May it please your Majesty.

Soe the Governour & Committee of the Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudsons Bay have by your Majestys gracious allowance seene & perused an extract of a late letter from Mons. Dela Barre to the present Governour of Canada w^{ch} hath been delivered by the French Ambassador as a memoriall of complainte. That the Hudsons Bay Company did begin to make habitations and to erect forts upon the Land within the said Bay, of which he assumes that the King his Master hath taken possession above 20 years since, in which course if they proceed, he threatens to drive them out of the country by force, But desires that your Majesty should be advertised that he is not willing to doe anythinge which may displease except he be forced thereunto whereupon your Majesty having commanded us, who have the Government of the affaires of the said Company, to give an acct. of their title and pretence to the said Bay and to the lands & territories thereabout & to the Trade & commerce which they have with the Indians

We doe in all humility represent to your Majesty that the Subjects of your Imperiall Crowne, have for above 100 years last past discovered and frequented the said Bay & the Rivers, Islands and Territorys thereabouts years frequented and from time to time in the reignes of severall of your Royall Predecessors have taken possession of severall places there, & that none of the subjects of his most Christian Majesty have ever bin knowne to sayle or traffique English. within the sd. Bay.

That above 15 yeares since some Members of this Company did adventure to make further Discoveryes within the said Bay and by the good conduct of one Zachary Gillam in the Nonsuch Ketch, they Discovered a river in the bottom of the sd. Bay upon the East Maine, where he met with ye native Indians & having made a League of Friendship with ye Capt. of the said River & firmly purchased both the river itselfe & the Lands thereabout, he gave it the name of Rupert River (his Highness Prince Rupert being principally concerned in that expedition) and built a Fort which in honours of your Majesty was called Charles Fort & tooke possession of the said River & all the Land & Territory thereabout in the name of your Majesty & then and there entered into a Trade & Commerce with the Natives which hath bin ever since maintained without any Interruption either from ye French or others.

That there upon your Majesty was graciously pleased by ye Royall Ltrs. Pattente under the great scale of England to Incorporate the said Adventurers & so gain them & their Successors forever all the said Bay & the Straits leading there

THE STATE OF THE CASE OF THE HUDSON'S BAY
COMP^A WTH A NARRATIVE OF THEIR GREAT SUFFERINGS BY THE FRENCH FROM THEIR INVASIONS EVER SINCE THE YEAR 1682.

HUDSON BAY COMPANY'S RECORDS.

Lords Justice the 3^d July 1699.

The Title of the Crowne of England to all Hudson Bay haveing been made out & Deduced for 200 years upwards That the English only did Navigate the Streight & Bay of Hudson, and at last after many Voyages to Discover & fix a Trade wth the Indians, His Ma^{tie} King Charles the Second for better Encouragem^t to the Adventurers was pleased in the yeare 1670 to Grant his Lres patents of Incorporation to his Highness Prince Rupert, Duke of Arbemarle, Earle of Shaftsbury, Earle of Arlington, Earle of Craven, & Divers others for the Sole Trade of Hudson Bay, & by his said Grant, to Create & Constitute them and their Successors for Ever, the True and absolute Lords & Proprietors of the same, & of all the Territories, Limitts, & Places thereto belonging To Have hold, possess & Enjoy the same, As of his Mat^{ties} Mannor of East Greenwich in Free & Common Soccage.

That the Hudson Bay Comp^a upon the Encouragem^t of Such his Ma^{tie} Royall Charter continued yearely Voyages sent Govern^{es} & Factors over wth Tradeing Goods & provisions, Erected Forts, made Settlements & gained a Very Considerable Trade wth the Native Indians which was never knowne to England before, to the Increase of his Mat^{ties} Customes & Promoteing of Navigation.

That the Comp^a Prosecuted & Enjoyed this Trade without the least Interruption disturbance or pretence from the French untill the yeare 1682 when the Fame & report of the Considerable Trade which they drew from thence began to awaken the Envy of the French, & in that yeare 1682 one La Chanay a Private Merch^t of Canada sett out an Expedition in a Piraticall way, not only without Publick Commission or Authority, But Expressly against the order & Prohibition of the Governour of Canada, who Owned that Hudson Bay was the Right of the English, & it would cause a Breach between the Two Crownes & therefore would by noe means permitt it Nevertheless the s^d La Chanay, & his Accomplices under hand, proceeded in their designe, & wth 2 ships Invaded the Comp^{as} Factory of Yorke ffort in Port Nelson, dispossessed them of their Settlement tooke their Ships & carried the English Governour & Men away Prisoners to Canada, And the Comp^a will mainetaine That this was the first Time, that ever the French did Saile a Vessell in Hudson Bay since the begining of the World, and this Invasion was then disowned by his most Christian Ma^{tie} and satisfaction directed, (and the Manner of it) by Mons^r Calliere one of the Plenipotentiaryes at the Treaty of Riswicke.

Whilst the Comp^a were complaining of this Invasion here in England & by Memorials at the French Court, & demanding satisfaction for their Damages sustained, The French pursuing their Designes to get the Trade of Hudson Bay to themselves, tho it was a time of Perfect Peace and Amity between the Two Crownes, framed another Expedicon over Land from Canada wth a great Force in 1686 And coming suddenly to the Bottome of the Bay, Surprized three Factories of the Comp^{as} tooke the Value of Fifty Thousand Pounds in goods stores, Merchandize & Ammunition, Murthered & Destroyed severall of his Ma^{tie} Subjects, & Exposed the rest in a rotten Vessell (with small Provision) to the Mercy of the Sea a Barbarity scarce Used in the feircest Warr.

This soe Notorious an Invasion & Depredation was loudly complained of in his late Ma^{tie} Reigne, & soe much resented by his then Ma^{ty} That he was Graciously pleased to declare, That his Hon^r was concerned with the Comp^{as} Interest, and he would have Reparation for both.

WHEREUPON the French King Impowred Mons^r Barillion his Embassador here, and Mons^r Bonrepos (whome he sent over hither for that purpose) to be his Comm^{es} To treat with the Earle of Sunderland, Earle of Middleton & Lord Godolphin Comm^{es} appointed by his Ma^{tie} of England in Order to the Adjusting all Differences that had arisen or might arise between both Nations in America.

That after all that could be said on Either side had been heard and Examined, the s^d English Comm^{es} made their report to his Majesty That it was their Opinion that it plainly appeared his Ma^{tie} & his Subjects had a right to the whole Bay & Streights of Hudson And to the Sole Trade thereof and that it might be fitt for his Ma^{tie} to Support the Comp^a of Hudson Bay, in the Recovery and Maintenance of their Right since otherwise that Trade will be Totally lost & fall into the hands of the French if they be permitted to Continue in the Possession of those Forts or of any Fort or place of Trade within the said Bay or Streights. Whereupon his then Ma^{tie} did Declare to the French Comm^{er} That haveing maturely considered his owne Rt & the right of his Subjects to the whole Bay & Streights, of Hudson, & haveing been alsoe informed of the reasons Alleadged on the part of the French to Justify their late Proceedings in Seizeing three Forts, which for many yeares past have been possessed by the English, & in comitting

His Ma^{tie} upon the whole matter did conceive the s^d Comp^a well founded in their Demands, & therefore did insist upon his owne Right & the Right of his Subjects, to the whole Bay & Streights of Hudson, & to the Sole Trade thereof As alsoe upon the Demand of full Satisfaction for the Damages they have reed, & Restitution of the three Forts surprized by the French in the Bottome of the Bay. This was Transacted & declared towards the Latter end of the yeare 1687, And Memorialls were Repeated by his Ma^{tie} Comand at the French Court to press for satisfaccon & restitution w^{ch} had accordingly followed, if the Revolution in England (w^{ch} Ensued the yeare after) had not prevented it.

Upon his p^{esent} Ma^{tie} happy Accession to the Throne, the Hudson Bay Comp^a in Aprill 1689, revived their Complaints by a Memoriall Setting forth their Sufferings, & praying his Ma^{tis} Protection & releife, But his Ma^{tie} being then upon declaring Warr against France was graciously pleased to make the Injuries done by the French, to this Comp^a one of the Articles & causes of the s^d Warr, w^{ch} made the s^d Company patiently to await, the Success of his Ma^{tis} Armes and to be righted at the Conclusion of the Warr.

That hitherto the losses and Damages sustained by the Comp^a from the French by their Robberys, Invasions & Depredations Comitted in a time of Peace and the Strictest Amity between the Two Crownes amounted to at least One hundred & Twenty Thousand pounds as hath been made appeare not onely in that former Dispute wth the French in 1687 but now also wth these New Com^{es} wth an Addition of Damages & Charges since the Warr of above One Hundred thousand pounds more :

In 1692 (it being now a time of Publick Warr between the two Nations) the Hudson Bay Comp^a (that they might not be wanting to themselves and bee found Outed of their Possession, at the Conclusion of the Warr) thought they had reason, & were Warranted to Right themselves, and therefore by setting out this yeare a very Chargeable Expedition at their owne sole Expense & Charge of neare Twenty Thousand pounds they Recovered their Forts & Factories in the Bottome of the Bay (Traacherously taken from them in a time of Peace) which they Justly held to this day.

But their Factory of Yorke Fort in Port Nelson run sever^{ll} Fates dureing the Warr, for in 1694 the French tooke it under the Conduct of Mons^r de Ibreville Assisted with some Ships of Warr by the French King upon a Capitulation of w^{ch} they did not performe one Article & tooke in Beavor skins & other Effects of the Comp^a at that Time to their Damage of above Forty thousand pounds In 1696 By his Ma^{tis} Gracious Favour by the Assistance of Two Men of Warr conjoynd with the Companies Ships, they recovered Yorke Fort againe, but Cap^t Allen Comand^{er} of the Man of Warr Capitulated Contrary to his Orders and Instructions, when the French must have Surrendred within two dayes at Discretion being almost famished, As he also brought the Beav^r Skins found in the Fort home on board the Kings ffrig^t which by his Instructions he ought to have delivered to the Comp^a Upon the Place.

But the following yeare 1697 the French sent a much greater Force then ever they did, & in Septem^{br} when the Treaty of Riswick was Concludeing and Yorke Fort supposed to be still in the English Possession, It was then taken againe by the French together wth a Ship of the Comp^{as} and a greate quantity of Trading Goods, Provision & Ammunition.

That the French got there Concessions into the Treaty of Peace by undue Suggestions and misinformations, they haveing noe Tytle to those Goods, for w^{ch} they would p^tend to be satisfyed. And the King haveing twice Granted them to the Comp^a And for their being restored to the Bottome of the Bay as haveing been in possession of it before the Warr It is an Egregious misinformation, for it must be a rightfull possession onely which can Intitle any one to Restoracon, & what kind of possession or Right they had before the Warr is Evident by the preceeding Narrative. And therefore all the Concessions in the Treaty must be understood to be founded in Right or Else they cannot bee binding Especially where the property of an other is given away Which Wee humbly Conceive to be the p^sent Case of the Hudson Bay Comp^a And the Article Expressly providing That Comes on both sides shall Examine and Determine the Rights & Pretensions w^{ch} Either of the Kings hath to the Places scituate in Hudsons Bay, This is the Foundation & Ground Worke on which all the other Concessions are Built, and His Ma^{ties} Honour & Justice is not Capable of giveing away the Inherent Right of the Imperiall Crowne of England, and much less the Property of his Subjects—otherwise Tenetur Reperare, Damnum Datum facit enim contra verum Jussubdite, Grotlus De Jure Bell. et Pac. Lib. 2, Capt. 14.

The Comp^a since the Arrivall of these French Com^{es} have Exhibited the Title of the Crowne of England and their owne Right to all Hudson Bay with an account of their Damages sustained by the French both in the time of Peace, & since the Warr amounting in the whole to above Two hundred Thousand pounds. Whether the French have well refuted the English Right or well Justified their Invasions & Rapine in a Time of perfect Peace, Is humbly offered to his Ma^{tie} Royall Consideration, And if the Hudson Bay Comp^a shall be divested of any of their places & Property there, They will not onely be left in worse Condition than they were in before the Warr (for the Righting of whome the Warr was partly undertaken) But it will bee contrary to the Justice which was ready to be done them in the late Reigne, And they doe Promise themselves, that what was maintained to them at that time cannot Possibly bee lost or given away from them now in the Reigne of our pesent Gracious Sovereigne.

Wherefore they humbly pray that his Ma^{tie} will be Graciously Pleased to Review this whole matter, & the Foundation & Equity of the Treaty in this Case. And by his Royal Authority to Interpose with his Most Christian Ma^{tie} by some Expedient or Commutation and to Insist upon the Inherent Right of the Crowne of England, and the Property of his Subjects not to be Alienated. That soe Considerable a Trade (first raised and settled by the English) may not be lost. And the Hudson Bay Company left the onely Mourners in a Peace.

Signed By Order of the said Company,

W^M POTTER, Secretary.

HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY'S STATEMENT OF THE RIGHT AND TITLE OF THE CROWN OF ENGLAND AND OF THE COMPANY'S RIGHTS UNDER ITS CHARTER, 4th MARCH, 1699.

HUDSON BAY COMPANY'S RECORD.

ye 4th March $\frac{6}{9}$ 98

1497 A Deduction of the Right & Title of the Crown of England, and therein of our Most Gracious Sovereigne Lord, King William the Third, to all ye Straits, Bay, Seas, Rivers, Lakes, Creeks, Islands, Shores, Lands, Territories & Places whatsoever within Hudsons Straits & Hudsons Bay, and of the Right and Propriety of the Hudson Bay Company derived from the Imperiall Crowne of England by Latters Pattents of Incorporation, And a Free Grant of all the Premises from King 1575 Charles the Second Anno 1670.

1585 The said Hudson Bay Company being required on their Parts to lay before the Right Honble the Lords Commissioners appointed by His Ma^{tie} the Right & Title of the Imperiall Crowne of England to all those Places within Hudsons straits and Hudsons Bay, the s^d Comp^a saveing to themselves all 1610 Right & Propriety—Derivative to them from the s^d Crowne, & all Advantages Rights and Claimes Proper & Just to them by the Civill Law & the Law of Nations, Doe humbly offer & say,

That Hudson Bay (with all that Belongs thereto w^{thin} Hudsons Straites) was first Discovered by Sr Sebastian Cabott, Grand Pilott to King Henry the 7th, who gave English Names to severall Places of the s^d Bay, Anno 1497.

S^r Martin Frobisher in Queen Elizabeths time made 3
Voyages to the Bay in 1576 ; 1577 ; & 1578 & gave English Names to severall Places there.

1612 Captain Davice made 3 Voyages thither in ye years 1585
; 1587 ; & 1588 & gave English Names to severall Parts of the s^d Bay.

1631 In 1610 Henry Hudson an English man sailed into the straits & Bay, 1610 from him Called Hudsons Straites & Hudsons Bay, & keeps that Denomination to this Day in all of Authenticke Mapps in the World, & Even in the Mapps of the best—Geographers of France, The s^d Hudson stayed a Whole Winter there tooke possession thereof in the Name of the King of England, Traded wth ye Savages & gave Names to severall other Parts of the straites & Bay

In 1612 Sr Thomas Button pursued the Discovery & Possession of the afores^d Hudson sayled into the straits & Bay wth Two Ships & particularly into Port Nelson—where he wintered & Buried the Comand^r of his Ship there, in Memory of Whome he gave it the Name of Port Nelson & called that particular Bay Buttons Bay (as it is still called in the Mapps) tooke possession thereof in the Name of his Master King James the ffirst, & gav. severall other English Names to other Places in the Bay, Erecting a Cross there Declareing thereon the Right of the Crowne of England.

In 1631 Captaine Lake Fox by Command of King Charles the ffirst made a Voyage to Hudsons Bay, & amongst other Places Entred Port Nelson, & finding there the Cross Erected by Sr Thomas Button with the Inscription Defaced and almost worne out, He erected it again with a New Inscription Declaring the Right and Possession of His Hon Ma^{tie} King Charles the ffirst, named the Adjacent Country New North Wales and Published a Journal of His Voyage.

1663 Note, That the Troubles & Civill Warrs which soon after Broke out in England might be one Principall Cause Why those Voyages were not Prosecuted Trade in generall failing amongst those Divisions, And Navigation & Discoveries wanting the Encouragem^t of the Government, till after the Restoration of King Charles the Second, yet it is observable that all that while (for soe many years) that those Places and Countries lay Neglected & unfrequented by the Navigation or Commerce of any Europa'an Nations, the French Doe not in the least Pretend to have then Visited those Parts, to have formed a possession or attempt any Commerce wth any People upon those Coasts, Nor will they say that ever any French Vessell sailed Hudsons Straits or Hudson Bay till very lately, as shall hereafter be declared & is the Subject matter of Our Complaint.

1667 It was therefore after the Happy Restoration of King Charles the Second, That Trade & Commerce began to revive & in Particular that some Noble Men & other Publick Spirited English Men, not unmindful of the Discovery & Right of the Crowne of England to those Parts in America (And to Canada it selfe which in one time will be insisted on) designed at their own charge to adventure the Establishing of a regular and Constant Trade to Hudson Bay, & settle fforts & Factories there upon the Coasts, Whereby to invite the Indian Nations (who lived like Savages many Hundred leagues up in the Country) downe to their Factories for a Constant & yearly intercourse of Trade w^{ch} was never attempted by such settlements to reside in an inhospitable Country, before the aforesaid English Adventurers undertooke the same.

1669 Wherefore after a long time of Consultation & the Necessary Preparations for soe great a Charge. In the yeare

1667 One Zachary Gilham was Provided of a Ship & Goods in London, sailed through Hudsons straits to the Bottome of the Bay, settled a Trade and Built a Fort there, which he called Charles Fort on a River w^{ch} he named Ruperts River, in Honour to Prince Rupert, Who was pleased to be Concerned wth & was One of those

p. 4039

1670 Adventurers, in which Place the Hudson Bay Comp^a continued a Trade, & have there a Factory to this Day.

In 1669, Another Voyage was undertaken by the same Adventurers, 1669 and one Capt^t Newland was sent Who Entered Port Nelson, settled there & aNew Declared the Right & Title of His Ma^{tie} to that River & the Countries Adjacent, & there fixed up His Ma^{ties} Armes as a Marke of His Sovereignty over ye s^d Places.

1670 After the Charge of these Voyages, & ye Experience by these settlem^{ts} that a great Trade might be brought to England by Beavor Furrs & other Comodities, for the Just Encouragem^t of soe Good & Publick a Benefitt, & the Persons that had Laboured in it, His then Ma^{tie} King Charles the Second was graciously pleased in the yeare 1670 According to the undoubted & inherent Right of His Imperiall Crowne of England by His Royall Lres Patents to Incorporate the sa Adventurers & to Grant unto His Highness Prince Rupert, the Duke of Albermarle, Earle of Craven, Lord Arlington, Lord Ashly & divers others & Their Success^{er} for Ever the sole Trade to Hudson Bay wth all ye Lands & Territories to be reckoned & reputed as One of His Ma^{ties} Plantations & Colonies in America, By the Name of Ruperts Land & further to Create & Constitute them & their Successes the True & Absolute Lords & Proprietors of the same, & of all ye Territories Limits & Places thereto belonging to Have Hold Possess & Enjoy the same for Ever ; as of His Ma^{ties} Manner of East Greenwich in Free and Common Soccage &c.

In the same yeare 1670 the Company soe Incorporated sent out One Charles Baley as Governour of their Factories & Settlements in the Bay, with whom Mons^r Frontenac then Govern^r of Canada by Lres of the 8th of October 1675 Entertained a good Correspondence, not in the least Complaining in severall yeares of any Pretended Injury done to the French by the s^d Companies settling a Trade & Building of Forts at the Bottome of the Bay.

1682

In 1672 the s^d Charles Baily (as the Comp^{as} Govern^r) sent a Ship from the Bottome of the Bay, Called the Imploy, to Port Nelson to settle a Trade there with the Natives As in 1680 did allso Cap^t Draper in the Shipp Albemarle.

But after above 15 yeares labour and charge, Continuall Voyages Factories & Settlements, & the Trade wth the Natives Established to some Degree of hoping to reimburse Their Charge, The French began now to Envy this New & growing Trade, & thought it worth their while to study some Pretences to invade & robb the Comp^a Or at least to share the Benefitt wth them

Wherefore in 1682 When the English Comp^a were Building a Fort & Settling a Trade at Port Nelson, The French haveing formed a Private Piraticall Expedition at Quebeck in Canada by Confederacy of One La Chaney & other Private Persons, came suddenly with two ships into the s^d River of Port Nelson & wth a stronger force surprized the s^d Compas Men & Dispossessed them of their Place & settlement Carried them Prisoners to Canada and pretended to settle a Trade there Themselves ; But Wee doe Maintain

p. 4040

1683 that this was the first time that Ever the French did sail a Vessell in Hudson Bay since the Begining of the World, Let them Prove otherwise if they can. Moreover Wee doe further maintaine that this was a Piraticall Expedit^a the Authors of it were prosecuted as such by frequent Memorialls from hence at the Court of France it was Disowned by his most Christian Ma^{tie} and Satisfaction Promised, as the Hudsons Bay Company will be ready to Prove —Now as the French Seldome want Assurance for their Pretentions or Claime to anything for their Advantage soe they never faile of Artifice or Force (when they can) to back such their pretences & whom by Violence rapine or Murther they have gott themselves into an unjust Possession, then to Expostulate all by a Treaty (as if they were upon an Even Foot wth the right Possessor) And gett it Rivitted by Concessions, Thus they seconded this Injurious Invasion & Assault & a yeare or two after Tooke another ship of the Compas one Edward Humes Comand^r wth the Goods & Carryed' the Men away Prisoners & for above a yeare fed them wth Bread & Water,

But in 1686 they formed a greater Designe & went a Considerable Force over Land from Canada to the Bottome of the Bay, by force or Treachery Suprized & tooke all the Comp^{ies} Factories there, their Ammunition Goods Stores & Merchandize to a very great value & Murdered & destroyed many of his Ma^{ties} Subjects, And all these Invasions Seizures & Depredations were in a Time of Peace & the best Correspondence between the Two Crowns which is a thing noe other Nation ever Did in a time of Mutuall Amity when the way is open for Complaints to the Prince. on Either side,

Upon these repeated Injuries the s^d comp^a Complained Severall times in 1687 to his then Matie & severall Memorialls were presented at the French Court by the Publick Ministers then there, my Lord Preston S^r W^m Trumbull M^r Skelton, at last his most Christian Ma^{tie} was willing to appoint Commes to meet at London To Treat of those Matters & Mons^r Bonrepos was sent over hither to be Joyned wth Mons^r Barrillon ye French Ambassadour in that Affaire, What the Issue of those Conferences was wherein very many Papers was Exchanged on both sides, Wee humbly Referr to the Originalls themselves (as wee presume) kept in the proper Office (But this is Certaine that in that Reigne soe Advantageous to the French Intrest) they did not obtain one Inch from the right of the Imperiall Crowne of England nor from the property of the Hudson Bay comp^a

At his Present Majestys Happy Accession to the Crowne the s^d Comp^a put in a fresh Petition & Memoriall to his Matie of their Grievous Sufferings from the French which his Ma^{tie} was Graciously Pleased to resent soe farr that he made it one of his Articles & Grounds of a Declaration of Warr against France as these Exhorbitant Encroachments of the French allmost everywhere Necessitated the Warr.

And now after waiting the End of a long & Chargeable Warr, if wee are not presently restored by the Peace to all our Rights Properties & Priviledges and a Just satisfaction for all our Damages (which wee shall Exhibite in one time) yet Wee hope wee shall give that satisfaction in this Deduction and all our Subsequent Papers to the right Hon^{ble} the Lords Comm^{or} as by his

p. 4041

Majestys Royall Justice shall Lead us in a little Time to full Satisfaction for our s^d Damages & Restitution to all our rights & Properties,

AFTER THE TREATY OF RYSWICK, 1697.

HUDSON BAY COMPANY'S RECORD.

22th January 1700.

The Limitts which the Hudsons Bay Company Conceive to be Necessary as Boundaries between the French and them In Hudson Bay (in Case of an Exchange of Places) And that the Comp^a cannot obtaine the whole Streights & Bay which of Right belongs to Them, Viz.

1st That the French be Limitedd not to Trade by wood Runers or otherwise, nor Build any House Factory or Fort, beyond the Bounds of 53 Degrees or Albany River, Vulgarly called Checkewan to the Northward on the West Maine or Coast.

2. That the French be likewise Limitedd not to Trade by wood Runers or otherwise nor Build any House Factory or Fort, beyond Ruperts River to the Northward on the East Maine or Coast.

3. On the Contrary the English shall be obleiged not to Trade by wood Runers or otherwise, nor Build any House Factory or Fort beyond the afores^d Lattitude of 53 Degrees or Albany River vulgarly called Checkewan South East Towards Canada, on any Land which belongs to the Hudsons Bay Company.

4th As also the English be likewise obliged not to Trade by wood Runers or otherwise, nor Build any House Factory or Fort beyond Ruperts River to the South East towards Canada, on any Land which belongs to the Hudsons Bay Company.

5th As likewise that neither the French nor English shall at any time hereafter Extend their Bounds contrary to the afores^d Limitations nor Instigate the Natives to make Warr or Joyne with Either, In any Acts of Hostility to the Disturbance or Detrement of the Trade of Either Nation.

Which the French may Verry Reasonable Comply wth for that they by such Limitations will have all the Countrey South Eastward betwixt Albany

Fort & Canada to Themselves which is not onely the Best & most Fertile part, but also a much Larger Tract of Land then can be Suposed to be to the Northward, and the Comp^a Deprived of that which was Alwayses their undoubted Right.

And unless the Comp^a can be Secured according to these Propositions they think it will be impossible for them to Continue Long at Yorke Fort (should they exchange wth the French) nor will the Trade Answer their Charge, And therefore, If your Lordshipps cannot obtaine these soe Reasonable Propositions from the French, But that they Insist to have the Limitts settled between Yorke & Albany Fort, as in the Latitude of 55 Degrees or thereabouts. The Company can by noe means agree thereto for that they by such an Agreement will be the Instruments of their owne Ruine never to be Retreived.

HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY TO THE LORDS OF TRADE, 29th JANUARY, 1701.

HUDSON BAY COMPANY'S RECORD.

of Trade the 31th Jany 1700.

To the R^t Hon^{ble} the Lords Commiss^{rs} for Trade &
Plantations.

The Hudsons Bay Comp^a haveing lately Exhibited to your Lordships the Resolution of their Generall Court the 10th July last Concerning Limitts between them & the French in Hudsons Bay. And though the Comp^a cannot but still Insist upon their Undoubted Right to the whole Bay & Streights of Hudson, as has been Clearly made out by them.

Yet in Obedience to yo^r L^{dps} L^{re} of the 22^d Instant & to Shew how Desireous they are to Comply therewth as much as in them Lyes (& is Consistant wth their future Safety) they doe further offer to your Lordshipps the following Proposals of Limitts between them & the French In Hudsons Bay Viz

1st That the French be Limited not to Trade by wood Runners or otherwise, nor build any House Factory or Fort to the Northward of Albany River Vulgarly called Chechechewan on the West Maine or Coast

2^d That the French be likewise Limited not to Trade by wood Runners or otherwise, nor Build any House Factory or Fort to the Northward of Hudson River Vulgarly called Canuse on the West Maine or Coast.

3^d On the Contrary the English upon such an Agreement doe Engage not to Trade by wood Runners nor Build any House Factory or Fort to the Southward of Albany River Vulgarly Called Chechechewan on the west Coast on any Ground belonging to the Hudsons Bay Comp^a.

4th As also the English be likewise Limited not to Trade by wood Runners or otherwise, nor build any House Factory or Fort to the Southward of Hudsons River Vulgarly called Canuse River on the East Coast on any Ground belonging to the Hudsons Bay Comp^a.

5th That all the Islands in the s^d Bay & Streights of Hudson Lyeing to the Northward of Albany River on the West Coast & of Hudsons River Vulgarly called Canuse River on the East Coast Shall be & remaine to the English.

p. 4048

6th Likewise that all the Islands in the s^d Bay of Hudson Lyeing to the Southward of Albany River on the West Coast, & of Hudsons River Vulgarly Called Canuse River on the East Coast shall be & remaille to the French.

7th That neither the French nor English shall at any time hereafter Extend their Bounds Contrary to the afores^d Limitations nor instigate the Natives to make Warr or Joyne wth Either in any Acts of Hostility to the Disturbance or Detrement of the Trade of Either Nation.

These Termes the Comp^a are willing to agree to, Upon Condition they may be Secured from any Claime, That has been or may be made on them, by Virtue of the 8th Article of the Treaty of Risewick, or by any other matter or thing Relateing to the said Treaty. And If the French thinke fitt to accept thereof the Comp^a are willing to Exchange Places wth them, But not without Settling of Limitts, for that the s^d Eight Article which Saith there Shall be an Exchange of places, doth also say that Limitts Shall be likewise Settled, And it would seme Verry Unreasonable that one Should be performed without the other. As to the Comp^{ies} Nameing of Rivers as Boundaries, & not Lattitudes, the same is more Certaine and Obvious, both to the Natives as well as to Europions (and the Contrary Impractacable) nor can the Latitude be soe well Laid Downe, in that Wild Countrey, the Indians well knowing the one but not the other.

But should the French Refuse the Limitts now Proposed by The Comp' the Company thinke Themselves not bound by this or any former Concessions of the like Nature ; But must (as they have alwayes done) Insist upon their Prior and undoubted Right to the whole Bay & Streights of Hudson which the French never yet would Strictly Dispute or Suffer to be Examin'd into (as knowing ye weakness of their Claime) Though the first Stepp in the s^d 8th Article of Risewick Directs the Doeing of it.

By order of the Generall Court of the s^d Comp^a, Herewith you will receive a Booke of the Transactions between England & France anno 1687 Relating to Hudsons Bay, as also a map of the said coasts, which Cont^a not only the whole Bay & Streights of Hudson, which the Comp^a by their charter are Rightfully Entituled to, But likewise & of New France, Quebeck &c^a belonging to the French, who have not only for many years been unjustly possessed of Yorke Fort alias Port Nelson in the said Bay of Hudson but by that means may extend their settlements even to halfe that vast Tract of Land belonging to the Comp^a, In their Humble Petition to the Queen they Prey that when ever Her Maj^{ty} in her great wisdom shall thinke fitt to enter into a Treaty of Peace with the French King, that the said Prince be obliged by such Treaty to Renounce all Right or Pretentions to the Bay & Streights of Hudson, to Quitt & Surrender all Ports & Settlements erected by ye French or which are now in Their Possession, as likewise not to saile any Shipp or Vessell within the Limitts of the Comp^{ies} Charter & to make Restitution of what they Unjustly dispoiled the Comp^a of, in times of Peace am^o to £108514:19:8 besides Interest am^o to much more than the Principall.

S^r you may upon casting your Eye on The Map* observe a Line drawn Cross the Grand Lake Miscosinke Twixt Hudsons Bay & Canada, which may serve as a Boundary between the Two Nations, Viz, The French not to goe to the northward of that Line by wood Runers or otherwise or make any settlement from the same towards Hudsons Bay, nor the English in like maner to the Eastward of the said Line towards Quebeck, whereby both Nations may be Limited in Their Possesions, for the future I have not to Enlarge but am with all due Respect, Sir

HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY'S PETITION TO THE QUEEN, 24th APRIL, 1709.

HUDSON BAY COMPANY'S RECORD.

Presented the 24th of Aprill 1709 In Councill.

To The Queens Most Excell^{tt} Mat^{ie}

The Petition of the Governor & Comp^a of Adventurers of England Tradeing into Hudsons Bay.

Humbly Sheweth

That your Petitioners are farr from Enquiring into The great Affaires of your glorious government, especially in what Relates to warr or Peace, Both which they know your high wisdom will soe order as shall be most for The good of your whole People, But Beleiveing the justice of your Cause & The Terror of your Arms must soone Reduce the French King to sue for such A Peace as all Europe desiers & wants, your Petitioners Crave Leave with the Profoundest Duty to Submitt the hardshipp of Their Case to y^r Royall Consideration.

That the French in A Time of Perfect Amity between the Two Kingdomes, Viz Anno 1682 did Arbitrarily Invade The Comp^{ies} Territories, at Port Nelson burn their Houses & seize Their Effects.

That in the yeares 1684 & 1685 They Continued Their Depredations.

That in the yeare 1686 They forcibly tooke from ye Comp^a 3 Factories Viz Albany Fort, Rupers Fort & Moose River Fort, Which violent proceedings they Continued The yeares 1687 & 1688 The whole Damages done by the French to the Comp^a in Times of Peace amounting to £108514: 19 : 8 : as your Petitioners are Ready to make Appeare.

That in the yeare 1685 They suplicated His then Mat^{ie} King James the 2^d to Interpose in their behalfe and by his Ambassador at the French Court to demand Reparation for the Damages done to the Comp^a & Restitution of their Places Unjustly taken from them by the French in times of Peace,

Whereupon Commissioners were Apointed by His Mat^{tie}, viz

p. 4051

Sunderland, The Earle of Middelton, & The L^d Godolphin, (Now L^d High Treasurer of England) to Treat with The French Comissioners, Before whome The Comp^a Clearly made our Theire Right to The Whole Bay & Streights of Hudson, to the satisfaction of The English Comissioners who on The 16th of November 1687 Reported The Right of your Petitioners, Upon which King James was pleased to Declare, That he Conceived the Comp^a well founded in their Demands, & Therefore did Insist upon his owne Right & The Right of His Subjects to The whole Bay & Streights of Hudson, & to the sole Trade Thereof, as also Upon the Demand of full satisfaction for the Damages they had Received & c^a The Cobby of which Report & of His Mat^{tie} Resolution thereupon is hereinto annexed, This was Transacted & declared Towards the Latter end of 1687, at which time the L^d Churchill now Duke of Marlborough was Governor of The Company) and Memorialls were Repeated by the s^d Kings Comand at the French Court soe Pressingly for Satisfaction & Restitution, That your Petitioners had certainly been Releived & Restored to their Rights, But for the Warr which soone after Broke out Between the Two Kingdomes.

That Upon His Late Mat^{tie} King William^s accession to the Throne The Comp^a Renewed Their Claime to Their Territories & for Reparation of Damages Suffered from y^e French in Times of full Peace, of which his said Mat^{tie} was soe sencible That He was pleased to make The Proceedings of France in That Affaire one of the Causes & Articles of His Declaration of Warr Against the French King in Hac Verba,

But that the French King should Invade our Charibbee Islands & Posses Himselfe of our Territories of y^e Province of New Yorke & of Hudsons Bay in A Hostile Manner Seizeing our Forts burning our Subjects Houses and Enriching his People with the Spoile of Their goods & Merchandizes, detaineing some of our Subjects Under The Hardship of Imprisonment, causeing others to be Inhumanly Kill^d & driveing The Rest to sea in A small Vessell without Food & Necessary^s to suport them, are Actions not becomeing even an Enemy And yet he was soe farr from Declareing himselfe so That at That Verry Time he was Negotiateing here in England by his Ministers, A Treaty of Newtrality and good Correspondence in America.

So That your Petitioners did Patiently await for the end of that warr, not doubting but to have Justice done them when a Peace was Concluded.

But soe it is May it Please your Most Excell^{tt} Mat^{tie} That the Comp^a found Their Interest not Comprehended in the Treaty of Risewick, which they are far from attributeing to any want of care in That Gracious Prince of this Kingdome's Honour & Trade, and Rather Thinke Their Right & Claime was Then overweyed by matters of Higher Consequence depending in that Juncture for By the said Treaty They found Their Condition much worse Then it was before, By the 8th Article whereof the French were to be Left in The Possession of such Places Sittuated in Hudsons Bay, as had been Taken by them dureing the Peace which preceeded that warr.

That at A meeting of Commissioners on both sides (as directed by the s^d Treaty to Adjust These differences) The Comp^a did Againe sett forth The Undoubted Right of the Crowne of England to the whole Bay & Streights of Hudson, Against which nothing but sophistry & Cavils were offered no The French side, & The matter Remained Undetermined,

That the onely settlement now Remaineing to the Comp^a in Those parts (of 7 they formerly had) is Albany Fort or Chechechewan, where they are surrounded by ye French on every side, Viz by their Settlements on the Lakes & Rivers from Canada to The Northwards towards Hudsons Bay, as also from Port Nelson (alias Yorke Fort) to the Southward, the French Likewise have lately made another settlement between Port Nelson & Albany Fort whereby the Indians are hinderd from comeing to Trade with the English Factory at The Bottome of The Bay, And If They are Suffered to Fix & fortify in those parts, Beyond all Question They will Deprive ye Ma^{ties} subjects of that Tract of Lands, which is soe Large A Part of your American Dominions, & Rightfully belongs to ye Crowne of England.

That not only y^e Ma^{ties} Glory is Concerned to preserve Those Plantations, but it verry much Imports The Gener^l Trade of your Kingdome^s since your Petitioners notwithstanding The Losses & discouragements They have Laboured Under and Dureing The warr have brought from thence between 30 & 40 Thousand skins p^r Arm, & doubt not If They were Reinstated in Their Right according to Their Charter to bring the s^d Importation to 100000 skins p^r Arm.

That the s^d Countrey doth abound with severall other Comodities (of which y^r Peti^{tr}s have not been able to begin A Trade, by Reason of The Interuptions They have nett with from y^e French) as with whale oyle, whale bone (of which last) your Subjects now purchase from Holland & Germany to the Vallev of above £26000 p^r Arm, which might be had in your owne plantations, besides many other valluable Comodities which in Time may be discovered.

That If The French come once to be Entirely possess^d of Hudsons Bay They will Undoubtedly sett up A whale Fishing in those parts, which will greatly lend to the Encrease of their Navigation & to Their Breed of Seamen.

That there is Carried Thither & Consumed there nothing but of the product & manufactories of England, your Petitioners Encourageing & duly bringing The Indians to weare Course cloth instead of Skins, which in process of time will considerably Advance The Woollen Trade at home.

That it must needs Reflect Upon The Honour of England to Relinquish to The French That Territory of which their Violent Usurpation in A Time of Peace was alledged as A maine Article in the first Declaration of warr Against That Kingdome.

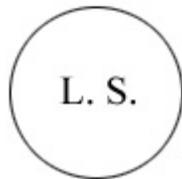

p. 4053

That If the French could pretend to any Right to y^e said Teretories by the Peace of Risewick this Right must needs be Determined by Their Notorious Infraction of the said Treaty,

The Premises Considered, when your Ma^{tie} in your high wisdom shall thinke fitt to give Peace to those Enemies whome y^r Victorious Arms have soe Reduced & humbled, & when y^r Ma^{tie} shall Judg it for y^e Peoples good to Enter into A Treaty of Peace with The French King, your Petitioners Pray That the said Prince be obleiged by such Treaty to Renounce all Right or Pretentious to the Bay & Streights of Hudson, Quitt & surrender all Forts and Settlements Erected by the French, or which are now in Their Possession, as Likewise not to saile any Shipp or Vessell within The Limitts of The Comp^{ies} Charter, & to make Restitution of The £108514 : 19 : 8 : of which They Robb & dispoiled your Petitioners in Times of Perfect Amity between The Two Kingdoms.

And your Petitioners as in Duty Bound

By Order of the Govern^r & Comp^a of Adventurers of England Tradeing into Hudsons Bay.

My Lords and Gentlemen.—The Queen has commanded me to transmit to you the enclosed Petition of the Hudson's Bay Company, that you may consider of it and report your opinion, what orders may properly be given upon the several particulars mentioned. In the meantime, I am to acquaint you that the places and countries therein named, belonging of right to British subjects, Her Majesty did not think fit to receive any Act of Cession from the French King, and has therefore insisted only upon an order from that Court for delivering possession to such persons as should be authorized by Her Majesty to take it ; by this means the title of the Company is acknowledged, and they will come into the immediate enjoyment of their property without further trouble.

MY LORDS,—The Lords Justices desire to have an account forthwith laid before them of what has been done since the peace, relating to Hudson's Bay, Nova Scotia and St. Christopher's. Some things have passed in my office, others, I believe, in the Treasury, and a considerable deal I doubt not has been done by your Lordships ; wherefore, if your Lordships be pleased to collect a perfect state of the whole I will furnish you with what you want from me.

I am likewise on this occasion to put your Lordships in mind of the point referred by the Treaty of Peace with France, to the discussion of commissaries, that their Excellencies may be acquainted with the orders given to the commissaries of commerce in these matters, and their proceedings thereupon.

London, July 3rd, 1719.

Sir,—Since you was pleased to do me the honour to propose, in behalf of their Excellencys, the Lords Justices of Great Britain, that I should go to France in order to Treat there with such persons as shall be appointed by His Most Christian Majesty, concerning the several matters left undecided by the late Treaty of Peace, concluded at Utrecht, and referred to Commissarys to be hereafter named for the purpose,

* * * * *

It will be proper that the person, who shall leave the honour to be charged with their Excellencys' Commands concerning them, should be fully apprized of the demands which the Hudson's Bay Company and His Majesty's subjects of the Island of Montserat, have to make upon those of France, and this will be best done by their Excellencys' Orders to the Board of Trade to examine the same, who may likewise, if their Excellencys' please, be directed to make a collection of all such papers and memorials now remaining in the Plantation Office, as may serve to fix the Boundrys of Nova Scotia and of Hudson Bay....

If it should be my lot to go upon this Commission [I shall only ask] that one of my instructions may be to communicate and consult upon all occasions with the Earle of Stairs, His Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, and that the said Earle may be empowered, if he pleases, to be present and assist at all the conferences that shall be held upon the subject matter of my Commission.

REPRESENTATION OF THE LORDS OF TRADE RESPECTING THE POWERS AND INSTRUCTIONS OF
THE ENGLISH COMMISSARIES, 26 AUG., 1719.

To Their Excellencies, the Lords Justices :

May it please Your Excellencies :

In obedience to Your Excellencies' Commands signify'd to its by Mr. Delafaye, in his letter of the 16th of July, 1719, we have prepar'd the inclos'd commission and instructions for Mr. Bladen, to treat, as His Majesty's Commissary or Deputy, with the Commissary or Commissaries to be appointed on the part of France, concerning several matters left undetermin'd by the 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th and 15th Articles of the Treaty of Peace concluded at Utrecht, the ^{31/11} day of March/April, 1713, between Her late Majesty and the late French King, Louis the 14th.

It was not in our power to give more dispatch to this matter, by reason of the multiplicity of books and papers which were necessary to be read and well consider'd upon this subject, besides that we were oblig'd to consult with several persons, and to wait for such lights as the Company of British merchants trading to Hudson's Bay, the African Company and several other parties concern'd in the success of this negotiation cou'd give us, touching their respective interests and demands, for which we have made the most effectual provision we cou'd think of, in Mr. Bladen's instructions.

We have perus'd and consider'd the several Charters granted by His Majesty's royal predecessors to the respective British Colonies on the Continent of America, from Hudson's Bay and Nova Scotia, as far as the Bay of Mexico, of which many are very extensive, stretching from sea to sea ; but as the French wou'd not perhaps be determin'd by these authorities only, and since we have not hitherto been able to get such maps of the said plantations as may be depended on, or to obtain such further informations as might be requir'd to support the right and title of His Majesty or any of his subjects have, to places which the French possess or pretend to, either on the back of the British plantations or westward from New England down to the Gulf of Mexico, we thought it proper to leave out of Mr. Bladen's full powers, that part of the Tenth Article which relates to a general settlement of the boundaries between the colonies of the two nations in America, and to restrain his commission to the boundaries of Hudson's Bay and Nova Scotia only, where we have proofs and authorities against which, we think, no exception can reasonably be made.

In all other matters, Mr. Bladen's commission and instructions are made agreeable to the several Articles of the Treaty of Utrecht above mention'd, comprehending the mutual pretensions of both nations then left undetermin'd ; and we hope, may prove to Your Excellencies' satisfaction.

Upon this occasion, we beg leave to represent to Your Excellencies that, considering the several accounts we have receiv'd from the Governors of his Majesty's plantations, as well as from persons with whom we have discours'd, concerning the progress of the French settlements, from the mouth of the River St. Lawrence northward to that of the Mississippi southward, in the Bay of Mexico, and the daily increase of their power in those parts, we cannot but be something alarm'd at a scheme that seems one day to threaten the destruction of all the British Colonies in America, for which reason, we have prepar'd an instruction for Mr. Bladen, directing him to get the best information he can, of the state of the French colonies in those parts, and of the constitution of the Mississippi Company. In the meantime, we cannot help observing to Your Excellencies, that among the other grants that we have perus'd upon this occasion, we have seen one from King Charles the First, to Sir Robert Heath, which, by several mean conveyances, is become the property of Doctor Cox, and contains not only the greatest part of Florida, but likewise extends itself westward beyond the River Mississippi..

It were heartily to be wish'd that, in imitation of our industrious neighbours of France, some means cou'd be found to extend our settlements likewise towards the Bay of Mexico, more especially while we are at war with Spain, and might possibly preserve by a future Treaty whatever might be now acquir'd.

Your Excellencies will find by the maps of those countries that the Fort of St. Augustine, which lyes on the coast of Florida to the southward of Carolina, wou'd be a great security to our plantations on that side, and by the best information we have had thereupon, might be reduced at a very small expense.

All which is most humbly submitted.

Instructions

Commissary Bladen,
1719.

INSTRUCTIONS TO COMMISSARY BLADEN, 1719.*

INSTRUCTIONS FOR MARTIN BLADEN, ESQ., APPOINTED HIS MAJESTY'S COMMISSARY TO TREAT WITH THE COMMISSARY OR COMMISSARIES TO BE APPOINTED BY THE MOST CHRISTIAN KING.—GIVEN.

Together with those instructions, you will receive His Majesty's Commission under the Great Seal of Great Britain, appointing you, the said Martin Bladen, to be His Majesty's Commissary for treating of and concluding with the Commissary or Commissaries on the part of the French King, all such matters and things as are referred to your cognizance and determination by the said Commission, in pursuance of the 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th and 15th Articles of the Treaty of Peace, concluded at Utrecht the 31/11 day of March/April in the year of our Lord 1713, between Her late Majesty Queen Anne and Lewis the 14th late most Christian King. . . .

It being provided by the 10th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht, that the limits and boundaries between Hudson's Bay and the places appertaining to the French, be settled by Commissaries on each part, " which limits both the British and French subjects shall be wholly forbid to pass over, or thereby to go to each other by sea or by land," you are to endeavour to get the said limits settled in the following manner, that is to say :—

That the same begin from the Island called Grimington's Island, or Cape Perdrix, in the latitude of 58½ north, which the Company desire may be the boundary between the British and French subjects, on the coast of Laboradore towards Rupert's Land, on the East Main, and Nova Britannia on the French side ; and that no French ships, barque, boat or vessel whatsoever shall pass to the northwestward of Cape Perdrix or Grimington's Island towards or into the Streights or Bay of Hudson, on any pretence whatsoever. And further, that a line be drawn from the south-westward of the Island of Grimington or Cape Perdrix (so as to include the same within the Limits of the Bay) to the great Lake Micosinke alias Mistoveuy, dividing the said lake into parts (as in the map to be delivered to you) ; and that where the said line shall cut the 49th degree of northern latitude, another line shall begin, and be extended westward from the said lake, upon the 49th degree of northern latitude ; over which said line, so to be described as above mentioned, the French and all persons by them employed, shall be prohibited to pass to the northward of the said 49th degree of latitude, and to the north or north-westward of the said lake or supposed line, by land or water, on or through any rivers, lakes or countries, to trade, or erect any forts or settlements. And the British subjects shall likewise be forbid to pass the said supposed line, either to the southward or eastward.

But you are to take especial care, in wording such articles as shall be agreed on with the Commissary of His Most Christian Majesty, upon this head, that the said boundaries be understood to regard the trade of the Hudson's Bay Company only ; that His Majesty does not thereby recede from the right to any lands in America, not comprized within the said boundaries ; and that no pretension be thereby given to the French to claim any tracts of land in America, southward or south-west of the said boundaries.

And whereas it hath been represented by the said Company that the French have, since the Peace of Utrecht, viz., in 1715, made a settlement at the head of Albany River, upon which river the Company's principal factory is settled, whereby the French may intercept the Indian trade from coming to the said factory, and may in time utterly ruin the trade of the Company if not prevented ; you are to insist that the said fort be given up, or demolished by the French, and their subjects be withdrawn from that settlement.

And it being further provided, by the 11th Article of the said Treaty, that satisfaction be made according to justice and equity, to the Hudson's Bay Company for the “ damages and spoil done to their colonies, ships, persons and goods, by the hostile incursions and depredations of the French, in time of peace ; ” and the said Company having delivered to his Majesty's Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, an account under their common seal, of the losses sustained by them from the French in times of peace, which will be delivered to you, with proper vouchers for the same ; you are in like manner to insist that satisfaction be made to the said Company pursuant to the said Article.

If the French Commissary or Commissaries should pretend to ground a more extensive claim upon the French Treaty than does appertain to them by the Latin one, you are to insist upon it, that the Latin Treaty is to be your guide in all cases, though even by the French Treaty they can have no title to any islands lying in the Bay or Gut of Canceau.

Whereas it has not been thought proper to empower you by your Commission to treat of any boundaries beside those of Hudson's Bay and Novia Scotia ; nevertheless, lest the French should take this as a tacit acknowledgment of their pretended right to several settlements they have made on the back and westward of the British Plantations on the continent of America ; you are to declare to the French Commissary or Commissaries, that His Majesty has reason to believe the French have made several encroachments upon the British settlements in those parts, which may be discussed when His Majesty shall have received, from the respective Governors of his colonies in those parts, a full and particular account of all such encroachments as they have already complained of. And in the meanwhile, you are to take particular care in the wording of such articles as shall be agreed to between you and the French Commissaries, in relation to the boundaries of Hudson's Bay and Nova Scotia, that His Majesty be not thereby concluded with respect to the boundaries of any other lands or territories His Majesty or his subjects may have a right to on the continent of America.

You are hereby directed, during the time of your residence in France, to get the best information you can concerning the situation, trade, strength, laws and government of the French colonies in America, but more particularly, concerning the establishment and constitution of the Mississippi Company, which you are to transmit to one of His Majesty's principal Secretarys of State, and to His Majesty's Commissioners for Trade and Plantations.

You are hereby required to communicate, from time to time, all your proceedings, during the course of your negotiations, unto the Earl of Stair, His Majesty's Ambassador Extraordinary, now residing at the French Court, and to confer and consult with the said Earl on all matters relating thereto.

And whereas divers matters and difficulties may arise during the course of your negotiation, which could not be sufficiently foreseen and provided for by these instructions, you are hereby directed to keep a constant correspondence with one of His Majesty's principal Secretarys of State, to whom you shall by all occasions transmit an exact account of your proceedings, and you are to govern yourself by such further instructions as you shall from time to time receive from him thereupon.

At your return from the French Court, you are to lay before His Majesty a full and particular account of your proceedings in the several matters contained in His Majesty's said Commission and in these instructions ; as likewise in all such other matters as shall from time to time be referred to your negotiation by one of His Majesty's principal Secretarys of State ; and you are to deliver to His Majesty's Commissioners for Trade and Plantations a duplicate of the said account, so far as the same may relate to their cognizance.

[The above were the instructions prepared by the Commissioners of Trade for Mr. Bladen. On the same 3rd day of September, 1719, the like instructions were prepared for Messrs. Pulteney and Bladen, by order of, and signed by, the Lords Justices. The two Commissaries were, by their Commission, empowered to act jointly and severally.]

. The meeting first intended for Saturday took not place till yesterday. My Lord Stair was present at the opening of the Commissions, and judging their powers to be sufficient, we proceeded to fix the method of treating.

It was agreed to take the several matters separately and distinctly, in the order the Treaty of Utrecht has ranged them, and at our next meeting, which will be on Saturday, we are to enter on the pretensions of the Company trading to the Hudsons' Bay.

As you know the particular regard I have for the Earl of Stair, and the great opinion I have of his abilities, you will easily imagine how great a consolation it must be to me to have his assistance in an affair of this consequence.

I am glad to understand, by your favour of the 15th past, o.s., which I received last night, that my brother Pulteney thinks of leaving London. His presence will likewise be of great use to His Majesty's affairs.

MR. BLADEN TO MR. DELAFAYE.*

Paris, November ye 7th, 1719, N.S.

I was not a little surprized to see the copy of a deposition from Barbadoes this morning in my Lord Stair's hands, relative to the actual seisure of Santa Lucia, by ye French, especially after the answer I had receiv'd from the Abbé Dubois, upon that subject, but it seems he was very little informed of the state of this matter, for the Regent, with whom my Lord Stair had a conversation about it this morning, avows the fact, and says the Marechal d'Estrées assured him the French had a constant possession and an undoubted right to ye said island, by treaty.

On Saturday last, my Lord Stair and I met Marechal d'Estrées and Abbé Dubois. Our time was spent in preparatory discourses concerning the intent of the 10th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht, relating to the boundaries of Hudson's Bay ; and at our next meeting, which will be to-morrow, at my Lord Stair's house, we design to give in the claim of the Hudson's Bay Company, in writing, with some few additions pretty material for their service, in case the Abbé Dubois his health will allow him to be there, which I fear it will not, for he is confined at present to his bed. . . .

But I confess, I cannot help thinking it will be to very little purpose to puzzle ourselves about settling boundaries, by treaty, in the North of America, if the French have so concise a way of fixing theirs in the South, without asking our concurrence ; it is to be hoped they will have the modesty to recede from this new acquisition, but in the meantime I cannot help saying this gives me no very good relish either of their friendship or discretion. . . .

I cannot leave this subject without observing how much it imports us to be upon our guard in our American Colonys. It were to be wished that the several Governments of his Majesty's plantations would pay the respect they owe to their instructions, and if those of Barbados for some time past had observed theirs, relating to Santa Lucia, the settlement of a hundred French families there could never have been put upon us at this day as a proof of their right to that island.

MR. PULTENEY TO MR. SECRETARY CRAGGS.*

Paris, May the 4th, N.S., 1720.

My Lord Stair has spoke to the Regent, who said immediately that the Conferences shall be renewed whenever we please ; his Excellency then desired His Royal Highness would appoint a day, which he promised to do. This is what the Regent has promised my Lord Stair once every week, for four or five months past, without any effect, and His Excellency does not expect any more from the promise now, tho' possibly a Conference may be appointed for form sake. I have been here near six months, and have seen only one Conference, which was appointed by my Lord Stanhope's desire ; I think there had been two Conferences before I came ; at the first of them the Commissions were read, and at the second my Lord Stair and Mr. Bladen gave in a memorial about the limits of the Hudson Bay Company, to which no answer has been made I must own that I never could expect much success from this Commission, since the French interests and ours are so directly opposite, and our respective pretensions interfere so much with each other on the several points we were to treat about ; but that the French have not been willing to entertain us now and then with a Conference, and try how far we might be disposed to comply with any of the views they had in desiring the Commission, cannot, I should think, be accounted for, but by supposing they knew we came prepared to reject all their demands, and to make very considerable ones for ourselves I shall expect your further directions as to my stay or return ; I cannot help owning I heartily wish for the latter, but I shall always submit to what His Majesty likes best, and shall only desire in this case that I may have a supply from the Treasury, since I have not had the good fortune to be concerned in either of the Misiseppis.

LIMITS OF HUDSON'S BAY UNDER THE TREATY OF UTRECHT.

EXTRACTS FROM TWO MEMOIRS OF M. D'AUTEUIL, RESPECTING THE

Mémoire général sur les limites de la Baye d'Hudson. Sans lieu Janvier

Baye d'Hudson.

Suivant l'article dixième du traité d'Utrecht, le Roy de France s'oblige a restituer à la Couronne d'Angleterre la Baye et le detroit d'Hudson avec toutes les terres, mers, rivages, fleuves et lieux qui en dépendent et qui y sont situés, sans rien excepter de l'étendue desd. terres et mers possédées présentement par les François.

Si Mgrs les Commissaires françois veulent arrêter les Commissaires anglois sur le terme de restituer dont on s'est servi dans le susd. article du traité, et leur faire remarquer que dans le 12^e article dud. traité, en parlant de l'Acadie, on a employé celui de céder, il leur sera facile de les embarrasser beaucoup. Effectivement la restitution suppose que ceux a qui on restitue ont le droit naturel et le plus ancien et que ceux qui restituent n'avoient ce qu'ils restituent que par invasion ou tout au plus par conquête. Or nous avons en main de quoi leur prouver que notre possession est la plus ancienne et que celle de l'Angleterre n'a jamais été légitime.

[The Memoir then discusses in detail the acts done by the English and French in the disputed territory.]

* * * * *

Tous ces faits posés dont Mgrs les Commissaires feront l'usage qu'ils jugeront a propos d'en faire, je viens a ce qui regarde les limites dans la supposition qu'il faille céder a l'Angleterre en vertu de l'article 10 du Traité d'Utrecht le fort Bourbon et tous les autres établissemens qui sont sur le bord de la Baye, et je dis :

1^o qu'il est bon de remarquer que les Anglois, dans tous les endroits de la d. Baye et du détroit qu'ils ont occupé, se sont toujours arrêtés au bord de la mer, faisant le commerce avec les Sauvages qui les y alloient trouver ; au lieu que les François dès le commencement de la Colonie du Canada, n'ont cessé de parcourir toutes les terres et toutes les rivières qui aboutissent

a ladite Baye, prenant possession de tous les lieux et faisant partout des Etablissements et des Missions.

2° on ne peut pas dire qu'aucune terre, aucune rivière, aucun Lac dépendent de la Baye d'Hudson, car si toutes les rivières qui se déchargent dans cette Baye ou qui communiquent avec elle en dependoient il faudroit dire que toute la Nouvelle France leur appartiendroit. Le Saguenay et le Fleuve St Laurent communiquant a la Baye par les Lacs.

3° Que celà étant incontestable c'est a la France a régler ces limites de ce côté là et que pour peu qu'elle cède, elle cedera toujours du sien, les Anglois ne pouvant prétendre qu'a une très petite étendue de pays autour des forts qu'ils ont possédés au fond de la Baye. Cependant leurs prétentions ne vont a rien moins qu'a envahir presque tout le nord et l'Ouest de la Nouvelle France comme ils veulent faire du côté du midi, en étendant les limites de l'Acadie jusqu'au fort près de Québec, car voici les propositions qu'ont faites M^{rs} les Commissaires nommés par le Roy d'Angleterre mais qu'ils n'ont point signées.

Ils demandent que les limites du côté du Nord commencent depuis le Cap Nord de la Baye de Davis dans le 56^e degré de Latitude sur la Cote de Labrador, vers les terres de Rupert sur le continent d'Orient et de la Nouvelle Bretagne du côté des François et qu'aucun vaisseau françois, barque ou bâtiment quelconque ne puisse passer au nord du côté de l'Ouest, du Cap Nord de la Baye de Davis, vers ou dans le détroit ou Baye d'Hudson ; on tirera une ligne depuis led. Cap Nord de la dite Baye de Davis vers le grand Lac de Micosink, alias Mistevery, c'est le Lac des Mistassins séparant led. Lac en deux, et qu'a l'endroit ou lad. ligne coupera le 49^e degré de Latitude, une autre ligne commencera et sera étendue du côté de l'Ouest depuis led. Lac sur le 49^e degré de Latitude, au delà desquelles lignes les François ni aucune personne qu'ils employent ne passeront vers le Nord ni le Nord-Ouest, ni par terre, ni par eau ni a travers aucune rivière, lac ou pais, pour négocier ni bâtir aucun fort, ni faire aucun établissement et d'autant que les sujets de S.M.T.C. ont fait depuis la paix d'Utrecht un établissement a la source de la rivière d'Albani.

