais il y a des Naskapis qui vivent autour des grands lacs et le long des rivières qui donnent leurs eaux au détroit d'Hudson. Ce sont ces Naskapis que je viens vous présenter aujourd'hui. Comme ils ne peuvent ni ne veulent venir ici, il vous reste, M. l'Aumônier, l'obligation de faire route avec moi. Dites adieu à Québec que vous courez grand risque de ne plus revoir, et à bord d'une goëlette, faites route pour St. Augustin, poste distant de trois cents lieues. Vous êtes à bord du capitaine Narcisse Blais de Berthier. Ne craignez rien. Le chapelet et la prière commune de chaque jour sont votre sauvegarde. Le capitaine, que tous les missionnaires de la côte connaissent, sera plein d'égards pour vous; il vous donnera même son lit, en dépit de vos récriminations, et permettra à ses braves matelots de rire à gorge déployée quand, sous l'influence du mal de mer, vous irez jeter à l'ocean impitoyable, l'écume de votre courroux. Pauvre mal de mer ! Qu'il est acharné à tourmenter ses victimes! Après cinq ans de courses continuelles, il n'est pas encore satisfait de moi et il crie toujours: encore, encore! Et moi, penché sur le bastingage, de lui répondre: en voici!

Mais hâtons nous de passer à un sujet plus gai, car rien qu'au souvenir de la mer, mes yeux s'embrouillent, je ne distingue plus les lignes de mon papier, et mon coeur me supplie d'attendre au moins la débâcle, avant de prendre passage à bord d'un bateau. Nous sommes donc à St. Augustin: nous allons faire la mission aux pauvres Montagnais de cet endroit, et, de là, en compagnie de deux guides, traverser une langue de terre de 80 lieues pour tomber dans le fond de la Baie des Esquimaux, qui mêle ses eaux à celles de l'Atlantique. Les Rev. Pères Arnaud et Babel ont souvent visité cette mission. Voyez ces pauvres Naskapis accourir en foule au rivage. Si les haillons qui les couvrent vous invitent peu à les approcher, que leur timide sourire et les poignées de main qu'ils vous donnent vous déterminent à les presser sur votre coeur; n'en passez pas un seul, car ils sont jaloux de cette marque d'amitié de la Robe noire, et ils regardent, comme une récompense de leur bonne conduite, la faveur de presser la main du prêtre du Grand Manito. Vous avez devant vous de bons enfants, bien disposés à la piété, mais encore ignorants et superstitieux. Ils ont abandonné, sauf une exception ou deux, la jonglerie, qui rendait leur âme coupable de péchés mortels, mais ils ont encore une foule de craintes, de remarques, d'observances qui font comprendre aux missionnaires pourquoi il y a encore des superstitions en Canada, après tant de siècles de civilisation.

Mais le coeur serré, il faut se séparer de ces chers néophytes, et vous aventurer encore plus de 300 lieues plus loin. Il y a des Sauvages à l'intérieur des terres; ils ont une âme et personne ne pense à eux. Il faut aller les voir, se rendre chez eux jusqu'au Détroit d'Hudson.

* * * *

Les premiers jour, vous mangez les quelques livres de farine que vous aviez apportées; puis viennent les portages et comme le canot et le bagage posent, il faut renoncer à apporter des provisions pour le voyage. Mes deux guides me disent qu'on en trouvera, et qu'ils préfèrent être deux jours sans manger que d'apporter un biscuit de trop. La rivière que vous montez est la rivière Naskapise; comme elle est trop rapide pour pouvoir la suivre

jusqu'au bout, vous la laissez pour suivre une chaîne de lacs qui vous conduiront jusqu'à la hauteur des terres. Avant d'y parvenir, vous aurez 57 portages à faire le collier au front et la charge sur le dos. Cinq de ces portages vous prennent plus de 4 heures de marche. Permettez-moi de vous mettre en connaissance avec le portage que les Sauvages appellent "Bossu"; son souvenir m'est si vivace surtout dans les jambes que je ne puis résister au plaisir de vous en parler. Il y a huit jours que nous avons lassé la mer, et, chaque jour, nous nous élevons toujours de quelques centaines de pieds. Nous arrivons aux montagnes du Loup-marin dont la cime est toujours couverte de neige. Une barrière de roches vient intercepter la rivière qui, ne pouvant arrêter son cours, devient furieuse en cet endroit. L'entendez-vous se heurter contre ces imposantes murailles de pierre, s'y faire un jour et venir tomber d'une hauteur d'une cinquantaine de pieds, en une immense nappe blanche, dans le bassin où se trouve votre petit canot tremblant? Il ne peut se frayer un passage à travers l'imposant rideau blanc que vous contemplez et qui apporte à votre œil étonné toutes les couleurs de l'arc-en-ciel. Détournez le regard; voyez à gauche cette montagne dont la paisible majesté contraste avec la turbulente grandeur de la rivière qui est à sa base. Le sommet est loin, la pente est raide et les lits inégaux des rochers, rendus glissants par la pluie qui appesantit votre bagage, vous promettant plus d'un baiser fraternel, sans que ces rigides messieurs veulent se charger de faire la moitié du chemin. Cette condition vous donne des doutes sur la sincérité de leur amitié et l'expérience vous montrera que leurs caresses ne sont pas douces. Prenez un bon diner aux poissons frais; qu'importe le sel, quand l'appétit y est? Il faut des forces pour gravir le portage Bossu. Le guide qui porte le canot, a jugé prudent d'ôter ses souliers. Les doigts des pieds sont libres et adhèrent mieux aux crevasses des rochers. Pour moi, je résolus de garder ma chaussure quoique le sauvage m'avertit de mon imprudence. "Après tout, Père, il vaut mieux se déchirer les pieds que de se casser la tête."

On commence l'ascension; les genoux, les mains, les dents qui saisissent les branches, la crosse du fusil, voire même les pieds, tout est utilisé. Plus vous montez, plus vous admirez la perpendicularité de la côte. Vous faites halte; et puis vous reprenez courage. Vous montez, vous descendez, vous remontez, vous redescendez. Vous donnez un nouveau coup, coup fatal! La bande du collier casse; chapelle, chapelets, fusil, hache, chaudière, tout part. Le missionnaire veut tout retenir par un mouvement instinctif et trop prompt pour lui être imputable; son bras le sert mal; il perd l'équilibre, et en vertu de la loi de gravitation, il parcourt promptement et en sautillant... de roche en roche, un chemin qu'il croyait plus long. Inutile, M. l'aumônier, de dire à vos intelligents lecteurs, que ce n'est plus en montant qu'il va. Un sapin se trouve sur son passage: chapelle, fusil et missionnaire y trouvent refuge, à la grande surprise de ce dernier qui ne sait comment et pourquoi il est là. Il tient d'une main son chapeau, et de l'autre une partie d'une des jambes de son pantalon qui se plaint par de grands déchirements de la violence qu'on lui a faite. Et puis pas un brin de mal. N'est ce pas que ceci donne confiance au missionnaire? Marie Immaculée garde bien ceux qu'elle garde, se dit-il, quand arrivé au sommet de la montagne, il peut adresser ses remerciements à sa bonne, si bonne Mère.

Pour vous reposer, vous jouissez d'un des plus beaux coups d'oeil du monde: d'un côté, la mer et ses banquises, la mer avec ses baies, ses îles ses rochers et ses récifs, la mer dont l'orgueil des flots vient se briser sur un petit grain de sable qui se rit de la pesanteur et du bruit de ses vagues. De l'autre côté, des pics, des vallées, des lacs, des rivières, des chaînes de montagnes dont les capricieuses formes vous étonnent encore plus que leur imposante grandeur.

* * * *

Mais continuons notre voyage et hâtons-nous d'arriver à l'endroit que les Sauvages appellent la grande traverse. Tous les Naskapis sont là qui pêchent le poisson et attendent le caribou. Ils aperçoivent votre canot, et pendant qu'ils accourent au rivage en s'écriant "des étrangers, des étrangers," étudiez leur physionomie. Le Naskapis est un grand homme habillé de peaux de caribou. Il paraît robuste et ses longues jambes vous disent que le caribou est mal à l'aise lorsqu'il est à sa poursuite. Les traits de son visage annoncent de la douceur et beaucoup d'ouverture. Son teint est couleur de cuivre, recouvert d'un enduit de graisse de caribou qui, en vertu de la prescription, réclame des droits imprescriptibles de séjour sur cette peau qui ignore encore l'existence du savon. Ses beaux cheveux noirs pendent sur ses épaules. On n'y voit pas de frisures, mais en revanche, ces cheveux sont ornés de petites perles blanches, qui au besoin, se rougissent couleur sang.

ANNALES DE LA PROPAGATION DE LA FOI POUR LA PROVINCE DE QUEBEC, Fevrier 1879.

Lettre du Rev. Père Lacasse, O.M.I.

St. Sauveur, Novembre, 1878.

Rev. M.H. Têtu, Ptre.,

Aumônier de l'Archevêché de Québec,

M. l'Aumônier,

Je n'ose moi-même aller vous présenter ce rapport. Ma conscience me dit que j'ai trop retardé et elle accepte d'avance tous les reproches que vous lui ferez. Dans ma lettre précédente, j'avais laissé vos lecteurs en présence de mes chers Naskapis. C'est le temps maintenant de les étudier au milieu de leurs forêts.

Un mot de la géographie des lieux: La partie des Naskapis qui habitent la forêt Notsimiolno, vivent de l'autre côté de la hauteur des terres qui divise la vallée de la Baie des Esquimaux de celle du Détroit d'Hudson. Le canot d'écorce dans l'été, la raquette dans l'hiver, sont les deux seuls moyens de communication pour parvenir à leur lointaine patrie. L'épinette noire et le sapin sont les deux seules espèces d'arbres qui poussent sur leurs terrains de chasse. Les arbres n'arrivent pas à une croissance de plus de huit à neuf pouces de diamètre. Quand ils veulent avoir de l'écorce de bouleau pour leur canot, ils sont obligés de venir de ce côté-ci de la hauteur des terres, le long de la rivière Mestshibo. Leur canot leur coûte cher; aussi ils en ont soin comme de la prune de leur oeil. Le terrain qu'ils habitent est entrecoupé de vastes étendues d'eau. Nulle part dans le monde, les lacs sont aussi nombreux que dans l'intérieur du Labrador. Il y en a qui, par leurs grandeurs, sont véritables mers intérieures. Les lacs de dix, quinze lieues de longueur ne sont pas rares. Le grand lac Michigamao, ou Michigan, est à perte de vue.

* * * *

Les lacs quelque nombreux qu'ils soient, l'étaient encore plus à une époque antérieure. Il y a de grands marécages qui paraissent être des lacs desséchés; on peut encore suivre la décharge et on y passe maintenant à pied sec, mais les roches polies que vous foulez aux pieds vous montrent que l'eau les a lavées pendant des siècles. J'ai suivi moi-même le lit desséché d'une grande rivière, pendant plusieurs jours. Il n'y avait pas à se méprendre. Cette rivière détournait les montagnes en s'élevant graduellement. Il y avait eu des chûtes, des rapides, des inégalités de profondeur d'eau. Le lit était des cailloux aplatis ou plutôt usés par le courant.

* * * *

Mais je vois que je me suis laissé entraîner loin de mes Naskapis, qui s'occupent encore moins de ce qui est arrivé que de ce qui arrivera. Ils habitent leur terre telle qu'elle est, se chauffent au soleil quand il paraît, et se battent les mains quand il fait froid. Chez eux rien que la pratique, point de theories ennuyeuses comme celle que vous venez d'entendre. Que ne les ai-je imités ?

Dans ces lacs desséchés dont je viens de vous parler, dans ces marécages couverts de mousse, habite le caribou qui vient y trouver sa nourriture. Le caribou est la principale nourriture du Naskapis. Il aime aussi la perdrix blanche. Quand il a faim, il mange toute ce qu'il trouve, renard blanc, jaune et noir, loutre, marte et même le loup. Les Naskapis ont maintenant des fusils pour tuer le caribou et des pièges pour prendre les animaux à fourrures précieuses. Autrefois avec leurs flèches et leurs lacets, ils approchaient plus facilement les animaux sauvages non effrayés et vivaient mieux qu'aujourd'hui. Les armes à feu ne sont qu'au profit du traiteur.

Le Naskapis (mot sauvage qui veut dire: je me tiens droit debout) est un homme de haute taille, vêtu de peaux de caribou, menant une vie errante. Il habite sous des tentes de peaux de caribou. Quant à ces croyances religieuses, le Naskapis sait qu'il existe un grand Esprit et que celui-ci a un antagoniste, l'esprit du mal qu'il redoute plus que le Grand Esprit.

* * * *

Je dressai ma tente au milieu des leurs et commençai à les instruire. C'est un travail de 20 heures par jour et cela pour des semaines entières. On varie les exercices plusieurs fois dans la journée. L'enseignement de l'alphabet, du catéchisme, des prières, du chant, de l'administration du baptême, puis quelques sermons sur les grandes vérités, nous font paraître le temps bien court. Il faut beaucoup de patience pour instruire ces Sauvages dont l'intelligence ne s'élève pas du premier bond aux choses spirituelles. Aller leur parler de sacrement, de la grâce de Dieu, dans le langage de nos chaires canadiennes serait perdre son temps. Il faut user de periphrases. Le missionnaire qui travaille au milieu des nations infidèles a besoin,—le croiriez-vous ?—d'une science dogmatique plus qu'ordinaire et plus grande que celle qui, bien souvent, serait suffisante devant un auditoire déjà instruit des vérités de notre sainte religion. Il lui faut créer des mots d'un genre nouveau et bien se garder de ne pas dépasser les limites de l'orthodoxie. Son langage doit être précis, et s'il veut rester dans les généralités, il fera mieux de ne pas parler. Dès que vos Sauvages sont suffisamment instruits et qu'ils ont fait leur preuve, vous les admettez au saint baptême. Les Naskapis étaient presque tous polygames. A ma voix, ils se sont mis en règle avec l'Eglise catholique, quant à leur mariage ; un seul catéchumène est depuis retourné à son vomissement. Lors de mon premier séjour au milieu d'eux, j'eus le bonheur de faire cent vingt et un baptêmes. Ils me promirent d'être

p. 3083

bons catholiques et je sais qu'ils tiendront parole. Ils ne veulent plus abandonner au milieu des bois leurs père et mère, ne plus faire la jonglerie et ne plus étouffer les personnes qui tombent dans le délire, comme c'était la coutume au milieu d'eux. Je dois dire qu'ils sont encore affolés par de vaines craintes superstitieuses qui finiront par disparaître. Ils sont attachés à la robe noire, pleurent lors de son départ.

* * *

Je ne puis me résoudre à vous dire adieu. Au revoir donc quand mes occupations me le permettront.

EXTRACTS FROM "INDIAN LAND CESSIONS IN THE UNITED STATES."*

BY CHARLES C. ROYCE.

How, then, are we to account for the fact that the relations of the French with the Indians under their control were, as a general rule, more intimate and satisfactory to both parties than those of other nations? Parkman has remarked that "The power of the priest established, that of the temporal ruler was secure. . . . Spanish civilization crushed the Indian; English civilization scorned and neglected him; French civilization embraced and cherished him." Although this can not be accepted as strictly correct in every respect, yet it is true that intimate, friendly relations existed between the French and their Indian subjects, which did not exist between the Spanish or English and the native population. However, this can not be attributed to the legal enactments or defined policy of the French, but rather to their practical methods.

p. 3085

Instead of holding the natives at arm's length and treating them only as distinct and inferior people and quasi independent nations, the French policy was to make them one with their own people, at least in Canada. This is expressly declared in the following extracts:

Colbert, writing to Talon, April 6, 1666, says:

In order to strengthen the Colony in the manner you propose, by bringing the isolated settlements into parishes, it appears to me, without waiting to depend on the new colonists who may be sent from France, nothing would contribute more to it than to endeavour to civilize the Algonquins, the Hurons and other Indians who have embraced Christianity, and to induce them to come and settle in common with the French, to live with them and raise their children according to our manners and customs.

In his reply, some seven months later, M. Talon informs Colbert that he has endeavoured to put his suggestions into practical operation under police regulations.

In another letter, dated April 6, 1667, Colbert writes to Talon as follows:

Recommendation to mould the Indians, settled near us, after our manners and language.

I confess that I agreed with you that very little regard has been paid, up to the present time, in New France, to the police and civilization of the Algonquins and Hurons (who were a long time ago subjected to the King's dominions,) through our neglect to detach them from their savage customs and to oblige them to adopt ours, especially to become acquainted with our language. On the contrary, to carry on some traffic with them, our French have been necessitated to attract those people, especially such as have embraced Christianity, to the vicinity of our settlements, if possible to mingle there with them, in order that through course of time, having only but one law and one master, they might likewise constitute only one people and one race.

That this was the policy favored by the King is expressly stated by Du Chesneau in his letter to M. de Seignelay, November 10, 1679. "I communicated," he says, "to the Religious communities, both male and female, and even to private persons, the King's and your intentions regarding the Frenchification of the Indians. They all promised me to use their best efforts to execute them, and I hope to let you have some news thereof next year. I shall begin by setting the example, and will take some young Indians to have them instructed.”

In another letter to the same person, dated November 13, 1681, he says: “Amidst all the plans presented to me to attract the Indians among us and to accustom them to our manners, that from which most success may be anticipated, without fearing the inconveniences common to all the others, is to establish Villages of those people in our midst.”

That the same policy was in vogue as late as 1704 is shown by the fact that at this time the Abnaki were taken under French protection and placed, as the records say, “In the center of the colony.”

Old Town, July 24th, 1760.

SIR,—At the request of several of the members of the Ohio Company of which I myself am one, I take the freedom of acquainting your Honour, that they are inclined to let you be Partaker of the Grant which His Majesty has been graciously pleased to give them of five hundred thousand acres of Land lying on and adjacent to the South side of the River Ohio, on the same terms and conditions as they themselves are under, each member's share of said Land being twenty-five thousand acres.

If your Honour should approve of becoming a member of said Company, I should be glad to receive a letter from you, that I might acquaint the Gentlemen (several of whom are of His Majesty's Council in Virginia) with your Determination.

[12 Sept., 1760.]

I am, Sir, Your humble Serv.,

P.S.—The Company proposes, as soon as the Wars are ended, to settle the land with Germans and Switzers, which they shall send for and encourage.

SIR,—It was but lately that I was favoured with your letter of the 24th July, containing an offer from you and some other members of the Ohio Company to let me be Partaker of their Grant for Five Hundred Thousand Acres of Land; on the South Side of the River Ohio, on the same terms and conditions as they themselves are under. Each Member's Share being Twenty-five Thousand Acres.

I think myself much obliged to you, Sir, and the other Gentlemen concerned in that offer. But as an Engagement of that extent requires more consideration, I must beg leave to defer giving a positive answer till I can have the Pleasure to see you which I hope may be soon.

I could indeed procure numbers of German and Swiss families to settle upon those Lands. If the Conditions could really be made advantageous to them. But many things are to be considered before that.

1. You know that by the late Treaty at Easton, Approved and Confirmed by the Ministry at Home we have engaged not to settle the Lands beyond the Allegheny, and tho' the Government of Virgⁿ. and Maryland did not accede to that Treaty, I conceive that they are equally bound by it, and that no settlement will be permitted upon the Ohio till the Consent of the Indians can be procured.

2. The form of Government for this New Colony ought to be previously fixed, as they would be too remote to be dependent upon either of the Provinces.

I shall not enter in more details till I am better informed of the plan you have formed for the Encouragement of the Settlers, and of the means you have to Carry that scheme in Execution, as I am of opinion that such Settlement would be of great Service to the Colonies I would readily contribute to promote it whether I was personally concerned or not.

PROCLAMATION by Henry Bouquet, Esq^r., Colonel of Foot and Commanding at Fort Pitt and Dependencies.

Whereas by a Treaty held at East Town in the year 1758, and since ratified by His Majesty's Ministers, the Country to the West of the Allegany Mountains is allowed to the Indians for their Hunting Ground, and as it is of the Highest Importance to his Majesty's service, the preservation of the peace and a good understanding with the Indians, to avoid giving them any just cause of Complaint, this is therefore to forbid any of His Majesty's subjects to Settle or Hunt to the West of the Allegany Mountains on any Pretence whatsoever, unless such Persons have obtained leave in Writing from the General or the Governor of their Provinces Respectively and produce the same to the Commanding Officer at Fort Pitt.

And all the officers and non commissioned officers commanding at the several Posts erected in that part of the Country for the Protection of the Trade, are hereby ordered to seize or cause to be seized any of His Majesty's Subjects who without the above Authority should pretend after the Publication hereof to settle or Hunt upon the said Lands, and send them with their Horses and Effects to Fort Pitt, there to be Try'd and Punished according to the nature of their Offence by the Sentence of a Court Martial.

No. 5.—GOVERNOR FAUQUIER TO BOUQUET.

(ARCHIVES, SERIES A, VOL.18-1, p.5.)

W^{ms}burg, January 17th, 1762.

SIR,—The Proclamation issued by you concerning the settling and hunting on the Lands to the Westward of the Allegenny Hills, gives Rise to some uneasiness in this Colony (over which His Majesty has been graciously pleased to appoint me to preside as his Lieutenant Governor) as it seem to tend to obstruct the resettling the Lands by the Persons who have taken up Lands by patent under his Majesty,—And have been formerly Settled on them, but driven from their Settlements by the late Disturbance. There are many such belonging to this Colony, who made settlements on Monongahela, Green Bryar, and New River to the Westward of the Allegheny Mountains, on the Waters of the Ohio.

On these Considerations I have been desired to apply to you that you would do me the Favour to make known to me your Intentions in publishing the said Proclamation, and whether the Certificate you require is only to ascertain the Identity of the Persons who are now, or hereafter may be settling to the Westward of those Hills, to prevent any other persons who have no right to settle on the Lands which may be claimed by those who have legally taken them up by patent under the Crown. This is a laudable Intention and may prevent Vagabonds from taking possession of the Just Rights of others.

p. 3090

As for New Settlements his Majesty's pleasure has been Signified to me by Letter from the Right honorable the Lords of Trade and Plantations that I should on no account whatever make any Grants of Lands on the Waters of the Ohio untill his Majesty's further pleasure be known. And the Governor of Pennsylvania is, as I am informed under the same Restrictions.

The particular Article relating to the offenders being tried by Court Martial has alarmed the Gentlemen of Consequence in this Colony as they Apprehend no Person is liable to Martial Law, or to tryal by Court Martial who is not in some shape Connected with the Military Department.

These Representations I have made to you by and with the advice of his Majesty's Council and I make no doubt but your Answer will be fully satisfactory to them in Every particular.

Your most obedient humble

No. 6.—BOUQUET TO GOVERNOR FAUQUIER.

(ARCHIVES, SERIES A, VOL.18-1, p. 27.)

Fort Pitt, 8th February, 1762.

SIR,—I had yesterday the honor of your Excellency's Letter of the 17th Jany., Concerning the orders issued by me to prevent people hunting or settling to the Westward of the Alleghany Hills, unless they had obtained leave from the General or Governors of their Respective Provinces.

I am sorry they should have occasioned any uneasiness in your Government, but I hope to satisfy you that far from intending to invalidate the just rights of any person, or Endeavouring to prevent their taking Possession of them, provided they had a legal Authority for so doing, I took the only Method to secure them till such authority could be obtained.

For two years past these Lands have been over run by a Number of Vagabonds, who under pretence of hunting, were Making Settlements in several parts of them, of which the Indians made grievous and repeated Complaints, as being Contrary to the Treaty made with them at Easton, and since Confirmed by the General at this Post.

In consequence of which General Monckton ordered these People to be driven off and as the Indians still Complained of New Comers, I issued the said orders to prevent in the best manner I could those encroachments.

p. 3091

Notwithstanding what I have done, they still in a less degree, Continue the same Practices, and two days ago an Indian who pretends to be sent by the Six Nations to see whether we settle this Country, Complained to me that he had discovered ten New Hutts in the Woods and many Fields cleared for Corn.

I have sent two Persons with him to enquire into the truth of this, and have those People removed.

As to such Offenders being liable to be tried by a Court Martial, I conceive that people living out of the Settlements and at such places where there is no form of Civil Judicature in force and acting contrary to the orders of that Department, can be tried by the Martial Law, agreeable to the Articles of War, and that the actual Inhabitants of this and other remote Forts are liable to be tried in the Same manner if they do any injury to Indians or otherwise disobey the orders given by the General or Commanding Officer tho' they are not directly Connected with the Army.

But this can in no manner affect any Settlement that may be made hereafter in this part of the Country which Coming within the Known Limits of one of these Provinces, will consequently fall under its jurisdiction.

As you are pleased to let me know that Several Persons in your Government had formerly taken up Lands, on the Waters of the Ohio, by Patent under the Crown, I beg leave to observe that Whenever you shall think proper to permit those Persons Either to Survey or take Possession of the said Lands it will be necessary that the Commander in Chief be informed of it; that I may receive his Orders thereupon, and I beg you will be persuaded that as soon as it shall be Consistent with my orders to permit Settlements to be made in this Department: I shall take a particular Pleasure in giving the Persons Concerned all the Protection and assistance in my power.

the protection of those who may have a Just Title to the Lands and to prevent others from settling thereon, and I have accordingly acquainted Lt. You may be assured that I shall give a Certificate in Writing to any one who has a Right by patent to any Lands under Consideration and shall not fail to inform you and his Majesty's Commander in Chief of my having done so.

The Persons who can make any Right appear, will be found I apprehend to claim Lands a great deal to the Southward of Fort Pitt, it having never been ascertained whether the Lands about that Fort are in this Colony or in Pennsylvania. Tho' I imagine the Instructions all the Governors on the Continent received by the last Packett will adjust all these Affairs by the absolute Prohibition of all future Settlements on Lands not regularly ceded to the King's Subjects by the Indians, which is to be by Treaty and not by private Purchasers.

Fort Pitt, 1st April, 1762.

SIR,—This day, two hours after Col. Eyre had left this place, I received your Excellency's letters of the 28th February and 2nd of March, Convinced by my own experience in this inconsiderable Part of your extensive Command, of the multiplicity of affairs that must devolve upon you from the whole, I have avoided troubling you with a minute account of all the trifling events that occur daily here, in which number I must class Mr. Fauquier's letter to me, as I thought it intirely groundless, and expected that my answer would have been fully satisfactory to him.

p. 3093

As I know of no legal Title People can have to settle Indian Lands, but what must be delivered from the powers given by the Crown to the Commander-in-chief, or the Governors of Provinces, I imagined to have obviated all cavils by the exceptions I had made. Neither could I think that the Lieut.

Governor of Virginia after desiring me to explain my Intentions in issuing that order, should complain to you, before he had received that explanation. For certainly his letter to me in that case was an unnecessary trouble to himself and his express a useless expence to the Publick. I take the liberty to inclose a copy of the answer I made him at that time.

I never had any design to obstruct any man's Just Rights, or give uneasiness to any body, and much less to a respectable Colony.

After having found every other method insufficient, I thought the fear of Punishment would deter the Outlaws, who were the only Persons I had in view from their vile practices, but tho' some are since fallen into my hands, they have suffered no other molestation than to be expelled from their Improvements, and have their Hutts burnt, and they seem at last disgusted from making new attempts as they know, that tho' I overlook many things, I never do forgive a breach of orders in this departmt.

I had yet another reason to make my Intentions publickly known at that time, and which I thought best not to Communicate to Mr. Fauquier. I had been repeatedly informed that one Col. Cresap, who is concerned in one of the Ohio Companies (the favourite scheme of Virginia) was proposing by way of subscription to several familys to remove from the frontiers of that Colony and Mariland to form settlements on the Ohio. I foresaw that these poor people would be ruined by that bubble, and I was the more induced to credit that Report from an offer made me by that same Gentleman of a share, or 25,000 acres of these Lands, which did not tempt me.

In preventing in the district intrusted to me a scandalous breach of a recent Treaty, by the measure complained of, I cannot at least be charged with interested views or having exerted the little power vested in me, to the oppression of the subject or the Indian.

As an officer serving without prospect of a higher Rank in the Army, There is no object of ambition for me in this Country; and as a man I must have convinced every Individual who has been concerned in this department, of my disinterestedness in never receiving the most trifling acknowledgment from any man in it.

No Trader or Sutler ever paid me a shilling for their Licences, nor other people for the Plantations I was authorized by Gen. Monckton to grant along the Communication and at Red Stone Creek for the support of this Post, and I have constantly observed the same Rule with the Indians in accepting no Presents from them.

p. 3094

Divested of all motives of ambition, and without private views of Interest, I flattered myself to be free of any imputation of Partiality or Injustice, and having heard of no complaint from either of the two other Provinces, I must ascribe this Proceeding to the misfortune I had in the Campaign of 1758, to be obliged to differ in opinion with some persons of Virginia about Roads and Provisions, and I am afraid I remain still obnoxious to them, which can only increase my desire of being removed from this command, if it was consistent with your Pleasure.

The obliging manner in which you are pleased to mention that affair to me, and so very different from Mr. Fauquier's behaviour, required with my most grateful acknowledgments that I should clear myself of an odious Imputation, the effect of a groundless Jealousy and the greediness of ingrossing those Lands, and tho' from the distance of my station, I may be obliged to act sometimes without orders to the best of my Judgment, It shall be my Constant endeavour not to incur your disapprobation, or disoblige any of the Provinces.

[EXTRACT.]—Soon after my letter to you relative to the Proclamation you had Issued, which had given offence to the Virginians, I had one from Lt. Gov^r Fauquier, wherein he says: “Colonel Bouquet has wrote a very Sensible, Polite and Satisfactory answer, with which His Majesty's Council seemed very well pleased, and Desired that I would express their sentiments to him.” This I make no doubt but the Lt. Governor has done and therefore I need say nothing more on the subject, as I was convinced your Intentions in publishing that Proclamation was solely for the protection and security of those who had a Just Right to the Lands, and I am very glad to find it appears in its true Light to the Lieut. Governor and Council.

I needed no assurance to be satisfied of your acting with Disinterestedness in the Department where you Command. And I cannot but approve of your never permitting any Trader

ORDER IN COUNCIL ON A REPORT OF THE LORDS OF TRADE.

PLANTATIONS GENERAL PAPERS, XVII. (Q.) No. 21.

At the Court at St. James's the 23^d day of November 1761.

Present—The King's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

Upon reading this day at the Board a Report from the Right Honourable the Lords of the Committee of Council for Plantation Affairs, dated the 21st of this Instant in the words following, viz^t

“Your Majesty, having been pleased to refer unto this Committee a Representation from the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations dated the 11th of this Instant, Setting forth “That they have had under their consideration several letters and papers which they have received from Cadwallader Colden Esq^r Lieutenant Governor and late Commander in Chief of Your Majesty's Province of New York in America, and as those letters and papers have reference to certain measures of Government there which have either been acted upon, or become the subject matter of discussion, and which appear materially to affect Your Majesty's Service and the Interest and welfare not only of that province but of all other your Majesty's Colonies and Plantations in America they thought it their indispensable duty to lay the same before Your Majesty with such observations as have occurred to them thereupon. That the material Points to which those papers refer and to which the said Lords Commissioners confine these Observations are 1st The Measures which the Lieutenant Governor and Council have entered upon for granting Lands and making Settlements upon the Mohawk River, and in the Country adjacent to Lake George.

“ “2^{ndly} The Proposition made to the Lieutenant Governor by the Council to grant Commissions to the Judges during good behaviour, the limitation of which Commissions is, by Your Majesty's Instructions to all Your Governors in America to be during pleasure only.

“ “That the Said Lords Commissioners shall not upon this occasion

*Reproduced from documents relative to the Colonial History of the State of New York, edited by E. B. O'Callaghan, M.D., LL.D. (Albany 1856). Vol. VII., pp. 472-476.

“ “take upon them to controvert the general principles of Policy upon which either one or other of these general propositions is founded, but however expedient and constitutional they may appear in the abstract view and consideration of them, Yet they apprehend that when they come to be applied to the present State of Your Majesty's Colonies they will appear in a very different light and be found, the one to be dangerous to their Security and the other destructive to the Interests of the people, and subversive of that policy by which alone Colonies can be kept in a just dependance upon the Government of the Mother Country.

“ “That this is the General Light in which they see these, measures, but as they are in their nature separate and distinct, so they will as the said Lords Commissioners apprehend require a separate and distinct consideration and therefore they humbly offer to Your Majesty what has occurred to them upon each in the order in which they have placed them That it is as unnecessary as it would be tedious to enter into a Detail of all the Causes of Complaint which, our Indian Allies had against us at the commencement of the troubles in America, and which not only induced them thô reluctantly to take up the Hatchet against us and desolate the Settlement on the Frontiers but encouraged our enemies to pursue those Measures which have involved us in a dangerous and critical war, it will be sufficient for the present purpose to observe that the primary cause of that discontent which produced these fatal Effects was the Cruelty and Injustice with which they had been treated with respect to their hunting grounds, in open violation of those solemn compacts by which they had yielded to us the Dominion, but not the property of those Lands, It was happy for us that we were early awakened to a proper sense of the Injustice and bad Policy of such a Conduct towards the Indians, and no sooner were those measures pursued which indicated a Disposition to do them all possible justice upon this head of Complaint than those hostilities which had produced such horrid scenes of devastation ceased, and the Six Nations and their Dependants became at once from the most inveterate Enemies our fast and faithfull Friends.

“ “That their steady and intrepid Conduct upon the Expedition under General Amherst for the Reduction of Canada is a striking example of this truth, and they now, trusting to our good Faith, impatiently wait for that event which by putting an End to the War shall not only ascertain the British Empire in America but enable Your Majesty to renew those Compacts by which their property in their Lands shall be ascertained and such a system of Reformation introduced with respect to our Interests and Commerce with them as shall at the same time that it redresses their Complaints and establishes their Rights give equal Security and Stability to the rights and Interests of all your Majesty's American Subjects.

“ “That under these circumstances and in this scituation the granting Lands hitherto unsettled and establishing Colonies upon the Frontiers “ “before the claims of the Indians are ascertained appears to be a measure of the most dangerous tendency, and is more particularly so in the present case, as these settlements now proposed to be made, especially those upon the Mohawk River are in that part of the Country of the Possession of which the Indians are the most jealous having at different times expressed in the strongest terms their Resolution to oppose all settlements thereon as a manifest violation of their Rights.

“ “That the principles of Policy which the said Lords Commiss^{rs} have laid down are they apprehend in their nature so clear and uncontrovertible that it is almost unnecessary to add anything further to induce Your Majesty to give immediate Orders for putting a stop to all Settlements upon the Mohawk River and about Lake George until the Event of the War is determined and such Measures taken thereupon, with respect to our Indian Allies as shall be thought expedient, and yet it may be proper to observe that independant of what regards our Connection with the Indians the conduct of those who have in former times been intrusted with the Administration of the Government of New York has in reference to granting of Lands in general been very exceptionable and has held forth a very bad example to their Successors.

“ “That the exorbitant Grants of Lands which Governors and others have heretofore made, greatly to the benefit of themselves, but very much to the prejudice of the Interests of the Crown, and of the people in general have long been the subject of great Complaint, and the said Lords Commissioners cannot but think that the Lieutenant Governor and Council would have shewn a greater regard to Your Majesty's Interest and the welfare of the province in general, by a pursuit of such measures as might have operated to correct those abuses, and remedy the Evils arising from so improper a Conduct in their proceedings in Government, than by entering upon Measures for making fresh grants and settlements which they have great reason to apprehend from Information which may be depended upon are more for the benefit of themselves and their Families than for the subject in general and therefore they submit to Your Majesty whether this may not be an additional reason why speedy and positive orders should be given for putting a stop to Measures which appear in every light so destructive of Your Majestys Interests and the general welfare and security of the Colony.

“ “That with respect to the other point relative to the granting the Judges Commissions during good Behaviour it will be less necessary to detain Your Majesty long upon this Question, as it has been already so solemnly determined in the case of a Law some time since passed in Jamaica, and one lately in the Proprietary Government of Pensilvania for establishing such a constitution.

“ “That the principles laid down in the Attorney and Sollicitor Generals Report upon the Jamaica Law, and in that of the said Lords Commiss^{rs} Predecessors in Office upon the Act passed in Pensilvania are so clear and explicit that it is almost unnecessary to add any thing, thereto, But

p. 3098

“ “as the People of New York appear from the Lieutenant Governor's letters to be so strenuous upon this point, alledging the preecedent and example of the Mother Country, The said Lords Commiss^{rs} observe that the cases are in no degree similar.

“ “That the Change which the tenure of the Judges Commissions underwent at the Revolution in this Kingdom was founded upon the most conclusive and repeated Proofs of arbitrary and illegal Interposition, under the Influence of the Crown, upon points of the greatest importance to the constitution, and the liberty and rights of the subject ; It was not however by the tenure of their Commissions alone that they were rendered independant, but such Salaries were settled upon them as not only rendered them less liable to be corrupted, but was an Encouragement for the ablest men to engage in that Profession which qualified them for such high Trusts.

“ “That the same circumstance does in no degree exist in the American Colonies where as there is no certain established allowance that may encourage men of learning and ability to undertake such offices, Your Majesty's Governors are frequently obliged to appoint such as offer from amongst the inhabitants however unqualified to sustain the character, and thô a more fit person should afterwards be found, yet if the Commission was during good behaviour such unqualified Person could not be displaced.

“ “That late years have produced but too many examples of Governors having been obliged for want of such an Establishment as might induce able persons to offer their service, to confer the Office on those who have accepted it merely with a view to make it subservient to their own private Interests, and who, added to their ignorance, of the Law, have too frequently become the Partizans of a factious Assembly upon whom they have been dependant for their support, and who have withheld or enlarged that support according as the conduct of the Judges was more or less favourable to their Interests.

“ “That it is difficult to conceive a State of Government more dangerous to the Rights and Liberties of the Subject, but aggravated as the Evil would be by making the Judges Commissions during good Behaviour without rendering them at the same time independant of the factious will and Caprice of an Assembly, The said Lords Commissioners cannot but consider the proposition as subversive of all true policy, destructive of the interests of Your Majesty's Subjects, and tending to lessen that just Dependance which the Colonies ought to have upon the Government of the mother Country.

“ “That this was in a great Degree the Opinion of the Lieut. Governor himself, as will evidently appear from a Letter to the said Lords Commissioners of the 2^d of June last, in which he acquainted them with his having rejected a Bill passed by the Assembly for this purpose, and urges as a Reason that there was no fixed Salary to the Judges, that It was dependant from year to year on the pleasure of the Assembly and that

“ “whilst they were thus dependant upon the people for their subsistence such a measure might be highly prejudicial to the just Rights of the Crown, and the Acts of Trade. That these were then the sentiments of the Lieu^t Governor and though the said Lords Commissioners are at a loss to guess at the motive which could have induced him to declare, as he does, in his letter to them of the 12th of August following, That he apprehended he should be under a necessity of giving way to the Proposition, Yet they cannot but be of Opinion that if under these circumstances he should have complied with so pernicious a Proposition, he would justly have deserved your Majesty's Royal Displeasure.” ”

“The Lords of the Committee this day took the said Representation into their consideration, and agreeing in opinion with the said Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations do humbly report to Your Majesty that they conceive it advisable that Your Majesty's Pleasure should be made known upon the first point of Granting Lands, as well in the Colony of New York as in all other Your Majesty's Colonies on the Continent of America, where such grants interfere with the Indians bordering on those Colonies. And that Your Majesty's pleasure should be made known upon the last point which relates to the appointment of Judges, not only in the Colony of New York but in all other Your Majesty's Islands and Colonies in America: And therefore that Your Majesty may be graciously pleased to order the said Lords Commissioners to prepare Draughts of Instructions proper to be sent hereupon to the Governors or Commanders in Chief of all Your Majesty's Islands and Colonies in America accordingly, to the end that due obedience be given thereto and the matters complained of so detrimental to the public service, prevented for the future.”

His Majesty taking the said Report into consideration was pleased by the advice of his Privy Council to approve of what is therein proposed and accordingly to order, as it is hereby ordered, that the Lords Commiss^{rs} for Trade and Plantations do prepare Draughts of Instructions proper to be sent with respect to the first point of granting Lands, as well to the Governor or Commander in Chief of the Colony of New York, as to the Governors or Commanders in Chief of all other His Majesty's Colonies on the Continent of America where such grants interfere with the Indians bordering on those Colonies And that they do also prepare like Draughts of Instructions upon the last point which relates to the Appointment of Judges, to the respective Governors and Commanders in Chief of all other His Majesty's Islands and Colonies in America, to the end that due obedience be given thereto, and the matters complained of, so detrimental to the public service, prevented for the future.

And that such Draughts of Instructions be laid before His Majesty at this Board for his Royal Approbation.

ADDITIONAL INSTRUCTION FOR THE GOVERNORS OF NOVA SCOTIA, NEW HAMPSHIRE, NEW YORK, VIRGINIA, NORTH CAROLINA, SOUTH CAROLINA, AND GEORGIA,FORBIDDING THEM TO GRANT LANDS OR MAKE SETTLEMENTS IN VIOLATION OF INDIAN RIGHTS.

PUBLIC RECORDS OFFICE, C.O. 324/40.

Additional Instruction for Our Trusty & Wellbeloved Sir Jeffery Amherst, Knight of the Bath, Our Captain General and Governor in Chief of Our Colony and Dominion of Virginia in North America ; And in his absence, to Our Lieutenant Governor, or Commander in Chief of the said Colony & Dominion for the Time being. Given at Our Court of S^t. James's the Ninth day of December 1761, In the Second Year of our Reign.

Whereas the Peace and Security of our Colonies and Plantations upon the Continent of North America, does greatly depend upon the Amity and Alliance of the several Nations, or Tribes of Indians bordering upon the said Colonies, and upon a just and faithful Observance of those Treaties and Compacts, which have been heretofore solemnly entered into with the said Indians, by Our Royal Predecessors, Kings, and Queens of this Realm ; And whereas notwithstanding the repeated Instructions, which have been, from Time to Time, given by Our late Royal Grand Father to the Governors of Our several Colonies on this Head, the said Indians have made and do still continue to make great Complaints, that Settlements have been made and possession taken of Lands, the property of which they have by Treaties reserved to themselves, by Persons claiming the said Lands, under Pretence of Deeds of Sale and Conveyance illegally, fraudulently and surreptitiously obtained of the said Indians; And whereas it has likewise been represented into Us, that some of Our Governors, or other Chief Officers of Our said Colonies, regardless of the Duty they owe to Us, and of the Welfare and Security of Our Colonies, have countenanced such unjust Claims and Pretensions by passing grants of y^e Lands so pretended to have been purchased of the Indians. We therefore taking this matter into Our Royal Consideration as also the fatal effects, which would attend a Discontent amongst the Indians in the present situation of Affairs and being determined upon all Occasions, to support and protect the said Indians in their just Rights and Possessions, and to keep inviolable the Treaties and Compacts, which have been entered into with them, do hereby strictly enjoin and command that neither Yourself, nor any Lieutenant Governor or Commander in chief of Our said Colony and Dominion of Virginia in North America, do, upon any Pretence whatsoever, upon pain of Our highest Displeasure, and of being forth-with removed from Your, or his Office, pass any Grant or Grants, to any Persons whatever of any Lands within, or adjacent to the Territories possessed or occupied by the said Indians, or the Property, or Possession of which has, at any time been reserved to or claimed by them ; And it is Our farther Will and Pleasure, that You do publish a Proclamation, in Our Name, strictly enjoining and requiring all Persons whatever, who may either willfully or inadvertently have seated themselves upon any Lands so reserved to, or claimed by the said Indians, without any lawful authority for so doing, forthwith to remove therefrom ; And in case you shall find upon strict Enquiry to be made for that purpose, that any Person, or Persons do claim to hold or possess any Lands within Our said Colony and Dominion, upon Pretence of Purchases made of the said Indians, without a proper Licence first had and obtained, either from Us, or any of Our Royal Predecessors, or any Persons acting under Our, or their authority, You are forthwith to cause a Prosecution to be carried on against such Person, or Persons, who shall have made such fraudulent Purchases, to the end that the Land may be recovered by a due Course of Law. And whereas the wholesome Laws, which have at different Times been passed in several of our said Colonies, and the Instructions which have been given by Our Royal Predecessors, for restraining Persons from purchasing Lands of Indians without a Licence for that purpose, and for regulating the Proceedings upon such Purchases have not been duly observed: It is therefore Our express Will and Pleasure, that when any application shall be made to You for Licence to purchase Lands of the Indians, You do forbear to grant such Licence until You shall have first transmitted to Us, by our Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, the particulars of such application, as well in respect to the situation, as the Extent of the Lands, so proposed to be purchased, and shall have received Our farther Pleasure therein ; And it is Our farther Will and Pleasure, that You do forthwith cause these Our Instructions to You to be made publick, not only within all Parts of Our said Colony and Dominion inhabited by Our Subjects, but also amongst the several Tribes of Indians living within the same, to the end that Our Royal Will & Pleasure in the Premises may be known, and that the Indians may be apprized of Our determined Resolution to support them in their just Rights, and inviolably to observe Our Engagements with them.

LORDS OF TRADE TO THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF VIRGINIA, 8 APRIL, 1762.

PUBLIC RECORDS OFFICE, C.O. 5/1368.

VIRGINIA.

To Francis Fauquier Esq^r, Lieu^t Governor of Virginia.
Sir,

We have had under our consideration your letter to us of the 30th Novem^{er} last and the papers transmitted with it, and as We do entirely agree with the late Commissioners for Trade and Plantations in the opinion expressed in their Letter to you of the 17th of Febry 1761, that whatever may tend to alarm the jealousy of the Indians and awaken in their minds a suspicion of any intention on our part to encroach upon their property cannot fail of having the most fatal consequences, We do therefore think that for the present and untill our Indian Interests are settled upon a more firm & lasting basis, all attempts to make new Settlements upon the Lands to the west of the great mountains ought to be discouraged.

The concessions made by a few Indians at Lancaster in 1744, and at Logs Town in 1752, are so vague and void of precision, as well with respect to the Lands ceded as to the Terms and conditions of the Cession, that no reasonable Claim can in our opinion be founded upon them, and the Transactions at Easton, as well as what has passed since between the Indians and His Majesty's Generals and Governors, bear with them such strong pledges on the part of the Crown and of those who hold or act under it's authority that no Settlements whatever except what shall be absolutely necessary for securing the Dominion of the Country shall be made in that part of it beyond the Allighany hills, as not to leave the least room to doubt of the Impropiety of any further Grants of Lands in that part of the Country for the present.

The same reasons do in great measure oppose themselves to the running any boundary Line between Pennsylvania and Virginia, & the proprietor of Pennsylvania by whom we have been attended upon this occasion, seeing this matter in the same light and agreeing with Us in opinion, has declared, that he has not the least Intention for the present to continue his South Line beyond the limits of Lord Baltimore's grant, and that he will at no time proceed upon it, without giving previous timely notice thereof, and therefore we shall for the present suspend all Consideration of the Proposition contain'd in your letter, that Commissioners should be named on the part of the Crown, to be join'd with those appointed, for running the boundary line between Maryland and Pennsylvania.

We have received your letter of the 24th of Febry last and the papers transmitted with it by His Majesty's Ship Diana and as soon as our Counsel shall have examined the Acts of the two last Sessions, we shall take them into our Consideration. We are

REPRESENTATION OF THE LORDS OF TRADE TO THE KING, 27th AUGUST, 1765.

PUBLIC RECORDS OFFICE, C.O. 5, Vol. 1365.

VIRGINIA.

To the King's most Excellent Majesty.
May it please Your Majesty.

Having lately received several letters and papers from Francis Fauquier, Esqr., Lieutenant Governor of Your Majesty's Colony of Virginia, dated in May and June last, containing Matters of the highest Importance, and intimately affecting the dignity and Authority of Your Majesty's Government, the due Execution of the Laws and the Peace and Security of Your Majesty's Subjects in those Parts, We hold it our indispensable Duty to lose no Time in laying them before Your Majesty.

That we may state to Your Majesty the Particulars of these Dispatches with the greater perspicuity, we beg leave to rank them under three several Heads.

The first Article relates to the unwarrantable Proceedings of several of Your Majesty's subjects, who from Pensylvania and the Back Settlements of Virginia, have migrated to the Westward of the Allegheny Mountains, and there have seated themselves on Lands contiguous to the River Ohio in express disobedience to Your Majesty's Royal Proclamation of the 7th October, 1763.

As nothing in our Opinion can more effectually conduce to the Peace and Security of that part of Your Majesty's Dominions, and the continuance of that quiet and tranquility on the Frontiers, which the Treatys and Alliances lately concluded and entered into, with the Indians had so happily produc'd, than the Strict and due Observance of this Your Majesty's Royal Proclamation, whereby the Indians are secured and confirmed in their possession of the Lands, which these settlers usurped, We humbly submit to Your Majesty, whether it will not be advisable by an Express Order for the immediate evacuation of those Settlements to enjoin a more strict obedience to Your Majesty's commands signified in the former Proclamation and to provide against any future violation of it.

WEST FLORIDA

Instructions to Our Trusty and Welbeloved George Johnston Esq^r Our Captain General and Governor in Chief in and over Our Province of West Florida in America, and of all other Our Territories dependent thereupon. Given at our Court.

58. And Whereas our Province of West Florida is in part inhabited and possessed by several Nations and Tribes of Indians, with whom it is both Necessary and Expedient to cultivate and maintain a Strict Friendship and good Correspondence, so that they may be induced by degrees not only to be good Neighbours to our Subjects, but likewise themselves to become good Subjects to us, you are therefore, as soon as you conveniently can, after your Arrival to appoint a proper person or persons to assemble and treat with the said Indians, Promising and assuring them of Protection and Friend-ship on our part, and delivering them such presents as you shall carry out with you, or shall be sent to you for that Purpose.

59. And you are to inform yourself with the greatest Exactness of the Number, Nature and Disposition of the several Bodys or Tribes of Indians, of the manner of their Lives, and the Rules and Constitutions by which they are governed or regulated; and you are upon no Account to molest or disturb them in the possession of such Parts of the said Province as they at present occupy or possess; but to use the best means you can for conciliating their affections, and uniting them to our Government, reporting to us, by our Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, whatever information you can collect with respect to these people, and the whole of your proceedings with them.

60. Whereas We have, by Our Proclamation dated the 7th day of October in the third Year of Our Reign, strictly forbid, on pain of Our Displeasure, all Our Subjects from making any Purchases or Settlements

* Similar Instructions are contained in the Instructions which were given to the whatever, or taking possession of any of the Lands reserved to the several Nations of Indians, with whom We are connected, and who live under Our Protection, without Our especial Leave for that purpose first obtained; It is Our express Will and Pleasure, that you take the most effectual Care, that Our Royal Directions herein be punctually complied with, and that the Trade with such of the said Indians as depend upon your Government be carried on in the manner and under the Regulations prescribed in Our said Proclamation.

61. You are to use your best Endeavours in improving the Trade of those Parts by settling such Orders and Regulations therein, with the Advice of our said Council, as may be most acceptable to the Generality of the Inhabitants. And it is Our express Will and Pleasure, that you do not, upon any pretence whatever, upon pain of Our highest Displeasure, give your Assent to any Law or Laws for setting up any Manufactures, and carrying on any Trades, which are hurtfull and prejudicial to this Kingdom; and that you do use your utmost endeavours to discourage, discountenance and restrain any attempts, which may be made to sett up such Manufactures, or establish any such Trades.

108. You are from time to time to give an Account as before directed, what strength your Neighbours have (be they Indians or others) by Sea and Land, and of the Condition of their Plantations, and what correspondence you do keep with them.

109. Whereas the Peace and Security of Our Colonies and Plantations upon the Continent of North America does greatly depend upon the Amity & Alliance of the several Nations or Tribes of Indians bordering upon the said Colonies, and upon a just & faithfull Observance of those Treaties and Compacts, which have been heretofore solemnly entered into with the Indians by Our Royal Predecessors Kings & Queens of this Realm; And Whereas, notwithstanding the repeated Instructions which have been from time to time given by Our Royal Grandfather to the Governors of Our several Colonies upon this head, the said Indians have made, & do still continue to make great complaints that Settlements have been made, and Possession taken of Lands, the property of which they have by Treaties reserved to themselves by persons claiming the said Lands under pretence of Deeds of Sale and Conveyance illegally, fraudulently, and surreptitiously obtained of the said Indians; And whereas it has likewise been represented unto Us, that some of Our Governors or other Chief Officers of Our said Colonies, regardless of the Duty they owe to Us, and of the Welfare and Security of Our Colonies, have countenanced such unjust Claims and Pretentions, by passing Grants of the Lands so pretended to have been purchased of the Indians; We therefore taking this Matter into our Royal Consideration as also the fatal Effects, which would attend a Discontent amongst the Indians in the present situation of affairs, and being determined upon all Occasions to support and protect the said Indians in their just Rights & Possessions and to keep inviolable the Treaties and Compacts which have been entered into with them, do hereby strictly enjoin & command, that neither yourself nor any Lieutenant Governor, President of the Council, or Commander in Chief of Our said Province of North Carolina do upon any pretence whatsoever, upon pain of Our highest Displeasure and of being forthwith removed from your or his Office, pass any Grant or Grants to any persons whatever of any Lands within or adjacent to the Territories possessed or occupied by the said Indians, or the Property or Possession of which has at any time been reserved to or claimed by them. And it is Our further Will and Pleasure that you do publish a Proclamation in Our Name strictly enjoining & requiring all persons whatever who may either willfully or inadvertently have seated themselves upon any Lands so reserved to or claimed by the said Indians without any lawfull Authority for so doing, forthwith to remove therefrom. And in case you shall find, upon strict Enquiry to be made for that purpose, that any person or persons do claim to hold or possess any Lands within Our said Province, upon pretence of Purchases made of the said Indians without a proper Licence first had & obtained either from Us, or any of Our Royal Predecessors, or any person acting under Our or Their Authority, you are forthwith to cause a Prosecution to be carried on against such person or persons who shall have made such fraudulent Purchases, to the end that the Land may be recovered by due course of Law: And Whereas the wholesome Laws, which have at different times been passed in several of Our said Colonies and the Instructions which have been given by Our Royal Predecessors, for restraining persons from purchasing Lands of the Indians without a Licence for that purpose, and for regulating the Proceedings upon such Purchases, have not been duly observed ; It is therefore Our express Will and Pleasure, that, when Application shall be made to you for Licence to purchase Lands of the Indians, you do forbear to grant such Licence, until you shall have first transmitted to Us by Our Comm^{rs}: for Trade & Plantations, the Particulars of such Application, as well in respect to the situation as the Extent of the Lands so proposed to be purchased, and shall have received Our further Directions therein ; And it is Our further Will & Pleasure that you do forthwith cause this Our Instruction to you to be made publick, not only within all parts of your said Province, inhabited by Our Subjects, but also amongst the several Tribes Indians living within the same, to the end that Our Royal Will and Pleasure in the Premises may be known, and that the Indians may be apprized of Our determined Resolution to support them in their just Rights, and inviolably to observe Our Engagements with them.

110. And whereas it is highly necessary for the Welfare of Carolina, that a good Understanding should be maintained with the Indian Nations as well for the promoting of Trade as for the Security of the Frontiers of your Government ; you are hereby particularly enjoined to use all possible

TO ALL THE GOVERNORS ON THE CONTINENT OF AMERICA.

PUBLIC RECORDS OFFICE, C.O. 5, Vol. 222, p. 5.

Sept. 13th 1766.

Sir,

Advices having been received from His Majestys Superintendents for Indian Affairs, that the most unprovoked violence and Murthers have been lately committed on the Indians under the Protection of His Majesty and whose Tribes are at present in Peace and Unity with His Majestys Provinces, and that the Offenders have not yet been discovered & brought to Justice, and likewise that Settlements have been made on the Back of the Province, without proper Authority and beyond the Limits prescribed by His Majesty Royal Proclamation of 1763 & in some places even beyond the utmost Boundaries of any Province in America, and that in consequence the Indian Nations do everywhere discover the greatest discontents and Resentments which may endanger the Peace of His Majestys Provinces and the safety of His Subjects.

It is thereupon His Majestys Commands that you apply yourself in the most earnest manner to remedy and prevent those Evils, which are as contrary to the Rules of Good Policy, as of Justice and Equity.

The Violation of those Principles attended also with so many Dangers to the Provinces, is what cannot be permitted.— If a due obedience had been paid to His Majestys Royal Proclamation, and a due attention given to proper Restraints on the Conduct of the Indian Traders, these Evils would have been effectually avoided.

His Majestys Commander-in-Chief has received express orders to cooperate with the Civil Government for the enforcing a due Obedience to that Proclamation, and His Majesty requires and expects every measure to be taken which Prudence can dictate for the removing such Settlers, preventing in future any such Settlements as are Contrary to the Intentions of the Proclamation, and for apprehending such Offenders, whose daring crimes have so direct a Tendency to involve the whole of His Majestys Provinces in America in an Indian War,

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty
May it please Your Majesty.

In obedience to Your Majesty's Commands, signified to us by the Earl of Hillsborough one of Your Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, in his Letter dated May 17th we have taken into Our Consideration an Address to Your Majesty from the House of Burgesses of Virginia, humbly representing, “ That various persons who in consequence of His late Majesty's Instructions for that purpose, had obtained Grants of Lands to the Westward of the Great Mountains, and settled themselves thereon, having in the course of the late War been driven from their Estates by the Invasion of Your Majesty's Enemies, and being upon the re-establishment of Peace desirous to return to their former Habitations, were prevented from fulfilling such their desires by the Governor's proclamation issued in consequence of Your Majesty's Instructions forbidding Settlements to be made within those “Limits.”—“ Stating withal the Advantages which they conceive will result to Your Majesty's Service and the interest of your American Dominions in general by continuing the Encouragements for settling these former Lands, & praying such Relief and Direction thereupon as Your Majesty in your great Wisdom shall think most beneficial for Your Majesty's Interest and the Happiness of your People there” ;

Whereupon we beg leave humbly to Represent to Your Majesty,

That in the year 1754, Your Majesty's Royal Grandfather at the instance of the House of Burgesses of Virginia, and for the reasons by them set forth in an humble Address preferred to the Crown for that purpose was graciously pleased to instruct His then Governor the Earl of Albemarle to make & pass Grants of Lands lying to the Westward of the great Ridge of Mountains, which separates the Rivers Roanok, James and Potowmack from the Mississippi to such persons as should be desirous of settling there; the same to be granted in small and entire Quantities, not amounting to more than one thousand Acres for any one person. And as a farther Encouragement to Adventurers to take up Lands within the said Tract, from the Settlement of which it was represented that great additional security would be derived to this and the neighbouring Colonies against the Encroachments of the French, His Majesty was further graciously pleased, (in conformity to the prayer of the said Address) to direct that these Grants should be made free from the payment of any fine or quit-rent for the term of ten years from the date thereof.

The people who in consequence of these Grants, had settled themselves in this country, having been driven from their possessions, in the course of the late War your Majesty upon the reestablishment of Peace in order to quiet and allay the apprehensions of the various Tribes of Savages whom the great accession to your Majesty's Dominions in America by the total Expulsion of the French from Canada had thrown into alarm was pleased by your Royal Proclamation of October 1763, to give solemn and public Assurance of your gracious attention to, and protection of the said Indians, reserving thereby, till such time as your Majesty's further pleasure should be known all the countries therein excepted and described to their entire use and occupation, warning all persons not to settle themselves on the same, and if already settled enjoining them forthwith to evacuate on such their encroachments.

Under this Interdiction the country in question now falls as lying beyond the Sources of the Great Rivers which empty themselves into the Atlantic; and from the disorderly and irregular Conduct of several of your Majesty's Subjects who from Pennsylvania and the back Settlements of Virginia migrated to the Westward of the Alleghany Mountains seating themselves on Lands contiguous to the Waters of the Ohio, in express disobedience to your Majesty's above proclamation it has so proved that this Country has furnished one principal cause of Discontent and Complaint to the Indians inhabiting those parts, and so highly offensive to them were those Encroachments on their Lands, that in the year 1765, Your Majesty found it expedient by an additional Instruction to your Governor for that purpose to direct and require him to enforce a more strict obedience to the said Proclamation, and to cause all those irregular Settlements which in defiance thereof had been established in this Country immediately to be evacuated.

Since the publication of the provisional Arrangements, contained in your Majesty's said Proclamation respecting the territory set apart for the use of the Indians, the Expediency of establishing a Boundary Line by Solemn Compact with the several Tribes has been stated by our Predecessors in Office in the Plan for the Management of Indian Affairs prepared by them in the year 1764 ; which Plan having been communicated to the Superin-tendants for Indian Affairs, they have made it a subject of Discussion and Negotiation with the Indians in their respective Districts, and the proposition appears to have been so favourably received by the Indians in the Northern District, that the particular Course and Extent of the said Boundary has been very precisely pointed out by them and acquiesced in by Sr William Johnson in a Congress held with these Tribes in 1765. However till this Affair is finally adjusted and a Boundary Line established, either according to the Course recommended in Our humble Representation to your Majesty of the 7th of March last, or upon some other Plan adjusted by your Majesty's Superintendants instructed for that purpose and ratified and confirmed by solemn Compact with the Indians, the same Policy which established the Regulations laid down in your Majesty's Proclamation of 1763, must be considered as still in force; and we cannot, consistently with the same advise your Majesty to give any Countenance & Encouragement to proposals for extending Settlements and Plantations beyond the Great Mountains into the Country, which by the said Proclamation is for a time given up to the Use of the Indians; nor do we apprehend it will be safe until such negotiation is concluded for those persons who claim under Grants, prior to the said Proclamation to repossess themselves of the same.

Upon this State of the Case we would humbly recommend to your Majesty, in consequence of the Application above recited to direct your Lieutenant Governor, or other Commander in Chief for the time being in Virginia, to inform the House of Burgesses, in answer to their Address, that immediately upon notification to him from your Majesty's Superintendants for Indian Affairs of the final Adjustment of the said Boundary Line, according to their Instructions for that purpose, no further Interruption will be given to persons who are disposed to settle themselves in this Country on Lands granted to them prior to the said Proclamation of 1763, provided the same shall be found to come within the Limits appropriated to Settlement, on the contrary all possible protection and encouragement will be given both to them and others who, from a Spirit of Industry and Improvement are willing to engage in the location of this rich and fertile Tract, and thereby to extend and cultivate the Frontiers of Your Majesty's Dominions in America.

All which is most humbly submitted.

Hocquart,

FRENCH REGIME.

The area included in the, so-called, King's Posts was also known as the Traité de Tadoussac and as the Domaine du Roy.

Originally set apart by leases granted by the Conseil Souverain de Quebec on the 30th October, 1653, and the 19th October, 1658¹, the Domaine du Roy was, in 1733, augmented by the addition to it of the territory between Isle aux Oeufs and cape Cormoran, the grantees of the Isle aux Oeufs having relinquished all claim to this territory.²

The area included in the Domaine du Roy was defined by Hocquart in his ordinance of 23 May, 1733. It extended on the St. Lawrence from the eastern boundary of Eboulemens seigniority to cape Cormoran and extended northward to the northern watershed of the St. Lawrence and beyond. On the east, it was bounded by the meridian of cape Cormoran. Westward, it extended to the western watershed of the Saguenay and also included a considerable area lying to the north of the seigniories on the St. Lawrence and to the east of the river St. Maurice.

³Ordinance by Hocquart,
23 May, 1733.
p.3210. See also Memoire by Hoc-quart p.2745
vol. vi.

Beyond the height-of-land, its boundaries were not clearly defined, but Hocquart states that they included the "postes de . . . Mistassinoc . . . Naskapis . . . et lieux en dépendans." He also states that its bounds included the post of Mistassins, "et derrière les Mistassins jusqu'a la Baie d'Hudson."

Referring to the eastern portion of the Domaine, he states that "dans laquelle étendu seront compris . . . le Lac des Naskapis et autres rivières et lacs qui s'y déchargent."³

p. 3120

As fort Nemiskau was a dependency of Mistassini, the bounds must have extended westward to a point on the Rupert river below lake Nemiskau and, to the northward, must have included the territory occupied by the Grands Mistassin Indians, which extended from lake Mistassini to the Eastmain river and beyond.

The Indians “dependent” upon Naskapis post on lac des Naskapis (lake Ashuanipi) must have occupied a large portion of the basin of the upper Hamilton river.

The Domaine, therefore, must have included the upper waters of the Eastmain, Fort George (Big), Kaniapiskau and Hamilton rivers and more than three-fourths of the basin of the Rupert.

1627, the King of France granted to the Compagnie des Cent Associes, otherwise known as the Compagnie de la Nouvelle France, in absolute property, all the country of Canada.¹

1658, the Company leased the “Traitté de Tadoussac” (Domaine du Roy) to the Sieur Demaure.²

1663. the King accepted the surrender of Canada by the Compagnie de la Nouvelle France.³

1664, an edict established the Compagnie des Indes Occidentales, granting to it Canada, Acadia, Newfoundland, “et autres isles et terre ferme, depuis le nord du dit pays du Canada jusqu’à la Virginie et Floride.”⁴

1674, the Compagnie des Indes Occidentales having surrendered its rights to the King, he re-established the Royal Government of Canada.⁵

1674, information respecting the names of the lessees prior to the last quarter of the 17th century is somewhat vague, but, a memoir by Chanjon, Hazeur, et al, 1685(?)⁶ indicates that the Domaine was leased to Jean Oudiette in 1674 or 1675.

1676, Oudiette protested against unauthorised trading in the Domaine. The King commanded Intendant Duchesneau to prosecute such trespassers.⁷

1682, de la Barre and de Meulles issued an ordinance prohibiting the transportation into the Domaine of any goods suitable for the Indian trade without the authorization of the lessees and forbidding anyone entering the limits of the Domaine without permit from the Governor and Intendant, under penalty of a fine of 2,000 livres.⁸

1684, a similar ordinance was issued by de Meulles forbidding all unauthorized persons trading within the Domaine or otherwise disturbing the lessee, Jean Oudiette.⁹

1685 (?), the lease of the Domaine was held by the Compagnie du Nord. Denys Riverin was Director of the 1694, the lease was held by the Compagnie du Nord. Apparently their lease terminated in 1698.¹

³Memoire by Hocquart, 1 September, 1733, p. 2735.

1695 (or 1696), Jolliet and Bissot discovered lac des Naskapis (Ashuanipi) and traded there with the Naskapi Indians as indicated by the name they gave it.²

⁴Protestation of Veuve Pachot et al 27 October, 1700.

1698, the Domaine was sub-let to Pierre Dupont and Chas. Perthuis for three years (1698-1701) for 15,200 livres, monnaie de France.³

⁵Lease to Riverin and Hazeur, 2 October, 1700.

1700, the widow Viannev Pachot and Messrs. Dupont, Perthuis and Joseph Riverin, sub-lessees of the Domaine, protested against the departure of the Sieur de la Perade, who had left Quebec to winter in the Domaine.⁴

⁶Ordinance by Raudot, 26 September, 1707.

1701, the Domaine was sub-let for 8 years (1701-1709) by Hazeur, Gobin, Maccart and Peire, directors of the Compagnie de la Colonie de Canada, to Riverin and Hazeur at an annual rental of 12,700 livres.⁵

1707, Raudot, issued an ordinance which, after reciting the complaints of Hazeur respecting illegal trading and hunting in the Domaine, prohibited such trading and hunting under penalty of a fine of 1,000 livres.⁶

⁷Hocquart to the Minister (?) 1 September, 1733, p. 2736.

The Domaine was sub-let to Nicolas Pinaud from 1709 to 1710, for 6,100 livres per year. It was leased to Riverin from 1710 to 1714. It was again leased to said Riverin from 1714 to 1718 for 16,000 "Monnoye de cartes" (12,000 monnaie de France), but, on the death of Riverin in 1714, it was sub-let to Guillemin.⁷

⁸Hocquart to the Minister(?) 1 September, 1773, p.2736.

1718, Sieur Rivet, acting Director of the Domaine, appointed a manager, Pierre Normandin, to manage the Domaine on behalf of the Crown. From 1719 to 1720, it was managed by Cugnet. From 1721 to 1726, it was sublet to Bourgeois and from 1727 to 1732, to Carlier.⁸

⁹Lanouiller to the Fermiers Généraux, 1728.

1728, Nicholas Lanouiller, in a memorandum respecting the droit du domaine in the "Ferme de Tadoussac," stated that, in depth, it extended "jusqu'a la baye d'Hudson"; that the last lease prior to 1728, had been made to Riverin for 12,000 livres a year, but that the then lessee, Sieur Guillemin, had obtained the lease for an annual rental of 7,500 livres.⁹

1733, Hocquart issued an ordinance accepting the abandonment by Bissot de la Riviere of the seigniorship of Isle-aux-Oeufs and other concessions granted to Francois Bissot in 1661. The tract on the north shore of the St. Lawrence extending from the Isle-aux-Oeufs to cape Cormoran was united to the Domaine.¹⁰

¹⁰Ordinance by Hocquart, 12 May, 1733.

In the same year, Hocquart, at the request of the adjudicataire-general, Carlier, issued another ordinance. It repeated the prohibitions of earlier ordinances respecting trading or hunting in the Domaine du Roy. It also set forth in detail, the boundaries of the Domaine and prohibited any unauthorized person approaching within 10 leagues of the landward limits for the purpose of trading with the Indians.¹¹ ¹¹Ordinance by Hocquart, 23 May, 1733.

p. 3122

In 1698, the Domaine was leased at an annual rental of 15,200 livres, in 1701 at 12,700 livres and in 1714, it had decreased to 12,000.¹

¹Hocquart to Minister(?) 1 September, 1733, p.2741.

The decrease was due to several causes. During 1710 to 1714, the lessee, Riverin, introduced a large number of Huron, Abenaki and Micmac Indians who practically annihilated the elk and thus caused the death by starvation of Indians of the Domaine; fires over-ran the forest, killing or driving away the fur-bearing animals; one fire destroyed the timber of over 200 leagues.²

²*Ibid.*

Lastly, poor administration was largely responsible. When the returns of furs decreased, the lessees reduced the quality of their goods and increased their prices ; inferior arms and ammunition injured the Indians or drove them away ; by supplying the Indians with brandy, their pelts were secured at very low prices ; some Indians, lacking ammunition for their hunt, died of starvation after trading their furs for liquor.

Guillemain, prior to the termination of his sub-lease in 1714-18, closed Mistassini and Nikabau. Mistassini was re-opened by Cugnet in 1728 or 1729, and Nikabau was re-opened in 1731.³

³*Ibid.*

Joseph Dorval, who was in charge at Mistassini post prior to 1733, discovered an Indian tribe called the "Pays Peles, parce-qu'il n'y a point de bois, Ces sauvages n'ont point de canots, d'ecorce pour en faire." ⁴

⁴*Ibid.*

This description identifies them with the Naskapis of the upper waters of the Eastmain, Fort George and Kaniapiskau rivers. Thus, W. H. A. Davies sometime in charge of Esquimaux Bay district for the Hudson's Bay Co., says that "Their rivers and lakes being covered with ice for nearly two-thirds of the year, they [the Naskapis] do not travel much in canoes and are consequently not good canoemen, being very timid." ⁵ Davies was writing in 1844, when the Naskapis had been in contact with Europeans for over a century.

⁵ Trans., Literary and Historical Society, Quebec iv. 93.

The control by the French of the Indian trade of the Domaine and adjacent territory in the Labrador peninsula was materially assisted by the conversion of the natives. For instance, at Mistassini and at Lake St. John, houses were provided for a missionary and a lay brother at each post.⁶

⁶Ordinance by Hocquart, 1 September, 1733.

In Father Laure's map, compiled before 1731, he indicates missions at Seven Islands, Pointe-a-la-Croix, Islets-de-Jeremie, Bondesir, Tadoussac, Chicoutimi and Mistassini. On his 1731 map, he shows a mission at Lake St. John.

Bigot, in 1750, states that chapels had been built at Seven Islands and Islets-de-Jeremie, prior to that date.

1733, the trader at Nikabau reported that Indians from Hudson bay had traded there. These Indians must have come from the Nottaway river as Abitibi River Indians would be intercepted at Abitibi post and Rupert River Indians would be intercepted at Nemiskau and Mistassini posts.⁷

Hocquart points out in his ordinance of 1 September, 1733, that the missionary who is labouring among the Indians can “contribuer beaucoup a affectioner les sauvages an bien de la Traitté,”⁸ demonstrating that the French officials fully recognized that the missionaries at the French posts were attaching to the French, the Indians who traded at these posts.
p. 3123

⁸*Ibid.*

Hocquart also points out that measures should be taken to conserve the fur resources by excluding the “sauvages etrangers” and by taking other measures to ensure the restocking of the Domaine by fur-bearing animals.¹

Tadoussac was founded in 1600 and for many years was the headquarters for the Domaine. In 1733, it was maintained as a depot for Chicoutimi and Islets-de-Jeremie posts.¹

¹Ordinance by Hocquart, 1 September, 1733.

Chicoutimi, in 1733, was the most important post in the Domaine, being the headquarters for the posts of Lake St. John, Nikabau, Grands Mistassins and Petits Mistassins. The Nikabau Indians numbered 37 families and the Grands Mistassins (Mistassini post) numbered 43 families.²

Annually, a trader was sent inland from Islets-de-Jeremie post.² Other evidence indicates that he ascended the Outarde river at least as far as lake Pletipi (St. Barnabé of the old maps) where he could meet the Indians of the upper waters of four great rivers which take their rise in that region, namely, the Eastmain, Fort George (Big), Kaniapiskau and Hamilton rivers.

²*Ibid.*

In 1733, there were 24 Indian families on the St. Lawrence near Islets-de-Jeremie post and 20 families inland.³

Hocquart states, in 1733, that Rene Cartier, who operated Moisie and Seven Islands posts, planned to establish a wintering-post at lac des Naskapis (lake Ashuanipi). Traders had made trading trips to the lake each summer and Jolliet and Bissot had traded there at least as early as 1696. Evidently, the value of the trade had become of such importance that it justified occupying the post during the winter also. About 40

³*Ibid.*

Indian families traded at lac des Naskapis. The name of the lake and the fact that they had no canoes practically demonstrates that they were Naskapis of the Hamilton river and adjoining country.

⁴*Ibid.*

Solicitor General Jenkin Williams, writing in 1786, states that, when the King suppressed the Compagnie des Indes in 1674, the interests of this Company “were leased by him to the Fermiers Généraux (in France) for a term which expired in 1733. The Farmers General had deputed a Gentleman [Francois Cugnet] to manage their concerns here, and upon the determination of their Lease the same Gentleman was continued on the part of the King to direct and manage his Domaine. He remained in the Direction till the year 1741, when a Lease was granted to him of the Posts in question.”⁵

The Fermiers Généraux, in turn, sub-let the Domaine. The ordinances that were issued prohibiting unauthorised trading in the Domaine demonstrate that the authorities endeavoured to prevent any invasion of the lessees' exclusive right to trade, hunt and fish within the limits.

⁵Opinion of the Solicitor-General, 12 June, 1780.

1743, Louis Fornel returned to Quebec from Baye-des-Esquimaux. Learning that Fornel had left two Frenchmen and a number of Indians to winter near the mouth of the Nord-Ouest river and to trap and trade with the Indians; that Fornel's post at Nord-Ouest river was in an advantageous position to intercept Indian trade and to attract the Indians of the region immediately north of the northern watershed of the St. Lawrence, Cugnet, Director of the Domaine du Roy, submitted a memoire to Beauharnois and Hocquart. He represented that Fornel, under cover of the establishment of a fishery, was preparing to divert to his post at Nord-Ouest river the trade of the Indians inhabiting the country in the rear of Mingan and Baye de Phelypeau and the trade of the northern Indians who had, thitherto, traded with the lessee of the Domaine and whose trade properly appertained to said lessee.¹

Cugnet's memoire is valuable as proof of the trading control that the lessees of the Domaine and the concessionaires of the gulf of St. Lawrence and Atlantic coasts had been exercising over the Indians of the upper Hamilton, Kaniapiskau, Fort George and Rupert rivers.

Cugnet points out that Fornel had astutely left in charge of his trading and hunting operations, one Jean Pilote ; that Pilote had been employed several years in the Domaine and that he was very well qualified to attract to his post the Indians of lakes Naskapis (Ashuanapi), Manikuagan, Mistassini and Cheburochouane.²

Following the return of Pilote, Cugnet, in 1746, applied for a concession for 9 years (1746 to 1755) of the basin of Baie de Kitchichatsou (Hamilton inlet), of Cap-Charles concession and of all unconceded lands between the strait of Belleisle and Hudson strait. He also applied for a lease, for the same period, of the Domaine du Roy, stating that he proposed to develop the new concession, jointly with the Domaine.³

Doubtless as a result of information obtained respecting the wintering-post established by Pilote in 1743, he points out that a post could advantageously be established “à quarante lieues dans la profondeur de la Baie de Kitchichatsou sur une Rivière venant du Nord-Ouest” —present Northwest or Naskapi river.³

In stating his financial difficulties in connection with the enterprises, Cugnet throws some light on the extent of his operations as lessee of the Domaine. Thus, he says that he has two sea-going vessels. He refers to the results of the operations at “Chouanipi” (Ashuanipi Lake) post, which demonstrates that this post was in operation during 1745-46.⁴

1749, the Domaine du Roy was leased to the widow Fornel and Company for 6 years (1749-1755)⁵ and the Baye-des-Esquimaux concession was granted to the widow Fornel for 12 years (1749-1761).⁶

The King having disapproved the lease of the Domaine, the widow Fornel and Company, in 1750, filed a strong protest. They pointed out that, if the trade were interrupted, the Indians would carry their furs to Three Rivers, Batiscan, Timiskaming, Hudson Bay or Mingan and that the traders of Mingan habitually sent traders as far as the limits of the Domaine. Fornel and Co. stated that, in 1749, they had sent presents to the Indians; that their envoy had promised to meet the Indians at Chicoutimi in 1750 and to treat them as if they were his own children ; that, if there was a sudden change of lessees, the Indians would be bewildered and, becoming estranged, would resort to other posts where they would obtain brandy.⁷

Minister,
30 October,
1750.

In Intendant Bigot's protest against the cancellation of the Fornel lease, he points out that if the lease were granted to unreliable persons, they would annihilate the fur-bearers and exterminate the Indians by supplying them with large quantities of brandy. He also stresses the importance of the low prices charged by widow Fornel and Company as preventing the Indians going to Hudson Bay to trade.¹

Bigot also refers to certain information which he had received from the missionary at Tadoussac, which proves that during 1748 and 1749, the missionary was still at that post.

Bigot to St.
Laurent,
18 July, 1755

1755, the Sieur de Laurent was instructed to make an inventory and valuation of the buildings, merchandise, etc., in the posts of the Domaine du Roy to ascertain the compensation to be paid to the then lessees, Fornel and Co., by the new lessee, the new lease to be offered at auction.² Solicitor General Jenkin Williams, in 1788, stated that, on the expiration of the French lease, "the King thought fit to resume the Management of the Posts."³

BRITISH REGIME

⁴ Murray to Lords of Trade
26 May, 1767.

The affairs of the Domaine du Roy (King's Posts) received early consideration by General Murray. In 1760, the Indians of the Domaine (King's Posts), through their chief and the missionary, represented to General Murray that "they were in the utmost misery and distress" and begged that they be supplied and maintained by the British "in the same manner as they had been in the time of the French."⁴

⁶ Ainslie to Inspecter General,
7 August 1786.

June, 1760, Thomas Ainslie was appointed Agent for the King in the King's Posts.⁵ He was instructed to "take the Savages of that Domaine under the protection of the King."⁶ to supply them with merchandise, to receive the returns on the King's account,⁷ to obtain a statement of the goods required for the Indian trade and as full knowledge as possible concerning said trade and to make as full an inventory as possible of the cattle and crops at each post.

⁷ Murray to Lords of Trade
25 May, 1767.

An officer and detachment of soldiers were ordered to the Posts to preserve order and to prevent abuses and irregularity.⁷

Ainslie states that he was accompanied by the "Rev'd. Mr. Cocquart, the priest who had the charge of these particular Tribes” ; that he also visited the posts in 1761 and that, in 1762, he deputed John Gray to supply his “place & meet the Indians.” He states that, in 1762, there were detachments of the 35th Regiment quartered at Tadoussac, Chicoutimi and Islets-de-Jeremie.⁶

In General Murray's despatch of 26 June, 1760, he states that, owing to the arrival of the British fleet in 1759, the French were unable to supply the posts, but his despatch makes it clear that there had been no absolute cessation of trade.⁸

A few months later, Murray states that he has opened “the fur trade to all ranks of men without distinction, it was, as I have observed, formerly confined to a few. I shall give particular attention to the Indians and that they are not cheated or abused by the traders and I have not hitherto allow'd the vending of spirituous liquors.”¹

² Murray to

Murray also points out that the King “has a right to the fifth of the sales of all Fiefs or Lordships, likewise to Fines of Alienations, upon all exchanges of inheritance.” He states that he had remonstrated against the sale of furs from the King's Posts by the Navy as lawful prizes and had claimed them for the King.²

³ Murray to Egremont,
5 June, 1762.

1762, General Murray reported on the state of the Government of Quebec. He states that the Eskimo resorted to the strait of Belleisle in summer, and that the French had traded with them though their mutual relations had not always been amicable.³

Respecting the Montagnais and Naskapis, he says that, while the Naskapis were forced to trade with the Hudson's Bay Co. during the war, “they would have ever reverted [on the conclusion of peace] to those who were Masters of the River St. Lawrence.”

Murray states that the traders estimated that the Indians between Mingan and Labrador (Bradore) bay did not number more than 80 to 100 families and that those trading at the King's Posts might number 220 families.

⁴ Lease of King's Posts by Murray
20 September, 1762.

1762 Murray leased the King's Posts to Thomas Dunn and John Gray for an annual rental of £400 cy., for a term of one year certain and 14 years additional (1762-1777) “providing no Order to the contrary should arrive from Great Britain.”⁴

⁵ Royal Proclamation, 7 October, 1763.

7 October, 1763, the King issued a Royal Proclamation which provided that the trade with the Indians “shall be free and open to all our Subjects,” provided that such person took out a license. General Murray was doubtful whether the lease of the King's Posts was, or was not, affected by the Proclamation.⁵

⁶ Report by Murray, re King's Posts, 26 May, 1764.

Following the granting of the lease to Dunn and Gray, certain persons contended that the terms of the Royal Proclamation nullified the clause in the lease providing that the lessess should have the privilege of exclusive trade.⁶

1764, the lessees presented a memorial to the Board of Trade. In it, they pointed out that, under the existing system, "the Indians are peaceable, and satisfied with their situation, and their friendship secured to the Crown, without any expence to the Government" ; that, if the trade were thrown open, it would not be to the interest of any individual to provide at his posts "stores of Goods & provisions, lodged there for the whole year, as is now the case" ; that, if such provision were not made, the Indians might become discontented, and that, in such an extensive area, it would be impossible to prevent evil disposed persons committing abuses.⁷

⁷ John Gray to Board of Trade 21 January, 1764.

The lessees stated that "the necessary measures followed, for preserving the friendship of the Indians, led us unavoidably into a very large expense of advancing them Goods and necessarys upon Credit."

p. 3127

In a memorial presented to the Lords of the Treasury the lessees pointed out that if the Indians were "indulged with Spirituous Liquors and other superfluitys . . . they would, in a few weeks, consume the whole produce of their years labour, and on the approach of the rigorous winter find themselves naked and exposed to the utmost misery, and wreak their vengeance indiscriminately on the first Europeans or other white people they met with.... On this account the Persons farming these posts are obliged by the tenor of their Lease to furnish them with necessarys and provisions in proportion to their real wants and circumstances and as they are often sick or unsuccessful, to give them Credit, and support their Familys until fortune puts it in their power to pay," whereas, if the trade were thrown open, unprincipled persons would deprive the Indians of their resources.¹

¹ Memorial by Gray, Dunn & Murray to the Lords of the Treasury (January, 1764.)

They further pointed out that, while a "universal revolt [Pontiac's War] appears to have been entered into, by all the other Indian nations in North America, those immediately under his [General Murray's] jurisdiction have not only remained faithful and peaceable, but when earnestly solicited to join the disaffected Tribes, they firmly declared that . . . they had at no time before, met with better Treatment or more Justice, than since the English have been in possession of Canada."²

² Ibid.

At least three-fourths of the Indians referred to in the preceding paragraph resided in the "Indian Lands" and were, therefore, outside the limits of the Government of Quebec as defined by the Proclamation of 1763.

³ Report by Murray
re King's Posts
26 May, 1767

1765, Allsopp, Chinn & Co. applied to the Government of Quebec “for special permission to trade with the Indians of the Domain in particular.” General Murray granted the applicants “a general permission to trade with the Indians within the Province [of Quebec] in conformity” with the terms of the Royal Proclamation.³

⁴ Ibid.

1766, Thomas Mills was appointed Receiver General for the Province of Quebec. He was also “charged with the Superintendency of the King's Domain and Estates in Canada to receive the Rents and Revenues thereof and to enquire into the State and nature of the lease of the Posts of the Domain.” Pending his arrival in Canada. Mills instructed the Acting Receiver General that the lessees be supported “in the uninterrupted possession of their lease until His Majesty's pleasure should be further known.”⁴

Upon the application of the Acting Receiver General, the Governor and Council of Quebec forbade Allsopp, Chinn & Co. to erect buildings within the King's Posts. Notwithstanding this prohibition, Allsopp, Chinn & Co. established themselves at Tadoussac, Chicoutimi and Lake St. John, traded with the Indians of the King's Posts and supplied the Indians with liquor.

August 1766, Col. Paulus Irving, President of the Council, authorised the agent for the lessees to remove the buildings erected by Allsopp, Chinn & Co. Following the arrival of Lieut.-Governor Carleton, Allsopp, Chinn & Co. obtained from him an order suspending the warrant granted by Col. Irving authorising the removal of their buildings. Carleton granted them “free liberty to trade with the Indians of the Domaine.”⁴

1767, an Imperial Order in Council ordered that the buildings erected by Allsopp, Chinn & Co. be demolished and that the goods sent there be returned to them.¹

² Report by Murray
re King's Posts 26
May, 1767.

General Murray, in 1767, made a vigorous defense of his policy of excluding from the King's Posts every one but the lessees and their employees. He stated in emphatic language the advantages of such policy and the injurious effects of throwing this area open to all traders.²

Murray pointed out that, as the hunting season only lasted for about six months of the year, the Indians were dependent for half the year upon the supplies advanced to them by the lessees ; that, if they were allowed to purchase unlimited quantities of liquor from the competing traders, they would consume in a few hours, “the whole produce of their years labour, and on the approach of the rigorous winter, finding themselves, Wives and Children naked, destitute and exposed to all the miserys of that climate, would wreak their Vengeance indiscriminately on the first Europeans or other White people they met.”