Les commissaires de S.M.B. insistent sur ce que les Commissaires quittent led. Etablissement et que le fort s'il y en a quelqu'un de bâti soit remis a la Compagnie des Marchands Anglois négocians dans la de Baye d'Hudson ; ils demandent aussi que les sujets de S.M.T.C. ne bâtiront pas des forts ni ne feront des établissements sur aucune des rivières qui se déchargent dans lad. Baye d'Hudson sous quelque prétexte que ce soit, et que le Cours et navigation entière de toutes lesd. rivières seront laissés libres à la Compagnie des Marchands Anglois négocians dans lad. Baye d'Hudson et a tous les Indiens qui voudront trafiquer avec eux.

La simple lecture de ces propositions fait voir qu'il n'y a point d'autre réponse a y faire que de les rejeter absolument comme n'ayant aucun fondement qui les appuye. Effectivement de quel droit et en vertu de quel traité ces Messieurs cassent-ils le Traité de Bréda qui a placé nos limites au 60^e degré pour les placer au 49^e non seulement du côté de la Baye qu'on leur cède, mais en tirant a l'Ouest dans toute la longitude ; le traité d'Utrecht

p. 4085

ne parle que de restitution. Que les Anglois montrent ce que les François ont pris sur eux et on le leur restituera, mais tout ce qu'ils demandent au delà ils le demandent sans aucune apparence de droit. L'article 10^e du Traité d'Utrecht restitue le dehors d'Hudson ; pourquoy vouloir que la limite de ce côté là commence au Cap Nord de la Baye de Davis dans le 56^e ½ degré de latitude, puisque ce Cap est a plus de 120 lieues du Cap de l'Isle Bouton par le 61^e degré ou environ qui est le commencement du détroit d'Hudson. Cet excédent emporteroit une grande partie des terres de Labrador que la France n'a pas cédées.

La ligne de séparation doit donc commencer au Cap Bouton, passer par le milieu du terrain qui est entre le fort Rupert et le Lac Nemiscau dont le Peres Albanes, Jésuite et M. de St Simon prirent possession au nom, du Roy en 1672 la suite a la même distance de la Baye tout le long de la Côte à l'Est, en sorte qu'elle coupe par le milieu le terrain qui est entre le Lac des Abitibys et le fort Monsony ou de St Louis et continuer a une distance pareille du bord de la Baye du côté de l'Ouest jusqu'au dela des rivières de S^{te} Thérèse et Bourbon.

Que si sur le terrain qui par ces lignes demeure a l'Angleterre, il se trouve des Etablissements François, ils seront détruits, mais ceux qui auront été faits sur nos terres nous demeureront. Chacun est maître chés soy.

OBSERVATIONS ET RÉFLEXIONS.

SERVANT DE RESPONSE AUX PROPOSITIONS DE MESSIEURS LES COMMISSAIRES ANGLAIS AU SUJET DES LIMITES A RÉGLER POUR LA
BAYE D'HUDSON.

C¹ E., VOL 2, pp. 162-167 (Canadian Archives).

Sans lieu, ni date.

La première observation qui se présente est que par la paix de Bréda les limites de la Nouvelle France sont réglées depuis la rivière Saint-Georges jusqu'au 60^e degré de latitude nord. Ainsy toutes les terres, isles, bayes, lacs et rivières qui sont entre le 49^e degré ou environ qu'est située la rivière St Georges jusqu'au 60^e degré appartiennent incontestablement a la France depuis ce Traité de paix.

De cette proposition il resulte que ce n'est point a la France a prouver les possessions qu'elle a dans cette étendue de mers, terres, lacs et rivières, par ce qu'elle a la propriété du tout par ce Traité de paix générale aussi solennel que celui d'Utrecht.

Il n'y a donc que l'exception de l'article 10^e du traité de paix d'Utrecht qui donne un droit a l'Angleterre pour avoir le détroit et la Baye d'Hudson.

Ce droit ne doit pas être étendu au dela des propres termes du Traité puisque le Roy de France n'a voulu restituer aux Anglois que ce qui y est proprement dit.

On entend suffisamment par le mot de restituer que le Roi Très Chrétien n'a voulu remettre aux Anglois que ce qu'ils possédoient de la Baye de Hudson lorsque les Francois l'ont prise sur eux.

C'est donc aux Anglois a prouver ce qu'ils y possédoient alors réellement par des établissemens et non pas par imagination, comme de prétendre que parce qu'ils étoient placés à l'embouchure d'un fleuve ou d'une rivière, tout le cours de cette rivière, les lacs qu'elle forme ou d'ou elle sort, enfin, jusqu'à sa source fut a eux et tous les peuples qui l'habitent ou y naviguent, quoy que ces rivières et terres appartiennent a un autre souverain.

Toutes ces terres, lacs et rivières appartiennent a la France du moment qu'elles se trouvent renfermées dans les limites fixées par la paix de Bréda, et qu'elles ne sont point cédées ou données à l'Angleterre ny par la paix de Riswick ny par la paix d'Utrecht, par ce que les Anglois ne les possédoient pas quand les François se sont rendus maîtres des postes que les Anglois occupoient dans cette Baye et par conséquent qu'elles ne font point partie des pays que la France a voulu restituer aux Anglois.

p. 4087

Tous ces faits étant incontestables et M^{rs} les Commissaires Anglois rapportant eux-mêmes au commencement de leurs propositions les termes de l'article 10^e du traité de paix d'Utrecht dont ils désirent l'exécution, il semble qu'ils n'auroient pas dû étendre leurs demandes au delà de ce qui y est exprimé.

L'article 10 dit précisément que le détroit et la Baye d'Hudson seront restitués à l'Angleterre. Ainsi il ne paroît aucune raison de demander que les limites de ce côté là commencent au Cap Nord de la Baye de Davis dans le 56 ½ degré de latitude nord puisque ce Cap est à plus de 120 lieues du Cap de l'Isle Bouton par le 61^e degré ou environ qui est le commencement du détroit de Hudson, et cet excédent qu'ils demandent emporteroit une grande partie des terres de Labrador qui dépendent du gouvernement de Canada et que la France n'a pas cédé ny prétend céder.

Ainsi le commencement de la ligne de division doit être au Cap Bouton, qui est le premier Cap qui forme l'entrée du détroit d'Hudson ; et, comme il est expliqué par le précédent mémoire, cette ligne doit se rendre au milieu du terrain qui est entre le fort Rupert et celui de Memisco, ancien poste françois.

De plus leur demande de tirer une ligne du Cap Nord de la Baye de Davis jusqu'au grand lac des Mistassins, séparant ledit lac en deux, n'a pas plus de fondement puisque le Roi de France n'a point dit qu'il donneroit aucune partie des terrains dépendant du gouvernement de Canada mais restituer ceux qui dépendoient pas de la Baye d'Hudson Si les Anglois prétendent que le terrain qu'ils demandent leur appartient, ce seroit à eux à le prouver.

Enfin M^{rs} les Commissaires Anglois non contents de vouloir avoir la moitié du Lac des Mistassins demandent que la ligne continue jusqu'au 49^e degré de latitude nord et que de là il soit tiré une ligne à l'ouest sur ledit 49^e degré.

On ne voit pas sur quel fondement ces M^{rs} peuvent autoriser cette prétention et demander que la France perde tous les terrains qui se trouveront entre le 60^e degré qui lui appartient par le traité de Bréda jusqu'au 49^e degré dans toute la longitude découverte ou à découvrir. Aussi cette prétention est une nouveauté dont il n'est fait aucune mention dans l'article du traité de paix d'Utrecht.

Comme les François n'ont construit des forts que sur les terrains qui appartenoient à la France, si ces forts ou établissemens se trouvent par les lignes qui vont être réglées, sur le terrain qui appartiendra à l'Angleterre, les Anglois alors en disposeront comme il leur plaira mais si ils se trouvent sur les terres qui restent à la France, ils n'ont pas droit de vouloir exiger leur démolition, puisqu'ils n'ont été construits que par la permission ou suivant les ordres du Souverain de qui relèvent ces terres.

Sur le dernier article de leur demande, on observera qu'il n'est pas question de faire de nouvelles loix entre les deux nations, mais seulement d'exécuter l'article du traité d'Utrecht. Quand les lignes de séparation auront été réglées. l'Angleterre fera ce qui lui plaira sur ce qui lui appartiendra et la France

pareillement sur ce qui luy restera pour le plus grand avantage de leur commerce.

Le précédent mémoire fait voir quels sont les Sauvages qui appartiennent a la Baye d'Hudson, ils sont nommés sur les cartes et renfermés dans la ligne qu'il propose. Il y a plusieurs nations qui restent aux Anglois, quant aux autres qui occupent ce grand continent elles ne sont point à l'Angleterre mais a la France par droit de découverte très ancienne et par le règlement des limites du traité de Bréda ; Ainsi M^{rs} les Commissaires Anglois voulant imposer une Loi au sujet de ces Sauvages vont au delà de leur droit et de ce qui a été promis par la France.

L'Angleterre ne peut demander a la France que la restitution de ce qui a esté promis et rien au-delà ; la France restituant ce qui est marquée par la ligne proposée suivant le précédent mémoire donne tout ce qui apparitent a la Baye d'Hudson. Ainsi elle satisfait pleinement à l'article 10^e du traité de paix d'Utrecht.

Au surplus la France demande comme l'Angleterre le fait que quand les lignes de séparation auront été réglées les sujets des deux Couronnes ne puissent les outrepasser par mer ni par terre ni sur les fleuves et rivières non plus que par les personnes qu'ils emploieront.

FRENCH MEMOIRES AND PAPERS, 1750-1761, RELATING TO THE LIMITS OF HUDSON'S BAY
UNDER THE TREATY OF UTRECHT.¹

EXTRACTS FROM M. DE LA GALISSONNIÈRE'S MEMOIR ON THE FRENCH COLONIES IN NORTH AMERICA, DATED DECEMBER, 1750.²

Having treated of Canada in general, we consider ourselves bound to enter into some details respecting its different parts, and shall commence with those of the north.

Hudson's Bay, which was one of its most lucrative establishments, has on French been ceded to the English by the Treaty of Utrecht, under the denomination or title of restitution. They carry on a profitable trade there, but the excessive cold and the difficulty of subsistence, will never permit them to form establishments there, capable of affording any uneasiness to Canada ; and if the strength of the latter country be augmented, as proposed, it will possibly be in a condition, in the first war, to wrest Hudson's Bay from the English.

Memoir April, 1755.

The Treaty of Utrecht had provided for the appointment of Commissioners to regulate the boundaries of Hudson's Bay ; but nothing has been done in that matter. The term restitution, which has been used in the Treaty, conveys the idea clearly, that the English can claim only what they have possessed, and as they never had but a few establishments on the sea coast, it is evident that the interior of the country is considered as belonging to France.

AND ENGLAND, AS WELL IN SOUTHERN AS IN NORTHERN AMERICA.

The 10th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht has stipulated in favour of England, the restitution of the Bay and Strait of Hudson, with the lands, seas, coasts, rivers and places which appertain to them.

As the English have never occupied more than the lower part and mouth of the rivers, it is to that portion that the restitution which has been made to them has been limited. There are no indications that the English Commissaries who have been named to receive this restitution, have demanded or required that the French should abandon the upper part of the rivers and the lakes which they have occupied of old, or of those more recently occupied, and whose waters, nevertheless flow into Hudson's Bay.

The French have therefore preserved the settlements which they had there, and which have always been regarded as forming part of Canada. It seems that, among others, they have some actually on the Lake of the Abbitibis, and on that of the Mistassins, the waters of which are shewn on some maps as falling into Hudson's Bay.

EXTRACTS FROM THE PRIVATE INSTRUCTIONS TO M. DE VAUDREUIL, DATED VERSAILLES 1ST APRIL 1755.*

By Article 10 of the Treaty of Utrecht, it had been agreed that Commissioners should be named on both sides, to settle the boundaries between the French and British American colonies.

On occasion of an expedition that the English fitted out in 1718, against the fishing posts which the French had in the Islands of Canso, the two Courts did, in fact, nominate Commissioners to decide the property of these islands. The Commissioners met at Paris. At the very first conference, those of the King of England, who claimed that the Islands of Canso were dependent on Acadia, which was ceded to the English by the Treaty of Utrecht, were convinced, on inspecting the map which they presented them-selves, that those islands were, on the contrary, included in the reserves expressed in the Article of the Treaty of Utrecht containing the cession of Acadia, and that, consequently, France had retained the property thereof. They withdrew, saying they required new instructions from their Court, and did not again make their appearance. Although there had been question on different occasions that since presented themselves, of naming other Commissioners in execution of the Treaty, the English had always eluded it until the last war ; and Sieur de Vaudreuil is better informed than any person how they abused the moderation which had always governed his Majesty's proceedings and views, since he has been a witness of their unceasing usurpations, on the Territory of Canada, during the long peace which followed the Treaty of Utrecht.

His Majesty did flatter himself that he should eventually succeed in placing bounds to their enterprises, and securing tranquillity to his colonies, by a definite fixation of the respective limits.

In consequence of the last Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, whereby that of Utrecht has been renewed Commissioners have been named on both sides,

* N.Y. Hist. Col., Vol. 10, pp, 290-3.

p. 4091

and did meet at Paris, to regulate all the disputes concerning the French and British possessions.

But whatever earnestness and facilities His Majesty had lent to this settlement, the success of the labour of these Commissaries is far from corresponding, up to the present time, to the hopes he had entertained thereof, from the dispositions his Britannic Majesty had caused to be evinced in that regard.

As yet the Commissioners have not entered upon the limits of Canada, further than what regards Acadia. * * *

They [the English] have not yet explained themselves respecting the extent they propose giving their Hudson Bay boundaries. But it is to be expected that they will wish to stretch them to the centre of the Colony of Canada, in order to enclose it on all sides.

However that be, His Majesty is firmly resolved to maintain his rights and his possessions against pretensions so excessive and so unjust ; and whatever be his love for peace, will not make for its preservation any sacrifices, but those which will accord with the dignity of his Crown, and the protection he owes to his subjects.

Such is the principle on which his Ambassador at the Court of England has orders to labour in a negotiation that has been entered into with that Court, for the termination of all those differences, by a provisional or definitive treaty ; and it is also on that principle that His Majesty wills that Sieur de Vaudreuil do regulate his conduct, in relation to these objects, until the issue of that negotiation, whereof His Majesty will have him informed.

He is, in consequence, to be on his guard against all attempts the English might make against His Majesty's possessions ; carefully to avoid affording them any just cause of complaint ; to act on occasions wherein there may possibly be acts of violence, in such a manner that he might not appear the aggressor ; and to confine himself to the adoption of all possible measures to enable him to repel force by force.

His Majesty's intention is, in fact, that he confine himself to a strict defensive, so long as the English will not make any attack, which is to be regarded as a rupture on their part.

If, to ensure this defensive, he considers it necessary to make the Indians act offensively against the English, he will be at liberty to have recourse to that expedient.

But His Majesty desires that he do not determine on that course, except so far as the conduct of the English will render it indispensable for the safety and tranquillity of his government.

Private Instructions to
M. Vaudreuil, 1
April, 1755.

Supposing, in the mean time, that, notwithstanding what ought to be naturally expected from the equitable and pacific dispositions whereof the King of Great Britain does not cease to give assurances hostilities on the part of England should reach the point that they must be regarded as a rupture he should not, in that case, confine himself to a simple defensive, and His Majesty wills that, in such contingency, he makes use of all the powers that have been confided in him, for the operations which will be best adapted to the good of his service and the glory of his arms.

p. 4092

As these operations must depend on circumstances, His Majesty relies on Sieur de Vaudreuil's zeal prudence, and experience for undertaking those that will appear to him the most advantageous and the most honourable. He recommends only to him to observe, in the selection of those that he will think he can undertake, to give the preference to such as will have for object the English posts that can be wholly destroyed—such as that of Choueguen, and even Fort Beaubassin ; or will deserve to be preserved, after he shall have become master of them, either for the purpose of increasing the colony of Canada, as would be the case with Acadia ; or of being used for exchange, according to the circumstances which will possibly occur or happen, whenever there will be question of a peace, and such would be the capture of Hudson's Bay.

But before coming thus to operations of an open war, His Majesty desires that Sieur de Vaudreuil do assure himself that the English will have in fact committed absolute hostilities either against the French settlements or forts of Canada, or against some other colonies, or at sea.

In this category may be regarded the usurpations they will possibly attempt on the unsettled lands of Canada, and on which they have undertaken to set up unfounded pretensions. His Majesty's intention meanwhile is, that so long as they will confine themselves to operations of that sort, Sieur de Vaudreuil do content himself with opposing them, and even employ force for that purpose, only after he has protested and made the summons which time and circumstances will have possibly permitted And in this regard, His Majesty is very glad to enter into a fuller explanation of the pretensions of the English, in order to enable Sieur de Vaudreuil to act more understandingly, on occasions relative thereto.

Independent of the Hudson Bay boundary, of which there has, as yet, been no question with the English, their pretensions, as has been already observed, have for object, to extend the limits of Acadia, on one side as far as the south shore of the River St. Lawrence, and, on the other, as far as the frontiers of New England ; to include in those of Virginia the lands that reach to Lake Erie, and those of the Beautiful River [Ohio], and to penetrate into the Lakes of Canada : so that in this system they would wrest from the French all the posts the latter possess south of the River St. Lawrence; and the colony of Canada would find itself reduced to those they have on the north of that river, and wherein it would be soon crippled, in consequence of the extension the English will not fail to desire to give the Hudson's Bay boundary.

[THE DUC DE CHOISEUL, in 1761, referring to the same boundaries of Hudson's Bay, says " Nothing was done."]

LORDS COMMISSIONERS OF TRADE,

HUDSON BAY COMPANY'S RECORDS.

To the Right Hon:^{ble} the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations

The Humble Memorial of the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England Trading into Hudson's Bay

May it please your Lordships

The said Gov:^r & Co. in obedience to your Lordships Orders of the 25th July last requiring them to lay before your Lordships an Acc:^t of the Limits and Boundaries of the Territorys Granted to them represent to your Lordships

That his late Majesty King Charles the 2^d by Letters Patent under the Great Seal, bearing date the 2^d day of May in the 22^d year of his Reign Reciting that Prince Rupert and several others had undertaken an expedition for Hudsons Bay, for the Discovery of a new Passage in the South Sea and for finding some Trade for Furr and other Commodities ;—For the encouragement of the design ;—was Graciously pleased to Incorporate them, & grant unto them the sole Trade and Commerce of all those Seas, Streights, Bays, Rivers, Lakes, Creeks, and Sounds in whatsoever latitude they should be that, lie within the Entrance of Hudsons Streights, together with all the Lands and Territorys, the Countries Coasts and Confines thereof, which were not then actually possessed by or Granted to any of his Majestys Subjects or Possessed by the Subjects of any other Christian Prince.

The description in the said Letters Patent of the Territorys thereby granted being in General Terms is apprehended to have been owing to those parts being but little known and to have further proceeded from the Crown of England having in View (amongst other things) by means of the said Grant to lay a Foundation for this Nations claim and right to the said Bay & whatever territorys might lye round the same, and to prevent the French gaining any Right therein.

The said Streights and Bay commonly called Hudsons Streights and Bay, are now so well known that it is apprehended they stand in no need of any particular description further than by the Charter Mapp herewith delivered to your Lordships and the Limits or Boundaries of the Lands and Countries lying around the same, comprised as your memorialists conceive

p. 4094

in the said Grant are as follows, that is to say—All the Lands lying on the East side or Coast of the said Bay, and extending from the Bay eastward to the Atlantick Ocean & Davis's Streights and the Line hereinafter mentioned on the East and South-Eastward Boundaries of the said C:^{os} Territories—And towards the North all the Lands that lye at the North end or on the North side or Coast of the said Bay and Extending from the Bay Northward to the utmost Limits of the Land there towards the North Pole but where or how those Lands Terminate is hitherto unknown—And towards the West all the Lands that lye on the West side or coast of the said Bay, and Extending from the Bay Westward to the utmost Limits of those Lands, but where or how those Lands terminate to the westward is also unknown, tho' probably it will be found they terminate on the great South Sea—And towards the South all the Lands that lye at the South end or South side of coast of the said Bay the extent of which Lands towards the South to be Limited & Divided from the places appertaining to the French in those parts by a Line to be drawn for that purpose to begin from the Atlantic Ocean on the East side at an Island called Grimington's Island otherwise Cape Perdrix in the Latitude of $59 \frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ on the Labrador coast and to be drawn from thence Southwestward to the great Lake Miscosinke otherwise called Mistoseny, and through the same dividing that Lake into two parts down to the 49th Degree of North Latitude, as described in the said Map or Plan delivered herewith, and from thence to be continued by a Meridian Line of the said Latitude of 49° Westwards.

The French before the Treaty of Utrecht in the time of Peace, under some pretended claim of Right disturbed the said Hudsons Bay Co. in the Quiet Possession of the Bay and Territoryes aforesaid, and in a Hostile manner with Ships of Warr and an Armed Land Force attacked and took several of the Hudsons Bay C:^{os} Ships in Harbour in the Bay, and also took, plundered and dispossessed them of several Factorys and Settlements on the Coast thereof, but those matters having been under consideration at the Treaty of Utrecht were in some measure Settled by the following Articles thereof.

By the 10th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht it was Stipulated that the French King should Restore to the Kingdom and Queen of Great Britain to be Possessed in full Right for Ever the Bay & Streights of Hudson together with all Lands, Seas, Sea Coasts, Rivers and Places scituate in the said Bay & Streights and which belong thereunto no Tracts of Land or Sea being excepted which were then possessed by the subjects of France And it was further agreed to determine by Commissarys the Limits which were to be fixed between the said Bay of Hudson and the places appertaining to the French which both Subjects should be wholly forbid to pass over—and by the 11th Article of the said Treaty it was further stipulated that his most Christian Majesty should take care that Satisfaction should be given according to Justice and Equity to the said Hudsons Bay Co. for all damages and Spoil done to their Colonies Ships, Persons and Goods by the Hostile Incursions and Depredations of the French in time of Peace an Estimate

being to be made thereof by Commissarys to be Named at the requisition of each Party.

That in pursuance of the said Treaty & the especial Commission of her said late Majesty Queen Ann dated 20th day of July 1713 the said Bay and Lands then in possession of the French were delivered up to Gov^r Knight and Kelsey who took possession thereof for the English Hudsons Bay Co. and Commissarys were appointed to settle the said Limits and Adjust the damages the Company had sustained which Damages as appears by an Acco:^t delivered to the then Lords Commiss:^{rs} of Trade amounted to upwards of £100,000 and proceedings were had by the said Commissarys towards settling the same but they were never able to bring the settlement of the said Limits to a final Conclusion nor did the said Hudsons Bay Co. ever Receive any Satisfaction for their said damages.

The Boundary line then proposed by the Hudson's Bay Company to be settled as the Limits on the Continent between them and the places belonging to the French at the South End of the said Bay as appears from several Memorials and a Map or Plan then presented by the said Hudsons Bay Co. to the then Lords Commiss:^{rs} of Trade and still remaining in your Lordships Office, was the same as the Line now proposed by your Memorialists for the south East and Southern Boundaries, and to avoid as much as possible any just grounds for differing with the French in agreeing on those Boundaries which lye nearest their Settlements it is laid down so as to leave the French in possession of as much or more land than they can make any just pretension to and at the same time leaves your Memorialists but a very small Tract of Land from the South End of the said Bay necessary for a Frontier.

The National claims of both the French and English with respect to Hudsons Bay and Territory round the same having been formerly discussed in a very particular manner by Commissarys appointed to settle the same and the Papers relating to those Transactions being new remaining in your Lordships office it is conceived that therein will appear the best State of the Rights of both Crowns that can be laid before your Lordships.

Since the Treaty of Utrecht the French and all other Nations have been effectually kept out of Hudsons Bay and Streights and have never offered to come into or Navigate on the same with any Ship, Vessel or Boat nor have they had or made any Settlement on the Coast of the said Bay or carried on any Trade there, but the French since the said Treaty as has been reported to your Memorialists from their Factorys in the Bay have at different times made some settlements in different parts Inland to the West of the said Bay within the aforesaid Limits by means of Wood Runners in an Interloping way, both which are conceived and humbly represented to your Lordships as Incroachments on the British Territorys and Trade.

That your Memorialists have used the best endeavours in their power to prevent the French making any Incroachments on the British Territorys in those parts and particularly at the South End of the said Bay where by the Neighbourhood of the French there is most to be apprehended ; your

Memorialists have made a Settlement many years since upon the principal River there called Moose River which runs from a great distance South into the Bay and have also erected a Fort, Mounted with Cannon for the defence of that settlement and preventing the French Entering the Bay by any Navigation down that River, and your Memorialists on another Principal River called Albany River that likewise falls into the Bay towards the South End thereof and comes a great way from the West Erected another Fort called Henley at the Distance of 120 Miles up that River your Memorialists thereby endeavouring to Guard their Territorys both to the South and West against the French Frontier and which Forts & Settlements of your Memorialists are maintained & supported by them at considerable Expence and your Memorialists have in like manner for their further Defence towards the West erected a Fort at Flamborough head on Fort Nelson River and have also several other Settlements of Forts at the Entrance of the principal Rivers that come into the Bay from the Westward particularly on Churchill River, Hayes River and the said Albany River and also on the East side of the Bay at Slade River and Artiwinepeck Bay—And have also several Ships and Vessels Navigating the Streights and Bay at proper seasons some of which remain there the whole Year ; and the Natives all round the Bay by means of the Rivers that fall into the same on breaking up of the Ice come down in Canoes from the Country several Hundred Miles inland to Trade with the Co. bringing with them large Quantities of Beaver and other Furrs the produce of that Cold Climate and taking in Exchange the British Manufactures which the Co. have allways ready to supply them with and which the Indians carry back with them for their own Consumption and use, and to dispose of amongst the other Natives there and which it is apprehended is better performed by them than could be done by Europeans, as the Rivers that Run into the Bay admit of no Navigation for Ships or other Vessels of Burthen at any considerable Distance up the same, and the Climate round the Bay is so Extreemly cold as to admit of no Agriculture the Indians in those parts being altogether a Wandering People, wholly Subsisting themselves by Hunting, living on the wild Beasts they Kill and Bartering their Furrs.

That your Memorialists apprehend it will be for the Benefit of this Kingdom that the Limits of the Territorys granted to your Memorialists and the places appertaining to the French should be settled upon the footing herein before mentioned, and that the French should be obliged to remove all Incroachments they have made within the said Limits, by breaking up their Settlements and restraining their Wood Runners from Entering the same—And that no Ship or Vessel should be suffered to pass to the North-westward of the said Grimmingtons Island or Cape Perdrix or into the Bay or Streights of Hudson on any Pretence whatsoever—And that the French or any Employed by them should not come to the North or Northwestward of the aforesaid Line to be drawn from Grimmingtons Island on the South East and Southern Boundaries of the British Factories either by Land or Water, or through any Rivers, Lakes, or Countrys, to Trade or Erect any

p. 4097

Fort or Settlement whatsoever, and that your Memorialists on the other hand should not pass that Line either to the South or South Eastward.

All which is most humbly submitted to Your Lordships.

The Humble Memorial of the Gov.
& Company of Advent:^{rs} of England Trading into Hudsons Bay

May it please your Lordships

In obedience to your Lordships Orders of the 9th of July Instant signifying unto your Memorialists, that your Lordships have under your Consideration a Petition of several Merch:^{ts} of London, Praying for a Grant of all that part of America lying upon the Atlantick Ocean on the East part, Extending South and North from 52 Degrees of Northern Latitude from the Equinoctial Line to 60 Degrees of the same Northern Latitude, called Laboradore, or New Britain, not at this time actually possessed by any of his Majestys Subjects, or the Subjects of any Christian Prince or State ; and requiring your Memorialists to inform your Lordships whether they claim any or what Right to the said Tract of Land.

Your Memorialists represent to your Lordships that his late Majesty King Charles the Second by his Letters Patent, under the Great Seal, bearing date the 2nd day of May in the 22nd year of his Reign, was Graciously pleased to Incorporate the said Gov^r. and Comp.^a and Grant unto them the Sole Trade and Commerce of all those Seas, Streights, Bays, Rivers, Lakes, Creeks and Sounds in whatsoever Latitude they should be that lie within the Entrance of Hudsons Streights, Together with all the Lands and Territories upon the Countrys Coasts and Confines thereof, which were not then Actually Possessed by or Granted to any of his Majestys Subjects or Possessed by the Subjects of any other Christian Prince.

That the said Tract of Land called the Laboradore throughout its whole Extent, on the North and West sides thereof, from the said 60th Degree of Northern Latitude down to the 52^d Degree lyes on Hudsons Streights and Bay, and forms the Coast thereof, from the first Entrance into the said

Streights running all along the South sides of the said Streights, to the Opening into the Bay, and from thence all along the East side of Hudsons Bay down to the Bottom or South End thereof ; and as all the Lands and Territories upon the Coasts and Confines of the said Streights and Bay, together with the sole Trade and Commerce thereof are by the said Letters Patent Granted to the said Governor and Company, your Memorialists Conceive they have a just Right and Claim under the said Letters Patent to the said Tract of Land called the Laboradore and the Trade thereof.

That your Memorialists have made and do maintain several Settlements on the said Laboradore on the East side of the Bay, and by means thereof, as well as by their Shipping carry on Trade and Commerce with the Natives there, and who come down the Rivers and otherways, many days Journey from within the Land to Trade with the Company and your Memorialists have been at very great Expence to Establish and Encrease a Trade there, and particularly within these few years have Expended £10,000 Sterling and upwards in making a new Settlement on the Eastern side of the Bay near the middle of the said Laboradore which they Expect will Command the whole Trade of the said Laboradore, even to the East part or Coast thereof and are at a continual great Expence in Supporting the same and have ordered Persons to be sent up into the country to Encourage the Trade thither from within the Land, and are in hopes of having some return from thence to Answer such their great Expence, tho' as yet they have Reaped little or no Benefit therefrom.

And your Memorialists beg leave to represent to your Lordships that the Laboradore is a most Barren Tract of Land, has few Inhabitants, Is Productive of little or no Beavers and of very few other Furrs or Merchandize of Value, Insomuch that your Memorialists cannot but be of Opinion, That whoever Petition for a Grant of Land there, must do it with a view of having an opportunity by means of the footing they will thereby Gain to draw from the said Hudsons Bay Company some of their Trade in those Parts and the Neighbourhood thereof, which it is humbly Hoped will not be Permitted to be done, but that your Memorialists Rights shall be Preserved to them.

All which is most humbly Submitted to your Lordships

May It please your Lordships

In prospect of an approaching Treaty of Peace between this Nation and France, and in hope that the great Success his Majesty's Arms have been Blessed with, and the many Acquisitions that have been thereby Gained from the Enemy, will Enable his Majesty to secure to your Memorialists satisfaction for the Injuries and Depradations they have long since suffered from the French, which stand acknowledged by Treaty and are Stipulated to be made satisfaction for, But thro' the Perfidy of the Enemy and in disregard of the Treaty have thitherto remained unsatisfyed. In which the Honour of the Nation as well as Justice to the individuals Loudly calls for Redress. To that end your Memorialists beg leave to represent to your Lordships

That the French before the Treaty of Utretch in the time of Peace, under some pretended Claim of Right, disturbed the Hudson's Bay Company in the quiet possession of Hudsons Bay and the Territories thereto belonging and in a Hostile manner with Ships of War and an armed Land Force, attacked and took several of the Hudsons Bay Company's Ships in Harbour in the Bay, and also took plundered and dispossessed them of several Factorys and Settlements on the Coast thereof, which matters having been under Consideration at the Treaty of Utretch were admitted and agreed to be settled and Satisfyed by the following Articles thereof.

By the 10th Article of the Treaty of Utretch it was Stipulated that the French King should Restore to the Kingdom and Queen of Great Britain to be possessed in full Right forever the Bay and Streights of Hudson together with all lands, Seas, Sea Coasts, Rivers and places situate in the said Bay and Streights and which belong thereunto, no Tracts of Land or Sea being excepted which were then possessed by the Subjects of France—and it Was further Agreed to Determine by Commissaries the Limits which were to be fixed between the said Bay of Hudson and the Places appertaining to the French, which both Subjects should be forbid to pass over— And by the 11th Article of the Treaty, it was further Stipulated that his most Christian Majesty should take Care that Satisfaction should be given according to Justice and Equity to the Hudsons Bay Company for all Damages and Spoil done to their Colonies, Ships, Persons, and Goods by the Hostile Invasions and Depradations of the French in Time of Peace, an Estimate being to be made thereof by Commissarys to be Named at the Requisition of each party.

That in pursuance of the said Treaty and an Especial Commission of her said late Majesty Queen Ann Dated the 20th of July 1713 the said Bay and Lands then in possession of the French were delivered up to Governor Knight and Kelsey, who took possession thereof for the English Hudsons Bay Company, and Commissarys were appointed to settle the said Limits and Adjust the damages the Company had sustained, which for the Ships and Goods of the Company taken by the French, as appears by an account Stated in the year 1713 and delivered to the then Lords Commissioners of Trade and plantations amounted to upwards of £100,000 besides the Damages the Company Sustained by the Enemys burning 3 of their Forts and Factorys at Charlton Island, Moose River and New Severn, and proceedings were had by the said Commissarys towards settling the same, But they were never able to bring the Settlement of the said Limitts to a final Conclusion nor did the said Hudsons Bay Company ever Receive any Satisfaction for their said Damages.

That the papers which were laid before the said Commissarys and the Minutes of their proceedings as also a Memorial Relative to this Matter which in the year 1750 after the Conclusion of the last Warr was presented to your Lordships remaining as your Memorialists believe in your Lordships Office It is conceived from thence will appear the best State of the Rights of both Crowns and of the Territories and Claims of the said Company that can be laid before your Lordships, whereto your Memorialists beg leave to refer.

Del'd. & C.H.
Dec. 1759.

Your Memorialists therefore humbly hope In case any Treaty of Peace shall be set on foot between this nation and France, That your Lordships will interceed with his Majesty to take the premises into his Royal Consideration, And that he will be Graciously pleased to Cause your Memorialists to have full satisfaction made them pursuant to the said Treaty of Utretch for the aforesaid Depradations they are thereby acknowledged to have Sustained from the French in time of Peace, And for which Satisfaction is by the said Treaty Agreed to be made to the said Company, And that the Limits of the said Companys Territory may be Settled as by the said Treaty is also agreed.

All which is most humbly submitted

HUDSON BAY COMPANY'S RECORDS.

TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY

The Humble Petition of the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England
Trading into Hudsons Bay

SHEWETH

That your Majesty having been pleased to Nominate plenipotentiaries to the Congress appointed to be held for a Treaty of Peace Your Petitioners Crave leave humbly to represent

That the French before the Treaty of Utrecht and in Time of Peace Took several of the said Companys Ships in Harbour in Hudsons Bay, And also took Plundered and Dispossessed them of several Factories and Settlements on the Coast thereof. Which Losses and Injuries being under Consideration at the Treaty of Utrecht were admitted, and agreed to be settled and satisfied by the following Articles thereof.

By the Tenth Article of the said Treaty it was Stipulated, That the most Christian King should restore to the Kingdom and Queen of Great Britain to be Possessed in full Right for ever, The Bay and Streights of Hudson together with all Lands, Seas, Sea Coasts, Rivers and Places situate in the said Bay and Streights and which belong thereunto, no Tracts of Land or Sea being excepted, which were then possessed by the Subjects of France. And it was further Agreed to determine by Commissaries the Limits which were to be fixed between the said Bay of Hudson and the places appertaining to the French which both Subjects were to be forbid to pass over. And

By the Eleventh Article of the said Treaty it is also Stipulated. That the most Christian King, should take care that Satisfaction be given according to Justice and Equity to the Hudsons Bay Company for all Damages and Spoil done to their Colonies, Ships, Persons and Goods by the Hostile Incursions and depredations of the French in time of Peace, an Estimate being to be made thereof by Commissaries to be Named at the requisition of each party.

In consequence of which Articles, Hudsons Bay with all the Coasts thereof then in possession of the French were delivered up and restored to the said Company And Commissaries were appointed to settle the Limits of Hudsons Bay and places belonging to the French as well as to adjust the Damages Sustained by the said Company amounting by an account delivered in the year 1713 to the then Lord Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, to upwards of one Hundred Thousand Pounds Sterling exclusive of the Damage Sustained by the Demolition of three of their Forts and Factories Namely, at Charlton Island, Moose River and new Severn, which the French Burnt, But the said Limits were never Settled, nor have the Company ever received any Compensation for the Damages they so Sustained.

That all the Subsequent Treaties between Great Britain and France have confirmed the Treaty of Utrecht so that the Hudsons Bay Company are still Entitled to the Benefits of those Articles made in their Behalf.

Your Petitioners therefore most humbly Pray That your Majesty will be Graciously pleased to Direct that Your Petitioners Rights may be considered and Settled at the approaching Congress, and that they may receive satisfaction agreeable to the Tenour of the said Treaty of Utrecht.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE, MAY, 1815.

HUDSON BAY COMPANY'S RECORDS.

Hudsons Bay House,
May, 1815.

To the Right Honourable Earl Bathurst,
Principal Secretary of State for the Colonial Department.

The Humble Memorial and Representation of the Hudsons Bay Corporation

SHEWETH

That by their Charter granted by King Charles the 2nd bearing date the 2nd May 1669 they are authorized to make Laws both Civil and Criminal for the Government of their Territories in North America, so as such Laws be reasonable and not contrary to the laws of England but as near thereto as may be.

That no laws either civil or criminal for this purpose have hitherto been made except such bye laws of the Company as from time to time were found necessary for the Regulation of their Servants and immediate Dependants in their said Territories. But a considerable addition having been made to the Population thereof by a new Colony lately settled there which is likely to increase to a considerable extent it is become necessary that a more enlarged and comprehensive Code should be established for the good Government as well of the Company's Servants as of settlers & others within their Chartered Limits in North America.

That proposed Ordinances for this purpose have been prepared under the advice of Counsel (a printed copy of which is annexed) and are intended to be sent out to the Company's Settlements in Hudsons Bay by the Ships of this Season which will very shortly sail, but your Memorialists are anxiously desirous that such Ordinances should receive the sanction of His Majesty's Attorney & Solicitor General before they are acted upon.

Your Memorialists therefore humbly pray your Lordship that the said proposed Ordinances may be forthwith submitted to the consideration of His Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor General on behalf of Government that they may report thereon whether the same are in conformity with the said Charter as being reasonable and not contrary to the Laws of England but as near thereto as may be.

And your Memorialists shall ever pray &c. &c.

I am directed by Earl Bathurst to acknowledge the receipt of the Memorial of the Hudsons Bay Corporation inclosing a Copy of the Resolution passed by them on the 19th May 1815 & requesting that they may be submitted to the Law Officers of the Crown on behalf of Government.

In reply I am directed to acquaint you that previous to taking any measures for approving or confirming the ordinances proposed to be made for the Government of His Majesty's Subjects in the neighbourhood of Hudsons Bay, Lord Bathurst feels it necessary to require from the Hudsons Bay Company a distinct specification of the limits of the Territory within which it is proposed that such ordinances should have effect and I am therefore to request that you would furnish his Lordship with this information.

GOVERNOR OF HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY TO EARL BATHURST, 8th JUNE, 1815.

HUDSON BAY COMPANY'S RECORDS.

Hudsons Bay House,
8th June 1815.

To the Rt. Honble. Earl Bathurst &c. &c.

My Lord,

Messrs. Bleasdale & Co. have communicated to me a letter, which Mr. Goulburn had addressed to them the 2nd inst. in consequence of an application made by them on behalf of the Hudson's Bay Company. Mr. Goulburn having desired that your Lordship should be furnished with a distinct specification of the limits of the Territory within which the ordinances of the Hudsons Bay Company relative to the better administration of Justice are to have effect, I beg leave to transmit a Copy of the Charter, granted by King Charles the 2nd from which your Lordship will observe that the grant of the Territory includes all lands which lie upon the waters that run into Hudsons Bay The limits therefore can only be defined by the Height of land which divides these waters from those which run into the Sea in any other direction.

The geographical discoveries which have been progressively made by the Company's Servants for many years past have ascertained with great accuracy the situation of the height of land which is laid down distinctly in most of the recent maps of North America. On the South East of Hudsons Bay it divides the rivers that run into James Bay from various branches of the St. Lawrence. On the South west, it divides the waters of the Saskatchewan & Red River from those of the Missouri & Mississippi & on the North West, those of Churchill River from the Athapescow, & other rivers which flow to the Northward into the Frozen Ocean.

Within these limits the Governors of the different establishments have always exercised jurisdiction, so far as circumstances required but in consequence of the increasing population of the Country, new rights & varied interests have arisen, which call for a more regular & effectual administration of Justice.

For the satisfaction of all persons, living within the jurisdiction of the Company, it has been thought advisable to take the opinion of several eminent counsel of the different courts of Law & Equity who concurred in an unanimous opinion that the Company have a complete title to all the Lands within the limit above mentioned & that within these limits their Governor & their Council appointed by the Company, are empowered by the Charter to administer Justice according to the Law of England. A copy of these opinions is inclosed for your Lordships information.

p. 4104

As these questions involve points of Royal Prerogative, we were anxious to obtain the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown in addition to those of Sir Sam'l Romilly, Mr. Cruise, Mr. Holroyd, Mr. Scarlett, & Mr. Bell. The high sanction of their opinion would certainly have been a great satisfaction to the persons acting under the Charter but as the circumstances of the Colony require that an adequate provision for the administration of justice between man & man should be made without delay, the Board of Directors have felt it to be their duty provisionally to give Instructions to the Governor in Chief with his Council to try & determine according to the Law of England, all causes which may arise, & to administer Justice with all those precautions which have been recommended by the eminent legal authorities whom we have consulted trusting that we may yet be enabled to transmit to Hudsons Bay the opinion of His Majesty's Attorney & Solicitor General.

I have the honor to be &c., &c., &c.

HUDSON BAY COMPANY'S RECORDS.

To Joseph Berins Esq.,

Sir :

I am directed by Lord Bathurst to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 3rd instant in which you communicate for the information of His Majesty's Government the intention of the Hudsons Bay Company to enrol arm & place under the orders of persons qualified to discipline & command them the Servants of the Hudsons Bay Company settled within their Territories in North America, & this for the express purpose of defending the settlement lately made at Red River & protecting what they consider to be the rights of the Company in that quarter. In reply I am directed to acquaint you that so long as a prospect was afforded of bringing the disputes of the Hudsons Bay & North West Companies to a judicial decision by the Trial of Mr. McDonell before the regular Tribunals of Canada Lord Bathurst was unwilling to exercise any interference which might have the effect of prejudging the question at issue. But as it subsequently appeared that there were legal objections to the mode of proceeding adopted against Mr. McDonell which precluded all hope of investigating in that manner the real rights of the Hudsons Bay Company Lord Bathurst thought it incumbent upon him to take other steps with a view to prevent those dangerous consequences with which His Majesty's Dominions in North America were threatened in consequence of the pretensions advanced by the Hudson's Bay Company & the resistance given to theist by the Agents of the North West Company. His Lordship had therefore, as a preliminary measure, and with a view to ascertain the extent of jurisdiction, which the Hudsons Bay Company can legally claim under their Charter, refered the case to the consideration of His Majesty's Law Servants. As soon as their report shall be received a communication of Lord Bathurst's views on the subject will be made to you.

In the interim his Lordship has only to express his decided objection to the measure announced in your letter of creating an Armed Force for the defence of a Territory, the title to which in the extent to which it is asserted is to say the least of it extremely doubtful. Nor can his Lordship believe that under the circumstances stated, the company can have any disposition to incur the responsibility of persisting in the measure which you have announced to be in their contemplation. Downing Street, 12th April 1815.

I have the honour to be &c.

The R^t Honble. Earl Bathurst &c., &c.

My Lord :

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Goulburn's letter of the 12th inst. in which he informs me that your Lordship with a view to ascertain the extent of jurisdiction which the Hudsons Bay Company can legally claim under their Charter have refered the case to the consideration of His Majestys Law Servants & I have to assure your Lordship of the perfect readiness of the Hudsons Bay Company to afford to them every assistance which their documents may furnish & to facilitate by every means in their power the legal determination of so important a question.

I beg leave to recall it to your Lordships recollection that the Directors of the H.B.Co. have in former communications expressed an anxious wish for the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown upon this question, that they might have either the additional weight of their authority as confirming the opinions of Mr. Justice Holroyd, Sir Saml. Romilly, Mr Scarlett, Mr. Bell & Mr. Cruise or that had His Majesty's Attorney & Solicitor differed from those great authorities, that means might have been found to bring these Chartered Rights at once before the King in Council.

In consequence of your Lordship having expressed decided objections to the formation of the Company's Servants & others into Volunteer Corps for their mutual protection, I have to inform your Lordship that the Hudsons Bay Company will suspend this measure upon the authority of your Lordships' Letter, in the firm reliance that His Majestys Government will take effectual steps for the protection of the lives & properties of the British Subjects settled within the Companys Territories, as the Board of Directors feel a very great responsibility in withholding the only protection which they have the means of immediately affording them.

I have the honour to be

PETITION OF HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY TO THE KING, 12th MAY, 1820.

HUDSON BAY COMPANY'S RECORDS.

To the Kings Most Excellent Majesty in Council

The humble Petition of the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudsons Bay

SHEWETH

That by Letters Patent of His late Majesty king Charles the second bearing date the Second day of May in the Twenty Second year of his reign and forming your Petitioners Charter of incorporation, your Petitioners, their Predecessors and Successors, as one body corporate and Politic, were and are impowered and authorized to receive possess and enjoy and retain Lands Rents Privileges Liberties Jurisdictions franchises and Hereditaments, and also to give grant demise alien assign and dispose lands tenements and heriditaments, and were and are invested with other large and extensive powers and authorities as in and by the said Charter will more fully appear.

That by virtue of a Grant contained in their said Charter your Petitioners are the true and absolute Lords and Proprietors (saving always the faith and allegiance due to your Majesty, your heirs and Successors) of the territories limits and places called Ruperts Land which by the said Charter is appointed to be one of your Majesty's Plantations or Colonies in America and includes all the lands and territories upon the Countries, Coasts and confines of the Seas, Bays, Lakes, Rivers, Creeks and Sounds which lie within the entrance of the Streights commonly called Hudsons Streights and your Petitioners humbly submit that the proper and only limits of the interior or inland parts of the said Plantation or Colony are the extreme heights from which any waters flow into the Sea within Hudson's Streights.

That the Validity of your Petitioners said Charter and particularly of the grant of territory therein contained has been on various occasions solemnly recognized by Parliament in its Statutes and by your Majestys royal predecessors in their treaties with foreign powers, and that your Petitioners and their Predecessors have constantly acted upon the same for nearly 150 years without any legal interruption or impeachment.

That during the greater part of the said period your Petitioners have traded and still continue to trade as well beyond as within the limits of the territory granted to them and have erected Forts and established trading stations for their Servants to carry on the said trade.

That in Process of time and when the means and Opportunity offered to your Petitioners they were anxious to establish within their territories a Colony of independent Settlers to be employed in the pursuits of Agriculture and by whose cultivation of the soil the landed property of your Petitioners would eventually be rendered more valuable. Your Petitioners further considered that such establishment if successful would more effectually promote the objects of their Charter, by creating a new source of demand for British manufactures to the manifest advantage of this kingdom.

That the soil and climate in the immediate vicinity of Hudsons bay are unfavorable to Agriculture, but that the lands upon the Countries and Confines of the Lake Winipic and of the Saskatchewan, Assiniboine and Red Rivers all the waters of which flow into the Sea within Hudson Streights are rich and fertile the climate good and both well fitted for the Cultivation of grain. That the said Lands being within the limits of the Territory granted to them they were induced in the Year 1811 to grant a large tract of the same to the Earl of Selkirk for the purpose of establishing thereon an Agricultural Settlement only ; and with provision that the Settlers should not engage in the fur trade.

That in the Autumn of 1812 a number of Settlers sent by his Lordship arrived and established themselves on the Banks of the Red River, and these were followed in the two succeeding years by many others who all settled on the adjoining Lands. That the said Settlement was proceeding with every prospect of success when it was assailed first by the several manoeuvres, and afterwards by the open violence of certain partners, agents and dependants of a Canadian Association calling itself the Northwest Company of Fur traders of Montreal, The origin of which association was as follows. About the year 1770 some adventurers from Canada having succeeded in their undertakings near Lake Superior passed onwards to the Northwest and traded individually for furs with the Indians within the territory of your Petitioners, others about the year 1778 penetrated into the Athabasca country which lies beyond the said territory its waters falling into the Northern Ocean. The success of these individual undertakings sometime afterwards led to the formation of 2 Rival associations of Canadians with views of prosecuting the Northwestern furtrade, and these two bodies finally coalescing into one, constituted the aforesaid Northwest Company, the members of which however are not incorporated nor can they claim any rights which are not common to all other british subjects.

That the said Canadian traders pretending to believe that the Rights of territory and Jurisdiction granted to your Petitioners by their charter were altogether unfounded, encouraged their Servants and dependents to set the same at nought and endeavoured to persuade both the Indians and Settlers to do the same, but failing in these attempts they at length resolved to have recourse to force, and in or about the month of April 1815 a party of them proceeded to plunder the settlement of the arms with which it had been furnished by your Majestys Government for defence. In the following June they again attacked it, arrested and carried away as Prisoner the Governor Mr. Miles McDonnel and ordered the other Inhabitants to leave the settlement. On this occasion many of the Settlers were fired at and wounded, one of whom died of his wounds. The farmhouse belonging to the Settlement was broken open and pillaged, several of the servants and Labourers were forcibly seized and detained as prisoners, the Horses were stolen and the cattle driven away. The remaining settlers being alarmed at these proceedings and fearfull of still worse extremities, abandoned their homes and put themselves under the protection of the native indians, by whom they were safely conveyed to Lake Winipic. The day after their departure, their persecutors burnt to the Ground the houses, together with the Mill and other buildings belonging to the Settlement—but the settlers being afterwards joined by a fresh body of emigrants from Europe they returned to their former settlement on the Red River. In the Month of June however in the following year vizt. 1816 a still more sanguinary attack was made on them by the half breeds clerks and Servants of the Northwest Company, when Governor Semple and about 20 of the settlers were massacred, the Colonists again driven off and their houses burnt to the Ground.

That the aggressions of the Northwest Company have not been confined to the Red River establishment, but have been committed with equal atrocity against your Petitioners and their Servants at places beyond the limits of their territory in Countries where in common with all british subjects your Petitioners have a full and undoubted right to trade. In the summer of 1815 your Petitioners fitted out an expedition from Canada to proceed with a large assortment of british goods for that part of the interior of North America called Athabasca, the Northwest Company used every means of obstruction, and the natives were kept out of the way, so as to prevent those who were employed by your Petitioners from obtaining Provisions in consequence of which eighteen of your Petitioners Servants were literally starved to death. The Survivors who threw themselves on the mercy of the Northwest Company were refused even food until they submitted to sign a contract binding themselves not to perform any work or service for your petitioners but to serve the Northwest Company, and to deliver up to the latter the property of your petitioners. Mr. Archibald Norman McLeod a magistrate for the Indian territory and a partner and principal agent of the Northwest Comp^y. collected all the Clerks, Servants and half breeds of that Company and attacked several of your Petitioners Stations, overpowering their People and making them prisoners,. he seized the provisions, canoes, fishing nets, arms, &c. and all the goods belonging to your Petitioners whose people had thus no means left of providing themselves with food and when they remonstrated with Mr. McLeod, they were answered by his declaring that he would not let them have any provisions, unless they bound themselves by a written agreement not to return to the country for the space of two Years. These conditions were at first refused, but after having been kept for two and some of them for three days without food they were compelled to submit and accordingly subscribed an agreement to that effect. The performance of this agreement they were sworn to observe by an oath administered by Mr. McLeod as a Magistrate.

That while these aggressions were going on in one part of the country others of a similar nature were carried on in other parts of the interior, in March 1816 one of the trading Posts of your Petitioners at green Lake was attacked by about thirty armed servants of the Northwest Company headed by two persons named Ogden and Black clerks (the latter now a Partner) of the Northwest Company. This trading post was attacked in the night, their servants, eleven in number, seized and made prisoners and one of them (Mr. McDonald) beaten most unmercifully. The assailants afterwards seized and conveyed away all the arms and ammunition they could find together with the Stores, canoes, furs and other Goods belonging to your Petitioners after having been kept some days prisoners, they were marked off under a guard commanded by Black to Isle a la Crosse, where they found about twenty more of your petitioners Servants who had also been made prisoners and who were in great distress having eaten nothing for two days. They all continued there for a considerable time under the directions of a partner of the Northwest Company and they were afterwards joined by forty six other servants of your petitioners who had been imprisoned by Mr. McLeod as before mentioned, so that at that Period there were nearly one hundred of your Petitioners people illegally confined in the interior.

That in consequence of the circumstances already set forth various Memorials and other documents have been from time to time address'd to the Right Hon^{ble} Earl Bathurst your Majestys Principal Secretary of State for Colonial affairs, as well by your Petitioners as by the said Northwest Company. That by a Letter from Henry Goulburn Esq., dated 3d May, 1820, your Petitioners by direction of Earl Bathurst are inform'd that the said Memorials and documents have been some time since referred for the decision of Your Majesty in Council, and, that an opportunity is thus afforded to Your Petitioners to bring under Consideration of the Council the grounds upon which your Petitioners conceive their claims to rest.

Wherefore your Petitioners most humbly pray leave to refer to the said Memorials and documents and to exhibit other evidence in support of this their petition and to be heard by Counsel therein and that your Majesty will be graciously pleased to declare that by Virtue of the said Letters Patent of His said Majesty King Charles the Second, your Petitioners are the sole and absolute Lords Proprietors of all Lands between the extreme heights from which any Waters flow into the seas within Hudson's Streights and the said Seas, and that Your Majesty will be pleased to appoint commissioners to run a Line along the said Heights or will otherwise determine more precisely the said boundary and that your Majesty will also be graciously pleased to declare that your Petitioners are justly entitled to have hold enjoy and exercise all the lawfull rights of territory and Jurisdiction granted in their said charter within the Boundary so defined or hereafter to be more precisely determined, and that means may be taken to Stop further outrages both within and without the aforesaid territory, and that such further relief may be granted to your Petitioners in the premises as to your Majesty in your Wisdom may seem meet.

And your Petitioners as in duty bound shall ever pray &c., &c.

Committee
of the said Company

THE KING, 1820.

[1820.]

HUDSON BAY COMPANY'S RECORDS.

To the Kings Most Excellent Majesty

The humble Memorial of Messrs. Inglis Ellice and Company on behalf of themselves and others carrying on trade from Montreal in Canada to the Indian territory or Country under Style and Term of the North west Company.

SHEWETH

That His late Majesty King Charles the Second was graciously pleased by his letters Patent bearing date on the 2d of May in the 22nd Year of his reign, reciting that certain persons therein named had at their own costs and charges undertaken an expedition for Hudson's Bay in the Northwest parts of America for the discovery of a new Passage into the South Sea and for the finding of some trade for Furs, Minerals and other considerable commodities and by such their undertaking had already made such discoveries as did encourage them to proceed further in pursuance of their said design by means whereof there might probably arise great advantage to his said Majesty and to His kingdoms, and further reciting that the said undertakers for their further encouragement in the said design had humbly besought His said Majesty to incorporate them and grant unto them and their successors the whole trade and commerce of all the Seas, Streights and Bays Rivers Lakes Creeks and Sounds in whatever latitude they should be that lie within the entrance to the Streights commonly call'd Hudsons Streights, together with all the Lands Countrys and territories upon the Coast and Confines of the seas, Streights, Bays, Lakes, Rivers, Creeks and sounds aforesaid, which were not then actually possessed by any one of His Majestys Subjects, or by the Subjects of any other Christian Prince or State, did for himself, his heirs and successors give grant ratify and confirm unto the said persons in the said Letters Patent mentioned, that they and such others as should be admitted into the said Society as therein expressed should be one body corporate and politique in deed and in name by the name of the Governour and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudsons Bay, and them by the name aforesaid one body corporate and politique in deed and in name really and fully for ever for His Majesty his heirs and successors did make ordain constitute establish confirm and declare by the said letters Patent and that by the same name of the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudsons Bay they should have perpetual Succession.

And that His said Majesty did by the said Letters Patent ordain that there should be from hence forth one of the said Company to be elected as therein set forth to be called the Governor of the said Company. And that the said Governor and Company should and might elect seven of their number as therein expressed which should be called the Committee of the said Company which said Committee of Seven or any three of them with the Governour or deputy governor for the time being should have the direction of the Voyages aforesaid for the said Company and the Provision of the Shipping and Merchandizes thereunto belonging, and also the Sale of all Merchandizes goods and others things returned in all or any the Voyages or Ships of or for the said Company and the managing and handling of all other business affairs and things belonging to the said Company.

And that to the end the said Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudsons Bay might be encouraged to undertake and effectually to prosecute the said design His said Majesty did by his said Letters Patent, grant and confirm unto the said Governor and Company and their Successors the Sole trade and Commerce of all those Seas, Streights, Bays, Rivers, Lakes, Creeks and Sounds, in whatsoever Latitude they should be that lie within the entrance of the Streights commonly call'd Hudsons Streights, together with all the lands and territories upon the Countries, Coasts and confines of the Seas, Bays, Lakes, Rivers, Creeks and Sounds aforesaid that were not already actually possessed by the Subjects of any other Christian Prince or state.

And that furthermore his said Majesty did grant unto the said Governor and Company and their Successors that they and their Successors and their factors, Servants and Agents for them and on their behalf and not otherwise should for ever after have use and enjoy not only the whole entire and only liberty of trade and traffic and the whole entire and only liberty use and privilege of trading and traffic to and from the territories limits and places aforesaid but also the whole and entire trade and traffic to and from all Havens, Bays, Creeks, Rivers, Lakes and Seas into which they should find entrance or passage by Water or Land out of the territories limits and places aforesaid and to and with all the natives and people Inhabitants or which should inhabit within the territories limits and places aforesaid and to and with all other nations inhabiting any the Coasts adjacent to the said territories limits and places aforesaid which were not then possessed as aforesaid or whereof the sole liberty or privilege of trade and traffic was not granted to any other of His Majestys Subjects.