Murray stated that the French had adopted the leasing system and had been successful. When an Indian family arrived at a French post in the Domaine, they were supplied with necessaries either in exchange for furs, or, if their hunt had been unsuccessful, on credit. If the husband died, the widow and children were assisted until able to provide for themselves. It was to the interest of the lessee that the Indians should not perish from want or privation, as the native had no property from which he could obtain repayment of his advances. As a result, the Indian looked upon the trader as his benefactor and, during the war, 1755 to 1760, the British had not been able to alienate the French Indians.

³ Ibid. Murray also pointed out that, as a result of such attachment the Indians, during Pontiac's War, had “massacred almost every English subject they could lay hands on, and at the same time allowed the French Canadian Traders not only a free access as their friends but were by their interposition prevailed on to release or ransom” English prisoners at Michilimackinac.³

⁴ Ibid. Murray stated that, if the trade were thrown open, it would not be to the interests of the lessees or anyone else to advance large quantities of merchandise. ammunition, etc., when there was no reasonable prospect of obtaining repayment.⁴

Murray also stated that the lands of the Domaine were never ceded or purchased from the Indians by the King of France or the King of Great Britain : that the lands required for the individual posts were acquired by agreement from the Indians of each locality ; that the Indians residing within the limits of the Domaine “were adopted as Domicile Indians under the sole and immediate protection of the King, and so remained till the reduction of the Province and a Missionary was sent to reside constantly among them. The lands of the Domaine, therefore, are to all intents and purposes, reserved as hunting grounds for the Savages.”

It was, probably, due to the energetic protest of General Murray, that

22 March, 1831.

Allsopp, Chinn & Co. were ejected by the Imperial Order in Council of 26 June 1767, above referred to.

Following the expiration of the lease to Dunn and Gray in 1777, it was extended for a further term of three years. After the expiration of the extension in 1780, the lessees continued as tenants at will at the same rent.¹

1785, the lessees petitioned for a new lease for 10 years (1785 to 1795). In their petition. they state that “at their sole expense, they have carefully attended to, supported and maintained the Aged, and Infirm, the Widows and Orphans ; the distressed Indians residing on the King's Domain have been relieved and supported by your Memorialists. . . . Your Memorialists, as consequent to their possession, claim, and expectations, were under the Necessity to keep a Constant and Sufficient quantity of Goods and Provisions at the Posts to Supply the Wants of the Indians.”²

1785, Lieut. Gov. Hamilton leased the King's Posts to Thos. Dunn, William Grant and Peter Stuart for one year certain and for a further period of nine years (1786 to 1795), subject to the approbation of the King, for an annual rental of £400 cy.³

The King disapproved the lease to Dunn, Grant and Stuart⁴ and, in accordance with his instructions, the King's Posts were leased to Alex. Davison, Geo. Davison and Francois Baby for 10 years (1786 to 1796) for an annual rental of £400.⁵

1786, Edward Harrison was commissioned by Lieut. Governor Hope to make an inventory of the posts and the contents thereof, the inventory to be used in determining the compensation due to the old lessees, Dunn, Grant and Stuart.⁶ Harrison submitted his report in the same year.⁷

1786, Francois Baby assigned his interest in the lease of the King's Posts to George Davison and Alexander Davison.⁸

1802, the lease of the King's Posts was awarded to the highest bidders, Simon McTavish, John Gregory and associates, commonly known as the North West Company. The lease was for the term of 20 years (1802 to 1822) at an annual rental of £1,025 cy.⁹

1803, the Legislative Council ordered that a Proclamation be issued prohibiting unauthorised persons hunting, trading or fishing in the King's Posts.¹⁰

1822, the lease of the King's Posts for 20 years (1822 to 1842), was awarded to the highest bidder, John Goudie, at an annual rental of £1,200 cy.¹¹

1823, Goudie “transferred two-thirds of his rights therein, to Mr. James McDouall.” In 1824, William Lampson acquired McDouall's rights and claims and, in 1828, he also acquired Goudie's share.¹²

¹ Ibid.

1822, the Hudson's Bay Company, which, by union with the North West Company in 1821, had acquired its rights and claims, leased the seigniory of Mille-Vaches. Later, they established Portneuf fur-trading post in this seigniory and, owing to its position with reference to the King's Posts, were able to carry on a considerable trade with the Indians of the Posts to the manifest injury of the lessee.¹

³ Report of the Committee on Grievances. House of Assembly, 22 March, 1831.

1828, Andrew Stuart and David Stuart were appointed Commissioners to explore “the tract of country . . . commonly called the ‘King's Posts’ and the lands adjacent thereto.”²

⁴ Bishop of Quebec to Rev. Belleau, 23 May, 1831.

1831, a committee of the House of Assembly reported that the Portneuf post had been established by the Hudson's Bay Co. “in contradiction to the conditions of the Concession deed of said Seigniory” and that the Crown officers had given it “as their opinion that Portneuf constituted a part of the Domain of His Majesty leased out under the appellation of the ‘King's Posts.’”³

1831, the Hudson's Bay Co. acquired the lease of the King's Posts by purchase from Lampson.⁴

⁶ Simpson to Keith, 21 September, 1837.

When Lampson disposed of his interest in the lease of the Posts to the Hudson's Bay Co., purchaser and vendor “reciprocally engaged not to interfere or molest the Trades carried on at the King's Posts and at Esquimaux Bay, owned by each concern respectively.”⁵

⁷ Galt to Glenelg, 28 September and 15 October, 1836.

1836, “The Hudson's Bay Company purchased a transfer of the remaining (say 10 years) of the Lease of the King's Posts, together with the stock on hand for a consideration of £25,000.”⁶

⁸ Nixon to Galt, 22 September, 1836.

1836, John Galt wrote Lord Glenelg, Secretary of State for War and the Colonies, urging that the King's Posts be thrown open to settlement upon the expiration of the existing lease.⁷ Lieut. Nixon recommended that military pensioners be settled in the basin of the Saguenay river.⁸

1839, Governor Pelly, of the Hudson's Bay Co. wrote to the Colonial Secretary, the Marquis of Normanby, requesting a new lease of the King's Posts and stated that the Company were willing that the Saguenay territory be thrown open to colonisation. He stated that the company desired to retain the exclusive right of hunting, and of trading with the Indians, that they might the more effectually “maintain in their own Territory bordering on that part of Canada, the restriction of the use of Spirituous liquors, and all those other beneficial regulations, which have been found essentially to improve the conditions of the Indians and to preserve the peace of the Country and to continue the like benefits to the Indians of the King's Posts.”⁹

1841, Samuel Robertson states that there were about 50 establishments, chiefly sedentary seal fisheries, between Blanc Sablons and a point 150 miles west of it and, of the “fifty, nearly half are in the neighbourhood of Bradore, which is only three miles from Blanc Sablon river.”¹⁰

¹⁰ Transactions of the Literary and Historical Society of Quebec. vol. IV, pp. 35-10, 1841.

Robertson states that the Hudson's Bay Company had six establishments in the King's Posts, namely, Tadoussac, Portneuf, Jérémie, River Godbout,
p. 3131

Seven Islands and River Moisie ; that, in the Terre Ferme de Mingan, they had four posts, namely, Mingan, Napisipi, Natasquan and Musquarow.

Robertson estimates the number of Montagnais Indians inhabiting the coast “from the Saguenay downwards,” at about 700 “and including those about Lake St. John, may amount to 1,000—I am afraid, however, that this estimate is too large.” He estimates that, 200 years earlier, the Montagnais tribe “was four times as numerous as now.”

1842, the King's Posts were leased to the Hudson's Bay Co. for 21 years (1842 to 1863) at an annual rental of £600 cy., the Company also releasing the Crown from the payment to them of the sum of £1,800 cy., “by them paid for the value of certain Indian Debts.”¹

27 June, 1842.

This lease granted the exclusive right of trading, hunting and fishing, but, unlike earlier leases, it provided that the Crown could grant any part of the Ring's Posts tract for the purposes of settlement.

1842, Davies states that the Indians frequented the various posts as follows : Jeremie, 15 families ; Godbout, 10 families ; and Seven Islands, 8 families.²

² Memorandum by W. H. A. Davies,
31 August, 1842.

1849, Sir George Simpson wrote the Commissioner of Crown Lands. He stated that, during the previous six years, on several occasions, the Hudson's Bay Company had claimed compensation for losses occasioned to them by the granting of licenses to cut timber in the King's Posts. He suggested that a friendly suit be taken and a “decision of the Bench obtained.”³

BAYE-DES-ESQUIMAUX CONCESSION

FRENCH REGIME

It is difficult to fix an exact date for the first appearance on the map of the body of water known under the names of Kessessakiou, Kichecatsou, Esquimaux, Sauvages, St. Louis, Ivucktoke and Touchstoke Bay and Hamilton inlet.

The Ribero map of the World, 1529, indicates a large bay in latitude 54 ½°, which may have been intended for Hamilton inlet.

p. 3132

The Desceliers map of the World, 1550, indicates a large inlet designated “Grand Baie” but the latitude and the width at its mouth would seem to identify it with the mouth of Hudson strait.

Mercator's map of the World, 1569, shows a large gulf designated “Golfam de Merosro,” apparently based on the discoveries of Corte-Real. This, also, is probably the southern portion of Davis Strait.

The map of the World which accompanied Hakluyt's “Voyages.” 1600, contains the explorations made by Davis in 1586. His “great sea” is shown as a large bay with several islands near its mouth, but is not named. This defect, Hondius, in his map of Septentrio America, 1630, endeavoured to supply. He reproduces Davis' “great sea,” but identifies it with the Golfam de Merosro of Corte-Real.

On both the World map, 1600, and Hondius' map, 1630, Hudson strait is indicated with a note: “A furious overfall,” referring to the tumultuous sea sometimes caused by the tides at its mouth.

The “Baye Sauvage,” indicated on Sanson's map of Amerique Septentrionale 1669, can be identified with certainty with the present Hamilton inlet.

On Jaillot's map of Amerique Septentrionale, 1695, it is still “Baye Sauyage,” but, on de l'Isle's map of l'Amerique Septentrionale. 1700, it is “Grande Baye des Esquimaux.” During the French regime, it wits commonly known either as Baye des Esquimaux or as Baye de Kessessakiou.

Courtemanche, on the chart accompanying the report of his exploration of the coast east of the Kegaska river, 1704, names it the “Quesesasquiou,” presumably a variant spelling of the native name.

Fornel, in his chart dated 1744, designates it: “Baye Kessessakiou ou des Esquimaux, dite Baye St. Louis” and, in the report accompanying the chart, he states that he had re-named it “St. Louis,” doubtless in honour of the reigning monarch.

7 September,
1743.

Fornel named present Rigolet narrows “Riviere Kessessakiou. recognizing that it is really the mouth of the present Hamilton river.¹ This usage was adopted by the famous French cartographer, Bellin, in the official French chart of the “Golphe de St. Laurent,” published by the Département de la Marine, Paris, 1753.

Subsequent to the Treaty of Paris, 1763, most maps of Canada were issued by British geographers, but it is a remarkable fact that it was only after a lapse of about sixty years that Hamilton inlet was indicated on British maps with the detail shown on the Fornel chart of 1744 and the Bellin chart of 1753.

Jefferys, in his “American Atlas,” 1776, shows the “Great Bay of the Eskimaux,” but the topographical detail shows that his knowledge could be summed up as follows : He knew that there was a large inlet in this locality but had absolutely no data respecting the shore-line and, like Arrowsmith, was ignorant of the existence of present lake Melville, although it had been indicated on the French naval charts 23 years earlier.

Jefferys, however, in a note, suggests that “This perhaps is the place about 54° 30′ where Davis saw a great Sea entering between two lands, the lower all Islands and had hopes of a N.W. Passage.”

p. 3133

With our present knowledge, we are able to state with certainty that Hamilton inlet is the locality referred to by Davis, who states that, in 1586, he “had a perfect hope of the [Northwest] passage, finding a mighty great sea passing between two lands West. The South land, to our judgment, being nothing but isles, we greatly desired to go into this sea, but the wind was directly against us.”¹

Works of John Davis. Edited by A. H. Markham,
London. 1880, p.
29.

Davis' account demonstrates that he entered present Sandwich bay but was unable to enter Hamilton inlet, owing to the unfavourable wind.

In his map of North America, 1822, Arrowsmith shows an opening designated “Ivucktoke Inlet,” but the utter absence of detail of the shore-line demonstrates that he had not had access to a survey of the inlet itself. For this portion of the shore of Labrador, Arrowsmith used a sketch survey made by Lieut. Roger Curtis, R.N., in 1773. As Curtis did not enter Hamilton inlet, he shows no portion of it with any attempt at accuracy except the capes at the southern and northern sides of the entrance.

In his chart of Labrador and Greenland, 1825,

Arrowsmith shows “Ivucktoke or Hamilton Inlet” and “Lake Melville” in detail, and a note on it states that, between Hamilton inlet and Okkak, it is based on surveys by “Mr. Rt. Morison. . . .when on coasting voyages in H.M. brig Clinker in 1821 and 1822.”

Summing up: The Atlantic coast had been surveyed with a fair degree of accuracy by the French before the publication of Sanson's map in 1663, at least as far north as Hamilton inlet. It is probable that Bourdon, during his voyage in 1657, sighted the coast from Belleisle strait to the most northerly point he reached, namely, latitude 55°, or about present Kaipokok.

1737, Louis Fornel entered into partnership for seven years with Louis Bazil, concessionaire of Baye-des-Chateaux concession, and Francois Havy, a merchant of Quebec. The agreement provided that Fornel, Bazil and Havy should carry on a seal fishery within the limits of said concession.²

² Agreement executed before Barolet, at Quebec, 3 May, 1737.

1738. Fornel applied to the Minister for a concession of Baye-des-Esquimaux. As Daine and Foucault had also applied to Beauharnois and Hocquart for a concession in the same region, the Minister suggested that Fornel should unite with them, but, in any event, Fornel must receive as favourable treatment as the others.³

³ Minister to Beauharnois and Hocquart, 21 April, 1739.

1742, Fornel applied for a grant of the Baye-des-Chateaux concession on the ground that he, alone, of the partnership, had developed it ; that he had come to a good understanding with the Eskimo and offered, if granted Baye-des-Chateaux, to explore Baye-des-Esquimaux at his own expense. He also stated that he had applied for the concession of Baye-des-Esquimaux “quelques annees” before 1742.⁴

⁴ Fornel to the Minister, 27 October, 1742.

1743, Louis Fornel made a survey of the Atlantic coast of Labrador peninsula from the strait of Belleisle to the upper end of present Hamilton inlet. He sent a detailed report of his explorations, with a chart, to the Governor and Intendant. In 1744, he submitted another chart showing his own explorations and also those made by the Pilotes in present lake Melville.

Fornel, on 11 July, 1743, landed at a point near present Rigolet, planted two crosses, raised the French flag and took possession “au nom du Roy, Et de la nation françoise.”¹ The positions of the crosses are indicated on Fornel's 1743 chart. Comparison with a modern chart shows that they were erected 4 and 6 miles, respectively, east of present Rigolet.

1743, Fornel left two Frenchmen, Jean Pilote and his son, with instructions to winter in the region, and to “reconnoître Le fond la d'e baye St. Louis, comme aussy pour aller decouvrir Les deux bras de la d'e de Rivière St. Louis” (present Hamilton river and the Northwest or Naskaupi river). The Pilotes were supplied with a canoe, provisions, arms, ammunition, trade goods, etc. and five or six Indian families were left with them.²

That the Pilotes explored present lake Melville is demonstrated by the charts which Fornel submitted in 1744 and 1748, and which are now in the French Archives. These charts show present lake Melville and the Hamilton, Northwest (Naskaupi) and Kenamu rivers. Fornel gives no information respecting the operations of the Pilotes, the position of their wintering post nor the inland route they followed when returning to Quebec in 1744. These data, however, are contained in the memoirs submitted by Cugnet, his competitor for the concession of Baye-des-Esquimaux and lessee of the Domaine du Roy. These memoirs, written in 1743, 1744 and 1746, urging that the Baye-des-Esquimaux concession be granted to Cugnet, are extant, also a memoir, written in 1749, subsequent to the granting of Baye-des-Esquimaux to the widow of Fornel.³

1743, Beaubassin and Hocquart state that Fornel had despatched a ship during the last days of the navigation season of 1743, but that it had been wrecked “a la Coste de Terre neuve.” They also state that another vessel despatched by Fornel in the spring of 1744, had returned with 400 or 500 lbs. of whalebone which had been traded with the Eskimo.⁴

Cugnet, in his memoir of 30 October, 1743, states that a short time prior to the date of his writing, Fornel had despatched a vessel to Baye-des-Esquimaux ; that the Pilotes had with them seven or eight families of Indians from Baye-Phelypeau, 4 Indians from Mingan and 3 from Seven Islands, or about 30 persons in all. He also states that Fornel did not intend to establish a fishery but really designed to divert the Indian trade, not only of the Domaine du Roy, but also of Mingan, Baye-Phelypeau, St. Augustine, St. Modet, Baye-des-Chateaux, Cap-Charles and other posts ; that Jean Pilote had been employed by Fornel because Pilote had been, for several years, “dans les Traittées du Domaine en qualité d'Engagé” and was thus better qualified than anyone else to divert to his post the trade of the Indians of lakes Naskapis, Ashuanipi, Manikuagan, Mistassini and Ashuapmuchnan and that, on the vessel recently despatched. Fornel had loaded a larger quantity of goods than was being sent to Mingan and Seven Islands, combined, thus demonstrating that he designed to carry on a fur trade with the natives under cover of his declared intention to establish a fishery.⁵

¹ Cugnet and Estèbe to Beaubassin and Hocquart, 28 October, 1744

In the following year, 1744, Cugnet and his associate, Estèbe, submitted to the Governor and Intendant a new memoir which contains some definite information which they had evidently obtained following the return of the Pilotes. This information refers to the operations of the Pilotes during 1743-44 and the position of the post they had established.¹

It is to be noted that Cugnet and Estèbe state in this memoir that there is an advantageous site for a trading post “a quarante lieues dans la profondeur de la Baie de Kitchechatsou sur un rivièrè venant du Nord Ouest” and at its mouth. This establishment would be “a quarante lieues dans la profondeur des Terres” and thus be out of reach of the Eskimo.

This statement is notable because it is the first definite reference to the name of the present Northwest (or Naskaupi) river and is the first evidence that the site coveted by Cugnet and his associate was the site of the present Northwest River post. To complete the evidence upon which this statement has been based it is summarized below, though its introduction at this point breaks the chronological sequence of the memorandum.

² Cugnet to Beauharnois,

2 July, 1746

1746, Fornel having died in 1745, Cugnet, in the following year, again presented a request for a grant of Baye-des-Esquimaux. Again, Cugnet points out that there is an advantageous site for a post “a quarante lieues dans la profondeur . . . sur une Riviere venant du Nord Ouest” which would attract not only the Indians who deal with the French but also those who go to Hudson bay.²

³ Cugnet to the Minister (?), 1749.

1749, a memoir, which, though unsigned, contains internal evidence that it was written by Cugnet, was addressed to Beauharnois and Maurepas, following the concession of Baye-des-Esquimaux to the widow Fornel.

⁴ Deposition of Goupille 23 August, 1785.

Cugnet now states definitely that, in 1743, the Pilotes had built their winter post “sur la Riviere a quarante lieues dans la profondeur de la Baie St. Louis” and that this was the post for the establishment of which Fornel despatched again in 1744 the same vessel that had reached there the previous year.³

⁵ Depositions of Trahan and Vachon, 11 September, 1788.

Finally, in 1785, Joseph Goupille affirmed, in an affidavit, that he had seen one Dumontier and his partners “dans la Riviere du Nord-Ouest.”⁴ Charles Trahan, in an affidavit, affirmed that Marcoux's post was “a quarante lieues dans la Profondeur de la Baie” of “Kitchichachoux.”⁵ Other evidence demonstrates that Dumontier's post was a quarter-league from the site of present North West River post at the mouth of the Nord-Ouest (or Northwest or Naskaupi) river.

The foregoing quotations, taken together, constitute the strongest kind of presumptive proof that :—

(1) In 1743, the Pilotes established their post at the mouth of the Nord-Ouest (Northwest or Naskaupi) river.

(2) That this post had been operated continuously up to 1749 and thereafter.

In addition, there is the further fact that an examination of the map immediately discloses that the site at the mouth of the Nord-Ouest (Northwest or Naskaupi) river possesses intrinsic strategic advantages of position as compared with any other site in the drainage basin of lake Melville. It commands the mouths of the three large rivers which fall into lake Melville, namely, the Hamilton, the Northwest and the Kenamu; it is only a short distance east of the Indian village shown on Fornel's charts and is only a comparatively short distance west of the island upon which Fornel says that the Eskimo habitually wintered ; it has important climatic advantages as compared with Rigolet and is a sandy peninsula, whereas the site of Rigolet is bare and rocky. Until the trade at Northwest River post decreased—owing to its diversion to the posts on the gulf of St. Lawrence and to the decrease of the Indian population—it was a much more important post than Rigolet or any other post in the district.

p. 3136

[sic.] Cugnet to the Minister (?), 1749

Cugnet, in 1749, also states that the Pilotes returned overland to the gulf of St. Lawrence and that they brought out the marten skins but left the beaver skins at the post.¹ It is highly probable that the Pilotes reached the St. Lawrence in 1744 by way of the Kenamu and St. Augustin rivers though Fornel does not indicate on his chart any portion of these rivers except the mouth of the Kenamu, doubtless because he did not desire to publish information that would be of assistance to his competitors.

Prior to the establishment of Fornel's post in 1743, the lessees of the Domaine du Roy and the French concessionaires of the gulf of St. Lawrence and strait of Belleisle had practically monopolised the Indian trade of the upper portions of the Hamilton, Rupert, Kaniapiskau and other rivers. They had also established posts on the upper waters of the Hamilton and Rupert rivers.

The contention by Cugnet that the establishment of a post at the mouth of the Nord-Ouest (Northwest or Naskaupi) river would attract many Indians from this area and thus be detrimental to the traders of the Gulf, unquestionably, was well founded and is strong evidence of the geographical homogeneity of the peninsula. That it was well founded is demonstrated by the following : First, because the canoe routes from the interior via the Hamilton and North-west rivers to lake Melville were much easier than the Romaine-St. John, the Moisie or the Manikouagan routes to the gulf of St. Lawrence ; Secondly, because the new post would have the element of novelty both as regards the route thereto and the personnel of the traders ; Thirdly, after having obtained goods on credit from the traders on the St. Lawrence, the Indians could sell their furs at the new post, where they owed nothing.

² Memoir of Cugnet and Estèbe, 28 October, 1744.

As to the Eskimo of Hamilton inlet, Cugnet states that Augustin Raby (or Araby) and Charles Le Cour had traded with them before 1744.²

1744, Cugnet and Estèbe applied for a lease of the Domaine du Roy from 1747 to 1756, the lease to include the whole of the basin draining into Hamilton inlet and all the unconceded lands from the eastern entrance of the strait of Belleisle to Hudson bay, for a rental of 4,500 livres, the lessees offering to form during the first year a permanent trading establishment at the mouth of the Riviere Nord-ouest and also to establish sedentary fisheries in Hamilton inlet for whales, seals and porpoises.

p. 3137

1749, Jonquière and Bigot granted to the widow Fornel the Baye-des- Esquimaux concession extending from cap St. Gilles, situated to the north of baye des Esquimaux (Hamilton inlet), southward to the rivière des Sables (Eagle river), both inclusive, together with the river Kessessakiou (Hamilton), to have and to hold for twelve years 1749-1761. The concession included the islands opposite and granted the exclusive right to take seals, to hunt and to trade with the natives and the right to take cod in common with other French subjects.¹

¹ Concession by Jonquière and Bigot, 20 September, 1749.

In the same year, Veuve Fornel et Cie. despatched a vessel to their concession and, presumably, to their post at North West river.²

² Veuve Fornel et Cie. to Bigot, 1750

1750, this vessel sailed from North West River with the furs obtained by the Company's employees. Another vessel was despatched from Quebec in the autumn of 1750.²

³ Brevet de confirmation, 31 May, 1750

1750, the grant of Baye-des-Esquimaux was ratified for 12 years (1750 to 1762) with the exclusive right to take seals and to hunt and trade with the natives.³ The Domaine du Roy was also leased to the widow Fornel in 1749.⁴

⁴ Lease by Bigot to Veuve Fornel, 9 September, 1749.

The Baye-des-Esquimaux concession included not only the basins of the Nord-Ouest (Northwest or Naskaupi), Hamilton and Kenamu rivers, but also the basins of the Eagle and other rivers which fall into Sandwich bay.

Following the outbreak of war between France and Britain in 1755, it is probable that the concessionaires were forced temporarily to cease operations. That the Baye-des-Esquimaux concession had been effectively developed there can be little doubt. Cartwright says that William Phippard, who, in 1777-78 and 1778-79, had wintered at Ivucktoke Bay

⁵ Sixteen years on the Coast of Labrador. By George Cartwright, Newark, 1792, Vol. II, pp. 451-452

(a general name for Hamilton Inlet and Lake Melville district), “had found the ruins of three French settlements.”⁵ They were, probably, the ruins of posts constructed by Veuve Fornel and Company at North West River, Rigolet and one other place.

Fornel's chart shows that there was an Indian village opposite present North West River post and that the Eskimo wintered on Henrietta Island in the eastern portion of present lake Melville.

BRITISH REGIME

In or before 1773, Canadians from Quebec appear to have re-established the trading posts in the Indian country on the shores of lake Melville which Fornel & Company had abandoned on the outbreak of the Seven Years' War. A deed of sale of the Esquimaux Bay properties by Jean Olivier Brunet to William Lampson, dated 3 February, 1829, recites an earlier transfer of those properties by deed dated 9 September, 1823, from one Claude Denechaux, Curator of the vacant succession of the late Jacob Pozer, in his life-time a merchant at Quebec, to Flavien Dufresne of Quebec. It is further recited that the “said premises were enjoyed by the said Jacob Pozer and

p. 3138

the ancestors of the said Jacob Pozer by titles and have been in their actual possession and enjoyed by them for and during the last fifty years and upwards.' From 1773, or earlier, these posts were continuously operated by Canadians until 1837 when they were acquired by the Hudson's Bay Company. Cartwright's reference to William Phippard's operations at lake Melville during the winters of 1777-78 and 1778-79 has already been noted. W. H. A. Davies, sometime officer in charge of Esquimaux Bay district for the Hudson's Bay Company, while observing that “the French . . . were the first who gave the bay [des Esquimaux] its present name, and resorted to it for trade,” states that, “it was only in 1777, that the first Englishman [i.e. English-speaking] wintered in the Bay—his son was still living there a year ago—he found the remains of the old French establishments in many parts.”¹

¹ Transactions of the Literary and Historical Society Quebec, 1843. Vol. 1V, pp. 70-94.

1784, two associations of traders from Quebec, established themselves at the mouth of Northwest river.²

² Depositions of Trahan and Vachon, at Quebec, 11 September, 1788.

One association, represented by Pierre Marco and Louis Marchand, obtained from Governor Haldimand, a license empowering them to trade at “Esquimaux Bay” with “any Indians or others His Majesty's Subjects living under His Majesty's Protection.”³

³ Licence by Governor Haldimand, 31 July, 1784.

It is endorsed thus : “This licence is granted conditionally that the said Marcoux & Marchand do not interfere with any of the Posts in the King's Domain.” This endorsement recognises the geographical homogeneity of the peninsula.

An affidavit by Jean Lebrun, an employee of Marcoux and associates, discloses that Baptiste Dumontier, George Plante, Jean Beliveau and Raphael Dorval, members of the other association, had founded a post and were trading on the west bank of Northwest River at least as early as 1784, but, apparently, without any license from the Governor of Quebec. Lebrun affirmed that Dumontier and his associates had traded there with the Indians in 1784 ; that their vessel had returned to Quebec early in August, 1785, and had sailed for Northwest River on 16 August ; that Dorval had remained at the said post with a stock of goods for the Indian trade.⁴

⁴ Affidavit by Jean Lebrun, at Quebec 23 August, 1785.

Joseph Goupille of Quebec, affirmed, in 1785, that an Indian had told him that he had seen Dumontier, Beliveau and their partners “dans la Riviere du Nord-Ouest” (Northwest or Naskaupi river). Goupille stated that Dumontier had told him at Quebec that he had traded with the natives and that he was returning to Esquimaux Bay district with “un Equipement de traite.”⁵

⁵ Affidavit by Joseph Goupille at Quebec, 23 August, 1785.

Cartwright reports a schooner as arriving in Sandwich Bay, 20 October, 1785. This is probably the vessel in which Dumontier returned to Northwest River. Cartwright says: —“She belongs to some merchants of Quebec, and is bound to Ivucktoke Bay to winter, in order to kill furs, and trade with the Indians there.” Cartwright also says that the master's “name is Nicholas Gabourite.”⁶ had wintered in Ivucktoke Bay, and are returning to Quebec, being Canadians.”¹

1786, Lieut-Governor Hope empowered Marcoux, Perrault, Antrobus and Dunier to establish “Seal, Cod and Salmon Fisheries” within the limits of their Indian Island concession.²

1787, Marcoux writes Perrault that he is at their Seal Island post and is sailing for Esquimaux Bay.³

1787, the schooner Resolution, Joseph Goupille, master, cleared from Quebec for “the great Bay of Esquimaux” loaded with trade goods, ammunition, etc., presumably for Marcoux and associates.⁴

1787, Capt. Cartwright applied for a grant at Touchstoke (Esquimaux) bay and an exclusive privilege of fishing in that bay. He applied for a “tract of Land running half a mile back from high water mark, all round the Bay ; his sole view in praying for this Grant is to carry on the seal Fishery, and a Trade with the friendly Indians, who reside chiefly in that bay.”⁵

The Committee of the Legislative Council of Quebec stated that they conceived “from the Circumstances related to Captain Cartwright's case of Canadians having wintered in Touchstoke bay in 1785 and 1786 . . . that it is an inlet of the Sea ten leagues deep, within the great Esquimaux bay. . . . where a Canadian Crew, fitted out from hence, (Quebec) actually did winter.”⁶

1788, the Committee recommended that Capt. Cartwright's request be not granted.⁶

1788, Plante, one of the associates of Dumontier, laid an information against Pierre Marcoux charging him with (1) selling liquor to Indians without a license ; (2) settling in the “Indian Country” without license ; (3) “carrying and sending into the said Indian Country upon Lands not granted by His Majesty, Goods, wares and Merchandize & provisions without license.”⁷

Marcoux contended that the Act forbidding the sale of liquor to Indians did not apply at the “Great Bay of the Esquimaux,” inasmuch as said bay was included within the limits of the Hudson's Bay Company's territories.⁸

The statements of Charles Trahan⁹ and Jean B. Vachon, employees of Marcoux and his associates, of the informant, George Plante¹⁰ and of the defendant, Marcoux, form a mass of evidence which demonstrates the following :

(1) That there were two rival associations trading in the Baye-des-Esquimaux district, one directed by Marcoux, and the other by Dumontier;

(2) That the trading posts of the two associations were not more than a “quarter-league” apart ; that they were on opposite sides of Northwest(Naskaupi) river ; that Marcoux's post was on a sandy peninsula;¹¹ that it stood on, or near, the site of the present North West River post of the Hudson's Bay Company and was “a quarante lieues dans là Profondeur de la Baie” des Esquimaux.¹ In 1789, Marcoux, stated that his post at Nord-Ouest (Northwest or Naskaupi) river had been built “a plusieurs annees.”²

(3) That the post of Dumontier and associates was on the west bank of Nord-Ouest (Northwest or Naskaupi) river at, or near, the site of present Revillon Frères' post.

(4) In 1788, Marcoux built an outpost “two leagues” distant from his post “et en ligne de sa maison,” to intercept the Eskimo and obtain their seal oil.¹ This post was probably on what is now called Montagnais point. This point is practically in line with the Eskimo camps and the remains of old buildings and an old cemetery are to be seen there to-day. Being a salient point, it is used, at the present time, “as an assembly ground by the missionary who lights a fire on one of the islands thus notifying the Indians of the locality of his arrival.”³

(5) During the winter, the Eskimo lived on an island stated to be distant about “eighteen leagues” from Marcoux's post.⁴ Presumably this is Henrietta island, though the distance stated would indicate Neveisik or one of the smaller islands near it. On the other hand, Fornel's map shows that they habitually wintered on Henrietta island and A. P. Low states that, in 1894, they still wintered on it.⁵

(6) Marcoux, in 1787, had planned to “faire un établissement de peche à l'entree de la Baie des Esquimaux” but he arrived too late to form said establishment and was forced to winter at his establishment “a quarante lieues dans la Baie.”⁶ The projected fishing establishment was, therefore, leagues from Nord-Ouest river and was at, or near, present Rigolet. Presumably, he established this post in the spring of 1788.

(7) In 1784 and 1785, Marcoux obtained licenses to trade in Esquimaux Bay district. Dumontier and his associates traded in that region in the same years but without a license.⁷

(8) Marcoux carried on his trading operations during 1785, 1786, 1787, the winter of 1787-88 and thereafter.⁷

1799, Jean-Baptiste Dumontier and Jean Belliveau—doubtless as having acquired the rights of Dumontier and associates who had the post on the west side of Nord-Ouest (Northwest) river—and Jean Baptiste Vachon and Joseph

17 August, 1799.

⁹ Engagement executed before Voyer and Dumas, 26 August, 1799.

Faucher dit Chateauvert, doubtless as having acquired the rights of Marcoux and associates—who had the post on the east bank—entered into partnership for four years (1800-04). The agreement specifically refers to the “établissement que les deux parties ont respectivement en la dite Baie des Esquimaux,”⁸ demonstrating that it was a union of two competing companies.

In the same year, this association engaged men for “Kenomish” post, for “Newberry” post and for “divers postes” in the Baie-des-Esquimaux district.⁹

Between 1799 and 1815, a moiety of the interests of Dumontier, Belliveau, Vachon and Faucher must have been acquired by Dame Cecile Dumontier, as residuary legatee of her husband, Michel Falardeau, deceased, and by community of property with him, the other moiety being held by her late husband's partner, Jacob Pozer.

1815, Dame Cecile Dumontier, daughter of Jean Bte. Dumontier, dit Guyon, signed a lease, to run during her lifetime, whereby she leased her interest in the Baie-des-Esquimaux properties to Jacob Pozer. The lease also provided that, on the decease of the lessor, her rights in said properties should pass to Maria Pozer, daughter of Jacob Pozer, or, if Maria Pozer predeceased Dame Dumontier, said properties should pass to the brothers and sisters of Maria Pozer.¹

² Report of Capt. Wm. Martin to Governor Hamilton, 24 July, 1821.

1821, on the report that there was an extensive inlet on the coast of Labrador called “Gross Water” which abounded with very fine fir timber, fit for naval purposes, the Governor of Newfoundland, in his capacity as Commander-in-Chief of His Majesty's ships, sent Captain Martin to explore for this inlet which up to this time appears to have been unknown to the Governors of Newfoundland. Captain Martin succeeded in finding the inlet which is known as Hamilton Inlet and, with the assistance of Canadian subjects, who were settled on lake Melville, was enabled to explore that lake. He reported that the Canadians had extensive establishments and were carrying on a considerable fur trade with the “Red Indians.”² In the same year, Hon. James Irvine, in a memorandum addressed to Lord Bathurst, stated that “many other fisheries and trading posts are established and carried on by the people of Canada as well on the Mainland as on the Islands and as far as Esquimaux Bay on the outside North.”³

³ Irving to Bathurst, 1 February, 1821

In his map of British North America, 1832, Arrowsmith shows “Ivucktoke or Hamilton Inlet” and “Lake Melville,” with an accuracy of detail that demonstrates that they were based on the surveys made by officers of the British navy in 1823.

⁴ Deed executed before Tessier and Lelievre, at Quebec, 9 September, 1823.

1823, Claude Denechoux, as curator of the estate of Jacob Pozer, deceased, sold to Flavien Dufresne all Pozer's properties in the Esquimaux Bay district, Dame Cecile Dumontier being present and surrendering her rights. at Baie-des-Esquimaux, indicating that the posts were in active operation.⁴

1828, Dufresne sold the Pozer property to Jean Oliver Brunet. The deed of sale demonstrates that the properties were still in operation.⁵

⁶ Deed executed before Campbell, at Quebec, 3 February, 1829.

1829, Brunet sold to William Lampson, for £3,500 cy., “certain large and extensive premises with fishing and hunting establishments, situate lying and being in the Bay commonly called la Baie des Esquimaux consisting of fishing establishments, situations and locations, houses, stores . . . which said premises were enjoyed by the said Jacob Pozer and the Ancestors of the said Jacob Pozer by titles and have been in their actual possession and enjoyed by them for and during the last fifty years and upwards.” This, undoubtedly, refers to the posts erected by the Marcoux and the Dumontier associations. The agreement provided for the return to Quebec of all employees who did not desire to continue in the employ of Lampson.⁶

⁷ Deed executed before De Blois and Campbell, at Quebec, 7 January, 1832.

1832, Lampson sold his Esquimaux Bay posts to Nathaniel Jones. The deed provided that Lampson would pay all wages to 1 January, of his “clerks, agents and workmen” at Esquimaux Bay.⁷

1835, Nathaniel Jones sold his Esquimaux Bay properties to David Ramsay Stewart.²

³ Keith to Simpson, 25 April, 1835.

1835, when the King's Posts were transferred to the Hudson's Bay Company in 1831, an agreement had been made with Lampson, then proprietor of certain posts in Esquimaux Bay District, whereby the parties reciprocally agreed not to interfere with the trades carried on at the King's Posts and at the Esquimaux Bay posts. When Lampson sold his Esquimaux Bay posts to Nathaniel Jones in 1835, the H.B. Co. claimed that this agreement “was Keith to Simpson, no longer in force.”³

⁴ Simpson to, Finlayson, 24 December, 1835.

1835, Sir George Simpson, Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company, instructed Finlayson that a post should be established in Esquimaux Bay District “alongside the frontier post from Esquimaux Bay where D. 1836, the Hudson's Bay Co. established a "petty post" at Rigolet and built "Fort Smith" at Northwest River "alongside" D. R. Stewart's post.⁷

As the H.B. Co.'s principal establishment, Fort Smith, is what is now known as North West River post, this demonstrates that this was the site of the principal establishment of D. R. Stewart. The evidence already cited also indicates that, except, possibly, for a short time during the war between Great Britain and France, and immediately thereafter, this site had been continuously occupied since the widow Fornel and associates had established themselves in the district in 1749. It is probable also that it had been occupied since 1743, the year that the Pilotes established this post for Fornel.

1836, a trader named Bird had a post at Kinimish (Kenemich). In addition to Northwest River, there were also posts at "Moolagan" (Mulligan) and "Grand River" (Hamilton River). In 1836, the Hudson's Bay Company established an outpost on the Hamilton river (at Sandy Banks ?) above their opponents and also built an outpost on the Northwest river.⁸ McLean's account indicates that the latter was a short distance from the head of Grand Lake, probably near the end of the portage from lake Nipishish.⁹

1837, Stewart's actions indicate that he considered the agreement between Lampson and the Hudson's Bay Co. to be still in force and that he regarded the latter's invasion of the Esquimaux Bay region as a breach of faith.¹⁰ The dispute, however, was terminated by the purchase of Stewart's posts by the Hudson's Bay Co. in 1837.¹¹

1840, the principal posts of the Hudson's Bay Company in Esquimaux Bay district were : Rigolet, North West River, Kaipokok and Aillik.¹

Terre Ferme de Mingan Seigniory.

1661, the Compagnie de la Nouvelle France, also known as the Compagnie des Cent Associés, granted to Francois Bissot de la Rivière, “l’Isle aux Oeufs, située an dessous de Tadoussac, vers les Montpellès, du Coste du Nord, quarante lieues ou environ dud. Tadoussac, avec le droit et faculté de chasse et d’établir en terre ferme aux endroits qu’il trouvera plus commodes, la penuche sédentaire des loups marins, baleines, marsouins, et les autres négoce, depuis la dite Isle aux Oeufs jusqu’aux Sept Isles et dans la Grande anse, vers les Esquimaux ou les Espagnols font ordinairement in pesche.”⁸

⁸ Aveu et déclaration executée before Chartier, at Quebec,
11 February, 1668.

The original document was destroyed by fire but, in 1668, Bissot made an “aveu” to the Compagnie des Indes Occidentales, the successors of the Compagnie de in Nouvelle France, setting forth the grant made to him by the last-named Company in 1661. This aveu has been preserved and throughout the legal proceedings respecting the title to Terre Ferme de Mingan seigniory, it was treated as containing a correct statement of the original grant.

It was not disputed that this grant gave to Bissot the seigniory of the Isle aux Oeufs. Later, however, the owners of the Terre Ferme de Mingan Seigniory contended that this grant gave a seigniory not only in the Isle aux Oeufs but also on the mainland from the isle aux Oeufs to Bradore bay at the western entrance to the strait of Belleisle.

Isle d'Anticosti Seigniory.

1676, The King granted to Medard Chouart des Groseliers and Pierre Esprit de Radisson, the exclusive seal fishing of Anticosti island for 20 years (1676-1696). He also granted them permission to take white porpoises in the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Anticosti, the grant to be void if the fishing were not carried on continuously.¹

¹ Concession by the King to Radisson and Groseliers, 29 April, 1676.

1680, Duchesneau granted to Louis Jolliet “en titre de fief, seigneurie, haulte, moyenne, et basso justice, l'Isle d'Anticosti,” subject to the condition of “foi et hommage,” also that he keep “feu et lieu.”²

² Grant by Duchesneau to Jolliet, March, 1680.

1675, Louis Jolliet, seignior of Anticosti and co-seignior of Isles et Islets de Mingan, married Claire-Francoise daughter of Francois Bissot, grantee of Isle-aux-Oeufs seigniory. Bissot having died, Jolliet acquired through his wife, an interest in Bissot's grant.

From the date of this grant, 1680, the interests of the proprietors of Anticosti, Isles de Mingan and Terre Ferme de Mingan are inextricably interwoven and have, therefore, been considered under a combined heading (see below).

³ Grant by Deschesneau to Jolliet and La Lande, 10 March, 1679.

Islets et Islets de Mingan Seigniory

1679, Intendant Deschesneau granted to Jacques de la Lande and Louis Jolliet “en titre de fief, Seignerie, haulte, Moyenne et Basse Justice, les Isles, et Islets appellée Mingan etans de Costé du Nord, et qui se suivent jusqu'à la Baye appellée Lance aux Espagnols.”³

Lalande, in 1675, had married Marie Couillard, widow of Francois Bissot de la Rivière, son of the grantee of Isle-aux-Oeufs (Terre Ferme de Mingan), and had thus acquired an interest in said grant.

Similarly, Jolliet, as the husband of Bissot's daughter, Claire-Francoise Bissot, had also acquired an interest in Isle-aux-Oeufs.

As Jolliet was also co-seignior of Isles et Islets de Mingan, the seigniories of Terre Ferme de Mingan, Isles et Islets de Mingan and Anticosti have been dealt with under the combined head.

HISTORY OF TERRE FERME DE MINGAN, ISLES ET ISLETS DE MINGAN AND ISLE D'ANTICOSTI SEIGNIORIES.

Bissot, in 1661, on receiving the grant of Isles aux Oeufs, with the right to make establishments on the “terre ferme,” established himself at what is now Mingan village and erected other establishments on the mainland, the most easterly being at “Ouramane” (Olomanoshibo) river.