And that his said Majesty did further by the said Letters patent grant to the said Governor and Company and to their Successors that neither the said territories limits and places thereby granted as aforesaid nor any part thereof nor the Islands, Havens, ports, Cities, Towns and places thereof or therein contained should be visited frequented or haunted by any of the Subjects of His said Majesty or of his heirs and Successors contrary to the true meaning of the said Letters Patent and by Virtue of His Majesty's Royal prerogative which he willed should not in that behalf be argued or brought into question His said Majesty did by the said Letters Patent Straightly charge command and prohibit that all the Subjects of His Majesty his heirs and successors of what degree or quality soever they might be should not directly visit haunt frequent or trade traffic or adventure by way of Merchandize into or from any the said territories limits places hereby granted or any or either of them other than the said Governor and Company and such particular persons as were then or from that time should be of that Company, their agents factors and Assigns unless it should be by the Licence and Agreement of the said Governor and Company in writing first had and obtained under their common seal to be granted, upon pain that every such person or persons that should trade and traffic into or from any of the Countries territories or limits aforesaid other than the said Governor and Company and their Successors would incur his Said Majestys indignation and the forfeiture and the loss of the said Goods, Merchandize and other things whatsoever which so should be brought into this Realm of England, or any the dominions of the same contrary to the said prohibition or the purport or true meaning of the said Letters patent, or which the said Governor and Company should find take or seize in other places out of his said Majesty's dominions, where the said Company their Agents factors or Assigns should trade traffic or inhabit by virtue of the said Letters Patent, as also the Ship and Ships with the furniture thereof, wherein such Goods Merchandize and other things should be brought or found, the one half of the said forfeiture to be to his Majesty his heirs and Successors and the other half thereof to the said Governor and company and their Successors.

And further that all and every the said offenders for their said Contempt should Suffer such Punishment as to His said Majesty his heirs and Successors, should seem meet or convenient and not to be in any wise delivered until they and every of them should become bound unto the said Governor for the time being in the sum of £1000 at the least, at no time then after to trade and traffic into any of the said places, Seas, Bays, Streights, ports, havens or territories aforesaid, contrary to his said Majestys express commandment in that behalf set down and published. And that further his Majesty did grant unto the said Governor and Company and their successors, that his said Majesty his heirs and Successors would not grant liberty Licence or power to any person or persons whatsoever, contrary to the tenor of the said Letters patent, to trade traffic or inhabit into or upon any of the Territories limits or places afore specified, contrary to the meaning of the said letters patent without the consent of the said Governor and Company or the most part of them.

And that further his said Majesty did grant to and with the said Governor and Company that it should be lawful in all Elections and Bye Laws to be made by the General Court of the Adventurers of the said Company that every person should have a number of Votes according to his Stock in manner therein set forth.

And his said Majesty did further grant by his said Letters patent unto the said Governor and Company and their Successors full power and authority to seize upon the persons of all English or any other Subjects that shall sail into Hudsons Bay or inhabit in any of the Countries, Islands, or territories thereby granted without their leave or licence or should continue to disobey their orders and send them to England.

And Lastly by the said letters Patent, His Majesty straightly charged and commanded all and singular his Admirals Vice Admirals, Justices, Mayors, Sheriffs, Constables, Bailiffs and all and singular other his officers, Ministers, Liege-men, and Subjects whatsoever to aid, favor, help and assist the said Governor and Company and their successors and deputies, officers, factors, Servants, assignees and Ministers and every of them in the execution and enjoyment of the said Letters Patent, as well on Land as at Sea from time to time when any of them should thereunto be required, any Statute, act, ordinance, proviso, proclamation or restraint before made set forth ordained or provided, or any other matter cause or thing whatsoever to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding, as by the said letters Patent reference being thereunto had will among other things more fully appear.

That the Grant by His said Majesty of the sole and exclusive trade to the said Governor and Company contained in the said letters Patent within the Limits therein described, to the restraint and exclusion of all the other subjects of this realm amounted to a Monopoly, was beyond the power of the king to grant and was consequently wholly illegal and void.

That the establishment of a joint Stock for the purpose of carrying on the trade of the Company, under the management of a Committee who have the direction of the Voyages the provision of the Shipping and Merchandizes and the Sale of the Goods returned without the Consent of Parliament was beyond the Power of the Crown to grant and was consequently illegal and wholly void.

That the Power given by the said Letters Patent to the said Governor and Company to seize upon and send to England all such of the kings Subjects who should sail into Hudsons bay or inhabit any of the Countries thereby granted to the said Governor and Company without their leave and Consent was illegal and wholly void.

That the prohibition contained in the said letters patent of any of the kings subjects from visiting frequenting, trading or trafficking by way of merchandize into or from any of the territories or places thereby granted without the licence of the said Governor and Company and the forfeiture of the Goods and Merchandize and other things which should by means thereof be brought into England or the Dominions of the same contrary to the said prohibition or which the said Governor and Company should find, take and seize in any other places out of the dominions of England, where the said Governor and Company should trade, traffic or inhabit by Virtue of the said

Letters patent, as also the ships wherein the same would be found or brought and the furniture of such ships was wholly illegal and void.

That the punishment imposed on persons offending against the aforesaid provisions in the said letters patent without being delivered thereupon until they should become bound to the said Governor in the Sum of £1000 not to trade again within the limits aforesaid was illegal and void.

That the Power of dispensing with all Statutes and acts for the Purpose of enforcing the said grant of Territory and the exclusive right of trade was illegal and void.

That for very many years last past the said Governor and Company have made no attempt to discover any new Passage into the South Sea nor did they at any time make efforts to extend or improve the trade in furs minerals or other commodities within the limits aforesaid until after your Memorialists had extended and prosecuted the Trade originally carried on by the French in the interior of the Country by discoveries and establishments there, and the said Company have since that time obstructed and impeded the Progress of the said trade which but for such obstruction would have been carried on with much greater advantage to your Memorialists and other Subjects of His Majesty.

That in the Year 1811 the said Governor and Company conveyed to the Right Honorable Thomas Earl of Selkirk his heirs and Successors a very large tract of Land containing about 116000 square miles under Colour of the Authority of the said letters Patent, but without having legal power or authority so to do, whereby they have abused and misapplied His Majestys letters Patent and perverted the Powers and privileges thereby bestowed to other purposes than those for which the said letters patent were originally granted.

That under and by Color of the powers and privilege in the said letter' patent contained, the said Governor and Company and the said Earl of Selkirk have forcibly prevented the Subjects of his Majesty from carrying on their lawful trade and Bussiness both within and without the limits in the said letters Patent contained and have seized and carried away the Property and imprisoned the Persons as well of your Memorialists as of other subjects of Your Majesty and still threaten so to do. That your memorialists and their Partners in the said N.W. Comp^a have endeavoured by all the means in their power to have the rights of the Hudsons Bay Company legally determined by the Courts in this Country, and have brought three several actions in the Court of Commonpleas at Westminster against the Earl of Selkirk but as your Memorialists remedies for the injuries they complain of can only be enquired into by the Courts here in actions brought against individuals the Validity of the said Charter or the rights exercised by the Hudsons Bay Company cannot by such actions be in any ways determined, and by the recent death of the Earl of Selkirk your Memorialists have been deprived of all remedy for the great loss of property they sustained by the wrongful acts of the said Earl.

Your Memorialists humbly submit the premises to your Majestys royal consideration and pray that your Majesty will be graciously pleased to issue your Royal Warrant to your Majestys Attorney General thereby authorizing and directing him to cause a Scire facias to be sued out in your Majestys name for repealing the said letters patent His Majesty king Charles the Second having been deceived in the original Grant thereof and the same being wholly illegal and void, and the powers and authorities therein contained having been wholly abused and misapplied whereby the said Letters patent have been forfeited and lost. Or that your Majesty will be pleased to grant such other relief in the premises as in your Majestys Wisdom shall seem just and proper.

And your Memorialists as in duty bound shall ever pray

No. 1571.PETITION OF HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY TO THE KING, 2nd AUGUST, 1820.

[2 August, 1820.]

HUDSON BAY COMPANY'S RECORDS.

To the Kings Most Excellent Majesty in Council

The humble Petition of the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudsons Bay

SHEWETH

That your Petitioners some time since presented a Petition to Your Majesty in Council refering to a Letter from Henry Goulburn Esquire dated the 3rd day of May 1820 whereby your Petitioners were informed that the several Memorials and documents which have from time to time been addressed to the Right Honorable Earl Bathurst, your Majestys principal Secretary of State for Colonial Affairs, as well by your petitioners, as by the North West Company had some time previously been submitted to Your Majesty in Council, and praying leave to refer to the said Memorials and, Documents, and to exhibit other evidence in support of their said Petition, and to be heard by Counsel thereon ; and that your Majesty would graciously be pleased to declare that by virtue of the Letters Patent of His Majesty King Charles the Second (therein set forth) your Petitioners are the sole and absolute Lords Proprietors of all Lands between the extreme heights from which any waters flow into the Seas within Hudsons Streights and the said Seas ; and that your Majesty would be pleased to appoint Commissioners to run a Line along the said heights, or would otherwise determine more precisely the said boundary ; and that your Majesty would also be graciously pleased to declare that your petitioners are justly entitled to have, hold, enjoy and exercise all the lawful rights of Territory and Jurisdiction granted in Your Petitioners said Charter, within the boundary so defined, or thereafter to be more precisely determined, and that means might be taken to stop further outrages both within and without the aforesaid Territory, and that such further relief might be granted to your Petitioners in the premises as to your Majesty in your wisdom might seem meet.

That your Petitioners are informed that the said North West Company have presented a Memorial to Your Majesty praying that your Majesty would be graciously pleased to give your Royal Warrant to your Majesty's Attorney General thereby authorizing and directing him to cause a Scire Facias to be sued out in your Majesty's name, for repealing the said Letters Patent.

That the Memorial of the said North West Company has by an Order of Council been referred to Your Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor General to report thereon, & that your petitioners are informed that no proceeding will be taken by your Majesty in Council on your Petitioners said Petition until your Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor General shall have made their Report on the said Memorial of the North West Company.

That it is of the greatest importance to your Petitioners, and to the due protection of the lives and property of the persons now settled on your Petitioners said Territory, as also to that of the Servants & others employed in the Trade with the Indians, that the decision of your Majesty in Council, on the prayer of your Petitioner as set forth in their said Petition, and on the questions in dispute relating thereto, should if possible be obtained in the course of the present year.

Wherefore your Petitioners most humbly pray that your Majesty will be graciously pleased to direct, that Your Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor General be instructed to take the said Memorial of the North West Company into their early consideration, and to permit Counsel to attend them on the part of your petitioners in opposition to the said Memorial, and that your petitioners may be at liberty to lay before your Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor General evidence relating to the matters alleged in their said Memorial and that your Majesty's said Attorney and Solicitor General be further instructed to report on the whole at their earliest convenience.

And your Petitioners as in duty bound shall ever pray &c.

Committee
of the said Company,

John Henry Pelly, Esq., called in ; and Examined.

328. Chairman.—YOU are chairman of the Hudson's Bay Company ?—

I am.

329. Can you state in general terms over what districts the power of hat company extends ?—It extends all the way from the boundaries of Lower and Upper Canada, away to the North Pole, as far as the land goes, Ind from the Labrador coast all the way to the Pacific Ocean.

330. Have you ever formed a conjecture as to the quantity of square miles there are in this territory ?—No, I have not ; the territory in property belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company is the height of land from which ,he water falls into the bay ; the other part is the property of Great Britain ; he part held by us exclusively is under grant from the Crown, under the Act If Parliament.

331. Which do you claim exclusively as your own ?—All the waters that empty themselves into Hudson's Bay, wherever there is a height of land rom which the water runs that way ; the waters that run the other way re in what is called the Indian country.

332. What do you suppose to be the native population of the districts ou peculiarly claim as belonging to your company ?—I have no idea of the umber of the native population ; there are the Esquimaux, and other tribes, of whom we do not know much.

My Lord,

I am directed by the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos to transmit to your Lordship the enclosed copy of a letter which has been received from Mr. W. G. Bristeed, requesting authority to search for and to work the mineral cryolite on the Northern shore of Labrador between 56° and 60° North latitude. I am also desired to enclose a copy of a report upon this application from the Commissioners of Land and Emigration, and a copy of the answer returned to Mr. Bristeed.

Honorable Sir,

I am with others desirous of obtaining from you a right to search for the Mineral Cryolite and when found to work the same subject to what royalty per ton as you may think such raw material is worth, between the latitude of 56 to 60 degrees North Latitude on the Northern shore of Labrador also to extend our search into Hudsons Bay and as the exploration will be attended with considerable expense to warrant us as we are willing to try to find the mineral, if we can obtain the right to work the same if found—We therefore pray you to give us such authority—would say that the Cryolite has not been found anywhere but at Greenland but we are of opinion that it can be found in Labrador or Hudsons Bay.

Most respectfully.

(sd) GEORGE WALLACE
BRISTEED.

P.S. We understand that you are the only one to give the authority required—We wish to start from here in June and hope to hear from you by that time.

P.S. Would say I am a British subject but long resident here.

Mr. T. W. C. MURDOCK, EMIGRATION OFFICE,
TO Mr. ELLIOTT.

HUDSON BAY COMPANY'S RECORDS.

Emigration Office.
27th May 1868.

Sir,

I have to acknowledge your letter of the 25th instant with one from Mr. G. W. Bristeed of Boston United States, applying for permission to search for and work Cryolite on the Northern part of Labrador, and in the Hudsons Bay Company's Territory between 56° and 60° North Latitude.

2. The Territory indicated by Mr. Bristeed is almost entirely within the territories of the Hudsons Bay Company. It would be necessary, therefore, under present circumstances that the formal authority to search for and work the mineral should be given in the name of the Company. I presume, however, that no difficulty would arise on that account. The essential question is, therefore, what conditions should be attached to the Licence and what royalty the Licensee should be required to pay.

3. We have endeavoured to ascertain whether Cryolite is known in this Country as an article of Commerce—and if so at what price it is sold. We are informed, however, in the City that it is not so known, and that no price could be named for it. It is a mineral composed of :

Soda	36
Alumina	23.5
Fluoric Acid	40.5

has hitherto, as Mr. Bristeed states, been found only in Greenland, and even in Denmark to which it was first imported, has not we believe been much used.

4. Under these circumstances and considering the absence of inhabitants in the Country where Mr Bristeed proposes to search for the mineral, we must of necessity depend very much on the information he may himself supply for fixing the royalty he is hereafter to pay. It appears to me that the simplest course would be to grant him in the first instance permission to search for the mineral during two years—on an undertaking on his part to report the result of his search, and to attest his report by a declaration before a magistrate. It might at the same time be promised that, if his search is successful, a licence to dig mines and work the mineral over a certain extent of Country for 20 years should be granted him, on condition of payment of a royalty equal to one twentieth of the gross proceeds of his working. It is clear, however, that for the return of such proceeds it would be necessary to depend altogether on Mr. Bristeed.

5. I have proposed two years for the search and years for the duration of the License because on the Coast of Labrador and the Hudsons Bay territory between the 56th° and 60th° of latitude it would be impossible to work for much more than 4 months in the year—and practically therefore those periods are much shorter than their nominal duration. It is for this reason no doubt that Mr. Bristeed is anxious to obtain the permission he solicits as early as possible so as not to lose the only available season of the present year.

I have etc.

Sir,

I am directed by the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 4th ultimo requesting authority to search for and to work Cryolite on the Northern shore of " Labrador " between 56° and 60° North latitude.

I am desired to inform you that there will be no objection to grant you the leave for which you apply for any of the lands in question which do not fall within the territories of the Hudsons Bay Company, but as the district is almost entirely within the Territories of that Company, I am to state that, so far as their jurisdiction extends, it will be proper for you to apply to the Company for the permission which you require.

His Grace desires me to add that when you shall have come to an understanding with the Company no difficulty will be raised on the part of the Crown in arranging the terms of the necessary Licence.

James McKenzie Esq.
Quebec.

Dear Sir,

I have to acknowledge your communications of August and November, and to thank you for the information you have collected, and furnished me with respecting the operations and views of our opponents in Esquimaux Bay. The Governor and Committee seeing the propriety of extending the Honble. Cos. trade to the Northward and Westward from the St. Lawrence as a means of protecting that of their own territories, have authorised me to proceed therewith this ensuing spring. The agreement entered into by Mr. Keith and Lampson, in regard to the non-interference of the Company with the trade of Esquimaux Bay has long ago fallen to the ground, so that it is unnecessary to revert to it, and if Mr. D. R. Stewart counted on protection from that agreement he must be undeceived.

THE POST OF ESQUIMAUX BAY—HAMILTON'S

* * * * *

Sunday 12th June. A stormy night. About 10 a.m. the wind became favourable, we weighted. Mr. Robertson gave me the Balances of a few of his Indians, as they visit the Upper part of Esqx. Bay or rivers of that place. We had fine sailing all day.

* * * * *

Saturday, June 18th . . . “ We are completely misinformed as to the direct place where we were bound to, when I left Quebec. The place now is called ' Ionctoke or Hamiltons' Inlet ' the Bay itself is 90 miles and about 20 to 24 miles broad. At the entrance of the Bay Mr. D. R. Stewart has an establishment called Rigolette, and another at the bottom of the Bay, at the entrance of North West River, also a post at Kibocock, 80 or 90 miles to the Northward of Esqx. Bay, along the Coast. Mr. McKenzie says that the best year in furs, that were collected here, was procured by himself say 200 lbs. Beaver & 1200 Martens from Indians and Planters.”

* * * * *

July, 1836.

* * * * *

Tuesday 19th July. We arrived at the entrance of Esquimaux Bay at 2 p.m. Here we found Mr. D. R. Stewarts' establishment, called Rigolette. A Mr. Brownson—a petty trader on his own account, invited us to his house, and offered us any assistance. Mr. McKenzie landed about 4 miles below this to see a party of Indians, belonging to North West River (where we are bound for) and endeavour to get them to embark with us. They are tented with a planter of the name of Thomas Groves, who has kept them together, expecting Mr. McKenzie or some one else.

Wednesday, 20th July. 5 Indians with their families & Canoes arrived, they were treated with Biscuit, Pork & Grog. The planters here seem dissatisfied wt. Stewart. Mr. Davis is in charge here. The two brothers Pinette came over and hired to the Co. at £20 Cy. per annum for 2 years. I had been directed to secure these 2 men. As they are attending to their fisheries, I leave them there for the present . . .

Tuesday, August 16th . . . “ Our opponents from the number of men which they have will establish

Moolagan	2 men
Kinimo River	2 ”
Grand River	2 ”

These outposts to intercept Indians at the same time to hunt Martins. We will be obliged to do the same, but our operations will be late, as we have no buildings up as yet.”

* * * * *

Sunday, October 16th. Fine weather. William & John Mesher with their families arrived to be equipped by us. They are planters, the former to winter in Goose Bay. At the bottom of Esqx. Bay, and the latter up Grand River about 8 miles above Groves.

* * * * *

Monday, October 17th. Snow and sleet. Equipping the Meshers some of Comeau's people off up North West River (by rights this river ought to be called Hamilton, as laid down by Chart—as well as this Bay, instead of Esquimaux Bay) and 2 men in a boat for Kinimish. The men variously employed. Having sent McKay & Clouston to assist Groves to his ho. they returned today. Some Indians have cast up at Kinimo River but instead of going to see Mr. Nolin, they visited the opponents, and delivered best part of their furs. Mr. Nolin in the first place was outwitted in the Fall, for as soon as the opponents found Mr. N. along side of him, then they decamped, and built about half a league above him, but he ought to have followed them. This may account, that the Indians did not know where Mr Nolin was. This intelligence I received by a note from Mr. McKenzie today. McKay brought it.

January, 1837.

Saturday, January 7th, 1837. The planters off by break of day. They will have bad roads. The men working at various jobs. At 6 p.m. arrived old Ushita with 3 Nascopies, one of them is the Great Chief of that tribe. They were 13 days coming here, and left 5 more of their party about 4 days march off. They are not coming here. A voyage is now necessary to be made there. These Indians brought some furs. Stormy weather.

* * * * *

Monday, January 9th. Equipped the Nascopies and the following furs were recd. viz. 23 deer skins, 48 Martins, 1 Rat, 23 Sinews, 1 white fox, 1 Mink, 3 large Beavers, and 5 small Beaver. They say that they suppose that

p. 4146

Mr. Erlandson has a fort about 2 days march beyond Meshegamau Lake, for they observed smoke in the direction of Lake Pa Ki, she, que baw.

* * * * *

Wednesday, January 18th. Early in the morning I sent off the Indians of the 16th and I left the House in charge of Sinclair to go to Mesher to see if I can manage to get a House sawed in planks of 3 In. thick, I intend it should be 24 feet square, and to be placed at Rigolette. . . .

* * * * *

Wednesday, January 25th. Cold day, Alic went to Kinimish to gather leather and bring home a few Paris snow shoes. The men employed bringing fire wood. At night Mr. J. McKenzie and party cast up with 2 Nascapies. They were not altogether and he was obliged to go from one camp to another to collect what he brought. The first or second day after they left this, they killed some deer, which was put on a scaffold. We shall go for this meat in due time.

I shall, therefore, endeavour to get Mr. Smith appointed a magistrate and if he could likewise be appointed Lloyds' agent (which would not entail much trouble or responsibility) it would raise him still higher in the estimation of those by whom he is surrounded. This situation, to which it is understood no salary is attached, was obtained a few years ago for the Company's officers on the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and if it could be procured in like manner for Mr. Smith, I should consider it very desirable”

Owing to unfortunate circumstances which have retarded our affairs at East Main, it is necessary to postpone for 2 or 3 years the re-establishment of Ungava Bay ; consequently no change will at present be made in the arrangements connected with Fort Nascopie. We may possibly advance our Outposts from the Eastmain quarter in the direction of the height of land dividing it from Labrador but our object will be not to draw the Nascopies from their present post, but to hunt a section of Country supposed to be productive in valuable furs which is not now visited by the Indians from either side.

7. With reference to your enquiry respecting the boundaries of the Company's territory on the Canada side, and the nature of the intervening country, an attempt is now being made to deprive the Company of a part of their territory on the ground that it was in the possession of the French, and formed part of Canada, at the time the Company's charter was granted, from which are specially reserved all lands in the actual occupation of any Christian Prince. It would be very difficult to make this claim good, or to skew that the Company's territory was ever known to the French, but it serves to indicate the anxiety to found a claim as a basis of operations. The boundary between Ruperts Land and Canada, that as we have always understood it, is the range of hills or height of land, that divides the waters flowing into Hudson's Bay from those which find their outlet by the St. Lawrence. The most easterly extremity of that dividing ridge is near Cape Chudleigh at the entrance of Hudson's Straits from whence it runs southerly through Labrador, the rivers flowing from one side into the Atlantic and from the other into Ungava Bay and Eastmain. It then takes a westerly course parallel with, but from 200-300 miles north of the St. Lawrence and its main tributary the Ottawa, near Temiscamigue when it approaches Lake Hudson, and then runs round Lake Superior into United States territory, where it is unnecessary to follow it. All the rivers which take their rise on the North side of the line of hills above traced flow into Hudson's Bay and we claim that the lands lying along all those rivers up to their very sources, are embraced in the Company's Charter.

I would beg to bring to the notice of the Board a new branch of business which from the minute enquiries I have made, I feel convinced would be attended with considerable profit, and for carrying on which one of our stations in Esquimaux Bay is well adapted. I refer to preserving Salmon fresh in tins. This business has been carried on by Messrs. Hunt & Henley for several years back, and that it has been amply remunerative may be inferred from the fact that this season they have entered much more largely into it, intending to preserve not less than 50,000 lbs. but we are not left to conjecture on the subject for their agent Mr. Goodridge who for some cause, possibly owing to some recent changes in the conduct of their business, is at present more than usually communicative assures me that it is far the most profitable part of their business. . . .

EXTRACT OF LETTER FROM D. SMITH TO WILLIAM G. SMITH, ESQ., SECRETARY, HONBLE.
HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY, LONDON.

Montreal, 4th June, 1869.

Sir,

Mr. Hopkins will reply to your communication of the 20th May addressed to him, and I have to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the same date to my address, covering invoice of goods shipped per " Ocean Nymph " for Hamilton Inlet and conveyance by Mr. A. B. Hunt to the Company of his Fishing and trading establishments at Davis Inlet and Paul's Island. The latter document will be sent to Newfoundland for registration .

I am, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

(Sgd) DONALD SMITH,

My Lord—When I had the honor of seeing your Lordships yesterday relative to some difficulties likely to arise on the Coast of Labradore by the operation of the New Quebec Laws, you were so good as to permit me to state the same in writing, that your Lordship might thereby be enabled to give the necessary Instructions to Governor Carleton on that matter.

Immediately after the conquest of the Province of Canada some of the English Settlers became adventurers in the Seal, Salmon, and Cod fisheries on that Coast, Mr. Lymburner a correspondant of mine was one of the first and principal, he purchased from the French some sealing posts, and when Labradore was put under the Government and subjected to the fishing laws of Newfoundland he in virtue of those laws took possession of some other fishing posts which never had been occupied ; those have been settled at a very great expense and he had continued to hold them, by observing and complying with the different Regulations from time to time made by Governor Palliser and others, particularly in sending out a fishing Vessel annually from Great Britain. Mr. Lymburner has at present effects to the amount of £6000 at his different Posts on the Coast of Labradore and employs a great number of Men, and had he not been supported by me and supplied with large Sums of Money to carry him through this extensive undertaking, he must soon have failed in the prosecution thereof, which was the fate of most of the other adventurers.

In consequence of annexing the above Coast to the Government of Quebec, to take place in May some of the French Inhabitants have thought proper to lay claim to some of the Posts settled and now occupied by my correspondent, founded as they say on Grants formerly made to them of their predecessors by the French King.

I have therefore most earnestly to request your Lordship that directions may be given—when such claims have undergone a proper examination in Canada if found Valid for any of the Posts, that Mr. Lymburner may have a reasonable time allowed him to withdraw his effects from such posts, other-wise he will suffer a manifest injury.

p. 4157

And with regard to those he now occupied, after having settled at a great expence, which are not comprehended in any grant and consequently not claimed by right—I pray your Lordship will desire Governor Carleton to allow Mr.
Lymburner in the quiet possession thereof a preference with regard to such Posts, he is in every respect entitled to.

I have only farther humbly to request your Lordship will give the necessary Instructions on this matter as soon as may be convenient.

I am etc.,

(Sgnd) ROBERT HUNTER.

“ My Lord : I have the honor to enclose a petition from several merchants of this place, concerned in the fisheries and Indian Trade on the Labradore coast. In case their Lordships should upon consideration be of opinion that two or three small vessels might be usefully employed in the manner set forth in the petition, I have to recommend that they be sent out so as to arrive in the Gulph of St. Lawrence and be confined solely to that object, and be under the command of the Admiral or Officer Commanding at Newfoundland, who must be better judges of what is fit and necessary than Capt. Schanks or any other officer whose duty obliges them to reside at Quebec or elsewhere within this Province.”

EXTRACT FROM SIR FREDERICK HALDIMAND'S PRIVATE DIARY.

[5 March 1786.]

(HALDIMAND PAPERS IN CANADIAN ARCHIVES, OTTAWA.)

March 5, 1786. (Extract.) “ Was at the Court with Major Mathews. . . . Met Sir Charles Douglas, whom I did not recognize. He told me that he had driven all the Americans from our posts, that is, that he had prevented them from cutting wood to melt the blubber of the whales they took in the Gulph ; that having received no instructions on the subject, he believed that the only means of proceeding was to be extremely exact in observing the Treaty of Peace ; and that if his successors would follow the example, American fisheries would be considerably embarrassed.”

No. 1593.

NEWFOUNDLAND ACT, 10 ED. VII, CAP. XXXIV.

AN ACT TO PROHIBIT THE PROSECUTION OF THE LABRADOR FISHERY IN STEAM VESSELS.

Recovery of penalties.

[Passed 22nd March 1910]

Appeal.

Be it enacted by the Governor, the Legislative Council and the House of Assembly, in Legislative Session convened, as follows :—

Saving treaty rights.

1. It shall be unlawful to prosecute the codfishery within three marine miles of the coast of Labrador, and the islands adjacent thereto, in vessels propelled by steam, under a penalty not exceeding five thousand dollars, nor less than one thousand dollars. Obtaining and distributing bait, and conveying crews, gear and outfits to the said coast shall not be held to be prosecuting the codfishery.

2. Penalties hereunder may be sued for and recovered in a summary manner before a Stipendiary Magistrate.

3. Either party to an action may appeal from the Judgment of a Stipendiary Magistrate to the Supreme Court, on giving security to abide the result.

4. Nothing in this Act shall affect the rights and privileges granted by treaty to the subjects of any State or Power in amity with His Majesty.

AFFIDAVIT OF F. C. BRIEN.

IN THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

[20th March, 1926.]

IN THE MATTER OF THE BOUNDARY BETWEEN THE DOMINION OF CANADA AND THE COLONY OF NEWFOUNDLAND IN THE LABRADOR PENINSULA.

I, FREDERICK COLMAN BRIEN, special Officer of the Department of Finance and Customs of Newfoundland, make oath and say as follows :

1. Acting under instructions of the Hon. Minister of Finance and Customs to compile a statement from the various Departments of the Government of the amounts paid on account of public services for Labrador for the fiscal years ending June 30th, 1924 and 1925, I have prepared the statements attached hereto :

A summary statement marked " A,"
A detailed statement marked " B 1 to 11."

2. These statements are correct to the best of my knowledge and belief, and give, as far as was possible for me to ascertain from the various Departments, the amounts spent by the Colony of Newfoundland in public services for Labrador during these years.

IN THE MATTER OF THE BOUNDARY BETWEEN THE DOMINION OF CANADA AND THE COLONY OF NEWFOUNDLAND IN THE LABRADOR PENINSULA.

1. EDWARD COLPITTS ROBINSON, F.R.G.S., of 32, Crescent Grove, Clapham Common, London, England, make oath and say as follows :—

(1) Between the years 1905 and 1916, I spent, altogether, about six years in Labrador, including two whole winters. I acted as Agent for the London and Labrador Corporation, which was a Lumber Company, and had areas totalling 1,000 square miles from the Newfoundland Government, located on both sides of the inner section of Hamilton Inlet, extending up the Mulligan, North West, Kennimmoo and Kenimish Rivers. I have travelled north as far as the most northern point, Cape Chidley, and south into Canadian territory. My work was prospecting. I have travelled inland 30 miles beyond the Muskrat Falls. I am the author of a book on Labrador entitled “In an Unknown Land,” published in 1909.

(2) I was acquainted with all the hunters and trappers on Labrador more particularly with those at the head of Hamilton Inlet, which is about 150 miles from the open coast. The hunters and trappers all live at the heads of bays and inlets and trap a long way inland, often as far up as the Grand Falls. I know several trappers who have talked to me of their journeys up there. The inhabitants of this district are all of British descent. Malcolm Maclean, who is the leading character in the district, came from the Orkney Islands and settled here some sixty years ago. The other inhabitants are descended from Britishers who settled in Labrador many generations ago.

(3) I was also familiar with the salmon fisheries near mouth of the Kenimish River in Hamilton Inlet and at Eagle River in Sandwich Bay. Newfoundland regulations forbid commercial fishing in any river, no nets being allowed in the rivers or within 200 yards of their mouths. In addition to salmon, there are thousands of seals in the inner part of Hamilton Inlet up to Grand River. The inhabitants catch these seals, use the skins for various purposes and also sell them to the Hudson's Bay Company.

(4) I have known instances of the Newfoundland criminal laws being enforced at North West River in Hamilton Inlet, and at the heads of other bays by Dr. Grenfell and others, holding Commissions as Justices of the Peace from the Government of Newfoundland. On one occasion, I acted as policeman for the purpose of legal proceedings by Dr. Grenfell, against a man who had contravened the liquor laws. He committed the offence up the Hamilton River, and Dr. Grenfell imposed a fine of $100.00 on him, but the sentence was afterwards remitted by Governor MacGregor, when he visited the region. Newfoundland fishermen come up Hamilton Inlet and other bays to cut spars for their boats and timber for all fishery purposes. The liverymen also cut timber for house building and they supply wood to the Mission steamers and the fishing vessels for fuel and cooking purposes.

p. 4175

(5) The Indians, both Montagnais and Nascoopies, come out and sell their furs at Sandwich Bay, North West River and Davis's Inlet. I have met them at North West River and at Paradise River in Sandwich Bay, and I have known of them going from North West River to Davis's Inlet.

(6) In times of distress, relief is distributed among the inhabitants of eastern Labrador by the Newfoundland Government through the agency of the Hudson's Bay Company. In such cases, the persons relieved frequently cut timber and make boats which are sold and the proceeds credited to the Newfoundland Government to the best of my knowledge and belief. The Moravian settlements relieve the natives who are attached to them, and in return the Newfoundland Government allows the Moravians to import their supplies free of duty.

(7) Hamilton Inlet exists right up to the mouth of the River and the name Lake Melville is not known to the inhabitants. The mouth of Hamilton River is located in Goose Bay. Portions of Goose Bay have been rendered shallow by river deposits of sand, etc., which have been shifted about by the tides, but a passage always remains open for large vessels. I have myself seen a steamship of about 2000 tons, the "Briardene," at Mud Lake up the Hamilton River, from whence it took a cargo of lumber to England which was sold at Liverpool. The rise and fall of the tide is discernible in the Hamilton River up to the Muskrat Falls ; and about half way up to the Muskrat Falls there is some salinity in the water.

FURTHERANCE OF THE GOSPEL, IN THE YEAR 1856, FROM THE MISSIONARIES ON THE COAST OF LABRADOR.

" Dear Brethren,

" We are sorry to state, that, on the 17th of July, an evil-disposed Esquimaux, named Jacob, fired twice at Br. Elsner, each time with two balls, because the latter had called him to account for stealing. Through the Lord's gracious care, no injury was done. We could not possibly allow this dangerous character to remain on our land ; and, as he behaved almost like a madman, we had him tied, and carried southwards in a boat, with all that belonged to him. As we have here neither magistrate nor police regulations, we scarcely know how to act in such a distressing case as the above, fearing to be either too forbearing on the one hand, or too severe on the other.

but spent the day chiefly in the company of a half-Indian, who resides here, though he has long ago forgotten the Indian language. They appeared at our meetings, and behaved with decorum. How glad we should have been to preach the blessed Gospel to them in their own tongue ! These, like very many Indians, professed to belong to the Romish church, but they seemed to lack all religious knowledge. They had come from a distance of several days' journey, and drew on the floor with chalk the outlines of the course they had taken. We gave them several presents for their wives and children, with which they were pleased. They left Zoar on the 11th.

About the middle of the year a family of Indians visited Hopedale from Ukjuktok Bay, who, as almost all the Neskopie Indians, are nominally connected with the Roman Catholic Church. The object of their visit was to obtain information about the differences between the Roman Catholic and Protestant beliefs. The Christian behaviour of our Eskimoes, who live near them, had made such an impression on their minds, that they desired to spend a Sunday with our congregation at Hopedale. An opportunity was afforded them of hearing the true way of salvation set forth, and they promised to return at Christmas.

Some Indians also appear to have visited the neighbourhood of Ramah, but they evidently did not wish to be seen, for it was only from the marks of their feet in the snow that their presence was perceived.

Zoar, July, 1881. pp.

The year 1877 is reported to have been one marked by peace and prosperity, both externally and internally. Not a few anxiously sought for religious conversation with the missionaries, in evident concern for their souls. A family of Indians from the Ukjuktok Bay (Roman Catholics), having been favourably impressed with the behaviour of the Christian Eskimoes in their neighbourhood, came to Hopedale to spend a Sunday. They seemed much pleased, and promised to return at Christmas.

Zoar, pp. 120-122.

In February and March we had visits from companies of Nascopi Indians, who came to barter with us. How we regretted our inability to converse with them ! They were very suspicious in their dealings with us.

1881.—In February we were visited by eight men belonging to the Nascopi Indians. None of them understanding either English or Eskimo, conversation was impossible, and trading was no easy business. They remained a few days, and on leaving expressed their intention to renew the visit. Early in March a second company of Indians, belonging to the same tribe, arrived, this time with women and children. The Eskimoes with whom they lodged brought them to church with them, and it was evident from their demeanour that it was something utterly unknown to them.

A party of Indians appeared in December for trading purposes. They were the same who had been here before, but we were unable to converse with them for want of a language common to both of us. We observed that, contrary to their former practice, they carefully abstained from attending our service in church. A sewing machine in our house filled them with intense amazement.

EXTRACTS FROM THE DIARIES OF CONGREGATIONS IN LABRADOR, FROM JULY, 1881, TO JULY, 1882.

The Indians from the interior paid us two visits ; on the latter they were accompanied by their wives and children, except those too weak for the journey, who remained in the camp. Again it was impossible for us to have intelligent intercourse with them on account of our ignorance of their language ; the Eskimoes understood them better, and appear to have lost a good deal of their old jealousy of the Indians.

In April a number of our people started on the reindeer-hunt, but were at once delayed by the soft snow, so that their provisions were exhausted before the hunting-grounds were reached. At length they reached the Indian camp, where they obtained food. On the return journey a few reindeer were killed, but the faces of the men on their return showed what terrible privations they had undergone.

LABRADOR.

An announcement has appeared in several newspapers, which is calculated to cause some disquietude to our friends. It is to the effect, that “ in consequence of the failure of the fishery last year, the inhabitants, consisting of about 12,000 Moravians and Eskimoes, are in danger of perishing from famine.” The borders of the country styled “ Labrador ” are apparently exceedingly elastic, as the word is sometimes taken to mean only the East Coast, between the 55th and 60th degree of North Latitude, sometimes a tract of country stretching south to the 50th degree N. L., and extending far inland. In the former very restricted “ Labrador ”—some 500 miles of coast line—there are living about 1,000 Eskimoes with their Moravian Missionaries. Here the fishery last year proved exceptionally abundant, so that we have not the slightest ground for anxiety as to possible famine existing. Whatever truth there may be in the above announcement, which further states that two provision-ships had been despatched from Quebec to relieve the distress, it must refer to a district in which no Moravian missions exist.

We were greatly surprised on Christmas Day by a visit from a company of nine Indians. Having found lodgings for them with some of our people, and provided them with food, we brought them into the mission-house to show them the Christmas-tree and other things relating to the joyous event we were then commemorating. Some impression may have been left on their minds by what they saw, but we found it impossible to converse with them. As they remained here some time for the purposes of trade, we gave a magic-lantern entertainment one evening, to the great delight of old and young.

LABRADOR.

The Indians, who had been wont to come to Zoar for trading purposes, paid three visits there. They brought skins for sale at Christmas. They behaved well and were welcomed by the Eskimoes, but for want of knowledge of their language little communication on spiritual matters could be held with them. In April thirty-four of them returned in an exceedingly pitiful condition, for scarlet fever had wrought ravages among the tribe. These were kindly cared for, fed and nursed, and after twelve days were sufficiently restored to go on their way. They left two Indian youths behind them, who were cared for in Eskimo households.

THE INDIANS OF THE INTERIOR.

M.D.S.F. work at Heathen Indians repeatedly came to Zoar in their bark canoes by the streams and lakes of the interior in order to trade with skins Unfortunately our missionaries did not know their language, but they attended the services, and looked at Bible pictures with attention. Returning from Zoar after Christmas, 1884, many were attacked by scarlet fever, and the next Easter thirty-two of them were found near Zoar famished and ailing. They were received and cared for with great kindness by the Eskimoes. Two Indian lads remained some time in this congregation, but later on returned to their own people.

EXTRACTS FROM "PERIODICAL ACCOUNTS RELATING TO THE FOREIGN MISSIONS OF THE CHURCH OF THE UNITED BRETHREN."

VOL. II. [London: 1893-1895]

Dr. Grenfell continues

I mentioned last year that there is no law on this coast. We know five murderers, from their own confession to the missionaries, and the records of many crimes that there has never been any inquiry made into are common. So large a population as this whole coast constitutes surely deserve some provision for justice, yet actually none is made. It must (however law-abiding a people may be) encourage crime when it is known that no attempt whatever at punishment will ever be made. The weak live in terror of the strong, and there are men here on this coast whom missionaries and people long to see removed if possible from their peaceable communities. Yet nothing is done, and it is years since even a man-of-war of gunboat came down here. It is said the coast is dangerous and uncharted, and truly that is the case ; but we must consider it a disgrace to any civilized country that three thousand schooners and over should be allowed to come, year after year, with their precious human lives, to reap the rich harvest that they do, where at every step almost a new danger presents itself because no precautions have been taken.

Here are countless reefs, rocks, and islands—not one mark, not one buoy, not one light, not one foghorn along the whole coast. The dangers are rendered double by the constant fog, so that the peculiar shapes of islands are liable at any moment to become unrecognizable. Surely some survey should be made, or some marks erected, to render navigation more possible. North of Hamilton Inlet most of the Labrador fishing is done, except for the Straits of Belle Isle, and north of that the present survey is terribly incomplete ; while north of Hopedale there is practically no survey whatever, and not less than fifteen hundred craft go north of Hopedale fishing. So the presence of an occasional gunboat, or proper naval launch even, would confer an inestimable boon on these people, both in assisting navigation and letting it be known that there is some possibility of being punished for wrong-doing.

 LABRADOR.

“ THE OUTCASTS OF LABRADOR.”

This was the title of an article in the last number of the “ Illustrated London News ” for 1894. A representative of that paper waited on Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, the superintendent of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, who has gained most useful knowledge of “ the Labrador ” by three years' cruises along it in their missionary vessels. The result of the interview is a forcible description of the state of things along that bleak and barren coast-line of 1,100 miles, which, says Dr. Grenfell, “ is the home of at least 25,000 Newfoundland fishermen and their wives and children during the three or four months of the cod-fishery each year.”

* * * * *

Dr. Grenfell makes generous and appreciative mention of “ the splendid services ” rendered by our mission among the Eskimoes dwelling along the northern strip of the Atlantic coast of Labrador. Here, too, as he says, the civil administration is represented by the flying and very occasional visits of a Newfoundland Customs officer. “ Were it not that the people are, as a rule, most law-abiding, the consequences might often be terrible. As it is, drunkenness is almost unknown, and crime is rare. Still, a travelling magistrate, to maintain a semblance of authority, is an essential need.”

LABRADOR.

FROM CAPE HARRISON TO CAPE CHUDLEY.

Under this title we will give the story of the last complete year of Christian work and experiences in the sphere of the Moravian Mission to the Eskimoes of Labrador.

“ Labrador ” is a term used, now with a wider, now with a more limited meaning. Taken in its widest geographical sense, it implies the vast peninsula to the north of Canada and Newfoundland, bounded by Hudson's Bay, Hudson's Straits and the Atlantic Ocean. To Newfoundlanders, however, “ the Labrador ” is that part of the rugged and desolate coast-line nearest their island, and along which their schooners cruise during the season of the cod fishery. Of late years numbers of these fishing vessels have come north of Cape Harrison and so within what we may call “ the sphere of influence ” of the venerable Moravian Mission established among the heathen Eskimoes, when their reputation for murderous savagery held all other white men at a distance.

AFFIDAVIT OF MARTIN MURPHY.

IN THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

IN THE MATTER OF THE BOUNDARY BETWEEN THE DOMINION OF CANADA AND THE COLONY OF NEWFOUNDLAND IN THE LABRADOR PENINSULA.

I, MARTIN MURPHY of Carbinear, Newfoundland, Justice of the Peace, Collector of Customs, make oath and say as follows :—

1. I am a resident of Carbinear, Newfoundland, and have been since 1913, Collector of Customs of Cartwright, Labrador, where I spend the fishing season from June to November every year.

2. I deal with all goods imported into Cartwright by any persons or firms. The Hudson's Bay Company is the chief importer and usually its steamers call at Cartwright first, and land there all the goods, not alone for Cartwright, but for Rigolet, North West River, and Davis Inlet. I collect the duty on all these goods and no question has ever been raised as to the jurisdiction of the Colony of Newfoundland.

3. The Indians (Mountaineers) come out every summer to Paradise, at the head of the Bay, 20 miles West of Cartwright, to sell their furs and to secure supplies. The fur buyers from Cartwright go to Paradise to trade with them, and sometimes parties of the Indians come to Cartwright and remain for a few days. They make their headquarters for the summer season at Paradise, where they camp and make canoes and do other work. I visit Paradise every summer while the Indians are there, to see, in my capacity of a Justice of the Peace for the Colony of Newfoundland, that order is observed and no irregularities practised.

In the same capacity I exercise jurisdiction over the residents in Sandwich Bay and deal with any cases that may occur. I enforce the Newfoundland Game Laws and punish violations of the same. We have always held that the jurisdiction of Newfoundland in regard to its Game Laws as well as to its laws generally, extends inland to the watershed, to the vicinity of which the trappers frequently go. I am assisted in this work by a Fishery Warden, whose powers include the enforcing of the laws as to the fur and feathered game on the land, salmon and trout in the rivers, and the various fishes in the sea.

I, STEPHEN BRADBURY, of St. John's, In the Island of Newfoundland, at present Customs Sufferance Warehouse Keeper at St. John's, make oath and say as follows :

1. I was Collector of Customs at the Port of Rigolet, in the Dependency of Labrador, from 1905 to 1908 inclusive.

2. Duties were yearly paid to me by the Hudson's Bay Company at that port on goods imported therein for the North West River Trading Post for goods imported for the whole of Labrador.

3. During my occupancy of the position of Collector of Customs at the Port of Rigolet no protest was made to me by the Hudson's Bay Company's Agent, or any of the clerks or employees of the Company, against the payment of regular import duties as demanded by the Revenue Act of Newfoundland and its Dependencies.

I, HENRY W. LEMESSURIER, of St. John's, make oath and say as follows :

1. I am Deputy Minister of Customs for the Colony of Newfoundland, and have held that office since the month of November, 1897.

2. Part of my duties would be the supervision and the control of the collection of Customs Duties, both import and export, in the Dependency of Labrador.

3. Since my appointment to date import duties have been paid yearly by the Hudson's Bay Company to the Newfoundland Customs through the Collector of Customs at Rigolet without any protest having been made to the Department of Customs, or as far as I know, to any official of the Department.

4. I have examined all the entries bearing on the importation of goods into the Labrador at any time, both prior to my assumption of office, and subsequent thereto, and I have found no protest by the Hudson's Bay Company against the payment of duties written thereon. As far as I can find from the records import duties have always been paid at Labrador Ports by the Hudson's Bay Company without protest.

AFFIDAVIT OF SIR P. T. McGRATH.IN THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

[20th Sept., 1926.]

IN THE MATTER OF THE BOUNDARY BETWEEN THE DOMINION OF CANADA AND THE COLONY OF NEWFOUNDLAND IN THE LABRADOR PENINSULA.

I, SIR PATRICK THOMAS McGRATH, of 6, Gower Street, St. John's, Newfoundland, President of the Legislative Council of Newfoundland, make oath and say as follows :—

1. With reference to the statement in the Historical Narrative, forming an annex to the Canadian Case, para. 35, page 84, that “ Newfoundland levies no local taxation on the coast of Labrador, but when trade is active during the summer months, revenue officers collect a considerable sum, certainly not less than $150,000.00 per annum, along the coast in the form of customs duties.

(a) I have prepared the appended Statement of Customs Revenue collected at Labrador by the Colony of Newfoundland, for the fiscal years from 1911-12 to 1924-25.

(b) The totals shown in each year are the result of adding together the amounts received at the four Customs-House Stations at Labrador Blanc Sablon, Cartwright, Rigolet, and Labrador, the latter being the designation of the Station maintained on the mail steamer during the summer months.

(c) These figures have been taken from the Printed Pamphlets of “ Newfoundland Customs Returns ” issued by the Department of Customs each year.

(d) I could not carry this record further back than 1911-12 because the volumes available in London only go that far.

(e) I ascribe the very low collections in 1915-16 and in 1916-17 to the partial commercial paralysis due to the war,

p. 4188

(f) The statement is as follows :—

Year.	Revenue collected.
1911-12	$4630.27
1912-13	6301.40
1913-14	6668.53
1914-15	5141.41
1915-16	1122.61
1916-17	2889.44
1917-18	6726.54
1918-19	4702.28
1919-20	11046.04
1920-21	11791.97
1921-22	11624.86
1922-23	10944.55
1923-24	14376.52
1924-25	10101.57

2. I find from the Newfoundland Customs Returns for 1924-25 and previous years, that supplies for the Deep Sea and Moravian Missions are admitted into the Colony and its Dependencies, free of duty, and I know of my own knowledge, that this has been the case for many years past.

3. With reference to the paragraph copied from the book entitled "Labrador" by Grenfell and Others, printed at the top of page 2580, Appendix of Documents, and reading as follows :—

“ In winter, residence in Labrador is especially discouraged by lack of communication, and the permanent population, except round the newly established mills, is decreasing entirely.”

I have extracted from the Census returns of Newfoundland, the following figures with respect to Labrador during the past three decades, as follows :—

(a)	Total.	North of Hamilton Inlet.	Whites.
1901 . . .	3,947 . . .	1,301 . . .	2,646
1911 . . .	3,939 . . .	1,226 . . .	2,713
1921 . . .	3,774 . . .	897 . . .	2,877

(b) The population of the area north of Hamilton Inlet is virtually altogether Eskimo, and I have deducted the population of this area from that of the remainder of the region, thus exhibiting the approximate White and Eskimo populations as shown above.

(c) The decrease in the Eskimo population shown in the past decade, is due almost entirely to the ravages of influenza in the autumn of 1918, when the mortality was very great, some of the settlements being almost entirely destroyed.

(d) The allusion in the extract from Dr. Grenfell's book quoted above, to the lumber mills, shows that this refers to a period nearly twenty years ago. The mills have not been operating for the past sixteen years, and the lumber men, brought into the country in connection with the operations at these mills, left again as soon as the mills ceased operating, and as the starting and closing of these mills occurred between the Census years, 1901 and 1911, the figures shown above, represent the ordinarily normal population of the coast at the three Census periods, apart from the extraordinary decrease of the Eskimo population, due to influenza before 1921.

4. With reference to an extract from the book "Labrador" by Grenfell and Others, printed on page 2579 of the Appendix of Documents, and reading as follows :—

"Five Marconi stations have been placed on the coast, and these are of very great value. They cover two hundred miles of coast, but do not yet connect with Newfoundland, and only very indirectly with anywhere. When the Canadian station on Belle Isle is working, then Labrador can talk with the outside world via Canada. But none of these stations is opened except during the summer months. The power of the most southern station at Battle Harbour has been greatly increased and practically has put us now in touch with the outside world."

I have been in communication with the Manager of the Canadian Marconi Company at St. John's, and the Superintendent of the Newfoundland Postal Telegraphs at St. Johns, and find that :—

(a) There are nine Wireless stations on the Labrador coast, owned by the Newfoundland Government and operated on their behalf, by the Marconi Company, these stations being located as follows :—

Battle Harbour,
Venison Island,
Flat Island,
Domino,
Grady,

Smoky,
Holton,
Cape Harrison,
Makovik.

(b) The stations north of Battle Harbour are in operation from the opening of navigation to the close of the fishing season.

p. 4190

(c) The station at Battle Harbour is in direct communication with the station at Fogo, on the north-east coast of Newfoundland, all the year round. Battle Harbour station has been kept open during the winter for the last 13 or 14 years. The Fogo station has always been kept open during the winter.

(d) The stations at Battle Harbour, Venison Island, Flat Island, Domino and Smoky were erected by the Newfoundland Government in 1904, and the cost of these, as far as can be ascertained, was $5692.55. The Government operated these stations during the years 1904 and 1905, at a cost in each year, of roundly $1500.00. The Marconi Company, in 1906, took over the operation, and the Government spent about $2000.00 to put them in proper repair before handing them over to the Company. In 1910-11, the stations at Grady, Holton, Cape Harrison and Makovik were constructed at a cost of, roundly, $9000.00. In all the years from 1906 up to date, the Government has paid the Company royalties in connection with the operation of these stations, increasing from, roundly, $2500.00 in 1906-7 to $9246.00 in 1922-23. The total expenditure up to the end of 1925 on construction and operation of these stations was $118,292.50.

From the United States, besides financial aid, we have sent us for distribution much clothing, which the Newfoundland Customs allows to come in duty free, on condition that it is not sold for cash. But it is a cardinal point with us not to pauperize the people—therefore we try to get some return for everything. In the man, it may be labour ; as we travel hundreds of miles on the coast with dog teams, we can employ certain men as drivers and pilots, and when we are extending our stations we can offer well paid labour. The women are given an opportunity of earning their clothing, which they then value all the more highly, by such industries as spinning and weaving, and they can make up fancy work specimens out of any bits of fur, sealskin, or other things which their husbands cannot sell, and a market has been found for these in the United States.

The Newfoundland Government also makes us financial grants, and from time to time gives us supplies of building material to extend our stations ; and they entrust us with magisterial powers. Then we have many loyal helpers in St. John's.

With reference to the desire of the Bishop of Newfoundland to extend Missions of the Church of England to the Labrador Coast, and to His Lordships letter on that subject to your address dated 22 July 1857, I see no objection to your affording, to the best of your ability the information asked for in the Bishop's twelve queries. You will, however, inform his Lordship that the Hudsons Bay Company possess no Jurisdiction on the Coast of Labrador, where they carry on their trade on the same footing as other Merchants, Their interests in Missions would, therefore, only extend to their own servants and the Natives with whom they have dealings ; that the former are principally Roman Catholics, and that the latter express a preference for that faith, generally speaking ; those who are protestants obtain spiritual instruction from the Moravians. If, however, the Bishop should decide on himself visiting the Labrador Coast, or sending one of his Clergy there, you will be good enough to add that such hospitality as our means admit, will be shown at the Company's establishments ; and every assistance rendered, in collecting information as to the prospects the Coast affords for extending Missions thither”

CHAPTER XXXIII.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND MISSIONS ON THE GULF AND LABRADOR COASTS.

In his journal of the voyage of visitation, on the coast of Labrador, in the Church Ship “Hawk,” during the summer of 1853, the Bishop of Newfoundland says : “ I am looking forward to a third visit to the Labrador coast, and to all the settlements on the north and eastern side of Newfoundland. In this visit I expect to celebrate the first consecration of a church, and the first confirmations on the Labrador, and I trust to mark many other signs and proofs of the Church's progress on that wild and desolate shore.”

Before the year 1818, no bishop of the Church of England had ever visited the Labrador coast proper, and no clergyman had ever gone beyond Forteau Bay, in the Straits of Belle Isle, ten miles east of Blanc Sablon. In 1848 the present Bishop of Newfoundland landed at Forteau and touched at different parts of the coast as far as Sandwich Bay. In 1849 the first clergyman (the Rev. Algernon Gifford) was placed in residence at Forteau. In 1850 a second clergyman, the Rev. H. Disney, M.A., went to reside at Battle Harbour. In 1851 the first church was commenced, and in 1853 consecrated in St. Francis Harbour. Since 1851 two clergymen have been almost constantly in residence, both winter and summer, at the places before named. In 1857, the first Esquimaux were confirmed and admitted to the holy communion at Battle Harbour. There are now three churches finished and consecrated, and two others nearly completed between Seal Island and Blanc Sablon. There is no resident minister of any other denomination between Blanc Sablon and Sandwich Bay, on the Atlantic coast about fifty miles east of Hamilton Inlet ; and only one Roman Catholic chapel, visited annually by a priest from Quebec. At Forteau Bay and Battle Harbour parsonages have been erected, and are now occupied by the resident ministers—a blessing not easily to be appreciated by those who have never felt the loneliness and apprehension which sometimes comes over the solitary families crouching under the bark roofs of their “tilts” on the Labrador.

In 1861 the Bishop of Newfoundland started on his annual visitation from St. John's, on June 27, in the Church Ship. The Bishop visited in succession Battle Harbour, St.

Francis Harbour, Square Islands, Dead Islands, Venison Tickle, Seal Island, Ship Harbour, Fox Harbour and Cape Charles. There is a consecrated church at Battle Harbour and St. Francis Harbour, and at Seal Island a store is used as a church, but at all places service was performed on board the well-named Church Ship.

EXTRACTS FROM “ AMONG THE DEEP SEA FISHERS.”

St. John's, Newfoundland,
8th June, 1916.

Dear Editor,

A great many friends have asked me to put into the magazine some account of the labours of good men on the Labrador and northern Newfoundland before we came. I have not now the facts at my disposal nor time to devote to a description of their labours. Many and good they have been, unselfish and self-sacrificing and all the more like their Master, because having chosen the less populous parts of the world for their labours, they were content to forfeit the meed of praise they would have received in other parts of the world. It would be a very delightful task if some one would contribute the lives of good men in these fields before us. There is an old Latin phrase “ Vixere fortes ante Agamemnona,” and we ought perhaps to have realised beforehand that it would not be illspent time to study the lives of these good men. In Labrador, there were especially a number of Church of England clergy, some prominent Roman Catholic priests and ministers of other denominations, not forgetting our dearly beloved friend, Mr. Carpenter of the Congregational mission. No more heroic record of missionary labours exists in the world than those of the Moravian brethren in the Labrador. Nor has Labrador ever been the scene of the organised liquor traffic in the same way as in the “ civilised parts of the world ” ; nor to-day are we the only workers in the Labrador and northern Newfoundland. The Moravians have erected a nice little hospital at the north end of the country, and a devoted physician resides there and does good work among the Eskimos. The first visit of an English Church Bishop was in 1848, and since that day some excellent men have maintained their missions in the North. The names of Horwood, Colley, Quintin, Shears, Holmes, Bull, and many others are remembered with affection by the people of to-day. It has been our privilege to co-operate with those who carry on their work now—Mr. Gardner, Mr. Pitcher, Father Brown, Father March and others.

Dr. Levi Curtis has promised us an article on “ Worthies of the Methodist Church who worked in Labrador,” and Dr. Edgar Jones has promised one on “ Worthies of the Church of England.” I am hoping also to have one on the “ Priests of the Roman Catholic Church ” by a former worker.

Believe me to remain,
Sincerely yours,

Harrington Hospital
23rd October, 1912.

It was not until June 20th that our first steamer arrived from Quebec, though what delayed her coming until that date no one knows except that it is part and parcel of the indifference that has always been shown ; it certainly was not ice.

* * * * *

Having only one steamer coming a month, mean's a whole month's wait to get anything one may be in need of, if it should happen not to make connection, which happens more often than necessary it seems.

In spite of the old saying “ Plenty ice, plenty fish,” this part of the Coast has had hardly a medium fishery, and as this follows two seasons of total failure it is not enough to put the men straight with their dealers ; that means a good many things to be done without, and all expenses cut down to the last cent. Nothing is left for clothing, and we have been short again this year, and have not had enough to nearly satisfy the demand. May I not beg for more next season ? It is badly needed.

We are all looking forward to the seal fishery, hoping that it may be a good one. For the past two winters the seals have failed on the coast, and now the people are almost barefooted for the winter, if the seals fail again. It is out of the question to use boots with hard soles in the intense cold, and many of the people cannot pay three dollars for a pair of shoepacks that are not watertight, so the failure to catch a few hundred seals is a serious thing for all the men.

If either of the members of parliament for this country would take the trouble to come along this part of the coast, even if, as yet, the people do not enjoy the franchise, and see for themselves under what disabilities the people whom they took their oath to look after have to live, and how easily their lot could be made brighter, surely they could not but give them a helping hand.

If any member will take the trouble to come, he may rely on me to give him all the help possible, and to tell him some truths as to how these Canadian people are neglected, and taxed even though they have no vote.

A GLIMPSE OF LABRADOR LIFE.

By Dr. J. Hinson West.

* * * * *

Speaking more particularly of that part of the coast most familiar to the writer, the Canadian Labrador, (south and west of the Strait of Bell Isle), the crying need of the hour is better trading facilities. With the exception of Harrington, where a steamer from Quebec calls once a month, this section of the coast has no steam communication with the outside world. The people cannot buy from city merchants where they could get their needs supplied at the current prices of the day, nor can they sell their products where they can get full market value. The several trading schooners which do business here, use methods which they would have to abandon if there were open competition.