Limits of Bissot's grant and of Isles et Islets de Mingan.

Bissot's concession extended eastward “jusqu'aux Sept Isles et dans la Grande anse, vers les Esquimaux ou les Espagnols font ordinairement la pesche.”

The Isles et Islets de Mingan seigniority extended eastward to “la Baye appelée Lance aux Espagnole.”

The similarity of verbiage practically demonstrates that both grants extended to the Baye des Espagnols. A critical examination of the available evidence discloses the identity of baye des Espagnols with present Bradore bay.

Having considered the early history of the Terre Ferme, Isles de Mingan and Anticosti seigniories, and the interlocking ownership thereof, it remains to consider their later history.

History, 1682 to 1760.

1682, a large portion of the lower town of Quebec was burnt. The titles, documents and records of the Bissot family were destroyed.¹

1696, Marie Couillard, owner of a half interest in the “terres de Mingan tant terre ferme que isles,” entered into partnership for three years with Francois Vianney Pachot to trade and fish therein.²

1709, Jean Baptiste Bissot de Vincennes transferred to Francois Bissonet all his rights and claims to a contingent share in the estate of Francois Bissot de la Rivière. This is the first claim that has been noted as asserting extensive limits for the Bissot grant. The deed purports to transfer a share of a concession which extends from “l'isle aux Oeufs jusqu'aux Blanes Sablons, avec toutes les iles de Mingan et autres contenues dans toute la dite tendue.”³

1713, the palace of the Intendant, at Quebec, was burnt and almost all the registers of the Conseil d'Etat were destroyed.

1726, Francois Brissonet transferred to Jacques Pichot the whole of his contingent share of the estate of Bissot de la Riviere, acquired by Brissonet from Bissot de Vincennes in 1709.⁴

1733, the heirs of Bissot and Jolliet, were brought before the Courts by Pierre Carlier, the Adjudicataire General. Carlier demanded that they produce the title by virtue of which they had taken possession of the extent of country occupied by them on the north shore of the St. Lawrence below the Moisie river.”⁵

Carlier, as Adjudicataire General, controlled the Domaine du Roy, which extended from Eboulemens Seigniorly to a point two leagues below Seven Islands, and therefore, included ile aux Oeufs, conceded to Bissot in 1661.

Carlier contended that, according to the strict language of the aveu of 1668, Bissot was only granted the ile aux Oeufs itself. And that, in fact, the Compagnie de la Nouvelle France could not give the right of property on the mainland between ile aux Oeufs and Seven Islands, because, in 1653, the Domaine reserve had been declared to extend to a point two leagues below Seven Islands.

p. 3146

While not contesting Bissot's right of property in the ile aux Oeufs, earlier did contest it as respects the mainland between ile aux Oeufs and the river Moisie, which is at a point two leagues below Seven Islands. In support of that contention, he urged that that portion of the mainland had previously been reserved for the Domaine, and that the language of the aveu did not comprise any right of property on the mainland. He, therefore, prayed for a declaration that the Domaine included that portion of the mainland, extending from ile aux Oeufs to the river Moisie.

The heirs Bissot and Jolliet answered that they did not use that portion of the mainland, and they were willing to abandon it, in order to avoid litigation and the creation of trouble to the Domaine du Roy.¹

Thereupon, Hocquart, by an ordinance duly made, re-united to the Domaine du Roy the land granted to Sieur Bissot (“le terrain concede au Sieur Bissot”) from ile aux Oeufs to cape Cormorant, a prominent point below the river Moisie. And, as to the claim of the Bissots to the remainder of the mainland, Hocquart referred them to the King for a new title.²

1733, following the decision of Intendant Hocquart, Francois Bissot the second, by a petition to the King, applied for the new title suggested by Hocquart. Bissot, in his petition, sets forth his claim to the title applied for. He states that, for 60 years, he, and his father before him, had continuously resided on the concession, and operated it in all its extent, by posts subsidiary to the main post of Mingan ; that the English had burnt his buildings three times, and that he had rebuilt them ; that the western part of the concession as far as cape Cormorant, had been re-united to the Crown ; and he asks for a new title to confirm him in the remainder.³

He complains of the invasion of the eastern end of his grant by new concessions made west of the Baye des Espagnols [Bradore Bay], referring to the grants that had been made in that area, including that of Lafontaine which was bounded on the west by the Etamamu river.

³ Petition of Bissot to Maurepas, 1733; quoted in Labrador Co. vs. The Queen; in the Privy Council. Defendants exhibit. A3, pp. 243-244.

He states that he would be satisfied, even if, in granting the new title, the King should restrict his property to the boundary of the Lafontaine grant; in other words, to time river Itamamiou (Etamamu), and he sums up his representations by saying:—

“Il luy bien triste, qu'apres une possession de soixante-dix ans de s'en voir dépouiller petit à petit. L'acte de foy et hommage dont il a honneur de joindre copie collationnée, prouve que ce terrain a été concédé a son père et il supplie qu'il sur ses vieux jours goûter la tranquillité que ces travaux dans des semblables endroits pouvaient lui permettre.”

1736, by an ordinance, issued by Hocquart at the instance of d'Haudebourg, part-owner and lessee of Mingan, Brouague, concessionaire of Baye-de-Phelypeau, was forbidden to trade within the limits of “Mingan et dependences.”¹

1733, the Comte de Maurepas wrote Beauharnois and Hocquart asking for additional information and for confirmation of the statements made by Bissot in his petition in 1733.²

³ Maurepas to Beauharnois and Hocquart, 21 April, 1739.

1739, Maurepas wrote Beauharnois and Hocquart that, as the Bissots had traded, hunted and fished “sans aucun trouble dans une étendue de côte de prés de cent cinquante lieues, il est juste d'avoir égard à toutes ces circonstances, et elles m'auraient déterminé à proposer au Roy de confirmer les heritiers Bissot dans la possession d'une partie de cette étendue de côte et de fixer leur état.”

⁴ Brevet de confirmation by the King, 13 April, 1740.

Maurepas stated that he would recommend that the concession be limited to the coast between the Domaine du Roy and Lafontaine's concession, with such depth as Beauharnois and Hocquart recommend.³

⁵ Ordinance by Hocquart, 4 October, 1743.

1740, the King, in confirming the grant of Gros-Mecatina and its augmentation, excluded the islands opposite. As the original grant included these islands in Gros-Mecatina concession, this was virtually an acknowledgment that these islands had been found to be included in Isles de Mingan seigniory.⁴

⁶ Ordinance by Hocquart, 30 December, 1743.

1743, an ordinance by Hocquart fixed the rental of these islands at three per cent upon the seals taken by the concessionaires of Gros-Mecatina. The seigniors of Isles et Islets de Mingan were also empowered to exact the same rental from other holders of concessions on the mainland opposite their seigniory.⁵

⁷ Deed executed, before Barolet, at Quebec, 9 September, 1745.

1743, Hocquart fixed the amount due to Lafontaine, as rental of the islands opposite Gros-Mecatina, at 5096 livres for the preceding four years.⁶

1745, Charles Jolliet, as part-owner of Mingan, leased his interest to Jean Lefebvre for three years, (1745 to 1748).⁷

The history of the Isles et Islets de Mingan down to 1763, is summarised by Lafontaine in a memoir which accompanied his letter to the Earl of Halifax.⁸

Lafontaine states that Jolliet and Lalande developed the seal fisheries Halifax, of the islands; that these fisheries were continued by their heirs and representatives; that sedentary fisheries were established by Lafontaine and that he was the first to establish such fisheries.

Lafontaine further states that the title to the islands was not challenged till 1739, when Pommereau applied for a concession of Gros-Mecatina; that the concession was granted, Beauharnois and Hocquart being ignorant of the extent of Isles et islets de Mingan; that, upon the petition of the seigniors, Beauharnois and Hocquart fixed the rental payable by concessionaires of the mainland opposite to Isles et Islets de Mingan, at 12 livres for each league of islands occupied by said concessionaires and that, in 1743, the rental was increased to three per cent of the produce from the islands occupied.

Halifax,

Lafontaine, in his memorial, also refers to the continuity of fishing and hunting operations in the Terre Ferme de Mingan, Anticosti, and Isles et Islets de Mingan seigniories and his statement may be summed up as an assertion that, from the date of the grant, 1680, the fisheries and hunting of Anticosti had been continuously operated by heirs Jolliet and Lalande, or their lessees, constituting practically the same interests as operated the Terre Ferme and Isles et Islets de Mingan seigniories.¹

BRITISH REGIME

Terre Ferme de Mingan Seigniority.

Lafontaine, in 1763, stated that:²

(1) Bissot de la Rivière operated Mingan from 1661 till his death (in 1678 ?)

(2) His eldest son, Francois Bissot, operated Mingan for 40 years after his father's death (1678 to 1718), jointly with his brother-in-law, Louis Jolliet, who had married Claire-Francoise Bissot in 1673. Since that date (1718), it had been held jointly by the heirs of Francois Bissot and Jolliet.

(3) 1733, Bissot leased Mingan to his son-in-law, Jacques de Lafontaine, who operated it for one year.

(4) 1734, Bissot leased Mingan to Volant d'Haudebourg, who operated it for 21 years (1740-1761).

(5) Mingan was burnt by the English in 1690, 1711, and 1769 (an error for 1759).

(6) 1761, it was leased to Joseph Isbister for nine years (1761-1770).

(7) That General Murray had forced the Bissot and Jolliet heirs to give a lease of Terre Ferme de Mingan to Isbister.

(8) That the Terre Ferme de Mingan seigniory extended from cape Cormorant to the Ouramaie (Olomanoshibo) river; that, at the last-named point, the ancestors of the seigniors had always had their most easterly establishment and that it was still (1763) in operation.

Isles de Islets de Mingan Seigniory.

Lafontaine, in 1763, stated that:³

(1) In 1679, Isles et Islets de Mingan seigniory was conceded to Jolliet and Lalande.

(2) That it extended eastward to the “Bale des Espagnols, appelée aujourd’huy la Baye Phillippeaux ou la Brador”.

(3) That the concession had been developed by Jolliet and Lalande and their heirs.

(4) That no question respecting their ownership of the islands had arisen until Pommereau, in 1739, obtained a grant of Gros-Mecatina concession. That, owing to their ignorance that the islands opposite Gros-Mecatina were included in Isles de Mingan seigniory, Beauharnois and Hocquart included said islands in the Pommereau grant.

(5) That, in ordinances of later date, fixing the rent payable to the seigniors of the Isles et Islets de Mingan, Hocquart had acknowledged the heirs Jolliet and Lalande to be the proprietors of said islands and had ordered the concessionnaires of the mainland to pay rental for the islands opposite their concessions.

(6) That, since 1743, the widow Pommereau and her successors in title to Gros-Mecatina, had paid three per cent per annum as rental for the islands opposite Gros-Mecatina.

(7) That, as John Gray had acquired Gros-Mecatina, he was unquestionably subject to the payment of said rental.

(8) That Lafontaine, as donee of the Sieur Lalande and of an heiress of Jolliet, had established fisheries thirty years earlier (1733) on such islands as seemed to him suitable.

Ile d' Anticosti Seigniory.

Lafontaine, in 1763, stated that:¹

(1) Anticosti island was granted to Jolliet in 1680.

(2) That Lafontaine held an interest as donee of an heiress of Jolliet.

(3) That this year (1763) General Murray had refused him a permit to send a vessel to Anticosti to make timber and take seals.

Respecting the various charges made by Lafontaine, Murray says that:²

(1) As to the charge that he hindered the heirs Bissot and Jolliet operating Mingan in 1761, that he does not remember any application of this nature, and that the few heirs present in Quebec would have been unable to finance it and that he would have refused such permission as the situation of the British was such that they could allow no one to “frequent those parts but such as we could confide in.”

(2) Respecting the charge that he forced Lafontaine and Taché to give a lease of Mingan to Isbister, Murray states that he understood that Lafontaine “was well pleased with the bargain;” that he had proposed it himself and that it was a most advantageous bargain for the lessors.

(3) Respecting the charge that he deprived Lafontaine of Gros-Mecatina, Murray says that, as he was assured that the grant of Gros-Mecatina to Hocquart was illegal, in 1761, he gave it to Lafontaine for one year only, and then only “out of pure Charity”; that he would have renewed the grant had he not found that Lafontaine was assisting “Privateers and Pirates”; that, consequently it “became expedient to take” Gros-Mecatina from him and give it to “Gray, in whom I could confide”; that Gray's partner, Wm. Grant, held Lafontaine's receipt for the three per cent rental and that the payment thereof had been ordered by Murray.

Terre Ferme de Mingan, Isles Et Islets de Mingan and Ile d'Anticosti Seigniories.

1761, Lafontaine de Belcour and Jean Taché, as part-owners of Terre Ferme de Mingan and also acting for their co-proprietors, leased Mingan for nine years (1761 to 1770) to Joseph Isbister.¹

² Proclamation by Hugh Palliser 8 April, 1765.

1765, Hugh Palliser, Governor of Newfoundland, issued a proclamation stating that the “property of all the Land on the said Coast of Labradore and the Islands of Anticosty and Madaline, is in the Crown, and since the Conquest thereof no part of it has been lawfully given or granted away; and no Power being vested in me, to give or grant any exclusive Possession or Privilege to any Persons whatever. . . . In order to invite Adventurers into that extensive field for Fishery and Trade—I hereby Order and direct, That the whole shall be publick and free to all the King's British Subjects in Preference to all others.”²

³ Declaration executed before Saillant, at Quebec, 2 November, 1765.

1765, Cugnet, as having married Marie-Josophe Bissot de la Fontaine, Guillaume Guillemin, as guardian of the heirs of Charlotte Bissot, in her lifetime wife of Jacques Bellecourt de la Fontaine, and other co-proprietors of the Terre Ferme de Mingan, Isles de Mingan and Anticosti appeared before notary Saillant, with ten “Bourgeois et anciens notables” of Quebec. These persons signed a notarial declaration that the heirs Bissot, Jolliet and Anticosti were owners of and had, for time immemorial, enjoyed peaceable and continuous possession of “la terre forme du Poste de Minguan,” and of the “Isles et Islets appellés Minguan et de l'Isle d'anticosty and that they had always kept “feu et lieu” in said posts.²

1766, Cugnet and Tache, acting on their own behalf and as representatives of other proprietors of the “Poste, fief et seigneurie de la terre ferme de Mingand,” with twelve “anciens Bourgeois et notables” of Quebec signed a notarial declaration that “les heritiers Joliet Mingand sont réellement propriétaire de la dite terre ferme appellée communément la seigneurie et poste de Mingand;” that they had enjoyed peaceable possession from time immemorial; that they had always kept “feu et lieu” and had fished, hunted and traded with the Indians in virtue of the deeds of concession which Cugnet and Taché declared to have been destroyed by fire in 1713.¹

⁴ Recapitulation of proofs concerning the seigniorie; by Attorney General Maseres, 17 December, 1766.

1766, Cugnet and Taché petitioned in their own names and on behalf of their respective wives, and of 26 of their co-heirs, that they be confirmed in the possession of the “Terre Ferme de Mingan, de l’Isle d’Anticosty et des Isles et Islets de Mingan.” They complained that, although they had had peaceable possession of these seigniories for 104 years, the Government of Newfoundland had, by “Placards et des Menaces continuelles,” disturbed them in their possession; that said Government had compelled their lessee to take refuge within the limits of the province of Quebec, and that such actions destroyed the value of their seigniories and fisheries.²

1766, in November, Cugnet, with fourteen “anciens Bourgeois et Notables” of Quebec, declared that the heirs Jolliet were undoubtedly proprietors of Anticosti seigniorie.³

1766, at the request of Cugnet and Taché, Francois Maseres, Attorney General of Quebec, recapitulated the evidence they had adduced. Maseres stated that:⁴

(1) The Act of Notoriety by “the twelve antient Burgesses of Quebec” proves that the heirs Bissot and Jolliet had enjoyed “the post or settlement, called Mingan,” for an immemorial length of time but that this did not prove that it extended eastward beyond the “Ouramane”(Olomanoshibo) river.

(2) That, as the Isles et Islets de Mingan seigniorie extended to Bradore bay, it afforded a presumption that the Terre Ferme de Mingan extended eastward to the same point.

(3) The ordinance of 1743 ordering the widow Pommereau to pay three per cent rental to the heirs of Jolliet and Lalonde proves that the Terre Ferme extends at least as far as the eastern boundary of Gros-Mecatina.

(4) The grant of St. Modet to Taché in lieu of Gros-Mecatina is an acknowledgement of Taché’s claim to Gros-Mecatina, that is, of the claim of the heirs Bissot and Jolliet,” in whose name and by whose consent, Taché desired to be put in possession of it.

(5) That proofs (3) and (4) concerning Gros-Mecatina “relate equally to both the Seigniories of Mingan, that of the Mainland and that of the Isles and Islets.”

(6) “Cape Cormorant is now, and has been for these thirty years, the Western Boundary” of the Terre Ferme and Islets de Mingan seigniories.

Taché and the Opinion of Maseres. He points out that “the Canadians of all Men seem to be best calculated for carrying on the Winter Seal Fishery,” the season extending from the middle to the end of December, a season when the inclemency of the weather necessitates permanent establishments to house and protect the fishermen; that the winter fishery would not interfere with the cod fishery or the taking of whales; he feared that debarring them from it will result in “a total Loss of that valuable Branch of Commerce to the Mother Country;” that, owing to the custom of the country, the grants were “divided every Descent, so that what at first was solely held by two or three Grantees, is now parcelled out among thirty families all British subjects resident in the province of Quebec.¹

17 January, 1767.

Carleton also transmitted a petition of some of the principal merchants of Quebec relative to these fisheries, “which are considered here as a Matter of most important concern to this Province.”

1767, the heirs Bissot and Jolliet, claiming to be Seigneurs of Terre Ferme de Mingan, Isles et Islets de Mingan and Anticosti “depuis plus d'un siecle,” and Jean Taché, owner of St. Modet concession, petitioned the King that they be maintained in possession of their respective properties. They stated that the Proclamation of 1763 placed the greater portion of their seigniories under the Government of Newfoundland; that, in 1765, the vessels sent with supplies for their posts were ordered back to Quebec by a frigate, although said vessels were provided with passports; that the lessee of Mingan seigniority had been forced to take refuge in the province of Quebec to the considerable prejudice of said heirs; that over 500 French-Canadians had thus been deprived of their usual occupation and that considerable loss had been sustained by the people of Quebec province through the loss of their fisheries. They petitioned for peaceable enjoyment.²

² Heirs Bissot and Jolliet to Shelburne,
24 February, 1767.

1767, Cugnet and Taché, as attorneys for the owners of Terre Ferme de Mingan, Isle de Mingan and Anticosti, state that Jean Lymburner, who had leased part of these seigniories—though he had not paid any rent for three years—had seized two posts not included in his lease on the ground that his vessel, coming from London, had arrived first.³

³ Petition by Cugnet, at Quebec,
12 November, 1767.

1767, Carleton transmitted to Shelburne the petitions of Cugnet and Taché. He states that they consider it a particular hardship that “a British merchant of this Place, availing himself of the present Regulations, merely by the Arrival of his Vessell from Europe first upon that coast should reap all the advantages of the Winter Fishery, at the same time that, in order to be enabled so to do, he is under a necessity to hire Canadians, employ Craft, and send down Provisions from hence.

“They consider, that whether these Winter Fisheries are carried on by the Grantees, their Lessees or ships arriving from Europe, the Equipments are British and the Returns sent to Britain. It is therefore not a little grating to the Canadian Grantees, to be debarred from what their Ancestors uninterruptedly possessed from Generation to Generation for near one hundred years past, while Britain can reap no greater advantage therefrom, than if they continued in peaceable Possession of the same . . . If matters remain upon the present Footing, several decent Families of this Province will be . . . reduced to the Greatest Poverty and Distress.”¹

² Petition by Taché, at Quebec, 12 November, 1767.

1767, Taché states that John Ord, the lessee of Taché's concession of St. Modet, had seized this post in collusion with the officers of the government of Newfoundland (“s'est approprié le dit Poste de Saint-Modet, d'intelligence avec les Officiers du Gouvernement de Terre Neuve”) who, under a pretence of maintaining order, were ruining him.²

Taché requests that he be maintained in peaceable possession of St. Modet and that other former subjects of France who held concessions on the “cote du Nord” be also protected.

³ Opinion of De Grey and Willes, 5 January, 1768.

1768, Attorney General De Grey and Solicitor General Willes rendered an Opinion to the Lords of Trade respecting the claims of the seigniors of Terre Ferme de Mingan, Isles et Islets de Mingan and Anticosti.³

They criticise Maseres' statements as appearing to be “a plea in favour of the requests of Messrs. Cugnet and Taché, on their behalf,” and not a report that “he has made in his capacity as Advocate General.” They conclude that the evidence adduced does not constitute a clear title.

Respecting the Terre Ferme de Mingan, they state that, if the original title was burned in 1662, and the registers and archives were burned in 1713, the claimants should obtain a copy from the Chambre des Comptes, in Paris, and that the limits of the seigniority would appear to be from the river St. John to the L'ouramand (Olomanoshibo).

Respecting the Isles de Mingan, they say that the only title fyled is a copy of the declaration registered at Quebec in 1738.

Respecting Anticosti, they say that the evidence consists of an “old parchment, which is supposed to be a copy of the register of Quebec, signed by the chief clerk of the Superior Council, 60 years ago,” but that it does not appear that the grant was ratified by the King and they enquire: “Why has not the investigation been made at Paris, so as to ascertain the title thereof and the confirmation?”

Taché died in April, 1768, and there is a note attached to the Opinion to the effect that, therefore, the question of the ownership of Saint-Modet is no longer in question.

The seigniors replied that they had had peaceable possession of the Terre Ferme de Mingan for more than a century, whereas 40 years' possession was sufficient to give them a title; that possession could readily be verified by the registers of passports of the Admiralty, granted, in remote times, to Bissot and Mingan for their seigniories, also several arrets of the Conseil Superieur, sentences of the Prevoté, etc.

As to the Isles de Mingan, they stated that the title had recently been found duly registered in the register of the Insinuations du Conseil Superieur.

As to Anticosti, this grant was also, doubtless, registered in the same register as the Isles de Mingan. The ratification of Anticosti was registered in Register "A" of the Conseil Superieur.

They again asked for peaceable possession; that the Governor of Newfoundland be prohibited from disposing of their properties; that they should be free to carry on the sedentary seal fishery without interference and that their property rights in the Terre Ferme, Isles de Mingan and Anticosti be assured to them.¹

1769, Antoine Belcour de Lafontaine sold his rights of succession to the Isles de Mingan, Chicataka, and Montagamiou to Antoine Gris .²

1771, Noel Alain and his wife, Marie-Genevieve Mingan, sold to Jean-Marie Alain and Pierre Alain all rights in Terre Ferme de Mingan and all other properties possessed by them.³

1771, The Council for Trade recommended that, in accordance with the representations of Governor Carleton, the said Governor should be authorized to grant "the lands remaining subject to His Majesty's disposal, in fief and seigniority . . . omitting in such grants haut, moyenne et basse justice."⁴

1771, the heirs Lalande and Jolliet leased the Isles de Mingan and Anticosti seigniories to Thomas Dunn and William Grant for fifteen years (1772-1787) for an annual rental of 600 shillings cy. and three per cent of the profit from the seal oil and seal skins taken or traded in the leased area.⁵

1772, Marie Bissot, widow of Francois Vedericque and grand-daughter of Bissot de la Riviere, sold to Thomas Dunn, her one-quarter interest in the "Seigneurie et fief de Mingan." The lease of the seigniorie to Isbister had previously been transferred by Isbister to Dunn and associates.⁶

1772, The Lords of Trade reported adversely to Hocquart's claim to Gros-Mecatina.⁷

1775, Pierre Marcoux, as attorney of Antoine Gris , sold to William Grant the rights of succession to the Isles de Mingan, Chicataka and Montagamiou, acquired by said arise in 1769, by purchase from Antoine Belcour de Lafontaine.⁸

1777, Magdelaine Belcourt de Lafontaine, daughter of Jacques Belcourt de Lafontaine and Charlotte Bissot, sold to Thomas Dunn all her rights and claims in the Isles de Mingan and Terre Ferme de Mingan seigniories.⁹

³ Act of “foy et hommage” before Haldimand 23 May, 1781.

1781, the registers of Faith and Homage contain an entry purporting to be the registration of an act of “foy et hommage” before Governor Haldimand, for the seigniorities of the Terre Ferme de Mingan, Isles de Mingan and Anticosti, by Francois Cugnet, as husband of Marie Joseph de Lafontaine de Belcour, Nicolas Joseph de Lafontaine de Belcour, Francois de Lafontaine de Belcour, William Grant and Thomas Dunn, claiming to be “propriétaires par indivis.”³

⁴ Decision of Privy Council in re Labrador Company, Defendant, and, The Queen, Plaintiff, 1892.

The Lords of the Privy Council, however, in The Queen vs. Labrador Company, state that, appended to this “document is a certificate of Cugnet himself (who appears to have held the office of Keeper of the Papier Terrier) that this foi et hommage had been presented; but it is not signed by the Governor, and therefore had no validity.” They also state that this “document contains two statements which are now known to be untrue.”⁴

1789, William Grant, Thomas Dunn and Peter Stuart agreed to unite their respective shares in the ownership of the seigniorships of Terre Ferme de Mingan, Isles de Mingan and Anticosti, the shares in the partnership to be as follows : Grant, one-half; Dunn and Stuart, one-quarter each. They declared that they owned practically the whole of these seigniorships.¹

The agreement recites that they have acquired all the shares except those owned by the Baron de Castlneau and his wife and of Gilles Belcourt de Lafontaine and the share sold by Joseph Belcourt de Lafontaine to Mathew Lymburner in 1788.

² Holland and Collins to Smith, 25 September, 1790.

1790, Surveyor General Holland and Deputy Surveyor General Collins stated that the Isles and Islets de Mingan seigniorship extended from the Isle aux Oeufs to the Ance des Espagnols ; that it was granted to Jacques de la Lande and Louis Jolliet, heirs of de la Lande, on 10 March, 1679, and that the grant was ratified 29 May 1680.²

Holland and Collins also stated that the Ile Anticosti seigniorship was granted to Louis Jolliet, March 1680, and that the grant was ratified, 29 May 1680.

1808, John Richardson, as curator of the estate of William Grant, deceased, sold the Isles de Mingan seigniory and also five forty-eighths, undivided, of St. Paul seigniory. The sale was made to Langan, Burns, Woolsey and Lymburner, in the proportion of Langan, one-half ; and Burns, one-sixth, Woolsey, one-sixth; Lymburner, one-sixth.¹

² Deed executed before Planté, at Quebec, 22 April, 1808.

Langan then sold to Richardson three-fourths of his rights and claims to aforesaid seigniories and posts, that is to say, three-eighths of Isles de Mingan, three-eighths of five forty-eighths of St. Paul and three-eighths of the fishing posts between Itamamiou and Anse-Sainte-Claire, retaining one-eighth of same for himself.²

³ Deed executed before Planté, at Quebec, 22 April, 1808.

1808, Richardson, Langan, Burns, Woolsey and Lymburner entered into partnership for 7 years (1807 to 1814), to trade and to operate the fishing establishments in Terre Ferme de Mingan, Isles de Mingan, and St. Paul and the posts between Itamamiou and Anse-Sainte-Claire, the partnership to be in the following proportions: Richardson, three-eighths; Langan, one-eighth; and Burns, Woolsey and Lymburner; one-sixth, each.

⁴ Deed of sale by the Sheriff of Quebec, 14 June, 1808

It was further stipulated that the “present company shall not be a general one but a private one under the name of Labrador new Concern.” Mathew Lymburner was appointed Agent and Manager.³

⁵ "Les Bourgeois de la Compagnie du Nord Ouest," vol. 11, pp. 448-453.

1808, the sheriff of Quebec sold to Patrick Langan, and John Blackwood, “one undivided third in the Fief and Seigniory of Mille Vaches. . . . And also an exact undivided half of the whole of the Fief and Seigniory of the Terre ferme de Mingan.” As Blackwood desired a separate title deed, the Sheriff deeded to Blackwood, one-half of an undivided third in the Fief and Seigniory of Mille Vaches and also one-half of an “exact undivided half of the whole of the Fief and Seigniory of the Terre ferme de Mingan.” He also deeded same to Langan.⁴

⁶ Extract from the Papier Terrier, 12 March, 1810.

1808, James McKenzie states that the North West Co. was operating Portneuf, Ile Jeremie, Godbout, Seven Islands, Mingan, Nepioshibu (Napesipi) and Masquaro posts.

He also says that Portneuf, Ile Jeremie. Mingan and Masquaro had chapels.⁵

⁷ Deed executed before Guy, at Montreal, 4 January, 1811.

1810, William Burns, in his own name and on behalf of his partners in the Labrador Company, performed faith and homage for their portion of Isles de Mingan seigniory and for live forty-eighths of St. Paul seigniory.⁶

⁸ Deed executed before Paterson at London, Eng. 14 March, 1823.

1811, John Richardson bought from Patrick Langan his one-eighth interest in the seigniory of the Isles et Islets de Mingan, thus acquiring, in all, an undivided one-half interest in same.⁷

1823, Under and by Virtue of the terms of the will of John Blackwood, the executors of said will deeded to John and Alexander Greenshields and Andrew Weir, “one undivided sixth part” of and in the seigniorship of Mille Vaches and “one undivided fourth part” of Terre Ferme de Mingan seigniorship.⁸

p. 3160

1825, The lease of Terre Ferme de Mingan expired in 1822 but, presumably, the Hudson's Bay Company, as the successors to the North West Company, continued to hold under the old lease for three years (1822–1825). In 1825, John Richardson, John Greenshields, Alex. Greenshields, the heirs of Peter Stuart and the heirs of Thomas Dunn, claiming to be proprietors of Terre Ferme de Mingan seigniorship, leased said seigniorship to the Hudson's Bay Company for 20 years (1822–1842) for £500 cy. per annum. From 1842 to 1866, the Hudson's Bay Company continued as tenants of this seigniorship.¹

² Deed executed before Macpherson, at Quebec, 28 June, 1826.

1826, Alexander Greenshields conveyed to John Greenshields “one undivided third part” of “the one undivided sixth part of the seigniorship or fief of Mille Vaches,” also of the “one undivided fourth part of the seigniorship or fief of Terre Ferme de Mingan.”²

³ Deed executed before Macpherson, at Quebec, 3 November, 1828.

1828, John Weir and his wife, Helen Blackwood Weir, conveyed to Thomas Weir, one-third part of “the one undivided sixth part” of Mille Vaches and one-third part “of the one undivided quarter” of the seigniorship of Terre Ferme de Mingan.³

⁴ Wm. Smith to Keith, 14 January, 1832.

1832, The Hudson's Bay Company authorised James Keith “to make proposals to Mr. H. G. Forsyth and the other proprietors of the [Anticosti] Island to take a lease of it.”⁴

⁵ Deed executed before Griffin, at Montreal, 8 February, 1836.

1836, John Wm. Woolsey, Mathew Lymburner, the heirs of John Richardson and the executors of the will of Wm. Burns sold the seigniorship of Isles et Islets de Mingan to the Hudson's Bay Company for £1,000 cy. Of the proprietors, one-half appertained to the heirs of John Richardson and one-sixth to each of the others.⁵

⁶ Deed executed before Taylor, at West Flamboro, 3 August, 1837.

1837, James Weir sold to John B. Weir all his rights and claims to parts of the seigniorships of Terre Ferme de Mingan and Mille Vaches.⁶

⁷ Extract from the Papier Terrier, 9 October, 1837.

1837, John Greenshields, as owner of two undivided third parts of a sixth part of Mille Vaches and of two undivided third parts of a quarter of Terre Ferme de Mingan and James Weir, as owner of the other third of a sixth part of Mille Vaches and

1856, The Seigniorial Amendment Act provided that : “Inasmuch as the following the Fiefs and Seigniories, namely : Mingan and the Island of Anticosti are not settled the casual and other rights of the Crown in the said seigniories shall be ascertained and entered in the schedule of the seigniory.”²

1859, G. Okill Stuart, representing General Dunn, a proprietor of a large portion of Terre Ferme de Mingan, Mille Vaches and Portneuf, wrote the Commissioner of Crown Lands that “the rights of the proprietors of these seigniories were interfered with, by the Crown, some years ago, in granting the license of the King's Posts to Mr. Goudie. Heavy claims for indemnity were in consequence preferred by him, against the Crown.....I have deemed it expedient to bring these seigniories under your notice, so that the Crown may not interfere with the rights of the proprietors by their contemplated mode of granting licenses” for the occupation of “inferior coast fishing stations” on the St. Lawrence.³

1859, on behalf of the Hudson's Bay Company, James Anderson protested to Stipendiary Magistrate Fortin, “against the legality of the licenses issued this summer, to various individuals to fish” the St. John river within the limits of Terre Ferme de Mingan seigniory, on the ground that said company as lessees of said seigniory, held the “exclusive rights of hunting, farming, fishing and trading with the Indians” within its limits.⁴

⁴ Anderson to Fortin, 21 August, 1859.

⁵ Whitcher to Commissioner of Crown Lands, 24 September, 1860.

1860, W. F. Whitcher wrote the Commissioner of Crown Lands that the “Crown contends that the River Goynish or Agwanus forms” the east limit of Terre Ferme de Mingan seigniory.⁵

Whitcher suggested that “it might be deemed just and expedient to accept the Seigniors', offer of executing fishery leases with the Crown, conditioning that the present occupiers shall be dealt with by sub-lease.”

1860, Col. Wm. Denny, representing one-fourth share of Terre Ferme de Mingan and one-sixth of Mille Vaches, “by marriage into the family of the late Hon. John Richardson,” tendered, on behalf of his co-seigniors, for the net and rod fishing in Terre Ferme and Mille Vaches seigniories. He stated that his offer was made “without prejudice to the rights of the seigneurs to claim compensation for the loss of the exclusive right over those fisheries.”⁶

1866, N. F. Belleau, Counsel for the Attorney General of Lower Canada, recommended in an Opinion : That the eastern boundary of Terre Ferme de Mingan “be established with the co-operation of the proprietors at the request of the Crown.” He pointed out that, if the seigniors refuse to admit that the Goynish river is the eastern boundary, they will “have to show where is the Grande Anse towards the Esquimaux. where the Spaniards formerly used to fish.”³

³ Belleau to Attorney General,
20 November,
1866

Pending such action as suggested above. Belleau recommended that the proclamation erecting Duval township be not issued.

1866, the lease of Terre Ferme de Mingan was terminated in this year. By a new agreement, the area leased to the Hudson's Bay Co. was reduced to the post of Mingan and a tract of about six square miles surrounding it. In 1873, said lease was still running.⁴

- ⁹ Judgment of Superior Court of Quebec, 18 September, 1858. 1891, The Court of the Queen's Bench rendered judgment in re the appeal of The Queen and the Labrador Company against the decision of Justice Routhier in the Superior Court. The judgment stated that the terms of 19-20 Vic., chap. 53, 1856, commonly known as the Seigniorial Tenure Act, expressly recognised the existence of a seigniory of Terre Ferme de Mingan and made provision for the cadastre of same ; that Henry Judah, a Seigniorial Tenure commissioner, had made a cadastre of said seigniory, and had described the limits of same ; that said cadastre had not been contested ; that said actions had definitely determined and established the rights of the Labrador Company, and had, virtually established a seigniory which, thitherto, had been non-existent ; and that the judgment of the Superior Court was confirmed, the seigniory of Terre Ferme de Mingan to include an area two leagues in depth and extending from cape Cormorant to the river Agwanus or Goynish.¹⁰

¹⁰ Judgment of the Court of the Queen's Bench, 6 February, 1891.

¹ Decision of Privy Council in re the Labrador Company defendant, and The Queen, plaintiff.

1892, in re the appeal of the The Queen vs. Labrador Company, the Imperial Privy Council stated that : “In an action of ejectment by the Crown, it appeared that the appellant company derived title through a grant made in 1661 by the French Government which gave no seigneurie over the land in suit but only a right to make establishments for hunting and fishing within certain limits” ; that an Ordonnance [by Hocquart] in 1733, together with the action of the French Crown thereunder, did not create or recognize any title in the heirs of the grantee to such seigneurie ; that, down to 1854, there was no evidence of either its creation or recognition by the British Crown; but that, in 1854, the Canadian Act, 18 Vic., cap. 3 (amended by subsequent Acts,) recognized that there was a seigneurie of Mingan, being part of the disputed land the boundaries whereof were conclusively established by a schedule authorized by the Acts.”¹

The Privy Council held that the Court of the Queen's Bench was right in confirming the title of the Labrador Company to the scheduled lands.

They concurred in the conclusion arrived at by Justice Routhier, namely, that “the territory in which the right to make establishments for fishing, etc., was granted by the Concession of 1661, did not extend further eastward than the River Goynish and that there is no foundation for the claim to extend it to Bradore bay” and that “the bay referred to in the grant of 1661 as that where the Spaniards ordinarily fished was not that which is now called Bradore bay, but was the one indicated as the Baye des Espagnols (mouth of Natashkwan river) on the map.” They observed, however, that this point was not important inasmuch as the “schedule drawn up by Mr. Judah is conclusive on the sub jet of boundary.”

² Ibid.

The Privy Council held, further, with regard to the claim of the Company to hold the whole of the land in suit by prescription and immemorial possession, that, inasmuch as it had disclosed the true root of its title, “there is no room for the application of the law of prescription.”²

³ Bacon to Dept of Justice Canada, 12 May 1921.

1921, the Secretary of the Labrador Company stated that the Company “is the owner of the Seigniorie of Mingan, which extends from Cape Cormorant to the liver Agwanus (Goynish), by two leagues in depth. . . . At present, we are only doing some salmon fishing We apply for fishing licenses to the Canadian Government.”³

PETIT-MECATINA CONCESSION

FRENCH REGIME

1740, Beauharnois and Hocquart granted to Henry Albert de St. Vincent, for nine years (1740 to 1749), Petit-Mecatina concession with a frontage of about seven leagues, a depth of four leagues and extending from the Pommereau concession (Gros-Mecatina) to the Lafontaine concession (Montagmiou), also the islands opposite said concession, with the exclusive light to take seals and to hunt and to trade with the Indians within the limits of said concession.¹

St. Vincent entered into partnership with Guillaume Estèbe for the operation of his concession, conceding to Estèbe a moiety thereof, the partnership to last for nine years, or, if extensions of the concession were granted, it was to continue in force during the period of such extensions.²

GROS-MECATINA CONCESSION

FRENCH REGIME.

1738, Beauharnois and Hocquart granted to Jean Baptiste

Pommereau for ten years (1738–1748), Gros-Mecatina concession extending from cape Gros-Mecatina and including the cape, five leagues northeastward on the north shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, by four leagues in depth and including the islands opposite, with the exclusive right to take seals, hunt and trade with the Indians, and permission to take fish concurrently with other French subjects.⁶

⁶ Concession by Beauharnois and Hocquart, 2 May, 1738.

1738, Hocquart issued an ordinance authorising Pommereau to establish sedentary fisheries on the islands opposite his concession, such permission being granted without prejudice to the rights and claims of Volant d'Haudebourg, lessee and part owner of Isles et Islets de Mingan seigniory.⁷

⁷ Ordinance by Hocquart, 25 September, 1758.

p. 3167

1739, Pommereau “subrogue en son lieu et place” to each of his partners, Guillaume Estebe and Daniel de Beaujeu, a one-quarter interest in Gros-Mecatina.¹

¹ Deed executed before Latour, at Quebec, 30 April, 1739.

1739, Beauharnois and Hocquart granted to Pommereau for nine years (1739 to 1748), an augmentation of his Gros-Mecatina concession. It extended northeastward about four leagues to the river Thekapoin, with a depth of four leagues, with the exclusive right to take seals and hunt and trade within the limits of his concession.²

² Concession by Beauharnois and Hocquart, 20 September, 1739.

1740, the King confirmed the grants of 1738 and 1739, but explicitly excluded the islands opposite, doubtless because it had been discovered that they were within the limits of Isles et Islets de Mingan seigniory.³

1742, sixteen men from Quebec and vicinity engaged themselves as employees in Gros-Mecatina concession.⁴

³ Brevet de confirmation by the King, 13 April, 1740.

⁴ Engagements executed before Boucault, at Quebec, 17 September, 1742.

1743, Beauharnois and Hocquart issued an ordinance regulating the respective rights of the concessionaires of the north shore of the gulf of St. Lawrence and the proprietors of Isles et Islets de Mingan seigniory. In 1739, they had fixed a rent of 25 livres per league of the islands conceded by the proprietors of the seigniory to the concessionaires of the mainland. In 1743, they fixed the rental to be paid to the seigniors of Mingan Islands seigniory at three per cent upon the total amount of seal oil and seal skins.⁵

⁵ Ordinance by Hocquart 4 October, 1743.

1743, Hocquart, by an ordinance, determined the amount owing by the widow Pommereau to Lafontaine and the Bissot heirs as owners of Mingan Islands seigniory for rental of the islands opposite Gros Mecatina. The owners of the seigniory were ordered “d'accorder Titre de Concession a la ditte veuve Pommereau des Isles, Islets et Battures qui se trouvent vis-à-vis” Gros-Mecatina.⁶

1749, An extension of six years (1748 to 1754) of Gros-Mecatina concession—including the Augmentation—was granted to Croisille de Montesson, au nom et comme avant epousé le veuve du Jean-Baptiste Pommereau,” and to Guillaume Estèbe.⁷

⁶ Ordinance by Beauharnois and Hocquart, 30 December, 1743.

1753, Maseres says that the widow Pommereau operated Gros-Mecatina till 1751 in which year Hocquart returned to France; that the seigniors of the Terre Ferme and of Isles et Islets de Mingan “obliged her to quit it, and it remained unoccupied for about two years”—till about 1753. Intendant Bigot, however, refused to allow the said seigniors to resume full possession.⁸

⁷ Concession by Galissonnière and Bigot, 1 May, 1749.

In accordance with the advice of Bigot, the seigniors authorised Tache who had married one of the co-heiresses of the Family,” and who was then going to France, to “endeavour to obtain an Order from him [the King] to have their right acknowledged and the Possession of the Post delivered to them.”

⁸ Maseres to Carleton, 3 January, 1767.

Taché obtained the promise, but, after his departure, the King, in 1754, was prevailed upon to grant it to Hocquart for his lifetime, subject to the payment of a rental of three per cent to the seigniors of the Terre Ferme and Isles et Islets de Mingan. Hocquart also agreed to surrender St. Modet to Taché.¹

1754, upon the strength of the promise he had received in 1753, Taché made preparations for Occupying and Improving” [sic.] Gros-Mecatina. However, he rented it from Hocquart in 1754 for a yearly rental of 7000 or 8000 livres paid to Hocquart, in addition to the rental of three per cent paid to the seigniors. Taché held it, as Hocquart's lessee, from 1754 to 1759.²

¹ Ibid.

1756, Estèbe, acting “pour ses associés cy-devant propriétaires” of Gros-Mecatina, sold to Pierre Revol, Alexandre Dumas and Sérvant Durand the buildings, fishing gear, etc., in the concession.³

1763, Lafontaine stated to the Earl of Halifax, Secretary of State, that, although Gros-Mecatina was Lafontaine's private property, Murray had made an absolute grant of it to John Gray and that such grant was made without any legal or regular examination of his title.⁸

⁷ Memoir by Hocquart,
6 March, 1763.