Two remedies for this state of affairs suggest themselves :

(1) The subsidizing of a steamer service between this portion of the coast and a convenient market, which would be the duty of the Canadian Government.

(2) The establishing of a co-operative enterprise to include the whole district, the launching of which, the Grenfell Association would gladly take in hand as soon as difficulties can be surmounted.

In the meantime, while a solution to the problem is being sought, the fisherman is struggling to make ends meet and frequently failing.

Bonne Esperance.
July 13, 1901.

We have now been visiting Canadian Labrador for a week. I can only say that, as far as medical assistance goes, it is far worse off than the much more bleak, poor and less-populated regions under the jurisdiction of Newfoundland. There is no hospital east of Quebec, a distance of many hundred miles—twice as far as it is to St. John's hospital from any part of Newfoundland. Moreover, there is scarcely any method for a sick person to get off the coast to Quebec, if they want to. Indeed for the poor there is none. Instead of a weekly mail boat there is no mail steamer at all. The people must travel by boat or on a casual trader, and neither is a fit way for the sick person. The hasty and infrequent visits of a fishing boat, on which, some years, there is not a doctor—and when there is his chief business is the fishery and not doctoring—are absurdly inadequate for the requirements of the people. I am now taking up one fisherman to our hospital, and there are several cases more that need conveyance there. I very much doubt if any operations under anesthetics are done, or any facilities for the modern treatment of the sick provided at all for the Canadians on Canadian Labrador this side of Cape Whittle. The ridiculous argument has been put forward that it is quite enough for a sick person to go to Gaspé or Quebec for treatment. It might be advanced if there was any means to go, but there isn't any means and they don't and can't go. Giving a visit twice in the summer, for possibly half an hour only, does not meet the need ; and the mere doling out of pills and mixtures cannot be called civilized medical treatment. Yesterday I was called to a case of an unfortunate woman dying of cancer. She had never received any treatment whatever and had never seen a doctor. Another case yesterday was heart disease and dropsy ; this man had seen no doctor. Moreover, the same day I had to open four poisoned wounds of the hand and one of the knee, besides many minor cases. None of these had a hospital to go to, nor any doctor in reach. And what about the winter ? Well, Canadians between Blanc Sablon and Cape Whittle have to suffer and die without civilized skilled help ; that is all. What good is the fishery officer's visit then ? A small winter hospital near the larger centres of Harrington and Mutton Bay would receive support no doubt from the people of the coast, who are far better off than those on the more northern parts. But the people are not able to build and support it, and they can't carry it on as it ought to be carried on by themselves.

St. Anthony.
July 1, 1923.

From the North reports of the furring are excellent so far. The trappers of Northern Labrador have been enjoying far better times than her fishermen. At a fair in Hamilton Inlet, held by the people for their hospital at North-west River, over $500 in cash was realized.

The great drawback so far here has been the ill fortune of our mail steamers, which has made communication so poor. Our mail steamer service is so much better than on the Canadian Labrador that we cry out at once when we are left without a regular sequence.

July 18th, off Little Mecatine, Canadian Labrador.

We have now been cruising down in these waters for a few days and have been seeing quite a number of patients, who are quite beyond the reach of any medical help, except such as the casual visit of an already overbusy captain of the fishery steamer can render them. Judging by experience of these cases, it is perfectly obvious that nowhere is there need for a small hospital. For practically no serious help is expected unless they go to Quebec or Halifax, long and expensive journeys, far beyond the reach of many of the patients. One child of eight years, with tubercular disease of the knee, we have arranged to send to hospital for operation. One woman we are carrying up ourselves for immediate treatment. While many that need watching and extended treatment had to be left with written directions and with stock bottles of medicines. Whatever else can be said against the efficiency of the way in which the far-off people of Newfoundland are looked after, both in the matter of transport, mail service, and assistance in times of accident and sickness, they are, at least, a great deal better off than those on the Canadian soil.

Meanwhile, the fish (that is the cod, the herring, the salmon, the capelin and the flat-fish) have all returned, almost on the exact day. The salmon arrived June 18th last year and June 17th this year.

No. 1615.MEMORANDUM ON AREAS DENOTED BY THE WORD “ COAST.”

By J.A.J. DE VILLIERS, F.R.G.S. (late Deputy Keeper in the Printed Books Department of the British Museum and Officer in charge of Maps).

BARBARY COAST.

This terminology appeals to be but very little used in cartography. Barbary, Barbaria, Berbery are the most frequent appellations, and the only reputable map so far discovered that mentions the Barbary Coast as such is one by Sanson, dated 1655,¹ the legend on which runs :—

Partie de la Coste de Barbarie en Afrique ou sont les Royaumes de Tunis et Tripoli et pays circomvoisins tirés de Sanuto et d'autres.

This title clearly implies that the region covered by the term “ coast ” comprises in this case the whole of the Kingdoms of Tunis and Tripoli and much besides.

A map accompanying the “ Geografia ” of Livio Sanuto, published in 1588² gives as Barbaria the whole of the northern coast of Africa from the Red Sea to the Atlantic with an average depth of 250 miles.

COROMANDEL COAST.

The extent of this is well illustrated by the three following maps :—

A map of the Coast of Coromandel accompanying a History of the Military Transactions of the British Nation in Indostan, London, 1763.³

A new and accurate map of the seat of the late war on the Coast of Coromandel in The General History of the Late War,” by John Entick, London, 1775.⁴

Coromandel, from an actual survey made by Thomas Barnard Published by Alexander Dalrymple, 1778.⁵

In all of these the depth of the country known as the Coromandel Coast appears to be at least 120 miles.

GOLD COAST.

In “ Africa according to Mr. d'Anville ”—a map published by Robert Sayer in 1772¹—there is an inset giving “ A Chart of the Gold Coast improv'd from Mr. d'Anville.”

A note in the inset states that “ it takes its name from the vast quantities of gold that is imported from the inland countries and sold to the Europeans by the negroes, the shore itself producing but very little of that mineral. There is nothing on the map to indicate exploration inland for more than 60 miles.

In a map compiled by the well-known geographer E. G. Ravenstein, published in “ Ocean Highways,” in July, 1873,² and based on most authoritative sources, the territory shown on the Gold Coast as British protectorate has a depth in parts of about 80 miles.

The official survey maps issued by the British Government in 1907³ show the Gold Coast (including Gold Coast Colony, Ashanti and the Northern Territories) as extending along the coast line for 334 miles and inland at some points to a distance of 440 miles, with a total area of 78,650 square miles.

The Carte de l'Afrique Occidentale Française (Service Géographique des Colonies), officially issued by the French Government in 1919, shows this equally well, and a photostat of that map giving both the Gold Coast and the Ivory Coast (a French possession) has been included in the small Atlas accompanying this Memorandum.

IVORY COAST.

The extent of this territory is well shown in the two following maps :—

Côte d'Ivoire, accompanying the Annuaire du Gouvernement général de l'Afrique Occidentale française, 1913-14.⁴

Carte de la Côte d'Ivoire, accompanying a work by Gaston Joseph, entitled “ La Côte d'Ivoire,” a semi-official publication. Paris, 1917.⁵

Both these maps give the eastern and western boundaries as the rivers Tanoe and Cavally respectively, whilst the inland boundary is at least 300 miles from the sea, thus giving to the territory—as in the case of British Guiana—considerably more depth inland than breadth along the shore ; its actual area is 126,100 square miles.

For the map included in the accompanying Atlas see the concluding paragraph on the Gold Coast (supra).

MALABAR COAST.

as the definition of a territorial district of the Indian Peninsula, had more significance in the eighteenth century than it has to-day, when it is included politically in the province of Madras. The district is bounded physically by the Western Ghats and its depth from the sea-shore is therefore seldom more than 50 miles.

A map by G. de L'Isle, published in Paris in 1723, entitled “ Carte des Côtes de Malabar,”¹ may be compared with a modern map of India in any Standard Atlas.

MOSQUITO COAST OR SHORE.

The best map to illustrate the extent of the territory comprised within the above appellation is that published in 1787 by William Faden, Geographer to the King, entitled : “ Mosquitia or the Mosquito Shore.”²

This shows Mosquitia as constituting quite a third of the modern political states of Honduras and Nicaragua and extending inland and westwards from the Atlantic Coast some 150 miles.

In a treatise entitled La Mosquitia by Dr. R. Beltran Rozpide, published in Madrid in 1910,³ occur the following passages :

“ The territory to-day known as Mosquitia or country and shore of the Mosquitos⁴ forms part of the Atlantic Coast of the ancient government and province of Honduras and of the early government of Veragua.

* * * * *

“ When independence was effected Honduras and Nicaragua entered into negotiations with Great Britain⁵ for the first mentioned to remain in possession of its own Mosquitia and for the second to acquire sovereignty over the Mosquitia of Veragua.

“ Great Britain in 1859 recognised as pertaining to Honduras the territory occupied or possessed by the Mosquito Indians within the boundary of the Republic, a boundary which, according to an earlier treaty of 1856, runs along the middle of the River Wanks or Segovia, which disembogues at Cape Gracias-a-Dios.

“ Negotiations between Nicaragua and Great Britain resulted in the Treaty of Managua on Jan. 28, 1860, by virtue of which the Mosquito Reserve remained bounded on the north by the River Hueso, on the east by the sea, on the south by the River Rama, and on the west by the meridian from Greenwich 84° 15'.”

THE WILD COAST (GUIANA).

The signification of the term “ coast ” in the eighteenth century is well illustrated by the following extract from the work of an eminent Dutch writer on colonial history.

The work, which was much quoted during the arbitrations between Great Britain, Venezuela and Brazil, is accompanied by a map of the whole of the region formerly generally known as Guiana—practically an island bounded by the Orinoco on the north-west, the Atlantic on the north-east, the Rio Negro on the south-west and the Amazons on the south. In the centre of that region the cartographer has set the words “ Guiana Caribania or the Wild Coast.” This designation is also found fully a century earlier in a map compiled by le Père du Val, of Abbeville, “ Géographe du Roi,” entitled : “ La Guiane ou Coste Sauvage autrement El Dorado et Pais des Amazones,” 1654 ; this map was reproduced in the Atlas accompanying the British Case in the British Guiana—Venezuela Boundary Arbitration, 1898.

DESCRIPTION OF GUIANA OR THE WILD COAST, IN SOUTH AMERICA.
Compiled by JAN JACOB HARTSINCK, Amsterdam, 1770.¹

(The work is in Dutch ; the title and following extract have therefore been literally translated to facilitate an examination of their exactitude.)

CHAPTER I.

DESCRIPTION OF GUIANA OR THE WILD COAST.

The region called by the Indians Guiana, also by its inhabitants, mostly Caribs, Caribania, and by us the Wild Coast, lies in the north-eastern portion of South America, along the Ocean, between the rivers Viapari, called by us the Orinoco, and the Maranon, which we call the Amazons (which are regarded as the two largest rivers of South America, and, indeed, by many expert geographers, amongst the greatest of the whole world), being at the River Orinoco side, in the latitude of 8° 20' north, and in 318° of longitude, and on that of the Amazons on the equator in the longitude of 329° 10'.

Its boundaries are therefore, on the north, the River Orinoco, and on the south that of the Amazons, being washed on the east by the ocean and bounded on the west by the Rio Negro or the Black River, so called by reason of the colour of its water : the latter is a fine, large and navigable river, uniting the two before-mentioned, namely, the Orinoco and the Amazons, so that Guiana, surrounded on the north, west and south by the said rivers ¹B.M. 10480. g. 8.

p. 4206

and shut in on the east by the ocean, comprises from north to south more than 125 miles of 15 in 1 degree, and from the east to the west, between Rio Negro and the ocean, more than three hundred miles and borders upon the new kingdom of Grenada, Peru and Brazil.

(END OF EXTRACT.)

The territories lying within the boundaries above described can best be defined according to modern political divisions as follows :—

All of Venezuela south of the Orinoco, approximately 181,864 square miles ;

The whole of British Guiana, approximately 89,480 square miles ;

The whole of Dutch Guiana, approximately 49,845 square miles ;

The whole of French Guiana, approximately 35,000 square miles ;

Brazilian Guiana (i.e., all of Brazil bounded by the Amazons on the S. and by the Rio Negro on the W.), approximately 190,000 square miles.

Total (approximately) of square miles in Guiana or the Wild Coast —550,000.

It may be alleged, that the vast territory of Labrador which is included in the government of Newfoundland ought also to have been treated of. But this would have increased the dimensions of the work too much, as another volume must, in that case, have been required ; such a volume, however, may possibly be produced at some future period.

LAWRENCE AND OF THE COAST OF LABRADOR.

* * * * *

The whole of the vast extent of country which extends from the Saguenay River to the Harbour of Blanc Sablon, a distance of 607 miles by the shore, and thence back to the dividing ridge which separates the waters flowing into the Gulf from those tributary to Hudson's Bay and the Atlantic, belongs to Canada, and is divided into three parts. First, the King's Posts, extending on the river and Gulf from Port Neuf to Cape Cormorant, 270 miles. Secondly, the Seigneurie of Mingan, from Cape Cormorant to the river Agwanus, 135 miles. Thirdly, the Labrador coast, from the Agwanus River, to Blanc Sablon, 156 miles.

CANADA AND THE COLONY OF NEWFOUNDLAND IN THE LABRADOR PENINSULA.

I, SAMUEL KING HUTTON, M.D., F.R.G.S., F.A.G.S., of Poole, Dorset, England, Medical Practitioner, make Oath and say :—

1. I was Medical Officer in charge of the Moravian Mission Hospital at Okak, Labrador, from 1903 to 1908, and from 1911 to 1913, and remained there for these two periods. I am the author of a book entitled “ Among the Eskimos of Labrador,” published in 1912, dealing fully with the conditions of life among these people.

2. In the Spring of each year, a large band of Eskimos went inland from Okak at varying distances, up to 200 miles, in quest of caribou. The trip would occupy up to two or three weeks. About the same time, other bands of hunters from Nain, Hebron and Ramah (until the Station was closed in 1908) went inland for the same purpose. They all made for the deer country, from 70 to 200 miles inland, and they frequently met in this region.

3. Their purpose in proceeding inland, was to secure venison for food, skins for clothes, and sinew for the stitching of boots and garments. Apart from this main deer hunt, individual groups of Eskimos from these Settlements, went varying distances inland, at frequent intervals during the Winter and Spring, for fur trapping and deer hunting, and in the Summer, they went by boat, up the inlets and into the rivers, to catch trout in the streams and ponds. They occasionally shot bears during these trips, and brought the meat back with them.

4. From the Eskimos, I learned that this annual deer hunt had continued for generations, and that the practice was to go inland until they found the deer, however far that may be ; and if they ran short of food they suffered great privations on the return journey.

5. I clearly understood that the Eskimos regard the whole country in which they hunted as part of the jurisdiction of Newfoundland, and themselves as subjects of that Colony. I the Eskimos at any time while I resided there, that Canada had any claim on the territory on which the Eskimos were accustomed to hunt. During my stay on the coast, Sir Wm. MacGregor, the Governor of Newfoundland, made an official visit there. He stopped at Nain, Okak, and Hebron, and was everywhere welcomed, and regarded as the head of the Colony to which the Eskimos belonged.

AFFIDAVIT OF JOSEPH MICHELIN.

[10 Sept., 1909.]

IN THE MATTER OF the Enquiry into Newfoundland Territorial Rights on the Labrador.

Labrador, Snook's Cove, to wit :—

I, JOSEPH MICHELIN, make oath and say as follows:—

I reside at Grand River, Hamilton Inlet, about 150 miles from the sea coast. I am 63 years of age. I have been living there over 30 years. I was born at Sabacho about 12 miles from the North West River and about 200 miles from the sea coast, and lived there until I was 21 years of age, when I went to St. John's, Newfoundland, where I stayed for a couple of winters and then came back and went up to where I now reside. I have gone into the interior about 120 miles from my home (about 300 miles from the coast) trapping and furring in the winter season : in the summer time I fish for salmon, trout and seals. My father was a French-Canadian, and was born at Three Rivers in Canada, and came to this country when quite a young man. I have always lived under the laws of Newfoundland and have paid revenue to the Collector of Customs from Newfoundland ever since the Government have collected it, as far back as I can remember—before I was married. I never in any way recognized or had anything to do with Canada or the laws or Canada, and no one from the Government of Canada ever imposed any restrictions on me. The first mention I heard of it was in Rigolet the other day by Mr. Schofield, Manager of the Hudson Bay Company, who had a communication from the Manager of the Indian Mission, whose headquarters are somewhere in Canada, and who told us that in future we would be under Canadian laws when we went into the interior, as the Indians were laying claim to the interior for their own special trapping and furring on the south side of Hamilton River and were wishing to exclude all whites. I have never had anything to do with Canadian authorities or laws, and have never obeyed them in the past. I have owned and occupied land to the extent of about fifty acres for over thirty years, residing on it, clearing it and living off it, and have held the same from the Newfoundland Government. I have always considered myself to be a citizen of Newfoundland, and have obeyed its laws and its Government officials.

(Sgd) JOSEPH MICHELIN.

SWORN before me at Snooks Cove aforesaid, this 10th day of September A.D. 1909.

Judge of the Court of Labrador.

BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE LORD BIRKENHEAD, LORD HIGH
CHANCELLOR OF GREAT BRITAIN. [LONDON, 1920.]

The author describes the situation and character of the Island of Newfoundland, and then says :—

“ Its dependency, Labrador, an undefined strip of maritime territory, extends from Cape Chidley, where the Hudson's Straits begin in the north, to Blanc Sablon in the south, and includes the most easterly point of the mainland. The boundaries between Quebec and Labrador have been a matter of keen dispute. The inhabitants are for the most part Eskimos, engaged in fishing and hunting. There are no towns, but there are a few Moravian mission stations.”

Supplement to Part XVI (Documents descriptive of the physiography, geology and ethnography of the Labrador Peninsula).

No. 1621.EXTRACT FROM “THE LABRADOR COAST.”

BY A.S. PACKARD, M.D., Ph.D., 1891.

CHAPTER XIV.THE GEOLOGY OF THE LABRADOR COAST.

In its general features the peninsula of Labrador is an oblong mass of Laurentian rocks lying between the 50th and 60th parallels of latitude. It rises abruptly from the ocean as an elevated plateau, forming the termination of the Laurentian chain, which here spreads out into a vast waste of hills and low mountains. Thus, there is, except near Cape Chidley, no well-marked, single chain of mountains rising above spurs of smaller elevations, but simply an interior height of land with isolated peaks, irregular in its course, from which streams take their rise and flow by various directions into the ocean.

This plateau of hills and low mountains rises abruptly on the coast from the ocean to a height of from 500 to 1,000 feet, and inland continues to rise in peaks to a height of from 1,500 to about 6,000 feet until it reaches the watershed at a distance of 10 to 20 miles from the coast. On the western slope this plateau falls gradually away by an easy descent towards the shores of Hudson's Bay. Dr. Bell states that the northern coast increases gradually northward, “until within seventy statute miles of Cape Chudleigh, where it has attained a height of about six thousand feet above the sea.” Thence the elevations or peaks decrease in height to Cape Chidley or Chudleigh, where they are fifteen hundred feet in elevation. He adds that the highest land of the Labrador Peninsula forms a regular range of mountains parallel to the Atlantic seaboard, this range becoming progressively narrower from Hamilton Inlet to Cape Chidley. (Report for 1884, 10, DD.)

EXTRACTS FROM “ THROUGH TRACKLESS LABRADOR.”

[1911.]

BY H. HESKETH PRICHARD, F.R.G.S. 1911.

The life of the Labrador is entirely predatory. It never has been anything else north of lat. 54, and unless mineral discoveries are made, never can be. Its inhabitants live by the chase. The bears, the caribou, the birds, the seals, the salmon, the trout, and the cod form the capital of the country, and the problem of existence is solved by successful destruction.

* * * * *

The Eskimo year is passed thus : In the spring the hunters kill seal, and, in the north, white whale and walrus ; in the summer they fish for cod and trout ; in the autumn they once more turn their attention to the seal hunting. Throughout the winter they trap, and just before the advent of spring, while the snow is still sound, they make long journeys after the deer by komatik or dog-sledge.

When in spring the Eskimo pass away inland on their annual deer-hunt, long distances are covered each day. The Nain Eskimo make their first camp at Pougasse, fifty miles from the Settlement. Here it is necessary to haul dogs, sledges and outfit up a steep rift to the higher level of the interior. After that there is good going over the snow for a great distance to the south-west. As far as I could gather from talking with the hunters, they have in some years when unable to find the deer, slept five or six times before turning back. This would take them some 200 miles in a south-westerly direction, and it was doubtless upon such a journey that they saw the “ great water, greater than any with which we Eskimo are acquainted,” and which was possibly Lake Michimakats or Michikamau.

In past days the Eskimo on their caribou-hunts used to push forward looking for the deer until the dog-food was exhausted; when that came to an end and they had so far failed to fall in with the herds, they ate the dogs and afterwards starved to death if they still could not kill game. This year-to-year history of the annual hunt, with its persistent tragedies, now only lives in tradition. The east coast hunting parties of recent times run little risk, as when the dog-food is half done they turn home again. It is no longer necessary to gamble with their lives in the finding of the deer, upon which formerly much of their winter provision depended, for now they have the Moravian Missions to apply to, and they know very well that they will not be allowed to starve.

LORD COLVILL,

Adm. Sec. Out
Letters. Orders and Instructions, 2/91,
p. 1.Instructions for commanding in chief in the river St.
Lawrence, along the Coasts of Nova Scotia, the Islands of St. John and Cape
Breton and thence to Cape Florida and the Bahama Islands.

AS COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF OF HIS MAJESTY'S SHIPS AND VESSELS EMPLOYED, AND TO BE EMPLOYED, IN THE RIVER ST. LAWRENCE AND ALONG THE COASTS OF NOVA SCOTIA, ISLANDS OF ST. JOHN AND CAPE BRETON, ETC., PROVIDING FOR THE SUPERVISION OF THE FISHERY ON THE SAID COASTS, DATED THE 23RD AUGUST, 1763.

By the Commissioners for executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of Great Britain and Ireland, &c^a.

WHEREAS, by our Commission of the 8th of June last, We have appointed you Commander in Chief of His Majesty's Ships and Vessels employed and to be employed in the River Saint Lawrence, and along the Coasts of Nova Scotia, the Islands of St^t John and Cape Breton, and thence to Cape Florida and the Bahama Islands ; And whereas we intend, that you shall hoist your Flag on board His Majesty's Ship the Romney, fitting at Plymouth, You are hereby required and directed to hoist your Flag on board that Ship accordingly ; And so soon as she shall be ready, you are to put to Sea in her, and make the best of your way to Halifax, in the Province of Nova Scotia.

And whereas the Ships and Vessels named in the inclosed List have been appointed by us to cruize upon the Stations expressed against their names, for guarding the Coasts of the Provinces within the extent of your Command, and protecting the Trade bound to and from those Provinces, and the Fishery upon the Coasts of some of them ; You will receive herewith Copies of the Instructions their Commanders are severally under, and you are to be very careful that they properly execute the same, as well as any others which you may think fit to send to them, if you shall find others necessary for more effectually answering the purposes of securing the said Provinces, Trade, and Fishery, from being molested ; And you are at liberty to change the Stations of the Ships and Vessels, from time to time, as you shall see occasion, in case you shall find that by doing so they can be better suited to the nature of the several Coasts, and that the service may be thereby better executed.

And whereas, by the 4th and 5th Articles of the Treaty of Peace concluded at Paris the 10th day of February 1763 (copies of which you will receive herewith) it is stipulated, that the Province of Canada with all its dependencies, as well as the Island of Cape Breton, and all the other Islands and Coasts in all that depends upon them, shall belong to the Crown of Great Britain ; But His Majesty having, (by the said 5th Article) consented to leave to the Subjects of the Most Christian King the liberty of Fishing in the Gulph of Saint Lawrence, upon condition that they do not exercise the said Fishery but at the distance of Three Leagues from all the Coasts belonging to Great Britain, as well those of the Continent as those of the Islands situated in the Gulph of S^t. Lawrence, and as to the Fishery out of the said Gulph, it being thereby stipulated, that the Subjects of the Most Christian King shall not be permitted to exercise the said Fishery but at the distance of Fifteen Leagues from the Coasts of the Island of Cape Breton ; and that the Fishery upon the Coasts of Nova Scotia or Acadia, and every where else out of the said Gulph, shall remain upon the footing of former Treaties ; You are therefore to use your utmost care, diligence, and attention, that the several stipulations herein beforementioned be duly and strictly performed, according to the Tenor and intention thereof, as far as they shall come within the limits of your command ; as also to settle and guard the fishery of His Majesty's Subjects within those Limits, taking care to prevent the subjects of France from giving them any disturbance by Acts of violence or injustice, or by any evasion contrary to the spirit and intention of the said Treaties ; and likewise to prevent the French from catching Fish, except within the distances and in the manner beforementioned.

You are at the same time to be careful, that the Subjects of His Most Christian Majesty be permitted quietly and peaceably to enjoy the priviledge of Fishing within the distances herein beforementioned ; And to use your best endeavours to prevent His Majesty's Subjects from giving them any disturbance by Acts of violence, or injustice, or by any evasion contrary to the spirit and intention of the said Treaties.

And whereas, by the aforesaid Treaty of Paris, possession of the Islands of S^t. Peter and Miquelon is to be given up to France ; In case any endeavours shall be used to carry on an illicit Trade from those Islands with any part of His Majesty's Dominions in North America, you are to be particularly attentive to the same, and prevent all communication whatever between the said Islands of S^t. Peter and Miquelon, and any part of His Majesty's Dominions in North America.

And we having received information that three Ships are sent from Bourdeaux, laden with Wines and other French Commodities, to the amount of £30,000 Sterling, to the said Islands of Miquelon and S^t. Peter, to stay there 'til His Majesty's Ships have left the River S^t. Lawrence (which they expect will be the beginning of November) and then take the opportunity of the first Easterly Wind to push up as far as the lowest Settlements in Canada, such as the Island S^t. Barnabas the Isle of Beck, on the mouth of the River Tadasac, to dispose of their Cargoes ; And it having been suggested to us that in order to defeat the intention of the Freighters of those Ships, some Men of War should be left to Winter at Quebec, and ordered to keep their Boats amongst the lower Settlements from the Isle of Barnabas as high as the Camariscas, until the Winter sets in so severe as to prevent any Ships from attempting the River ; We do hereby signify the same to you, that you may, as far as you shall judge the same necessary, comply with what has been suggested as abovementioned, or take such other measures as may appear more effectual for entirely defeating any designs which may be formed by the French, or any other Foreigners, of carrying on any Trade with Canada, or with any other part of His Majesty's Dominions within the limits of your Command.

[The following paragraphs relate to the removal of people from the Northern Colonies to East and West Florida ; for a survey and charting of the Coasts and Harbours of Nova Scotia and of the Rivers and Harbours of Florida.]

of the White, and Commander in Chief of His Maj^{ty}s Ships & Vessels employed and to be employed in the River S^t. Lawrence, and along the Coasts of Nova Scotia, the Islands of S^t. John and Cape Breton, and thence to Cape Florida and the Bahama Islands.

RECOMMENDATION BY THE LORDS OF TRADE

TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF AND AGENT FOR INDIAN AFFAIRS

13 May 1756.

To the Right Hon. HENRY Fox, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State.

Sir, It appearing to us to be of great importance in the present conjuncture, That a proper person should be appointed by His Majesty to manage and conduct the Affairs of the several Nations of Indians upon the Frontiers of His Majesty's Colonies of Virginia, North and South Carolina and Georgia, by which means His Majesty's interests amongst the said Nations may be better cultivated and improved and the said Indians be engaged to join His Majesty's troops in such operations as may be undertaken for the defence and security of His Majesty's Colonies against the common enemy. We beg leave to desire you will move His Majesty that Edmund Atkin, Esq., may be appointed Agent and Superintendent of the Affairs of the several nations of Indians upon the frontiers of the several colonies above mentioned, with such salary and allowances to be paid by the Commander in Chief of His Majesty's Forces in America, as to His Majesty shall appear just and reasonable. And we herewith enclose a commission in the form which appears to us to be most proper for this purpose, in case His Majesty shall be pleased to approve of this our humble recommendation.

We are Sir, your most obedient and humble servants,

COPY OF A CIRCULAR LETTER TO THE GOVERNORS OF VIRGINIA, N.
CAROLINA, S. CAROLINA, GEORGIA, AND MR. JOHN STUART, AGENT FOR INDIAN AFFAIRS IN YOUR DISTRICT FROM LORD
EGREMONT.

March 16, 1763.

Whitehall.

Sir,

As the removal of the French and Spaniards from the countries which extend from the Colony of Georgia to the river Mississippi, and which are now ceded to His Majesty, will undoubtedly alarm and increase the jealousy of the neighbouring Indians, the King judges it to be indispensably necessary to take the earliest steps for preventing their receiving any impressions of this kind, and for gaining their confidence and good will, without which it will be impossible for this nation to reap the full benefit of its acquisitions in that part of the world.

The French and Spaniards in Florida, and Louisiana have long and too successfully inculcated an idea amongst the Indians, that the English entertain a settled design of extirpating the whole Indian race, with a view to possess and enjoy their lands and that the first step towards carrying this design into execution, would be to expel the French and Spaniards, the real friends and protectors of the Indians ; In order to prevent the ill effect of these suggestions, which our taking possession of those countries will seem to verify, it is His Majesty's pleasure that you should, in concert with the Governors of Virginia, the Two Carolinas, and Georgia, without loss of time, immediately invite the chiefs of the Creeks, the Chactaws, Cherokees, Chickasaws and Catabaws, to a meeting with them and the Indian Agent for that department, at Augusta in the Province of Georgia, or any other place equally convenient for the several parties ; at which these chiefs are to be apprized in the most prudent and delicate manner of the change which is going to take place. In doing this, the King judges it to be absolutely necessary not only to avoid every expression which might awaken the fears or point out the dependance of the Indians upon us, but to use every means to quiet their apprehensions and gain their good opinion.

For this purpose it would be proper to recur to the original causes of the war with the French, to mention and dwell upon the several cruelties they exercised during the course of it, the arts they employed, the groundless stories they propagated among the Indians in order to excite their jealousies, to alienate their affections from this nation and to provoke them to commit such violences as His Majesty was at length compelled to resent, that by the same insidious arts they had so far wrought upon the credulity of the Spaniards, as to involve them in their quarrel, and its consequences, that thro' the special favour of providence, the wisdom of the King and the courage of His Troops, all these mischievous practices and designs have been discovered and defeated.

In order to prevent the revival of such disturbances and troubles by repetitions of the same dangerous proceedings, His Majesty found himself obliged to insist in the Treaty of Peace, that the French and Spaniards should be removed beyond the River Mississippi, to the end that the Indians and his White People may hereafter live in peace and brotherly friendship together ; That the English feel a particular satisfaction in the opportunity which their successes afford them of giving the Indians the most incontestable and substantial proofs of their good intentions and cordial desire to maintain a sincere and friendly correspondence with them ; That these proofs will consist, 1stly, in a total oblivion and forgiveness of all past offences, fully persuaded that they were entirely owing to the deceiving arts of the French, and no ways to be attributed to any ill will in them ; 2ndly, in opening and carrying on so large a traffick with them as will supply all their wants ; 3rdly in a continual attention to their interests and in a readiness upon all occasions to do them justice ; and lastly, in the most solemn assurances that those forts now ceded to us, by means of which the French really did intend to subvert their liberty, and accomplish those evil designs, which they artfully imputed to Us, shall never be employed but to protect and assist them, and to serve for the better convenience of commerce between the Indians and Us, and the cultivation of friendship and goodwill, between them and the subjects of His Majesty. And should the Indians retain any jealousy or suspicion that the forts situated in the heart of the Indian country, such as Albama, Tombegbi, and Fort Londoun, may be made use of for purposes not favourable to them and express a desire that they should be destroyed, I make no doubt but their representation on this head will be most graciously received by the King, and that His Majesty will readily comply with any reasonable request, in order to give the most satisfactory proofs of his intentions to fulfil the friendly declarations which you shall make in his name to the Indians, the sincerity of which it is highly important they should be convinced of, in order to prevent those evils which must necessarily happen, if a thorough confidence in His Majesty's government is not established upon a solid footing.

I am, etc,

EGREMONT.

P.S. — I am to inform you that in order to try every method which may contribute towards so desirable an object, as that of gaining the goodwill and the confidence of the Indians, His Majesty has thought proper to direct a certain quantity of goods to the amount of four or five thousand pounds to be purchased and sent to Charles Town in S. Carolina, to be distributed in such proportions and in such manner among the Indians as shall be judged proper, at the Meeting directed by this Letter to be held at Augusta, or elsewhere, a list of these goods (which are actually bought and will be soon embarked) will be sent with them to the Governor of S. Carolina.

[p. 25]

THE EARL OF EGREMONT TO THE LORDS OF TRADE

Whitehall, March 17, 1763.

My Lords

I have the King's Commands to acquaint your Lordships, that his Majesty having taken into Consideration your Representation of the 15th instant, does not judge proper that any Steps should be taken there-upon until Your Lordships shall have fully complied with the Directions given you by His Majesty's Orders, in my Letter of the 8th. I am therefore commanded to signify to Your Lordships His Majesty's pleasure, that you do, without loss of Time, prepare a Draught of Instructions for the Governor of Newfoundland for this Year, with such alterations from, or Additions to, the Instructions, which have been formerly given in time of Peace, as Your Lordships shall judge necessary or expedient, in order to render them conformable to the Stipulations of the Definitive Treaty, which I have already transmitted to you.

As it is the King's Intentions that the Governor of Newfoundland shall sail as soon as possible, I am commanded to signify to Your Lordships His Majesty's Pleasure that you do acquaint me, for the King's Information, how soon he may expect the Draught of Instructions above-mentioned.

I am, my Lords,

In obedience to your Majesty's commands signified to us by the Earl of Egremont, one of your Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, in his letter of the 17th instant, We have prepared and humbly beg leave herewith to lay before your Majesty, "a Draught of instructions for the Governor of Newfoundland for this year, with such alterations from or additions to the Instructions which have been formerly given, in time of peace, as we judge necessary or expedient, in order to render them conformable to the stipulations of the definitive Treaty " which has been transmitted to us by his Lordship.

It may be proper for us to observe to your Majesty that the Draught of Instructions does not extend to the islands of Cape Breton or St. Johns Islands or to any part of the coasts of Acadia, Canada or Labradore ; For those Islands and that tract of country having never been included within the limits of the Commission of the Governor of Newfoundland, to which we are confined by the words of the last reference made to us by your Majesty's Secretary of State,[sic] We have not thought ourselves at liberty to extend our consideration beyond the words of the Reference itself.

CONSIDERATION BY THE PRIVY COUNCIL

AS TO GRANT OF LAND TO SIR WILLIAM JOHNSON. — PRIVY COUNCIL
REGISTRAR 112.

New York 1767.

Board of Trade to reconsider their REPORT ON SIR WILLIAM JOHNSON'S MEMORIAL for a grant of lands on the North Side of the Mohawk River ceded to him by the Indians, etc.

The Lords of the Committee this day took into consideration a Report made by the Lords Commissioners for trade and plantations, dated the 20th February last, upon a memorial of Sir William Johnson, bart., Superintendent of Indian Affairs for the Northern district of North America, praying amongst other particulars for a grant of a certain tract of land on the North Side of the Mohawk River, conceded to him by the Indians of that nation ; And the said report not containing information sufficient to enable the Committee to give any opinion to his Majesty with respect to granting the said lands, Their Lordships are hereby pleased to refer the said report back to the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, in order for them to report their opinion to this Committee upon the Authenticity of the said grant made to Sir William Johnson, and to ascertain in the best manner they are able the situation of the land granted and whether any and what part of the said lands so granted to Sir William Johnson lie within the lands reserved to the Indians for hunting ground by the proclamation of the 7th October 1763 or by any compact at any time made with them, together with any other circumstances they may think proper or necessary for the information of the Committee upon this occasion.

LORD SHELBURNE TO THE LORDS OF TRADE.

October 5, 1767.

Whitehall.

My Lords,

Several memorials and petitions having been presented to His Majesty by merchants trading from hence to North America or residing in the Colonies, setting forth the present state of the Indian trade and representing the necessity of some new regulation, I have His Majesty's commands to transmit to Your Lordships copies of the same for your consideration.

His Majesty observing the expenses of North America to be enormous, and to arise in great measure from the present manner of managing Indian affairs, by the intervention of Superintendents, who necessarily have a power of drawing for such sums as they shall judge expedient, as well as from the number of forts subsisting ever since the late War ; and the distant stations in which the troops have remained for want of any regular plan or system having been adopted since the peace. I have it further in command to desire your Lordships to take into your consideration at the same time, how far the present expense, whether regarding the Indians or the disposition of the troops for Indian purposes, may with safety and propriety admit of being reduced ; and for this purpose your Lordships will state your opinion to His Majesty how far the appointment of Superintendents remains longer necessary, their first institution being supposed to be chiefly, if not solely, for the purpose of a general union of the Colonies, under His Majesty's immediate direction, to resist the encroachments of the French at the beginning of the last war ; or how far it may be right to strengthen the hands of these officers agreeable to their repeated applications, in order to give a more efficient strength to an institution independent both of the civil and military power. But as the general regulations of trade attempted to be carried into execution by the Superintendents are asserted in these petitions to be ill suited to the particular circumstances of the several provinces, and to serve rather to dog the trade with useless and vexatious restrictions, than to remove the evils of which complaint has been made ; and as it appears also from the correspondence that the Governors of several of the Colonies do not keep up a regular correspondence with these officers, paying little or no regard to the rules laid down by them, if your Lordships should think their further continuance unnecessary you will then state your opinion to His Majesty in what method it may be proper to entrust both the trade and management of the Indians to the care of the Colonies themselves, leaving it to them to judge of their several interests with those people, and to pass laws which shall be adapted to the circumstances of the respective provinces and which must afterwards in course be sent over hither to be submitted to His Majesty for his royal approbation or disallowance (if found repugnant to the true interest of the Colonies or of Great Britain) subject always to such general restrictions as Your Lordships may judge proper to lay before His Majesty as expedient to be observed by the provinces, who must in consequence defray whatever expense they may judge necessary from time to time for their own quiet and security against Indian incursions.

And as the sole utility arising from the several forts which are now maintained appears to be the forming of a certain barrier against the Indians for the security of the colonies, your Lordships will take into consideration whether most of the posts now subsisting may not be reduced and others of them entrusted to the provinces themselves, in order to lessen the present heavy expense ; still preserving the necessary communications by means of a few posts remaining in the hands of His Majesty's troops on the great lakes and rivers which lead from Canada to the Mississippi and the frontiers of New York, which, together with a small number of vessels to command the navigation, may answer every intention of Government with regard to the Indians and at the same time secure an easy access for His Majesty's troops into the 'different provinces, keeping the forts of the army now collected and without hazarding its subordination and discipline.

His Majesty likewise commands me to refer to your Lordships extracts from several letters of Sir J. Amherst and General Gage, recommending the establishment of further new Governments on the Mississippi, the Ohio, and at Detroit, at one or more of which places a considerable body of French have been suffered to remain since the Peace without any form of Government ; also different proposals from private people for undertaking establishments in those parts. Your Lordships will consider the course of the several arguments which are brought in favour of these settlements, setting forth, That they will secure to His Majesty's subjects the command of the fur and peltry trade in preference to the French and Spaniards, preventing smuggling with them which, as appears by the extracts of General Gage's and Mr. Croghan's letters amounts to so considerable a sum annually as to become a national object ; That they will be an effectual check to the intrigues of those nations for gaining the effections of the Indians ; That they will promote the great object of population in general and increase the demand and consumption of British manufactures, particularly by affording to the Americans an opportunity of following their natural bent for the cultivation of lands and offering a convenient reception and occupation for their superfluous hands, who otherwise cooped up in narrow bounds, might be forced into manufactures to rival the Mother country ; an event which any other way, it might be difficult to prevent ; That by raising provisions of all sorts to supply such interior garrisons as it may still be found necessary, to keep up they would greatly contribute to lessen the extra-ordinary expense accruing not only from the establishments of the different forts, and the various contingent charges, but also from the necessity of transporting provisions as well as stores to supply the garrisons from the provinces on the coast by the rivers and by the Great Lakes, as well as by Land Portage, all which not only occasions an accumulated expense, but also often reduces the Garrisons to great distress, and in case of an Indian war, when alone they can be useful, leaves them in a very precarious situation ; That these new colonies will prove in effect, a protection and security to the Old, forming of themselves an exterior line of defence, rendering most of the interior forts useless and equally contributing to diminish the present Indian and military expense. That being situated behind the other provinces they will be of singular use to keep the Indians in awe, and prevent their hostile incursions upon the frontiers to the East-ward, while those savages who are hemmed in by our Settlements on both sides must either become domiciliated and reconciled to our laws and manners, or be obliged to retire to a distance.

In case your Lordships should think it right to advise His Majesty to establish these new Governments, you will consider whether it will not be practicable to fall upon such a Plan as will avoid great part of the expense incurred by the estimates of the new Governments established after the Peace.

I send your Lordships all the Papers which can furnish any lights in these matters, which His Majesty desires that you will without lose of time take into your consideration in their fullest extent. Then, together with the materials in your Lordships' office, and the examination of such merchants as are most intelligent in the North American and Indian trade and such of His Majesty's Military Servants as have been in America (who will be ready to attend your Lordships and to give you every information in their power) will enable you to acquaint me for His Majesty's information in one or more reports in what manner your Lordships think these Points can be regulated so as most effectually to promote the prosperity and happiness of the several provinces, as well as the real and solid advantage of the Mother country ; objects which His Majesty has so much at heart.

I am, etc.,

REPRESENTATION OF THE LORDS OF TRADE TO THE PRINCIPAL SECRETARY OF STATE

7 March 1768.

To The King's Most Excellent Majesty.

May it please your Majesty —

In obedience to your Majesty's command, signified to us by a letter from the Earl of Shelburne, one of your Majesty's principal Secretaries of State dated 5th of October last, we have taken into our most serious consideration the several memorials, letters and other papers therewith referred to us containing objections to, and observations upon the present Plan for the management of our commerce and connexions with the Indians in North America ; stating the great expense attending as well that Branch of Service as the present disposition of the troops for Indian Purposes, and urging the expediency and propriety, in various lights, of establishing certain new governments upon the Mississippi, the Ohio and at the Detroit between the lakes Erie and Huron : We have also conferred, upon this occasion, with such of your Majesty's military servants as have been employed in North America and with such Merchants and others as are most intelligent in the North American and Indian Trade.

Whereupon we humbly beg leave to represent to your Majesty,

That the subject matter to which these papers refer, and the Questions arising thereupon, stated to us in the Earl of Shelburne's letter, appear to us to lead to a consideration of no less consequence and importance, than what System it may be now proper for your Majesty to pursue with respect to that vast and extensive country in North America which on account of the Indian War raging within it was made by the Proclamation of the 7th of October, 1763, the object of mere provisional arrangements.

The advantages resulting from the Treaty of Paris, are in no part of it more distinguished than in these stipulations, which, by obtaining from France and Spain cessions to your Majesty of those important Possessions in North America, which by their situation, gave most alarm and annoyance to the British Colonies, laid the foundation of lasting security to your Majesty's Empire in North America, and of relief to this country by a reduction of that heavy expense, with which it was necessarily burthened for the defence and protection of these colonies ; and, although the unfavourable impressions left upon the minds of the Indians by the Event of the War, and the Representations of the French that we meant to extirpate them, did for some time involve us in a war with them, that rendered necessary the continuance of a large military Establishment, yet, that war being happily ended, and Treaties of Peace and Friendship, to which all the various Tribes have acceded, having been finally concluded, it is now become of immediate importance to examine, how far the alteration which has thus taken place in the State of your Majesty's Dominion in North America, may require or admit of any proportionable alteration in the System by which that part of your Majesty's Service is to be carried on for the future.

The parts of the Service to which we are more immediately called upon by the Earl of Shelburne's letter to give our attention, are, First, the present civil establishments regarding the Indians ; Secondly, the disposition of the Troops for Indian Purposes ; and lastly the establishment of certain new Colonies.

With respect to the first of these Points, we are directed to state our opinion, how far the present expense of the civil Establishment regarding the Indians may with safety and Propriety be reduced, by the entrusting the Indian Trade and all other Indian affairs to the management of the several Colonies.

In considering this question it may be proper to observe that the Institution of Superintendents for the Affairs of Indians appears to have been a measure originally adopted principally with a view to counteract the Designs of the French in 1754 who by sowing the seeds of jealousy amongst the Indians and exciting them to resent injuries for redress of which they had in vain solicited the colonies, had well nigh entirely weaned them from the British Interest ; And at the same time by uniting the force and conducting the enterprise of the savages, had rendered them an over match for your Majesty's colonies standing single and disunited.

In order therefore to balance the danger arising from this more immediate union and co-operation of the French with the Indians, it became necessary to provide a more systematical as well as more extensive plan of defence for the colonies than had before been requisite ; A plan which might bear some proportion to the extent of the efforts then made by their Enemies, and which having for its object the preservation of all your Majesty's Colonies from the common danger could not otherwise be administered with safety, or with effect, than under the immediate control of their common Sovereign and Protector and the utility of such a Plan, under those circumstances, was soon manifested by its consequences and by the share it had in contributing to that success which ever after attended the British Arms in America.

From this slight view of the original Causes of the institution of Superintendents and of the Consequence it produced, it cannot but appear evident, that every objection both to the expense and difficulty in execution was answered by the necessity of the case, and the importance of the object, but should it appear to your Majesty that the alteration in the State of America, since the Peace, has rendered the measure less necessary at least in its full extent, every consideration both of expense, and of difficulty in the execution, must now be carefully attended to, before a right judgment can be formed, as to the expediency of continuing either the whole or any part of it.

To maintain a good correspondence with the Indians is undoubtedly an object of great importance ; and upon a careful examination into the state of Indian affairs after the conclusion of Peace, it appears that the two principal causes of the discontent that still rankled in the minds of the Indians and influenced their conduct, were the encroachments made upon lands which they claimed as their Property and the abuses committed by Indian Traders and their servants. The necessity, which appeared in the then state of our interests with the Indians of making some immediate provision against these two causes of their discontent induced the Proclamation of October 1763, which very prudently restrained all persons from trading with the Indians without Licence, and forbid, by the strongest prohibitions, all settlement beyond the limits therein described as the Boundary of the Indian hunting ground, putting both their commerce and property under the protection of officers acting under Your Majesty's immediate authority and making their intervention necessary in every transaction with those Indians.

These, however, being as we have before observed mere provisional arrangements adapted to the exigence of the time, it is become now necessary to consider, what may be more permanently requisite in both the cases to which they apply.

The giving all possible redress to the complaints of the Indians in respect to encroachments of their lands and a steady and uniform attention to a faithful execution of whatever shall be agreed upon for that salutary purpose is a consideration of very great importance. It is a service of a general nature in which your Majesty's interest as Lord of the soil of all ungranted lands which the Indians may be inclined to give up, is deeply and immediately concerned, and with which the general security of your Majesty's Possessions there is in some measure connected ; it is an object comprehensive of a variety of cases, to which the separate authority and jurisdiction of the respective colonies is not competent, and it depends upon negotiation which has always been carried on between Indians and officers acting under your Majesty's immediate Authority, and has reference to matters, which the Indians would not submit to the discussion of particular Colonies.

For these reasons we are of opinion, that the execution of all measures and services respecting the complaints of the Indians touching their lands should be continued to be entrusted to the Superintendent at present acting under commission from your Majesty, reserving to the Governor and Council of every particular Colony, which may be interested in any measure that has reference to this general service, a right to interpose their advice, and making their concurrence necessary to the Ratification of every compact that shall be provisionally made until your Majesty's pleasure shall be known upon it.

In a plan for the management of Indian affairs prepared by this Board in 1764 the fixing a boundary between the settlements of your Majesty's subjects and the Indian country was proposed to be established by compact with the Indians as essentially necessary to the gaining their good will and affection, and to preserving the tranquility of the colonies.

[p. 50]

This plan having been communicated to the superintendents, they have in consequence thereof, made the proposition of such a boundary line an object of their particular attention and of negotiation and discussion with the several tribes of Indians interested therein.

In the southern district a boundary line has not only been established by actual treaties with the Creeks, Cherokees and Chactaws, but has also as far as relates to the provinces of North and South Carolina, been marked out by actual surveys and has had the happy effect to restore peace and quiet to these colonies.

In the Northern district, the proposition appears to have been received by the Indians with the strongest marks of approbation and satisfaction ; and a line of separation was in 1765 suggested by them, in which Sir Wm. Johnson acquiesced, declaring at the same time that he would not finally ratify it without your Majesty's further directions.

The Paper (App. A) contains a description of the several lines as agreed upon in the negotiations to which we refer ; and to the end, your Majesty may have a more perfect view of them, we have annexed to such description a map (App. B) in which we have endeavoured to trace those lines out, with as much accuracy as the general maps of America will admit of.

Your Majesty will be pleased to observe that, although on the one hand the settlements in the new established Colonies to the South are con-fined to very narrow limits ; yet on the other hand the middle colonies (whose state of population requires a greater extent) have room to spread much beyond what they have hitherto been allowed, and that upon the whole one uniform and complete line will be formed between the Indians and those antient colonies, whose limits not being confined to the Westward have occasioned that extensive settlement, which, being made without the consent of the Indians, and before any line was settled, produced the evil complained of. In comparing the map with the description in writing as taken from the Treaties with the Indians, Your Majesty will observe that the boundary line with the six Nations and their allies is made upon the map to terminate at that part of the Ohio where it receives the Connahway River, instead of continuing it down the Ohio to the Cherokee River, and up that river to its source, as described in the Treaty ; the reason for which is, that although the six Nations may have pretensions to the dominion of the country on the South side of the Ohio lower down than the Connahway River ; yet in fact it is more occupied by the Cherokees and other independant tribes, as their hunting ground ; and therefore the making any settlements beyond the Connahway River, or at least beyond a line drawn from the mouth of it, to where the Cherokee line now terminates, as marked on the map, would be altogether inconsistent with what has been settled and agreed upon with that nation ; for which reason we think that the line settled with the Southern Indians, and that which remains to be settled with the six nations ought to be united in the manner we have described.

Upon the whole it does appear to us, that it will be greatly for your Majesty's interest as well as for the peace, security and advantage of the colonies, that this boundary line should, as speedily as possible, be ratified by your Majesty's authority, and that the superintendents should be instructed and impowered to make treaties in your Majesty's name with the Indians for that purpose, and enabled to make such presents to the Indians as the nature and extent of the Concessions on their part shall appear to require ; care however should be taken in the settlement of this business that the agreement for a Boundary line be left open to such alterations, as, by their common consent, and for the mutual interests of both parties, may hereafter be found necessary and expedient.

If Your Majesty should be graciously pleased to approve what we have recommended, we humbly submit whether it may not be further necessary that the colonies should be required to give every sanction to the measure in their power, and to provide by proper Laws for the punishment of all persons who shall endanger the publick peace of the Community by extending settlements or occupying lands beyond such line.

What we have above stated in respect to the expediency of continuing the office of Superintendents is confined merely to negotiation with the Indians concerning a boundary line. But we humbly submit, that there are other branches of duty and service, which, though they be of less urgency, yet do, both from their nature and importance, require the intervention of officers acting under your Majesty's immediate authority ; and which, as they have reference to the general Interests of the Indians, independent of their connection with any particular colony, cannot be provided for by Provincial Laws ; such are the renewal of antient compacts or covenant—chains made between the Crown and the principal Tribes of Savages in that country ; the reconciling differences and disputes between one body of Indians and another ; the agreeing with them for the sale or surrender of lands for publick purposes not lying within the limits of any particular colony ; and the holding interviews with them for these and a variety of other general purposes, which are merely objects of negotiation between your Majesty and the Indians.

These, may it please Your Majesty, are in our judgment Services of great importance, and to which it is essentially necessary, for the preservation of the British Interest with those Indians, and for preventing all foreign influence and connection. that strict attention should be paid.

Antecedent to the establishment of the present plan of Superintendents, the management of these Interests was entrusted to the governors of those colonies which were principally connected with the Indians ; but when we consider the dependant state of such governors, that the other duties of their station must interfere with this very important one, how greatly the objects of this service are increased by alliances with those numerous nations hereto-fore under the Dominion of France ; and how necessary it is, that a constant watch should be kept upon their motions and designs ; and that your Majesty's servants should be constantly and regularly informed of the true state of affairs, and of all transactions in the Indian country ; we cannot but be of opinion that these are reasons, which, joined to what we have already stated, do make it essentially necessary that the office of Superintendents should for the present be continued for these purposes, and that they should be enabled by a stated annual establishment confined to a certain sum, to make such presents as have been usual and customary and therefore are become absolutely necessary upon all occasions of treaties held with the Indians for publick purposes ; the expence of which, including salaries to the two Superintendents, need not, according to the calculations and estimates made by them, exceed eight thousand pounds annually.

Having thus fully stated to your Majesty the nature and extent of those services which relate to the management of Indian affairs, independent of the trade with them, we shall in the next place submit what has occurred to us upon the latter subject.

It must be admitted that a proper plan of trade with the Indians is an object deserving great attention, not only from the commercial benefits resulting from it, but also from the effect that its being ill- or well-governed must have upon the temper and disposition of the Savages ; and as it must consist of regulations that depend upon local situation and circumstances, and which require the authority of law to carry them into execution, it cannot be conducted with the same facility or be properly and effectually controlled by officers having no other authority than what they derive from your Majesty's Commission.

Upon the fullest examination into the effect and operation of the several propositions respecting the Indian trade, suggested by this Board in 1764, and adopted by the superintendents, it does appear to us that many of them have, in particular cases, and with respect to particular bodies of Indians, been attended with salutary effect ; we are convinced however upon the whole of this consideration,

First, that no one general Plan of Commerce and Policy is or can be applicable to all the different nations of Indians, of different interests and in different situations.

Secondly, that the confining trade to certain posts and places, which is the spirit and principle of the present system, however expedient and effectual with respect to the Southern Indians, is of doubtful policy with respect to those Indians more particularly connected with New York and Pennsylvania ; and that it is evidently disadvantageous, inconvenient, and even dangerous with respect to the much larger body of Indians, who possess the country to the Westward, and with whom your Majesty's subjects in Quebec in particular do carry on so extensive a commerce.

Thirdly, that, independent of this objection, and of any doubt that might attend the practicability of its execution in its full extent, the whole Plan does consist of such a variety of establishments, and necessarily leads to such extensive operations as to bring on an increasing expence, which, in point of commerce, may exceed the value of the object to which it applies, and being greater than the trade can bear, must, if the present plan should be permanent, either fall upon the colonies, in which case it will be impracticable to settle the proportion each colony should bear, or become a burthen upon this country, which, we humbly conceive, would be both unreasonable and highly inconvenient.

For these reasons, therefore, and under these circumstances, we are humbly of opinion, that the laying aside that part of the present plan which relates to the Indian trade and entrusting the entire management of that trade to the Colonies themselves will be of great advantage to Your Majesty's service as a means of avoiding much difficulty and saving much expence both at present and in future.

It is certainly true, that while the management of this trade was in the hands of the colonies antecedent to the establishment of superintendents, many abuses were committed by the Traders, little care was taken to subject them to proper regulations, and the misconduct of the colonies in this particular contributed not a little to involve us in the enormous expences of an Indian War.

If, therefore, it were probable that the like neglect or mismanagement would again take place, in such a degree as to expose us to the same consequences, we should not hesitate in declaring our opinion against the propriety of suffering the management of this concern ever to revert into the hands of the colonies.

But we trust, that the experience, which the old colonies have had of the ill effects of such inattention and neglect, will induce all of them to use more caution and better management for the future, and particularly to adopt such of the regulations established by the present Superintendents, as have evidently operated to the benefit of the trade, and to the giving that satisfaction and content to the Indians from which alone the colonies can hope to derive either immediate profit or lasting peace and security.

With respect to the question, How far the present expence, regarding the disposition of troops for Indian purposes, may with propriety and safety be lessened by reducing most of the posts now subsisting and entrusting others of them to the provinces themselves, we beg leave in the first place in general to represent it to your Majesty as our humble opinion, that it will be in the highest degree expedient to reduce all such posts in the interior country, as are not immediately subservient to the protection of the Indian commerce, and to the defeating of French and Spanish machinations among the Indians, or which, although in some degree useful for these purposes, cannot be maintained, but at an expence disproportioned to the degree of their utility. But before we apply this observation to the particular posts now subsisting, it may be proper to take a cursory view of the interests and situations of the several tribes or bodies of Indians, whose commerce and connection are the objects of whatever establishments it may be thought necessary to continue.

The Indians included within the Southern district consist principally of the Chactaws, Creeks and Cherokees, the Chickasaws being reduced to a very inconsiderable number, and the Catawbias in great measure domiciliated within the settlements of North Carolina ; the commerce and connection with the Creeks and Cherokees have been, from the situation of their country, principally confined to the British colonies, of Georgia, North and South Carolina, and Virginia, whilst the commerce and connection with the Chactaws, whose country extends from the Alabama River to the Mississippi were for that reason altogether confined to the French colony of Louisiana.

By the Treaty of Paris, France has renounced all pretensions to dominion in the Chactaw country, which is thereby become in respect to that stipulation a part of the British empire ; and consequently all Trade and intercourse between the subjects of France or Spain in Louisiana and those Indians, is, in fact, illicit and contraband ; and yet it is evident from the Reports made by the Superintendent of the Southern District, that such trade and intercourse is still continued to be kept up to a very great degree.

Such, may it please your Majesty, is the state of the commerce and connection with the principal tribes of Indians in the Southern district ; and as their commerce both from Louisiana and the British Colonies is carried on through a great variety of paths and routes, and does not depend upon rivers and lakes, forming, as in the Northern district, the only passes into the Indian country, it is evident that both the security and extension of it must depend upon the effect and operation of those regulations, under which it shall be carried on ; and that neither the trade of your Majesty's subjects can be protected, nor the connection and intercourse between Louisiana and the Indians prevented by forts or military establishments.

In the Northern district the principal Indians form themselves into two great confederacies ; the one composed of the Six Nations and their Allies and Dependents, the other, called the Western Confederacy, composed of a great variety of powerful tribes, occupying that extensive country, which lies about the Lakes Huron, Michigan and Superior, and to the West and North West.

The commerce and connection with the first of these bodies of Indians was antecedent to the War, confined chiefly to the province of New York, upon the frontiers of which their principal hunting ground lyes ; and the trade was carried on at fortified Truck houses upon the lake Ontario ; since the Peace a large share of this trade is carried on from Pennsylvania by the Channel of the Ohio, and from thence by Venango and Riviere aux Boeufs into Lake Erie.

The commerce and connection with those Indians which form the Western confederacy, were, both from the situation of the country they occupied, and from the plan pursued by France for securing the dominion of it by posts upon the lakes, altogether confined to the French in Canada, and is now principally carried on from thence by your Majesty's subjects there, through the Channel of the Ottawa River and by the Lakes.

In this state, therefore, of the commerce and connection subsisting between your Majesty's subjects and the Indians in the Northern district, and of the channels through which the intercourse is carried on, it does appear to us, that the keeping up military establishments at Detroit, Michilimacina and Niagara, and the having two, or at most three armed vessels on the Lakes Erie, Huron, Michigan and Superior may be necessary for keeping up and preserving that good correspondence with the Indians, which is essential to the safety, improvement and extension of the trade with them.

Of these three establishments that at Detroit, which is the great center of Indian commerce, situated amongst many numerous tribes of Indians, and where a considerable number of French remain under the Faith of the

[p. 55]

Treaty of Paris, does appear to us to be by far the most important object, not being confined merely to the convenience of any particular colony, but embracing every advantage, upon which the safety and extension of our Indian commerce do depend.

The armed vessels proposed to be kept upon the Lakes, do also appear to us to be of the like general utility ; and therefore we are humbly of opinion, that both these establishments should be maintained upon a respectable footing ; the charge whereof we do not conceive needs to be very considerable, as the necessity of any large supply of provisions from the settled colonies which has always been a great article of expence attending (listant posts, will in great measure be taken off by the opportunity of their being furnished with corn 'and other provisions raised by your Majesty's new subjects settled at Detroit, who, as we are informed from the most undoubted testimony, have already made a very considerable progress in raising those commodities for that very purpose.

These, may it please your Majesty, are the only military posts and establishments that appear to us to be necessary, solely with a view to protect and promote our commerce with the Indians ; what further may be necessary for public safety in general, or for preventing that dangerous intercourse between the French and Spaniards at New Orleans, and the Indians under your Majesty's protection, stated in the papers referred to us to be carried on to a very great extent ; and which has been confirmed by those we have examined upon the subject, is a consideration, which, we humbly presume, more particularly belongs to your Majesty's servants in the military departments. But we cannot but be of opinion, that all such forces, as shall be judged necessary to be kept up for the security of your Majesty's dominions against a foreign enemy, or for enforcing obedience to, and a due execution of the laws of trade, ought to be garrisoned by troops in your Majesty's pay commanded by officers appointed by your Majesty, as it would, in our humble opinion, be dangerous to public safety, and inconsistent with the true principles of this Government, that forts and military establishments, intended to answer such important objects should be entrusted to any other hands.

Upon the whole, we trust that the expence of the present disposition of troops for Indian purposes may be reduced without hazarding either the safety or the interest of your Majesty's subjects ; unless indeed it should be thought expedient to adopt the proposition, contained in some of the papers referred to us, of settling new colonies in the interior country ; for, in that ease, we should not venture to recommend any reduction of the military expence in the particulars above stated. This consideration therefore naturally leads us to the last Head of Inquiry referred to us by the Earl of Shelburne's letter, viz., How far the establishment of new governments on the Mississippi, the Ohio, and at Detroit, would contribute to answer the purpose of lessening either the present civil or military expence ; or would procure the several other important advantages set forth in the papers referred to us.

Now although it does not appear from the papers referred to us, that propositions have been made for the establishment of more than three new governments or colonies in the interior parts of America, viz., one at the Detroit between Lakes Erie and Huron ; one at or near the mouth of the Ohio ; and one in the Illinois country at or near the mouth of the river of that name ; and therefore by the strict letter of his Lordship's reference, the present consideration seems to be confined to these only ; yet, as it does appear, both from the nature of the arguments in favour of this measure contained in some of the papers, and from the manner in which others have been explained by the authors of the proposals themselves, that they are meant to support the utility of colonizing in the interior country, as a general principle of policy ; and that in fact they have nothing less in view, than the entire possession and peopling of all that country, which has communication with the rivers Mississippi and St. Lawrence, it does, in our humble opinion, open a much wider field of discussion, than might at the first glance seem to be necessary.

The proposition of forming inland colonies in America is, we humbly conceive, entirely new ; it adopts principles in respects to American settlements, different from what has hitherto been the policy of this kingdom ; and leads to a system, which, if pursued through all its consequences, is in the present state of this country of the greatest importance.

The great object of colonizing upon the continent of North America has been to improve and extend the commerce, navigation and manufactures of this kingdom, upon which its strength and security depend.

First, by promoting the advantageous Fishery carried on upon the Northern Coast ;

Secondly, by encouraging the growth and culture of naval stores, and of raw materials to be transported hither in exchange for perfect manufacture, and other merchandize.

Thirdly, by securing a supply of lumber, provisions and other necessaries for the support of our establishments in the American Islands.

In order to answer these salutary purposes, it has been the policy of this Kingdom to confine her settlements as much as possible to the sea-coast, and not to extend them to places inaccessible to shipping and consequently more out of the reach of Commerce. A plan, which, at the same time that it secured the attainment of these commercial objects, had the further political advantage of guarding against all interference from foreign powers and of enabling this Kingdom to keep up a superior naval force in those seas, by the actual possession of such rivers and harbours, as were proper stations for fleets in time of war.

Such, may it please your Majesty, have been the considerations inducing that plan of policy hitherto pursued in the settlement of your Majesty's American colonies, with which the private interest and sagacity of the settlers co-operated from the first. Establishments formed upon that continent, it was upon these principles, and with these views, that Government undertook the settling of Nova Scotia in 1749 ; and it was from a view of the advantages represented to arise from it in these different articles, that it was so liberally supported by the aid of Parliament.

The same motives, though operating in a less degree, and applying to fewer objects, did, as we humbly conceive, induce the forming the colonies of Georgia, East Florida, and West Florida to the South; and the making those provisional Arrangements in the Proclamation of 1763, by which the interior country was left to the possession of the Indians.

Having thus briefly stated what has been the policy of this kingdom in respect to colonizing in America, it may be necessary to take a cursory view of what has been the effect of it in those colonies, where there has been sufficient time for that effect to discover itself ; because, if it shall appear from the present State of those settlements and the progress they have made, that they are likely to produce the advantages above stated, it will, we humbly apprehend, be a very strong argument against forming settlements in the interior country, more especially where every advantage derived from an established government would naturally tend to draw the stream of population ; fertility of soil and temperature of climate offering superior inticements to settlers, who, exposed to few hardships and struggling with few difficulties, could with little labour earn an abundance for their own wants ; but without a possibility of supplying ours with any considerable quantities ; nor would these inducements be confined in their operation to foreign emigrants determining their choice where to settle ; but would act most powerfully upon the inhabitants of the Northern and Southern latitudes of your Majesty's American dominions, who, ever suffering under the opposite extremes of heat and cold, would be equally tempted by a moderate climate to abandon habitudes peculiarly adapted to the production of those things, which are by nature denied to us, and for the whole of which we should without their assistance stand indebted to, and dependent upon other countries.

It is well known that antecident to the year 1749 all that part of the Sea Coast of the British Empire in America which extends north east from the Province of Main to Cauçeau in Nova Scotia and from thence north to the mouth of the St. Lawrence River lay waste and neglected, though naturally affording or capable by art of producing every species of naval stores and Seas abounding with Whale, Cod, and other valuable fish, and having many great rivers, Bays and harbours fit for the reception of Ships of War ; thus circumstanced, a consideration of the great commercial advantages which would follow from securing the possession of this country, combined with the evidence of the value set upon it by our enemies, who during the war which terminated at that Period, had at an immense expense attempted to wrest it from us, induced that Plan for the settlement of Nova Scotia, to which we have before referred, and which being prosecuted with vigour though at a very large expense to this kingdom secured the possession of that province, and formed these establishments which contributed so greatly to facilitate and promote the success of your Majesty's arms in the late war.

The establishment of government in this part of America having opened to the view and information of your Majesty's subjects in other colonies, the great commercial advantages to be derived from it induced a zeal for migration and associations were formed for taking up lands and making settlements in this province by principal persons residing in these colonies.

I

In consequence of these associations upwards of 10,000 souls have passed from those colonies into Nova Scotia who have either engaged in fisheries or become exporters of lumber and provisions to the West Indies ; and further settlements, to the extent of 21 townships of 100,000 acres each, have been engaged to be made there by many of the principal persons in Pennsylvania whose names and association for that purpose now lye before your Majesty in Council.

The government of Massachusetts Bay, as well as the proprietors of large tracts to the Eastward of the province of Maine excited by the success of these settlements are giving every encouragement to the like settlements in that valuable country lying between them and Nova Scotia ; and the proprietors of twelve townships lately laid out there by the Massachusetts Government now solicit your Majesty for a confirmation of their title.

Such, may it please your Majesty, is the present state of the progress making in the settlement of the northern parts of the sea coast of North America in consequence of what appears to have been the policy adopted by this kingdom ; and many persons of rank and substance here are proceeding to carry into execution the plan which your Majesty pursuing the same principles of Commercial Policy has approved for the settlement of the islands of St. John and Cape Breton, and of the new established colonies of the south and therefore as we are fully convinced that the encouraging settlements upon the sea coast of North America is founded in the true principles of Commercial Policy, and as we find upon examination that the happy effects of that policy are now beginning to open themselves in the establishment of these branches of commerce, culture, and navigation upon which the strength, wealth and security of this kingdom depend, we cannot be of opinion that it would in any view be advisable to divert your Majesty's subjects in America from the pursuit of these important objects by adopting measures of a new policy at an expense to this kingdom which in its present state it is unable to bear.

This may please your Majesty being the light in which we view the proposition of colonizing in the interior country, considered as a general principal of policy we shall in the next place proceed to examine the several arguments urged in support of the particular establishment now recommended. These arguments appear to us reducible to the following general proposition, viz : –

1. That such colonies will promote population and increase the demands for and consumption of British manufactures.

2. That they will secure the fur trade and prevent all illicit trade or interfering of French or Spaniards with the Indians.

3. That they will be a defence and protection to the old colonies against the Indians ; and

4. That they will contribute to lessen the present heavy expense of supplying provisions to the distant forts and garrisons, and lastly that they are necessary in respect of the inhabitants already residing in those places where they propose to be established, who require some form of civil government.

[p. 59]

After what we have already stated with respect to the policy of encouraging colonies in the interior country as a general principle . . . we trust it will not be necessary to enter into an ample discussion of the arguments brought to support the foregoing propositions. We admit as an undeniable principle of true policy that with a view to prevent manufactures it is necessary and proper to open an extent of territory for colonization, proportioned to the increase of people as a large number of inhabitants cooped up in narrow limits without a sufficiency of land for produce would be compelled to convert their attention and industry to manufactures ; but we submit whether the encouragement given to the settlement of the colonies upon the sea coast and the effect which such encouragement has had, has not already effectually provided for this object as well as for increasing the demand for and consumption of British manufactures ; an advantage which in our humble opinion would not be promoted by these new colonies, which being proposed to be established at the distance of above 1,500 miles from the sea, and in places which upon the fullest evidence are found to be utterly inaccessible to shipping, will from their inability to find returns wherewith to pay for the manufactures of Great Britain be probably led to manufacture for themselves ; a consequence which experience shows has constantly attended in a greater or lesser degree, every inland settlement ; and therefore ought in our humble opinion to be carefully guarded against by encouraging the settlement of that extensive tract of sea coast hitherto unoccupied ; which together with the liberty that the inhabitants of the middle colonies will have (in consequence of the proposed boundary line with the Indians) of gradually extending themselves backwards will more effectually and beneficially answer the object of encouraging population and consumption than the erection of new governments. Such gradual extension, might, through the medium of a continued population, upon even the same extent of territory, preserve a communication of mutual commercial benefits between its extremest parts and Great Britain impossible to exist in colonies separated by immense tracts of unpeopled desert. As to the effect which it is supposed the colonies may have to increase and promote the fur trade and prevent all contraband trade or intercourse between the Indians under your Majesty's protection and the French or Spaniards, it does appear to us, that the extension of the fur trade depends entirely upon the Indians being undisturbed in the possession of their hunting grounds ; that all colonizing does in its nature and must in its consequences operate to the prejudice of that branch of commerce ; and, that the French and Spaniards would be left in possession of a great part of what remained, as New Orleans would still continue the best and surest market.

As to the protection which it is supposed these new colonies may be capable of affording to the old ones, it will in our opinion appear upon the slightest view of their situation, that so far from affording protection to the old colonies, they will stand most in need of it themselves.

It cannot be denied that new colonies would be of advantage in raising provision for the supply of such forts and garrisons as may be kept up in the neighbourhood of them ; but as the degree of utility will be proportioned to the number and situation of these forts and garrisons which upon the result of the present enquiry it may be thought advisable to continue, so the force of the argument will depend upon that event.

The present French inhabitants in the neighbourhood of the lakes will in our humble opinion be sufficient to furnish with provisions what ever posts may be necessary to continue there, and as there are also French inhabitants settled in some parts of the country lying upon the Mississippi between the rivers Illinois and the Ohio it is to be hoped that a sufficient number of these may be induced to fix their abode where the same convenience and advantage may be derived from them, but if no such circumstance were to exist, and no such assistance to be expected from it, the objections stated to the plan now under our consideration are superior to this or any other advantage it can produce ; and although civil establishments have frequently rendered the expense of an armed force necessary for their protection one of the many objections to those now proposed ; yet we humbly presume there never has been an instance of a government instituted merely with a view to supply a body of troops with suitable provisions ; nor is it necessary in these instances for the settlements already existing as above described ; which being formed under military establishments and ever subjected to military authority do not in our humble opinion require any other superintendance than that of the military officers commanding at these posts. All which is most humbly submitted.

EXTRACT FROM TREATY MADE AT A CONGRESS HELD AT MOBILE IN W. FLORIDA WITH THE CHICKASAMS AND CHACTUMS, MARCH 26TH, 1765.

And to prevent all disputes on account of encroachments or supposed encroachment committed by the English Inhabitants of this or any other of His Majesty's Provinces on the lands or hunting grounds reserved and claimed by the Chickasaw and Chachaw Indians and that no mistakes, doubts or Disputes may for the future arise thereupon, in consideration of the great marks of friendship, benevolence and clemency extended to us, the said Chickasaws and Chactaws Indians by His Majesty King George 3rd :—We the Chiefs and Head Warriors distinguished by great and small medals and Gorgets, and bearing His Majesty's commissions as Chiefs and Leaders of our respective nations, by virtue and in pursuance of the full right and power which we now have and are possessed of, have agreed and we do hereby agree that for the future the Boundary be settled by a line extended from Gross Point in the Island of Mont Louis by the course of the Western Coast of Mobile Bay, to the mouth of the Eastern branch of Tombeckbie River, and North of the course of said River to the confluence of Alibamont and Tombeckbi Rivers and afterwards along the Western bank of Alibamont river to the North of Chickianoce River, and from the confluence of Chickianoce and Alibamont Rivers, a strait line to the confluence of Banke and Tombeckbi Rivers, from thence by a strait line along the Western bank of Banke River till its confluence with the Jallateppe River ; from thence by a strait line to Tombeckbi River ; opposite to Atchatickpe and from Atchatickpe by a strait line to the most Northern part of Backatanne River, and down the course of Backatanne River to its confluence with the River Cascagonea— and down by the course of the River Cascagoula within 12 leagues of the Sea Coast, and thence by a due West line as far as the Chactaw Indian Nation have a right to grant.

And the said Chiefs for themselves and their nations give and confirm the property of all the lands contained between the above described lines and the sea, to H.M. the King of Great Britain and His Successors—preserving to themselves full right and property in all the lands to the Northward of said lines now possessed by them. And none of His Majesty's white subjects shall be permitted to settle on Tombeckbi river to the northward of the rivulet called Centibouck.

TREATY MADE AT FORT STANWIX ON THE 5th NOVEMBER, 1768

PLANTATIONS GENERAL.

5 Nov., 1768.

To all to whom these presents shall come or may concern,
We the Suchems and chiefs of the six confederate nations and of the Sharwanese, Delawarese, Mingoes of Ohio and other dependant tribes on behalf of ourselves and the rest of our several nations, the chiefs and warriors of whom are now here convened by Sir Wm. Johnson. Bart., his Majesties Superintendant of our affairs send Greeting. Whereas his Majesty was graciously pleased to propose to us in the year 1765 that a boundary line should be fixed between the English and us to ascertain and establish our limits and prevent those intrusions and encroachments of which we had so long and loudly complained and to put a stop to the many fraudulent advantages which had been so often taken of us in land affairs which boundary appearing to us as a wise and good measure we did then agree to a part of a line and promised to settle the whole finally whensoever Sir Wm. Johnson should be fully empowered to treat with us for that purpose. And Whereas his said Majesty has at length given Sir Wm. Johnson orders to compleat the said boundary line between the provinces and Indians in conformity to which orders Sir Wm. Johnson has convened the chiefs and warriors of our respective nations who are the true and absolute proprietors of the lands in question and who are here now to a very considerable number. And whereas many uneasiness and doubts have arisen amongst us which have given rise to an apprehension that the line may not be strictly observed on the part of the English, in which case matters may be worse than before which apprehension together with the dependant state of some of our tribes and other circumstances which retarded the settlement and became the subject of some debate, Sir Wm. Johnson has at length so far satisfied us upon as to induce us to come to an agreement concerning the line which is now brought to a conclusion the whole being fully explained to us in a large assembly of our people before Sir Wm. Johnson and in the presence of his Excellency the Governor of New Jersey the Commissioners from the provinces of Virginia and Pennsylvania and sundry other gentlemen by which line so agreed upon a considerable tract of country along several provinces is by us ceded to his said Majesty which we are induced to and do hereby ratify and confirm to his said Majesty from the expectation and confidence we place in his royal goodness that he will graciously comply with our humble requests as the same are expressed in the speech of the several nations addressed to His Majesty through Sir Win. Johnson on Tuesday the first day of the present month of November wherein we have declared our expectations of the continuance of his Majesty's favour and our desire that our antient engagements be observed and our affairs attended to by the officer who has the management thereof enabling him to discharge all these matters properly for our interest that the lands occupied by the Mohocks around their villages as well as by any other nation affected by this our cession may effectually remain to them and to their posterity and that any engagements regarding property which they may now be under may be prosecuted and our present Grants deemed valid on our parts with the several other humble requests contained in our said speech. And Whereas at the settling of the said line it appeared that the line described by his Majesty's order was not extended to the Northward of Owegy or to the Southward of great Kanhawa river we have agreed to and continued the line to the Northward on a supposition that it was omitted by reason of our not having come to any determination concerning its course at the Congress held in 1765 and in as much as the line to the Northward became the most necessary of any for preventing encochements at our very towns and residences, We have given the line more favor-ably to Pennsylvania for the reasons and considerations mentioned in the Treaty. We have likewise continued it South to Cherokee river because the same is and we do declare it to be our true bounds with the Southern Indians and that line an undoubted right to the country as far South as that river which makes our cession to his Majesty much more advantageous than that proposed. Now therefore know ye that we the Sachems and Chiefs aforementioned, native Indians and proprietors of the lands hereinafter described for and in behalf of ourselves and the whole of our confederacy for the consideration hereinbefore mentioned and also for and in consideration of a valuable present of the several articles in use amongst Indians which together with a large sum of money amounts in the whole to the sum of £10,460-7-3 sterling now delivered and paid by Sir William Johnson, Bart., his Majesty's sole agent and Superintendant of Indian affairs for the Northern department of America in the name and on behalf of our sovereign lord George the Third by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France and Ireland, King defender of the faith the receipt whereof we do hereby acknowledge We the said Indians Have for us our heirs and successors granted, bargained, sold, released and confirmed and by these presents do grant, bargain, sell, release and confirm unto our said sovereign Lord King George the Third all that tract of land situate in North America at the back of the British settlements

Bounded by a line which we have now agreed upon and do hereby establish as the boundary between us and the British colonies in America beginning at the mouth of Cherokee or Hogohege river where it empty into the river Ohio and running from thence upwards along the South side of said river to Kittanning which is above Fort Pitt from thence by a direct line to the nearest Fork of the West Branch of Sasquehanna thence through the Allegany mountains along the South side of the said West branch until it comes opposite to the mouth of a creek called Tiadaghton thence across the west branch and along the South side of that creek and along the North side of Burnets Hills to a creek called Awandae thence down the same to the East branch of Sasquehanna and across the same and up the East side of that river to Owegy from thence East to Delaware river and up that river to opposite where Tianaderha falls into Sasquehanna thence to Tianaderha and up the West side thereof and the West side of its West branch to the head thereof and thence by a direct line to Canada Creek where it empty into the wood creek at the West end of the carrying place beyond Fort Stanwix and extending Eastward from every part of the said line as far as the lands formerly purchased so as to comprehend the whole of the lands between the said line and the purchased lands or settlements except what is within the province of Pennsylvania together with all the hereditaments and appurtenances to the same belonging or appertaining in the fullest and most ample manner and all the estate, right, title, interest, property, possession, benefit, claim and demand either in law or equity of each and every of us of in or to the same or any part thereof. To have and to hold the whole lands and premises hereby granted, bargained, sold, released and confirmed as aforesaid with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging under the reservations made in the Treaty unto our said sovereign Lord King George the Third, his heirs and successors to and for his and their own proper use and behoof for ever.

In witness whereof we the chiefs of the Confederacy have hereunto set our marks and seals at Fort Stanwix the fifth day of November 1768 in the ninth year of His Majesty's reign.

ADDITIONAL INSTRUCTION TO GOVERNOR OF PROVINCE OF LOWER CANADA RELATING TO INDIAN AFFAIRS

(C.O. Quebec 1795-1800. Vol. 3.)

16th July, 1800.

In Secy of State's despatch No. 7 of 12 July 1800.

ADDITIONAL INSTRUCTION TO THE GOVERNOR, LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR, OR THE PERSON ADMINISTERING THE GOVERNMENT OF
OUR PROVINCE OF LOWER CANADA FOR THE TIME BEING. GIVEN AT OUR COURT AT SAINT JAMES'S THE SIXTEENTH DAY OF JULY
1800 IN THE FORTIETH YEAR OF OUR REIGN.—

Whereas We judge it to be conducive to the better Regulation of Our Concerns with the Indian Nations within Our Province of Lower Canada, that the same should be conducted by the Person exercising the Government of Our said Province for the time being ; it is therefore Our Will and Pleasure that you do take upon you the Conduct and Management of Our Concerns with the said Indians within the Province of Lower Canada ; and that you do from time to time give to all Persons whom it may concern such Directions for the due Execution of these Our Instructions as occasion may require, such Directions nevertheless to be subject to any special Orders directed to you from such Person as shall at any time be constituted and appointed by Us to be Governor General of Our Provinces in North America.—And it is Our Will and Pleasure that all Persons holding Commissions in the Indian Department within Our Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, so far as the same relates to the Province of Lower Canada shall follow such Orders and Directions as they shall from time to time receive from you in the Execution of this Our Instruction, any thing in the said Commissions to the contrary notwithstanding.—And you are in case of any vacancy in any Office of Place in the said Indian Department within Our Province of Lower Canada to transmit to Us by the first Opportunity through One of Our Principal Secretaries of State, the name of such Person, with an Account of his Character and services, as you shall esteem to be best qualified for fulfilling the Duties of such Office, for Our further Directions therein.

Extract from MINUTES OF EVIDENCE CONTAINED IN THE REPORT FROM THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY, 1857.

No 2.

EXTRACT FROM EVIDENCE OF HONOURABLE HENRY DRAPER, C.B., COPIED FROM THE REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS ON THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY, 1857.

4056. Taking the points in the order in which you have mentioned them ; first of all, with regard to the question of the limits of the province of Canada, are there any statements which you wish to lay before the Committee on that head ?—I should say with regard to that point that the view which is taken, be it sound or unsound, is this : at present it is understood by us that the Hudson's Bay Company claim as a legal right all the land which is drained by any streams, no matter how remote their sources may be, which flow into either the Hudson's Bay Straits, or Hudson's Bay. We consider that that is an ill-founded claim, principally upon this ground, that it is a claim of which we can find no trace until a very modern period, and is quite inconsistent with the claims advanced by that Company for nearly a century and a half. To save time I have prepared extracts from various documents, emanating from the Company themselves, with some few other documents; it is a paper which it would save a great deal of time to put in, because I can give every place where the extracts are taken from, and therefore reference to the original documents can always be had. I would also desire to say that in every extract which I have made, I have made it a complete extract of all that is stated on the question, and if it involves anything favourable to the Hudson's Bay Company, it will be found in those portions of which I have made the extract.

4057. Are those extracts made from documents which are accessible to every body ?—I believe I may say every one ; I think so ; easily accessible.

4058. Sir John Pakington.] They specify of course in every case what they are ?—Yes. (The Witness delivered in the Paper.)

Extract from APPENDICES TO THE REPORT FROM THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY, 1857.

No. 3.

LETTER ADDRESSED BY MR. CHIEF JUSTICE DRAPER TO HER MAJESTY'S SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES,

BEARING DATE 6TH MAY 1857, TOGETHER WITH A COPY OF THE MEMORANDUM THEREIN REFERRED TO.

33, Spring-gardens, 6 May 1857.

Sir,

IN the last interview with which you favoured me, I took occasion to advert to the question of boundary between Canada and the Hudson's Bay territory, as one which required to be settled as a necessary preliminary to many other very important inquiries involved in the matters submitted to a Committee of the last House of Commons, and, as I understood, to be again submitted to the new Parliament.

I alluded to the difference between the views of the Hudson's Bay Company, as expressed in former times, and those which are now, and have been within the last forty years, advanced by them on this point ; and I stated my readiness to submit a memorandum to you in relation thereto, which you were pleased to signify your readiness to receive and consider.

That memorandum I have now the honour to enclose. As the construction of the language of the charter, and the extent of the territory purporting to be granted are involved, it may be considered desirable that the matter should be referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. In this event, I venture to request, that counsel on the part of the Province may be permitted to attend to watch the argument, and, if it be deemed necessary, that they may be heard in support of those views which more immediately affect the interests of Canada.

I have suggested a reference to the Judicial Committee, because I think its opinion would command the ready acquiescence of the inhabitants of Canada as to their legal rights, and because I believe they entertain a very strong opinion that a considerable portion of the territory occupied or claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company will be found to lie within the proper limits of that Province.

Whether it would be desirable to sever this from the more general question of the legality and validity of the charter, is a matter I should desire to leave for your consideration, but in any event I think it expedient that counsel should be permitted to attend to watch the interests of the Province.

I have, &c.

The Right Hon. H. Labouchere, (signed) Wm. H. Draper
&c. &c. &c.

MEMORANDUM ENCLOSED IN CHIEF JUSTICE Draper's LETTER
OF MAY 6TH, 1857, TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

It is not proposed at present to discuss the validity of the charter of the Hudson's Bay Company. A careful perusal of it will suggest many doubts whether it be not altogether void. But assuming that it may be sustainable for every or for any of the purposes for which it was intended, and, for the moment conceding that the indefinite description of the territory purporting to be granted does not vitiate the grant, there is a question as to the limits of that territory in which the province of Canada is deeply interested.

The parts of the charter bearing on this question are as follow :—

1. " All the lands and territories upon the countries, coasts, and confines of the seas, bays, lakes, rivers, creeks, and sounds aforesaid " (stated in a preceding part to be those which lie within the entrance of the straits commonly called Hudson's Straits, in whatsoever latitude such bays, &c., should be), " that are not already actually possessed by or granted to any of our subjects, or possessed by the subjects of any other Christian prince or state, with the fishing of all sorts of fish, whales, sturgeons, and all other royal fishes in the seas, bays, inlets and rivers within the premises ; and the fish therein taken, together with the royalty of the sea upon the coasts within the limits aforesaid, and all mines royal, as well discovered as not discovered, of gold, silver, gems, and precious stones, to be found or discovered within the territories, limits, and places aforesaid ; and that the said land be from henceforth reckoned and reputed as one of our plantations or colonies in America, called Rupert's Land : And, further, we do by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, make, create, and constitute the said Governor and Company for the time being, and their successors, the true and absolute lords and proprietors of the saine territory, limits, and places aforesaid, and of all other the premises hereby granted as aforesaid, with their and every of their rights, members, jurisdictions, prerogatives, royalties, and appurtenances whatsoever, to them the said Governor and Company, and their successors for ever, to be holden of us, our heirs and successors, as of our manor of East Greenwich, in our county of Kent in free and common soccage."

And, 2. " And furthermore, we do grant unto the said Governor and Company and their successors, that they and their successors, and their factors, servants, and agents, for them and on their behalf, and not otherwise, shall for ever hereafter have, use, and enjoy, not only the whole, entire, and only trade and traffic, and the whole, entire, and only liberty, use, and privilege of trading and trafficking to and from the territory, limits, and places aforesaid, but also the whole and entire trade and traffic to and from all havens, bays, creeks, rivers, lakes, and seas into which they shall find entrance or passage, by water or land, out of the territories, limits or places aforesaid, and to and with all the natives and people inhabiting within the territories, limits, and places aforesaid, and to and with all other nations inhabiting any of the coasts adjacent to the said territories, limits, and places which are not granted to any of our subjects."

Prior to this charter, there was little or nothing done within Hudson's Bay in the way of taking any actual possession of the territory granted. The bay had been discovered, several ships from time to time had entered it, and probably some interchange of commodities with the Indians had taken place while the vessels remained within the straits ; but nothing whatever was known of the interior. Charles the Second claimed, for it was no more than a claim, all the territory which the discovery of the straits and bay could confer on the British Crown. The French Crown in like manner had claimed, by reason of their actual settlement of Canada, and of their progressive discoveries and trade, not only all the western territory, including that now in dispute, but even the bay of the north, and thence to the Pole ; but neither French nor English had, in 1670, actually penetrated, so far as appears, within many hundred miles of the Red River.

The settlements made by the Hudson's Bay Company were at first confined to those on the shores of James Bay, and at the Churchill and Hayes Rivers. Henley House, which is about 150 miles up the Albany River, was not erected before the year 1740. The Company afterwards erected Fort Nelson, which is laid down on the maps at about 200 or 230 miles from the mouth of Churchill River, and the fort at Split Lake, which is represented as about 140 miles from the mouth of the Nelson River. It is believed that these two last-named forts are of comparatively modern erection, but that, at all events, for more than a century after the date of the charter, these, together with the forts on or near the shores of the bays, were the only settled posts of the Hudson's Bay Company.

This throws some light upon the view, which the Company practically adopted, of the extent of their territories.

In many written documents they treat Hudson's Straits and Bay as the governing and principal matter, in reference to or for the purpose of securing which, the grant of territory was made to them.

In a petition addressed by the Hudson's Bay Company to Charles the Second in 1682, they say that his Majesty was graciously pleased to incorporate them, and to grant to them for ever all the said bay, and the straits leading thereunto, called Hudson's Straits, with all the lands and territories, rivers, and islands in and about the said bay, and the sole trade and commerce there ; and, referring to a letter of Monsieur De la Barre, the Governor of Canada, threatening to drive them out, they observe, they doubt not but that by the King's Royal authority and protection, they will be enabled to defend his undoubted right and their own within the bay, " wherein never any nation but the subjects of your Imperial Crown has made discoveries or had any commerce."

In a letter, dated 25 January 1696–7, they urge, " whenever there be a treaty of peace between the Crowns of England and France, that the French may not travel or drive any trade beyond the midway betwixt Canada and Albany Fort, which we reckon to be within the bounds of our charter."

In 1698, in a letter written by their deputy-governor to the Lords Commissioners of Trade, they repeat the same desire.

In a memorial, dated in June 1699, they represent the charter as constituting them the true and absolute proprietors of Hudson's Bay, and of all the territories, limits, and places thereto belonging. They further set forth the attacks made in 1682 and 1686 by the French from Canada, and their applications for redress, and the declaration made by James the Second that he, upon the whole matter, did conceive the said Company well founded in their demands, and therefore did insist upon his own right and the right of his subjects to the whole Bay and Straits of Hudson, and to the sole trade thereof ; and they pray the then King, William the Third, to insist upon the inherent right of the Crown of England and the property of his subjects not to be alienated, that so considerable a trade might not be lost, and the Hudson's Bay Company " be left the only mourners " in the peace of Ryswick.

At this time all their forts but one (Albany Fort) had been taken by the French ; some of them, indeed, while the two Crowns were at peace ; an act of aggression specially referred to by his Majesty in the declaration of war in 1689.

In January 1700, being called upon by the Lords of Trade and Plantations, they offered proposals for limits between them and the French in Hudson's Bay, insisting at the same time upon their undoubted right " to the whole Bay and Streights of Hudson." The proposed limits were, to confine the French from trading or building any house, factory, or fort to the northward of Albany River situate in about 53° of north latitude on the west main coast, or to the northward of Rupert's River, on the east main or coast of the bay, binding themselves not to trade or build any house, factory, or fort to the southward of these two rivers "on any ground belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company." They urged that these limits should be settled ; stating, that if the French refused, they must insist upon their prior and undoubted right to the whole Bay and Straits of Hudson, which, they observed, the French never yet would strictly dispute or suffer to be examined into, though the first step of the eighth article of the treaty of Ryswick directs the doing of it. These limits would have given the French access to the bay by the Moose River.

The French ambassador did, however, in March 1698—9, set forth the claims of his sovereign in a long answer to the English memorial, among other things, observing that the different authors who have written about Canada or New France, gave it no limits northwards, and that it appeared by all the grants or letters of corporation made at several times by the kings of France to the companies settled in New France, and particularly in 1628, that all the Bay of the North is comprehended in the limits mentioned by the said grants.*

He also further suggested, that if the English had had any knowledge of the bay, or any claim thereto, they would not have failed to have insisted on it, and expressly to mention it in the treaty of 1632 (that of St. Germain en Laye) when they restored to the French New France. Admitting that the French neither then nor for a long time afterwards had any forts on the coasts of the bay, he explains it by saying, that being masters of the inland country, the savages, with whom they had a continual trade, brought their furs over lakes and rivers.

In April 1714, the Hudson's Bay Company thank the Queen "for the great care your Majesty has taken for them by the treaty of Utrecht, whereby the French are obliged to restore the whole Bay and Streights of Hudson ; the undoubted right of the Crown of Great Britain."

In August 1714, in reference to the same treaty, the Hudson's Bay Company proposed that the limits between the English and French on the coast of Labrador, should commence from the island, called Grinnington's Island or Cape Perdrix, in the latitude of 58 ½ ° N., which they desire may be the boundary between the French and English on the coast of Labrador ; and that a line be drawn south-westerly, to pass through the centre of Lake Mistassinnie ; and from that lake a line to run south-westward into 49° north latitude ; and that such latitude be the limit, that the French do not come to the north, nor the English to the south of it.

In another paper of about the same period, they give the following account of the motives which induced the formation of the Company, "It was, therefore, after the happy restoration of King Charles II. that trade and commerce began to revive, and in particular that some noblemen and other public-spirited Englishmen, not unmindful of the discovery and right of the Crown to those parts in America, designed at their own charge to adventure the establishing of a regular and constant trade to Hudson's Bay, and to settle forts and factories there, whereby to invite the Indian nations (who lived like savages many hundred leagues up in the country) down to their factories.”

* L'Escarbot describes Canada at the period of the appointment of De la Roche in 1598, thus—" Ainsi notre Nouvelle France a pour limites du côté d'ouest les terres jusqu'a la Mer Pacifique au dela du Tropique du Cancer, au midi les îles de la Mer Atlantique du côté de Cuba et l'île Espagnole au levant la Mer du Nord qui baigne la Nouvelle France ; et au septentrion cette terre qui est dite inconnue vers la Mer Glacée jusqu'a la Pole Arctique."

In August 1719 the Hudson's Bay Company acknowledges the surrender by the French of the straits and bay, in such manner that they had nothing to object or desire further on that head. But they urged the settlement of the limits between the English and French territories without delay, since the French subsequently to the conclusion of the peace (in 1715) made a settlement at the head of Albany River, upon which the Company's principal factory was settled, whereby they interrupted the Indian trade from coming to the Company's factories. It was therefore proposed and desired, " that a boundary or dividend line may be drawn so as to exclude the French from coming anywhere to the northward of the latitude of 49°, except on the coast of Labrador ; unless this be done, the Company's factories at the bottom of Hudson's Bay cannot be secure, or their trade preserved."

Even in October 1750, they entertained the same views, while at that time they were pushing their pretensions, both to the northward and westward, to the utmost limits. They state that the limits of the lands and countries lying round the bay, comprised, as they conceived, within their grant, were as follow : All the land lying on the east side or coast of the said bay, eastward to the Atlantic Ocean and Davis' Straits, and the line hereafter mentioned as the east and south-east-ward boundaries of the said Company's territories, and towards the north, all the lands that lie on “ the north end, or on the north side, or coast, of the said bay, and extending from the bay northwards to the utmost limits of the lands there towards the North Pole ; but where or how these lands terminate, is at present unknown. And towards the west, all the lands that lie on the west side or coast of the said bay, and extending from the bay westward to the utmost limits of those lands, but where or how these lands terminate to the westward is also unknown, though probably it will be found they terminate on the Great South Sea. And towards the south, all the lands that lie on the south end, or south side of the coast of the said bay, the extent of which lands to the south to be limited and divided from the places appertaining to the French in those parts by a line,” &c., describing the line from Cape Perdrix to the 49th parallel, and along that parallel westward, as in their proposals of August 1719, excepting that they state the starting point to be in latitude 59½ N. They add, with regard to this boundary, that “ to avoid as much as possible, any just grounds for differing with the French in agreeing on those boundaries which lie nearest their settlements, it is laid down so as to leave the French in possession of as much, or more land than they can make any just pretensions to ; and at the same time leaves your memorialists but a very small district of land from the south end of the said bay necessary for a frontier." It is worthy of remark, that this line would have given to France the southerly portion of the Lake of the Woods, Rainy River, and Rainy Lake, which are now claimed as within the Company's territories.

The foregoing extracts are deemed sufficient to establish that the Company considered their territorial rights in reference to their connexion with and proximity to Hudson's Bay itself. where they had planted their factories and desired to attract the Indian trade. They certainly show that neither after the treaty of Ryswick, nor that of Utrecht, when they stated the boundaries, they were either willing to submit to or were desirous of obtaining ; nor yet in 1750, when they set forth what they thought themselves entitled to claim under their charter, did they ever think of asserting a right to all the countries the waters of which flow into Hudson's Bay. Their claims to lands lying both northward and westward of the bay are entirely at variance with any such idea. Sir J. Pelly, before a Committee of the House of Commons in March 1837, seems to have adhered to the views expressed in 1750, when he said, " the power of the Company extends all the way from the boundaries of Upper and Lower Canada away to the North Pole, as far as the land goes, and from the Labrador coast all the way to the Pacific Ocean," though he afterwards explains that the Company claimed in fee-simple all the lands the water from which ran into Hudson's Bay.

It is submitted, that if this latter claim were well founded, the further grant in the charter of exclusive trade beyond the limits of the territories granted in fee-simple, would give colour to the assertion of the " power " of the Company extending to the Pacific ; assuming that the word " power " was used to designate the exclusive right of trade, and not the ownership of the territory. For if the charter gives the fee-simple of the lands to the Rocky Mountains, the Pacific is a " Sea," and Fraser's and M'Kenzie's are " rivers," into which " entry or passage by water or land out of the territories " actually granted may be found ; though in such case the application for a licence for the exclusive trade would, if the charter be in this respect valid, have been unnecessary.

The French Government, it appears, would not agree to the proposal which would have limited them to the 49th parallel. Colonel Bladen, one of the British Commissioners under the Treaty of Utrecht, wrote from Paris in 1719 in reference thereto, " I already see some difficulty in the execution of this affair, there being at least the difference of two degrees between the best French maps and that which the Company delivered us." No settlement of the boundary could be arrived at.

If the later claim of territorial limits had been advanced during this negotiation, there can be no doubt it would have been resisted even more strenuously than the effort to make the 49th parallel the boundary was, not merely by contending that the territory so claimed formed part of Canada, and had been treated as such by the French long before 1670, but also that the French king had exercised an act of disposition of them, of the same nature as that under which the Hudson's Bay Company claim, by making them the subject of a charter to a company under the Sieur de Caen's name, and after the dissolution of that company had, in 1627, organised a new company, to which he conceded the entire country called Canada. And this was before the Treaty of St. Germain en Laye, by which the English restored Canada to the French. In 1663 this company surrendered their charter, and the king, by an edict of March in that year, established a council for the administration of affairs in the colony, and nominated a governor ; and, about 1665, Monsieur Talon, the intendant of Canada, despatched parties to penetrate into and explore the country to the west and north-west, and in 1671 he reported from Quebec that the " Sieur de Lusson is returned, after having advanced as far as 500 leagues from here, and planted the cross, and set up the king's arms, in presence of 17 Indian nations assembled on the occasion from all parts, all of whom voluntarily submitted them-selves to the dominion of his Majesty, whom alone they regard as their sovereign protector."

The French kept continually advancing forts and trading posts in the country, which they claimed to be part of Canada ; not merely up the Saguenay River towards James Bay, but towards and into the territory now in question ; in parts and places to which the Hudson's Bay Company had not penetrated when Canada was ceded to Great Britain in 1763, nor for many years afterwards.* They had posts at Lake St. Anne, called by the older geographers Alenimipigou ; at the Lake of the Woods ; Lake Winnipeg, and two, it is believed, on the Saskatchewan, which are referred to by Sir Alexander M'Kenzie in his account of his discoveries.

Enough, it is hoped, has been stated to show that the limits of the Hudson's Bay Company's territory are as open to question now as they have ever been, and that when called upon to define them in the last century, they did not advance the claim now set up by them ; and that even when they were defining the boundary which they desired to obtain under the Treaty of Utrecht, at a period most favourable for them, they designated one inconsistent with their present pretensions, and which, if it had been accepted by France, would have left no trifling portion of the territory as part of the province of Canada.

Appendix No. 5

* In the evidence given by the honourable Wm. M'Gillivray, on one of the North-west trials at York (now Toronto), in 1818, he stated that there were no Hudson's Bay traders established in the Indian country about lake Winnipeg or the Red River, for eight or nine years after he had been used (as a partner) in the North-west Company) to trade in that

So far as has been ascertained, the claim to all the country the waters of which ran into Hudson's Bay, was not advanced until the time that the Company took the opinions of the late Sir Samuel Romilly, Messrs. Cruise, Holroyd, Scarlett, and Bell. Without presuming in the slightest degree to question the high authority of the eminent men above-named, it may be observed that Sir Arthur Pigott, Serjeant Spankie, Sir Vicary Gibbs, Mr. Bearcroft, and Mr. (now Lord) Brougham took a widely different view of the legal validity of the charter, as well as regards the indefinite nature of the territorial grant, as in other important particulars.

Of the very serious bearing of this question on the interests of Canada, there can be no doubt. By the Act of 1774, the province of Quebec is to " extend westward to the banks of the Mississipi, and northward to the southern boundary of the territory granted to the merchants adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay."

And in the division of the Provinces under the statute of 1791, the line was declared to run due north from Lake Temiscamary " to the boundary line of Hudson's Bay ; " and the Upper Province is declared to consist " of or include all that part of Canada lying to the westward and southward of the said line."

The union of the Provinces has given to Canada the boundaries which the two separate Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada had ; the northern boundary being the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company.

It is now becoming of infinite importance to the Province of Canada, to know accurately where that boundary is. Plans for internal communication connected with schemes for agricultural settlements, and for opening new fields for commercial enterprise, are all, more or less, dependent upon or affected by this question ; and it is to Her Majesty's Government alone that the people of Canada can look for a solution of it. The rights of the Hudson's Bay Company, whatever they may be, are derived from the Crown ; the Province of Canada has its boundaries assigned by the same authority ; and now that it appears to be indispensable that those boundaries should be settled, and the true limits of Canada ascertained, it is to Her Majesty's Government that the Province appeals to take such steps as in its wisdom are deemed fitting and necessary, to have this important question set at rest.

COMMITTEE ON THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY, 1857.

No. 4.

PAPER DELIVERED IN BY MR. CHIEF JUSTICE
DRAPER, 28 MAY, 1857, RELATIVE TO CANADIAN BOUNDARIES

BOUNDARIES

Appendix No. 6

p. 378.

ON 25th January 1696-7, not long before the Treaty of Ryswick (which was signed on the 20th September 1697), the Hudson Bay's Company expressed their " desire that whenever there should be a treaty of peace between the Crowns of England and France, that the French may not travel or drive any trade beyond the midway betwixt Canada and Albany Fort, which we reckon to be within the bounds of our charter."

The 8th Article of the Treaty of Ryswick shows that the French, at that time, set up a claim of right to Hudson's Bay, though that claim was abandoned at the peace of Utrecht, and was never set up afterwards.

In 1687, James the Second declared to the French Commissioners MM. Barillon and Bonrepos, that having maturely considered his own right, and the right of his subjects, to the whole Bay and Straits of Hudson, and having been also informed of the reasons alleged on the part of the French to justify their late proceedings in seizing these forts (Fort Nelson and Fort Charles), which for many years past have been possessed by the English, and in committing several other acts of hostility, to the very great damage of the English Company of Hudson's Bay, his Majesty, upon the whole matter, did consider the said Company well founded in their demands, and, therefore, did insist upon his own right, and the right of his subjects, to the whole Bay and Straits of Hudson, and to the sole trade thereof.

" The grants of the French king signify nothing to another prince his right, and they may name what they will in their grants places, known or unknown, but nobody is so weak as to think that anything passeth by those grants but what the king is rightfully and truly possessed of or entitled to, for nemo dat quod non habet, is a maxim understood of all ; but whereas the French would have no bounds to Canada to the north-ward, nor, indeed, to any parts of their dominions in the world if they could."—Extract from the Reply of the Hudson's Bay Company to the French Answer left with the English Commissioners, 5th June 1699, under Treaty of Ryswick.

In 1687 there were discussions between the English and French, respecting the right to the bay and straits, in which it was, among other things, submitted on the part of the Hudson's

“ It shall not be the fault of the Company of Hudson's Bay, if their agents and those of the Company of Canada do not keep within their respective bounds, the one pretending only to the trade of the bay and straits above-mentioned, whilst the other keeps to that of Canada ; and that the forts, habitations, factories, and establishments of the English Company be restored, and their limits made good, as the first discoverers, possessors, and traders thither.”

The Company having already waived the establishments of a right to Hudson's Bay and Straits " from the mere grant and concessions of the king. which, indeed, cannot operate to the prejudice of others that have the right of discovery and continued possession on their side, it is again averred that his Majesty's subjects only are possessed of such a right to the coasts, bays, and straits of Hudson."

“ The Hudson's Bay Company having made out his Majesty's right and title to all the bay within Hudson's Straits, with the rivers, lakes and creeks therein, and the lands and territories thereto adjoining, in which is comprehended Port Nelson as part of the whole.” 10 July 1700. The Hudson's Bay Company proposed the following limits between themselves and the French, in case of an exchange of places, and that they cannot obtain the whole of the straits and bay which of right belongs to them.

1. That the French be limited not to trade or build any factory, &c. beyond the bounds of 53° N. or Albany River, to the northward on the west or main coast, and beyond Rupert's River to the northward on the east main coast.

2. The English shall be obliged not to trade nor build any factory, &c. beyond the aforesaid latitude of 53° or Albany River, or beyond Rupert's River, south-east towards Canada, on any land which belongs to the Hudson's Bay Company.

3. As likewise that neither the French nor English shall at any time hereafter extend their bounds contrary to the aforesaid limitations . . . which the French may very reasonably comply with, for that they by such limitations will have all the country south-eastward, betwixt Albany Fort and Canada, to themselves, which is not only the best and most fertile part, but also a much larger tract of land than can be supposed to lie to the northward, and the Company deprived of that which was always their undoubted right.

By this document it appears the French were insisting on having the limits settled between York and Albany Fort, as in the latitude of 53 degrees or thereabouts.

22 January 1701-2. The Lords of Trade and Plantations asked the Company to say " whether, in case the French cannot be prevailed with to consent to the settlement proposed on the 10th July preceding by the Company, they will not consent that the limits on the east side of the bay to the latitude of 52° degrees." This proposal would have given the East Main River and Rupert's River to Canada.

On the 29th January, the Hudson's Bay Company alter their proposals, offering the boundary on the east main, or coast, to be Hudson's River, vulgarly called Canute, or Canuse River (which I take to be the river now marked on the maps as the East Main River) ; but, they add, should the French refuse the limits now proposed by the Company, the Company think themselves not bound by this or any former concessions of the like nature, but must (as they have always done) insist upon their prior and undoubted right to the whole Bay and Straits of Hudson, which the French never yet would strictly dispute, or suffer to be examined into (as knowing the weakness of their claim), though the first step in the 8th Article of the Treaty of Ryswick, directs the doing of it. If either proposal had been accepted, the French would have had access to .Tames' Bay. The first, propositions left them the Moose River ; the second appears to have given up Rupert's River.

In February 1711-12, prior to the Treaty of Utrecht, the Hudson's Bay Company proposed, that the limits between them and the French in Canada, should begin " at Gremmington's Island or Cape Perdrix, in the latitude of $58 \frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ north, which they desire may be the boundary between the English and French, on the coast of Labrador, towards Rupert's Land on the East Main and Nova Britannica on the French River." That a line be drawn from Cape Perdrix to the Great Lake Mistassing, dividing the same into two parts, beyond which line the French were not to pass to the north, nor the English to the South.

In August 1714, they renewed their application for the settlement of the limits, adding to their former proposition, that from the Lake Mistassing a line should run south-westward into 49° north latitude, and that such latitude be the limit, and that the French do not come to the north, or the English to the south of this boundary

In August 1719, in a memorial, they say, that " the surrender of the straits and bay aforesaid has been made according to the tenor of the treaty, at least in such manner that the Company acquiesced therein, and have nothing to object or desire further on that head." But they even then, complained that, since the conclusion of the peace, viz., in 1715, the French had made a settlement at the head of Albany River, " upon which very river our principal factory is settled, whereby they intercept the Indian trade from coming to the Company's factories ; and will, in time, utterly ruin the trade, if not prevented. It is, therefore, proposed and desired, that a boundary or dividend line may be drawn so as exclude the French from coming any where to the northward of the latitude of 49° , except on the coast of Labrador ; unless this is done, the Company's factories at the bottom of Hudson's Bay cannot be secure, or their trade preserved." This shows that the Company there sought to establish an arbitrary boundary, and that the object of it was, to secure the fur trade from the French.

The English Commissioners made the demand to have limits established according to the prayer of the Hudson's Bay Company, and for the giving up the new fort erected by the French ; adding a demand that the French should make no establishments on any of the rivers which discharged themselves into Hudson's Bay ; and that the entire course of the navigation of these rivers should be left free to the Company, and to such of the Indians as desired to trade with them.

The precise terms of the instructions to the Commissioners hardly seem to have contemplated the latter part of the demand, for they (the instructions of 3d September 1719) merely designate the boundaries beyond which the French and English respectively are not to cross. They contain this passage however : " But you are to take especial care in wording such articles as shall be agreed upon with the Commissioners of his Most Christian Majesty upon this head ; that the said boundaries be understood to regard the trade of the Hudson's Bay Company only."

Colonel Bladen, on the 7th November 1719, wrote to the Lords of Trade that the English Commissioners would that day deliver in the demand, and that he foresaw " some difficulty in the execution of this affair, there being at least the difference of two degrees between the best French maps and that which the Company delivered us, as your Lordship will perceive by the carte I send you herewith."

Colonel Bladen was right. After receiving the English demands, the French Commissioners, the Marechal d'Estrees and the Abbé Dubois, never met the English Commissioners again, and all the instances of the English Ambassadors failed to procure a renewal of the conferences.

The Company were again called upon on the 25th July 1750, to lay before the Lords of Trade, an account of the limits and boundaries of the territory granted to them. They replied, among other things, that the said straits and bay " are now so well known, that it is apprehended they stand in no need of any particular description than by the chart or map herewith delivered, and the limits or boundaries of the lands and countries lying round the same, comprised, as your memorialists, conceive in the said grant, are as follows : that " is to say, all the lands lying on the east side or coast of the said bay, and extending from the bay eastward to the Atlantic Ocean and Davis' Strait, and the line hereafter mentioned as the east and south-eastern boundaries of the said Company's territories ; and towards the north all the lands that lie at the north end, or on the north side or coast of the said bay, and extending from the bay northwards to the utmost limits of the lands then towards the North Pole ; but where or how these lands terminate is hitherto unknown. And towards the west, all the lands that lie in the west side or coast of the said bay, and extending from the said bay westward to the utmost limits of those lands ; but where or how these lands terminate to the westward is also unknown, though probably it will be found they terminate on the Great South Sea and towards the south." they propose the line already set out by them, before and soon after the Treaty of Utrecht, stating that the Commissioners under that treaty were never able to bring the settlement of the said limits to a final conclusion ; but they urged that the limits of the territories. granted to them, and of the places appertaining to the French, should be settled upon the footing above mentioned.

I AM directed by Mr. Secretary Labouchere to transmit to you, jointly with the (Solicitor-General—Attorney-General,) copies of two despatches from the Governor of Canada, enclosing the copy of a minute of his Executive Council, and extract from another minute of the same, in reference to the questions respecting the affairs of the Hudson's Bay Company, now under investigation by a Committee of the House of Commons.

You will observe from the former of these minutes that the Executive Council suggest, on the part of Canada, a territorial claim over a considerable extent of country, which is also claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company, as owners of the soil, and with rights of government and exclusive trade under their charter.

You will observe by the annexed Parliamentary Papers of 12th July 1850, that the " Statement " of the Hudson's Bay Company's rights as to territory, trade, taxation, and government, made by them to Earl Grey, as Secretary for the Colonies, on the 13th September 1849, was submitted to the then law officers of the Crown, who reported that they were of opinion that the rights so claimed by the Company properly belonged to them ; but suggested, at the same time, a mode of testing those claims by petition to Her Majesty, which might be referred to the Judicial Committee.

I am further to annex a Parliamentary Return made in 1842, containing the charter of the Company, and documents relating thereto ; and another of 23d April 1849, containing amongst other papers an Act of 2d William and Mary, " for confirming to the Governor and Company trading to Hudson's Bay their privileges and trade."

The rights so claimed by the Company have been repeatedly questioned since 1850, by private persons in correspondence with the Secretary of State, and are now questioned to a certain extent, as appears by these despatches, by the present local government of Canada.

[p. 88]

I am to request that you will, jointly with (Solicitor-General—Attorney-General.) take these papers into your consideration, and report,—

Whether you think that the Crown can lawfully and constitutionally raise, for legal decision, all or either of the following questions :—

The validity at the present day of the charter itself.

The validity of the several claims of territorial right, of government, exclusive trade, and taxation, insisted on by the Company.

The geographical extent of this territorial claim (supposing it to be well founded, to any extent).

If you are of opinion that the Crown can do so, you are requested further to state the proper steps to be taken, in your opinion, by the Crown, and the proper tribunal to be resorted to ; and whether the Crown should act on behalf of the local government of Canada, as exercising a delegated share of the Royal authority, or in any other way.

And, lastly, if you should be opinion that the Crown cannot properly so act, whether you see any objection to the questions being raised by the local government of Canada acting independently of the Crown ; or whether they can be raised by some private party in the manner suggested by the law advisers in 1850, the Crown undertaking to bear the expense of the proceedings.

LETTER RICHARD BETHELL AND HENRY S.
KEATING TO THE RT. HON. H. LABOUCHERE, M.P.

Lincoln's Inn, July 1857.

Sir,

Appendix No. 9

pp. 403-404.

WE are favoured with Mr. Merivale's letter of the 9th of June ultimo, in which he stated that he was directed by you to transmit to us copies of two despatches from the Governor of Canada, enclosing the copy of a minute of his Executive Council, and extract from another minute of the same, in reference to the questions respecting the affairs of the Hudson's Bay Company, then under investigation by a Committee of the House of Commons.

We were also requested to observe from the former of those minutes that the Executive Council suggest, on the part of Canada, a territorial claim over a considerable extent of country, which is also claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company, as owners of the soil, and with rights of government and exclusive trade under their charter.

We were also requested to observe, by the annexed Parliamentary Papers of 12th July 1850, that the "Statement" of the Hudson's Bay Company's rights as to territory, trade, taxation, and government, made by them to Earl Grey, as Secretary for the Colonies, on the 13th September 1849, was submitted to the then law officers of the Crown, who reported that they were of opinion that the rights so claimed by the Company, properly belonged to them ; but suggested, at the same time, a mode of testing those claims by petition to Her Majesty, which might be referred to the Judicial Committee.

Mr. Merivale was further to annex a Parliamentary Return made in 1842, containing the charter of the Company, and documents relating thereto ; and another of 23rd April 1849, containing amongst other papers, an Act of 2d William and Mary, " for confirming to the Governor and Company trading to Hudson's Bay their privileges and trade."

The rights so claimed by the Company had been repeatedly questioned since 1850, by private persons in correspondence with the Secretary of State, and were then questioned to a certain extent, as appears by those despatches, by the present local government of Canada.

Mr. Merivale was also to request that we would take those papers into our consideration, and report,—

Whether we thought the Crown could lawfully and constitutionally raise, for legal decision, all or either of the following questions :

The validity, at the present day, of the charter itself.

The validity of the several claims of territorial right of government, exclusive trade, and taxation insisted on by the Company.

The geographical extent of this territorial claim (supposing it to be well founded, to any extent).

And if we were of opinion that the Crown could do so, we were requested further to state the proper steps to be taken, in our opinion, by the Crown, and the proper tribunal to be resorted to ; and whether the Crown should act on behalf of the local government of Canada, as exercising a delegated share of the Royal authority, or in any other way.

And, lastly, if we should be of opinion that the Crown could not properly so act, whether we saw any objection to the questions being raised by the local government of Canada, acting independently of the Crown, or whether they could be raised by some private party in the manner suggested by the law officers in 1850, the Crown undertaking to bear the expense of the proceedings.

In obedience to your request we have taken the papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report,—

That the questions of the validity and construction of the Hudson's Bay Company's charter cannot be considered apart from the enjoyment that has been had under it during nearly two centuries, and the recognition made of the rights of the Company in various acts, both of the Government and the Legislature.

Nothing could be more unjust, or more opposed to the spirit of our law, than to try this charter as a thing of yesterday, upon principles which might be deemed applicable to it, if it had been granted within the last 10 or 20 years.

These observations, however, must be considered as limited in their application to the territorial rights of the Company under the charter, and to the necessary incidents or consequences of that territorial owner-ship. They do not extend to the monopoly of trade (save as territorial ownership justifies the exclusion of intruders), or to the right of an exclusive administration of justice.

But we do not understand the Hudson's Bay Company as claiming anything beyond the territorial ownership of the country they are in possession of, and the right, as incident to such ownership, of excluding persons who would compete with them in the fur trade carried on with the Indians resorting to their districts.

With these preliminary remarks we beg leave to state, in answer to the questions submitted to us, that in our opinion the Crown could not now with justice raise the question of the general validity of the charter ; but that on every legal principle the Company's territorial ownership of the lands granted and the rights necessarily incidental thereto (as, for example, the right of excluding from their territory persons acting in violation of their regulations), ought to be deemed to be valid.

[p. 91]

But with respect to any rights of government, taxation, exclusive administration of justice, or exclusive trade, otherwise than as a consequence of the right of ownership of the land, such rights could not be legally insisted on by the Hudson's Bay Company as having been legally granted to them by the Crown.

This remark, however, requires some explanation.

The Company has, under the charter, power to make ordinances (which would be in the nature of bye-laws) for the government of the persons employed by them, and also power to exercise jurisdiction in all matters, civil and criminal ; but no ordinance would be valid that was contrary to the common law, nor could the Company insist on its right to administer justice as against the Crown's prerogative right to establish courts of civil and criminal justice within the territory.