1764, Murray stated that : “I, out of pure Charity for Mr. Lafontaine and his family, gave him leave to occupy that post [Gros-Mecatina] for one year only. Had he behaved properly he might still have Possessed that Post.” But, as Lafontaine sheltered privateers at his posts, Murray says that “it, consequently, became expedient” to take Gros-Mecatina from him and give it to Gray in whom he could confide.⁹

⁸ Lafontaine to Halifax,
23 October, 1763.

Murray further says that Gray's partner, William Grant, paid Lafontaine “three per cent from the produce” of Gros-Mecatina and that, as Panet had assured him of the equity of Lafontaine's claim to the three per cent, he, Murray, had ordered payment thereof.

⁹ Murray to Halifax,

APETEPY (CHICATAKA) CONCESSION.
FRENCH REGIME

1738, Beauharnois and Hocquart granted Apetepy concession for ten years (1738 to 1748) to Francois Foucault and Nicolas-Gaspard Boucault. It comprised the frontage between Saint-Augustin and Baye-Phelypeau concessions by four leagues in depth, and also the islands opposite. It granted the exclusive right to take seals, hunt and trade with the Indians within the limits of the concession.¹

Beauharnois and Hocquart,
1 May, 1738.

Apetepy, as defined in this concession, is "l'Etendue de terrain le long de la cote du nord qui se trouve Entre les concessions des d. srs. La Valterie et De Berouague." It, therefore, purported to grant a strip four leagues wide which, in part, included a portion of the front of Saint-Paul seignior, granted in 1706, the remainder of said front portion being nominally included in Baye-des-Phelypeau concession and the augmentation thereto granted in 1722.

SAINT-PAUL SEIGNIORY.

FRENCH REGIME

1706, Vaudreuil and Raudot granted to Amador Godefroy, Saint-Paul seigniory, with a frontage of five leagues east and five leagues west of Quitzezaqui (Eskimo) river by ten leagues in depth, with the islands opposite, to have and to hold "en propriété a toujours a titre de fief et seigneurie, haute, moienne et basse justice" with the exclusive right of hunting, fishing and trading with the Indians within the limits of the seigniory except that other French subjects engaged in fishing should have access to the shore. The grant was subject to the performance of "foy et hommage" and was subject to the payment of the customary dues "suivant la coutume de Paris" and that the seignior should keep "feu et lieu."¹

¹ Concession by Vaudreuil and Raudot, 20 March, 1706.

1724, Joseph le Plé dit de Voisy performed "foy et hommage" as proxy for Amador Godefroy de Saint-Paul.²

As proxy, le Plé also "avoué et déclaré" that Godefroy held Saint-Paul seigniory from the King in accordance with the terms of the concession of 20 March, 1706.³

conditions of the partnership and, thereby, had caused them financial loss.⁷

1797, In March, McCullum sold his interest in the partnership with the Lloyds to Lymburner & Crawford.⁸

In April, the Lloyds made a formal demand upon McCullum that he provide a vessel and certain articles required for the fishing operations of the firm.⁹

Lymburner & Crawford notified Lloyds that, as they had acquired McCullum's interest, they would supply the requirements of the Lloyds.¹⁰

The Lloyds, however, refused to recognise the transfer and filed a formal protest.¹¹

1798, Lloyds entered an action in the court of the King's Bench against McCullum for breach of covenant. They claimed £3,000 damages.¹

1800, Nathaniel Lloyd protested against the salmon fishing that was being carried on by employees of Lymburner & Crawford on the Eskimo river.²

1801, Lymburner & Crawford purchased from Joseph Jutras his interest in St. Paul seigniority as heir of his father, Joseph Jutras, and of his mother, Marie-Anne Godefroy de St. Paul.³

1803, Nathaniel and Philip Lloyd entered suit against Wm. Grant, Mathew Lymburner and John Crawford. Lloyds claimed £10,000 damages for fish and fur-bearing animals taken within the limits of the seigniority, timber taken by them, etc.⁴

Lymburner and Crawford contended that, as seigniors of the Isles et Islets de Mingan seigniority, they had the right to take fish, seals, etc., and to cut wood on the islands opposite Saint-Paul seigniority and that, as owners of the shares purchased from Joseph and Antoine Jutras, they were entitled to cut wood on Saint-Paul seigniority.⁵

The Lloyds replied that, on 16 August, 1781, they had purchased the rights and claims of Marie Anne Godefroy de St. Paul, widow of Joseph Jutras and mother of Joseph and Antoine Jutras and had thus acquired the rights and claims of said Joseph and Antoine Jutras.⁶

1803, the Court of the King's Bench rendered an interlocutory judgment ordering that Lloyds and Lymburner, Crawford and Grant, name a surveyor who should "draw up a plan descriptive of the premises in contest between the parties and of their respective pretensions therein" and should report to the Court.⁷

⁹ Grants en Fief and Royal Ratifications of same; by Judge Dunkin, 1852.

¹⁰ Report of Dept. of Agriculture and Fisheries for 1862.

¹¹ Fyle No. 522
Dept. of Fisheries,

1808, the Sheriff of Quebec sold the interests of William Grant, deceased and of Charles William Grant in the fishing posts from Itamamiou to Anse-Sainte Claire to John Richardson, Mathew Lymburner and associates.¹

Richardson, as curator of the estate of William Grant, deceased, and Chas. Wm. Grant sold to Langan, Burns, Woolsey and M. Lymburner all their rights and claims in and on their posts and fishing establishments from Itamamiou, inclusive, to Anse Ste. Claire.²

John Richardson, as curator of the estate of William Grant, sold to Patrick Langan, Wm. Burns, John Wm. Woolsey and Mathew Lymburner all the rights and claims of William Grant in the undivided moiety of the Isles and Islets of Mingan seigniority and of five forty-eighths of Saint-Paul seigniority.³

Langan re-sold to John Richardson three-fourths of the moiety of Mingan Islands and of the moiety of five forty-eighths of Saint-Paul.⁴

1808, following the above sales and transfers, Richardson, Langan, Burns, Woolsey and Lymburner signed an acknowledgment that they had entered into an association on 15th September 1807, for seven years (1807-1814), to carry on the taking of seals, fishing, hunting, etc. on the "coast of Labrador." Mathew Lymburner was appointed manager. The partnership was divided as follows :—Richardson, three-eighths; Langan, one-eighth ; Burns, Woolsey and Lym burner, one-sixth each. The agreement provided that the association should be "a private one under the name of Labrador new Concern."⁵

1810, William Burns, on his own part and on behalf of his co-partners in the Labrador Company, performed faith and homage for "cinq quarante-huitièmes indivis dans la totalité du fief et Seigneurie de St. Paul."⁶

1811, Patrick Langan sold his interest in the Labrador Company to John Richardson.⁷

1823, the Labrador Company sold to Louis Chevalier five forty-eighths of Saint-Paul seigniority with the islands opposite it.⁸

1852, in a list of Seigniories in Lower Canada, prepared by Judge Dunkin for use before the Commission for commuting the Seigniorial tenure, St. Paul seigniority is enumerated.⁹

Stipendiary Magistrate Fortin states, in his report of 1862, that the Lloyds bequeathed their interests in Saint-Paul seigniority to their adopted son, Louis Chevalier ; that Chevalier died in 1846 and that, from 1849 to date of writing, Louis

Can.

Chevalier's grandson had operated the fisheries.¹⁰

1890, L. D. Chevalier, as owner of Saint-Paul, protested against the issuance of a fishing license to W. O. Carbonneau, empowering him to fish in St. Paul (Eskimo) river.¹¹

Carbonneau claimed to have acquired by purchase from the Quebec Government, both banks of the St. Paul and the ile a la Perche at its mouth.

No cadastre of Saint-Paul can be found at Quebec. This is strong proof that, owing to the failure to perform the duties or pay the fees prescribed in the grant, the Commissioners for commuting the Seigniorial tenure adjudged that the seigniors had lost title.

KESSESAKIOU—KEGASKA CONCESSION.

1701, Pierre Constantin, voyageur, signed an engagement to go to the Eskimo river as an employee of Legardeur de Courtemanche. Constantin engaged to hunt and to trade with the Eskimo. The indenture sets forth that Constantin had discovered the Eskimo river in 1700.¹

² Concession by de Callière and Beauharnois,
17 October, 1702.

1702, de Callière and Beauharnois granted to Augustin Legardeur de Courtemanche a concession extending from the Kegaska river to the Kessessakiou, which rivers “feront les deux bornes” of said concession, to have and to hold for ten years (1702 to 1712). It gave Courtemanche the exclusive right to take seals and trade with the Indians. The grant also recites that Courtemanche had already “fait un fort et un établissement” on the Eskimo river and within the limits of his concession.²

³ Memorandum executed at Quebec,
21 April, 1703.

⁴ Memoir by Courtemanche, 1705.

1703, Courtmanche gave Constantin written instructions to proceed to Eskimo river or beyond, to carry on trade with the Indians. The instructions indicate that Sieur Perret was in command of Courtemanche's fort near Eskimo river.³

1705, Courtemanche submitted to Raudot a memoir⁴ respecting his exploration of the coast from Kegaska river to the river Kessessakiou (Hamilton). It was an exhaustive report respecting the natural resources of his concession, its harbours and similar data.

⁵ Ibid.

Courtemanche stated that the Indians travelled into the interior by way of the St. Augustin river demonstrating that, within the limits of his grant, the St. Augustin and Kenamu canoe-route was then, as now, the principal route to the Hamilton river.

From Courtemanche's memoir, it is evident that his first fort was on what is now known as Old Fort bay, “une demie lieue” west of present Eskimo river. In 1705, he stated that he had commenced his second “établissement.” This was fort

Pontchartrain on baye Phelypeau (Bradore bay).⁵

Courtemanche reported that, at the river Kessessakiou (Rigolet “narrows”), salmon and seals were in abundance; that the Eskimo lived at that point because it afforded them in abundance everything they required for their subsistence; that they were becoming more peaceable and were beginning to trade with the French. He also stated that he had attracted from the interior a tribe of Indians who had not, thitherto, come in contact with the French, and, though he does not explicitly say so, who, doubtless, had never before come in contact with white men.⁵ These Indians were Montagnais or Naskapis or both. He stated that a missionary would have no trouble implanting Christianity among them.

Courtemanche,

1705, Courtemanche removed his headquarters from his fort near the Eskimo river to his new fort, fort Pontchartrain, on baye de Phelypeau (Bradore bay).⁶

⁴ Vaudreuil and Raudot, to Minister,
14 November, 1708.

1707 and 1708, the King granted an annual subsidy of 500 francs to Courtemanche. Vaudreuil and Raudot, writing in November, 1708, recommended Vaudreuil and that it be continued in the following years.⁴ Later, Courtemanche complained that his subsidy was three years in arrears.

BAYE-DE-PHELYPEAU CONCESSION.

The Kessessakiou-Kegaska concession to Augustin Legardeur de Courtemanche expired in 1712.

1714, the King granted to Courtemanche during his lifetime, “la baye de Phelypeaux” and “quatre lieues de front sur la dite coste,” to be taken two leagues above and two leagues below said bay by four leagues in depth, and the islands in said bay and opposite the coast thus granted, with the exclusive right to take seals and to fish concurrently with other French subjects, and to trade with the Indians.⁵

⁵ Concession by the King,
12 November, 1711.

⁶ Ordre du Roy,
12 November, 1714.

1714, the King also appointed Courtemanche to be

Commandant for the King on the coast of Labrador, with authority to settle all disputes that arose respecting “emplacements pour la pesche a la dite coste.”⁶

⁷ Courtemanche to the Minister, 13 September, 1716.

⁸ Ordre du Roy, 11 January, 1718.

1716, Courtemanche applied to Vaudreuil for permission to enlist 12 men and requested that an officer be sent with them to act as their commander. He proposed to send this force, with five Indian families, to garrison the fort he proposed to construct at the “rivière de Kescakiou” (Hamilton river), to overawe the Eskimo.⁷

Following Courtemanche's death in 1717, his stepson, Brouague, was appointed Commandant for the King on the coast of Labrador.⁸ Brouague continued Courtemanche's policy of endeavouring to conciliate the Eskimo and to open up trade with them.

⁹ Brevet de confirmation by the King, 11 January, 1718.

1718, the King granted Baye-de-Phelypeau concession in the proportions of : widow de Courtemanche, one-quarter ; Brouague, her son by her first marriage, one-quarter and the three daughters of Courtmanche one sixth each.⁹

In 1718 and later years, Brouague made annual reports respecting conditions on the coast. These reports show that he had achieved considerable success in his policy of conciliating the Eskimo ; that the instructions

p. 3177

contained in the letter from the Minister, 30 June 1707, instructing Vaudreuil and Raudot to send a missionary to Baye-de-Phelypeau had been carried out and that the missionary had been labouring among the natives ; that, on the average, about 25 vessels fished in the strait of Belleisle and near the western entrance thereof.¹

¹ Brouague to the Conseil de Marine, 9 Sept., 1718, 6 Sept., 1719, 27 Aug., 1720, 17 Sept., 1721, 15 Sept., 1722 and 20 Sept., 1729.

² Concession by the King, 13 July, 1722.

³ Brevet de confirmation by the King, 25 December, 1725.

1722, the King conceded an augmentation of Baye-de-Phelypeau concession extending five leagues westward from the original grant and four leagues in depth, also the islands opposite, said concession to be enjoyed by the concessionaires so long as they continued to develop the fisheries therein. The widow Courtemanche and Brouague were granted one-quarter each and the three daughters of Courtemanche, one-sixth each.² As the whole of this augmentation was included within the limits of Saint-Paul seigniory, the grant was, ab initio, null and void.³

1725, the new grant was confirmed by the King, but, as one of Courtemanche's daughters had died in 1724, the King granted her share of one-sixth of the original grant and of the augmentation to Brouague, thus giving him five-twelfths of the concession and of the augmentation.

1726, the King ordained that, if the widow Courtemanche or the daughters by her second husband predeceased Brouague, their shares should pass to the latter, or, if Brouague were survived by his mother or step-sisters, his share should pass to his wife, Ann Faury du Ponceau, and, on the death of said survivor, or survivors, the shares of such survivors would also pass to dame Faury du Ponceau. The succession to Brouague's widow was contingent upon her residing upon the concession and continuing fishing operations therein.⁴

⁴ Concession by the King,
22 February, 1726.

1726, Louis-Jacques, Sieur de St. Jean, and his wife Marie-Margueritte de Courtemanche, sold to Brouague and his wife, such interest as Marie-Margueritte de Courtemanche had in Baye-Phelypeau concession.⁵

⁵ Deed executed before Lederdet and Lounet, at St. Malo,
4 April, 1726.

1729, an English vessel from Boston was forced by stress of weather, to take refuge at Isle a Bois (Woody Island). Her captain declared that he was carrying provisions to four other English vessels that were fishing at St. Jan Islands and, as his declaration was found to be "en forme," the French commander released her.⁶

⁶ Brouague to Maurepas,
20 September,
1729.

1732, Brouague and Pierre Trottier Desauniers entered into an agreement for nine years (1733 to 1742) whereby Desauniers agreed to act as agent for Brouague at Quebec, shipping to him all necessary supplies, paying wages of crews, repairs, etc., of his vessels.⁷

⁷ Agreement passed before Hiché at Quebec,
6 September, 1732.

1740, Brouague inventoried his goods and chattels at Baye-de-Phelypeau and valued them at 655,783 livres.⁸

⁸ Inventory made by Brouague,
10 August, 1740.

1744, the King granted the Baye-de-Phelypeau concession to Armand de la Porte and his brother, Jean de la Porte. The grant provided that it would pass to them upon the deaths of Brouague and Marie-Joseph Foucher, only surviving daughter of the widow Courtemanche.¹

24 April, 1744.

1745, the widow Courtemanche and two of her daughters having died, Brouague held five-sixths of Baye-de-Phelypeau, the other sixth being held by the surviving daughter, Marie-Joseph de Courtemanche, wife of Sieur Foucher. Brouague obtained a lease of the one-sixth interest held by Madame Foucher.²

de-Phelypeau, Duquesne and Bigot issued an ordinance fixing its eastern limit at “environ 400 toises [one-half mile, nearly] clans l'Est de L'ance Ste. Claire.”⁵ This demonstrates that the four leagues of front of the concession was to be measured two leagues from the eastern limit of Phelypeau (Bradore) bay and two leagues from the western limit of said bay.

1758, the Conseil d'Etat issued an edict annulling the grant made to the la Portes in 1744.⁶

1759, the King granted Baye-de-Phelypeau and the augmentation to Francois Foucher, Jean Favry de Ponceaux and Charles Favry de Chantelon, for their lifetime, in the proportions of: to Foucher one-half, and to Ponceaux and Chantelon one-quarter each. The concession provided that the grant should be operative “immédiatement apres le décès du S. de Brouague” and that, on Foucher's death, his share should pass to his children and that the shares of Ponceaux and Chantelon should pass to their respective wives.⁷

1762, the President of the Conseil de Marine wrote to the Marquis de Puiseux that he could not secure Baye-de-Phelypeau concession for the Sieur de Grandelos Mesle.⁸

The Lords of Trade recommended that the stipulations of the treaty be not departed from and that no new grant be issued to subjects of the French King residing in France.²

1779, The heirs of Brouague petitioned for, reinstatement in their concession or a new grant of same.³

1785, Cugnet, an eminent jurisconsult, reported to Lieut. Governor Hamilton that, if the Governor authorised the registration of the patent of 1759, de Chanteloup and other heirs would have the right to demand compensation from the persons who had operated the concession after the death of Brouague, 15 March, 1761.⁴

1804, Mathew Lymburner and John Wm. Woolsey, curator of estate of John Crawford sold “Bradore” and other posts to William Grant.⁵

1808. John Richardson, as curator of the estate of William Grant, sold “Mador” (Bradore) and other posts to Langan, Burns, Woolsey and Lymburner.⁶

PETIT-HAVRE CONCESSION.
FRENCH REGIME

1730, Jonquière and Bigot granted Petit-Havre concession for nine years (1751 to 1760) to Antoine Marsat. The concession included a front of one league above and one league below Petit havre by three leagues in depth and also the islands opposite. It granted the exclusive right to take whales and seals and to hunt and trade with the Indians within its limits.⁷

1754, Duquesne and Bigot issued an ordinance defining the eastern limit of Baye-de-Phelypeau as about 400 toises (one-half mile, nearly) east of anse Ste. Claire. As Petit-Havre is between anse Ste. Claire and Baye-de-Phelypeau (Bradore bay) this decision also annulled Marsal's grant.⁸

¹ Concession by Jonquière and Bigot,

1 May, 1750.

FRENCH REGIME

1750, Jonquière and Bigot granted to Sieur Tache for nine years (1750 to 1759) the tract of ungranted land lying between Baye-Forteau and Baye-de-Phelypeau concessions, by four leagues in depth, with the islands opposite. The grant included the exclusive right to take seals, hunt and trade with Indians within the limits of the concession.¹

² Concession by Jonquière and Bigot, 13 October, 1751.

1751, Taché having abandoned his concession, Jonquière and Bigot granted to Michel Fortier for six years (1752 to 1758), a tract with a frontage of about two leagues and lying between pointe des Blanc Sablons and pointe de la Forte (Forteau) or Grincédents, by four leagues in depth, with the islands opposite and with the same privileges as had been granted to Taché.²

³ Ordinances by Bigot, 15 May, 1752, 23 September, 1752, and 15 September, 1753.

1752, as Brouague had claimed that Fortier's grant was included in Baye-de-Phelypeau concession, Bigot issued an ordinance ordering the determination of the eastern limit of Baye-de-Phelypeau. Pending such determination, he granted Fortier permission to take seals during 1752. This permit was renewed for 1753 and for 1754.³

⁴ Ordinance by Duquesne and Bigot, 25 September, 1754.

1754, Duquesne and Bigot cancelled Fortier's concession on the ground that a survey by Pellegrin had proved that Fortier's post was within the limits of Baye-de-Phelypeau.⁴

FRENCH REGIME.

³ Concession by Galissonnière and Bigot,
25 October, 1748.

1748, Galissonnière and Bigot granted to Joseph Deschenaux for nine years (1749 to 1758), a tract of land to be taken from cap au Diable, and including the cape, westward about two leagues to the western limit of the anse a Loup, by six leagues in depth, and including the islands opposite. They granted the exclusive right to take seals, hunt and trade with the Indians within the limits of the concession.³

⁴ Brevet de confirmation by the King,
30 April, 1749.

1749, the grant was confirmed for the term of seven years only (1749 to 1756).⁴

BELLEISLE STRAIT SEIGNIORY.

FRENCH REGIME.

⁵ Concession by Vaudreuil and Begon,
18 May, 1713.

1713, Vaudreuil and Begon granted to Pierre Constantin for ten years (1713 to 1723), a tract with thirty leagues of front “depuis le détroit de Belisle en descendant au nord nordest,” by ten leagues in depth, with the islands opposite. It granted the right of hunting, fishing and trading with the Indians within its limits subject to the performance of “foy et hommage,” the payment of the “droits et redevances accoutumées, suivaut la coutume de Paris” and keeping “feu et lieu” thereon.⁵

Constantin established himself at two points on the strait, namely, Baye-Rouge and Riviere-des-Francois and applied for a grant known, later, as St. Modet concession, which see.

ST. MODET CONCESSION.

FRENCH REGIME.

12 July, 1715.

1715, Courtemanche, as Commandant on the coast of Labrador, forbade Constantin to erect a permanent establishment “au dessous de la Forteau” bay and ordered him to return with his employees before winter set in.¹

Brouague, in 1738, stated that Constantin's first “hyvernement” was on the rivière des Francois. His evidence also proves that Constantin carried on fishing operations at his Rivière-des-Francois and Baye-Rouge posts in 1713, 1714, 1715 and 1716.²

³ Concession by the King, 31 March, 1716.

1716, the King granted Rivière-des Francois (St. Modet) concession to Pierre Constantin for his lifetime, provided he continued to develop it. The concession granted the exclusive right to take seals within its limits, to take fish in common with other French subjects and to trade with the Indians. It extended two leagues eastward and two leagues westward from Constantin's "habitation" (post), on rivière des Francois (Pinware river) by four leagues in depth and included the islands opposite.³

⁴ Courtemanche's report, 13 September, 1716.

In a marginal note on Courtemanche's memoir, it is stated that Vaudreuil recommended that this concession be granted to Constantin on the ground that Constantin had been the first who had gone to Labrador and that, later, he had taken Courtemanche there.⁴

⁵ Petition of Villeneuve, et al to Vaudreuil, 22 July, 1717.

1717, captains and other officers of vessels stated that it was in the interest of the State and of commerce both of the "Baye of Canada que de la Coste du petit Nord" that Constantin be appointed to receive and protect the boats and gear left on the coast in the autumn. They also petitioned that a post be established at Baye-Rouge. This was, later, cited by Constantin as a proof that his Baye-Rouge post was established at a later date.⁵

⁶ Evidence of Brouague, at Quebec 2 April, 1738.

1719, Brouague stated that Constantin established his Baye-Rouge post in the autumn of 1719.⁶

⁷ Brouague to Conseil de Marine, 27 August, 1720.

1720, Brouague stated that the Eskimo had killed three of Constantin's men and burned his post.⁷

⁸ Brouague to Conseil de Marine, 17 September, 1721.

1721, Brouague reported that Constantin was rebuilding Baye-Rouge post.⁸

⁹ Boucault and Foucault to Beauharnois and Hocquart, 8 April, 1738.

1723, Boucault and Foucault stated, in 1738, that Constantin leased Baye-Rouge to Canan and Deferrière, merchants of St. Maio, who operated it till 1723.⁹

¹⁰ Deed executed before Dubreuil, at Quebec, 4 November, 1732.

1732, Constantin leased his posts at Baye-Rouge, Rivière-des-Francois (Pinware river) and Ste.-Marie-de-l'Ancre to Francois and Pierre Rotot and Pierre Hamel for seven years (1733 to 1740).¹⁰

1734, Foucault, Boucault and Cheron petitioned Beauharnois and Hocquart for the grant of a seigniorship with the right of "haute, moyenne et Basse Justice" the concession to extend from the rivière des

Francois to anse à Loup, with such depth as Beauharnois and Hocquart might determine, and including the islands opposite.¹

¹ Petition of Foucault, et al., to Beauharnois and Hocquart, August (or September), 1734.

1735, Beauharnois and Hocquart granted to Francois Foucault and Gaspard Boucault for nine years (1735 to 1744), a tract of land with five leagues of front by six leagues in depth extending westward from the rivièrè des Francois (Pinware river) but not including same, and with the islands opposite. The concession granted the exclusive right to take seals and trade with the Indians within the limits of the concession.²

² Concession by Beauharnois and Hocquart, 27 April, 1735.

A fortnight later, Boucault and Foucault entered into partnership with Cheron, conceding a one-third interest to Cheron.³

³ Deed executed before Boisseau, at Quebec, 13 May, 1735.

After reciting Constantin's complaint that Foucault and Boucault's grant at St. Modet included part of his concession, the Prèsident du Conseil de Marine instructed Beauharnois and Hocquart to investigate and report.⁴

⁴ Prèsident to Beauharnois and Hocquart, 17 April, 1736.

Foucault and Boucault, in their memoir to Hocquart, stated that Constantin's "habitation" in 1716, when the concession was granted to him, was at Baye-Rouge and, therefore, as it was four or five leagues distant from Grand St. Modet island, the latter was outside the limits of Constantin's grant.⁵

⁵ Foucault and Boucault to Hocquart, 1736?

1736, Boucault and Foucault complained that Brouague's employees were killing seals at Longue pointe, seven or eight miles from St. Modet, to the detriment of St. Modet post. Hocquart issued an ordinance forbidding Brouague and his partner, Desauniers, to take seals to the southeast of, and below, baye Phelypeau.⁶

⁶ Ordinance by Hocquart, 6 October, 1736.

1737, the Prèsident du Conseil de Marine instructed Beauharnois and Hocquart to investigate the dispute respecting St. Modet and, if either party deserved a preference, Constantin, as the first grantee, should receive it.⁷

⁷ Prèsident to Beauharnois and Hocquart, 30 April, 1737.

1738, Beauharnois and Hocquart, pending further investigation, adjudged St. Modet to be operated by Constantin, Boucault and Foucault in the proportion of one-third each. Boucault and Foucault having demurred to this arrangement, Constantin was ordered to take over the vessel and crew that Boucault and Foucault had engaged, also the post they had constructed at St. Modet and the munitions and gear at Quebec and St. Modet.⁸

⁸ Ordinance by Beauharnois and Hocquart, 18 April, 1738.

Hocquart also appointed arbitrators to inventory and value the munitions and fishing gear in the stores of Foucault and Boucault at Quebec and St. Modet.⁹

Boucault and Foucault stated that, in May 1733, they had sent a schooner, with a crew of 17 men under Capt. Cheron, on a voyage of discovery. Having found a seal fishery, they sent Cheron there in 1734; in 1735, they sent a vessel with a crew of 30 men; in 1736, they sent two ships with 50 men and in 1737, they also continued operations.

They petitioned for the confirmation of the St. Modet concession and for a grant of the Vieux Fort islands, although the latter were unquestionably in Isles de Mingan seigniory.¹⁰

1762, Jean Taché leased St. Modet to John Ord for nine years (1762 to 1771).¹

³ Petition of Taché, et al, to the King, 1766.

1763, Murray granted St. Modet to Jean Taché for three years “or until His Majesty's pleasure is further known.”²

⁴ Murray to Lords of Trade, 25 August, 1761.

1763, Taché stated that in 1763, he was disturbed in his possession of St. Modet, a frigate having ordered back the vessels he and the seigniors of Mingan had sent to operate their respective concessions. He petitioned the King to instruct the Newfoundland government that he be given peaceable possession of his concession.³

⁵ Taché to Carleton, 10 November, 1766

1764, Murray reported that St. Modet and St. Augustin were sub-let to “British merchants.”⁴

⁶ Maseres to Carleton, 3 January, 1767.

1766, Taché stated that, as a result of the Proclamation of 1763, the vessel he had despatched from Quebec to operate St. Modet post had been ordered back on the ground that, it was in territory under the jurisdiction of Newfoundland. Taché petitioned for peaceable possession of his post.⁵

⁷ Taché to Carleton, 12 November, 1767.

1767, Maseres writing in 1767. stated that Taché had continued to enjoy possession of St. Modet from 1759 “till the late Interruption of the Settlements on the Coast of Labrador by the Governor of Newfoundland.” Taché desired to obtain Gros-Mecatina and offered, if granted it, to surrender St. Modet.⁶

the North West Company in 1821, had acquired its rights and claims, leased the seigniority of Mille-Vaches. Later, they established Portneuf fur-trading post in this seigniority and, owing to its position with reference to the King's Posts, were able to carry on a considerable trade with the Indians of the Posts to the manifest injury of the lessee.¹

1831, a Committee of the House of Assembly reported that the Portneuf post had been established by the Hudson's Bay Co. "in contradiction to the conditions of the Concession deed of said seigniority" and that the Crown officers had given it "as their opinion that Portneuf constituted a part of the Domaine of His Majesty."²

1864, Henry Judah, as Commissioner under the Seigniorial Tenure Act, certified that Mille Vaches included an area of 84,612 arpents and he valued it at $21,168.00.

LEASE OF TADOUSSAC.

To Messrs. The Farmers General of the Domain of France.
Farm of Tadoussac. Rights of domain.
Memorandum.

The lease of Tadoussac consists of a post thirty leagues distant from Quebec and situated at the mouth of the Saguenay, a large river.

p. 3193

La traite s'y fait avec les Sauvages qui habitent la partie Nord du fleuve Saint-Laurent, depuis l'Isle aux Coudres, jusqu'aux Sept Isles.

Il y a environ 70 à 80 lieues de l'isle aux Coudres aux sept Isles.

Cette Ferme contient cette étendue de pais en superficie le long de la Rivière, dont la profondeur s'étend jusqu'à la baye d'Hudson qui a été cédée aux Anglais par le traité d'Utrecht.

Les sept Isles sont environ deux degrés trente minutes, plus au Nord que l'isle aux Coudres.

ENTRETIEN DU POSTE DE
TADOUSSAC.

Il est nécessaire de garnir ce poste de farines, biscuits, lards, pois, et autres vivres pour les Engagés qui en font l'exploitation.

De biscuits pour les Sauvages qui font la pêche des loups marins.

Il en faut aussi pour ceux qui viennent du fond des terres traiter leurs castors et autres pelleteries.

De draperies, capots et autres marchandises de merceries et quincailleries propres à l'usage des sauvages, et principalement de fusils, poudre, plombs et haches, et autres ustanciles pour les aider et faciliter dans leurs chasses.

PRODUIT DU POSTE DE
TADOUSSAC.

En échange de toutes ces avances

Ce poste fournit

Des castors gras et secs, des pelleteries de différentes espèces.

Des huiles de poisson.

Des peaux de loups marins.

(Translation.)

Trading is carried on with the Indians inhabiting the northern part of the St. Lawrence river, from the Isle aux Coudres to Seven Islands.

The distance between l'isle aux Coudres and Seven Islands is about 70 or 80 leagues.

This lease includes this extent of country in area bordering the River, and the depth of which stretches as far as the Hudson bay which was ceded to the English under the Treaty of Utrecht.

Seven Islands is about two degrees and thirty minutes farther north than the isle aux Coudres.

MAINTENANCE OF TADOUSSAC.

This post must be provided with flour, biscuits, lard, pease and other foodstuffs for the men engaged in its operation.

With biscuits for the Indians employed at the seal fishery.

Some of these are also required for those who come from the interior to trade their beaver and other furs.

With cloths, coats and other mercer's and iron wares fit for the use of the Indians and more particularly with

PRODUCE OF TADOUSSAC.

In exchange for all such advances

This post furnishes

Raw and dry beavers, pelts of various kinds.

Fish oils.

Seal skins.

muskets, powder, lead and other utensils so as to assist them in their chase and facilitate the same.

ENTRETIEN DU POSTE DE
TADOUSSAC.

PRODUIT DU POSTE DE
TADOUSSAC.

Payer les gages à ceux qui servent à l'exploitation.

Il faut entretenir une barque avec quatre matelots pendant tout le cours de la Navigation, tant pour y porter des vivres et provisions, que pour rapporter les effets traités.

PRIX DU DERNIER BAIL

12000 L.

Ce poste a été affermé au Sieur Riverin adjudicataire du dernier bail, douze mille livres payables en Cartes non réduites.

Les enchères de cette année n'ont été portées qu'à 7,500 livr. payables aussi en Cartes non réduites, ce qui feroit en Cartes réduites 3750 livres.

Comme le S^r Guillemain, qui est au lieu et place du Sr Riverin dernier adjudicataire, vouloit encore conserver a cette condition la clause insérée dans ledit Bail.

Qu'à la fin dudit Bail, le nouvel adjudicataire seroit tenu de recevoir généralement tous les effets qui resteroient dans les postes qui sont exploités, tels qu'ils seroient, lesquels lui seroient payés sur le pied du détail de Québec, moitié en monnays de cartes, et l'autre moitié en castor, ou autres bons payements.

MAINTENANCE OF TADOUSSAC.

PRODUCE OF TADOUSSAC.

Wages must be paid to those employed in the operation.

A barque must be maintained with four sailors during the full season of navigation, both to carry thereto provisions and foodstuffs and to bring back the effects traded in.

PRICE OF THE LAST LEASE

12000 Livres.

This post was leased to the Sieur Riverin, purchaser of the last lease, twelve thousand livres in card money without reduction.

The bids offered this year only reached 7,500 livres, also payable in card money without reduction, which in reduced cards would amount to 3,750 livres.

The Sieur Guillemin, who was the last purchaser in the place and stead of the Sieur Riverin, wished to have this clause incorporated in lease.

That, at the expiration of the said lease, the new purchaser should be held to take over generally all effects that were found in the posts in operation, and which would be transferred to him on the basis of the Quebec retail price, one half in card money, and the other half in beaver or other valid consideration.

p. 3195

Monsieur l'Intendant ayant connaissance que le dernier adjudicataire avait dans le poste pour environ 50 à 60—livres de mauvais effets et qu'il ne le garnissoit ainsi qu'afin de se perpétuer le Bail aux conditions qu'il voudroit, mondit Sieur l'Intendant a jugé à propos, pour faciliter les enchères, augmenter le prix de la ferme et même dans la suite la faire valoir ce qu'elle a valu par les Baux précédens, de la faire exploiter par régie pendant le cours de cette année.

Comme la traite de cette année, se fera des effets de l'ancien adjudicataire, et que le Régisseur n'en enverra point de nouveaux, les effets étant eu entièrement traités ou beaucoup diminués, il sera aisé de retrancher dans l'adjudication de l'année prochaine, cette clause si contraire aux intérêt de Messieurs les Fermiers, ce qui doit faire croire que la ferme sera poussée à son juste prix.

DROITS DE DOMAINE.

Les droits de domaine sont beaucoup plus considérables et —plus étendues dans l'Amérique Méridionale, que dans l'Amérique Septentrionale, comme je ne connais pas parfaitement l'Amérique Méridionale, je ne renfermeray dans la Septentrionale ou le Canada, qui en comprend la meilleure partie.

Les terres du Canada, sont habitées de Français et de Sauvages.

(Translation.)

The Intendant having been informed that the last purchaser had, in the post, some 50 to 60 livres worth of effects of poor quality and that he kept the post thus provided with the sole purpose of securing for himself an extension of the lease on his own terms, the said Sieur Intendant, in order to encourage the bidding, to increase the price of the lease and, in like manner to bring it to what it was worth under the previous lease, deemed it expedient to have it operated under management during the present year.

Seeing that this year the trade will be carried on with the former lessee's goods and that the manager will not send any new merchandise, the goods being either sold or materially reduced, it will be easy to strike out this clause in the sale of next year, which is indeed against the interest of the fermiers généraux, as it gives the impression that the price will be raised to its fair level.

RIGHTS OF THE DOMAINE.

The rights of the Domaine are far more considerable and . . . more extended in South America than in North America. I am not fully acquainted with South America, and therefore I will confine myself to North America or Canada, which forms the major part of the same.

Gillies Hocquart, etc.

Having examined the petition presented to us by M. Pierre Carlier, Adjudicataire-Général of the united farms of France and of the domain of the West, stipulating for himself tendante, pour les raisons y contenues, à ce qu'il nous plaise, (vu l'arrêt du conseil d'etat du roi, du seize mai, mil six cent soixante-et-dix-sept, et l'arrêt du conseil supérieur de Québec, du 19e. octobre 1658, portant adjudication au sieur Demaure de la traite de Tadoussac, l'ordonnance de M. Raudot, dit 26. septembre 1707, et l'ordonnance de M. Begon, du 5e. avril 1720,) ordonner que le dit Carlier, ses successeurs, fermiers du dit domaine d'Occident, leurs procureurs, commis et préposés, continueront de faire seuls, à l'exclusion de tous autres, la traite, chasse, pêche, le commerce dans retendue du domaine du roi, depuis l'Isle-aux-Coudres, jusqu'à deux lieues au-dessous des Sept-Isles, et dans les postes de Tadoussac, Chekoutimy, Lac Saint-Jean, Nekoubau, Mistassinoc, Papinachois, Naskapis, Rivière Moisy, les Sept-Isles et lieux en dépendans, y compris la terre et seigneurie de la Malbaye ;

En conséquence, faire défenses à toutes personnes de quelque qualité et condition qu'elles soient, tant les marchands et habitans de la colonie, que les capitaines et maîtres de charrois, barques, bateaux et navires, gens de leur équipage et passagers, et tous autres généralement quelconques, de traiter, chasser, pêcher ni faire aucun commerce sous quelque prétexte que ce puisse être directement ni indirectement, soit par eux-mêmes ou en envoyant des marchandises, vivres, boissons et munitions par des sauvages affidés, dans les pays dépendans des dites traites du domaine de Sa Majesté, sans la commission expresse et par écrit du dit Carlier, ses successeurs fermiers, leurs procureurs, commis et préposés, à peine de confiscation des armes, chasse, marchandises de traite, pelleteries et effets traités, canots, chaloupes, barques, charrois, bateaux et autres bâtimens généralement quelconques, et de la somme de deux mille livres d'amende, qui ne pourra être remise ni modérée sous aucun prétexte, lesquelles confiscations et amendes contained, we may be pleased (reference being had to the decree (arrêt) of the King's Council of State, 16 May, 1677, and the decree of the Superior Council of Quebec, of the 19 October, 1658, giving control of the trade of Tadoussac to Sieur Demaure; the ordinance of M. Raudot of the 25 September, 1707, and the ordinance of M. Begon of the 5 April, 1720), to ordain that the said Carlier, his successors, lessees of the said Western domain, their attorneys, clerks and foremen, continue to enjoy (faire) alone, to the exclusion of all others, the trade (traite), hunting and fishing, in the extent of the King's Domaine, from the isle aux Coudres to a point two leagues below Seven Islands, and in the posts of Tadoussac, Chekoutimy, Lake St. John, Nekoubau, Misstassinoc, Papinachois, Naskapis, River Moisy, the Seven Islands, and the places dependent on them, including the lands and seigniory of Malbaye.

Consequently, that all persons, of whatever quality and condition they may be, as well as merchants and habitans of the colony, captains and masters of fishing-boats, barques, bateaux, ships, crews and passengers, and all others whosoever, be forbidden to trade, hunt, fish, or to carry on any commerce under any pretext, directly or indirectly, by themselves or by sending merchandise, provisions, liquors, or ammunition through friendly

Indians, in the country dependent on the said limits (traites) of His Majesty's domain, without the express commission in writing of the said Carder, the lessees, his successors, their attorneys, clerks and foremen, on pain of confiscation of the arms, products of the chase, merchandise intended to be used in trade, furs and other effects, obtained in trade, canoes, large boats, barques, fishing boats, bateaux, and all other vessels whatever, and a fine of two thousand livres, which can neither be remitted nor decreased under any appartiendront, savoir, deux tiers au dit Carlier, et l'autre tiers au dénonciateur ;

Faire pareillement défenses à toutes personnes de quelque qualité et condition qu'elles puissent être, qui descendront en canot, chaloupes, charrois et autres petits bâtimens, le long du fleuve Saint-Laurent, de s'arrêter sur les terres du domaine, ailleurs que dans les postes et maisons françaises établies le long du dit fleuve, à peine d'être réputés avoir fait la traite et commerce avec les sauvages, en fraude du privilège du dit Carlier, et des peines ci-dessus ;

Permettre au dit Carlier d'envoyer dans les postes dépendans du domaine, pour garder ses limites et empêcher les traites qui pourroient s'y faire à son préjudice, telles personnes, et par tels chemins qu'il jugera à propos, à la charge par lui de ne faire aucune traite sur sa route, hors des limites du domaine, à quoi il se soumet sous les peines de droit ;

Permettre pareillement au dit Carlier, ses procureurs, commis ou préposés, de saisir et arrêter tous les canots qui se trouveront dans l'étendue du dit domaine, chargés de marchandises, convenables à la traite, ou de pelleteries et autres effets traités ; toutes les marchandises, vivres, boissons et munitions, convenables à la traite, ou pelleteries et effets traités qui se trouveront en cache ou à découvert dans les pays dépendans du dit domaine, à quelques personnes qu'elles puissent appartenir, comme aussi de saisir et arrêter tous les bâtimens généralement quelconques qui se trouveront traiter ou avoir traité avec les sauvages, dans l'étendue du dit domaine, et la confiscation des choses saisies prononcée, sur les procès-verbaux des commis du dit Carlier, d'eux affirmés ;

Et pour l'exécution de notre ordonnance, permettre au dit Carlier de la faire publier et afficher partout où besoin sera, et où il jugera nécessaire :

pretext whatever ; of which confiscations and fines two-thirds shall belong to the said Carlier, and the other one-third to the informer ;

That all persons, of whatever quality and condition, who descend the river St. Lawrence in canoes, large boats, fishing-boats, or other small vessels, be likewise forbidden to land on this domain excepting at the posts and French establishments on the said river, on pain of being regarded as having traded with the Indians, and transgressing the privilege of the said Cartier and under the penalties above mentioned.

That the said Carlier be authorised to send to the posts dependent on the domain, such persons and by such routes as he may judge proper, to guard the limits and to prevent trading that might be made to his prejudice ; subject to the condition that he shall not trade on the way, outside of the bounds of the domain, a condition by him accepted under the penalties provided by law ;

That the said Carlier, his attorneys, clerks or overseers be empowered to seize all canoes found within the extent of the said domain, laden with merchandise, suitable for trading, or with furs and other objects of trade, wines and liquors (boissons) and ammunition and other effects, whether concealed (en cache) or exposed, in the country dependant on the said domain, to whomsoever they may belong, and also to seize and arrest all vessels whatever which are found trading or have traded with the Indians within the limits of said domain, and the confiscation of such goods is to be recorded by a " proces-verbal " drawn up by the clerks of the said Carlier and affirmed by them.

And that for the execution of our ordinance, the said Cartier be permitted to cause it to be posted up wherever need shall be, or he may deem necessary ;

Notre ordonnance sur la dite requête en date du trente mars, mil sept cent trente-un, par laquelle, avant faire droit, et en exécution des ordres particuliers que nous avons reçus de Sa Majesté à ce sujet, pour fixer d'une manière invariable les limites de la traite dite de Tadoussac dans les pays réservés pour la domaine de Sa Majesté, suivant le dit arrêt du conseil d'etat du roi du 16e. mai 1677, et l'ordonnance de M. Begon, du 5e. avril 1720 ;

Nous avons ordonné qu'à la diligence du sieur Cugnet, il sera fait une carte exacte de l'étendue du dit domaine, sur laquelle seront désignées les côtes du fleuve Saint-Laurent, depuis le bas de l'Isle-aux-Coudres, jusques et compris la Rivière Moisy, et dans la profondeur des terres derrière la dite étendue de pays, les lacs et rivières qui se déchargent dans la rivière du Saguenay, le rumb-de-vent qu'elles tiennent, l'étendue de pays qu'elles parcourent, depuis leur source jusqu'à leur embouchure, et les noms des principaux postes où se fait et se peut faire la traite avec les sauvages ;

A l'effet de quoi, nous avons, par la dite ordonnance, commis le sieur Louis Aubert de la Chenaye, pour relever et mesurer les côtes du fleuve Saint-Laurent, comprises dans l'étendue du dit domaine de Sa Majesté, depuis le bas de l'Isle-aux-Coudres, jusques et compris la Rivière Moisy, ainsi que la Rivière du Saguenay, et les rivières et lacs qui s'y déchargent, les rumb-de-vent qu'elles tiennent et l'étendue du terrain qu'elles parcourent depuis leur source jusqu'à leur embouchure, et en dresser des plans figurés, et des procès-verbaux en forme de journal, où seroit marqué jusqu'à quel endroit elles peuvent être navigables, en barques, bateaux ou canots, les saults ou rapides où l'on est obligé de faire portage, la situation et étendue des lacs,

(Translation.)

Our ordinance delivered on the said request, of 30 March, 1731, by which, before giving judgment, and pursuant to private instructions which we have received from His Majesty on the subject, of fixing permanently the boundaries of the Traité de Tadoussac, in the country reserved for the Domaine of His Majesty, according to the said arrêt of the King's Council of State of tiffe 16th May, 1677, and the ordinance of M. Begon of the 5

April, 1720 ;

We have ordered that, at the suit of Sieur Cugnet, an exact map of the extent of the said Domaine shall be prepared ; on which map shall be shown the banks of the river Saint Lawrence from the lower part of isle aux Coudres to and including the River Moisy and, in the hinterland of the said tract of country, the rivers and lakes which discharge into the Saguenay river, with their magnetic bearings, the extent of the country traversed by them, from their sources to their mouths, and the names of the principal posts where trading is or can be carried on with the Indians;

To which end, we have, under the said ordinance, commissioned¹ Sieur Louis Aubert de la Chenaye to survey and traverse the banks of the river Saint Lawrence, comprised in the extent of the said domain of His Majesty, from the lower part of isle aux Coudres to and including the river Moisy, as well as the Saguenay river, and the rivers and lakes which discharge into it, with their magnetic bearings and the extent of land through which they run from their sources to their mouths ; to make finished plans, and to draw up an account of the same in the form of a journal, marking the points to which navigation by barques, bateaux or canoes extends ; the falls or rapids les noms des lacs et rivières et des pays situés sur icelles, les établissements et magasins où se fait actuellement la traite avec les sauvages et la pêche de loup-marin et saumon, ensemble les anciens établissements où la traite s'est faite ci-devant, et dont il reste encore des vestiges, les noms des nations sauvages habituées dans la dite étendue de pays, ou qui peuvent y venir en traite, avec la quantité de sauvages qui les composent, et généralement tout ce qui peut contribuer à déterminer précisément l'étendue de la dite traite et en faire connoître les avantages, suivant l'instruction particulière jointe à notre dite ordonnance ;

Autre ordonnance de nous rendue le douze mai, 1732, par laquelle nous avons nommé et destiné le sieur Joseph-Laurent Normandin, pour, conjointement et de concert avec le sieur de la Ganière, suivre l'exécution de notre dite ordonnance du 30e. mars, 1731, au lieu et place du dit sieur Aubert de la Chenaye, qui avoit été obligé de revenir à Québec, s'étant cassé une jambe, à la Petite-Rivière, chez le nommé Simard, ainsi et comme auroit pu faire le dit sieur de la Chenaye, conformément à notre instruction du dit jour, 30 mars, 1731 ; à cet effet parcourir toutes les rivières et lacs qui se déchargent dans la Rivière du Saguenay, en tirant vers l'ouest, depuis le poste de Checoutimy jusqu'à la hauteur des terres, y marquer les limites par des fleurs-de-lis plaquées sur les arbres, et du tout dresser procès-verbal exact en forme de journal, contenant toutes les observations portées en nos dites ordonnance et instruction ;

Les procès-verbaux des dits sieurs de la Chenaye et Normandin, en forme de journal, la carte que nous avons fait dresser sur iceux.

Vu aussi notre ordonnance rendue le douze du présent mois, entre M.

where portages have to be made ; the names of the lakes and rivers, and the countries situated upon them ; the establishments and store-houses where trade is now being carried on with the Indians, and the seal and salmon fishing, together with the ancient establishments where trade was previously carried on, the vestiges of which still remain ; the names of the Indian nations inhabiting the country, or that are likely to come and trade there, as well as the Indian population ; and generally everything which can contribute to determine precisely the extent of the said limits, and make their advantages known, according to the private instruction annexed to our said ordinance ;

Another ordinance rendered by us, 12 May 1732, by which we named and designated Sieur Joseph-Laurent Normandin to execute, jointly with Sieur de la Ganière, our ordinance of 30 March, 1731. instead of Sieur Aubert de la Chenaye, who was obliged to return to Quebec, having broken his thigh at the Petit Rivière [sic.], at the house of a person named Simard, in the same way it would have been done by the said Sieur de la Chenaye, conformably, to our instructions of the said day, 30 March, 1731 ; and for this purpose they are to traverse all the rivers and lakes which discharge into the Saguenay river, proceeding in a westerly direction, from the post of Checoutimy to the height-of-land ; to quark the limits there by placing the fleur-de-lis on the trees, and to keep a journal recording all the observations mentioned in our said ordinance and instructions ;

The "procès-verbaux" of the said Sieurs de la Chenaye and Normandin, in the form of a journal, the map which we have caused to be drawn up therefrom ;

Seeing also our ordinance of the twelfth of the present month, between M. Pierre Cartier, "Adjudicataire-Général" of the united farms of France and of the domain of the West, stipulating

Pierre Carlier, adjudicataire général des fermes unies de France et du domaine d'Occident, stipulant par le dit sieur Cugnet, demandeur en requête de nous réponde le 26e. septembre, 1732, d'une part ; et Francois Bissot, tant en son nom qu'ayant les droits cédés du feu sieur de Vallerenne, et Jeanne Bissot, son épouse, et du feu sieur Charles Bissot, le sieur Joseph Fleury de Lagorgendière, et Claire Jolliet, son épouse, fille de défunts Louis Jolliet et Claire Francoise Bissot, tant pour eux que pour leurs co-héritiers des dits défunts sieur et dame Jolliet, défendeurs, et le sieur Jacques Gourdeau, fils de défunts Jacques Gourdeau et Marie Bissot, héritier bénéficiaire de son dit pere, faisant tant pour lui que pour ses co-héritiers de la dite défunte Bissot, sa mère, aussi défendeur et intervenant, de l'autre part ; par laquelle nous avons donné acte aux défendeurs et intervenant de l'abandon par eux fait, par leur écrit de défenses du douze avril dernier, du terrain concédé à défunt Francois Bissot, sieur de la Rivière, par la Compagnie de la Nouvelle-France, du vingt-cinq février, 1661, depuis l'Isle-aux-Oeufs jusqu'a la Rivière Moisy, et, en conséquence, ayant égard à la demande du dit sieur Cugnot, ès dit nom, portée par son écrit de répliques du trente un mars dernier ;

Nous avons, en tant que besoin, réuni au domaine de Sa Majesté le dit terrain concédé au sieur Bissot, depuis et compris la dite Isle-aux-Oeufs, jusqu'à la Pointe-des-Cormorans, qui est à quatre ou cinq lieues au-dessous de la dite Rivière Moisy ; ce faisant, Avons fait défenses aux dits défendeurs et intervenant et à tous autres de faire directement ni indirectement, aucune traite, chasse, pêche, commerce ni établissements dans l'étendue du dit terrain, ni dans la Rivière Moisy, et autres lacs et rivières y affluentes, et de troubler dans la jouissance, possession through the said Sieur Cugnet, plaintiff; whose petition was replied to by us on the 26 September, 1732, of one part and Francois Bissot, in his own name as well as having had conceded to him the rights of the late Sieur de Vallereune and Jeanne Bissot his wife, and of the late Sieur Charles Bissot, the Sieur Joseph Fleury de Lagorgendière and Claire Jolliet, his wife, daughter of the late Louis Jolliet, and Claire Francoise Bissot, Loth for themselves and for the co-heirs of the said late Sieur and Madame Jolliet, defendants, and Sieur Jacques Gourdeau, son of the late Jacques Gourdeau and : Marie Bissot, heir of his said father, acting for himself as well as for the co-heirs of the said late Bissot, his mother, also defendant, and intervening party of the other part ; by which we have given act to the said defendants and intervening party of the surrender by them, in their written plea of 12 April last, of the land conceded to the late Francois Bissot, Sieur de la Rivière [sic.] by the Company of New France, of the 25 February, 1661, from the isle-aux Oeufs to the River Moisy ; and considering the request of the said Sieur Cugnet in said name, as set forth in his written reply of the 31st March last ;

We have, as far as necessary, re-united to the Domaine of His Majesty, the said land granted to the said Sieur Bissot, from and including the said Isle-aux-Oeufs, to cape Cormorant, which is five or six leagues below the said River Moisy ; doing this,

We have forbidden the said defendants and intervenants, as well as all others to carry on, directly or indirectly any trade, hunting, fishing, commerce, or establishments, within the extent of this land, either in the River Moisy or other lakes and rivers which form its affluents, or to disturb L'arrêt du conseil d'état du roi, du seize mai 1677.

Ordonnance de M. Raudot, du 26 septembre 1707, portant défenses à toutes personnes, même aux sauvages étrangers, de traiter ni chasser dans l'étendue des limites de Tadoussac ;

Autre ordonnance de mon dit sieur Raudot, du 7e. septembre, 1709, portant défenses à toutes personnes de faire festin aux sauvages de Tadoussac, ni les détourner en aucune manière, et permission aux sous-fermiers de la traite de Tadoussac, de piller les Français qu'ils trouveront traiter dans l'étendue des dites limites ;

Autre ordonnance de mon dit sieur Raudot, du sept avril, 1710, portant permission de saisir les marchandises qui se trouveront entre les mains des Français qui auront traité dans l'étendue des limites de Tadoussac, même ce qui se trouvera en cache dans les dites limites ;

Ordonnance de M. Begon, du cinq avril, 1720, portant défenses de traiter, chasser ni pêcher dans l'étendue des limites de Tadoussac, et tout considère :

Nous avons borné l'étendue du domaine du roi appelé la Traite de Tadoussac, savoir, par la côte du nord du fleuve Saint-Laurent, depuis le bas de la seigneurie des Eboulemens, qui est vis-à-vis la pointe du nord-est de l'Isle-aux-Coudres, jusqu'à la Pointe ou Cap des Cormorans, faisant environ quatre-vingt-quinze lieues de front avec l'Isle-aux-Oeufs et autres isles, islets

Monsieur Cugnet in the enjoyment, possession and improvement of the said land and rivers, under the penalties pronounced by the law :

The arrêt [sic.] of the Superior Council of Quebec, vesting Demaure with jurisdiction over the lease of the Traité de Tadoussac, containing the limits and privileges of the said trade ;

The arrêt [sic.] of the King's Council of State, of 16 May, 1677 ;

Ordinance of Monsieur Raudot, of 26 September, 1707, forbidding all persons, even foreign Savages, to trade or hunt within the extent of the Traité de Tadoussac ;

Another ordinance of said Sieur Raudot of the 7 September, 1709, prohibiting all persons to treat (faire festin) the Indians of Tadoussac, or to draw them away in any mariner, and permitting the sub-lessees of the Traité de Tadoussac to confiscate the goods of the French whom they shall find trading within the extent of the said limits ;

Another ordinance of said Sieur Raudot, of 7 April, 1710, giving permission to seize merchandise found in the hands of the French who had traded within the extent of the Traité de Tadoussac, even that which may be found concealed in the said limits ; Ordinance of M. Begon, of 5 April, 1720, prohibiting trading, hunting, and fishing within the extent of the Traité de Tadoussac ;

And the whole being considered ;

We have fixed the limits of the domain of the King called the Traité de Tadoussac, that is to say, on the north bank of the river Saint Lawrence from the lower end of the seignory of Eboulemens, which is opposite the north-east point of isle-aux-Coudres, to cape Cormorant, being about ninety-five leagues of front, with the isle-aux-Oeufs and other isles, islets, de-Jérémie et Pointe-des-Bersiamaites, Chekoutimy, Lac Saint-Jean, Nekoubau, Chomonthouane, Mistassins, et derrière les Mistassins jusqu'à la Baie d'Hudson, et au bas de la rivière le domaine sera borné, en conséquence de notre dite ordonnance du douze du présent mois, par le Cap des Cormorans jusqu'à la hauteur des terres, dans laquelle étendue seront compris la Rivière Moisy, le Lac des Kichestigaux, le Lac des Naskapis et autres rivières et lacs qui s'y déchargent ;

Ordonnons que le dit M. Pierre Carlier, ses successeurs fermiers du domaine d'Occident, leurs procureurs, commis et préposés, continueront de faire seuls, à l'exclusion de tous autres, la traite, chasse, pêche et commerce dans toute l'étendue des pays renfermés dans les limites ci-dessus désignées ;

Faisons défenses à toutes personnes de quelque qualité et condition qu'elles soient, tant les marchands et habitans de la colonie, que les capitaines et maîtres de charrois, barques, bateaux et navires, gens de leur équipage et passagers, et à tous autres généralement quelconques, même aux sauvages étrangers, non habitués dans les terres du domaine, de traiter, chasser, pêcher, ni faire aucun commerce, sous quelque prétexte que ce puisse être, directement ni indirectement, soit par eux-mêmes, ou en envoyant des marchandises, vivres, boissons et munitions par des sauvages affidés dans toute l'étendue des pays désignés par notre présente ordonnance, et généralement dans aucunes rivières et lacs qui prennent leur course en la Rivière du Saguenay et la Rivière Moisy, encore qu'ils ne soient nommément exprimés dans notre dite ordonnance ; faire festin aux sauvages habitués dans le dite étendue de pays, ni les détourner en aucune manière, même d'approcher des limites ci-dessus marquées dans les terres, plus près de dix lieues pour y faire la traite avec les

St. John, Nekoubau, Chomonthouane [Chamuchuan], Mistassins, and behind the Mistassins as far as Hudson Bay ; and, on the lower part of the river, the Domaine will be bounded, in consequence of our said ordinance of the twelfth of the present month, by cape Cormorant as far as the height of land, in which extent will be comprised the river Moisy, the lake of the Kichestigaux [lake Pletipi], the lake of the Naskapis [1. Ashuaopi], and other rivers and lakes which discharge therein.

We ordain that the said M. Pierre Cartier, his successors, fermiers of the western domain, their attorneys, clerks and foremen, continue to carry on alone, to the exclusion of all others, the trade, hunting and fishing, in the whole extent of the country, included within the limits above designated.

We forbid all persons of whatever quality and condition, as well merchants as habitants of the colony, captains and masters of fishing-boats, bateaux and vessels, the men employed to manage them and passengers, and all others whomsoever, even foreign Indians who do not reside in the lands of the Domaine, to trade, hunt, fish, or carry on any commerce under any pretext whatever, directly or indirectly, whether by themselves or by sending in merchandise, victuals, liquors, and ammunition, through friendly Indians, in any part of the country designated by our present ordinance, and generally any rivers or lakes the waters of which flow through the Saguenay river, and the river Moisy, though they may not be specially named in our said ordinance; to treat the Indians who live in the same extent of country, or to draw them away in any manner, or even to approach within ten leagues of the limits above drawn in the lands, for the purpose of trading with the Indians or other establishments without the express permission in writing of the said sauvages ou autres établissemens sans la commission expresse et par écrit du dit Carlier, ses successeurs fermiers, leurs procureurs, commis et préposés, à peine de confiscation des armes, chasse, marchandises de traite, pelleteries et effets traités, canots, chaloupes, barques, charrois, bateaux et autres bâtimens généralement quelconques, et de la somme de deux mille livres d'amende qui ne pourra être remise ni modérée sous aucun prétexte, lesquelles confiscation et amende appartiendront, savoir, deux tiers au dit Carlier, et l'autre tiers aux dénonciateurs.

Permettons au dit Carlier, ses successeurs fermiers, leurs procureurs, commis et préposés, d'envoyer dans les postes dépendans du domaine, pour garder ses limites et empêcher les traites qui pourroient s'y faire au préjudice des défenses ci-dessus, telles personnes et par tels chemins qu'ils jugeront à propos, à la charge de ne pouvoir passer hors des limites portées par notre présente ordonnance, sans en avoir auparavant obtenu permission de nous par écrit, à peine de tous dépens, dommages et intérêts de qui il appartiendra.

Permettons pareillement au dit Carlier, ses successeurs, leurs procureurs, commis et préposés, de saisir et arrêter tous les canots qui se trouveront dans l'étendue du dit domaine chargés de marchandises, vivres, boissons et munitions convenables à la traite, ou pelleteries, et effets traités qui se trouveront en cache ou à découvert, dans les pays dépendans du dit domaine, à quelques personnes qu'elles puissent appartenir, comme aussi de saisir et arrêter tous les bâtimens généralement quelconques qui se trouveront traiter ou avoir traité avec les sauvages dans l'étendue du dit domaine, et poursuivre devant nous la confiscation des choses saisies sur les procès-verbaux des dits commis et préposés, duement affirmés.

Carlier, the lessees his successors, their attorneys, clerks and foremen, on pain of confiscation of their arms, produce of the hunt, merchandise for trading, furs and other articles obtained in trade, canoes, large boats, barques, fishing boats, bateaux, and other vessels of whatever kind, and a fine of two thousand livres which can neither be remitted nor decreased under any pretext, of which confiscation and fine, two-thirds is to belong to the said Carlier, and the other third to the informers.

We permit the said Carlier, the lessees his successors, their attorneys, clerks and foremen, to send into the said posts dependent on the Domaine, to guard the limits, and to prevent trading which might be made in contravention of the above prohibition, such persons and by such roads, as they shall judge proper, but they are not to pass beyond the limits assigned by our present ordinance without having previously obtained permission from us in writing, on pain of such costs, damages, and interests as may appertain

We also permit the said Carlier, his successors, their attorneys, clerks and foremen, to seize and retain all canoes which may be found within the extent of the said Domaine laden with merchandise, provisions, liquor, and ammunition suitable for trade, or furs and negotiable articles, which shall be found hidden or not hidden in the country dependent on the said Domaine, to whomsoever they may belong ; as also to seize and retain all vessels whatever which shall be found trading, or to have traded, with the Indians, within the extent of the said Domaine, and the confiscation of the articles seized, is to be proceeded with before us, upon the procès-verbaux of the said clerks and foremen duly affirmed.

LEASE OF TRAITTE DE TADOUSSAC, 9 SEPTEMBER, 1749, TO THE VEUVE FORNEL ET CIE.

ARCHIVES DE LA PROVINCE DE QUEBEC. JUDICIAL RECORDS OF QUEBEC, REGISTRY OF LANOULLIER.

Pardevant les Notaires Royaux en la Prevosté de Québec, y résidons soussignés, furent présens Monseigneur François Bigot, chevalier, conseiller du Roy, en ses Conseils, intendant de justice, police, finances et de la marine en toute la Nouvelle-France, Mr Jacques Bréard, controlleur de la Marine en ce pais, stipulants pour Sa Majesté en exécution de ses ordres cy-devant donnés, lequel mon dit seigneur intendant a donné à titre de bail et ferme à prix d'argent pour six années consécutives à commencer la jouissance au premier octobre de la présente année mil sept cent quarente neuf, et finira à pareil jour de l'année mil sept cent cinquante cinq, à demoiselle Marie-Anne Barbel, veuve du feu sieur Fornel et Compagnie demeurante en cette ville vis-à-vis la place du marché où elle fait élection de domicile, à ce présente et acceptante pour elle au d. nom pendant le dit temps la traitte, de Tadoussac et privilege de faire icelle et à l'exclusion de tous autres la traitte, chasse, pêche et commerce dans toute l'étendue des costes, rivières, terres et pays reservés pour le Domaine de Roy vulgairement appellé la Traitte de Tadoussac y compris la terre et seigneurie de la Malbaye, pour [sic.] par elle en jouir en vertu

(Translation.)

Before the undersigned royal notaries in the provostship of Quebec, residing thereat, were present Monseigneur François Bigot, knight, King's Councillor in his councils, Intendant of Justice, Police, Finance and Marine in the whole of New France, Mr. Jacques Bréard, Comptroller of the Marine in this country, stipulating in the name of His Majesty in execution of his orders as previously given, which said seigneur Intendant has given under lease and farm for money consideration for six consecutive years, enjoyment thereof to commence on the first of October of the year one thousand seven hundred and forty-nine, and to expire on the corresponding day of the year one thousand seven hundred and fifty-five, to Demoiselle Marie-Anne Barbel, widow of the late Sieur Fornel, and partners, residing in this city opposite the market-place where she elects a domicile, hereto present and accepting for herself in the said name for the said term the lease of Tadoussac and the privilege of carrying on the same and, to the exclusion of any others, of trading, hunting, fishing and commerce in the whole extent of the coasts, rivers, lands and countries reserved for the Domaine du Roy, commonly called the land and seigniori of Malbaye, to be enjoyed by her du présent bail tout et ainsi que le sieur Cugnet cy-devant fermier en a jouy ou dû jouir et de tous les droits appartenants à Sa Majesté dans l'étendue de la ditte traite ; le présent bail fait pour et moyennant le prix et somme de sept mille livres par an qui seront remises chaque année au mois d'octobre entre les mains du trésorier de la Marine en ce pais dont le premier payement échoira au trente un octobre mil sept cent cinquante et duquel la ditte delle veuve Fornel sera déchargée sur la quittance qu'elle raportera du dit trésorier ; à la sureté duquel payement et de remboursement cy-après stipulé, les castors, huilles et autres effets provenants de la d. traite seront et demeureront specialienient hipotequés et affectés par préférence comme deniers Royaux. Et en outre aux charges, clauses et conditions suivantes :

1° La ditte demoiselle veuve Fornel et Compagnie se chargera des prests faits aux Sauvages dans les postes de la ditte traite de Tadoussac suivant les estats que les commis des dits postes en donneront par eux certifiés véritables la présente année mil sept cent quarante neuf, lesquels seront arrestés par mon dit seigneur intendant, et dont le montant des dits prests sera remplacé à la fin du bail par la ditte demoiselle veuve Fornel et Compagnie par ceux qu'elle laissera alors, sans que le montant des dits prests puissent estre augmentés. En sorte que quant même ils monteraient à plus la ditte demoiselle veuve Fornel et Compagnie ne pourra en pretendre aucun remboursement : mais au contraire s'il arrivait qu'ils fussent au dessous du nombre de ceux qu'elle recevra en prenant la ditte ferme, elle sera obligée d'en payer la différence à raison de vingt sols par castor.

in virtue of the present lease entirely and as the sieur Cugnet, former lessee has enjoyed or should have enjoyed the same as well as all the rights belonging to His Majesty throughout the said lease ; the present lease made for and in consideration of the price and sum of seven thousand livres per year which shall be paid every year in the month of October into the hands of the Treasurer of the Marine in this country and the first payment of which shall fall due on the thirty-first day of October, one thousand seven hundred and fifty and from which the said widow Fornel shall be released through the receipt to be received by her from the said Treasurer ; as a security for which payment and the reimbursement hereinafter stipulated, the beaver, oil and other articles from the said trade shall be and shall remain hypothecated and mortgaged in preference as the King's moneys. And furthermore subject to the following charges, clauses and conditions :

The said Veuve Fornel et Cie. shall assume the advances made to the Indians in the posts of the said Traité de Tadoussac according to the statements thereof to be given by the clerks of the said posts and certified correct by them this present year of one thousand seven hundred and forty-nine, which statements shall be determined by said Seigneur Intendant, and to the amount of the said loans shall be repaid at the termination of lease by the said Veuve Fornel et Cie. by such advances as she shall leave at that time, without the total of the said advances being increased. So that even in the event of their amounting to a larger sum, the said Veuve Fornel et Cie. shall not be entitled to any refund : but, on the contrary, should they happen to be less than the sum of those she shall have received at the time of taking the 2° La ditte demoiselle veuve Fornel et Comp^{nie} se chargera également envers Sa Majesté des maisons ustenciles, meubles et bestiaux contenus aux inventaires qui en seront faits et arrestés par mon dit seigneur intendant pour les rendre à la fin du présent bail, sçavoir les ustenciles, meubles et bestiaux en nature ou d'en payer le prix de ce qu'il en manquera pour lors, et les maisons dans l'estat qu'elles se trouveront à la fin du dit bail, la ditte damoiselle veuve Fornel et Comp^{nie} sera en outre tenue d'entretenir les dittes maisons et autres bâtimens des menues réparations seulement et de les rendre dans le même estat qu'elles luy auront été remises.

3° La ditte damoiselle veuve Fornel et Comp^{nie} s'oblige de rembourser au sieur Cugnet cy-devant fermier des dits postes le prix des marchandises qui se trouveront conformément aux inventaires qui en seront dressés et suivant qu'ils seront réglés par Monseigneur l'intendant et ce dans le mois d'octobre de l'année prochaine mil sept cent cinquante.

4° Promettent et s'obligent la de. damoiselle veuve Fornel et Compagnie de rembourser au d. sieur Cugnet dans le mois d'octobre de l'année prochaine le montant des derniers envoys qui ont été faits de ces deniers pour l'exploitation des dittes traittes suivant l'estimation qui en sera faite par mon dit seigneur intendant.

5° Les castors, huilles pelleteries et autres effets qui viendront en retour des dittes traittes chaque année seront et demeureront obligés et affectés par privilège et préférence comme pour deniers Royaux au paiement des sept milles livres de ferme qui seront remis ainsi qu'il est cy-devant dit entre les mains du trésorier de la Marine en ce pais, en conseq^{ce} des ordres de mon dit seigneur intendant.

(Translation.)

The Veuve Fornel et Cie. shall also become responsible to His Majesty for the houses, utensils, moveables and cattle included in the inventories thereof to be drawn up and determined by said Seigneur Intendant and shall return the same at the expiration of this lease, namely, the utensils, moveables and cattle in kind or to pay the price of whatever may be missing at the time, and to maintain the houses in the condition they were in at the expiration of the said lease ; the said Veuve Fornel et Cie. shall further be held to keep in good repair said houses and other buildings and to return them in the same condition as when they were delivered to her.

3° The said Veuve Fornel et Cie. bind themselves to repay the said Sieur Cugnet former lessee of the said posts the price of the goods which are found, according to the inventories to be made thereof and as the same may be adjusted by Monseigneur Intendant in the month of October.

4° The said Veuve Fornel et Cie. promise and obligate themselves to repay the said Sieur Cugnet in the month of October of next year the amount of the last moneys advanced by him for the operation of the said lease, as estimated by said Seigneur Intendant.

5° The beaver, oil, furs and other effects which are returned each year from the said lease shall be held and appropriated by way of a preference mortgage for the King's moneys for the payment of the seven thousand livres of rent which, as hereinbefore stipulated, shall be paid to the Treasurer of the Marine in this country, in pursuance of said Seigneur Intendant's orders.

p. 3216

6° Comme toutes les marchandises, munitions, vivres et autres effets généralement quelconques qui se trouveront dans les traittes de Tadoussac et dépendance appartenants au dit sieur Cugnet au jour de l'inventaire qui en sera fait demeurent dès à présent affectés et hipotequés au payement des sommes qu'il doit au Roy, la ditte Delle veuve Fornel et Compagnie ne pourra faire aucun payement ni remboursement au dit sieur Cugnet pour raison du prix des d. marchandises et effets sans un ordre par écrit de mon dit seigneur l'intendant à peine d'en répondre en son propre et privé nom.

7° Le remboursement des marchandises et autres effets qui se trouveront dans les différents postes dépendants des d. traittes et les envoys qui auront esté faits d'avance par la de. delle veuve Fornel et Compagnie pour l'année mil sept cent cinquante six seront faits à la de. veuve Fornel et Compagnie en la même manière stipulée dans les articles trois et quatre du présent traité par les fermiers qui luy succéderont.

8° Tous les castors qui proviendront des d. traittes pendant le cours du présent bail seront portés et remis par la d. veuve Fornel et Compagnie au bureau de la Compagnie du Castor établi en cette ville.

9° La de. delle veuve Fornel et Compagnie promettent et obligent pour la conservation et augmentation des d. traittes de Tadoussac de les exploiter et régir le plus avantageusement qu'il sera possible pour la meilleure ration (?) de ces postes et de ni faire faire la chasse que par les Sauvages établis dans ces contrées. Et si par négligence ou autrement de la part de la de. veuve

6° Inasmuch as all the goods, munitions, provisions and other effects generally whatsoever which may be found in the said Traité de Tadoussac and dependencies belonging to the said Sieur Cugnet on the day of the inventory to be made thereof remain from now appropriated and hypothecated for the payment of such sums owing by him to the King, the said Veuve Fornel et Cie. shall make no payment or reimbursement to the Sieur Cugnet in respect of said goods without a written order from said Seigneur Intendant under pain of being answerable for the same in her own name.

7° The repayment of the goods and other effects that may be found in the different posts connected with the said lease and the shipments which may be made in advance by said Veuve Fornel et Cie. for the year one thousand seven hundred and fifty-six shall be made over to said Veuve Fornel et Cie. in the same manner as that stipulated in sections three and four of the present agreement by the lessees who shall succeed them.

8° All beaver which may come from the said commerce during the course of the present lease shall be conveyed and handed over by said Veuve Fornel et Cie. to the office of the Compagnie du Castor established in this city.

9° The said Veuve Fornel et Cie. promise and engage that, for the maintenance and improvement of said Traittés de Tadoussac, they will operate and manage them in the most profitable manner with a view to the better supplying of such posts and to cause hunting to be carried on thereat by none but by the Indians settled in these countries. And should, through neglect

DESPATCH, 25 SEPTEMBER, 1749, INTENDANT BIGOT TO MINISTER INFORMING LATTER OF LEASE OF FERME DE TADOUSSAC TO VEUVE FORNEL ET CIE.

ARCHIVES OF CANADA, Series F, Vol. 93, p. 259.

Nous avons eu l'honneur de vous marquer en commun que nous avons expédié la concession de la baie des Esquimaux à la veuve Fornel. Il est heureux qu'elle ait voulu continuer cette découverte qui ne peut qu'être très-avantageuse à la Colonie, étant important pour nous d'occuper cette baie dont les Anglais se seraient emparés par la suite, elle y a envoyé cette année. Cette même veuve m'a demandé le ferme de Tadoussac à raison de sept mille livres. J'ai trouvé ce prix si avantageux pour le Roy que je n'ai pas hésité un moment à la lui donner pour six ans aux memes conditions de l'ancien bail.

J'ai agi en conséquence des ordres et de la permission que M. Le Comte de Maurepas avait donnés à M. Hocquart en 1745, '46 et '48 de passer un nouveau bail pour cette ferme et qu'il le laissait le maître des conditions.

(Translation.)

We have the honour to inform you in common that we have expedited the concession of Baye-des-Esquimaux to the widow Fornel. It is fortunate that she has agreed to continue this discovery which cannot help but be most profitable to the Colony, it being of great importance that we occupy this bay as the English would have taken possession of it in the future. She has sent there this year. This same widow has asked me for the Ferme de Tadoussac at the rate of seven thousand livres. I considered that figure so advantageous to the King that I did not hesitate for a moment to grant the same to her for six years upon the same terms as those of the former lease.

I have acted according to the orders and instructions which Mr. Comte de Maurepas had given to Mr. Hocquart in 1745, '46 and '48 to issue a new lease for this lease and that he was leaving him free as to the terms.

p. 3219

Il était temps d'en ôter le régie à M. Cugnet, le Roy ne s'en serait pas trouvé bien. Il n'a pas encore rendu son compte de régie de 1747. Il a toujours quelques raisons qui l'en empêchent et insensiblement ses dettes s'accumuleraient envers Sa Majesté. Il a retiré considérablement de la poste je le sais à n'en pas douter et il ne paie aucun de ses créanciers, et il n'est pas possible qu'il n'ait pas fait passer ses fonds en France.

Après l'expiration de la concession de la baie des Esquimaux que la dite veuve a pour douze ans, il conviendra de la joindre au domaine du Roy, elle sera pour lors établie et Sa Majesté pourra y envoyer au lieu que si elle l'eut été à ses dépens, il lui en aurait couté des sommes et on n'y aurait peut-être pas réussi. La veuve Fornel a une compagnie et c'est ce qui convient le mieux pour les nouveaux établissements, étant plus en état de faire les avances et je suis persuadé qu'il ne manquera de quoi que ce soit au poste de Tadoussac et que le Roy sera bien payé chaque année.

Elle se prépare à faire les envois nécessaires pour l'année prochaine ; je n'en ai pas encore averti le Sr Cugnet voulant voir ce que je pourrai faire saisir dans ce poste et dans le produit pour la sureté des deniers du Roy.

The time had come to withdraw the management from Mr. Cugnet, as a result of which the King has fared badly. He has not as yet rendered his account of the administration for 1747. He constantly has excuses that he is prevent from so doing and his debts to His Majesty imperceptibly increase. I know beyond a doubt that he has made considerable withdrawals from the post. He pays none of his creditors, and, unquestionably, he has not transferred his funds to France.

Upon the expiration of the concession of Baye-des-Esquimaux which the said widow has for twelve years, it will be in order to reunite the same to the Domaine du Roy. It will then be established and His Majesty will be in a position to send there, while, should it have been at his expense, it would have cost him heavily and it might not have met with success. The widow Fornel has a company and this is what is more suitable for new establishments, she being in a better position to make the advances and I feel sure that Tadoussac post will not lack anything whatsoever and that the King will be regularly paid each year.

She is preparing to make the necessary shipments for the coming year ; I have not notified the Sr. Cugnet as yet, as I wanted to see what I shall be able to seize in this post and from the produce for the security of the King's dues.

FERME DE TADOUSSAC.

ARCHIVES OF CANADA.

CANADA, GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE, 1750, Vol. 96, p. 85.

Plus il y a de Sécurité et plus La surprise est Grande, Elle n'a pu estre qu'Extreme Lorsque vous avés prevenu Les fermiers du Domaine du Roy que Sa Majesté n'ayant pas approuvé Le Bail passé par Lanouiller Et Sanguinet notaires en datte du neuf Septembre 1749 en notre presence et en celle de Mr. Breard Controlleur de La marine ; vous avies reçu des ordres du ministre de faire un nouveau Bail par voye d'adjudication, par consequent que Le Bail actuel ne pouvoit subsister ; Sur quoy La ve fornell et compagnie prennent La Liberté de vous faire Les Representations cy apres.

Les fermiers Exposent Respectueusement, que si avec un titre aussy autentique que L'est un Bail ou autre acte, Bail et contract de pareille nature, revêtu de toutes les formes requises et prescrites par les loix, Les Contracteurs ne sont pas en sureté sur Leur Etat, il n'y aura plus a compter sur rien ; Le tout étant fondé sur les loix du Royaume par une suite de La Sagesse de nos Rois, ces mêmes Loix doivent subsister autant que Le Royaume afin que personne ne puisse Estre dans L'incertitude de son sort.

(Translation.)

Monseigneur,

The greater the security, the greater the disappointment, and it could not be otherwise than extreme when you informed the lessees of the Domaine du Roy that His Majesty had disapproved the lease passed by Lanouiller and Sanguinet, notaries, under date of 9 September, 1749, in our presence and in that of Mr. Bréard, comptroller of the Marine ; you had been instructed by the Minister to give a new lease through auction, and that consequently the present lease cannot be maintained ; whereupon Veuve Fornel et Cie. take the liberty of submitting to you the following representations.

The lessees respectfully submit that if, with as binding a title as a lease or other act, lease and contract of like nature, with all the forms required and prescribed by the statute, the contracting parties are not secured in their rights, one will not be able to rely on anything ; when everything is based on the laws of the kingdom, as a result of the wisdom of our Kings, such laws should endure as long as the kingdom, that no one may entertain any uncertainty as to his fate.

p. 3221

On pourra dire pour toute Raison que la ve fornell Et compagnie ont contracté avec le Roy et que Sa Majesté ayant le pouvoir suprême, Elle est maîtresse d'approuver ou de desapprouver ce qui pourroit avoir été fait a L'insu de ses ordres, ou contre des regles qu'Elle auroit prescrit.

Pour repondre a cette objection, Les fermiers qui ont contracté avec Monseigneur L'intendant ont ignoré jusqu'a present qu'il ne fût pas revêtu des ordres et pouvoirs necessaires ; ils n'ont pu ny du prevoir qu'il auroit fallu que la ferme du Domaine du Roy se fût donnée par voye d'adjudication, par consequent ils sont dans La bonne foy, et ils ont contracté de même, rien ne peut prouver Le contraire, et s'il y a quelque manque de formalité dans le bail dont est question ; ils n'en sont pas responsables ; D'ailleurs Le prix de La ferme a Eté asses longtems defendu ou disputé Et s'est enfin trouvé Exceder de la somme de 2500" celui de M. Cugnet ancien fermier Lequel a toujours dit, et s'est attaché a vouloir faire connoistre qu'il perdoit annuellement sur L'Exploitation desd. traittes. La ve fornel et Compagnie se seroient aisement Laissé seduire aux Raisons susdittes dud. Cugnet n'etoit L'interest particulier qu'ils avoient de poursuivre L'obtention du bail en question, a cause des difficultés que led. S. pretendoit former a L'Etablissement du poste de La baye St. Louis dont La cour a eu La bonté d'accorder La concession a La ve fornel, disant que cet Etablissement feroit un grand tort aux traittes du Domaine du Roy, et demandoit en consequence qu'il fût Deffendu aux Concessionnaires de la Baye St. Louis de faire aucune traitte avec Les Sauvages, Cependant La distance d'un Endroit a L'autre est si grande qu'il ny avoit pour des personnes Desinteressées aucune apparence que cela pût Estre. La ve fornel qui se voyoit en avance d'une Somme considerable qu'il luy en a coûté, pour

(Translation.)

It may reasonably be alleged that Veuve Fornel et Cie. have contracted with the King, and, His Majesty being the supreme authority, he is free to approve or disapprove what has been done without his instructions or in violation of any regulation that may have been ordered by him.

In response to this objection, the lessees who have contracted with Monseigneur the Intendant, were unaware until this day that he was not invested with the necessary instructions and powers ; they could not foresee that the lease of the Domaine du Roy was to be sold by auction, and therefore they are in good faith and have contracted likewise, there being no evidence to the contrary, and if the lease referred to lacks any formality, they are not liable ; Moreover the price of the lease was disputed and discussed long enough and, when finally decided, it exceeded by the sum of 2500 livres that of Mr. Cugnet, former lessee, who has always declared and been willing to assert that the operation of said lease meant to him a yearly loss. Veuve Fornel et Cie. might have been easily misled by the allegations of the aforesaid Cugnet, but for the fact that they were specially interested in obtaining the lease referred to, on account of the difficulties raised by said gentleman to the establishment of the post of Baye-St.-Louis, the concession of which the court has been pleased to grant to the widow Fornel, he alleging that such establishment would be highly detrimental to the trades of the Domaine du Roy, and he accordingly requested that the grantee of Baye-St.-Louis be prohibited from carrying on any trade with the Indians. However the distance between one place and the other is so great that, for disinterested persons, there is no indication that such could be the case. The widow Fornel, who had advanced a large sum for the discovery of this place, increased this sum by twenty-five thousand livres for the fitting out

La découverte de cet Endroit a encor augmenté cette somme d'Environ vingt cinq mil livres par L'armement d'un bâtiment qu'Elle et ses associez ont Expedié l'automne dernier 1749. Ce bâtiment n'ayant pu se rendre aud. Lieu a cause des glaces ; L'Equipage a Eté obligé d'hyverner en chemin, et ne s'est rendu au poste que dans le mois de juillet, on y a laissé quatre hommes et Led. Bastiment est arrivé en cette ville vers la fin du mois d'Aoust a rapporté pour retour Environ quatre cent peaux de martres provenant de la chasse des Engagés, et dailleurs ils n'ont pas vu dans tout Le voyage un seul Sauvage, si ce n'est des Eskimaux. Lad. veuve fornel et compagnie viennent Encor de faire partir un bâtiment pour le même endroit dans L'Esperance qu'ils auront un plus heureux succès.

Ce qui augmente La somme de Sept mil Livres du prix du Bail est que depuis qu'il est passé, Monseigneur a imposé aux fermiers actuels, de donner aux Sauvages, Les Marchandises munitions et Vivres, a un prix Beaucoup au-dessous de celui que L'ancien fermier Les donnoit, tout cela forme une Difference considerable La quelle produit cette année une perte Bien réelle a La Ve fornel et compagnie, Laquelle perte se Leve a La somme de Soixante et quinze mil trois cent trente sept Livres dix sept sols-Suivant Le Compte de dépenses et recette qu'on a L'honneur de produire, Lequel est constaté par les factures d'Envoi faits tant par M. Cugnet pour Le Dernier Envoy (Sans approbation des prix portés par ses factures) Lesquels ne sont pas Encor Replés ; que par la Ve fornel et compge dans tous les differens postes du Domaine, et Les retours qu'ils ont produits, par les Etats Signés des commis et Du me Du Bâtiment qui a Eté dans lesd. traittes, il est vray que depuis bien des années on n'a point vu ces postes produire Si peu d'huile ny des pelleteries que La presente année, on peut peutestre en Esperer une meilleur pour La prochaine, cela fondé sur ce qu'il n'y a rien de plus incertain que of a ship which she and her partners sent in the autumn of 1749 last. The ship having been unable to proceed to said place owing to ice conditions, the crew were compelled to winter on the way and only reached the post in the month of July where four men were left. The said vessel arrived in this city towards the end of the month of August, bringing a return cargo of some four hundred marten skins, the produce of the articulated men, and moreover, except some Eskimo, they did not meet a single native during the whole journey. The said Veuve Fornel et Cie. have sent another vessel to the same place in the hope that they will be more successful.

The sum of seven thousand livres, being the price of the lease, has been increased since it was signed by the fact that Monseigneur has ordered the present lessees to sell merchandise, munitions and food to the natives at a price much lower than that charged by the previous lessee, all of which makes a great difference resulting this year in a heavy loss to Veuve Fornel et Cie., which loss amounts to the sum of seventy-five thousand three hundred and thirty-seven livres, seventeen sols, according to the statement of expenditures and receipts we have had the honour to submit, and which is confirmed by the bills of shipments made both by Mr. Cugnet for the last shipment (with no certificate of the prices appearing on his bills) which have not been settled, and by Veuve Fornel et Cie. in all the various posts of the Domaine, and by the profits made on the same, also by the written statements of the clerks and of the master of the vessel employed in said trades. It is true, of course, that, for years, these posts have produced little oil and few pelts, but there being nothing so uncertain as the chase and the fisheries, La pesche et La chasse. Supposant Le Bail fini La Ve fornol Et Compge ne peuvent se flatter de Retrouver La perte que L'Exploitation de La presente année Leur cause.