We do not think, therefore, that the charter should be treated as invalid, because it professes to confer these powers upon the Company ; for to a certain extent they may be lawfully used, and for an abuse of them the Company would be amenable to law.

The remaining subject of consideration is the question of the geographical extent of the territory granted by the charter, and whether its boundaries can in any way and what manner be ascertained. In the case of grants of considerable age, such as this charter, when the words, as is often the case, are indefinite or ambiguous, the rule is, that they are construed by usage and enjoyment, including in these latter terms the assertion of ownership by the Company on important public occasions, such as the Treaties of Ryswick and Utrecht, and again in 1750.

To these elements of consideration upon this question must be added the inquiry (as suggested by the following words of the charter, viz. “ not possessed by the subjects of an other Christian prince or state ”), whether, at the time of the charter, any part of the territory now claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company could have been rightfully claimed by the French, as falling within the boundaries of Canada, or Nouvelle France, and also the effect of the Acts of Parliament passed in 1774 and 1791.

Under these circumstances, we cannot but feel that the important question of the boundaries of the territory of the Hudson's Bay Company, might with great utility, as between the Company and Canada, be made the subject of a quasi-judicial inquiry.

But this cannot be done except by the consent of both parties, namely, Canada and the Hudson's Bay Company, nor would the decision of a Committee of the Privy Council have any effect as a binding judicial determination.

But if the Hudson's Bay Company agreed to the proposal of the Chief Justice of Canada, that the question of boundaries should be referred to the Privy Council, it being further understood by both parties, that the determination of the Council shall be carried into effect by a declaratory Act of Parliament, we think the proceeding would be the best mode of determining that which is, or ought to be, the only real subject of controversy.

The form of procedure might be a petition to the Queen by Chief Justice Draper, describing himself as acting under the direction of the Executive Council of Canada ; unless, which would be the more solemn mode, an address were presented to Her Majesty by the Canadian Parliament.

Counsel would be heard on behalf of Canada and of the Company.

We are, &c.

The Lord
Chancellor.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: My Lords, in this matter I have the honour to appear before your Lordships on behalf of the Colony of Newfoundland, the oldest Colony under the British Crown. With me, in presenting the case for the Colony of Newfoundland, I have my learned friends Mr. Higgins, who is Attorney-General of the Colony, Mr. Barrington Ward, Mr. Monckton and Mr. Pearson. For the Dominion of Canada there appear my learned friends, Mr. Macmillan, Mr. Doherty, formerly Minister of Justice in the Dominion, Mr. Geoffrion, Mr. Alexander, Mr. Stuart Moore and Mr. Plaxton.

The Lord
Chancellor.

Sir John Simon.

Your Lordships will perhaps have noticed that there is another name at the end of the Case for the Dominion of Canada, Mr. Lanctot. The Dominion have unfortunately had to forego his services because, as your Lordships know, after he arrived here he was summoned home owing to a domestic bereavement.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: We all heard of that with the deepest regret.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am sure, my Lord, all of us at the Bar deeply regret his absence and the cause of it.

My Lords, this matter is one which my friends and I have been at pains to try to prepare so that it may be presented in the most convenient form, because the volumes before your Lordships, one red bound volume and I think seven green volumes, have a very formidable aspect.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I think I have eight volumes besides the red one.

Sir JOHN SIMON: The eighth is an index. There will be more than these materials, I am afraid, before we finish. but we must begin at any rate with the eight. The first of them, Volume I, which is distinguished by being bound in a red cover, contains the Cases and Counter Cases, and also some of the principal documentary matter which has to be considered. The volumes which follow deal with various aspects of the controversy. The matter has been arranged in parts and sections rather from the point of view of subject matter than from the point of view of chronology, but I think it will be much the most convenient course for the Board, and it is the course which I have prepared myself to follow, if, at any rate in the first instance, I endeavour to present the case for the Colony of Newfoundland preserving a chronological order, tracing it from what perhaps is the most important date in the story and introducing from time to time some of the supplementary matter, but still all the time endeavouring to pass along in chronological fashion.

The first thing, of course, that your Lordships will want to see, will be the Terms of Reference under which the Board is sitting. If your Lordships will turn to page 125 in the red volume, you will there find printed as the first document in the Joint Appendix, the Terms of

Viscount
Haldane.

Sir John Simon.

Reference to the Judicial Committee. There were, as a matter of fact, two documents which together constitute the Terms of Reference. The second agreement varied, in some respects, the language of the first. The Terms of Reference, as printed at page 125 and following, combine the two documents and present to the Board the actual effect of that combination.

The reference is, as your Lordships no doubt realise, under Section 4 of the Judicial Committee Act of 1833, that very wide section which has more than once been used, though never, I think, in circumstances quite like the present, the section which provides "That it shall be lawful for His Majesty to refer to the said Judicial Committee for hearing or consideration any such other matters whatsoever as His Majesty shall think fit, and such Committee shall thereupon hear or consider the same, and shall advise His Majesty thereon in manner aforesaid."

Viscount HALDANE: How was the 1884 boundary difference dealt with? Was it under that section?

Sir JOHN SIMON: The Ontario-Manitoba dispute, your Lordship means? I think it was under that section. The reason I said that the circumstances were not quite the same, was this. That was a reference of a matter in controversy between two Provinces of the Dominion of Canada.

Viscount HALDANE: Of the Dominion itself?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes. It all arose inside the admitted boundary of the Dominion of Canada, whereas in the present case—and this is what I think makes it of particularly striking importance—your Lordships are undertaking the very important duty of deciding a matter which is in controversy between two quite separate units under the British Crown, the Dominion of Canada on the one hand, which of course does not include Newfoundland at all, and the Colony of Newfoundland on the other. I do not think that particular situation has arisen under Section 4 before.

Now if I may just ask your Lordships' attention to what is material in the Terms of Reference, that will, I think, be the proper way to begin. The original agreement, your Lordships notice, was entered into on the 11th November, 1920, and the amendment to which I have referred was made by supplemental agreement two years later. "In the matter of the boundary between the Dominion of Canada and the Colony of Newfoundland in the Labrador Peninsula: The government of the Dominion of Canada and the government of the Colony of Newfoundland having mutually agreed to submit for reference by His Majesty to the Judicial Committee of His Majesty's Privy Council, for their decision, the following question, viz: 'What is the location and definition of the boundary as between Canada and Newfoundland in the Labrador Peninsula under the statutes, orders-in-council and proclamations?" Then what follows has to do with procedure.

Of course, your Lordships will at once observe two matters about the language of these Terms of Reference. One perhaps is a mere linguistic difficulty; the other is a very important matter of substance. Taking the more important one first: the character of the question which the Judicial Committee has to determine is the ascertainment of a boundary as defined by existing documents, statutes, orders-in-council and proclamations. In other words, this is not a case in which the Board of Arbitration (if I may so call it for a moment) is invited to settle such boundary as seems to them in all the circumstances to be good. Their task is the different task, whether easier or not time will show, of determining what the boundary is. I think it is necessary to bear that in mind, because it obviously has a bearing on some parts of the testimony and material here. I will not ask leave to discuss it in any detail; I only indicate the point in opening. Obviously the really important thing is to examine what is the effect of the statutes, orders-in-council and proclamations, and though no doubt how the two parties may have acted in questions of administration, occupation, and the like, will have a very proper place in the investigation as helping to throw light upon the interpretation to be adopted, still, of course, that plays a secondary part. I do not say that in any way because I think the putting of such matters in the second place is necessarily to the advantage of the Colony of Newfoundland, but it is only right to help the Tribunal as far as I can at once by pointing out that primarily the question is a question of construing and applying certain documents which are here on record.

The other matter, which I have no doubt has now suggested itself to your Lordships, is, why does the question talk about "location" and "definition," and what is the relation between these two different substantives. Perhaps as we go on it will not be found to be very important. My friend, Mr. Macmillan, may have a very clear view as to what is the exact distinction between these two things. It is very easy to suggest a distinction. but in the end I am quite confident your Lordships will find that the conclusion as to which His Majesty is seeking the advice of the Board will be the single conclusion as to where the boundary is to be found though no doubt your Lordships will indicate your view of the answer to that question by reference to some matters of principle. Your Lordships are not required, I apprehend, to visit the Labrador Peninsula and delimit the boundary for this extensive territory. But I make the point at once, because in my submission it is a matter of extreme importance throughout to remember that this boundary, wherever it runs, has to be settled on some principle. It is not a mere arbitrary thing to be arrived at by sitting down and thinking of a number and saying that will do. It has to be settled on some principle. We put forward what we conceive to be the right principle. The representatives of Canada do not accept our view, and suggest that what Newfoundland would be receiving if the answer was justly given would be a selvedge of one mile from the water's edge without even penetrating the land in places where there are inlets—as there are on this coast. Where anybody derives the figure of one mile, and why on earth that should be supposed to be what the statutes, orders-in-council and proclamations say, will be one of the most serious questions for the Tribunal.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALIDANE: Supposing the Judicial Committee was to make a declaration of the boundary, how would that have validity? You are not asking us to advise as to the exercise of the prerogative; you are asking us to give a judicial definition. Is the Colonial Boundaries Act, 1895, enough to give that the effect of law? Perhaps it is.

Sir JOHN SIMON: At any rate in addition to the jurisdiction which your Lordships are about to exercise on commission from His Majesty. you also have an agreement between the Dominion of Canada of the one part and the Colony of Newfoundland of the other that they will accept the conclusion.

Viscount HALDANE: An executory agreement. What is the force of the Colonial Boundaries Act for this purpose? According to my recollection it says that when the Sovereign has laid something down in an order-in-council or other declaration it has a statutory effect.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It had not occurred to me that it would be because of the operation of that statute. It would seem to me that the Dominion of Canada and the Colony of Newfoundland having agreed together that this decision should bind, any necessary adjustment would follow automatically. The Colonial Boundaries Act is printed in this same volume, and it is quite useful to look at it now. It will be found at page 245. There is one purpose for which I am very glad to refer to it at once, though I may have to return to it later on. The Colonial Boundaries Act, 1895 (58 and 59 Victoria, Cap. 34), is, of course, a statute of the Imperial Parliament. Section 1 says : “Where the boundaries of a Colony have, either before or after the passing of this Act, been altered by Her Majesty the Queen by Order in Council or Letters Patent, the boundaries as so altered shall be, and be deemed to have been from the date of the alteration, the boundaries of the Colony.”

The LORD CHANCELLOR: There is no question of altering the boundaries here.

Sir JOHN SIMON: None at all. I would ask attention to Section 2 because in another connection, which I am afraid I shall not reach for a day or two, I shall have something to say about it. Section 2 says: “Provided that the consent of a self-governing Colony shall be required for the alteration of the boundaries thereof.” You will notice that the Schedule includes, as you would suppose, both Canada and Newfoundland. I will anticipate by saying it follows, of course, that assuming that the true boundary of Newfoundland territory on the mainland of Labrador is what we contend, nothing that has been done without the consent of the self-governing Colony of Newfoundland can possibly have had the effect of restricting that boundary at all. There comes a point, very late in the history, where that consideration is material.

I promised your Lordships to endeavour to present this to the Board from a chronological point of view, and therefore one must choose a date at which to begin.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Would it be inconvenient if we looked at the map now?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Not at all. It is to be found in the pocket at the beginning of the red volume.

Mr. MACMILLAN: You might mention, Sir John, that it is a Newfoundland map which I do not agree with.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, it is designed to show the view which the Colony of Newfoundland presents as to its rights in the matter.

21 Oct., 1926.

Viscount
Haldane.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Have you not been able to agree this map as representing the territory and the claim?

Mr. Macmillan.

Mr. MACMILLAN: No, my Lord.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: My friend I dare say will take an opportunity, without necessarily doing it in front of the Tribunal, of just letting me know in what respect he does not think it a proper picture.

Mr. MACMILLAN: Yes. I merely wanted to indicate that we have certain views on these lines, and we do not agree about them.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am not talking about the lines at all. I am merely talking about the boundary of the coast—the physical fact that the coast has these indentations.

21 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: Apart from the lines—for the rest is there much wrong?

Mr. MACMILLAN: I am afraid there is a good deal of disparity.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I shall in due course learn from my friend if there is anything the matter with the outline where the water touches the land. I use the most inoffensive expression, and say, where the water touches the land. I really do not think there is. If your Lordships look at the map, the first thing that is important to appreciate is that Labrador is a peninsula. The map is described as a map of the Labrador Peninsula. The isthmus which cuts off the peninsula is to be found in the map indicated at the bottom left-hand corner. Certain colours are upon the map—yellow, green, pink and blue—but of course in addition to that there is much uncoloured area which is land, and which is here left white. The isthmus, speaking broadly, which cuts off the peninsula of Labrador is therefore the band of land which stretches from James's Bay, the southern part of Hudson's Bay, to the River St. Lawrence more or less in the neighbourhood of where the Saguenay River runs into it. I am not fixing precise termini, but what I want first of all to get before your Lordships as a matter of geography—as is no doubt well known to all your Lordships—is that Labrador is in that sense a peninsula. I think it is a matter of some 300 or 350 miles across the neck of the peninsula. I am not the least on political rights or boundaries for the moment. Your Lordships see that from that neck or isthmus of some 300 or 350 miles you have this great area swelling out. You do not get the whole of it on this map, because if you travel along the shore of James's Bay and Hudson's Bay you go off the map at the top before you have rounded the corner from Hudson's Bay into Hudson's Strait. It is a very considerable area, very far north of course. Then you find the coastline trending south-easterly again, and you come into this very large bay which is called Ungava Bay. Ungava is a name which at one time was a name used for a portion of this territory. Then trending north-easterly you come to a point where the colours begin, and your Lordships will notice Cape Chidley. Cape Chidley is one of the definite termini which are mentioned in the definitions which your Lordships have to consider, Cape Chidley, as your Lordships notice, being at the entrance to Hudson's Strait, if you regard yourselves as entering Hudson's Strait from the Atlantic. Then, trending broadly in a south-south-east direction, comes this long and extremely indented line, fringed with a great many islands, breaking into the land by some very considerable openings. I am quite deliberately avoiding the use of words like "inlets" or "estuaries"; I will call them openings. I refer, for instance, to such as Saglek Bay, which your Lordships will hear something about, and Hamilton Inlet, a very large opening indeed, and a whole series of other indentations. Then when you get very near to the right-hand edge of the map and towards the bottom of the green, you will find yourself approaching the Strait of Belle Isle. The Island of Newfoundland (which is not coloured) is, of course, on the opposite side of the Strait of Belle Isle. What you see there is the northern portion of the island of Newfoundland. Then if you regard yourself as sailing through the Strait of Belle Isle in a south-westerly direction, as some of us have

21 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

perhaps done, you are now entering that part of the sea which is called the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Of course, it is not the River St. Lawrence, it is an immense part of the sea. In due course you pass along this pink area. I will call it, though incorrectly, for the moment the pink oblong. It takes a very important place in the argument, and I will indicate at once to your Lordships why the pink area is so important. The pink area is important because that pink area at one time did not form any part of the Province of Quebec. At a certain stage in the history it was added to the Province of Quebec, and a great deal turns in my submission, when we come to examine the language of these documents, on the way in which that transfer is described. It has a very close bearing on what is, in one sense, the issue of this case—the sense in which the word “coast” of Labrador is used.

p. 8

Then we come to Anticosti Island, which those who approach the St. Lawrence by the summer route are accustomed, on a fine day at any rate, to see in the distance on the starboard hand. Then at the bottom of the area uncoloured you see the promontory on the southern side of the St. Lawrence estuary, which is ordinarily called “Gaspé.” You see Gaspé Bay. Perhaps you also notice two other things marked on this map—the Bay des Chaleurs, which is a bay on the southern side of the Gaspé Peninsula, and the Magdalen Islands which come in for a particular purpose.

Viscount HALDANE: Where is the entrance to the St. Lawrence?

Sir JOHN SIMON: The entrance to the St. Lawrence is between the blue area which is on the north side, and the uncoloured promontory of Gaspé, which is on the south side. Does your Lordship see Tadoussac, which is on the southern edge of the map?

Viscount HALDANE: At the mouth of the Saguenay River?

Sir JOHN SIMON: At the mouth of the Saguenay River. When you come to Tadoussac and the Saguenay River you are entering the St. Lawrence. At what point the St. Lawrence River may be said to begin and the Gulf of St. Lawrence to end is a thing about which opinions might differ. Your Lordships appreciate that this little map of mine by no means presents the area of the Province of Quebec. Quebec itself is beyond the map, and of course Montreal, and Three Rivers, and the rest of it. This is simply a map to indicate the peninsula of Labrador, because it is with reference to a fraction of that peninsula that the present dispute arises. If your Lordships would care for them, I would give your 21 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Lordships just two figures to get some sort of conception of the areas we are dealing with. Dealing with the Labrador Peninsula as being the area the boundaries of which I have just traced with you, and having this isthmus of from 300 to 350 miles at its neck, you may take it in round figures that the whole Labrador Peninsula is something like 511,000 square miles. I will not pledge myself as to an odd thousand, but that is about it.

Viscount HALDANE: Is that as claimed by you?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Oh, no. That is the whole Labrador Peninsula covered in this map, coloured or uncoloured, green, yellow, blue and pink, or not coloured at all. I am only giving your Lordships a very broad figure.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: It takes in a good deal to the north as included in your figure?

p. 9

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes. If you were to regard yourself as cutting off at the neck what is called the Labrador Peninsula, it is a matter of 500,000 square miles.

Viscount HALDANE: That is a great deal more than you claim?

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is a great deal more than we claim. The matter which is in controversy, which for the moment you may assume as being the green area, is about one-fifth of that. There again mensuration might bring it out rather differently, but call it that. It is about one-fifth, though it is a very large area, of course. But then Canada and the North American Continent under the British Crown is a very large place, as anyone who has been there is deeply impressed to observe.

That perhaps will give you for the moment a notion of the kind of subject matter. Now, if I may pass from elementary geography to equally elementary history, I would invite your Lordships for a moment to meditate on the year 1763. I shall have to go back a little bit earlier than that for one or two purposes, some of them quite important, but still the year 1763 is really the year upon which one needs in the first instance to concentrate. Your Lordships remember that that was the year of the Treaty of Paris, as the result of which the French lost their dominions.

Viscount HALDANE: In what year did Wolfe defeat Montcalm?

Sir JOHN SIMON: In 1759, on the morning of the 13th September. There was then a series of very interesting and important events, but the definite treaty which put in shape and reaped the fruits of that and other victories is the Treaty

Viscount
Haldane.

Sir John Simon.

of Paris of 1763. Just to remind your Lordships in the first instance very broadly—the effect of the Treaty of 1763 (some terms of which we shall need to look at closely) was that the French surrendered to George III. the French dominions in North America so far as they were east of the Mississippi. In those early days what was west of the Mississippi might very well have been in some places a matter of speculation. Lord Finlay in particular will remember some people had already gone round Cape Horn and had found what there was in the region of what is now called British Columbia and Alaska; but if you regard yourself as exploring from the Atlantic and pushing in, though of course there was something known west of the Mississippi, a great deal of it was quite undiscovered territory, and one broad result of the Treaty of Paris of 1763 was, as your Lordships will recall, that the French gave up any claims to empire on the continent east of that, while they reserved certain rights to the west of the Mississippi.

Viscount HALDANE: Does any map show the course of the Mississippi?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Oh, yes, we have some maps here which are very interesting from that point of view. It appears to me, and I am sure it will commend itself to your Lordships, that when we come to try and construe some of these documents—which are very difficult to construe—it may be very material to try and put ourselves as it were in the chair of the negotiators and draughtsmen, and for that purpose it may be important to see what sort of maps were available, because it may help us to understand what they were saving and doing. The exception, which is a trifling exception, under the Treaty of Paris of 1763 to the general proposition that the French withdrew altogether from North America east of the Mississippi, is that the French retained two islands—the Island of Miquelon, and the Island of St. Pierre, two islands off what is now called Nova Scotia.

That was the broad result. The result was that it became the duty of the British authorities to determine how this new territory was to be dealt with. It is perhaps not easy to state with precision exactly how much new territory the British Crown got, because, of course, Britain already had quite considerable interests in that region of the world. But what is quite clear is that the French, when they were definitely withdrawn, made an immense addition to what I may call the area to be disposed of, and what you will find is therefore that in connection with these new responsibilities the authorities at home made a series of new arrangements and adjustments, and it is in connection with those that you find the ancient Colony of Newfoundland getting an area on the mainland, while in about the same time you also find the carving out of other areas under the British Crown, such as, for instance, the Province or Government of Quebec.

There is another thing which I would venture respectfully to ask attention to at the outset on this historical side. Consider for a moment what were the British territories in that part of the world before the victory of Wolfe, and apart altogether from the cession of territory made by the French in the Treaty of Paris. There are several which must be most carefully borne in mind. The first one I would venture to mention is the Hudson's Bay Company territory. Your Lordships will remember that the Charter to the Hudson's Bay Company was a Charter granted by Charles II. in the year 1670. Therefore the Hudson's Bay Company was, of course, established in possession, and in what was very nearly sovereignty, over an immense solid area before ever these events in the middle of the eighteenth century took place. I think it is convenient now—it will have to be done at some time—to get a slightly clearer view of what the extent of that Hudson's Bay Company territory was. Of course it was vast. I have heard people sometimes in Privy Council cases talking about the Hudson's Bay Company having one-third of Canada, and it is, of course, most important for me that I should bring as clearly as I can before your Lordships' minds what were the other compartments of this area before we come to the question of what was done with the new and additional territory.

Viscount HALDANE: We talk as though the Crown had established colonies in those places. A colony ordinarily understood is something with a defined area. Newfoundland was little more than a station for fishing and a station for which the Navy at home had to be recruited, and was under the rule of a British admiral. By degrees the Government of Newfoundland became crystallised into its present form, but that took a very long time. I was going to ask you this: when there was the setting up of Newfoundland as a possession of the Crown it may be that it was little more than the setting up of the rule of an admiral, but when you extend the boundaries of Newfoundland it may be that what would ordinarily look like a mere strip may be something much larger, an undefined area in which the Naval Governor is to operate. The whole point may be quite unimportant—I do not know—but all I ask you to do is to bear it in mind.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I have not only borne it in mind, but I have spent a good many months in endeavouring to prepare myself to present it to your Lordships.

21 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: We shall get Mr. Higgins's criticism of some of these vague sections.

Sir JOHN SIMON: We have not come to any section yet. It would be of very great assistance, having to deal with a large mass of material, if I might ask your attention to the area of the Hudson's Bay Company, in the first instance. I am then going to pass to the other areas, not forgetting the one which your Lordship has already in mind. I take this because 1670 is a definite date and there happens to be a definite document, and it is rather convenient to get rid of that portion.

Viscount HALDANE: We have seen this before. Out of it a great deal of the north-west territory was carved.

Viscount
Haldane.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I must now ask your Lordships to turn to a green book, Volume II.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: We are getting to the condition of things at the date of the Treaty of Paris.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is the point, my Lord. I am going round, and will then fill it all up. Nobody could read the Treaty, and still less the arrangements made in connection with the Treaty, unless they had, as it were, blocked up the map. I was going to take the Charter of the Hudson's Bay Company and call attention to a map. The Charter is to be found in Volume II. on page 367. This is, as my Lord has observed, a document which has been before the Court many times, and my excuse for dwelling upon it now is not because I think it is unknown to your Lordships. but because we are dealing here with very important matters, and probably it is as well to look at it afresh.

p. 12

Viscount HALDANE: It might be as well if we had a map of the whole of Canada in some shape or form, because so much of Canada was carved out of the Hudson's Bay territory.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is quite true. I had prepared myself from that point of view. The difficulty is this: your Lordships would really need a map with no boundaries on it, and that is not quite the same thing.

The Lord
Chancellor.

Viscount HALDANE: That is not quite the same thing. Still, we could see how the boundaries had been restricted.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I know your Lordship will trust me. I have had that in my mind, and I am going to call attention in a moment to a map which I think will help you. Might we look at the actual language of the document? It is a Charter granted by Charles II. It is interesting to notice the first name in the Charter at line 12 on the page is: "Our dear and entirely beloved cousin, Prince Rupert," which is the reason part of the land was called Rupert's Land. There are a number of other names, many of them interesting names to note to-day. It recites that Prince Rupert, the Duke of Albemarle, Lord Craven, Lord Arlington, Lord Ashley, and a number of other persons, John Portman, citizen and goldsmith of London, "have, at their own great cost and charges, undertaken an expedition for Hudson's Bay in the north-west part of America."

The LORD CHANCELLOR: The north-west part of America?

Sir JOHN SIMON: They did not know how much more west there was. It all depends upon how much further you think it goes. "For the discovery of a new passage into the South Sea, and for the finding some trade for furs, minerals and other considerable commodities, and by such their undertaking have already made such discoveries as do encourage them to proceed further in pursuance of their said design, by means whereof there may probably arise very great advantage to us and our kingdom: And whereas the said Undertakers, for their further encouragement in the said design, have humbly besought us to incorporate them, and grant unto them and their successors the sole trade and commerce of all those seas, straits, bays, rivers, lakes, creeks and sounds, in whatever latitude they shall be, that lie within the entrance of the straits commonly called Hudson's Straits, together with all the lands, countries and territories"—I venture to think the next words may have a little importance—“upon the coasts”—that is one of the early instances of the use of this rather difficult phrase—“and confines of the seas, straits, bays, lakes, rivers, creeks, and sounds aforesaid”

Viscount HALDANE: It seems to suggest that there was granted the commerce of the rivers which flowed into the bay.

p. 13

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think so:—“which are not now actually possessed by any of our subjects, or by the subjects of any other Christian Prince or State.” That is all recital.

Viscount FINLAY: I think the word “coasts,” particularly in early English, was not confined to the coast of any piece of water.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think not. One could give examples which actually go back to the authorised version of the Bible. There are many cases. What my Lord Finlay says is an extremely important consideration which I shall have to develop.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: Here the expression is “coasts and confines of the seas.”

Sir JOHN SIMON: Your Lordship will see in a moment what is the area which, by common consent, was indicated by those terms. Those words are words of recital, but your Lordships had better have the words of the grant, which are on the same page, page 368. “And to the end the said Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay may be encouraged to undertake and effectually to prosecute the said design, of our more especial grace certain knowledge and mere motion we have given, granted and confirmed, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do give, grant and confirm, unto the said Governor and Company, and their successors, the sole trade and commerce of all those seas, straits, bays, rivers, lakes, creeks and sounds in whatsoever latitude they shall be, that lie within the entrance of the straits, commonly called Hudson's Straits, together with all the lands and territories upon the countries, coasts and confines of the seas, bays, lakes, rivers, creeks, and sounds aforesaid, that are not already actually possessed by or granted,” and so on. Then at line 24 it reads: “and that the said land be from henceforth reckoned and reputed as one of our plantations or Colonies in America, called 'Rupert's Land': And further we do by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, make, create and constitute the said Governor and Company for the time being, and their successors, the true and absolute lords and proprietors of the same territory, limits and places aforesaid.” Your Lordships know well that the authority of the Hudson's Bay Company in its area, whatever it is, was of an extraordinarily high degree; they are made absolute lords and proprietors of “the same territory, limits and places aforesaid” “To have, hold, possess and enjoy the said territory, limits and places, and all and singular others the premises thereby granted as aforesaid, with their and every of their rights,” and so on. Then there is rather an interesting acknowledgment of the King's overlordship which perhaps it is worth reading. It is at the bottom of the page: “paying yearly to us our heirs and successors for the same two elks and two black beavers whensoever and so often as we our heirs and successors shall happen to enter the said Countries Territories and Regions hereby granted.” The word “coasts” is also used I think very much in the way Lord Finlay was suggesting, on the next page, page 369, “And furthermore,” and so on, “we have granted, and by these presents, for us, our heirs and successors, do grant unto the said Governor and Company, and their successors, that they and their successors, and their factors, servants, and agents, for them and on their behalf, and not otherwise, shall for ever hereafter have, use and enjoy, not only the whole, entire and only trade and traffic, and the whole, entire and only liberty, use and privilege of trading and trafficking to and from the territory, limits or places aforesaid; but also the whole and entire trade and traffic to and from all havens, bays, creeks, rivers, lakes and seas, into which they shall find entrance or passage by water or land out of the territories, limits or places aforesaid; and to and with all the natives and people inhabiting, or which shall inhabit within the territories, limits and places aforesaid; and to and with all other nations inhabiting any of the coasts adjacent to the said territories, limits and places, which are not already possessed as aforesaid.” I ask your Lordships to note the use of that word “coasts” there; it seems at any rate very plausible that in that particular connotation it is not even a maritime term at all; whether it is or not, it obviously indicates a substantial area. That, I think, is one of the documents which it is convenient to look at.

p. 14

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Sir John Simon.

Now might I ask your Lordships—you have indulged me so much in waiting for a map—to turn to the smaller atlas in the white cover, and, by way of illustration, to turn to one of the maps. I am quite deliberately taking this, because I think it satisfies for the moment one of Lord Haldane's suggestions. This is the Newfoundland atlas, and if your Lordships will turn to Map 26, I think it is what Lord Haldane had in mind. This is a map with a very interesting history. Perhaps I might just indicate what it is. There was a Committee of the House of Commons which was set up for the purpose of examining the question as to whether the Hudson's Bay Company should continue to be proprietors administering this territory, or whether, on the other hand, the Hudson's Bay Company should be dispossessed and bought out.

Sir John Simon.

Lord HALIDANE: What date is that?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think it sat in 1857. It was a very distinguished Committee. I was interested to notice that Mr. Gladstone was a member of it. Mr. Roebuck took a part in it, and quite a number of well-known parliamentary names appear.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: I see it says "ordered to be printed."

Sir JOHN SIMON: Lord Warrington is quite right; you will get it from the bottom of this map: "Ordered by the House of Commons to be printed, 13 July and the 11 August, 1857." It is an Arrowsmith map. Arrowsmith was a very well-known cartographer in the middle of the last century. The House of Commons in connection with that Committee caused this map to be printed. The green area indicates what at any rate at that time was supposed to be the Hudson's Bay area. I am not concerned in the least whether the map in every other respect is right, but anyone who is interested in the boundaries of Alaska may observe that it gives a boundary for that. I think Lord Finlay has seen this map before, and has spent many hours on it. For the present purpose I am merely on the green area. You notice in the title to the map, which is on the left-hand side of the chart, it says, "Map of North America, drawn by J. Arrowsmith. On this map the territories claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company in virtue of the charter granted to them by King Charles II. are coloured green; the other British territories pink, and those of Russia yellow." What interests me, my Lord, and I think it is really important to notice it as we pass, is this, that you see here illustrated what undoubtedly was the prevailing view, that the Hudson's Bay territories extended to what you may call the height of land. It is a phrase more used in the New World than in the Old, but it means the watershed. You will notice the boundaries in the peninsula of Labrador between the green and the pink, between the Hudson's Bay areas and those not Hudson's Bay areas, are indicated by dotted lines, three dots and a space, and so on. It is evident, looking at that, the view was that you would get the Hudson's Bay territory running up to what is called the height of land.

p. 15

Viscount HALDANE: Height of land is not marked.

Sir JOHN SIMON: No; but if you look at the way the rivers are drawn you will see that they are one way or the other; it is the watershed. In the whole series of areas under the British Crown in the 17th and 18th centuries, this principle of ascertaining the boundary is the principle which is found to be constantly applied. It is not that you get in the terms of the grant, the line traced, or even the words used. You can illustrate it again and again from the Continent of North America. If you had such a thing as a grant or claim to what was called a coast, in the absence of some other and precise artificial line, the view which prevailed, and the meaning attaching to the grant, was one which carried you up to a point which would thus be traced. Take, for instance, the ancient Colony of Virginia, going back to Queen Elizabeth. The coast of Virginia meant going up to a point where the watershed caused the rivers to flow. There is exactly the same thing in Carolina, a whole series of them. How far the Hudson's Bay Company went to the west has always been, as your Lordships know, a tremendous controversy, because the Hudson's Bay put forward very big claims which on one view might even have carried them to the Pacific, but so far as regards the area we are more intimately concerned with, which is the Labrador Peninsula, there is no doubt about this that if anybody sat down in the middle of the 18th century and said to himself "Now, how far is this area an area which is already territory of the Hudsons Bay Company”? I apprehend it would be said, when we look into it more closely. “There is no doubt the view would be that it would carry the Hudson's Bay territory back to that point.”

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Is this, what you call the height of land, on No. 26 practically your line?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord. I will anticipate at once by saying our case is that the location and definition of the boundary to which Newfoundland is entitled in Labrador is a boundary which is to be ascertained by reference to the height of land. It has certain termini at either end. It has Cape Chidley at one end, and has a terminus which has differed from time to time at the other end. I am answering the Lord Chancellor's question more particularly. At one time the terminus at the lower end was not what it is to-day, because it also included the pink; the terminus was at the River St. John, which is the river between the pink and blue. What was shifted afterwards, quite deliberately, and a portion of the coast of Labrador (observe the extreme significance of this fact; I am most anxious that the stress of it should be appreciated) which had previously been attached to Newfoundland was annexed to the Province of Quebec and the result of that was that the pink oblong passed from the one jurisdiction to the other.

Viscount HALDANE: Do you say that was done by Statute?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord. I will call attention to it. The reason that I am starting with these other illustrations is because I am anxious to present to the Tribunal this broad consideration, that in the absence of some other test, or some defined and artificial limit, you have, as a matter of fact, by the practice which was understood and incorporated in such distributions of territory, really a direction to go to the height of land. I have taken that out of its turn because it is one of the areas which you have to bear in mind. In a very similar way I would invite your Lordships to look at another map in this atlas. For the moment I will deal with this point more briefly. Will you take the first map in the Newfoundland atlas; it is a map of 1656. I have here the original of this map which is on a larger scale: it may save your Lordships' eyesight, because this is very small. There are two or three things on this map. Will you first of all just look at this for a moment. Observe the title: “Le Canada ou Nouvelle France.” Might I call attention to the legend which is very striking as showing the use of this word. He is going to say that different parts of the map are derived from different sources: he is going to say that the northern part comes from one source

21 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

and the southern part comes from another source, and this is the way he says it: "Ce qui est le plus avancé vers le Septentrion est tiré de diverses relations des Anglois, Danois." He is saying: "My picture," as for instance Estotilande which was an old word used for "Labrador"— "is really due to what I have heard from Englishmen and Danes." It is most interesting to notice that there are extraordinary Dutch and Danish words in the northern part of the map. I am told (I do not know it myself) that the Dutch for "Turtle" is "Schild padde," and if your Lordship's eye runs up the coast of Labrador you will see "Schild padde," which is now known as Turtle Island or Bay. Then see how he goes on: "Vers le Midy les Costes de Virginie Nouvelle Suede Nouvelle Pays Bas et Nouvelle Angleterre sont tirées de celles des Anglois, Hollandois," and so on. When I look at that map, I find great difficulty in believing that the legend so written is really distinguishing between the mere margin of the Sea of Virginia and the land of Virginia, the territory of Virginia, which is at the back of the immediate margin of the sea. Does your Lordship see Virginia? It is edged in green near the bottom. Virginia, you will notice, is, by this cartographer "Sanson." A great deal of it may be imagination; I am not saying that the mountains are quite where he puts them. He says, this is the Colony of Virginia, and he takes it back to the height of land between those limits of the sea margin. The British Museum have been, as they always are, most helpful about this, and they have been good enough to let us have for your Lordships' inspection the original of this map which is a little clearer than the reproduction. Might I offer your Lordship the original? (Same handed to their Lordships.)

p. 17

The Lord
Chancellor.

Sir John Simon.

I think your Lordship will see, if you take the original, that what I was submitting is justified as far as the map itself is concerned.

The Colony of Virginia is depicted as running back to the height of land. I rather think it is what was then called New Sweden. I think it is Delaware nowadays. In the same way with New England and what is now called the New York State. Broadly speaking there may conceivably be small exceptions, but it is quite plain that this at any rate is drawn on that principle and I pray in aid the interesting and striking circumstance that in the language of the cartographer at any rate you describe these areas in the south as Les Costes de Virginie, which I venture to think means the tract of land running back from the margin of the sea and understood to run back to the height of land.

21 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I do not quite see how you get your height of land in every case. It looks like it in the case of Virginia, certainly.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Does your Lordship see there is rather

Viscount
Finlay.

a curious example which a little helps me? It is not French Florida, it would be Spanish Florida, on the extreme left-hand bottom corner of the map. He has there got his rivers—you only see their sources, they would run into the Gulf of Mexico if this map continued, and his notion is, apparently, right or wrong, you get your Spanish Settlement which is pushing up as it does from St. Louis and so on, and on the other hand you get French Florida on the Atlantic side. He goes on to say as far as the great

p. 18

Viscount
Haldane.

river of Canada is concerned, or the St. Lawrence and “tous les environs”—these are according to the statements in the French—in the same way, I think I am justified in saying the boundary between what he calls terre de Laborador, or New Britain, because Bretagne in this connection does not mean Brittany in France, but our Britain—the boundary between that which is edged green and Canada, which was French at this time, which was edged yellow, appears to be based upon what I may call the height of land. There are exceptions. I am not wishing to carry the point too far.

Viscount FINLAY: Where, on this map, would the Alleghanys run?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think it would be the western boundary of Virginia. There is there an indication of a continuous mountain range; one must remember always the cartographer possibly gave a little rein to his imagination. He not infrequently depicted mountain ranges very much more like railway lines than they really are in nature.

Viscount HALDANE: You notice in Spanish Florida the boundary line at the top is shown by a number of smaller hills edging up to what is apparently a mountain chain?

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is right.

Viscount HALDANE: That is what you mean by the height of land?

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is what I mean.

Viscount HALDANE: That is the only demonstration of the height of land in the map, because if you come up to Labrador—there is one in Virginia, too—there is not much of the same sort as far as height of land is concerned.

Sir JOHN SIMON: There is not much, but I venture to think there is a little if your Lordship would consider it. I do not want to carry it too far. I think, my Lord Haldane, the indications really do extend to the boundary between Labrador and French Canada. He draws a series of rivers in the area of French Canada which run to the St. Lawrence. On the other hand, he draws some rivers which run to Hudson's Bay, and he draws a line—I agree you cannot assert with perfect assurance he means it as a height of land, but it is entirely consistent with that notion. The same thing is striking in the case of Virginia, and I think also in the case of Nouvelle Angleterre.

Viscount FINLAY: What is the meaning of the term Estotilandé?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is a very interesting enquiry and one upon which a great deal of learning and a labour has been devoted. Some people think that word really was in some way connected with Esquimaux, and it was an attempt to say Esquimaux land: it is a word used in these early maps, more particularly for the more northern part of this peninsula of Labrador.

p. 19

Viscount
Haldane.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount FINLAY: It is a merely a matter of conjecture.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is merely a matter of conjecture. The same point arose as to the word "Labrador" itself: there are all sorts of views, and one possible view is that the word is really Portuguese, and some Esquimaux were taken over by the early Portuguese to Portugal and became labourers, and the land became known as the Labourers' Land. Neither of those two questions is capable of very confident answer. I am not wishing to put more emphasis on this than is right.

Viscount HALDANE: What you say, if I follow, is that "coast" is there used to denote what we should call the basin?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think so, yes. What we shall ultimately have to determine is these two questions: First, what is comprehended in a grant of the coast or all the coasts of Labrador; and, secondly, even though at the time when the grant was made nobody was much concerned with anything except maritime matters, is there any reason for supposing that as between Quebec on the one hand, and Newfoundland on the other, you are left with a No-Mans-Land? Is not the true view that the meaning of the grant is such that it does carry you to the height of land, though, of course, I at once concede what Lord Haldane has been quick to point out, that the purpose to be served at the time when the grant was made was a purpose which was primarily, you may say if you like which was practically exclusively, a purpose closely associated with the sailor and the sea? It does not follow, of course, because the purpose which the grant may have been primarily directed to serve is a purpose which would be effected on a narrow selvedge, therefore, on the true construction of the grant a narrow selvedge is all that was granted; and the whole question here is, not what is the purpose which was primarily the object of the grant, but what is the construction to be applied to the language now. It has turned out in this back country that there is something which is of value. In these cases it is always, of course, the discovery of something of value which raises the trouble. Your Lordships, perhaps, would like to know what the particular thing is in the present instance. It is primarily due to the discovery that spruce-wood is very valuable for the purpose of making pulp, and though if you had asked anybody, whether a Quebecian or a Newfoundlander, a hundred years ago, what was the value of land, say, at the back of Hamilton Inlet, he would have told you, of course, it was nothing at all, no one had ever been there, and it was a perfectly useless place. A very considerable portion of this disputed area has got sprucewood on it.

Sir John Simon.

p. 20

Viscount FINLAY: For making paper?

Sir JOHN SIMON: For making paper. Of course, in the early 'nineties (to go no further back) this began to be appreciated; and since this is public land—most of it has not got a private proprietor—of course, it is a matter of great importance to both of these great authorities, the Dominion of Canada on the one hand, and the Colony of Newfoundland on the other who it is, on the true construction of the documents which will be put before your Lordships, is to have the administration of this area. That is the origin of it.

Now, my Lords. I was going round this part of the world with the object of showing your Lordships first of all the Hudson Bay area, and, secondly, the other ancient British Colonies such as Virginia and New England, and others of the sort, to show how this conception that a unit of territory based upon a certain stretch of sea-board would be a territory that runs back to this natural limit, which is called the height of land, was common. It is, of course, noteworthy that neither in the case of Hudson Bay, nor I think in the case of these other Colonies, Virginia, and so on, was there anything which said so in express terms; it really was what was involved in the language used. Now if we take the area more immediately important, the area of Labrador, the position was this: Newfoundland claims to be, and is very proud to be, the oldest overseas Colony of the British Crown. It is said to have been discovered by Cabot—John Cabot, according to one view, and Sebastian Cabot according to another.

Viscount HALDANE: What was the interval between the Cabots?

Sir JOHN SIMON: They were really working more or less together, that is the reason there is some doubt about it.

Viscount HALDANE: Were they brothers?

Sir JOHN SIMON: No, they were father and son, Jean was the father and Sebastian was the son. They were Venetians, and they sailed from Bristol. They sailed under commission from King Henry VII. I dare say your Lordship will remember, one of the frescoes in the corridor of the Houses of Parliament is a very striking fresco of the grant of the Charter to Cabot by Henry VII.

Viscount HALDANE: What was the date?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I do not think the actual Charter is extant, but the hour and day of the discovery is recorded: it is the 24th of July—I am corrected, it should be the 24th of June, 1497, at 5 o'clock in the morning. That is said to be the moment at which Cabot first sighted it.

Viscount HALDANE: Sebastian?

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Whichever it was.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am much to blame for having said by a slip July, because the 24th June is St. John the Baptist's Day; the Bay was therefore called the Bay of St. John. I do not mean to say that nobody had ever any idea that there was any such place before, it goes back far before that, in a fragmentary and almost legendary history. For instance, as early as the year 1500, a Portuguese, his name I think was Gaspard de Corte Real, was supposed to have discovered it, whatever that means, for the King of Portugal.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: 1500?

Sir JOHN SIMON: 1500.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: That was not before.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It was just after, quite right.

Viscount HALDANE: All he did was to discover it. Did the King make any grant at the time?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Not for a little time. I am going to call attention to the nature of the settlement. In 1583 rather a famous and rather a tragic incident occurred. That was the year when Sir Humphrey Gilbert, the famous Elizabethan explorer, and I may say buccaneer, took possession of some portion of it for Queen Elizabeth. You may remember the very tragic story because Gilbert was drowned (I think his ship was called the "Squirrill") on the way home. In 1608 a man called Guy, also of Bristol, first colonised the Bay of Conception, which is one of the bays there; at any rate, it is a very very ancient British interest, the interest in Newfoundland. At the same time, on the American Continent, you had discovery going on mostly on the part of the French. For instance, the actual discovery of this immense river, the St. Lawrence, is usually attributed to Jacques Cartier, whose statue one has seen in various places in Canada. Jacques Cartier discovered the St. Lawrence in the early part of the sixteenth century, between 1524 and 1534. The gradual pushing in of the enterprising French explorers and traders and captains, of course, went on all through that century, and, as Lord Haldane observed, and, of course, most justly, in the early days especially when the geography of the whole region was of a nebulous character, you cannot very well, or at any rate, they could not at the moment, have drawn a very definite boundary, because very few people had a correct notion really of the lie of the land, apart from all other difficulties. I am anxious not to waste any time unnecessarily in this case on matters which do not matter. I do not myself really think that the very early history is important.

Sir John Simon.

p. 22

It is important, of course, to appreciate that the Island of Newfoundland was British, and was being administered by Governors—we will look at the terms of their Commission in a moment—before the Treaty of Paris, but when you get the French Empire in North America withdrawn, and the immense concessions which then took place, a new problem arises which we now have to deal with.

Viscount HALDANE: You must remember the French obtained very very important rights long after that, long after the date you just referred to, the date of the Treaty of Paris.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Your Lordship means the fishing rights?

Viscount HALDANE: Yes, the fishing rights. It was a good deal more than that, they kept ships there, etcetera.

Sir JOHN SIMON: They had a right to land and dry their fish. There was a good deal of most lucrative controversy on subjects of that sort for a long time.

The point I have reached is this, I go off now to Hudson Bay and show the Board as well as I can how in the common understanding the Hudson's Bay Company, when it got Hudson's Bay, to use a convenient expression, was really becoming the authority that administered and almost the Sovereign of this great horse-shoe, which is limited by the height of land.

On the other hand, you have the discovery of the St. Lawrence by the French, you had the pushing up of the French north of the St. Lawrence, and you had collisions and constant collisions between the Hudson's Bay Company on the one hand and these enterprising French explorers on the other. If I may give one example, which it is useful just to bear in mind as a land mark, as early as 1627, which is before the Hudson's Bay Company's Charter, Cardinal Richelieu on behalf of Louis XIV. had established by Decree a French Company which was called the Compagnie de Canada.

Viscount HALDANE: Was that the great Cardinal Richelieu?

21 Oct., 1926.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord the Company is sometimes called I think the Compagnie des Cent Associés, because there were a hundred of them associated together for settling New France as it was called, and that or other French Companies or Quebec Companies were most vigorously pushing north, and there were a series of collisions, as it were, between the parties; sometimes the British succeeded, sometimes the French succeeded. Consequently, you get in two Treaties before the victory of Wolfe, references to the adjustment of the boundary between Britain and France; one is the Treaty of Ryswick, which was in the year 1697, the other a more important one, in the Treaty of Utrecht, just at the end of the reign of Queen Anne, 1713.

Sir John Simon.

Would your Lordships just turn in this volume, the red volume, to page 328, where you will see that amongst other provisions of the

p. 23

Viscount Finlay.

Treaty of 1697, there is a stipulation that: “The Most Christian King”—that means the King of France—“shall restore to the said King of Great Britain all countries, islands, forts and colonies wheresoever situated which the English did possess before the Declaration of this present war, and in like manner the King of Great Britain shall restore to the Most Christian King all countries, islands, forts and colonies wheresoever situated which the French did possess before the said Declaration of War.” Then in the next paragraph, paragraph 8, there is a reference to Hudson's Bay. “Commissioners shall be appointed on both sides to examine and determine the rights and pretensions which either of the said Kings hath to the places situated in Hudson's Bay, but the possession of those places which were taken by the French during the peace that preceded this present War and were retaken by the English during this War shall be left to the French by virtue of the foregoing Article.” Then, my Lord, the same paragraph at line 31 of that page: “And to this end the Commissioners so appointed”—you see Commissioners referred to just above—“shall within the space of three months from the time of the ratification of the present Treaty meet in the City of London and within six months to be reckoned from their first meeting shall determine all differences and disputes which may arise concerning this matter.” The idea was, therefore, that there would be Commissioners appointed who, amongst other things, would determine what were the respective stretches of land belonging on the one hand to Great Britain and on the other hand to France in this Hudson's Bay region.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount FINLAY: I see in your Map No. 1 in that atlas which you referred to, you have got the Mer Christiane. Is that name anything to do with the title?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I do not think so.

Viscount FINLAY: How came that name to be put in?

21 Oct., 1926.
Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I have noticed it on two or three of the maps. I have no doubt I can find out, but I do not think it had any such connection. I will ascertain and let your Lordship know. Your Lordship sees the idea; as the result of the Treaty in 1697 there were Commissioners who were going to find out the boundary.

Viscount FINLAY: That was only up in Hudson's Bay?

Sir JOHN SIMON: That was only up in Hudson's Bay, the district not very far from where I am interested. Under that Treaty, in spite of these precise stipulations about three and six months I do not understand, and I think it is not suggested, anything was done, but if your Lordship will take the Treaty of Utrecht on the opposite page, on page 329, you get a very similar provision, and you do get something done; moreover, the language which is used is of you interest I think.

Viscount
Haldane.

Sir John Simon.

“The said most Christian King shall restore to the kingdom and Queen of Great Britain”—that is Queen Anne—“to be possessed in full right for ever, the Bay and Streights of Hudson, together with all lands, seas, seacoasts, rivers and places situate in the said Bay and Streights.” There is no boundary by latitude and longitude, it is interesting to see what people thought that meant—“and which belong thereunto, no tracts of land or of sea being excepted, which are at present possessed by the subjects of France.” Then there are some interesting provisions about returning munitions of war and things of that sort. Then at line 19: “It is however provided, that it may be entirely free for the Company of Quebec, and all other the subjects of the Most Christian King whatsoever, to go by land or by sea, whithersoever they please out of the lands of the said Bay, together with all their goods, merchandises, arms and effects of what nature and condition soever, except such things as are above reserved in this article.” The Company of Quebec, my Lord, the Compagnie de Quebec, was a Company rather like La Compagnie de Canada which Richelieu established; I think it was a subordinate Company which, as a matter of fact, was due to a creation by the Intendant of Quebec, but it was a French trading corporation which was one of those French enterprises which had pushed north and had actually established itself at certain posts which were in Hudson's Bay territory.

Viscount HALDANE: At this time Canada or Acadie was just a name for the whole of the French territory.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is right.

Viscount HALDANE: And Hudson's Bay practically was the whole of the British territory.

Sir JOHN SIMON: With the exception, of course, of Newfoundland, leaving out Newfoundland.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: Yes.

Sir JOHN SIMON: And to a certain extent some area which is difficult to define in Labrador, that is entirely correct.

Viscount HALDANE: Labrador has not become prominent.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Not in the least prominent, it was known, and there were certain things done. Your Lordship sees it is important for my argument that one should pick out the words as I go along. You notice that this Company of Quebec is, of course, given liberty to withdraw out of the lands of the said "Bay"—they actually call the whole area really Hudson's Bay—and in the same way, of course, in the third line of the extract I have just been calling attention to, you get a reference to the land, seas, seacoasts, rivers and places situate in the said Bay and Streights which belong thereunto."

Now, of course, the question again arose how far back does that extend, and you will see that the article concludes by saying at line 24: "But it is agreed on both sides to determine within a year, by Commissarys to be forthwith named by each party, the limits which are to be fixed by the said Bay of Hudson and the places appertaining to the French, which limits both the British and French subjects shall be wholly forbid to pass over or thereby to go to either by sea or by land. The same Commissarys shall also have orders to describe and settle in like manner the boundaries between the other British and French Colonies in those parts."

Viscount HALDANE: It rather suggests to me that there were no defined boundaries.

Sir JOHN SIMON: There is not the slightest doubt there were lots of cases where both sovereigns claimed the same place. Of course there were. The interesting thing is that something was done under that, and in some of these maps in the early places in the Newfoundland Atlas, the one you have already opened, you will find traced a line which is the line which was laid down by the British Commissioners. As far as we have been able to discover, it does not appear that the French Commissioners and the British Commissioners actually agreed on the line, but the importance of it for my purpose is that it at any rate shows what was the view that was taken on the British side, and to give your Lordships one example of that, many might be given, if you will just again open this Newfoundland Atlas and take one example only. Will you take No. 14?

Please do not trouble about the other things which you see here, but for the moment observe that upon that, and you will find upon many other maps, you get it indicated. It is just at the top of the various colours, and where you are approaching the white. You see Hudson's Bay, and then do your Lordships see the words: "Southern Boundary of Hudson's Bay Company's territories settled by commissaries after Treaty of Utrecht?"

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: I do not see "settled by," but I see the "Southern Boundary."

Sir JOHN SIMON: If you will just look a little bit to the right, you will see the words "settled by," and then you get "commissaries after the Treaty of Utrecht."

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: Yes, and it runs right up to the yellow boundary of Labrador.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, and indeed across it. I only indicate that, as showing that that, which occurs on quite a lot of maps, was a matter of record with the British commissaries at any rate. It is not quite certain that the French agreed. I am not asking for the moment that this map should be examined from any other point of view. There are several things that we shall have to look at in a further connection, but all that I am saying is that in the Treaty of Utrecht, there being this possible question of debate, there you get another illustration of the fact that in the early part of the eighteenth century, if you had to determine to what line to run back for the purpose of arriving at the grant of a bay or a piece of coast, that is the way in which it is done.

Now, with those preliminaries, which have rather departed from my strict chronological formula—

The LORD CHANCELLOR: The date of this map is 1763.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord. I am just coming to that date.

Viscount HALDANE: Just at the time when there was great excitement.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am just coming to the year 1763. I want your Lordships to take three dates in 1763, and to examine the documents which record what was decided on those three dates. The first date is the date of the Treaty itself. The Treaty of Paris was signed on the 10th February, 1763, and your Lordships will find the relevant extracts from the Treaty in the first volume at page 330. It is printed both in the French text at page 330 and in the English text at page 334; and I will take the English text on page 334 for convenience. There is no controversy about it.

Your Lordship has got to see what it is which as the result of the definite Treaty of Paris of the 10th February, 1763, France ceded to Britain. General Wolfe had led his famous assault, he had landed on the spit of land called the Anse de Foulon, just above Quebec, very late in the night of the 12th September. His 4,800 men, which is all that he had, on the Plains of Abraham, had defeated Montcalm at dawn; and soon after, on the 13th September, Wolfe, of course, and Montcalm too, had both been killed in the battle; or at least Montcalm had died of wounds incurred in the battle, immediately afterwards. Brigadier General Murray, who was one of his Brigadiers—another one being my learned friend's ancestor, Brigadier General Monckton—had assumed command in the now conquered City of Quebec. Between 1759 and 1763, General Murray administered the area under more or less temporary provisions. Now the seven years war was over, the policy of Pitt was completely successful, and here you have the definitive treaty of peace. “The Definitive Treaty of Peace and Friendship between His Britannick Majesty, the Most Christian King, and the King of Spain”—the King of Spain was always called in those days His Most Catholic Majesty, so that there you have the three—“Concluded at Paris the 10th day of February 1763. To which the King of Portugal acceded the same day.”

p. 27

Now the parts that matter are these: paragraph 4, at the bottom of page 334, says this: “His Most Christian Majesty renounces all pretensions he has heretofore formed or might have formed to Nova Scotia or Acadia in all its parts, and guarantees the whole of it, and with all its dependencies, to the King of Great Britain: Moreover, His Most Christian Majesty cedes and guarantees to his said Britannic Majesty, in full right, Canada, with all its dependencies, as well as the island of Cape Breton, and all the other islands and coasts”—“islands and coasts,” your Lordship will observe—“in the gulph and river of St. Lawrence”—that did not mean he was ceding a mathematical line, or, I should have thought, a strip a mile wide, but it meant an area bounded on the sea by the seashore.

Viscount HALDANE: Was there any definition of Acadia in the Treaty?

Sir JOHN SIMON: No, my Lord, but Acadia itself was a name which was used rather at that period, rather for what I should now call the maritime provinces of Canada than for the area around Quebec.

Viscount HALDANE: It was also used as a synonymous term for Canada?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes; you would sometimes have documents that talked about “Acadia or Canada,” but if you look at the old maps, and especially the French ones, you will find that Acadia is the term which is used for the maritime provinces, as we should call them now.

Viscount HALDANE: This Treaty was made in Paris. Sir George Murray remained on and became Lieutenant-Governor until he was succeeded by Sir Guy Carleton.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am going to call attention to a very important illustrative document in the case. The language of the Commission which was given to Sir Guy Carleton, both when he was first appointed and when there was a new appointment given by which his administration was changed, is a very important point for the Newfoundland case, I think; but we have not reached that yet.

His Most Christian Majesty the King of France cedes all these things, and “all other islands and coasts in the gulph and river of St. Lawrence, and in general, every thing that spends on the said countries, lands, islands, and coasts, with the sovereignty, property, possession, and all rights acquired by treaty, or otherwise, which the Most Christian King and the Crown of France have had till now over the said countries, lands, islands, places, coasts, and their inhabitants, so that the Most Christian King cedes and makes over the whole to the said King, and to the Crown of Great Britain, and that in the most ample manner and form, without restriction, and without any liberty to depart from the said cession and guaranty under any pretence.”

The Lord
Chancellor.

Viscount FINLAY: You are reading from the English version

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, I was, but it is just the same.

Viscount FINLAY: Were three two originals?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am not quite sure whether there was a stipulation whether either of them was the original; but the Treaty is to be found in a collection of Treaties, both in English and in French, and there is no controversy as to any difference of languages. Page 334 of Volume 1. gives you the English version, and it is paragraph IV. of that, beginning at the bottom of the page. And perhaps your Lordship will note, although I agree that it is not very important, that the word “coasts” is used in the bottom line of that page. It is not very important, and I am not laying any stress upon it.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: This is a translation. It is “cotes” in the French.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, but it was both in English and in French at this time. I am sure we shall satisfy your Lordships about that. Then he surrenders the whole of the French Enipire, and then there is a stipulation, which your Lordship will remember, I have no doubt, to protect the Roman Catholics who were thus passing under the jurisdiction of Britain. Then you will find that there is an exception.

I think that Lord Haldane would probably be interested in paragraph V, in view of something that he said a few minutes ago. You will see that it speaks of the “coasts of Nova Scotia or Acadia,” just as I said a moment ago. It begins by stipulating that “The subjects of France shall have the liberty of fishing and drying on a part of the coasts of the island of Newfoundland,” and so on. Then it says: “And his Britannick Majesty consents to leave to the subjects of the most Christian King the liberty of fishing in the gulph of St.

Lawrence, on condition that the subjects of France do not exercise the said fishery but at the distance of three leagues from all the coasts belonging to Great Britain, as well those of the continents as those of the islands situated in the said gulph of St. Lawrence.” There was a lot of controversy about that which does not matter now. Then at the end of paragraph V it says: “and the fishery on the coasts of Nova Scotia or Acadia.”

Viscount HALDANE: What was Nova Scotia then?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It was what it is now, with New Brunswick added. “The fishery on the coasts of Nova Scotia or Acadia, and everywhere else out of the said gulf, shall remain on the foot of former Treaties.”

Then, overleaf, at page 336, your Lordships will see the Mississippi mentioned. It is in paragraph VII, which says: “In order to re-establish peace on solid and durable foundations, and to remove for ever all subject of dispute with regard to the limits of the British and French territories on the continent of America: it is agreed, that, for the future, the confines between the dominions of his Britannick Majesty and those of His Most Christian Majesty, in that part of the world, shall be fixed irrevocably by a line drawn along the middle of the River Mississippi, from its source to the River Iberville, and from thence, by a line drawn along the middle of this river, and the lakes of Maurepas and Pontchartrain to the sea; and for this purpose, the Most Christian King cedes in full right, and guarantees to his Britannick Majesty, the river and port of Mobile”—that is away down in Florida, as your Lordships will remember—“and every thing which he possesses, or ought to possess, on the left side of the river Mississipil except the town of New Orleans.” Your Lordships may take it, I think, because I have checked it quite carefully, and it is not a matter of great controversy, that the effect of it was that except for the two little islands of St. Pierre and Micquelon the French abandoned altogether the territories which lie to the east of the great river Mississippi, and any rights which they had left were to the west of that river.

p. 29

Viscount HALDANE: Where does the Mississippi rise?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It rises quite close to the Great Lakes of Canada, but of course, rather to the west of them. As a matter of fact, at the time when this Treaty was made, they did not know exactly where the Mississippi did rise, and I rather think that they thought that if you went up the Mississippi right to the top, you would have reached the height of land, and you had there begun to get into the Hudson's Bay territory. That was their idea, as I think you will see from the documents. The Mississippi does, as a matter of fact, rise to the west of Lake Superior.

Viscount HALDANE: Somewhere near Buffalo.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Further to the west than that, my Lord. It really rises somewhere below Winnipeg.

Viscount FINLAY: To the west of the Great Lakes?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, and to the south of Winnipeg.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Map No. 14 shows it.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, it does; I am much obliged.

Now your Lordships see what was the trouble which the British authorities had to tackle. They had got there a consolidated empire. It was no very important concern of theirs to decide exactly how much of it was British before, and how much of it became British only as a result of cession; but if you put the two things together, they had got the whole of it. Therefore, the next thing that happened was that they had to decide what was to be done, and now your Lordships will find that there follow—and I will take them strict chronological order—two other important dates in 1763. The first of them is a document of the 25th April, 1763, after the Treaty. That is to be found on page 149 of the first volume of the Appendix, and it is the Commission of the Governor of Newfoundland, Governor Graves. I will tell your Lordships at once what the other document is, as a matter of convenience. The other document, which is also in the year 1763, is a document which came into existence some months later, a document of the 7th October, 1763.

p. 30

Viscount HALDANE: In which book shall we find this?

Sir JOHN SIMON: They are both in the first volume, and that one is at page 153.

I therefore desire to call your Lordships' attention in due chronological order to the Commission, which is on page 149, and to the proclamation which is on page 153, and I will take the Commission first. It is a very important document in our case. It is headed: "Commission passed under the Great Seal of Great Britain appointing Thomas Graves to be Governor and Commander in Chief in and over the Island of Newfoundland, the Coast of Labrador, etc."

Now let me explain what had been the position as far as Newfoundland and Governor Graves were concerned down to this point. Graves was already the Governor of the Island of Newfoundland. He was already that; he had got a commission for that.

21 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: Was he a layman, or was he an Admiral?

Sir JOHN SIMON: He was an Admiral, my Lord; and you will find that these people are all Admirals. Your Lordship will not understand me to be avoiding this point at all; it is perfectly clear that the further object which the authorities had in mind, both in connection with the island of Newfoundland and in connection with the coast of Labrador, was an object which one may call maritime. There is not the slightest doubt about that. They appointed Admirals, and they were careful to select the man who was Governor of Newfoundland, and they secured at the same time that he was Commander in Chief of the Fleet on the Newfoundland station. They regarded Newfoundland as a nursery for seamen. They discouraged settlements as much as they could, because the experience of going backwards and forwards made British sailors experienced. They laid down rules that whenever the fleet went out they must take with them what was called "one green man in five." That does not refer to the uncomfortable experiences of crossing the Atlantic, but it means that they had to take someone who had not been there before; and there is not the slightest doubt that the purpose which was in the minds of those who made these arrangements was primarily a purpose which you may term maritime. I am not disputing that. Not only that, but at this time and for long afterwards the value of spruce at the top of Hamilton Inlet had never occurred to anybody. It is not until people have discovered that you can make paper out of pulp, and pulp out of spruce, that anybody begins to take acute interest in this.

Viscount HALDANE: There was the fishing, too. How was it done? The fish were caught; and were they dried?

Sir JOHN SIMON: There were several fisheries. The most important, although not the only one, was a cod fishery; and generally speaking with regard to that there was the process which your Lordship described, which involved landing, and having stages to dry the cod on, and so on. But in addition to that, there was an important salmon fishery.

Viscount HALDANE: In those days?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord. You will find references to it, and you will come to it shortly. There was also a fishery of what was called the sea cow, which I think means the walrus, and there was a big whale fishery. So that although these things do not all bulk as important at the same moment, it is quite inaccurate to treat the fisheries associated with Newfoundland as being limited to cod.

Viscount HALDANE: If there was salmon fishery, the salmon would go up the river at certain seasons.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Certainly, my Lord.

Viscount HALDANE: And they would have to be caught up there.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am going to show your Lordship in time how the Courts of Newfoundland have without protest dealt with complaints as to the obstruction of the salmon fishery at the mouth of the river, which is 120 miles back from the point which the Dominion of Canada says is the end of our property. So that there is plenty to show that at any rate we have conceived that we could go back. However, here is the Proclamation. As I have said, Thomas Graves, who was a sailor, a captain, was already Governor of Newfoundland; but down to this moment his Commission was, of course, limited to the Island of Newfoundland. Now your Lordship sees, the definitive Treaty of Paris having been signed, and the whole thing having now to be surveyed, one of the things done in the Treaty is that there is an area—I am not saying for the moment how big or how small it is, or how far it goes back—which is put under the Government of Newfoundland, and that is the origin of Newfoundland's interest in the mainland of Labrador.

Perhaps your Lordships will look at the words of the Treaty. It is on page 149 of the first volume, and the whole of it is important: "George the Third," and so on, "to our Trusty and Well beloved Thomas Graves, Esquire, Greeting." Then it begins with a recital which we must read, because it is the most convenient way of seeing what was the extent of the earlier Commission of Thomas Graves. It says: "Whereas we did by our Letters Patent under Our Great Seal of Great Britain, bearing date at Westminster the twenty-ninth day of May in the first year of Our Reign"—that was in 1760, and therefore was before the Treaty of Paris; until you had the Treaty of Paris you could not do more—"appoint you the said Thomas Graves to be our Governor and Commander in Chief in and over Our Island of Newfoundland in America.

Our ffort and Garrison at Placentia"—that is at Newfoundland—"and all other fforts and Garrisons Erected and to be Erected in that Island for and during Our Will and Pleasure as by the said Letters Patent Relation being thereunto had may more fully and at large appear. Now know You that Wee have revoked determined and made void and by these Presents Do revoke determine and make void the said Recited Letters Patent and every clause Article and Thing therein contained. And Wee reposing especial Trust and Confidence in the Prudence Courage and Loyalty of you the said Thomas Graves of our especial Grace certain knowledge and meer Motion have thought fit to constitute and appoint and by these presents do constitute and appoint you the said Thomas Graves to be our Governor and Commander in Chief in and over our said Island of Newfoundland and all the Coasts of Labrador."

Now if I may present to your Lordships this case under the attractive guise of a short point, the short point of this whole controversy is: What extent of territory is to be understood as indicated by "All the coasts of Labrador"?

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: "From the entrance"—

Sir JOHN SIMON: These are mere lateral limits. I will com of them presently, but I want your Lordships for the moment to appreciate how we put our case. We say that just as "the coasts to Virginia" means a particular length of the Atlantic seaboard with the land associated therewith back to the height of land; just as "the area of the Hudson's Bay Company" is not Hudson's Bay, but goes back to the height of land which is drained into Hudson's Bay; just as you find—and I am going to give you many more illustrations both before and immediately afterwards—just as you find in other cases that this is the natural or logical or scientific boundary, and it is the only one which nature will give you, so we say here that when the grant was of "all the coasts of Labrador between two limits, it was not what our friends from Canada are now saying, very late in the day and in striking contradiction with the whole series of atlases and maps which have been put forward. It does not mean strip or selvedge the width of a piece of tape, or a mile wide, but it means something which has got a definite connotation without taking any artificial measurement, namely, the area which is indicated as running up to the height of land. That is the point of this case.

Viscount HALDANE: That is to say, he was invested with a commission without any definite boundaries at all. The whole thing was so vague at that time. Canada was vague, Acadia was vague, Hudson's Bay was vague.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, that is quite true; but this is at once the difficulty, and (as perhaps your Lordship may think) the attractiveness of the conundrum. I am only stating to your Lordship the suggestion that I most respectfully make to the Tribunal. There will be very great difficulty, I think, in anybody, whether on the other side or elsewhere, suggesting any other limit which is not vague.

Viscount HALDANE: You have not lessened our difficulty by telling us very emphatically that we are here not to draw a boundary, but to interpret an existing boundary.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am bound to tell your Lordships so. Although I am sure, with the authority of Colony of Newfoundland, I would most gladly put this matter in your Lordships' hands for other and perhaps more summary treatment, it is not what you are told to do; so that we must do the same thing as well as we can.

Now that is the point of this case. We have to trace it rather carefully through the statutory history, and the history of the Orders in Council. You will find that this area, whatever this area is—let us call it X for the moment—becomes at one time the Dependency of Newfoundland, becomes at another time added to the Province of Quebec, becomes at a third time split into two parts—the pink part, your Lordship appreciates, and the rest, so that the pink part is given to Quebec while the rest remains with Newfoundland; and all the way through you will find one has to go back to this expression: “all the coasts of Labrador.”

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: It does not stop there, does it?

21 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: No, my Lord, you are quite right. It is perhaps dangerous to go through the rhetorical process of pausing there for a moment, because the moment may be rather unduly extended. It goes on: "All the coasts of Labrador from the entrance of Hudson's Streights to the River Saint Johns which discharges itself into the Sea nearly opposite the West End of the Island of Anticosti including that Island with any other small Islands on the said Coast of Labrador and also the Islands of Madelaines in the Gulf of Saint Lawrence as also of all Our fforts and Garrisons Erected and Established or that shall be Erected and Established in our said Islands of Newfoundland Anticosti and Madelaine."

p. 34

Now, my Lords, I am most anxious to call attention to the significance of these lateral termini, because this point, of course, at once emerges: ever since 1670 the Hudson Bay Company had had an area, which, you will remember, by the language of its Charter, is an area "in the Bay of Hudson" and so on, lying within the entrance of Hudson's Streights. Therefore, when this Commission is drawn up, and it is desired to make provision for the territories we are now concerned with, in the light of the Treaty of Paris, it is not unnatural that the extension of the jurisdiction of the Governor of Newfoundland at any rate should not trench upon Hudson Bay territory, and your Lordships will notice, and I think it is well worth noting, that if you take page 149, line 31, you find the expression, "from the Entrance of Hudsons Streights," whereas if you will remind yourselves of the Charter of the Hudson Bay Company, which is in Volume 2 at page 367, you will find that the lateral limit from which this begins is, "The entrance of the Straits, commonly called Hudson's Straits." Taking this rather convenient little map, which I see Lord Finlay and others of your Lordships have before you, that is to say it is Cape Chidley. Now may I ask your Lordships to observe the extreme significance of that. Here were the British authorities, who knew perfectly well that this powerful Corporation, represented by distinguished citizens of London, and distinguished noblemen, had got already an area carved out which was theirs. When therefore you are now going to distribute these additional areas, and you begin by distributing "All the coasts of Labrador" to Newfoundland, you are careful to make the two areas fit, and at any rate get a common terminus a quo. Now, my Lords, this question then at once arises: Is it really to be supposed that the boundary of the Hudson Bay territory, starting from Cape Chidley and running on a certain course inland, is an Eastern boundary which is not coincident with the Western boundary of the other? Of course, if one is prepared to accept the test that a grant of coast in circumstances like these means that you run back from the margin of the sea to the point of the divide, the problem is solved, and you at once get, by a natural scientific formula, or provision, in theory, though possibly not at the moment located on the ground, a distribution of this area as between these two authorities; but on the other hand, if we are really to pay attention to the proposition that "All the coasts of Labrador" in this document meant something a mile wide or half a mile wide—I think the Dominion in their case suggests they have been a little generous about their mile—what an extraordinary thing! The first consideration on the construction of this document which suggests itself is this—it is so plain that the people who drew this document at any rate were careful at the one end to start at a place which really was prescribed for them by the limits of the Hudson Bay territory. This is a little bit confirmed by a further factor which I might mention now, which is, that in some later version of the defining of the area you get the words "Cape Chidley" used. Cape Chidley is, in fact, the prominent point here, which is, as it were, the spike of the headland. The other limit you will notice in this document is the River St. John, or St. Johns. Whatever the reason may be, that particular sort of appellation is constantly used in this part of the world ; and one of the things one has to remember in this case is, for example, that the River St. John is nowhere near another land mark which is referred to, the Lake St. John. They both come in in a definition which we shall reach very shortly; but they are not close to one another at all. You will find both on the little map. You will find that the Lake St. John is at the head of the Saguenay River; the River St. John, on the other hand, is a river which comes out into the Gulf of St. Lawrence at the point where the pink area meets the blue area.

The Lord
Chancellor.

p. 35

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Just opposite the West end of Anticosti Island?

Viscount
Haldane.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes. my Lord; indeed it is so described in a document we are coming to in a moment. Now for a moment would you please consider also whether there is not any significance in the choice of a river as the boundary of the coasts of Labrador, with those who drew up the Commission of Thomas Graves, selected as the other terminus. Of course, if the Colony of Newfoundland is right in its contention, that whatever may have been the immediate purpose to be served, and I quite agree that was a mere maritime thing, this language of grant on its true interpretation would really embrace an area of territory which has such an extent of seaboard, and then runs up to a point, of course the choice of a river, which naturally will carry you up to the height of land, is quite appropriate. I do not mean to say that that is at all a conclusive argument.

Viscount HALDANE: Where do you say that Labrador stops, at the West of St. John?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I do not say so, but what I say is that I am given the coasts of Labrador so far as those coasts lie between the entrance to Hudson Bay and the River St. John. That is the language of the grant.

Viscount HALDANE: Let us look at the language of the grant.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is page 149. You will see the new territory, at line 30, is, "Our said Island of Newfoundland and all the Coasts of Labrador from the Entrance of Hudson's Streights to the River St. Johns which discharges itself into the Sea nearly opposite the West End of the Island of Anticosti." There is no doubt at all that Labrador is the peninsula and there is no doubt at all (I shall come to documents in a moment which show it) that you might quite properly speak, as Lord Haldane suggested, of the Coasts of Labrador as running more to the West than the River St. John. The point is that there being coasts of Labrador, whatever that expression may mean, that is to say, there being areas which drain into the sea, and the water flowing open, which will enter the sea at various points along the margin of the sea, you get a definition of an area prescribed, and definable with the help of geography and survey, once you are told that all the heights, so far as Newfoundland gets them, start at the point where the Hudson Bay territory begins, and ends at the point where the River St. John runs down to the sea.

Viscount HALDANE: Is not that a little difficult; you are claiming a good deal West of that; you are claiming the whole of the upper reaches of the Hamilton River which are within this, and the River St. John runs up no doubt to the height of land, but does the height of land go round?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, if it does not, then my claim must, on the ground, be amended; but your Lordship appreciates that my claim is a claim in principle to the height of land.

Viscount HALDANE: You say the height of land goes round up to this point here. (Indicating.)

Sir JOHN SIMON: It does, my Lord.

Viscount HALDANE: It goes right round, and then comes up.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes; I am going to show your Lordships a whole series of maps, many of them contemporary or very shortly after this point which actually mark a division of this sort.

Viscount HALDANE: Then you put your case this way: boundary up the River St. John and then round, including the height of land, to Cape Chidley.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, subject to this, which is a point we have not yet reached, that at a later stage in the history there was taken away from Newfoundland and added to the Province of Quebec, an area which is there, coloured pink, and it was taken away under the description of, "Part of the Coast of Labrador hitherto administered by or annexed to Newfoundland"; and, of course, when I come to it, I am going to argue that the way in which that excision of the oblong was expressed, and the area which was then added to Quebec under the denomination of "The Coast of Labrador," is a very strong indication that "Coast" is not this narrow selvedge, because that pink piece runs 40 miles inland at its Eastern edge. You notice there there is a place called Blanc

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Salbon and there is a line runs up that is 40 miles, consequently when you come to the Western side of the oblong, you have got a depth of something like 120 miles. That, of course, will be a consideration which comes later. There is the first of these two documents, and our submission about that document is that, upon its true construction when you have regard to the facts as they were at the time (perhaps one should rather say the facts as they were conceived to be at the time)—that is not the grant of a mere selvedge or lisière, but “all the coasts of Labrador,” as between these two lateral limits, does mean an area which runs up to the height of land, and that is the question.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: If this is a question of the construction of the word “coasts” in this document alone, there is one difficulty, is not there, that reference is made to the Islands on the Coast of Labrador?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I noticed that, and it is very important. Whatever may be the difficulties, this contrast is at any rate plain: you sometimes use the word “Coast” as it were from the sea, and you sometimes rise it from the land. A man will say, “I went cruising this summer in my yacht on the Coast of Cornwall,” by which he does not mean, if he was a reasonably successful navigator, that his ship reached the dry land, but he means that he has been skirting the margin of the County.

Viscount FINLAY: I think, in your sense of the word, it is particularly in the plural, “Coasts.”

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think so, too. It is useful to remember that (I do not think it is too far fetched at all) in the Authorised translation of the Bible you get phrases like “The Coasts of Tyre and Sidon”; you get, in the Acts of the Apostles, the account of how St. Paul, and, if I remember rightly, St. Barnabas, when they were in the interior of Asia Minor, were “thrown out of those coasts”; and the word “Coasts” in the English of that period, and there were many illustrations of it, was not, I apprehend, at all limited to this frontage, such as is suggested; and once again one comes back to this difficulty, which your Lordships, I am quite sure, will in due course be impressed with, and have to deal with; after all, what is the alternative? If your Lordships were here commissioned in order to draw such line as occurs to you to be good, or to give such depth as you think to be reasonable or prudent, or what not, that is another matter; but your Lordships are not asked to do anything of the kind; and what is the alternative? On what conceivable principle of construction can it be said that, whatever "all the Coasts of Labrador" means or does not mean, it can plausibly be said to mean something you get by applying a measure of a mile back from the sea shore? You get at once into a difficulty which is the more striking because they already knew that this was part of the world where there were deep indentations from the sea. You get into the further difficulty that, in that event, is it suggested that this mere strip skips from headland to headland, or is it suggested that it goes round as a map-maker might take his brush and trace every indentation of the coast?

Sir John Simon.

p. 38

That is to say, if I may for the moment remind Lord Finlay of another controversy. This is not a case like the Alaska case, where, at any rate, a large part of the outline may perhaps be supposed to have been so ambiguous that language may have been used which did not fit it. The people who made this bargain, and talk about "the coasts," knew perfectly well that along the boundaries of the sea there were deep inlets, because Davis, one of the famous early navigators in that region, had been into this part of the world, and there is on record in map after map, the fact that, on this very part of the coast, there was an inlet so deep that Davis, or somebody who was with him, had sailed up it and into it for 30 leagues, and had not reached the end of it; and one of the things which it was most important to ascertain was how far it went.

Viscount FINLAY: Of course, a line has no width.

Sir JOHN SIMON: A line has no width at all, and you must get the width somehow, otherwise it is length without breadth. While I am mentioning Davis, perhaps your Lordships would be interested to know that this very Governor Graves, at the same time as he got this Commission, was in terms, instructed that he was to make special investigation to discover how deep this particular inlet ran in.

Viscount HALDANE: Where is that?

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is to be found in the contemporary Instructions under the Sign Manual, which your Lordships will find in Volume 2 at page 393. May I just explain the relation of these documents. Your Lordships are familiar with the fact that the Governor General, or the Governor, of one of His Majesty's Dominions receives both his Commission under the Great Seal, which, of course, is the root of his Authority, and also receives Instructions under the Sign Manual, which are more detailed directions; and that practice prevails until to-day; would your Lordships observe paragraph 7; this is the contemporaneous Instruction to the same man: "It is our further Will and Pleasure that you do, from time to time, as the nature of the Service will allow, visit all the Coasts and Harbours of the said Islands and Territories under your Government, in order to inspect and examine the State and Condition of the Fisheries, which are or may be carried on upon the said Coasts and Islands; You shall also use your best Endeavours to procure accurate Draughts or Maps of the several Harbours, Bays and Coasts of Newfoundland, and the other Islands and Territories under your Government, and you are more particularly to direct the Officer of any Vessel under your Command, which may be appointed to visit that part of the Coast of Labradore which lyes between Hudson's Streights and the Streights of Bellisle," that is to say, the Northern half of what you may call his area, "to search and explore the great Inlet commonly known by the name of Davis's Inlet, in order to discover, whether the same has or has not any passage to Hudson's, Bay, or any other inclosed Sea."

p. 39

Viscount HALDANE: Is that the opening of the Hamilton River?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord.

Viscount FINLAY: Davis's Inlet is what is commonly called Davis's Strait, is it not?

Sir JOHN SIMON: No. My answer to Lord Haldane was correct, though one of my learned friends I think thought it was misleading. In fact, they had not got the geography accurate, but the thing they were referring to when they said there was this penetration, which you went into as much as 30 leagues, but never got to the end, was the thing which is called Hamilton Inlet. It is very useful to do this at once; would your Lordships mind turning once again to the Newfoundland Atlas and looking at Map No. 9. Of course, they did not get the geography right in their map, but you can see what they meant. Map No. 9 is a very interesting map indeed; it was drawn up by an Englishman of the name of John Senex in 1710. Your Lordships may take it a good deal of his material was really got from a French map made by a very famous French cartographer, and a very distinguished man, whose name was De Lisle. There are a number of the De Lisle Maps in this Volume, but I take this one because it is the easiest one for your Lordships to read. If you run your eye up the margin of the "Territory de la Bradore or New Britain" about half-way up you will see "An entry discovered by Davis in 1586 into which he sailed 30 leagues and trafficked with the natives."

Viscount HALDANE: He never found the Hamilton River.

Sir JOHN SIMON: He never got so far; he never came to salmon. The interesting thing is this: here I am faced with a suggestion by the Canadian Government that the grant to me is a grant which is not only a grant of a mile strip, but that when you come to the Hamilton Inlet, the strip does not go back into the inlet at all, but crosses the jaws of it; I make myself plain, I think it is a familiar controversy in this class of case. Then you have the contemporaneous Instruction to Governor Graves, who is made amongst other things Governor and Commander in Chief of all the Coasts of Labrador, and he is particularly told in the exercise of his duties as such Governor to see how far this inlet goes in. You see what a queer state of knowledge the people had at that time, because there is another entry on the map; inside the land you see "A River which the savages say falls into the North Sea, after it has run 60 leagues, and the Great Bay according to the report of the savages." That is on the body of Labrador, just below the end of the word "Labrador."

Viscount HALDANE: That is Davis's entry?

Sir JOHN SIMON: This, of course, is speculation. It only shows, of course, that they did not quite know. The result was that when

p. 40

Captain Graves got his Commission, that is, amongst other things, what he is asked to do. Would you observe in the same way, the next paragraph, paragraph 8, "You are also to enquire and report to Us, by Our Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, whether any or what further Establishment may be necessary to be made, or Forts erected" now, "in any part of Newfoundland, or the other Islands or Territories under your Government, either for the Protection of the Fishery," which I quite agree was the primary object, "the security of the County, or the establishing and carrying on a Commerce with the Indians residing in or resorting to the said Islands or inhabiting the Coast of Labrador." I do not know whether it is going to be said that on the selvedge of the sea there was a population of Indians squatting on the sea shore. Of course, there was nothing of the kind, and surely it is quite obvious that when these documents were drawn they were referring to a substantial area very little known, thought to be of no particular value, which was believed to be sufficiently defined by the use of this language.

Viscount FINLAY: At the same time I do not think that the exploration of these inlets was so much with regard to the extent of land conveyed as it was with regard to what the value of the fisheries would be.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think your Lordship is right. I only make the observation because, your Lordship appreciates, the case I have to meet is a case that there is only a narrow selvedge which does not go in round the inlet, but which simply cuts across the mouth of it.

Viscount FINLAY: I do not suppose the case on the other side has been limited to that point.

Sir JOHN SLMON: On the contrary, that is their maximum concession; they say they have been, if possible, too generous to the Colony of Newfoundland. Of course, we shall see.

(Adjourned for a short time.)

Sir JOHN SIMON: My Lord, if your Lordships would be good enough to turn for one moment to Map No. 7 in the Newfoundland Atlas you will see that the map provides the answer to a question which one of your Lordships was good enough to put to me earlier in the day. It is the map immediately preceding the one which you looked at for the purpose of noting that record of the Deep Inlet.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Not immediately preceding, is it?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It comes several times: your Lordship is quite right; as a matter of fact you looked at No. 9. No. 7 is a map of a few years earlier, which is to be found in several editions, made by a very distinguished geographer, who was Guillaume De l'Isle. He was by far the most eminent cartographer of his time; he was called Premier Géographe du Roi; he was a member of the Royal Academy of Sciences; Peter the Great took a special interest in him as well as the Kings of France. What I was going to call attention to is this. If your Lordships will look—more particularly perhaps Lord Finlay, since he put the question to me—to the description on that map of the sea which is called Mer Christiane, you will see immediately underneath it this note: “So named by Jean Munck, a Dane, in 1619.” There was a King Christian of Denmark, and I think we may assume that he named the sea after his his own sovereign. That I think answers that point.

My Lords, I made a slip in one statement at any rate this morning, which I will correct at once. I spoke in a casual phrase as though the Islands of Saint Pierre and Miquelon had ceased to be French. I was in error about that; I believe they are still French. Your Lordship sees this Map No. 7 gives again this opening which Davis in the time of Queen Elizabeth had found here. The inscription is not quite the same as it is in the English map which copies from this. It says: “Entrance found in 1586 by Davis, an Englishman, who trafficked there with people of the country, and into which Weymouth advanced 30 leagues.” It happens to give the name of the comrade Weymouth, who did that.

The Lord CHANCELLOR: I do not see the date.

Sir JOHN SIMON: There are several editions of this particular map. It has been worked out for us at the British Museum, and there is a series of notes to all these maps to be found immediately preceding Map No. 4. De Lisle was born in 1675 and died in 1726, and he was doing this about the year 1700. One or two of his maps do bear a date, but this particular one does not. Take the next map, No. 6, which is another part of the same map of De Lisle. You will see that the legend says that he is “premier géographe du roy.” It is published at Paris, “at the house of the author on the Quai de l’Horloge, avec privilège du roy pour 20 ans.” The date is 1700.

Sir John Simon.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: It says he was born 1673 and died 1726, so that it must have been the early part of the eighteenth century.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is right. There is no doubt that these maps, which I am told were maps of great authority in their day, might be regarded as a foundation of that map of Senex, an Englishman, which is Map No. 9, and which is dated 1710.

I am anxious that your Lordships should have before you, even if only in outline, the case in its essential compass; so that I am not going at the moment, unless your Lordships wish otherwise, to read long passages from the instructions to Governor Graves, and other documents of that sort. I would sooner go at once to the other document of 1763 which has to be examined for the purpose of seeing how this area has been parcelled out.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: That is the proclamation.

Sir JOHN SIMON: The proclamation. Your Lordships have my dates which are, of course, the pretext of the argument. The 10th February 1763 was the definitive Treaty of Paris, and the 25th April 1763 was this extended Commission to Thomas Graves which puts all the coasts of Labrador under his administration as between two termini.

Viscount HALDANE: You mean sign manual.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I mean the Commission under the Great Seal. That is the document at page 149 which we were looking at just before your Lordships adjourned. Your Lordships remember the words at page 149, line 31. There is thirdly the proclamation which is at page 153, dated 7th October 1763. There is a little history which accompanies this, which your Lordships will need to look at later. There is recorded the inquiries that were made by the Secretary of State, Lord Egremont, to the Lords of Trade and Plantations—I rather think they had been sitting in this building—who gave advice as to what should be done. All that I have in mind, but I am taking you to the accomplished fact. The accomplished fact is that a Royal Proclamation is made on the 7th October 1763, the terms of which I think it is most important carefully to observe. It is a document which carves out this area. We have the Hudson's Bay territory, we have all the coasts of Labrador with Newfoundland, and now of course we have the substantial remaining area mostly acquired from the French. The Proclamation says: "Whereas we have taken into our Royal consideration the extensive and valuable acquisitions in America, secured to our Crown by the late definitive treaty of peace concluded at Paris the tenth day of February last; and being desirous that all our loving subjects, as well of our kingdom as of our colonies in America, may avail themselves with all convenient speed of the great benefits and advantages which must accrue therefrom to their commerce, manufactures, and navigation; we have thought fit, with the advice of our Privy Council, to issue this our Royal Proclamation, hereby to publish and declare to all our loving subjects, that we have, with the advice of our said Privy Council"—those were the Lords of Trade and Plantations who in their turn, of course, had moved the Privy Council as a whole—"granted our letters patent under our Great Seal of Great Britain, to erect within the countries and islands ceded and confirmed to us by the said treaty, four distinct and separate governments styled and called by the names of Quebec, East Florida, West Florida, and Grenada, and limited and bounded as follows, viz.:

Firstly.—The Government of Quebec, bounded on the Labrador Coast by the River St. John.” Your Lordships will see that is the same river which earlier in the year had been used as the limit westward of the Coasts of Labrador which Newfoundland assumed control over. Then it goes on to say: “and from thence by a line drawn from the head of that river”—would your Lordships kindly observe that that in itself involves the idea that the coast will run up to the head of the river—“through the lake St. John, to the south end of the Lake Nipissim.” I am going, if I may, in one moment to ask attention to a map—there are a number which might be used on which your Lordships could trace this—but I thought your Lordships would let me read the words first.

p. 43

Viscount
Haldane.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Is that map No. 16?

The Lord
Chancellor.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: If I might suggest it, I think we had better not look at map No. 16 just yet. That is rather later. The whole paragraph reads: “The Government of Quebec, bounded on the Labrador Coast by the River St. John, and from thence by a line drawn from the head of that river, through the lake St. John, to the south end of the Lake Nipissim; from whence the said line, crossing the River St. Lawrence and the Lake Champlain in forty-five degrees of north latitude, passes along the high lands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the said River St. Lawrence, from those which fall into the sea: and also along the north coast of the Baye des Chaleurs, and the coast of the Gulph of St. Lawrence to Cape Rosieres, and from thence crossing the mouth of the River St. Lawrence by the west end of the Island of Anticosti, terminates at the aforesaid River St. John.”

Viscount HALDANE: Lake Champlain one knows to-day is south of the St. Lawrence.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Certainly.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It takes in the land bordering on the St. Lawrence, including Gaspe.

21 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is the idea. I am quite willing that your Lordship shall look at Map No. 16, but the actual one that I thought was convenient to take was map No. 12. What I would suggest to the Board is that what is really important is to see for this purpose how the geography was believed to exist at the time these boundaries were drawn. I am not saying, of course, that you will not have to apply the definition to the facts on the ground as they really are, but it is at least rather interesting to see how they would apply if you were to take the maps as they were believed to represent the truth. A very good example of that is map No. 12. It is a map of 1755. I will give your Lordship the original as it is a better map than the reduced scale your Lordship has. That map is a map published in 1755, and I could produce others to the same effect. You observe, therefore, that it is just before the Treaty of Paris. It is a map which shows, and it is rather interesting to notice that it does show, the Hudson's Bay territory. The Hudson's

Bay territory is shown tinged in yellow, and it does what so many people have done before and since, i.e., treated the Hudson Bay Territory as a territory which runs back from Hudson's Bay to the watershed. If you examine it, you will see it was drawn so on that map. They did not know exactly how these things were. They sometimes drew lakes which ran both ways. Indeed, there are a few cases on the maps where they record "This lake drains both ways."

Viscount FINLAY: But there are such lakes.

Sir JOHN SIMON: But I am not saying that they explored all along the boundary. It was to a large extent a work of imagination in detail, but what is important is to look at the principle of the thing. You have on a map such as this all the material to draw the line. If with this map before your Lordships, I may just refer to the passage again, you will see the whole thing. It says, the new Government of Quebec is to be bounded on the Labrador Coast by the River St. John. You will see the River St. John marked on the map. It is marked as running up a considerable way. We know it had just been used as the way of cutting off the coast of Labrador so far as Newfoundland administered it. You are to turn up to the head of that river. I do not know which of these various tributaries may be called the head, but at any rate you can see it carries you a very substantial distance inland. Then when you have reached the head of that river, you are to have an artificial line which is expressly defined—a straight line I suppose—which is to run from the head of the river through the lake St. John. The lake St. John is shown on the map.

Viscount
Finlay.

Viscount FINLAY: Is it on the river?

Sir JOHN SIMON: No.

21 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount FINLAY: I think the lake St. John is a long way off?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I observed before the adjournment the lake St. John has nothing to do with the River St. John except that they are both called St. John.

Viscount FINLAY: Then what does this passage mean?

Sir JOHN SIMON: You are to draw a line from the head waters of the river, a line which will run many miles, till you reach a lake. The lake happens to be called Lake St. John, but that has nothing to do with it. It is as though you were to draw a line from the head waters of the Thames to Lake Windermere.

The Lord
Chancellor.

Viscount FINLAY: I forget which map it was which showed that Lake St. John was very clearly a very great distance away.

p. 45

Sir JOHN SIMON: This little green map that we have been using shows it.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It is shown on map 16.

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Sir JOHN SIMON: The Lord Chancellor will appreciate it is not that I have the smallest objection, but it seems to me if we are going to deal with the thing logically what one wants to see is the sort of map of which would be before the people when they laid down the line. What your Lordship is referring to is a map which was drawn afterwards.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Immediately afterwards, as showing what the Proclamation did.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am not in the least complaining, but I think it is not unreasonable to say, let us see what sort of map was available and see what they had before them. Returning to the point I was on—you are to join the headwaters of this river which happens to be called St. John by an imaginary straight line with the Lake St. John. Then you are to go from there to Lake Nipissim. This map calls it Lake Nipissing, while other maps call it Lake Nipissim. It is the same lake. That lake is very substantially further to the west.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: Nearly in a straight line.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Nearly in a straight line.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: In Map No. 16 it is put down almost in a straight line.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is substantially that. When you get to Lake Nipissim then the boundary—the thing being a lozenge shape—takes a very sharp turn, and the line will be found now crossing the St. Lawrence to Lake Champlain in 45° latitude. If your Lordships will find 45° latitude on the map which I invited attention to, you will see it running across the St. Lawrence and striking Lake Champlain. It struck me as a little significant that whatever may have been accurately or inaccurately known, at any rate it was on this map accurate to say that Lake Champlain is to be found actually cut by the 45th parallel of latitude. That is just what the man who drew up this Proclamation is saying. He says you are to draw a line from Lake Nipissing to Lake Champlain, and then you are to pass along the high-lands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the River St. Lawrence. I think that is rather striking. We are dealing now with the Promontory of Gaspé, which is on the south side of the St. Lawrence. What he is saying is that this boundary is the line along what I may call the spine of the country, along the watershed. Having done that, then pass along the north-east coast of the Bay of Chaleurs. You may remember that the Bay of Chaleurs is just south of the Gaspé Peninsula. Then along the coast of the Gulf of St. Lawrence to Cape Rosières, just at the end of the Gaspé Peninsula, and from thence, crossing the mouth of the River St. Lawrence, by the west end of the Island of Anticosti, terminating at the River St. John.

I have taken the liberty of just roughly marking on my own copy what is involved on that map. Perhaps one of your Lordships would be so good as to look at it. (Handing map to their Lordships.) Lord Finlay will see that I have just roughly marked in blue chalk the area which is thus enclosed. I do not say I have done it precisely, but roughly. I want your Lordships, if you will, to observe what seems to follow. Do you notice that the Hudson's Bay territory cuts a great horseshoe out which takes up a portion of that area. We know that earlier in the year the Governor of Newfoundland had had added to his jurisdiction all the coast of Labrador as far as the River St. John. Is not the inference almost irresistible that what was being done was that they were making an area which they were going to call the Government of Quebec, which, so to say, fits into the map? Its boundaries, do you notice, correspond. The River St. John is at once the western boundary of the Newfoundland area and the eastern boundary of the Quebec area. It does not stop there. If, as a map like that suggested, you reached the height of land, if you went up to the high waters of the River St. John, and if in its turn the Lake St. John was a reservoir which ran down to the sea, you would be dividing the land which may be on one side of the watershed from the land which is on the other side of the watershed. The consequence is that you really are in this portion of the world dividing the country up. The alternative view, which I contest, is a view that although in 1763 the authorities here at home were plotting out an area which they called the Government of Quebec, at the same time all that they were doing on the coast of Labrador, as far as Newfoundland was concerned, was giving to Newfoundland this salvage. It seems to be a most far-fetched and curious hypothesis. If the business which had to be tackled was the business of dividing this country up, what an odd thing that you should define the boundary of the Government of Quebec by language which is precisely appropriate with the boundary of Newfoundland Labrador in my sense; that you should then trace its equivalent boundary on a principle which is, at any rate roughly, corresponding with what are known to be the already appropriated regions in that quarter, and that then you should make these provisions on the south and west. If one looks at that map, remembering that it was a map available immediately before the Treaty, one sees that it has upon it every single name which is used in this careful definition.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: In any case, we have a territory intermediate between the land which you are clamming from the height of land and the boundary of the Hudson's Bay territory; you have a thin strip. You have not shown it in your colours, but there is a thin strip between the new boundary of Quebec and the boundary of Hudson's Bay that runs up to the region of Cape Chidley.

p. 47

The Lord
Chancellor.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Your Lordship may be right. If your Lordship would now turn over to one or two more of these maps you will see the way in which the geographers in the immediately following period dealt with the matter. For example, No. 14 is an interesting map. This is Gibson's map of 1763. The original is here, if you wish to see it. It is by Emanuel Bowen, geographer to His Majesty, and John Gibson, engraver, and it purports to give details according to the Treaty of 1763. This, my Lord, is the original of which No. 14 is a reproduction in part. If I may read the legend it is called this: "A new and complete map of all America, of the West Indies, and other islands dependent thereon, with a copious table fully showing the several possessions of each European Prince and State as settled by the definitive treaty concluded at Paris on February 10th, 1763, the clauses of which relative thereto are inserted by John Gibson, geographer." I think in this case the reproduction is as plain as the original. It is an attempt to indicate the new Province of Quebec; you can see Lake Nipissing quite well.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: They have made the St. John River very straight.

Sir JOHN SIMON: They have. It is not very well done. One can see it is not that at all; but geographers, like other people, can make mistakes. At any rate, they show the kind of thing; and as your Lordship was truly saying, there is an indication of a sort of passage-way between the lozenge which one calls the Government of Quebec, and the boundary, as marked, of the Hudson's Bay territory. Something may turn hereafter on this intermediate bit; it is a branch of the subject which has to be treated rather by itself. I will call it for the moment the branch of the case which deals with Indian territory. It will need to be dealt with in some detail. If I may, I will go on with my chronological story, because I think it is convenient for your Lordships.

21 Oct., 1926.
Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Is that right; "the Treaty of Utrecht"? That is supposed to be the boundary between the Hudson's Bay and Canada.

The Lord
Chancellor.

Sir JOHN SIMON: No, my Lord. We saw this earlier in the day. Under the Treaty of Utrecht the commissaries were to be people of both countries. Commissaries were appointed by the British; and this line which starts a long way to the left, “The southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay territory, settled by commissaries after the Treaty of Utrecht” was drawn by the British Commissaries.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Is that a wrong line?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am not saying it is wrong. I do not quite know why they should have carried it out across Labrador in the way they do. because that would not be—and as a matter of fact was not afterwards regarded as—Hudson's Bay territory.

p. 48

The LORD CHANCELLOR: That is why I was asking you. That does not fit in with your theory that you were to have everything which Hudson's Bay had not got.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I should have said the real thing was this: it all depends upon where you regard Hudson's Straits as beginning. Later on it is perfectly plain, because the words are used that Cape Chidley is the point. That, you remember, was illustrated in the Arrowsmith map of 1857, where you had that green area, and where the point at which the boundary reached Hudson's Straits was at Cape Chidley. The other Governments which were carved out by the same proclamation, that is to say the Governments of East Florida and West Florida and Granada, have nothing to do with this case, and your Lordships, I think, except as a matter of interest, need not be troubled to search for them. The Granada one is the West Indies. In trying to use the time I have to get the scale complete, I would ask your Lordships to notice in this Royal Proclamation of the 7th of October, 1763, there is this paragraph. We have read the full definition of the countries and governments of Quebec and East Florida, and over the page West Florida and Granada. Now I want you to notice that this proclamation recognises the fact that the area of the Newfoundland administration is enlarged, because it goes on, on page 154, at line 14: “And to the end that the open and free fishery of our subjects may be extended to and carried on upon the coast of Labrador and the adjacent islands, we have thought fit, with the advice of our said Privy Council, to put all that coast”—this is really extracted—“from the River St. Johns to Hudson's Straits, together with the Islands of Anticosti and the Madelaine, and all other smaller islands lying upon the said coast, under the care and inspection of our Governor of Newfoundland.” That phrase “care and inspection” is a little striking. Of course, if the root of title of Newfoundland was this declaration on page 154, I could quite understand that an argument might be advanced to suggest that this shows something short of an actual extension of boundaries, but, of course, this is mere reference. The actual root of title, the thing which gives the area, is in the Commission passed under the Great Seal to Thomas Graves on page 149. Your Lordships will really be relieved of any doubt on that score, because we shall come again and again to descriptions of the coast of Labrador as being annexed to Newfoundland, or as a dependency of Newfoundland.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It is noticeable that in this paragraph the coast of Labrador is something upon which a fishery may be carried on.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Undoubtedly it occurs again and again. I hope your Lordships appreciate that I am conceding this in the fullest and frankest way: there is no doubt whatever that at the time the

p. 49

Newfoundland area was enlarged to the mainland, and for long afterwards, the primary object of the whole thing was to deal with fisheries. There is not the slightest doubt about it. The question in the case is really not that, which is really not a matter which is argued or arguable. The question in the case is whether, when you get a grant of all the coasts of Labrador (howbeit at the time it was first made probably nobody cared twopence what you would find if you went back some distance; it was a barren, non-occupied, useless land) and you come to try and ascertain what is the test which the grant prescribes, the test is not the test that you should go to the height of land. I have called attention to the most important parts of that document. My Lords, we have, therefore, this position. Your Lordship has been kind enough to keep some sort of chronological note, and this is the milestone. From 1763 down to 1774, for those 11 years, the British Province of Quebec—it was really called the Government of Quebec—was that limited lozenge which your Lordship just traced out, whereas all the coast of Labrador, from the entrance to the Hudson's Straits to the River St. Johns was annexed to Newfoundland. That lasted for those 11 years. Governor Murray, to whom my Lord Haldane referred, surrendered his post to Governor Guy Carleton, and Sir Guy Carleton was the Governor of the Province of Quebec in 1774. In 1774 there was passed a Statute, which is called the Quebec Act, which completely revised the distribution of areas, which enlarged the Province of Quebec enormously, and which threw into the Province of Quebec all that part of Labrador which had previously been annexed to Newfoundland. So that you have Newfoundland with what I may call continental areas between 1763 and 1774, and then there comes a period which begins in 1774 and which continues till 1809, when once again Newfoundland gets its continental area.

I think your Lordships may—of course, in time these things will become so familiar you will not need it—find it convenient to take these dates if you are making any notes.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: This is the Act at page 158.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, I am going to give your Lordships four dates: 1763 to 1774, 1774 to 1809, and 1809 to 1825.

21 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: These are the Statutes?

Sir JOHN SIMON: These are the three periods. Between 1763 and 1774, as I have already said, you had Newfoundland on the mainland to the extent to which the Commission to Governor Graves and his successors prescribed, whatever that is. From 1774—this is the Statute which, as the Lord Chancellor says, we are just going to look at, at page 158—down to 1809 you had no Newfoundland on the mainland, but the whole thing was in Quebec.

Viscount
Haldane.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: The whole thing, coast and all.

Sir John Simon.

p. 50

Sir JOHN SIMON : Yes. It is most striking what happens. What kind of an operation on the view of my friends happened—we shall have to consider it; I have a perfectly intelligible view of what happened. From 1809 to 1823 you get yet another stage in which Newfoundland goes back to where she was in 1763, and lastly, in 1825 comes the final change which has persisted till to-day, the change by which Quebec gets what I may call that pink oblong cut out and given back to it while the balance remains with Newfoundland.

Viscount HALDANE: It is most important that we should follow the words of these Statutes.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is most important.

That gives the stages. Perhaps your Lordships will turn to page 158 and observe the language that is used in the Act of 1774. Here again the thing which is principally important for me is to see whether when what was previously attached to Newfoundland is added to this enlarged Quebec, it can possibly be supposed that what is thus being transferred is a mere selvedge or whether on the other hand the inference is very strong—I should have thought it was irresistible—that what is being transferred is not mere selvedge but on the contrary is a very substantial continuous area of territory. The recitals I am afraid must be read: “Whereas His Majesty, by His Royal Proclamation, bearing date the Seventh Day of October in the third year of his reign, thought fit to declare the provisions which had been made in respect to certain countries, territories and islands in America, ceded to His Majesty by the Definitive Treaty of Peace, concluded at Paris on the tenth day of February one thousand seven hundred and sixty three,” which, as you know, is to be found at page 153, you have just been looking at it. “And whereas, by arrangements made by the said Royal Proclamation, a very large extent of country, within which there were several Colonies and Settlements of the Subjects of France, who claimed to remain therein under the faith of the said Treaty, was left, without any provision being made for the administration of Civil Government therein.”

My Lords, might we pause there for one moment, if you would look at the little sketch map which shows our green area, you will remember upon that we had marked not only the pink and the green, but we had distinguished between a portion which is coloured light blue, or slate colour, and portion coloured yellow. The portion that is coloured light blue is bounded by the line which runs from what is supposed to be the head of the River St. John to Lake St. John. You will remember that line was the northern boundary of the Government of Quebec. To take an example, obviously you see to the north of that there was this yellow patch. there may be more, but there is at least that, and, of course, it is quite plain there would be a large extent of country within which there were colonies and settlements of the Subjects of France who claimed to remain therein under the faith of the Treaty, that were left without any provision being made for civil government therein. I can give more illustrations, but that is one.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It would not be the whole yellow patch because Hudson's Bay came rather near.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is the whole if Hudson's Bay is to be regarded as limited by the area which drains into Hudson's Bay; that yellow area does not drain into Hudson's Bay, it drains into the St. Lawrence.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I was thinking of Hudson's Bay as marked on this document; it does not matter, there is something there.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is quite plain, therefore, when this lozenge which was the boundary of the Government of Quebec in 1763 was marked out there would be a large extent of country within which there were Colonies and Settlements of the Subjects of France, who claimed to remain therein under the faith of the said Treaty, and which was left, without any provision being made for the administration of Civil Government therein. Then it says: "and certain parts of the Territory of Canada, where sedentary fisheries had been established and carried on by the Subjects of France, inhabitants, of the said Province of Canada, under Grants and Concessions from the Government thereof, were annexed to the Government of Newfoundland." That refers to this fact: if you come down the River St. Lawrence and examine the character of the fisheries which are being conducted on the northern edge of that river and the Gulf, coming down from Tadoussac and generally pushing on till you come out to the Gulf of St. Lawrence on the side which is nearer to Quebec and furthest from the Atlantic, the fisheries were to a large extent what were called sedentary fisheries; that is to say, the people there actually settled there and built places there, they were working from a fixed locus, whereas the fisheries which were what I may call of the Newfoundland character were, as one of your Lordships observed earlier, really fisheries to which you came and went because the whole policy of the British Government at this time, and for long afterwards, was to discourage permanent settlement in Newfoundland and to insist that the fishing fleet must go out every spring and then occupy itself with the business for which it had come and return in the autumn. That was for a very long time the principle sought to be applied in connection with Newfoundland, and what you may call broadly Newfoundland Fisheries. This Act of Parliament is reciting that fact. You see that you have put under Newfoundland so large an extent of the coasts of Labrador as involved putting some people who used to be French subjects of French Canada who were sedentary. This is one of the motives for changing the boundaries: "May it therefore please your most Excellent Majesty that it may be enacted; and be it enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same." Now comes a boundary of the most astonishing character. We have become so accustomed to the area of the United States that it gives one almost a surprise to find where the boundary of Quebec used to be. The boundary of Quebec which is now prescribed would include as I make out, some four and a half of the present states of the United States or five. The boundary may I explain is going to be traced beginning at the other end. You will remember when we had the boundary defined in the Proclamation of 1763 you were taken round this lozenge-shaped area and you finished up at the Bay of Chaleurs, and then were invited to cross the Gulf. At this time the Act of Parliament was going to trace a boundary beginning at the other end. It is very soon going to include much larger territories, but it starts the same. Your Lordship will see at line 27 on page 158. May I say I attach some importance to the word "bounded," because it seems to me extremely unlikely if the Act of Parliament is going to say a particular area, this enlarged province of Quebec is bounded by so-and-so, it does not enclose Quebec with a complete boundary; and if it encloses Quebec with a complete boundary you will find the Newfoundland case succeeds: "Bounded on the south by a line from the Bay of Chaleurs, along the High Lands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the River Saint Lawrence from those which fall into the Sea"—that is what I call the spine of the Gaspé Peninsular—"to a point in Forty-five degrees of Northern Latitude, on the eastern bank of the River Connecticut, keeping the same latitude directly west, through the Lake Champlain." Down to there it is practically the same as before, you are retracing your steps—"until, in the same latitude it meets the River Saint Lawrence." Now we are going to go further afield: "From thence up the Eastern bank of the said river to the Lake Ontario; thence through the Lake Ontario, and the River commonly called Niagara." Your Lordship remembers Niagara lies between Erie and Ontario—"and thence along by the eastern and South-eastern bank of Lake Erie, following the said bank, until the same shall be intersected by the Northern boundary, granted by the Charter of the Province of Pennsylvania, in case the same shall be so intersected; and from thence along the said Northern and Western Boundaries of the said Province, until the said Western Boundary strike the Ohio; But in case the said Bank of the said Lake shall not be found to be so intersected, then following the said bank until it shall arrive at that point of the said bank which shall be nearest to the North-western angle of the said Province.” Your Lordships need not trouble about the grant to Pennsylvania, because it was really in the form of a quadrangle; the whole point was whether the North-western angle of the quadrangle would, as a matter of fact, be struck by this new line at one point or another; this is the part which matters: “And thence along the Western Boundary of the said Province.” That is to say the Province of Pennsylvania; then it goes on: “Until it strike the river Ohio.” The River Ohio would come out on the Western side of the Province of Pennsylvania about half way down: “and along the Bank of the said River,

Sir John Simon.

p. 53

Viscount
Haldane.

westward, to the Banks of the Mississippi.” Your Lordships know the Ohio is one of the principal tributaries of the Mississippi—“and Northward to the Southern Boundary of the territory granted to the merchants adventurers of England, trading to Hudson's Bay.” That, you see, is the same idea as we had before. It is the idea that the Hudson's Bay Company has got an area which will run back from Hudson's Bay until it reaches the height of land. When you get the height of land and the water begins not to flow into Hudson's Bay, but to flow South, then you will have the sources of the Mississippi. That is the idea of it. Then most extraordinarily they say: “And also all such territories, islands, and countries, which have, since the tenth of February 1863, been made part of the Government of Newfoundland, be, and they are hereby during His Majesty's pleasure, annexed to, and made part and parcel of, the Province of Quebec.”

My Lords, it is impossible for anybody to follow the whole of that elaborate description in one's head. What I am anxious to do is to put the point which is the only relevant point as it seems to me in reading it.

Viscount HALDANE: Might not this include the whole of Newfoundland?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It would, except, of course, the island.

Viscount HALDANE: It says: “Also all such Territories, Islands and Countries.”

Sir JOHN SIMON: Obviously, I agree, it is my case. It does include territory, but since it is only the territories which have been annexed to Newfoundland since the 10th February, 1763, it is leaving out the island. My whole case is that what Newfoundland got was not a strip a mile wide, but it got a territory, and this territory is now being taken away from it. I want to put the point to the Board, and I can put it without any map, what in my understanding is the point and a very important point to be made on this document.

Consider what the two contrasted cases or contentions here are.

21 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: You notice the words “been made part of the Government of Newfoundland.”

Sir JOHN SIMON: I do. I want to put what I conceive to be the only relevant point which arises on this document, and it is most material to consider what the two cases or contentions are between which your Lordships are invited to choose. My case is that the area in the Peninsula of Labrador, which was for a certain number of years annexed to and made part of the Government of Newfoundland, is not a mere narrow ribbon, a mile or whatever it is, running along the sea-shore, but is a very substantial block of territory running into what is a natural boundary. The other view put forward is: No, all that Newfoundland had since the 10th February, 1763, is this little ribbon.

p. 54

Viscount
Haldane.

When I read this document and discover that it is proposed to define the boundaries, that is why I emphasise the word “bounded,” at line 27 on page 158. When I am told this is a document which is going to set out for me how the enlarged Province of Quebec is bounded, I naturally assume when I have traced it all out, that I shall have got a consolidated area, but if my friends are right, all I have got is this: I have got an area, the boundary of which is defined from the Bay of Chaleurs, which then runs westerly by Lake Champlain, the St. Lawrence, the Great Lakes, down the side of the then Colony of Pennsylvania, along the Ohio reaching the Mississippi, then running right up reaching the Hudson's Bay boundary, but after that I am given no assistance whatever, except I am told “And this ribbon a mile wide is also to belong to you.” My submission is that that is most improbable.

Viscount HALDANE: Where do you get that ribbon on that construction?

Sir JOHN SIMON: You get it in the words on page 159, you are to go on till the River Mississippi hits the Hudson's Bay boundary. Then line 13: “And also” that is to say the new Province of Quebec is also to contain “all such Territories, Islands, and Countries, which have, since the Tenth of February, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Sixty-three, been made part of the Government of Newfoundland.”

The Lord
Chancellor.

Viscount HALDANE: That is everything.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Quite. Then your Lordship sees I am told all the Government of Newfoundland got was a thing a mile wide.

Viscount HALDANE: You say if that is the construction, the whole went to the Government of Newfoundland?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Nobody disputes it, that is not the controversy, nobody disputes whatever the Government of Newfoundland got on the mainland in 1763, that exact area, neither more nor less, passed by the Statute of 1774. The whole question is, How much was it?

21 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

The Lord
Chancellor.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: This carries all the territories which belonged to the Crown of Great Britain in North America, bounded on the south by this line along Pennsylvania to the Mississippi, then it turns north and stops at the boundary of Hudson's Bay.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is it.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It is everything belonging to Great Britain, stopping at that boundary?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes.

p. 55

The LORD CHANCELLOR: You got everything between the southern line and Hudson's Bay?

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is right.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: What light does that throw upon the question what is covered by the words "And also the territories which have been made part of Newfoundland." Whatever that territory is, of course, it comes into this Grant, but how does that show what it is?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I agree it does not show it. This is merely a consideration. It is going to lie very much reinforced when we come to the pink piece; but I am only pointing out that the language of this document is entirely consistent with the view which I have been pressing, that is to say, if for a moment we might assume that "all the coasts of Newfoundland" means this solid green piece, then, of course, when you are told that you are going to bound the large Province of Quebec by this line, and are going to transfer all such territories, Islands and Countries as have been made part of the Government of Newfoundland, then, of course, the thing would fit. I quite appreciate what the Lord Chancellor puts to me. I cannot say that the other construction is either nonsensical or impossible, but to say the least of it, it is very odd that it should be supposed that you are making a complete boundary of the Province of Quebec, if the other view is right, because it would necessarily involve this, that although you carry things up to—the Hudson's Bay boundary, where the Mississippi ends—which was not quite right geographically, but was nearly right—after that you are really throwing into the Province of Quebec not only the Newfoundland territory, but also the territory which had never been either Newfoundland or Quebec.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It is all the territory of Great Britain between the southern line and Hudson's Bay.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It may be.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: All, including or adding to it the territory which had been granted.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It may be. I am not saying that that is contrary to the language, at all, or impossible.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I do not say that this is conclusive.

Sir JOHN SIMON: There are very few things which are conclusive in this case, although I think we are coming to one or two things which are very striking. But one sees now why it is that you come to a stage in 1774, when this transfer was made.

Viscount HALDANE: There had been in that territory some islands which had been made part of the Government of Newfoundland since 1763. Can you tell me the dates?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes; it had been done by the Commission to Governor Graves, the date of which your Lordship will remember.

Viscount HALDANE: That is the instrument which is referred to, is it?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes. The date is the 25th April, 1763.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: Why does it say here: "Since the 10th of February," the date of the Treaty?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Because your Lordship remembers that that was the date of the Treaty.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: I know; but that did not make it part of Newfoundland.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I know my Lord will forgive me: the point is this, that they say: "Of course the territory of Newfoundland as it has been known in the past before the Treaty of Paris is to remain as it is. We are not interfering with the Island of Newfoundland at all; but in 1763 in connection with arrangements made by the Treaty of Paris, we thought it right for the time being to add some mainland to Newfoundland."

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: All I mean is that that was done by the Proclamation. Why does the Act say that it has been since that date, the date of the Treaty, made part?

21 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: May I suggest a slight correction? It was not done by the Proclamation; it was done by the Commission.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: I meant the Commission.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes; it would have been right to say the date of the Commission, but I suggest that the whole Act of Parliament proceeds on the footing that since the definitive Treaty of Peace it was necessary to make arrangements which are now being revised, and they did use as the terminus a quo the date of the Treaty of Peace, although it would have been just the same thing if they had used the date a month or two later, when it was granted.

Viscount
Haldane.

Mr. MACMILLAN: May I suggest to my learned friend that “since” means “after,” and not “from and after.”

p. 57

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes; I am much obliged. It is post.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: Since the Treaty.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes.

Viscount FINLAY: At a date later than the Treaty.

Viscount HALDANE: It makes no difference. Nothing which was added after 1763 goes over.

Sir JOHN SIMON: May I take advantage of the time just to get your Lordships' eye to the remaining stages. We have now reached 1774, and without at all claiming that we have identified what the green area is, whatever it is, it has been taken away again. Now we can go right on for this purpose—not for every purpose but for this purpose—from 1774 right down to 1809. There are some important intervening facts, but I am anxious to get the sketch complete to-day if I can.

Will your Lordships kindly turn now to page 190. In 1809 there was a reversal of policy, and in that year there was an Act which is called the Newfoundland Act of 1809. It was one of those statutes which really dealt with two things, and the title shows it. You will see that it is: “An Act for establishing Courts of Judicature in the Island of Newfoundland and the islands adjacent; and for re-annexing part of the Coast of Labrador and the Islands lying on the said Coast to the Government of Newfoundland.”

The second of those two legislative objects is carried out by Section XIV, which is on page 195. I shall have to read it more elaborately, perhaps, later on, but your Lordships will appreciate my desire to get the whole outline before you to-day. Perhaps it will be enough to say for the moment that whatever else Section XIV does, it does this; your Lordships will see the word “re-annexed,” three lines from the bottom of page 195. It was to “re-annex” to the Government of Newfoundland whatever it was which, in 1763, had been given to Newfoundland, and in 1774 had been taken away from Newfoundland.