Le Bail dont est question ayant Eté fait pour Six années Revetu de toutes Les formes Requises on ne peut refuser de droit Le Remboursement a La Ve fornol et Compge de Lad. Somme de Soixante et quinze mil trois cent trente sept Livres, 17 s. a quoy monte La perte que L'Exploitation desd. traittes a produit La presente année ; En outre on ne peut refuser un dedommagement a La Ve fornol et Compge pour La non jouissance du terme de son Bail, ce Dedommagement ne peut Estre moins que de deux années du prix de La ferme ce qui compose La somme de quatorze mil Livres.

Cette Somme en Elle même est peu considerable Si L'on considere Les depenses qu'il a fallu faire pour aller prendre possession de cette ferme, ainsy que pour se mettre en Etat de L'Exploiter, il a fallu Louer des magasins pour Loger Les Vivres et autres Effets, ainsy que pour Les Retours, il a fallu acheter des bâtimens de mer, Et Enfin La. Ve fornol et Compge a Eté obligé de faire toutte La Depense, Eu Egard aux Batimens et aux Marchandises fait venir de france ; comme ayant du jouir de son bail de six années ; on ne doit pas omettre Les peines et Le travail que donne La Regie de ces traittes. il faut même plus D'une année pour connoistre Les interest de ces Differens postes, ainsy que ceux des Sauvages Et Leur inclinations ; ils sont d'un naturel trop inconstant pour que L'on puisse faire fond sur Eux ; Les Sauvages qui sont sur les terres du domaine se pretendent aussy Libres que tous Leur semblables des Environs, au moyen de quoy ils vont ou il leur plaît traiter, soit aux trois Rivières, soit a Batiscan a temiscaming, a la Baye d'hudson ;

one may hope for an improvement during the coming year. Should the present lease be terminated, Veuve Fornel et Cie. cannot entertain any hope of recovering the loss they have sustained through the operations of the current year.

The lease referred to having been passed for a term of six years, and in compliance with all the formalities required, Veuve Fornel et Cie. cannot be denied their claim to the said sum of seventy-five thousand three hundred and thirty-seven livres, seventeen sols, being the loss incurred through the operations, during the first year, of the said lease ; Moreover, Veuve Fornel et Cie. cannot be refused compensation for the deprivation of enjoyment of the term of their lease, which compensation should not be less than the equivalent of two years' rent, or the sum of fourteen thousand livres.

This sum in itself is not very large considering the expenditure that had to be incurred in taking possession of this lease, as well as to be in a position to operate the same. Stores had to be rented for the housing of food and other effects, as well as for the returns, and lastly the Veuve Fornel et Cie. have had to incur the whole expenditure in connection with the vessels and merchandise imported from France ; being supposed to enjoy their lease for a term of six years, one must also take into account the difficulties and the toil involved in the management of such enterprises. It takes more than a year to become familiar with the interests of these various posts, as well as with those of the natives and their propensities ; the latter are of too fickle a disposition for any one to rely on them ; the Indians who are on the lands of the Domaine claim just as much freedom as any of their fellow-creatures in the surrounding district, and for this reason, they go and trade where they please, at Three Rivers, Batiscan, Timiskaming, or at Hudson bay ; those of the

Ceux de La Riviere Moisy vont traiter aux differens postes de Mingan, et de plus Les propriétaires de ces Endroits Envoyent des traitteurs jusques dans Le Sein Du Domaine du Roy ; il faut donc plusieurs années pour se faire connoistre des Sauvages et même s'en faire aimer, car L'un est aussy utile que L'autre ; c'est par ce point que La Ve fornel et ses associés ont commencé des L'Été dernier, en allant sur Les lieux Leur faire des presens, Les voir et Les festiner, pour s'en faire connoistre, celui qui y a Été n'a pu voir que Les Sauvages du bord de La mer, et quant a ceux des terres il leur a Envoyé des presens Et fait porter parole qu'il se trouveroit L'Été prochaine a Chéccoutimi pour les voir et Les cherir comme ses Enfants.

On a L'honneur de représenter a Monseigneur L'intendant que le changement subit de fermier ne pourra produire qu'un tres grand Dérangement clans Les traittes du domaine, Les commis, Les Engagés et les Sauvages accoutumés depuis si longtemps a obeir a un même maistre, voyant un changement nouveau ne Scauront plus a qui ils auront a faire, chacûn tirera et pourra frauder de son côté, Les Sauvages s'alieneront de Leur affection et se retireront dans les autres postes Ecartés ou L'abondance de l'Eau de vie ne Les attire deja que trop. . . ? Et enfin Les traittes de Tadoussac autres fois si vantées se reduiront a rien, et ces contrées autres fois si peuplées deviendront desertes, Car il faut observer que depuis plusieurs années les Sauvages des terres ont diminué tant par la mortalité que par le nombre de ceux qui se sont Retirés a la Baye D'hudson a cause de La cherté des Marchandises.

Dailleurs Les Bestes fauves sont presque detruittes ce qui fait que ces mêmes sauvages ont beaucoup de peine a trouver Leur subsistance dans les these places send traders as far as within the limits of the Domaine du Roy; therefore, it takes several years to get acquainted with the Indians and win them over, for one is just as necessary as the other ; that was the first thing which veuve Fornel and her partners did last summer, sending some one to them with presents to visit them, entertain them, and make himself known to them ; the person who went could only see the natives of the sea-coast but he sent them some presents and word that next summer he would be at Chicoutimi to meet them and to treat them as his own children.

We have the honour to submit to Monseigneur the Intendant that a sudden change of lessee would only lead to a very great disturbance in the trades of the Domaine. The clerks, articulated men and the natives, so long accustomed to obey the same master will be at a loss, seeing a new state of things, as to what to do, every one going where he chooses and indulging in smuggling on his own account ; the natives will become estranged in their affections and withdraw to the other isolated posts where the abundance of brandy is already too much of an attraction to them. And, lastly, the once famous trading-posts of Tadoussac will be reduced to naught, and this country, formerly so densely settled, will become deserted, for it must be pointed out that the number of Indians of the interior has decreased owing to deaths as well as to the fact that a number of them have withdrawn in Hudson bay on account of the high cost of commodities.

Moreover, the wild animal life is almost completely extinct, and, as a result, the same Indians experience great difficulties in drawing their living from the forests ; a great many dying from forests, il en meurt de faim et de misere tous les ans surtout L'hyver dernier Lequel a Ete Rude, il a peri nombre de familles ; quant a ceux du bord de La mer Le fermier Leur fournit des vivres.

Les inconveniens qui peuvent résulter de tout cecy, point de sauvages point de chasse, point de credits payés, ny par consequent de traitte à Esperer.

Autre article que Monseigneur L'intendant est supplié d'observer, c'est que dans le fait en question, supposant que le bail ne subsiste plus, tout reste en suspens, quel Derangement cela ne causera t il pas dans Les comptes, Le mois de juin dernier et apres les inventaires faits, il se trouve, que Les marchandises, ustencils Vivres etc appartiennent tant au S. Cugnet ancien fermier, qu'au nouveau ; En supposant qu'il y ait un nouveau fermier L'année prochaine tous les Effets appartiendront a trois differens fermiers Quel cahos et qu'elles difficultés cela ne produira t il pas, et quand pourra t'on en avoir La fin.

Tous les faits cy dessus allegués par La Ve fornel Et Compge ne Le sont que pour faire connoistre Le Mal, que tous ces changemens subits peuvent produire a Leur interests et a ceux du Roy, parcequ'au lieu de faire augmenter La ferme cela ne peut que La diminuer ainsy La Ve fornel et Compge soutiennent Respectueusement La validité du Bail qui Leur a Eté fait par Mondit Seigneur L'Intendant et Recu par La nouillier et Sanguinet notaires en presence de Mr Le Controlleur de La marine Le neuf Septembre mil sept cent quarante neuf, et demande que La jouissance Leur soit continuée jusqu'a La fin des six années, à deffaut persistent a demander qu'il Leur soit Remboursé et payé L'année prochaine 1751 La Somme de LXXV^m III^c XXXVII^l XVII⁸ pour raison des depenses et pertes que Leur a produit L'année de starvation and hardships every year, especially last winter which was severe, and many families perished ; as to those living on the coast, they have been supplied with food by the lessee.

The disadvantages likely to result from all this, are the following : no natives, no chase, no debts paid, and consequently no commerce to be hoped for.

Another point which Monseigneur is entreated to consider is that, in the present case, it being premised that the lease is cancelled, everything remains at a standstill ; what a disturbance would thus be occasioned in the accounts. In the month of June last and after the taking of the inventories, it happens that the merchandise, utensils, food, &c., belong both to Sieur Cugnet, the former lessee and to the new one. Should there be a new lessee next year all the effects will be the property of three different lessees. What a mess and what an embarrassment would this not give rise to, and when would one see the end of it all.

All the facts above submitted by Veuve Fornel et Cie. are only cited with a view to pointing out the injury which all such changes are liable to cause to their interests and to those of the King, for, instead of increasing the returns, they can only decrease the same.

Therefore, Veuve Fornel et Cie. respectfully contend for the validity of the lease granted to them by said Monseigneur Intendant and passed by Lanoullier and Sanguinet in the presence of the Comptroller of the Marine on the ninth of September one thousand seven hundred and forty-nine, and pray that the enjoyment thereof be continued to them until the expiration of the six years, failing which they insist upon the refund and payment, in the coming year 1751, of the sum of 75,367 livres, 17 sols covering the expenditure and losses resulting from the year during which they held the lease, and, further, the sum of 14,000 livres for the non-enjoyment of the six years still to run of the said lease. The above being what said Veuve Fornel et Cie. expect from the sense of justice and equity of Monseigneur the Intendant.

EXTRACT FROM INSTRUCTIONS, 8 MAY, 1750, INTENDANT BIGOT TO MR. GUILLIMIN.OPINION OF SOLICITOR GENERAL JENKIN WILLIAMS, 12 JUNE, 1786, AND FROM THE LATTER'S OBSERVATIONS.

ARCHIVES OF CANADA. SERIES Q, VOL. 26, p. 428.

The Paper No. 2, registered in Book No. 38, purports to be likewise a Commission dated the 8th of May, 1750.

* * * *

The said Intendant did thereby Commission Mr. Guillimin, a member of the Superior Council to proceed in his quality of Commissioner, to the Inventory & Estimations aforesaid, in the presence of the old and new Lessees, or persons empowered by them, according to the written Instructions delivered to Him.

In the same Paper No. 2, are inserted the Instructions as near as I am capable of translating them in the words following, vizt—

Written Instructions for Mr. Guillimin, a Member of the Superior Council of Quebec, appointed to make the Inventory and Estimation of the Posts of Tadoussac.

* * * *

We deliver him an account of Pere Cocquart a Jesuit Missionary at the said Posts, concerning a Chapel which was built by His Predecessors at seven Islands, which is become useless, the Savages going to attend Him at the Isle Jeremie. He will examine that building and in a particular Report state the Utility which it may be of to the Post, as there is no Storehouse there, and will have it estimated to direct us concerning the Proposition of the Missionary to sell it to the King or the second Lessee.

* * * *

The Papers No. 1, 2 & 3 induce me to imagine, that as the Posts were first managed by the Indian Companies & afterwards by the King himself, and (as may naturally be conceived) were in good condition when the King thought proper to lease them out to individuals about the year 1733 ; when the Interests of the India Company in this Country were taken by the French King into His own hands, those Interests were leased by him to the Fermiers Generaux (in France) for a term which expired in 1733. The Farmers General had deputed a Gentleman to manage their concerns here, and upon the determination of their Lease the same Gentleman was continued on the part of the King to direct and manage his Domaine. He remained in the Direction till the year 1741, when a Lease was granted to him of the Posts in question (I am not informed for what term of years) but that Gentleman dying in 1749, or perhaps his lease expiring then, a new Lease was granted to Madam Fornel for six years. There was an Inventory made out, which perhaps contained an Estimation likewise, of all the Chattels or moveable property at the different Posts, together with a correct state of the buildings perhaps estimated likewise, to be annexed to the Lease ; and that the first Lessee stipulated to Surrender them all to the King at the expiration of his Lease in the same state and Condition, or make good the deficiency in Money ; but that when a new Lease was granted it was thought proper by the Intendant, probably at the instance of the Comptroller of the Marine, to verify the state of the Posts, by ordering new Inventories to be made out ; and upon comparing the old Inventories with the new ones, to ascertain the necessary Ameliorations which might have been made (perhaps under express stipulations in the original lease, or by the subsequent Order or consent of the Crown) at the Posts. And that the same mode was pursued in 1750 after the lease had been granted to Madam Fornel ; as well as in 1755 when at the expiration of her Lease, the King thought fit to resume the Management of the Posts.

“J’ai informé, monseigneur, ces nouveaux fermiers que je résillois ce traité et qu’ils eussent à prendre en conséquence leurs arrangements. ils ont été surpris de cette rupture, et ils m’ont représenté qu’ils étoient ruinés, si je ne leur continuois pas cette ferme, attendu le peu de pelleterie et d’huile qu’il y avoit eu cette année dans des postes et que je savois être général dans tout le bas du fleuve, et vu les avances considérables qu’ils avoient fait dont ils ne pouvoient se dédomager que par quelques bonnes années.

(Translation.)

Monseigneur, I have advised these new lessees that I have cancelled this agreement and that they are to govern themselves accordingly. They were astonished at such a rupture and represented to me that they were ruined unless I continued this lease, inasmuch as little fur and oil had been obtained this year in some posts—a condition which I was aware was general throughout the lower part of the river—and seeing the large advances made by them and for which they could only be indemnified by a few successful years.

They requested that I would not consider it improper for them to submit a memoir on this subject. I have the honour to enclose same herewith along with their account.

After examining the claim set forth therein, urging that they be indemnified for the advances which they claim to have made in order to enable them to operate these posts, I have decided to defer until next year the adjudication of a new lease, and, for this year, to leave them this trade as overseers only, pending your decision as to the manner in which you may have the kindness to deal with them, or on the continuation of their lease, should you deem the same more profitable to His Majesty than renewing it or indemnifying them.

Monseigneur, that you mortified me by revoking an agreement I had passed before notaries, is humiliating for me ; it seems as though I do not enjoy your confidence, and what I am infinitely grieved at is that I have not the honour of being known by you.

entreat you, that it is the regret of seeing an agreement concluded by me revoked that induces me to speak in favour of the last lessee ; I was only concerned with the careful handling of the monies of the King who would be put to some expense in negotiating another lease and with the interests of the post which is in the hands of honest people. Besides, they are entitled to some consideration on my part on account of the establishment of the Baye-des-Eskimaux which is to be reunited to the Domaine in eleven years. They have lost at this place this year from 12,000 to 15,000 livres ; the men they sent there were unable to reach the place and nearly perished in the ice. I warned them that, should they attract there the Indians of the Domaine, they would lose this concession ; I do not think they will do so, their only object being to attract some from Hudson bay and to trade with the Eskimo.

You are to proceed with the utmost Expedition to the several Posts of the King's Domain marked in the Marg[in] or such of them as you can conveniently to.

You are to require of the Commis Clerks a faithfull account of the Fu[rs] which are in their Hands, and that [they] deliver the same to you ; it has been a usual custom that of what they have killed themselves, they give up half to the King, and other they a[re] paid for at stated prices, which the Miss[ionary] can give you an account.

You are to get from the Clerk of Ma[lbaye] an account of the Cattle upon his Fa[rm] Specifying the Species, and the Grain [he has] sown this year.

You are to procure from these Clerks [a] return of the Necessaries wanted at ea[ch] Post, and the best time & manner of providing them.

If any are Refractory, or do not comply readily with what is required of them, you will bring them with you, but such whose Behaviour you are satisfied with, you may assure, that they shall be continued in their several Employments and protected.

Finally as we have hitherto had a knowledge of that Country, and the manner of carrying on the Traffick with the Savages only from those whom we have all the Reason in the World to be diffident of, You will endeavour to examine into this matter as narrowly as the circumstances will allo[w] you, and report your observations th[ereon] to me at your Return.

My Lord

The Indian Trade is carried on belo[w] at different Posts in the Country, some belong[ing] to the King, some the private Property of Indi[viduals]. At each of the King's Posts there is a resid[ent] Clerk, who receives the Stores they are supplied i.... deals with the Indians for their Furs, and giv[es] an account of the produce every Year. By reason of our Fleet's coming into the River last Campaign, they had been ill furnishe[d] the French employed as well as Indians we[re] near Famished, and they were obliged to aba[ndon] one of the King's Posts. Least this might be [the] case with others, and as they may hereaft[er] prove a Source of Riches to our Mother Cou[ntry] not being able in our present Circumstanc[es] to attend to such Matters, I have employed this year some Gentlemen whom I could depend upon, to supply what was proper to be sent, and have given them the Profit. For this purpose I have invested Mr. Thomas Ainslie with the proper powers to traffick with these people, and he goes down with a Cargo to supply their Necessities. I must therefore Request you will give him the proper Passeports for himself and Vessell, and that you will give positive instructions to your Cruisers not to interfere or suffer any Body else to interfere in this Affair, As it requires Care and attention to manage these Savages, and we[re] they once put out of their usual Channel [of] carrying on Business, they probably would [go] off, and might prove a most difficult matter ever to regain them—Annexed I send your Lordship the names of the King's Posts, and an Inventory of the Goods I have allowed to be carried to them.

The more I consider this Affair, [the] more I think myself obliged to act as I [have] and have the Honor to be with Regard

Sir :

Hitherto I have given you an account of the affairs of this country in my military capacity, now that his Majesty has the quiet possession of it I imagine it will not be disagreeable to know what I have learnt concerning it in other respects.

* * * *

Sic.

In my Government I have open'd the fur trade to all ranks of men with out distinction, it was, as I have observed formerly confined to few. I shall give particular attention to the Indians, and that they are not cheated, or abused by the Traders and I have not hitherto allow'd the vending of Spirituous liquors so distractive to the Troops, and all in general of which some of our provinces are melancholy examples. I have sent Detachments to the Kings posts of Tadasack, Chicutimi, the Sept Isles, and those of Jeremi and have appointed M. Ainsley Agent for his Majesty in those posts. The French King used to let them for six or seven hundred livers p^r an but I am informed they should yeald a much greater rent, of late years the King occupy'd them by his own comis, & they surrender'd to me five or six days after the raising of the seige of Quebec but His Majestys Magazines were afterwards seized by the Navy, and the furs to the amount of 1600 pounds were sold by Lord Colvils orders, & deem'd lawfull prise. I remonstrated Against this proceeding, and claim'd it for the King. I have [39] the honor to enclosed ² the papers relative to this affair, & I hope for the future there will be such orders and laws established for this country that the inhabitants may depend upon the faith of the British Governor. I have had no dispute with the gentlemen of the navey about this matter. I am too sensible how essential it is for the Kings affairs that a constant harmony should subsist betwixt the two services, and therefore I think it indispensibly my duty to lay this matter before you for your decision.

Sir :

By the Mail which arrivd from New York yesterday I had the honor to receive your letter of the 27th Oct^r. acquainting me of the melancholy news of the sudden death of the late King and this day his present Majesty was proclaimd in my Government in English at the head of the troops and in french to his Majestys Canadian Subjects.

* * * *

Since I had the honor to write to you last nothing extraordinary has happend here except the murder of two Tadasac Indians by John Collins Master of a New York Schooner which was wreckd near the mouth of the river Saguiney in attempting to make this Port.

I confind Collins upon his arrival here, he confessd the fact but declard it proceeded from self defence, which may be true, tho circumstances were against this opinion, and would induce me to think him entirely to blame had he not a very good character from many creditable people now residing in this town. By the intercession of the Hurons of Lorrette this affair has been accommodated to the satisfaction of the Savages consistant with the safety of the Prisoner and the dignity & justice of the British Government. In the course of this treaty the Savages desird I would acquaint all the King's Subjects that they having submitted [61] [sic.] to his Majesty's Governmt expected his Protection and to be exempted for the future from the insults of the crews of the ships trading in the river. I have in consequence begd of Gen'. Amherst to publish this request in the manner he shall think proper to his Majestys Colonies, and if it was hinted to the Vessels from Europe disorders may be prevented which when they happen Allienate the affections of the Indians and confirm them in the bad opinion of the English nation the French have assiduously endeavoured to instill into them.

Dear Sir :

I have waited some time for the arrival of a packet, but none comes, and as there is intelligence here, of her having sailed from England on 29th December, there is too much reason to apprehend some accident has happened to her, so I shall not delay any longer answering your several letters, which I proposed to have done, at the same time that I sent you what arrived by the packet, besides I have now an opportunity of sending this by an officer of the 48th who is going to join his regiment.

I am glad you have made up the affair of the murder of the two Tadousac Indians, the Master of the Schooner is an inhabitant of this place, has a good character and the affair being accommodated, gives great pleasure to people here.

General Gage has acquainted me that he has discovered the King has a right to the fifth of the sales of all Fiefs or Lordships, likewise to Fines of Alienations, upon all exchanges of inheritance, amongst the inhabitants, and that in consequence he would propose an ordonnance, to be published in support of those rights, and to obligate all new seigneurs to do homage for their manors according to custom. I have begged of him to send information to you and Colonel Burton of every thing he does on this head, and you will please to pursue the same measures, as far as you shall think adviseable and applicable to your Government. THOS. AINSLIE TO THE INSPECTOR GENERAL, REPORTING ON HIS PROCEEDINGS IN 1760-1762.

Sir,—

In answer to your favour of the 5th Instant I beg leave to acquaint you that in June 1760 Our then Governor, General Murray was pleased to appoint me his Majesty's Agent of the Domaine on the North side of the River St. Lawrence; and directed that I should provide myself with a Vessel and all the necessaries for these Posts; go down, & take the savages of that Domaine under the protection of the King.

I accordingly made the necessary provision, and sailed about the end of July following accompanied by the Revd. Mr.
Cocquart the priest who had the charge of these particular Tribes. On our arrival at Malbaye I had an account of the farm and the Stock on
it. . . .

In June 1761 I went down again visited the posts posts of Malbaye, Tadoussac, Chicoutimi, & Isles Jeremie. I found them all in such repair as prevented request from the Commis for Materials. At Chicoutimi I had engaged to meet the Indians of St Johns, Chummumchuan & Mistacine¹ & some others on the 24th June 1762 at their request, this appointment I was not disposed to Brake, therefore mentioned it to the Governor, who approved of it and directed me to signify this to Collect the Commis when I sent down the supplys. That fall I went to England and being later in returning i[n] 1762 than I expected His Excellency was pleased to send down Mr. John Gray to supply my place & meet the Indians at Chicoutimi from whence & all the other posts he brought up the Returns to Quebec.

About the 25th July 1762 being off the Seven Islands in the Lord Anson on my return to Quebec, I quitted her and Went a shore near Egg Island, where I mett with two Indian Boys belonging to the Isles Jeremie with whome I went there and, from thence, in a canoe to Tadoussac & so to Quebec about the beginning of August. I enquired of Gariepi & Hervieux the Commis of these posts how matters were, & he acquainted me of Mr. Grays Visite. As I did not know his Excellencys intention of making any alteration, I enquired if they wanted any thing, & they answered No. At that time the posts of Kings Domaine were in good repair, & the people free of complaint, tho they had in addition to their number of Lieut Fortye of the 35th Regt. with thirty Men Quartered at Tadoissac [sic.], Chicoutimi, & Isles Jeremie.

On my arrival at Quebec His Excellency intimated to me his intentions of Leasing the posts to Mr. Gray, whom he directed to settle with & pay me the outfitts, in October 1761 together with my sallary amounted to £2721..6..0 Currency which he did the October following ; & Mr. Gray receiv'd the posts in September 1762 not in the state I left them without any Inventory from me or any compensation made on behalf of the Crown at the settlement except my Sallary & Outfits as above, which closed the Transaction.

If any explanation of this Letter should be thought necessary for the further Information of the Commander in Chief or of you as Inspr of His Majesty's Domaine I shall think it my duty to wait on you

DUNN AND GRAY REQUEST CONFIRMATION OF THEIR LEASE OF THE KING'S POSTS, 21 JANUARY, 1764.

ARCHIVES OF CANADA. COLONIAL OFFICE PAPERS, VOL. I, p. 166.

London 21 January 1764.

My Lords

When I had the honour of appearing yesterday before Your Lordships, being unacquainted with the real matters contained in the Petition of Mr. Mirrie¹ and others until it was read before the Board and unequal to the task of speaking with that directness & propriety in public, which might have been necessary upon that Occasion ; I beg leave to lay before Your Lordships, a few circumstances, which have since occurred to me, relating to the Posts of the Kings Domain, in Canada and a copy of a Memorial which I presented to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, on that Subject, having been informed, that it came naturally under their Consideration as a part of the Revenue, which was the reason it was not immediately laid before Your Lordships.

By the present system of management, in these Posts, the Indians are peaceable, and satisfied with their situation, and their friendship secured to the Crown, without any expence to the Government, with an addition to the Revenue, of Four hundred pounds per annum. By laying them open, the expence of presents, and the appointments of the several Commissarys that will be needful at the different Posts, may amount, to one thousand pounds a year, as a certain charge, on the Government ; and it cannot consist with the interest of any Individual of the number that will goe to these places, when the trade to them becomes general, to have stores of Goods & provisions, lodged there for the whole year, as is now the case; and it is to be feared, the want of that resource they have always had, may occasion discontents among the Indians, the consequences of which, may be difficult to obviate. Besides, as the limits of the barren Country they inhabit, are very extensive, it will be next to impossible to prevent the lower Class of people from making journeys privately, into the interior distant parts of it, and committing abuses of a dangerous nature, and which in the present case, has seldom been attempted, but never without detection.

These particulars I have taken the liberty to lay before your Lordships, not from any view, to insinuate the propriety of continuing the Posts, as heretofore, if the consequences, I have suggested can be avoided by a different Plan ; But as the lease, granted to me and my Partners, for one year certain, and fourteen if approved by the Government with power in us to relinquish it, upon giving twelve months notice, not only carried a probability, from appearances, of our enjoying the lease for some years longer, but also the necessary measures followed, for preserving the friendship of the Indians, led us unavoidably into a very large expence, of advancing them Goods and necessarys upon Credit, besides the charge of building and repairing dwelling and Storehouses, which had been rifled or destroyed by the Privateers, in the time of the Late war, with many utensils and materials, we were obliged to lay in, to a considerable value, and which if the Posts are immediately laid open, can serve for no other purpose, and will therefore be almost a total loss; I'm encouraged to hope from these Facts which may be made appear more fully if needful, that your Lordships will be pleased to take our case into Consideration, being singularly hard upon us, And if it should be found expedient to alter the present establishment of the Posts, to Grant us a reasonable time to retire our Debts and Effects, which otherwise will be impracticable for us. but a certain, Severe, and heavy Loss. I have the honor to be with the most profound respect

My Lords

Your Lordships most Obedient &
most humble Servant

MEMORIAL TO THE LORDS, COMMISSIONERS OF THE TREASURY BY RICHARD MURRAY JOHN GRAY & THOMAS DUNN.

ARCHIVES OF CANADA. COLONIAL OFFICE PAPERS, VOL. I, p. 169.

To the Right Honble the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury.

The Memorial of Richard Murray John Gray & Thomas Dunn.

Humbly Sheweth

That Your Memorialists being Residenters in Canada, have for some time farmed the Posts of the Kings Domain, situated on the north Side of the River St. Lawrence, commonly known by the names of Tadoussac, Chicoutimy, Jeremies and Seven Islands which are places of Rendezvous for some Tribes of Indians inhabiting the northern parts of lower Canada, whither they resort to trade for European Commodities and provisions; for which Your Memorialists pay at the rate of four hundred Pounds p. annum, being the highest offer. The Country these Indians inhabit being altogether incapable of Cultivation, and the hunting Season lasting but for about Six months in the year, they are reduced to an entire dependance for support, the rest of the time, upon the supplys brought them by the Traders.

They are naturally a very inconsiderate people, and were they indulged with Spirituous Liquors and other superfluities, to which they are unconquerably addicted, they would in a few weeks, consume the whole produce of their years labour, and on the approach of the rigorous winter find themselves naked and exposed to the utmost misery, and wreak their vengeance indiscriminately on the first Europeans or other white people they met with, as the immediate authors of their misfortune. On this Account the Persons farming these posts are obliged by the tenor of their Lease to furnish them with necessaries and provisions in proportion to their real wants and circumstances and as they are often sick or unsuccessful, to give them Credit, and support their Familys, until fortune puts it in their power to pay, And in ease of death, to maintain their Widows and Orphans, till they are capable of providing for themselves, But should these Posts be laid open, numbers of people void of principle, and who have no Characters to Lose, would croud in among them, with a view to take advantage of their Simplicity, and deprive them of those Resources they are now often obliged to have recourse to, for one half of the year.

The French who more than any other Nation, seem to have study'd the nature & genius of the Indians were sensible of these disadvantages & therefore established Factors, or obliged the Farmers to do so, at the Posts above mentioned, to supply the Savages abundantly with what their necessities reasonably Required, Common rates were fixed and agreed upon, for the exchange of every Commoditie, so that the Indian knew the Standard value of whatever he brought to market. The Leasees were restricted as to the quantity of Spirits, they were allowed to distribute among them. All others were excluded from a Commerce in these Posts, for the better maintainance of Good order, and Securing their affections, for by this means the Offenders could be immediately detected, in case any injury or injustice were offered to this ignorant, unwary but vindictive people.

The present Governor, General Murray, sensible of the propriety of this method of managing the Indians, in that quarter of the Country, and in consequence of their own Solicitations, as well as to prevent abuses, which might have had dangerous effects, thought proper hitherto, to continue them on the same footing as formerly. He has by this means, conciliated the minds of the Savages to his Government, in so much, that when an universal revolt appears to have been entered into, by all the other Indian nations in North America those immediately under his jurisdiction, have not only remained faithful and peaceable, but when earnestly solicited to join the disaffected Tribes, they firmly declared they had no wish to change their Masters, as they had at no time before, met with better Treatment or more Justice, than since the English have been in possession of Canada.

Your Memorialists humbly hope, that as they have had the farming of these Posts for some time past, and are now Recommended by His Excellency Governor Murray, on Account of their experience, and the Satisfaction they have hitherto given, Your Lordships will be pleased, upon finding the expediency of keeping these Posts, under the same regulations as heretofore, to Grant them a Lease, for such a number of years, and on such Conditions, as Your Lordships shall judge proper. All of which is humbly submitted &c &c &c.

PETITION OF MESSRS. DUNN AND GRAY TO GOVERNOR MURRAY, 9 MARCH, 1765.

[9 March, 1765.]

ARCHIVES OF CANADA, SERIES Q, VOL. 3, pp. 299-302.

To His Excellency the Honble James Murray Esquire, Captain General and Governor in Chief of the Province of Quebec &c. &c. &c. and the Honorable the Council for His Majesty in said Province.

The Petition of Thomas Dunn & John Gray.

Humbly Sheweth

That your Petitioners have for these two years past been Lessees of the Posts of the King's Domain in this Province according to their antient Limits, by virtue of a Lease granted to them on the part of His Majesty, for one year certain, and for fourteen years, if approved of by the King, reserving a power in his said Majesty to annul the Lease upon giving your Petitioners Six Months Notice before the Commencement of any subsequent Year, and in the Lessees to relinquish their Lease upon giving twelve Months Notice to His Majesty's Governor of this Province for the time being, And in default of the said Notice being given on either side, then the Lease to continue and be in force during and until the Expiration of the said ensuing or subsequent Year.

That your Petitioners had occasion to show their Lease and explain the nature of it to the Board of Trade in England last Year, with the received Opinions and given Motives of the French Government formerly in this Province, for that Method of conducting the Posts of the King's Domain ; and also the state of them when this Country was conquered, which rendered their being continued upon the same footing necessary, until His Majesty's pleasure should be known in that behalf. Upon this Occasion their Lordships were pleased to observe, that the Lease was very proper, very prudently and cautiously made, and under such Circumstances every reasonable Power reserved to His Majesty.

That your Petitioners in faith of their Lease Strengthen'd and encouraged by this Just declaration from their Lordships of the Board of Trade, have equipped and supplied the Indians of the Domain for this present Year to a very large amount, the Returns for which they cannot come at, before the

p. 3245

Month of September next at soonest, and as they have not received warning of His Majesty's Intentions to lay the Posts of the Domain open, until the present Year was commenced, several Months thereof elapsed, and all their advances made to the Indians, and as the laying them immediately open must inevitably and totally ruin your Petitioners ;

Well assured that neither His Majesty, His Ministry, nor the Legislative Body of any of his Colonies or Provinces, when duly informed of the Merits of their request, will see Individuals destroyed and ruined especially where no Injury to the publick can ensue by supporting them in their claim.

Your Petitioners humbly pray and earnestly beseech Your Excellency and Honors not only for their own sakes, but in behalf of their Creditors, and Correspondents, who otherwise must suffer as well as your Petitioners, that They may be allowed the fair Benefit which Justice entitles them to, by granting them your Protection and Support in the uninterrupted possession and enjoyment of their Lease, until the end of this Year, which elapses the first day of October next.

And your Petitioners shall ever pray &c. &c.

Monsieur,

Je viens de recevoir une députation de mes sauvages qui m'a beaucoup surpris; et par leurs discours, Ils m'ont témoigné encore plus d'étonnement que je n'en avois moi-même. Mon père, m'ont ils dit avec un peu d'émotion nous apprenons qu'on veut donner nos terres, non pas seulement pour y venir traiter, mais les donner en propriété, une partie à L'un, une partie à L'autre, en sorte que nous serons depouillé de ce que nous possédons: Car tu scais, mon père, que nous avons chacun notre terrain, nos grands pères L'ont eu avant nous, ils L'ont laissé à leurs Enfants, nous en jouissons aujourd'huy. Pierre ne vas pas chasser sur les terres de Jacques, nous le traittons de voleurs Lorsqu'il a été tendre des chemins de Martres ou qu'il a détruit des chaussées de castor sur ce terrain qui nous appartient ou veut'on que nous nous retirions si nous n'avons pas les bords de la mer pour nous. Il faudra donc payer à ces propriétaires pour avoir La vie que nous trouvons en Été dans les rivieres [sic.] et dans les Lacs proche du fleuve, car on ne nous laissera ni chasser ni pescher sans payer quelque chose pour en avoir la permission. tu scais, Mon père, quo nous avons bien de la peine à vivre : et si on nous vend notre vie que veut-on que nous devenions? Sont ce la les promesses

MONSIEUR :—

To my surprise, I have received a deputation of my Indians and, by their statements, they prove that they are more astonished than I am. With some emotion, they said to me : My father, we learn that our lands are to be given away not only for the fur trade but to grant them in fee simple, part to one and part to another in such a way that we will be despoiled of our possessions. But you know, my father, that we have each our own district which our grandfathers had before us. They have bequeathed them to their children and we hold them to-day. Pierre does not hunt on the lands owned by Jacques. He would be treated as a thief. When he has set traps in the marten paths or has broken into the beaver houses in the district which belongs to us, where shall we live if we have not the sea-shore?

It will be necessary, therefore, to compensate the proprietors for the wild life that we find in the summer in the rivers and in the lakes near the large rivers. The owners will not surrender the hunting or the fishing unless they are compensated for the surrender. You know, my father, that we have much difficulty in making a living; and if our wild life is sold, what will become of que nous que nous a fait faire notre pere Le Roy d'Angleterre; toy, mon père, tu nous a dis que son intention estoit de nous faire jouir des avantages de la paix comme ses autres sujets, nous esperons qu'il voudra bien nous tenir la parole qu'il nous a fait donner, nous reconnoissons Le Roy d'Angleterre pour notre pere et notre Maitre nous voulons Luy obéir, et Luy etre fideles mais il nous permettra de luy représenter que depuis Cent Cinquante Ans, et au dela, C'est a dire bien avant que Ceux de L'autre bord, (les Européens) soient venus s'emparer de ce pays, nos Pères et nous avons toujours habités les Terres que nous habitons aujourd'hui, les bords de la mer et La profondeur pour La chasse tant en hyver qu'en été. Il est vray que le Roy de france a pris cette terre pour Luy, mais ca été pour nous la conserver, nous étions ses enfants, Il nous regardois comme tels, et il chargeoit quelcun de nous donner nos besoins pour La vie et pour L'habit. nous donnions a Celui qu'il avait chargé de Ce soin nos Pelleteries, et tout ce qui provenoit de notre chasse: nous étions tranquiles, nous chassions sans nous embarasser qui faisait la paix ou la guerre. aujourd'hui notre Père Le Roy d'Angleterre a fait par Les armes la Conquête de Ce pays, Ce pays Luy appartient donc: C'etoient des terres que le Roy de france s'etois reservées elles appartiennent aujourd'hui a notre Pere le Roy d'Angleterre, qu'il les prenne donc, qu'il se les reserve nous voulons etre ses enfants, et nous Luy serons toujours fideles: nous demandons seulement qu'il nous fasse chasser tranquillement et sans Inquiétude, que nous n'ayions à repondre qu'a luy ou au chef qu'il mettra a québec pour nous gouverner, mais qu'il ne permette pas que l'on donne ou vende nos terres a plusieurs particuliers. Nous avons toujours été nation libre, et nous deviendrons Esclaves, ce qui nous seroit bien dur, après avoir us? Are these the promises that have been made to us by the King of England? Thou, my father, hast stated that it was his intention that we enjoy the advantages of peace as we are his subjects and we hope that he will keep his promises to us. We recognise the King of England as our father and master. We are willing to obey him and to be faithful but he will allow us to represent that, 150 years ago and more, that is to say, a very long time ago, people from the other side (Europeans) took possession of this country. Our fathers and we ourselves have been inhabitants of the lands that we occupy to-day, of the sea-shores and of the interior for hunting in winter and summer. It is true that the King of France has taken this land for himself but it was to conserve it for us. We were his children. He considered us as such and he charged somebody to give us the necessaries of life and clothing and we were assigned to the one in charge (the Governor) that he might take care of our health and all that we obtained from our hunting. We were not worrying. We hunted without being concerned as to who was at peace or at war. To-day, our father the King of England has taken this country by conquest and it belongs to him. These lands that the King of France had reserved for himself, belong to-day to our father the King of England so he may take them and reserve them. We are willing to be his children and we will always be faithful to him. We only ask that he permit us to hunt in peace and without interference and that we be not answerable to anybody or to the chief that he places at Quebec to govern us but that he do not alienate our lands to various individuals. We have always been a free nation and we would become slaves which would be very hard after being free so long. This, my father, is what, at present, we desire to tell jouis si Longtemps de notre Liberté: Voila, mon père ce que nous voulions te dire jusqu'a présent. au reste nous allons penser tous en Commun, et si nous trouvons necessaire de te faire de nouvelles representations, nous to Les ferons. tu es notre père, nous ne connoissons ny notre père ny les chefs qu'il a mis pour nous commander C'est a toy a prendre soin de tes Enfants, nous te prions donc de faire connoitre à notre chef de Québec nos sentiments, afin qu'il écrive à notre père le Roy d'Angleterre notre scituation et nos besoins; nous voulons etre ses enfants et nous le serons a quelque prix que ce soit.

Voila, Monsieur les representation de mes sauvages telle qu'elle est; je Les soumets à la sagesse et la prudence de Votre Excellence, mais Jay cru etre obligé de vous en faire part pour vous Instruire de tout ce qui se passe

To the Hon'ble Members of His Majesty's Council appointed as a Committee to enquire into the present State of the posts of His Majesty's Domain.

The Memorial of the Lessees

1763.
Oct^r7th

Thomas Dunn & W^m. Grant.

Your Honors having thought proper to communicate to us a Memorial from Mr. Joseph Howard and others relative to the Posts of His Majesty's Domain, We beg leave to give you a Detail of what Occurs to us at present on that head, since the commencement of our Lease.

Jan^y31st

His Excellency Governor Murray granted to Thomas Dunn and John Gray, a Lease for a certain number of years of the Posts, formerly known in this Country by the Name of King's Posts or Domain, on several conditions which will more fully appear by the Lease.

In March.

His Majesty was pleased to issue His Royal Proclamation signifying His pleasure with Regard to North America, and enjoining that the Trade with the Indians described therein might be free and open to all His Subjects.

His Excellency Governor Murray in Council Issued a Proclamation (in consequence of that of the King last before mentioned) setting forth, " That Hostilities were now ceased with the several Indian Nations, who lately appeared in Arms against His Majesty ; and a friendly Intercourse between His Majesty's Subjects and them thereby restored" : Publishes and declares, " That the Trade with the Several Indian Nations living under His Majesty's Protection was free and open to all his Subjects, under the restrictions mention'd in the said Royal Proclamation."

October
1765.

Mess^{rs}. Rotote & Launier Merch^{ts} in this City misunderstanding the above recited Proclamations applied to the Gov^r and Council " For Liberty to Trade with the Indians of His Majesty's said Domain," which His Excellency and Council thought proper to refuse : Nevertheless in order to gain time for knowing His Majesty's express commands respecting his said Domain, and also to prevent more applications untill his pleasure could be known, He requested the Lessees to write him the Memorial.

October.

p. 3252

1766.

In consequence of which His Excellency the Governor inserted the advertisement, B, in the Quebec Gazette.

March 21st.

Mess^{rs}. Alsop & Co. Merchants (in this City) applied to Government for a permission to Trade with the Indians of His Majesty's Domain, which was refused ; they then desired a general Pass as given to His Majesty's other Subjects ; this they immediately obtained. At same time the Secretary of the Province by command of the Gov^r adverted to them, “ That they were strictly forbid and at their peril to Trade at the Posts of the King's Domain.

May.

The acting Receiver General by express desire of His Excellency the Gov^r received the Rent of this year, and gave the Lessees his receipt for the same in the usual Form.

His Majesty's Receiver General Thomas Mills Esq^r on receiving his Instructions from the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury wrote his Excellency Gov^r Murray and the then Acting Receiver General, “ That he was appointed to receive His Majesty's Revenues, and to take care of his Domain and Estates in Canada, And particularly to enquire and examine into the Lease made of the Posts of His Majesty's Domain to a Company of Merchants.

June.

Your Memorialists and the acting Receiver General in Conjunction informed the Gov^r and Council “ That, notwithstanding the order signified to Mess^{rs} Alsop & Co. by the Secretary of the Province in October 1765, as above mentioned, * Mr. Edward Chinn had gone to the said Posts, traded with the Indians, to the great detriment of the Lessees, and without leave of Government, or that of the Lessees, had erected buildings at Chicoutimy ;” And farther, “ That at this very time they had entered at the Custom House Goods and Materials to build Houses, and desired the same to be cleared out for His Majesty's Domain.”

July.

August.

This the Collector and Comptroller will prove.

In consequence of the last aforesaid application ; His Excellency and Council intimated and Strictly forbid Mr. Alsop to Erect buildings on His Majesty's said Domain, which was signified to him by the Secretary of the Province.

Octo^r 11th.

Thomas Mills Esq^r Receiver General arrived ; who, after having examined the said Lease, Published in the Gazette his advertisement, dated the 9th August, To the End that the Lessees might quietly and peaceably enjoy their Said Lease, and that His Majesty's Revenue might not suffer.

A Warrant was Issued by the Hon'ble Paulus Emilius Irving Esq^r Commander in Chief of the Province in Council, ordering Peter Stuart Esq^r (agent for the Lessees and Resident at the said Posts,) “ To take down and remove all Buildings, which were or should be erected by Messrs Alsop & Co. their Agents, or others, on His Majesty's said Domain.

One of your said Memorialists, to his great astonishment was informed by a Committee of His Majesty's Council then assembled, That a Warrant had been granted to M^r. Alsop or his Associates to suspend the execution of the former Warrant given to M^r. (Stuart) Stuart.

Your Memorialists now beg leave to make such Remarks as Naturally Occur to them on this Occasion.

The Lessees continued uninterrupted in the enjoyment of their Lease from the date thereof 1762 untill Nov^r 1765, when Mess^{rs} Chinn & C^o, contrary and in defiance of Government went to said Posts to Trade with the Indians, and to debauch their Morals by the Sale of Spirituous Liquors, Strictly forbid by an Ordinance of this Province.

Your Memorialists cannot conceive, that His Majesty's Proclamation in 1763, nor that of Gov^r Murray two years thereafter, in the least affects their Lease. It cannot be presumed, that the Lessees by their Memorials of March 1765 meant to hurt themselves, Nor that the Gov^{rs} advertisement of 14th of said Month could be with an Intent to lay open the posts, otherwise many of His Majesty's Subjects, besides Mess^{rs} Alsop & C^o. would have taken advantage thereof : And the Acting Receiver General by Express Orders from the Governor would not, had that been the meaning of Government, have presumed to receive the Rent ; nor can it be supposed, that his Majesty has given up to the Public that part of His private Estate and Domain, when the Contrary evidently appears from the Advertisement published in the Gazette by the Receiver General aforesaid.

Your Memorialists never understood, that any past Action of Government was with an intent to annul their Lease ; on the contrary every step, untill the Suspension of the Warrant to Mr. Stuart was evidently with a View to protect the Lessees, who still hope and expect the Protection and Justice which their Lease entitles them to, as they have hitherto and always will carefully fulfill every Covenant & Condition thereof.

Your Memorialists have only now to Request, that your Honors will be pleased, after considering the above premises, to lay this Memorial before his Honor the Lieut^t Governor in Council.

The King's Posts and trades commonly known as the Traité de Tadoussac, begin at Cape aux Oyes, adjacent to Les Eboulements and extend along the north shore of the river as far as cape Cormorant, fifteen leagues above Seven Islands. Malbaye was acquired by my father some thirty or thirty-five years ago from Messieurs Harens, owners of the same, at the price of 25,000 livres, for the King's account, on the assumption that its farms would supply the various posts with the flour, pork, "baafre," butter, fats and lumber required by them. One of the chief inducements to purchase that seigniory was the fear that the owners of the same might trade with the Indians of the King's Posts, there being at Malbaye a small river which afforded a means of communication with the Saguenay. Since that time, it has formed part of the King's Posts and trades, and has always materially facilitated operations therein.

This deed of reunion should be in the records of the office of the Intendant. Presumably, the Aubert family, heirs of that seigniory, incurred losses from that time.

Seven Islands or River Noisy was also reunited to the Domaine at my father's request, being taken from the concession, as a seigniory, of Terre Ferme de Mingan belonging to the heirs Bissot by an ordinance of Mr. Hocquart, Intendant, as far as cape Cormorant, 35 leagues lower than Havre de Nicolas, to which reunion the heirs Bissot raised no objection at the time, they having no establishment in this area.

This formed an extent of land along the river of 97 leagues in front by some 190 leagues in depth as known.

lishment they always had been operated and managed by my father for the King's account, in his position as Director and Receiver-General of the Domaine, up to the year 1744 or 1745 when they were rented to him in recognition of his services as Premier Conseiller in the Superior Council of this colony, at 4,500 livres per year, and the profits therefrom made up to some extent the losses he had suffered in connection with the St. Maurice ironworks.

Upon his death they were leased to Mlle. Fornel et Cie. for five years, but they derived no profit from the same, owing to mismanagement and too free a distribution of brandy to the Indians, which caused the ruination of several families.

Since 1716, they were managed for the King's account, by the Director of the Domaine, and this condition prevailed up to the conquest.

When these posts were under my father's management, the Indians numbered 200 families. The clerks were strictly prohibited from giving any brandy to the Indians excepting in case of emergency and then always in very small quantity. And the equipment of the said posts amounted to front 100,000 to 110,000 livres, while the returns averaged from 130,000 to 140,000 livres a year.

THE TRADE OF TADOUSSAC, ETC.

QUEBEC GAZETTE, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1768.

By the Honorable Guy Carleton, Lieutenant-Governor and Commander in Chief of the Province of Quebec, Brigadier-General of His Majesty's Forces, &c. &c.

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas I have received an Order of his Majesty in Council, dated the 26th Day of June, 1767, in the Words following, viz.

At the Court at St. James's,
The 26th Day of June, 1767.

PRESENT,

The King's Most Excellent Majesty.

Arch-Bishop of Canterbury,	Earl of Harcourt,
Lord President,	Earl of Shelburne,
Duke of Grafton,	Viscount Townshend,
Duke of Queensberry,	Viscount Howe,
Lord Steward,	Viscount Barrington,
Earl of Huntingdon,	Viscount Clare,
Earl of Denbigh,	Viscount Villiers,
Earl of Litchfield,	Lord Sandys,
Earl of Cholmondeley,	James Stuart Mackenzie, Esq.,
Earl of Marchmont,	James Oswald, Esq.,
Earl of Bristol,	Sir Edward Hawke,
Earl of Ashburnham,

Whereas there was this Day read at the Board, a Report from the Right Honourable the Lords of the Committee of Council for Plantation Affairs, dated the 12th of this Instant, in the Words following, viz.

p. 3259

“ Your Majesty having been pleased, by your Order in Council, of the third of December last, to refer unto this Committee, the humble Petition of Anthony Merry, of London, Merchant, in Behalf of himself, George Allsopp, Joseph Howard, and Edward Chinn, Merchants, and Inhabitants of your Majesty's Province of Canada, in North-America, setting forth, amongst other Things, That, in Consequence of your Majesty's Royal Proclamation, of the 7th of October, 1763, and of another Proclamation, issued in Your Majesty's Name, by his Excellency General Murray, Governor of Quebec, on the 31st of January, 1765, the petitioners were encouraged to load a Vessel with sundry Merchandize, provide Canoes, and every Thing necessary and proper for carrying on the Trade with the Indians, at a Place called the King's Posts of Tadousac and Chegotimi, on the River Saguenay, in the Neighbourhood of Lake St. John, and having built a Shed, or Ware-house, for the Reception of their Goods, and at a very considerable Expence, established themselves, gained the Indians to their Interest, and made a Settlement on Lake St. John, they were prohibited from prosecuting their Plan, by your Majesty's Receiver-General, and the President and Council of Quebec ; and humbly praying, That your Majesty will be graciously pleased to grant them an Order for Liberty to dispose of such Goods as they had sent up, or your Majesty's Royal Mandate for a Grant of such Lands as are mentioned in a Petition presented by then to Governor Murray, or to be otherwise relieved in the Premises.

“ The Lords of the Committee, in Obedience to your Majesty's said Order of Reference, this Day took the said Petition, together with a Report made thereupon, by the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, dated the second of this Instant, into their Consideration, and do agree humbly to report to your Majesty, as their Opinion, that the Petitioners had no Right, by your Majesty's Proclamation of the 7th of October, 1763, to trade at the Posts of the Royal Domain at Tadousac and Chegotimi, on the River Saguenay, in the Province of Canada, or to erect any Magazines, or make any Establishment for the Purpose of Trade there, and that your Majesty's Right thereto ought to be considered as excluded from the general Right of Free Trade, granted by the said Proclamation, and ought to be carried on only by your Majesty's Lessees, under your particular Licence for that Purpose, and that the Buildings and Magazines erected at the said Posts by the Petitioners should be demolished, and that the Goods sent there by the Petitioners be returned to them, notwithstanding the Manner in which they conveyed them thither : And their Lordships humbly submit to your Majesty, that the said Petition of Anthony Merry, and others, should be dismissed.”

His Majesty taking the same into Consideration, was pleased, with the Advice of his Privy Council, to approve thereof, and to order, as it is hereby ordered, that the Buildings and Magazines erected at the said Posts by the Petitioners be demolished, and that the Goods sent there by the Petitioners be returned to them : And it is hereby further ordered, That the said Petition of Anthony Merry, and others, be dismissed this Board, whereof the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, or Commander in Chief of his Majesty's Province of Quebec, for the Time being, and all others whom it may concern, are to take Notice and govern themselves accordingly.

W. BLAIR.

12th July, 1768.

All Persons are therefore required to pay due Obedience to this His Majesty's Order, in Council, and govern themselves accordingly, as they will answer the Contrary to their Peril.

Given under my Hand and Seal at Arms, at the Castle of St. Louis, in the City of Quebec, this Twenty-seventh Day of September, in the Eighth Year of his Majesty's Reign, and in the Year of our Lord, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Sixty-eight.

PRAYING FOR A RENEWAL OF THEIR LEASE FOR TEN YEARS.

ARCHIVES OF CANADA, SERIES Q VOL. 24, p. 338 (in LIEUT.- GOVERNOR HAMILTON'S DISPATCH, 26 MAY, 1785.)

To the Honorable Henry Hamilton Esquire Lieutenant Governor and Commander in Chief in and over His Majesty's Province of Quebec &ca.

The Memorial of Thomas Dunn, William Grant and Peter Stuart Esqrs. Lessees of the Posts of the Kings Domain, situated on the North side of the River Saint Lawrence.

Humbly Sheweth

That Your Memorialists became possessed of the Right to the trade with the Indians at the Kings Posts in Virtue of Lease bearing date the Twentyeth day of September 1762. That since that period they have been at very great charge & trouble in supporting their trade and in their Care of Indians, residing in and near and resorting to the said Domain and Posts.

That at their sole expense, they have carefully attended to, supported and maintained the Aged, and Infirm, the Widows and Orphans ; the distressed Indians residing on the King's Domain have been relieved and supported by your Memorialists, without becoming a burthen or Expence to Government, and which Your Honor must be sensible is not the case with any tribe of the Indians in the Province except those above mentioned, and this they have done without Obligatory Conditions expressed in their Lease, and by it they hoped to have Obtained the most Ample protection when in their Occupancy, and the favor of the Crown to continue its Lessees on a renewed Lease when the first expired.

His Majesty is pleased by the Terms of Your Memorialists Lease to assure to them a peaceable, Secure and uninterrupted enjoyment of the benefit of their situation in Trade as His Lessees, they have been permitted to remain on the Domain as Lessees for five Years after the expiration of their Lease, and they have supported the Indians during the late Rebellion & War, without expense to the Crown, and it was with reason they claimed a merit to its favour in continueing Lessees, upon a renew'd lease, so soon as Public tranquility was restored to the Province.

Your Memorialists beg your Honor to believe, what they can support with full testimony, that during the late Rebellion, they were not only interrupted in their Commerce by the frequent and almost continual depredations of American Armed Vessels, and their Crews, but they have been plundered of their property to a Sum exceeding Three thousand Pounds Sterling, they however remained in possession, performed the Conditions of their Old Lease, and supported the Indians, in the dayly expectation of Peace, and in the firm relyance on the Political Justice of Government, and the favour and regard of His Majesty- in continueing their possession by a renewed and long Lease.

Your Memorialists, as consequent to their possession, claim, and expectations, were under the Necessity to keep a Constant and Sufficient quantity of Goods and Provisions at the Posts to Supply the Wants of the Indians, and prevent their Occasioning that trouble & Expence to the Crown, that all other Tribes have done in this Province ; those Objects Your Memorialists pursued & these Services performed to Government at the risque of their Own Ruin, in effect to a very Considerable loss & distress, after the expiration of their Lease.

Your Memorialists pray that Your Honor will take into Consideration their Situation and their reasonable rights to Petition His Majesty for a Renewal of their Lease, as a Justice clue to their sufferings & Losses, and claim to the Kings favor for their Services.

That Your Honor will be pleased to Grant unto Your Memorialists, a renewal of the Lease of the said posts for One Year, from the first day of October next, and for Nine Years afterwards if the same should not meet His Majesty's disapprobation, to be signified by the Right Honble. the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury. And that Your Honor will do Justice to their prayer & Claims, by that representation of their Situation & Petition, which reason & Merit may entitle them to expect with Justice from His Majesty's Government, under Your Honors Command.

And Your Petitioners shall as in duty bound

RESCINDING LEASE OF KING'S POSTS.

ARCHIVES OF CANADA, SERIES Q VOL. 26, p. 403

Quebec 6th June 1786.

Gentlemen

In answer to your Memorial which I received this morning regarding the Posts commonly called the King's Posts whereof you are now Lessees under a Lease which will expire on the 30th of September next, I must acquaint you, that His Majesty's Commands signified to me by The Right Honble.
Lord Sydney one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State to grant a new Lease of the said Posts to Messrs.
Alexander and George Davison and Francois Baby to commence from the 1st of October next, are positive and explicit and must be obeyed.

The Circumstances you represent, shall nevertheless meet with due attention.

p. 3264

The regrets of the Indians with whom by virtue of your Lease, you have been connected, at losing the good offices they have so long experienced from your friendship and care, are natural, and I doubt not perfectly just, these cannot however, you must be sensible prove a bar against a new Lease to the other Persons to whom His Majesty has been pleased to order the same to be granted, who enjoying this Mark of the Royal favor must be bound by every tie to treat favourably the Indians thus entrusted in some measure to their Protection, and it shall be my business to state to them in the strongest terms the force of this obligation.

I am not at this moment sufficiently informed on the Nature of the Lease in question to give a definitive Answer to your Claim on the New Lessees for reimbursement of your Expenditures in Buildings &c. and for payment of Debts due to you, but you may rest assured that your rights in these matters shall be maturely considered, and that justice shall be rendered to you therein.

I am with regard Gentlemen
Your most obedient humble servant

REPORT OF WILLIAM LAMPSON re KING'S POSTS, 22 DECEMBER, 1830.

JOURNALS OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF LOWER CANADA, APPENDIX A.A., No. 5, 1831.

The Lessee of the King's Posts, in explanation of his Petition and with a view that it may be easily understood, deems it advisable to subjoin a short sketch or account of the King's Domain Lands, generally known by the name of the King's Posts :

To render the subject, in the outset, plain, he begs leave in the first place, to refer to the maps made out by Sax, Land Surveyor, in the year 1828 or 1829, for the purpose of conveying information to the Members of the Assembly when engaged on the Internal Communications and Improvement of the Province. On perusing this map, it will be seen how stands the Bay of Mille Vaches, what spot allotted for the Seigniorship of that name, and from the scale on the map itself the exact distance from Bay of Mille Vaches to the River Portneuf, can be ascertained ; this process will at once prove how stands the frivolous and unfounded pretensions of the owners and lessees of Mille Vaches, who lay claim to the River Portneuf and the Post established on the Bank of the River. It may be right here to observe, that Sax's map is a diminution taken from an old map of the Province made out some fifty years ago, by two land-surveyors of high repute in the Colony, (Vondenvelden and Charland,) under the directions of the late Major Holland, Surveyor General. The latter map will more clearly shew the place designated for Mille Vaches embracing the Bay of that name, and exhibits the space or distance from that to the Post of Portneuf including the River ; these maps are the only Documents that can be referred to, as made since the conquest, (1759.) the Survey and Map made before the conquest of the King's Domain Lands, (1773) having been destroyed : therefore, as to the geographical or local situation of the premises no other map or plans can be resorted to.

The King's Posts or Domain Lands embrace all that extensive tract situated on the north shore of the River St. Lawrence, between the Seigniorship of Les Eboulemens and the Point or Cap des Cormorans, making a front of about two hundred and eighty five miles, extending in depth in various directions, and at one point until it reaches Hudson's Bay. The description and exact limits of these valuable lands of the Crown are given in the Ordonnance “ pour les limites du Domaine,” made by authority of the French Government in 1733, (2 vol. of Edits, page 87.) This Ordonnance was made by order of Government at the request of M. Carlier, Lessee of the Domain Lands, after a regular and minute survey taken.

When this Survey was taken, and the Ordonnance in question made, it was with a view to inform the public of the true limits of the Domain Lands, and of the peculiar and exclusive right of trade or traffic attached to them to afford the Lessee relief against intruders who had shortly before encroached on his privilege, and to assure him the free and uninterrupted enjoyment of that exclusive privilege, and for that it was, that the Ordonnance of 1733, after giving an accurate and formal description of the Domain Lands with their limits, proceeds by explaining in what the rights of the Lessee consist, and thus the Ordonnance concludes :

“ Faisons defenses à toutes personnes de quelque qualité et condition qu'elles soient, tant les marchands et habitants de la Colonie que les capitaines et maîtres de charois, barques, batteaux et navires, gens de leur équipage et passagers et à tous autres généralement quelconques, même aux sauvages étrangers non habitués dans les Terres du Domaine, de traiter, chaiser, pêcher, ni faire aucun commerce, sous quelque pretexte que ce puisse être, directement ni indirectement, soit par eux-mêmes ou en envoyant des marchandises, vivres, boissons et munitions par des sauvages affidés dans toute l'étendue des pays désignés par notre presente Ordonnance, et généralement dans aucunes rivières et lacs qui prennent leur course en la rivière du Saguenay et la rivière Moisy, encore qu'ils ne soient nommément exprimés dans notre dite Ordonnance, faire festin aux Sauvages habitués dans le dite étendue de pays, ni le détourner en aucune manière, même d'approcher des limites ci-dessus marquées dans les terres plus près de dix lieues pour y faire la traite avec les Sauvages ou autres établissements sans la commission expresse et par écrit du dit earlier, ses successeurs fermiers, leurs procureurs, commis et préposés, a peine de confiscation des armes chasse, marchanises de traite, pelleteries et effets, traités, canots, chaloups, barques, charois, batteaux et autres bâtimens généralement quelconques, et de la somme de deux mille livres d'amende qui ne pourra être remise ni modérée sous aucun prétexte.”

On reading the Ordonnance itself, we acquire at once a full and correct account of Domain Lands, and the exclusive trade attached to them.

After reading this Ordonnance attentively, it must strike the mind of every impartial and disinterested man, that the policy of the French Government was to secure to itself and the King's lessee, exclusive trade with the Indians, and that it never entered into the mind of any (The Hudson's Bay Company only excepted,) that competition could be allowed in the exercise of such a right, and for that it is, that in framing and promulgating the “ Ordonnance des limites du Domaine,” no notice whatever is taken of the grant or concession of 1653 for Mille Vaches ; if the French Government had ever intended to convey such a right to the grantee of Mille Vaches, it would have been mentioned in the deed if such had been the French King's intention, the necessary exception or reservation in their favor, would have been included in the Ordonnance of 1733, if it had ever been considered a right attached to Mille Vaches to assume the exercise of such a right within the three leagues upon four, which they hold for the purpose of Agricultural Settlement alone, no doubt such a reservation would have been made in the old Ordonnance, and in the several leases granted by the Crown for the King's Posts. Let the several leases executed as well before as since the conquest be referred to, and no such reservation will be found for Mille Vaches,—for the best of reasons, the exclusive right of trade or traffic with the Indians, in an entire thing,—allow competition to Mille Vaches, or to any one else, and there is an end to the privilege itself.

On looking farther back, in reference to the King's Domain and the exclusive right of trade attached to it, it will appear (vol. 1 Edits, page 96), that M. Nicolas Oudiette, fermier de la Traite de Tadoussac a l'exclusion de tous autres, having in 1676 remonstrated in relations to intrusions in the King's Domain, to his prejudice, His most Christian Majesty commanded the Intendant as follows :

“Le Sieur Duchesneau tiendra la main, que la défense soit exécutée ; et que ceux qui y contre viendront soient seulement punis de la peine portée par l'Ordonnance.” By an Arrêt du Conseil d'Etat du Roi of the year 1666, (1 vol. Edits, page 43,) the exclusive right to trade in the King's Posts, then called la Traite de Tadoussac, is granted to the Compagnie des Indes Occidentales. Thus much to prove that prior to the Conquest, and from the very first establishment of the King's Posts, the right of traffic with the Indians was an exclusive privilege belonged to and reserved by the King.

We next proceed to shew, that since the Crown of Great Britain rules over the Colony, the same policy has prevailed, and that having succeeded to the rights of the King of France under the Treaty of 1763, the King's Posts have from the period of the Conquest to the present time, been from time to time granted for a term of twenty years, with the exclusive right of trade or traffic with the Indians ; the evidence of this fact appears by the lease to Goudie in 1822, by the lease to Simon McGillivray and others in 1802, by a lease granted by Government in 1786, and a former lease given about the year 1766, but a few years after the conquest ; so many repeated acts on the part of both Governments, the right of exclusive trade and the exercise of that right by the Crown cannot be doubted or susceptible of any difficulty, can for an instant be imagined that at any period the Crown of France before the Conquest, or Great Britain since, had lost sight of the Grant of Mille Vaches of 1653, when but a few years after (in 1666), this exclusive trade is granted by the French King to the “Compagnie des Indes Occidentales ;” when, again, in 1676, on the remonstrances of the King's Lessee, (Nicholas Oudiette,) the Crown afford immediate relief, when, in fine, in 1733, such salutary provisions are made to secure the King's Lessee, (Le Sieur Carlier,) in the unmolested enjoyment of that right, when but a few years after the Conquest, (in 1768) by Proclamation issued by the Honorable Guy Carleton,

p. 3270

Governor of the Province, under a Special Order from the King and his Privy Council, efficient steps are taken to keep this exclusive right free and unmolested, when by a series of leases from the Crown since the Conquest, that exclusive trade is granted to the King's Lessee for a valuable consideration.

No, at all times the Crown was satisfied, the grant of Mille-Vaches had been made for Agricultural Settlement, and for no other purpose, that the assumption to trade with the Indians of the King's Posts, on the part of the owners of Mille-Vaches or their Lessees, was on their part a mere visionary dream, a frivolous pretension unfounded both in law and in reason ; for, again, and to conclude, the right in question is the exclusive trade ; how therefore can that right ever be enjoyed or exercised by two rival Companies ?

This subject was never brought under the consideration of His Majesty's Government before now, from obvious reasons, before the pending of the present Lease, the Lessees of the King's Posts were either Lessees of Mille-Vaches at the same time, or owners of that Seigniory, and holding both, excluded all questions of adverse interest. This accounts also, why a Survey of Mille Vaches was never called for, how it happens that encroachments unnoticed, have taken place on the Domain Lands to the prejudice of the Crown, and by what means the Post of Portneuf has been established and lately set up, in direct violation of His Majesty's rights, and to the prejudice of the Lessee of the Domain Lands.

The whole very respectfully submitted by

LETTER, 23 MAY, 1831, BISHOP OF QUEBEC TO MR. BELLEAU, re MISSION AT KING'S POSTS.¹

Quebec, 23 mai 1831.

A Mr Belleau, Curé à la Riv. du Loup.

Monsieur,

Par les derniers arrangements passés entre Mr Lampson et la Baie d'Hudson, cette dernière se trouve maintenant en possession des Postes du Roi. Vous commencerez votre mission plus à bonne heure que vous ne vous y attendiez. La goelette de la Société ira vous prendre à la Rivière du Loup et vous conduira en droite ligne à Mingan au lieu de Portneuf qui désormais sera desservie par Mr. Béland. Les principaux postes que vous aurez à visiter sont, outre Mingan, Masquaro, Quoquocho et Napissipi. Ayez soin que tous vos préparatifs soient faits lorsque la goelette passera chez vous. Je vous souhaite de la santé et du courage pour supporter toutes les fatigues de votre mission.

Je suis &c.

Quebec, 23 May, 1831.

Mr. Belleau,
Curate at Riv. du Loup.

Sir,

Under the recent agreement concluded between Mr. Lampson and the Hudson's Bay Company, the latter is now in possession of the King's Posts. You will begin your mission earlier than you expected at first. The Company's schooner will take you on board at Riviere du Loup and will carry you to Mingan direct instead of to Portneuf, which, in future, will be served by Mr. Beland. In addition to Mingan, the principal posts you will have to visit, are the following : Masquara (Musquaro), Quoquocho (Coacocho) and Napissipi (Napisipi). Take care that you are ready to leave when the schooner arrives at your place. I wish you good health and courage in order that you may endure the hardships of your mission.

I am, &c.

LETTER, 28 SEPTEMBER, 1839, GOVERNOR PELLY TO LORD JOHN RUSSELL re RENEWAL TO HUDSON'S BAY CO. OF LEASE OF KING'S POSTS.

ARCHIVES OF CANADA, SERIES Q VOL. 267, pp. 34-36.

Hudson's Bay House
28th September, 1839.

My Lord.

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Stephen's letter of the 16th Inst. (in reference to mine of the 20th March to the Marquis of Normanby, on the subject of the King's Posts in Lower Canada) together with Copy of a Letter from Sir J. Colborne of 22nd July, and of the Report of the Executive Council on the proposal made by me on the part of the Hudson's Bay Company for a renewal of the lease of those Posts now held by the Company : And requesting that in laying the same before the Hudson's Bay Company, I should move them to inform Your Lordship, whether they are willing to accept the Lease in question on the terms stated by the Governor.

In reply I beg leave to refer your Lordship to my letter of the 20th March for the reasons for desiring a renewal (not of the whole but) of a small part of the privileges of the present Lease.

“The Hudson's Bay Company in wishing to obtain a renewal of the Lease as far as regards the exclusive right of hunting and of trading with the Indians, have in view the more effectually to maintain in their own Territory, bordering on that part of Canada, the restriction of the use of Spirituous liquors, and all those other beneficial regulations, which have been found essentially to improve the condition of the Indians and to preserve the peace of the country, and to continue the like benefits to the Indians of the ' King's Posts.' ”

From the following extract of the Report of the Council to whom Sir John Colborne submitted the proposition. “The Indians of the King's Posts, in number about 400 Souls, having for a long period of years been accustomed to the protection and fostering care of the different Lessees, it would be neither wise or just to allow them to be abandoned at once, without some provision being made for them : they are generally of a mild and tractable disposition, and a Majority of them have been converted to Christianity. The Lessees supplying the means for Annual Visit of a Missionary of the Roman Catholic Faith to the different Posts, where Small Churches have been erected, Chiefly by the late order of Jesuits. They have moreover no Agricultural pursuits, and it is not likely that the present generation would be induced to forsake their Indian habits, sojourning as they do, alternately in the forest and on the coast of St. Lawrence, to which latter they resort in the Winter season for the purpose of Killing Seals, living chiefly on the Oil, which these animals produce. It may be proper to add that these Indians are not included in the Schedule annexed to an approved Report of Council on Indian Affairs dated 13th June 1837, nor have they ever received assistance in provisions or outfits of any kind from the Government.

Under these Circumstances and before throwing the Country open to the Public, some previous Arrangement should be made for the care of the Indians, else they would of necessity turn idle and dissolute, and become a burthen to Society. The proposal of the Hudson's Bay Company seems to offer the most convenient and least expensive mode of protection and employment, and the Committee are therefore humbly of opinion that it may be expedient to grant them a new Lease for an additional twenty one years to be limited to an exclusive right of hunting and trading with the Indians, including also the Seal Fishery.”

Your Lordship will perceive that the Council distinctly admit the expediency of granting a lease for the purpose of hunting and trading only with the Indians, not only from the necessity of some arrangement being made for the care of the Indians, else they would of necessity turn idle and dissolute and become a burthen to Society, but that it offers the most convenient and least expensive mode of protection and employment.

On the measure itself we are quite agreed and the only difference is the terms proposed, namely, That the Crown have immediate right of entry and occupation for the purpose of settlement, and that the Hudson's Bay Company be restrained to the trade with the Natives, but that the present rent of £1200 be paid till the 1st of October 1842 ; That the Hudson's Bay Company relinquish the Sum of Eighteen hundred pounds, which the Government will leave to pay them on 1st October 1842 ; and that then a new Lease be granted them at Eight hundred pounds a year.

Under all the circumstances which have been detailed, I trust your Lordship will consider that in making the following proposition on the part of the Hudson's Bay Company, it will be considered liberal. That the present Lease be cancelled and that the claim for Eighteen hundred pounds be relinquished on a new Lease for twenty one years at a Rent of Five Hundred pounds p annum being granted by the Government for the exclusive right of hunting and trading with the Indians, including the Seal fishery.

The Right Honble.
LORD JOHN RUSSELL

I have the honor to be
My Lord
Your Lordship's most obedt. Servt.

Les srs Daine et foucault vous ayant demandé la permission d'envoyer faire a leurs fraix la decouverte de la Baye des Esquimaux j'ay approuvé que vous la leur ayiés accordée, et que vous leur ayiés fait esperer une con-cession de fornel qui s'étoit adressé a moy pour avoir la concession de cette même Baye puisse aussy de son coté travailler a en faire la decouverte aux même conditions que les Srs Daine et foucault. Peut estre conviendroitel que ces trois particuliers se joignissent ensemble comme vous me marqués qu'ils pourront faire ; Mais quoy qu'il en soit, si cette decouverte se fait, it faut que le Sr. fornel soit traité aussy favorablement que les deux autres, et je suis persuadé que vous aurés attention de ne leur donner aucune preference a son prejudice. C'est de quoy je

VERSAILLES,

April 21st, 1739.

I have received the letters you wrote me on the 6th and 7th of October of last year also the papers attached thereto.

The Srs. Daine and Foucault having also applied to you for permission to explore Esquimaux bay, at their own expense, I have approved of your having granted it to them and of your having given them reason to hope for the grant of a 10-league concession in this bay. But intend, that the Sr. Fornel, who applied to me for the concession of this bay, may also, on his part, try for the discovery of same, under the same conditions as the Srs. Daine and Foucault. It would perhaps be convenient that these three individuals unite, as you point out to me that they may do ; but at all events, if this discovery be made, the Sr. Fornel must be treated as favourably as the two others, and I am satisfied that you will be careful not to give them any preference to his prejudice, of which I will be able to judge by the report you will kindly make to me respecting all incidents connected therewith.

Monseigneur,

Feeling it my duty to inform the Court respecting occurrences at Bay-des-Chateaux post, situated in Belleisle strait, on the Labrador coast, which I discovered and operated for several wars in the stead and place and by assignment of the Sieur Bazile, of this city, to whom the concession had been granted and who could not develop the same, to which fact I owe the honour of writing to Your Grace to inform you that I successfully employed myself in civilizing and making tractable the Eskimaux who have always been the pirates of this coast.

Il y a quelques années que j'eus l'honneur de demander La Concession de la baye des Eskimaux, dite autrement baye des hollandois, nommées par les Sauvages Quichechaquiou. Vous eutes la bonté, Monseigneur, de faire attention à ma demande, et d'écrire en consequence à M. le gouverneur général et à M. L'Intendant de m'en donner la préférence. Si tot que j'en aurois fait la découverte, je n'ai pu la faire jusqu'à ce jour d'autant que j'ay des associés dans l'exploitation de la baye des Chateaux qui n'ont pas voulu me permettre de me servir à mon usage de ce qui appartient à la Société, ainsy comme il est nécessaire pour cette découverte d'avoir un poste dans le voisinage pour y attirer les Eskimaux, pour s'y Equiper Et s'y refugier au cas de besoin, c'est ce qui me fait demander le poste de la baye des Chateaux dont j'ay fait l'Etablissement, Et que le S^r Basile n'est pas en moyen d'Exploiter. J'ay présenté a M. le Gouverneur General et à M. l'Intendant plusieurs requestes avec le mémoire cy joint pour demander pendant neuf années le privilege Exclusif pour faire la pesche sédentaire du Loup marin avec droit de Chasse, Et de traite au poste de La baye des Chateaux, Et je leur ay fait ma soumission d'aller faire à mes frais, Et depuis La decouverte de la Baye des Eskimaux, sitost que j'aurois la Concession de la baye des Chateaux, qui est le seul poste a main qui puisse faciliter cette Entreprise, Et dédommager des frais. J'espère, Monseigneur, que vous voudrez bien être favorable a ma demande, Et m'accorder par preference a tous autres la Concession de la baye des Chateaux sans préjudice de celle des Eskimaux. Lorsque j'en auray fait la découverte.

Your grace will be pleased with the following account I herewith submit.

* * * *

Some years ago I had the honour to request the concession of Baye-des-Eskimaux, otherwise known as the bay des Hollandois, and called Quichechaquiou by the Indians. You were kind enough, Monseigneur, to consider my request and to instruct Monsieur the Governor General and Monsieur the Intendant in writing that I was to be given the preference as soon as I had explored it. This, as yet, I have been unable to do inasmuch as I have partners in the operation of Bay-des-Chateaux who refuse to allow the use, for my personal benefit, of what belongs to the partnership. As the exploitation referred to necessitates a post in the neighbourhood to which the Esquimaux would be attracted, and to serve as an equipment station and a place of refuge in case of emergency, I am applying for Bay-des-Chateaux post established by me and which the Sieur Basile could not allord to develop. I have presented to Monsieur the Governor General and Monsieur the Intendant several petitions together with the annexed memoir applying for the exclusive privilege for nine years of the sedentary seal fishing with the right to trade at Bay-des-Chateaux, and then and since, I offered to develop Baye-des-Eskimaux at my own expense as soon as I had obtained the concession of Bays-des-Chateaux which is the only post near at hand likely to facilitate this undertaking and make up for the costs. I trust, Monseigneur, that you will consider my request favourably and grant to me, in preference to any other, the concession of the Baye-des-Chateaux without prejudice to tint of Baye-des-Eskimaux, as soon as I have explored it.

Comme il est à propos de faire connoître à ces barbares le nom du Roy par quelques présens, qui leur soyent distribués au nom de Sa Majesté je prie Votre Grandeur de me faire délivrer chaque année dans les magasins de Quebec des marchandises de traite Et d'autres Effets à L'usage des Eskimaux jusqu'à la concurrence de telle somme qu'il luy plaira arbitrer, desquels effets je promets me charger pour en faire la distribution aux Eskimaux au nom du Roy ce qui pourra contribuer à attirer ces barbares, Et empescher leur piraterie.

Je suis avec un très profond respect, Monseigneur, de votre grandeur

The narrative which I undertake of the discovery made by me of Baie des Esquimaux is not a pilot's diary in which the distances, magnetic bearings and latitudes are noted. We sailed from one point to another, so as to be more certain to find said bay which, had we kept off-shore, might perhaps have escaped our attention, I therefore believe that a mere description of my voyage, accompanied by a chart based upon the observations of our coast pilots will be sufficient to give to the Court an exact knowledge of the Esquimaux coast, where no one, previously, had ventured to sail near the shore, for fear of these barbarians.

in this vessel, on account of the shortage of provisions. On the brigantine I embarked four guns, forty rifles, pistols, swords, battle-axes and other munitions of war to proceed to the bay des Chateaux, the destination of said brigantine, during which journey we encountered a strong north-east wind, and were on the verge of perishing many times on account of the ice which forced us to sail along the north shore, being unable to keep off. By the help, however, of an opening in the ice, we entered anse à Loup [sic.], on the 19 June. I immediately sent a canoe to St. Modet to invite the Sr. Chauveau, fishing-master, to come personally to take the goods I had for him. On his arrival, having asked him to endeavour to find the schooner La Marie-Anne in which I have an interest, he told me that I was the master of her and that I could dispose of her, but that, as that vessel was on the high seas, I would have to wait for the spring tides. Disappointed in my expectations in that respect, I decided to charter a large fishing-boat and to send immediately the Sr. Le Cour, my pilot and sailing master, to charter a boat at Tierpon situated to the north of Plaisance.

20 JUNE, 1743.

We then continued our voyage toward baie des Chateaux, and, before arriving at that place, we encountered stormy weather and fog, so that, to escape danger and to keep off the coast, we had to slip an anchor and a cable. Uncertain of our fate in view of the threatening danger, veue du danger qui nous menaçoit, Et qui nous paroissait inevitable dans cette Extremité, nous avons eu recours à Dieu Et nous avons fait un veu que nous devons accomplir si tost notre a Quebec. peu de tems après notre voeu fait, Les vents ont Changé, Et la brume a tombé, ce qui nous a donné lieu d'Entrer Enfin dans la d^e baye des Chateaux, ou nous sommes arrivés Le Dimanche vingt-trois Juin après trente huit jours de traversée.

Et depths le d^t jour 23e Juin jusqu'au premier Juillet j'ay resté au d^t Lieu de La baye des Chateaux, ou j'ay vû Les preparatifs de la pesche qui n'a pas reussi par ce que Le Loup marin etoit desja passé, Et que nous etions arrivé trop tard.

2 JUILLET 1743.

Le d. S^r le Cour est arrivé a la baye des Chateaux avec La goelette de M. de Lafontaine qu'il avoit trouvé au Tierpon, en echange de laquelle il auroit cedé outre le prix du Louage une Chaloupe biscayne pour faire la pesche. La d^e goelette n'auroit été cedée que pour vingt-deux jours seulement au d. S^r Le Cour qui se seroit obligé en mon Lieu et place En vertu du pouvoir que je luy en aurois donné de payer dix Ecus par chaque jour de retardement de La d^e goelette apres les vingt-deux jours Expirés.

3 JUILLET 1743.

Après avoir fait done Embarquer sur la d^e goelette Les vivres, munitions de guerre ; Et autre effets qui m'etoient necessaires nous avons fait voile sur Les heures Sept du matin vers La baye des Eskimaux, mais Etant contrariés par les Vents nous avons mouillé au poste du S^r Marsal entre les Isles et les and which seemed inevitable in our extreme distress, we had recourse to God and made a vow, which we will fulfil immediately after our return to Quebec. Soon after we had made our vow, the wind shifted and, the fog having cleared, we succeeded at last in entering baie des Chateaux, where we arrived on Sunday the twenty-third of June after a voyage of eight days.

And from 23 June to the first of July, I remained at baie des Chateaux where I saw the preparations for the fishing which was unsuccessful, as the seals had already passed and we had arrived too late.

2 JULY, 1743.

Sr. Le Cour arrived at baie des Chateaux with Mr. Lafontaine's schooner, which he found at Tierpon, in exchange for which he gave, in addition to the charter price, a Biscayan fishing chaloupe. The said schooner has been chartered for twenty-two days only to Sr. Le Cour, who pledged himself in my place and stead, by virtue of the power I had given him, to pay ten crowns (écus) for each day of delay of the schooner after the expiration of the twenty-two days.

3 JULY, 1743.

Having taken on board the schooner, the required provisions, munitions of war and other goods, we sailed about seven o'clock in the morning toward the baie des Esquimaux, but encountering a contrary wind, we anchored at Sr. Marsal's post, between the islands and the terres du Cap Charles, Lequel poste distant environ de Six a sept Lieus de La baye des Chateaux est le dernier poste Etabli dans La Coste de Labrador. Le d^t S^r Marsal est aussy tost venu a notre bord pour nous Inviter de descendre à son habitation, nous disant qu'il ne nous Conseilloit pas d'aller plus loin à cause de La brume, des vents contraires, Et du danger qu'il y avoit de passer outre.

4 JUILLET 1743.

Nous avons Levé L'ancre Sur Les trois heures du matin pour profiter du vent sud-ouest, mais une brume epaisse qui s'etait Elevé tout d'un coup nous a fait prendre le parti d'aller chercher notre premier mouillage ou nous Sommes arrivé a huit heures du matin. Sur les onze heures Le tems etant devenu clair nous avons poursuivi notre route, Et sur Le midy nous nous sommes trouvé par Le travers du Cap Charles. apres avoir fait cinq a six Lieues depuis Le d^t Cap nous avons vû L'ouverture de La baye St. Alexis qui nous a paru Etre d'Environ trois lieues de Large, Et de Cinq Lieues de profondeur avec quelques Isles Et Ilots au dedans : La d^e baye au nord est fermée par un Cap Escarpé qui Commence une chaine de Caps et de Montagnes tres hautes Le long de la mer. Et faisant route au Nord quart Nord-Ouest nous avons fait environ cinq à six Lieues de Chemin Le Long de la Coste des Eskimaux Laquelle est de rochers fort hauts, Et Escarpés sans aucun bois au pieds desquels rochers il y a grand fond Et sur les sept heures du soir nous avons decouvert un Cap fort haut Escarpé que nous avons nommés Cap Percé pour y avoir reconnu an pied une ouverture qui forme un chemin couvert dans le cap au dessus du niveau de l'eau En façon de route Lequel chemin communique a une baye dans laquelle nous sommes Entrés pour y chercher mainland of cape Charles, which post is distant about six or seven leagues from baie des Chateaux [and] is the last [most northerly] post established on the coast of Labrador. Sr. Marsal also came on board to invite us to his dwelling, saying that he would not advise us to go any further on account of the fog, the contrary wind, and the dangers that we would encounter.

To take advantage of the south-west, wind, we weighed anchor at about three o'clock in the morning, but, as a dense fog had suddenly arisen, we decided to seek our first anchorage, which we reached at eight o'clock in the morning. About eleven o'clock, the weather having cleared, we continued our voyage, and, about noon, we arrived opposite cape Charles. After sailing for five or six leagues from said cape, we saw the entrance of bay St. Alexis, which seemed to be about three leagues wide by five leagues deep with some islands and islets within. This bay is closed to the north by its steep bluff which begins a chain of capes and very high mountains along the sea-shore. Steering it north-quarter-north-west course, we sailed about five or six leagues along the Esquimaux coast, which is a very high and steep treeless cliff. At the foot of these cliffs the water is very deep. About seven o'clock in the evening, we discovered it very high and steep cape which we called cape Perc [sic.] , beca, usewe [sic.] saw, at its base, an opening which formed a covered way in the cape above the water-level, in the manner of a road which road connected with a bay, which we entered mouillage Environ une lieue et demi dans la d^e baye Laquelle peut etre d'une Lieue de Large dans Son entrée sur deux Lieues de profondeur, Et plus de gros vaisseaux y peuvent Entrer facilement pour y trouver havre. Nous avons nommé cette baye du nom de baye des Meniques pour y avoir vû une quantité de gros poissons d'Environ Seize de pieds long que les pescheurs apelent Meniques, Lequel poisson porte un dard Sur le dos d'Environ cinq pieds de Long. Il fait La guerre au Loup-marin, Et le fait fuir Le Long de terre ce qui donne Lieu à la pesche sedentaire du Loup-marin, Lequel passeroit dans le large s'il n'etoit poursuivi par la Menique. Au nord Et au sud de La d^e baye il y a des Isles Et Ilots Le Long de La terre. Et nous avons mouillé Entre Les dte Isles Et terre à vingt brasses d'Eau L'on a ensuite mis la Chaloupe à L'Eau Et plusieurs de notre Equipage sont descendus sur une Isle Escarpée au haut de Laquelle ils ont allumé du feu avec de La tourbe, ayant ensuite aperçu Six Canots Eskimaux avec trois Chaloupes qui Approchoient Sur Le champ nos gens se sont embarqués dans la Chaloupe Et sont venus à bord, nous criant de Loin de Lever l'ancre et d'aller mouiller dans le Large afin d'etre plus éloigné de terre Et hors de la portée des flèches des Eskimaux: de sorte qu'apres avoir changé de mouillage nous avons ensuite disposé notre artillerie, Et préparé nos armes afin d'etre toujours sur la deffensive au cas d'attaque, Et afin de n'etre pas surpris pendant la nuit. Les d^{ts} Eskimaux n'osant venir nous aborder ont mis pied a terre dans une Isle voisine, ou ils faisoient des cris levant leurs avirons en haut. Et disant en patoie tout Camara Troquo balena, non Characo, ce qui signifie point de guerre, Je suis ton camarade, troquons de la baleine Et ayant à notre bord pris le porte-voix pour Leur repondre dans les mesmes termer, trois Eskimaux Se Sont rembarqués dans Leurs Canots Et sont venus à notre bord, ou ils nous ont fait beaucoup de Caresses. J'ay fait La remarque que La veue de notre petite artillerie,