The Lord
Chancellor.

Viscount HALDANE: We had better look at the words of it.

21 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: If your Lordship wishes it; but I was very anxious if I could to show your Lordships the other things.

Viscount HALDANE: Just let us get it in our minds.

Sir JOHN SIMON: By all means, my Lord.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I see that it recites the Proclamation, and it recites the Quebec Act.

Viscount
Haldane.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord. Then in line 35 on page 195

p. 58

it says: “And whereas it is expedient that the said Coast of Labrador, and the adjacent Islands (except the Islands of Madelaine) should be re-annexed to the Government of Newfoundland; be it therefore enacted, That such Parts of the Coast of Labrador from the River Saint John to Hudson's Streights and the said Island of Anticosti, and all other smaller Islands so annexed to the Government of Newfoundland by the said Proclamation of the Seventh Day of October One thousand seven hundred and sixty-three”—it really should have been that it was done by the Commission to Graves, which was earlier in the year.

Viscount HALDANE: The operative words are “the said Coast of Labrador and the adjacent Islands (except the Islands of Madelaine)”—“be it therefore enacted, That such Parts of the Coast of Labrador from the River Saint John to Hudson's Streights”—that is, away up in the north.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Just the same as before, my Lord.

Viscount HALDANE: “And the said island of Anticosti”—

Sir JOHN SIMON: Just the same as before, my Lord.

Viscount HALDANE: “And all other smaller Islands so annexed to the Government of Newfoundland by the said Proclamation of the Seventh Day of October One thousand seven hundred and sixty-three, (except the said Islands of Madelaine) shall be separated from the said Government of Lower Canada.” It is just repeating it.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord; it is purely giving it back, with the immaterial variation that the Madelaine Islands, which you will see on the little map at the bottom, do not go back.

But let it be clearly understood that whether my case is a good case or a bad case, the subject matter, the area, is an area which was first given to Newfoundland in 1763, and then taken away from Newfoundland in 1774, and then again re-annexed to Newfoundland in 1809.

21 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount FINLAY: Not exactly again re-annexed.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It was re-annexed; it was again annexed; and whatever the area may be, it is the same thing.

Now I want your Lordships to go to the last stage of the matter. You have been observing all day that we have a piece of pink on this map. Down to this moment, your Lordships have heard nothing which would make that oblong piece of pink significant for any purpose, because the boundary has been from first to last the boundary of the river St. John, which is to the west of the pink.

Now, if your Lordships will kindly turn to page 205, you will find the Statute of 1825, which, in my submission, contains language which very greatly assists the case that it is my duty to present to your Lordships. This again is an Act which is for more purposes than one, as you will see by its title. It begins by dealing with some questions of French titles and so on; but if you will turn to Section IX, you will find this extremely significant provision at the bottom of page 210: "And whereas under and by virtue of a certain Act" (namely the Act of 1809) and another Act—the second reference is not very accurate really—"the coast of Labrador, from the river Saint John to Hudson's Streights, and the island of Anticosti, and all the islands adjacent to the said coast, except the islands of Madelaine, are annexed to and form part of the Government of Newfoundland; and it is expedient that certain parts of the said coast of Labrador should be re-annexed to and form part of the province of Lower Canada."

Your Lordships will please observe that what they are going to do is to re-annex to Canada part of the said coast. Now let us see whether they are going to re-annex something which is a mile wide. The Act goes on in this way: "Be it therefore enacted, that so much of the said coast as lies to the westward of a line to be drawn due north and south from the bay or harbour of Ance Sablon, inclusive"—now this is a new point of departure—"so far as the fifty-second degree of north latitude, with the island of Anticosti, and all other islands adjacent to such part as last aforesaid of the coast of Labrador, shall be and the same are hereby re-annexed to and made a part of the said province of Lower Canada." Now it is a very interesting and extraordinary fact that the fifty-second degree of latitude was at the time, as I will now prove, approximately believed to be and recorded as the head of the river St. John.

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Viscount HALDANE: Where is Ance Sablon on this map?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It will be at the extreme right-hand end of the pink.

Viscount HALDANE: It is the end of the blue line.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is, my Lord; and it is what I venture to think we have got left. I have examined this point as carefully as I can, and some of the old maps at this point put "Sandy Bay." "Ance," of course, really means a bay from that point of view; it is the handle.

Sir John Simon.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: It is all that coast of Labrador to the west of that little line running north and south.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Is it admitted by the Dominion that the whole of this pink passed under that Act?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think they would like now to suggest that it does not; but I shall be able to show that they have asserted it, believed it, and recorded it, again and again from this time forward for the next fifty years or sixty years.

p. 60

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

But for the moment, apart from any question of their admission or denial, let us consider the words. I am not saying that it is not conceivable that a man who wants to cut in two at a particular point a ribbon which is an inch wide, should say: "Take a pair of shears that are 40 feet long." It is perfectly possible to do so, but it seems a very improbable operation; and when I find directions in 1825, for —to use the language of the Section itself—carrying out what is declared to be expedient "that certain parts of the said coast should be re-annexed"; or, picking out the words on page 210 at line 43 "whereas it is expedient that certain parts of the said coast of Labrador should be re-annexed"; that being the thing which is to be aimed at, when I am told that this is the way to do it, I begin to wonder whether or not "the said coast" may not be something which is a little away from salt water.

Viscount
Haldane.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: What you will say is this, that if it only intended to annex the coast strip, it would have been "so much of the said coast as lies to the westward of the bay or harbour of Ance Sablon."

The Lord
Chancellor.

Sir JOHN SIMON: One would have thought so, my Lord.

Viscount HALDANE: Can you tell me what is the breadth across the pink?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, I can. From Ance Sablon, which is the east end, you have to travel a good 40 miles before you reach the fifty-second parallel.

Viscount HALDANE: And it is three times that.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, it is three times that; it is at least 120 miles if you were at the River St. John.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It is a great deal more than that.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am talking about depth, my Lord. Now here is this interesting confirmation of the view that I am presenting, which I should like your Lordships also to have in mind. At that time the maps available went to show that the head waters of the River St. John were just about on the fifty-second parallel. Now, just see how all that fits in. If that is so, then when they made a grant of "all the coasts of Labrador down to the River St. John," they would be granting a depth of land which would run up to the head waters. When, at a later stage, it is decided that it is expedient that certain parts of the said coast should be re-annexed, and they wish to re-annex that area, the pink area (which, so far as the sea shore is concerned, stretches from Blanc Sablon, Ance Sablon to the River St. John) if I am right in my submission that the coast of Labrador runs back to the height of the land, then it was exactly right to say: "Take your scissors, cut the thing across until you hit the fifty-second parallel, and then travel westward, and then we shall have taken away, or in substance taken away, so much of the said coast as we want to take away." I am not saying that it is not a conceivable view, because, of course, it is conceivable, that all this elaborate reference to the fifty-second parallel was accidental or meaningless or all moonshine but it does seem to be a most extraordinarily improbable thing. If your Lordships would let me call attention to, at any rate, one map, which is in some respects, perhaps, the most authoritative map of its kind—

Viscount HALDANE: Before you do that, would you tell me if this is your interpretation, "Be it therefore enacted that so much of the said coast" that is the coast of Labrador really, because the said coast was the whole coast, "as lies to the westward of a line to be drawn North and South from Ance Sablon" which we see on the map, "as far," North that is, "as the fifty-second degree of North latitude, with the Island of Anticosti, and all other Islands adjacent, shall be re-annexed to and made part of Lower Canada." That means not only the whole of the blue, but, so far as any rectification is necessary to effect it, the whole of the light blue line along that, everything.

Sir JOHN SIMON: By light blue, does your Lordship mean the slate colour? That has been Quebec continually from 1763 to the present day; it has never ceased to be Quebec.

Viscount HALDANE: It only began there, according to this, in 1763. The words of the Statute are sweeping; it throws into Quebec all this.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It throws into Quebec the pink.

Viscount HALDANE: The words are wide enough to cover the slate.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It really is not so, with great respect.

Viscount HALDANE: Is not it?

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It is the word "re-annexed."

Viscount FINLAY: "Again re-annex."

Sir JOHN SIMON: The slate colour had never belonged to anybody but Quebec.

Viscount HALDANE: You apply “re-annexed” to that.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I do, my Lord.

p. 62

Viscount HALDANE: That is quite right.

Sir JOHN SIMON: There is a lot of controversy in this case, and I am not surprised that at the moment your Lordship should have speculated on that; I went through the same process myself, but, as a matter of fact, there is no controversy on it.

Viscount HALDANE: I understand there is no controversy; I was only taking the construction of this Statute.

Sir JOHN SIMON: We must be careful if that is so. I think your Lordship will find that, so far as regards that area on my map which your Lordship has called the blue, that is the slate colour, that portion was made part of the Government of Quebec in 1763, and it has never ceased to be part, at any rate, of the Province of Quebec ever since.

Viscount HALDANE: Anyhow, the pink is what is covered.

Sir JOHN SIMON: The pink is what is covered. Let me be perfectly fair and frank as regards the other view; the other view, as I conceive, is bound to be this; that though the coast was a mere selvedge, none the less Parliament has chosen to use language, unnecessarily, which carries your line 40 miles inland, though one mile is enough. Such a thing is a conceivable argument; I have heard many worse arguments. The question is: Is that right? Is not, on the other hand, the language of the Statute very very strong as going to show that the whole of that pink was regarded as coast? Before the Court adjourns for the day may I suggest a final and rather severe exercise, which would be to take the Canadian Atlas, and I will ask your Lordships to turn in that atlas to Map No. 11.

The Lord
Chancellor.

Viscount HALDANE: I gather you are keeping for us the Statute of 1825 till to-morrow morning?

21 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: This is in order to illustrate the Statute of 1825; I am not taking a new point. I want your Lordships to be good enough to look at a most interesting and remarkable map, which is No. 11. Your Lordships may be interested to know that if you were looking at the original of this map (which is here) it seems extremely probable that you would be looking at a map which was actually studied, and it may be marked by King George III.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: With his own hand?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, his own actual copy, because when King George III died, George IV was so obliging as to allow George III's Library to go to the British Museum, and, amongst other very valuable documents, both maps and books, which then passed into the national custody at the British Museum, was this map. It is known as "John

p. 63

Mitchell's Map." John Mitchell was a very remarkable man. He was a scientific man, and his first interest in science was botany. You will find an interesting life of him in the "Dictionary of National Biography." He spent a certain portion of his life, the middle portion of his life, in the New World; as a matter of fact he lived in Virginia; and this map, which is known as "John Mitchell's Map," is a map which had a great reputation. What I want your Lordships to observe is this: supposing, for the sake of argument, we were considering what was to be done in 1825 in view of the expediency of re-annexing to Quebec so much of the said coast of Labrador as is defined by drawing a line from Ance Sablon, Sandy Bay, due North to the fifty-second parallel, and then really upon the fifty-second parallel. Now here is this Sandy Bay. I do not know whether your Lordships have observed it, it is very correctly placed, with a little Island at the mouth of it called Woody Island. It is not inaccurate, it is just about right: there is the place. Supposing you draw a line due North from that point, you will strike a parallel of latitude, fifty-two in fact. If you then travel due West along that parallel, you will notice that in due course you will come to the head waters of the River St. John, they little extend beyond it, but in substance that is so. And, what is also rather interesting, my Lords, this particular map, which there is some reason to think was George III's own copy, though that is not material, has got marked on it, in a slight wash, the old line which you may remember, which was the boundary of the original Government of Quebec, which you will recollect ran from the head of the River St. John to Lake St. John.

The Lord
Chancellor.

Viscount HALDANE: What is the date of this map?

Sir JOHN SIMON: This map itself, though its reputation continued long after its date, was a map of 1755.

21 Oct., 1926.

Mr. Macmillan.

Viscount FINLAY: This map No. 11?

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord. I could give you other illustrations, but the interest of the thing, as it seems to me, and the value of it from the point of view of the case of Newfoundland, is this: therefore, if you are going to take that portion of the Coast of Labrador which it is expedient to re-annex—

The LORD CHANCELLOR: This cannot be 1755, this must be after 1763, must not it?

Sir JOHN SIMON: No, because the mark which you have called attention to was believed to be put on the map afterwards. I believe I am right in saying that John Mitchell had produced his map about 1755.

p. 64

Mr. MACMILLAN: The original map was 1755, and then a number of things were washed into the map afterwards.

Viscount
Haldane.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It was a sort of map of reference. What the Lord Chancellor not unnaturally noted, which indicated something later than 1755, was something put in. There are much later things than that in it, if your Lordship is interested to know. There is, for example, an extremely interesting thing; there is a reference to Mr. Oswald's boundary, the boundary as described by Mr. Oswald. It is that red line which runs through Lake Erie. Mr. Oswald was the British representative, or one of the British representatives, who took part in the negotiations which led to the Treaty of Versailles which ended the War of Independence and established the boundaries of the United States of America; so that was after 1783, and that is one of the reasons why I should rather have thought that King George III might have spent a few interesting hours on this document. I am only using it as an illustration. What I am pointing out to the Board, as well as I can, is: how very much this view of the geography strengthens my case. It is absolutely consistent with the view that "the said coasts of Labrador" in the document of 1763, did not mean a mere selvedge, but, on the contrary, meant the area of land draining to that sea.

Viscount
Finlay.

Viscount HALDANE: Labrador and New Britain meant all the green here?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am not on the label; I am on the point that if you look at this map and then read the language of the Section in the Act of 1825, you begin to see why it is that they said "Go up to parallel 52 and cut off so much of the coast of Labrador as parallel 52 will cut off," because you observe, amongst other things, that the head waters of the River St. John are just about parallel 52. I may say this is the more striking because it has been discovered within the last few years, quite recently, since this controversy arose with Canada, that as a matter of fact the River St. John was not as long a river as people thought, and there had been for many years a confusion; it has been supposed that a river which lies in the upper part there, was the upper waters of the River St. John, whereas in truth and in fact it is the upper waters of another and adjoining river.

21 Oct., 1926.
Sir John Simon.

Viscount FINLAY: An adjoining river, not a tributary?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, a separate river called the Romaine.

Viscount
Finlay.

Viscount HALDANE: The Romaine goes much further north according to the map.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am dealing with the thing as it actually is to-day; whatever the name used to be, to-day you will find the

p. 65

St. John is quite a small stream, but we have to look at it with the eyes of 1825.

Viscount
Haldane.

Viscount FINLAY: My recollection of the map is what my noble and learned friend has stated; it would seem that the head waters of that river would take it a great deal further.

Sir JOHN SIMON: In fact, it is almost impossible to read that into it. Please do not for a moment pay any attention to my casual observation; I will check it. I was only telling your Lordship as a matter of fact that the course of the River St. John was not quite what these maps suppose.

Viscount HALDANE: You say on this map the St. John goes up apparently to the fifty-second parallel.

Sir JOHN SIMON: So it does in a great number; in fact I do not know of any map down to this where it does not.

Viscount FINLAY: It is a very odd sort of corner. Was it ever put on paper in the form of a map until this Atlas was put in?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I thank the Ministry of the Interior of Canada and the Ministry of Railway and every other Ministry that Canada has ever had, because they have been recording this boundary ever since with the greatest regularity.

Viscount FINLAY: In the same shape?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Certainly, there is nothing else. We will show you, if it is material, that they have in express terms stated that this is the boundary and it is derived from the Act of 1825.

Viscount HALDANE: They have always worked upon this map?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Always. What I am saying is: What an extraordinary thing! You say in 1825 you are going to carry out the expedient purpose of re-annexing to Quebec a certain portion of the said coast, and that you should do it by travelling 40 miles inland and running along the fifty-second parallel, which the maps of the period show to be the height of land, and yet at the same time you come and tell me that the only subject matter Parliament was dealing with was this tape or strip.

Viscount HALDANE: When I referred to the green that is there, I did not quite appreciate the importance of the reference to the source of the St. John and the fifty-second parallel; on that map, the whole of the green is treated as part of the re-annexed land.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Quite true.

Viscount HALDANE: On a map which is of great repute.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord.

MORNING SESSION.

Sir JOHN SIMON: My Lords, we took the liberty of having spread out for your Lordships, in case you cared to see it, the map from the British Museum. It is not in fact quite correctly reproduced.

Viscount FINLAY: Is this it?—(Indicating.)

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is it. It is not quite correctly reproduced in the Canadian Atlas. The copy in the Canadian Atlas contains marks which are not on the British Museum original. I am not saying it is material, I daresay it is some variation traced to some other source. At any rate, it is convenient, I think, to have the actual map before one. It is a map which was made in the year 1755, and was a very celebrated, and in many respects, a very remarkable map. It may well be supposed to have been used after that date for a considerable time in considering these difficult geographical questions. It is quite certain it was used, for example, when the Treaty of Versailles came to be drawn up after the independence of the United States was finally established. As I said yesterday, the name of Mr. Oswald, which you see written in several places on the map—the line is as suggested by Mr. Oswald—that name is the name of the British Commissioner who was engaged in negotiating the Treaty with the United States of America in 1782. In the same way it is a very convenient map, my Lord, to trace the extended boundary of Quebec, which your Lordship saw described in the words of the Statute of 1774.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: We only want the upper part of it.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think, as a matter of fact, for 1774, it may go a little bit down.

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount FINLAY: Are there any material differences in this map as compared with that which we have?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Nothing, for the present purpose, which will matter at all. There is a branch of the case which is coming, which has to be dealt with really in one compartment, about Indian lands, where it may be important to observe the distinction.

Viscount HALDANE: 1755 was the date of this.

Sir JOHN SIMON: 1755 was the year in which Mr. Mitchell made or published the map. If you look at the letter-press on the map, the legend and notes, you will see with how much care he proceeded. If I may say so it is a very honest map, because you will find at the bottom of it what is a little amusing, you will find his statement that he does not know the exact latitude and longitude of a number of places, and he is inviting those who have the map before them to supply him with the additional information. The special merit of the map when it was made is this: instead of relying merely upon the tradition or the fancy of earlier cartographers, Mitchell, who really was a scientific man, used as his principal source of information, the observations that had been made on board ship, observations of latitude and longitude, and he gives a most elaborate table in which he described exactly how he got the points for a whole series of places.

p. 71

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Did you say somewhere there was a note which might be in the handwriting of King George?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I did not say so. I could not help observing that the very abbreviated report in the "Times" newspaper this morning suggested I did. What I said was it came from King George the Third's library, and there was every reason to think it had been before the eye of King George the Third. I am not prepared to say that King George's writing is upon it. I do not think that is so.

Viscount FINLAY: I think all you said was it might be.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It might be. I think it would be useful to the Board, though it is going back for the moment, if, with that map before it, you would allow me to re-read the description of the extended boundary of the Province of Quebec, the boundary which is laid down in the Act of 1774. It is very easy to trace on that map, and it is useful to do so. The boundary you see in the first volume, the red volume, is, your Lordships will remember, by the Legislature, traced, beginning, so to say, at the other end, beginning at the Cape Gaspé end. If I may read the words to your Lordships, you will see how you can trace it very easily on this map. The words which are on pages 158 of now first volume are these: “All the Territories, Islands, and Countries in North America, belonging to the Crown of Great Britain, bounded on the South by a line from the Bay of Chaleurs”—just below the Gaspé Peninsula—“along the High Lands which divide the rivers that empty themselves into the River St. Lawrence from those which fall into the sea”—that is along the spine —“to a point in Forty-five Degrees of Northern Latitude, on the eastern bank of the River Connecticut, keeping the same latitude directly west, through the Lake Champlain, until, in the same latitude, it meets the River St. Lawrence; from thence up to the eastern bank of the said River to the Lake Ontario; thence through the Lake Ontario, and the River commonly called Niagara; and thence along by the Eastern and South-eastern Bank of Lake Erie following the said Bank.”

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

p. 72

Viscount Finlay: That does not correspond with the map, it is in the middle.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: This line is put on for another purpose.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes. Your Lordship is not understanding me to say that a particular line on this map will show you what the line is. I am only saying it is a very convenient map to trace what is meant. The reason, Lord Finlay, why the line you are looking at now ceases to correspond with the description is this, that the map before your Lordship is a map of the library of King George, which would have put upon it the boundary ultimately fixed between the British possessions and the United States of America, a thing that did not happen till 1782, and consequently you are now finding what it is which was lost in that part to the original or to the enlarged Colony of Quebec, owing to the Independence of America. You will find the Province of Quebec, as defined in 1774, embraced four or five States of the Union of the United States, Illinois for example.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It is easy to follow.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is easy to follow; following the bank on the south side of Lake Erie. Then, my Lord, the Legislature in 1774 was a little doubtful as to whether the line they were prescribing would cut off a portion of the Colony of Pennsylvania, they were not quite sure at what point the two ends would meet, so that the Legislature proceeds to provide an alternative description. I will read from that point, if I may, from Ontario: “Through the Lake Ontario, and the River commonly called Niagara; and thence along by the Eastern and South-Eastern Bank of Lake Erie, following the said Bank, until the same shall be intersected by the Northern Boundary, granted by the Charter of the Province of Pennsylvania, in case the same shall be so intersected; and from thence along the said Northern and Western Boundaries of the said Province, until the said Western Boundary strike the Ohio.” That great River, of course, ultimately flows into the Mississippi. Then alternatively the Legislature said: “But in case the said Bank of the said Lake shall not be found to be so intersected, then following the said Bank until it shall arrive at that point of the said Bank which shall be nearest to the North-western angle of the said Province of Pennsylvania and thence by a right line”—that means by a straight line—“to the said North-western Angle of the said Province.” Just going round the square.

22 Oct., 1926.
Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: There might be a little interval at the corner.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is what they had in mind: “Thence along the Western Boundary of the said Province until it strike the River Ohio.” You will see it is about half-way down.

p. 73

Viscount FINLAY: More than half.

Sir JOHN SIMON: More than half: “And along the Bank of the said river, Westward, to the Banks of the Mississippi, and Northward to the Southern Boundary of the Territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England, trading to Hudson's Bay.”

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It does not give the Northward line; is that supposed to be a straight line?

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is the Western Line. Then all it says is: “Striking until it reaches the Southern Boundary of the territory granted to the Merchants Adventurers of England, trading to Hudson's Bay.” That is to say that this boundary thus placed as it was laid down in 1774 would have included a portion of what is now the State of Ohio, it would have included Indiana, it would have included Illinois, it would have included Wisconsin, and it would have included a part of Minnesota. It is those areas I have just described using the nomenclature of the States of the United States which are cut out by the Treaty of Versailles in 1782. What you find marked on that map and I think is described in handwriting as the line of Mr. Oswald, or something of the kind, is the line which the British Commissioner negotiating with the United States was proposing as the boundary. It is very nearly, though not exactly, what the boundary was.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: In other words it fixes the Southern boundary and the Western boundary.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It does. Your Lordship sees it plainly treats the Southern boundary of the Hudson's Bay territory as being if not ascertained, ascertainable, and ascertainable on some principle.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: And as constituting the Northern boundary of New Canada.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is right.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: You infer the Eastern boundary was the sea?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think so.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Or perhaps, apart from the words of title, the Eastern boundary was Labrador.

Sir JOHN SIMON: There is no doubt at all, it will not be a matter of dispute. The effect of this Act of 1774 was to throw inside the Province of Quebec, which now became a perfectly enormous area, the whole of Labrador, because Newfoundland ceased to have any area on the mainland at all.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Unless some portion of it was held by Hudson's Bay. There is rather an ambiguous line.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Your Lordship is right about that. That is how the matter stands.

Still perhaps keeping that map for a moment. if I may ask it, before the Board, I would like to return to the point which I was endeavouring to make just before the Committee adjourned yesterday. When we come to the Statute of 1825, which your Lordships will remember you were considering shortly before you rose yesterday, you observe the very striking fact that the statute is re-annexing to Quebec, which in the meantime has shrunken again, a portion of the coast of Labrador. That is the language of the statute and one naturally assumes therefore that if you can identify the area which is thus being made the subject of transfer this will throw some light on what is the meaning of "coast" in this connection, and will help one to judge whether the coast is a mere narrow selvedge or whether, on the contrary, it goes hack to the height of land. Now, my Lord, with that in mind—your Lordships will have this map no doubt, the top of it, in recollection and can examine it again if you think right—one must I think, be struck with the fact that a map of this sort and other maps also at the time showed that, if you started from Sandy Bay or Anse Sablon, as you are directed to do, and if you drew a line due North from Anse Sablon to the 52nd parallel (which is there quite close on the top of the map), and then travelled due West, you were as a matter of fact going up to the height of land as this map showed, you were reaching a parallel, the 52nd parallel of latitude, in which according to this map the head waters of the River St. John were; and you were therefore describing, almost describing by metes and bounds, my pink area, this oblong. And you find as this map showed, and as the fact is, that so far from being a mere selvedge or strip along the sea-shore, this part of the coast of Labrador, to use the language of the statute, is at the Western and of the pink it deep matter of 40 miles or thereabouts.

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Eastern?

Sir JOHN SIMON: East, yes, my Lord, and owing to the configuration of the coast line a deeper matter, say, 120 miles, when you come to the other end. I venture to think that that is a very significant thing and the actual language used in the section is language upon which I most strongly rely.

Viscount HALDANE: Where is the 120 miles, I just want to see that?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I do not know whether your Lordship would allow me to stretch over and just point on the map. I can save your

p. 75

Lordship trouble, it is on the smaller map too. May I just point out what I mean, if I may use the original map for the moment? It is the same thing. What I mean, my Lord, is this, the 52nd parallel—

Viscount HALDANE: That is quite distinctly marked.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I do not think, if I may say so. the point I am putting is quite so easy for me to put on my little sketch map as it is on this original. The 52nd parallel is the parallel just at the top edge of this plan; the 52nd parallel is also the parallel in which the head waters of the River St. John are indicated as rising. If I take Sandy Bay, or Anse Sablon, which is here (indicating), opposite Belle Isle, and if I do what the statute tells me to do, namely, cut off a portion of the said coast by drawing a line due north from Sandy Bay till I reach the 52nd parallel—

Viscount HALDANE: That is Blanc Sablon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is, and then go west, I am, according to the information given me on that map, in fact, removing and annexing to Quebec something which I am told is coast, and which, according to the cartographer here and other similar maps, runs back to the height of land; and it is really very nearly meaningless to speak of this statutory re-transfer as a re-transfer of coast if, as a matter of fact, coast is this mere selvedge.

Viscount FINLAY: But where is such a selvedge defined?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Nowhere. Your Lordship means this mile?

Viscount FINLAY: Yes.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I do not, of course, desire to carry the argument into my friend's camp at this stage, but, of course, as I indicated to the Board yesterday, it does appear to me that when the turn comes for the Canadian case to be put before the Board, one of the most serious considerations to be weighed will be this: Where do you get this one mile—why one mile, why half a mile, why two miles? As I think Lord Finlay said yesterday, if you mean by a coast line a line, a line is a thing that has length without breadth.

But if, on the other hand, the word "coast," both in these documents of grant and in the reputable maps of the period and also, I think, in the proper use of the English language, at any rate in the 15th, 16th and 17th centuries, perhaps even later—if it constantly indicated the slope of the land down to the water, so that the use of the expression in itself carried you back to what you may call a scientific boundary behind, then the whole thing is explained.

Viscount HALDANE: You have told us nothing, so far, about the

p. 76

Sir John Simon.

Ashuanipi River and Lake; these, I take it, were inside, according to you, the height of land.

Viscount Haldane.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I would like to look at these. I have not the actual point of geography in mind. Are they on my little sketch map?

Viscount HALDANE: Yes, you see just about the blue line.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: In the green?

Viscount HALDANE: Yes.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think it will be found that that does drain into the Hamilton River. That is the reason.

Viscount HALDANE: There is a group of them in the North East corner. I suppose you say all those are within the mountains?

Viscount Haldane.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lords. For the purposes of my argument, your Lordship will assume I have got here indicated correctly the way the water runs. Of course, it is a matter which could be checked on the ground.

Viscount HALDANE: I would have liked to have seen some representation of the mountains which formed the height of land; does that appear in any of the maps?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, I am going to put before your Lordships some of those which show it. The land rises, and you have a very considerable rise, as you pass up the Hamilton River; in fact, as your Lordships probably know, because recently it has become a matter of great interest, there is a very splendid fall of water in the Hamilton River, one of the finest falls of water in North America, and, of course, very valuable; and I am not surprised that people cast rather envious eyes on this fall; but it does not alter the fact that the water is flowing into the Atlantic, and if I am right as to the meaning of "the said Coasts," that particular part is part of the territory which falls on my side of the line.

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: Will you tell me whether the hills and mountains which form the height of land run up to the, shall we call it, the green or the blue?

Sir JOHN SIMON: The green we will call it.

Viscount HALDANE: They go up round the height, and then do they come round to the East and follow the height right up to Cape Chidley?

p. 77

Viscount Haldane.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Your Lordship will appreciate the test (and I submit the right test if my submission is right) is the test of what is the divide, which way the water goes. Of course, the thing is not sloping down like the roof of a house from the ridge to the eaves; naturally there are very great variations, but at the same time the point is that there is, and must be, of course, scientifically and geographically, and there is, of course, a continuous line of which you can assert that water from Heaven that falls on one side of it, will run down until it passes out into the Atlantic between Cape Chidley and Blanc Sablon, and water on the other side of it will either run down into the water of the Hudson Bay, and therefore will traverse a part of the old Hudson Bay area, or else will run down into the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and therefore was part of the old Quebec area; and given, of course, an irregular portion of the earth's surface—it is very mountainous, in fact the mountains go up to a considerable height—it follows necessarily that you are able in that way to divide the whole peninsula as between different (what we may call) natural units; and my case, and I venture to think much of the strength of my case, is this: that those responsible for attributing these different areas to one authority or the other were not leaving this whole thing to guesswork or fancy at some time hereafter, but they were using expressions which, by their very nature, provided the formula for a scientific boundary without the need of further direction.

Viscount Haldane.

Viscount HALDANE: I will tell you a thing which puzzles me: the George River, which is further North, seems to run through the heights of land.

Sir JOHN SIMON: If I may say so, that is either because my map is not quite so perfect or just because it is a little difficult to read. It is not so. The George River is not connected with the Fraser River. Does your Lordship see the Fraser River in the green? The Fraser River takes its rise in a lake there which is just at the height.

22 Oct., 1926.

Viscount HALDANE: That is what I followed. What is puzzling me is further towards the end of the George River.

Sir JOHN SIMON: The South, my Lord.

Viscount HALDANE: To the North the George River apparently runs up and gets towards Cape Chidley; before it gets to Cape Chidley it seems to run over the height of land.

Sir JOHN SIMON: No, with great respect, it does not.

Sir John Simon.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: It falls into the Ungava Bay.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It has never been Newfoundland at all.

p. 78

Viscount HALDANE: It falls into Ungava Bay.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes.

Viscount HALDANE: Then that line is not the line of the upper part of the river, but the line of the Ungava Bay coast.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I see what it is; Ungava Bay is a great Bay inside Hudson's Straits, and Ungava Bay, and what I may call the coast of Ungava Bay, using "coast" in my sense, has never at any time been annexed to Newfoundland—never.

Viscount HALDANE: I see that the coast of Ungava Bay seems to run through the height of land just as you come to Cape Chidley.

Sir JOHN SIMON: You are getting, you see, to a very sharp promontory, that is all it is.

Viscount HALDANE: Yes, you are, the Cape Chidley promontory.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am not for the moment asserting that the actual delimitation of this height of land is absolutely accurate, though we believe it is. I am only using my sketch map, which has been made as accurately as we can—as a matter of fact it is based on the materials of a very distinguished geographer, A. P. Low, who was in the Canadian Geographical Survey and surveyed this area—all I am saying is, assume for a moment that the rain from Heaven (if they have rain in that part of the world) when falling upon the earth will find its way, owing to the configuration of the surface, to Ungava Bay on the one hand or Hudson Bay, to the Gulf of St. Lawrence on the other, and to the Atlantic on the third hand, then I say the language which was used in the Statutes and in the particular documents of grant and definition, is intended to secure that you have this natural boundary, ascertainable if not ascertained, and there is no ground for saying that the boundary is some wholly arbitrary strip or narrow confine”the language really does not admit of that because that would leave the whole problem in the air. That is the question. As against me, let me put the case as I understand it—no doubt my learned friend will put it much more powerfully—as against me, it is said, and said with very great force, the primary object, perhaps one may say the only object, with which arrangements were made in the Island of Newfoundland and on the Coast of Labrador for a very long period of time was what you may call a fishery object. That is perfectly true. Nothing that I am arguing is intended to deny it at all. It is perfectly true. It is not true that the fishery in question was merely a cod fishery, that is quite untrue; there was also a salmon fishery, a whale fishery, and what is called a sea-cow fishery: it is not in the least true that it was limited to cod; but it is absolutely true that the purpose, the thing to be served in the minds of those who legislated and directed, was unquestionably a fishery.

Viscount HALDANE: I suppose you say the purpose was not only to encourage fishing, but to provide a class of man from whom seamen might be recruited.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is true also, though on this again I think it is necessary to say that what was primarily in the minds of the authority at home in those old days was that the British seamen, the people coming from Bristol and other places—South Wales a lot of them came from, and many Pembrokeshire men it will be interesting to some people to know—coming across the sea as Captains Courageous, as Rudyard Kipling puts it, or coming as “Pêcheurs d’Islande,” as Pierre Loti would say, acquired a skill and hardihood which made them desirable recruits for the British Royal Navy.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: I think the French put a stress on that too.

Viscount Haldane.

Sir JOHN SIMON: They did. You will find documents among these documents (which are very interesting reading though they are not very relevant for the argument) in which a French Company like the Compagnie de Canada, are making representations as to the great importance of there being a grant on lease in this or that area, because they say: this is the way in which you will be able to get stout fellows for the purpose of the French Navy. There is no doubt at all, my point is, of course—it is familiar to every lawyer, and I do not want to spend time insisting on it—the fact that that may have been the primary purpose to be served, when the apportionment and grant was made, is no reason at all for saying that the language of the grant may not be such as to include that land, which at that time, and indeed for hundreds of years afterwards, was regarded as quite worthless.

The Lord Chancellor.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: It is to be remembered too that Graves' Commission does talk about persons residing and settling.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Oh yes, my Lord.

Sir John Simon.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: So that it clearly contemplates some land attached to the coast.

Sir JOHN SIMON: At present I have only been giving your Lordships, as well as I could, a sort of sketch of the case in chronological order; I am afraid I shall have to trouble the Board to go back, and when we go back, you will find again and again, though the important and main interest is on the sea board, the language of the instruction is such as to show quite clearly that justice was to be administered, natives were to be looked after, territory was to be borne in mind, and all that sort of thing.

p. 80

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Of course, you would have to assume that the framers of these documents in 1763, the Commission and the Proclamation, had in mind some definite area when they framed those documents.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, or at any rate, the language they used can be made certain now that it becomes important to see exactly to what point it goes back.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I follow your point on the Act of 1825 so far.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am sure your Lordship does.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Of course the terms of that Act simply show, not only that the part which was cut off from Newfoundland territory was treated as coast, but that the part behind it, as far west as the St. John River at all events, may have come within that restriction.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think so.

Viscount Haldane.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: To what distance is another question.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I quite agree, my Lord. I am not saying there is not a great deal to be said on both sides in a case of this sort, but I am very anxious you should see what are the main considerations.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Does this Lake Ashuanipi go into the River or into the bay? It is in the south-west corner of your plan.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is not connected with the River at all. There is the height of land between them. The Ashuanipi there is a very complicated water system, and if you were to go up the Hamilton River you would be able to spread out and visit a great number of these lakes on either side, but the whole system of lakes carries down to the Hamilton River.

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Viscount HALDANE: Would you tell me before you leave that whether the Beech Lake and the Dyke Lake, the Beech Lake particularly, appear to drain down into the River running to the north, the George River, and that appears to go through the height of land.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It really is not so. I can tell your Lordship it is not so, it is really due to the fact that this little hand map your Lordship has before you has got this blue line rather thickly and heavily coloured, and it is very difficult for the eye to penetrate what is under it. If your Lordship will turn for one moment to Map No. 42 in the Newfoundland Atlas you will see the actual survey, quite a modern survey, by a Canadian geographer.

p. 81

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: On your sketch map if you look at the dotted line running down, you will see that is so drawn, whether it is right or wrong I do not know, that it runs between two lakes.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I quite agree, but it is a little difficult for some eyes to see.

Viscount HALDANE: What does this map represent?

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: If I may be allowed to expound, I think it is useful to do this now. Mr. A. P. Low is a distinguished geographer who was in the service of the Dominion of Canada. If your Lordship looks at the typed note on the left-hand side you will see, "This map in four sheets accompanies the annual report, Volume 8, for 1895, issue in 1897, by the geographical survey of Canada, and illustrates, as one of the legends states, 'Facts obtained during A. P. Low's expeditions of 1892, '93, '94, '95, and '96.' Low was during those years an official of the Canadian Geographical Survey, became Director of that Survey in 1906, and a year later was made Deputy Minister of Mines." If we want to know what is the fact about this area—I am not for the moment talking about any political distribution or any historical matter—the fact is to be found most authoritatively here, and you will see it is this distinguished Canadian official who has dotted right through the map the approximate height of land. If you will start at the top of it, Cape Chidley, you will see there is a dotted line, a long stroke and a dot, which he labels "Limits of Approximate height of land," and he carries that dotted line carefully, it finds its way the whole way round, and improves and quite correctly improves these lakes about which Lord Haldane has been enquiring on the Newfoundland side.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: The difficulty is that extremely complicated part on the left-hand side.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is a very remarkable water system.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: If you follow that dotted line, it does seem to divide rivers running one way from rivers running the other.

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount Finlay.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I daresay. If I may give your Lordship an illustration, which some of us at any rate may have observed, if your Lordship has ever had occasion to pass from Switzerland into Italy by the Bernina Pass, your Lordship will know that as you pass over the Bernina Pass, you come to two lakes; one I think is the Lago Nero and the other the Lago Blanco, if I remember rightly; in some portions of the year the distance between the two lakes is not more perhaps than the width of this room. One of them drains into the Black Sea and the other of them drains into the Adriatic, and that is the point, that is the divide of land; the one that drains into the Black Sea runs into a River which goes through the Engadine, and ultimately gets into the Danube and so into the Black Sea.

p. 82

Viscount FINLAY: In Guiana I think there is a case of that kind, which really makes a sort of Island, because the water at a particular point runs both to the East and to the West.

Viscount Haldane.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: There is one instance as a matter of fact in the continent of North America, which is recorded in one of these maps, where the geographer has written, "At this point the water runs both ways"; and any of us who have been over the Canadian Pacific Railway will remember very well how you reach a particular point where you see the Great Divide, as you look out of the train—which means you watch the water outside the carriage window, and for a long time you see all the streams running one way, and then when you come to a level piece at the top you have the Great Divide, and beyond that the streams run the other way.

The Lord Chancellor.

Viscount HALDANE: When we have a dotted line, "approximate height of land," is there no map which shows what the contour of the height of land is?

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes; I will give your Lordship that. It is a little difficult because it is a sectional matter, but at any rate your Lordship may take it that Mr. A. P. Low is the most accurate authority on the fact of the height of land being at this point; therefore I think I made good what I was suggesting, that really my thick blue line on my sketch map is designed to indicate how it goes.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: This map rather spoils your point about the head of the St. John River, but that you say was owing to a mistake in the old geographies.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: They thought it went up to the fifty-second degree.

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Lord Sumner.

Sir JOHN SIMON: One of the things which Mr. Low points out in his Report (I am going to read you an extract from it later on) is that down to this time everybody has believed that the St. John River is the River which goes up to this point, but, as a matter of fact, they had never traced it the whole way up, and unintentionally people have passed from one stream to another; but what your Lordship said is quite true, we have always had that in mind and, without in the least using this map No. 42 as though it amounted to any admission by Canada, or by some official of Canada, for any purpose whatever, disregarding the fact that he labels it, "Dependency of Newfoundland" (you see the description all along "Dependency of Newfoundland"), nobody had thought of this mile strip in Canada, I am quite certain, in 1895. Dismiss all that. at any rate you get the fact about the height of land. These people had continually traced it up and they had definitely the headwater on one River.

p. 83

Sir John Simon.

Lord SUMNER: On the map of 1755, there is shown, according to Mr. Mitchell, approximately what he took to be the headwaters of St. John's River, which were in the region of 52; therefore, the line taken along the fifty-second parallel would roughly, you say, intersect the headwaters of various rivers including the St. John's River, and you say that appears from the map; but as I read it, it is clear that according to him, they went an indefinite distance further to the North, because they go clean out of the picture altogether, and, for anything the map shows, I might have supposed the headwaters of the St. John's River to be at 62 instead of 52.

Lord Sumner.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think that is true, although I should not have said the map indicated they went indefinitely further.

Lord SUMNER: They are out of the picture altogether.

Sir JOHN SIMON: They are getting very attenuated, the line is becoming very spidery, but I agree, if I may say so, and that was the observation of the Lord Chancellor made to me in rather a different form.

Sir John Simon.

Lord SUMNER: It goes to the importance of the point you are putting about what was probably done on Mitchell's map, which was 1755; it was used in 1763 and probably down to 1825, and following the false geography got from that map we may read the descriptions of the various documents as meaning that the line is to run at where they supposed the height of land would be.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I quite agree.

Lord SUMNER: Unless you make out that Mitchell's map shows the height of land to be round about 52, which it does not show, I do not see how that argument is made out.

Lord Sumner.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I agree, and I am much obliged to your Lordship, because I think the real contention is more correctly put in a slightly different form. What your Lordship said clears up the point. What I am really concerned to insist on is that this pink piece was cut out of a greater whole, which is "The Coast of Labrador"; it is cutting out a portion of the Coast of Labrador.

Sir John Simon.

Lord SUMNER: As the Lord Chancellor said some time ago, that is a point you have made very clearly; you said it is idle to take 120-mile shears to cut a mile boundary line.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think your Lordship's way of putting it to me is really the proper way. I agree I had not put it quite accurately. It is not necessary at all to my argument, and your Lordship has made this plain to me, to say that there would be nothing at all, as it were, behind the fifty-second parallel, behind the pink piece, which at any time would be regarded as the Coast of Labrador; what is necessary for my argument is to say: the Coast of Labrador was at any rate a thing of such depth that a direction to cut 40 miles into it, and then to cut straight along to the west, was taking out a portion of a whole.

Lord SUMNER: Still inside the Coast of Labrador, which is taken away altogether; but you want it, if you can make it good in any way, for another purpose, because supposing you displace this mile strip, which you are endeavouring to do at present, you have to show, somehow or other, that the height of land is the boundary. If you could have got out of Mitchell clear evidence that the height of land was, on this map, somewhere along the line 52, and then you found that the line 52 was adopted by the Act of 1825 and elsewhere, you have made a step in the direction of saying that the Legislature has laid down the height of land as the boundary to be adopted, although they did not know where it was.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes.

Lord SUMNER: But if Mitchell does not show that, you have to get your starting centre elsewhere. It does not follow that the height of land was the alternative to the mile wide strip.

Sir JOHN SIMON: There may be intermediate views.

Lord SUMNER: The importance of it is that the Order in Council of 1880 gives everything to Canada that is not Newfoundland.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes.

Lord SUMNER: Therefore, Newfoundland, in order to make out its case, has not only to go beyond the mile long, but it has got to fetch up at the point you reach.

Sir JOHN SIMON: This is not a case where there is what you can call an onus of proof; the thing stands equally balanced; but I quite agree that I am not at liberty to say: this is a no man's land, and now I want it. If it is no man's land it is not mine.

Lord SUMNER: You have to say that the area you want, whatever it is, is Newfoundland according to the Order in Council of 1880; so it rests on you to march inland and establish your line if you can.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Quite. Now if I may just point, from my own point of view, what results from your Lordship's observation, for which I am much obliged, what I should really like to urge from that point of view is this: I do suggest, and I think this still stands, that

p. 85

examination of a map like Mitchell's map, goes to show that if you were going to cut the pink oblong from "The said Coast of Labrador," you would not be trying to take out of the total more than is in it. I quite see the point that the two things are not necessarily coincident. The point is that if you are directed to take a pint out of a quart pot, it is necessary to be sure that the quart is at least as big as the pint; and if the direction is that the pink oblong is to be taken out of "The said Coast of Labrador" then, "The said Coast of Labrador" must be at least as deep as the pink strip; and I use the map of Mitchell, I think, perhaps more accurately and more aptly, if I slightly vary the way in which I was putting the argument (I see the point entirely I think) when I say: Having regard to the maps available at the time and assuming that a map like Mitchell's might very well have been carefully examined, you can see at once that when Parliament said. "Now you are to take your shears and cut away, till you come to parallel 52," they were not telling you to cut away to such a depth that you passed the boundary of the Coast. That, I think to be the accurate way to put it. If I may say so, now that the point has turned up, and before we pass away from Map No. 42, you will observe this other thing, that if you take this Map No. 42, the approximate height of land, though indeed it is at one point not north of parallel 52, it then takes a curve upwards, and there is a bulge; and it is very interesting to notice that in the comparatively recent Canadian maps, of which, of course, there has been a great number issued, some of them, although recognising the boundary comes up to the 52nd parallel and then runs along the line, indicate this bulge as going into Canada, before we begin to run up the height of land towards Cape Chidley.

Now, perhaps, as your Lordships has this atlas before you. you will turn to two other maps, just to see what I mean. I will ask your Lordships to turn, by way of example, to Map No.39, which is a map prepared by the authority of the Minister of the Interior of Canada, and issued by the Department of the Interior at Ottawa in July 1890, with a series of sources for it, which are mentioned. Now your Lordships see that the map so drawn indicates very clearly the view of the Canadian Authorities. You will find in the top right-hand corner of the map "Prepared by authority of the Honourable Edgar Dewdney, Minister of the Interior. Department of the Interior, Ottawa, July, 1890." Would your Lordships observe the way in which it is done here: A red dotted line is used. Will your Lordships search for a moment for the boundary as it rises up from Blanc Sablon? You will see that there is a line which has got a red inscription "Due North and South Line," and it is carried up to the 52nd parallel. Then, although as a matter of fact they simply leave

Sir John Simon.

the parallel, the parallel is the boundary, as your Lordships see, until you come to this red variation in about the meridian 62. Then you get a red variation which wanders between the lakes, and which is labelled "Height of Land approximately"—this was, of course, before the survey by Mr. Low, so that they did not know the thing accurately then—and it gives the height of land

Viscount Haldane.

p. 86

approximately. It begins to go northerly, and it takes its way between the two water systems, and comes out at Cape Chidley.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: What is the line shown between where the red does not go any further north, and the red at the subsequent point?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is parallel No. 52, my Lord.

Viscount HALDANE: That is not what I mean. You see that from parallel No. 52, the red line goes up.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord.

Viscount HALDANE: And then it turns round, and there is nothing shown, red or anything else, between that point and the point of the red height of land further up.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think, with great respect, that there is a continuous red line which runs right up to Cape Chidley from the point where your Lordship started from—a continuous line.

Viscount HALDANE: You follow it down until it turns the corner?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord.

Viscount HALDANE: That explains it.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I do not in the least wish to stress this part of the case too much, although I must say that I think it is a little bit striking. Here you have the Minister of the Interior, the Ministry of the Interior, the very Ministry which is responsible in Canada for these matters, issuing with its authority, publicly, in 1890, an exposition of the relation between the Dependency of Newfoundland—your Lordship sees the words "Dependency of Newfoundland"—on the one hand, and the Province of Quebec on the other hand.

22 Oct., 1926.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Where does it say that the height of land which is marked in red is the boundary?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think nobody can read the inscriptions

Sir John Simon.

on this map. "Canada," "Dependency of Newfoundland" and "Quebec," without saying, "This is intended to indicate that the Peninsula of Labrador is distributed in that way."

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I am not sure.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I will only say that I do not see any other method.

p. 87

The Lord Chancellor.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: If that was so, you would expect the red line to continue until it joined the upright line from Blanc Sablon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I really think that that is due to the fact that the 52nd parallel is the parallel that is being followed until you get it coloured. I will show your Lordship another map in a moment, showing that filled in. I do not want to press this unduly, but it seems to me that it is difficult to suppose that, as late as 1890, the Dominion authorities did not take this view. And I am going to prove it by despatches and by declarations of the most solemn kind.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I doubt whether you can find much on this map. The red line continues from the corner right into what is admittedly Canada. There cannot be a boundary there.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think your Lordship will find that I am right. Does your Lordship see the big word "Canada."

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I do.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Will your Lordship observe that that inscription is entirely to the left of the red line which is called "height of land"?

The LORD CHANCELLOR: That is right.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Then just at the bottom will your Lordship kindly observe the inscription "Province of Quebec"?

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Yes.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is entirely within the boundary which I am indicating to your Lordship.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It crosses the indication of the height of land.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am sure your Lordship will forgive me. It only crosses the indication of the height of land at a place where it is irrelevant for the purpose in hand.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: That is where the thing does not quite hang together.

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: May I make it quite plain to your Lordship what I mean? When your Lordship says that the word "Province," at the letter I, crosses the indication of the height of land, the height of land there is the height of land which divides the water that flows into the Hudson's Bay from the water which flows into the Gulf of St.

Lawrence. It does not matter which it does, for the purposes of the Province of Quebec.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I know that perfectly well.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am sure your Lordship does.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Yes; and that shows that that is not intended to be an inter-colonial boundary, or at all events not the whole of it.

Sir JOHN SIMON: If your Lordship pleases. I do not want to stress the thing a shade more than it ought to be stressed. If your Lordship thinks that it does not indicate any more than that, I am quite content, because I have plenty more.

I will just take one other at the moment, and then I think probably your Lordship would like me to resume the chronology. Perhaps your Lordships would now kindly look at Map No. 35. This is another map which is issued by order of the Minister of the Interior of the Dominion, and it is a map of the Dominion of Canada, published in 1878, by the Department of the Interior, Dominion Lands Office, Ottawa. Your Lordship will observe that so far as Canada is concerned, it is all coloured.

Viscount HALDANE: Coloured pink.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: This is not open to the observations which I made just now.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think I may say that I have dozens which are not. Now I am going to ask your Lordship to be so good as to take the original of this map in your hand, because if your Lordship's copy is like mine, there has been a failure to colour a small portion of what is sea water. I do not know whether it is so in your Lordship's copy, but it is a mere mistake in the printing; the original is quite all right. I will hand the original to your Lordship. (Same handed.)

The LORD CHANCELLOR: What is the meaning of the words "Supposed boundaries."

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is what they say. I suppose that your Lordship will say whether the supposition is correct.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It is a curious expression.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Oh, it is, my Lord, yes. I do not think that there can be any doubt at all that the the year when this was printed for public information by the Minister of the Interior, and the Dominion Lands Office—I suppose he was inviting enterprising people from the old country to go and take up land in Canada—he did not conceive that he had got any—

Lord SUMNER: That map means that the height of land is not the boundary, because there is no height of land in the whole of the world that is straight for several degrees of west longitude.

Sir JOHN SIMON: With great respect—will your Lordship forgive me—what he is drawing is this: he is drawing the 52nd parallel until it strikes the height of land.

Lord SUMNER: That is it. And here it strikes another height of land.

Sir JOHN SIMON: But the height of land runs up, and that is the only place where the words “height of land” are used. He does not say with reference to the boundary of the 52nd parallel, “That is the height of land.” What he says is, “That is the line which the Statute cuts off and adds to Canada.”

Viscount HALDANE: I should have thought that somebody had made a map at some time showing not merely the mountains, but the hills and the rising land; but there does not seem to be any such map.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am conscious that I am putting a great strain upon the patience of everybody. There are one or two, but, I am afraid, not what your Lordship would wish, that is to say, not such a good map as your Lordship would have of your native Scotland.

Viscount HALDANE: I should like to see a map like the map of the Grampians.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, but the mischief of it is that there is not on the coast of Labrador anyone who can say “My name is Norval, on the Grampian Hills my father tends his sheep.”

22 Oct., 1926.

Viscount HALDANE: It does not rise to that.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Well, my Lord, the truth is, of course, that we are dealing with a country which is very largely undiscovered.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: But still, there are geographers who do these things. They have done it in Africa, and I should have thought that it would have been done here.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am going to give your Lordship all the help that I can.

Lord SUMNER: You will find that the heights are put in in figures. There are plenty of them.

p. 90

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am not ignorant of that, my Lord, but it is a little difficult for the moment.

Viscount HALDANE: You are going to help us as much as you can.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord. My Lord Summer's observation is perfectly just, and I had that in my mind; but I was a little afraid that we might get on to another part of the case. You do find in Low's survey a number of heights given, and if you look at it carefully you can reconstruct the height of the country for yourself from that. Now, if I may just repeat what I was saying, if you look at a map like that Map No. 35, I think it does reinforce the point in the form in which I tried to put it to you, in view of the observation which my Lord was good enough to make to me; that is to say, that the Statute did not take away necessarily from Newfoundland, as between these two lateral limits, the whole of what was called the Coast; there may have been some hinterland, which was still the Coast, but what they took away was what I have called, very inaccurately, an oblong, by which I mean an area the northern boundary of which is a straight line running along the parallel No. 52. And again and again that has been the view which has been taken officially in Canada. On the other hand, when you come to the boundary of Newfoundland and Labrador on the West, running up to Cape Chidley, there has been no Statute which has taken a ruler and tried to draw a straight line; and the consequence is that you must find some boundary which will have, of course, turns in it; and the boundary which we suggest, and the boundary which this map indicates, is the height of land.

Viscount Haldane.

Viscount HALDANE: I suppose the only question that we are dealing with now is a question of whether the description of the Statute of 1825 agrees with what is shown here as to the 52nd parallel and the height of land.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, I think that is the way to put it.

Viscount HALDANE: I think that is the only question.

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord.

Mr. MACMILLAN: May I ask to see the original of Map No. 35, when my Lord has finished with it?

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I have only got the words, "Height of land and supposed boundary."

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, that is right, and I will resist the temptation of asking your Lordship to look at a lot of other traps at the moment, because I want to keep to chronology, rather than to a lot of maps. With regard to the supposed boundary, this is an interesting point; it has no doubt been a matter of some hesitation as to whether or not, when you carry the boundary back on the 52nd parallel from the point where that north line strikes the 52nd parallel from Blanc Sablon, you go back in a straight line right away, or whether, when you meet the height of land which then begins to take a bulge inward, you follow the height of land. Some of the maps are maps which give that sort of bulge, and therefore I imagine that "Supposed boundary" may very well be referable to the doubt which undoubtedly has been felt as to which of those two things should prevail.

p. 91

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: That does not wholly explain it, because those words are used for the northward line.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I had not noticed that, my Lord.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: If you look at it you will see that it is so.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am sure your Lordship is quite right.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It says "Height of land and supposed boundary."

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, quite right.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: But the Act tells you, Sir John. That really is the boundary under the Act, is it not, because the Act tells you to take the line northwards to the 52nd parallel and then take a line westward of that line, that is, to the west of every part of it; and it can only really be to the west of that line, if you are within the 52nd parallel.

Sir JOHN SIMON: You would think so, I agree, my Lord. I am only saying that there is not a complete consistency in the views taken by the map makers.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: Then you go west along the 52nd parallel until you meet the other line.

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord. Now may I take one more example to show what I mean? Let us take a map like Map No. 41. I am not saying, and this is not a case where I could say, that these people are stopped. We are trying to find out what is the true construction. I am asking your Lordships' attention to Map No. 41, which illustrates the way in which it has been sometimes regarded. If I may say so respectfully, I agree with Lord Warrington that I should not have thought it was right, but still it is my duty to call attention to it. This again is an official Departmental map. It is one of many, and your Lordships will understand that it is not the whole map, but it is a section of it.

p. 92

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: That part that bulges there, just after you leave the due north and south line, that first bulge, cannot be said to be to the west of the due north and south line.

Sir JOHN SIMON: No, my Lord, not in one sense. But it does illustrate another possible view, and it is the view which my Lord Sumner was criticising just now, that is to say that you undoubtedly go up to the 52nd parallel, and the idea is that that gives you a sort of starting off point. Then it would be an indication that Canada considered that from that point she can sweep in anything which the height of land gives her. But I am not much concerned with that detail, especially as that line is not very accurately drawn in any case; but what is interesting is that here again you get what you get again and again and again, a perfectly explicit assertion on the official and departmental map of the Dominion, that non-Canada—that is what I will call it, non-Canada—is very far from being this little selvedge, but apparently it is this very considerable territory.

Now I think your Lordships have had enough of these maps for the moment, because they have at some stage to be dealt with very systematically; and I want to invite your Lordships now to look at this. I have called attention to the language of the Statute of 1825 for the purpose of seeing what it is which Quebec is given by re-annexation. Now there is another way in which you may test the position as it was at 1825, and it is this: whatever Quebec then gained in the pink oblong, the Governor of Newfoundland lost; and, therefore, if you examine the Commission which is given to the Governor of Newfoundland after the change, you will see what is the language which is used for the purpose of describing the reduced limits in respect of which he has jurisdiction.

Viscount HALDANE: The Act of 1825 was a repeal pro tanto of the Act of 1809.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It was, my Lord.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Where is this Commission?

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Your Lordship sees that I am approaching the same question, but from the other point of view. If your Lordship will, therefore, turn to the second volume, at page 718, you will find the Commission.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It is 1825. This happened to be in the same year as the Act.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Of course, it had to be, my Lord, because there is a continuing authority addressed to the Governor for the time being, and the moment you take out something from his jurisdiction you must revise his Commission. He has already had one, as a matter of fact, and this is a new Commission to Sir Thomas Cochrane, who at that time was the Governor of Newfoundland. It is on page 718 of the second volume, and if your Lordships will just look down you will see what his new area is. It recites the old area, and then if your Lordships will carry your eyes down at once to line 28 on page 718—I will come back if necessary—you will see the words “to be our Governor and Commander in Chief, in and over, our Island of Newfoundland, and the Islands adjacent, and all the Coast of Labrador, from the entrance of Hudsons Streights, to a line to be drawn due North and South from Anse Sablon, on the said Coast, to the Fifty second degree of North latitude.” I am not saying that there may not be some difficulties of construction there suggested, but at any rate it is not very easy to suppose that a gentleman who was given a Commission in that form was a person who had nothing in the world to do with territory which was running back to the east of that line as far as the 52nd parallel.

p. 93

Viscount HALDANE: Where is this passage?

Viscount Haldane.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is in line 32. Now if I may put a case, just suppose that during the currency of this new Commission of Sir Thomas Cochrane, an individual were to commit a crime thirty miles back from the coastline, and five miles to the east of this imaginary line. Has Sir Thomas Cochrane got jurisdiction, or has he not? It seems almost impossible to suppose that the people who drew up this document imagined he would not have jurisdiction. There is a judicial system. I am going to show in due course that there were both judicial and administrative arrangements made by Newfoundland on Labrador; and whatever is or is not involved in this language of grant and authority, I should respectfully submit that it was very difficult to suppose that it did not cover that.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: Let us look at the words: "All the Coast of Labrador, from the entrance of Hudsons Streights, to a line to be drawn due North and South from Anse Sablon, on the said Coast, to the Fifty second degree of North latitude, and all the Islands adjacent to the said part of the Coast of Labrador." That, of course, does not give all that is in the boundary.

Sir JOHN SIMON: No, my Lord, but I want your Lordship just to consider the case that I put a moment ago. That being the language which is used in the authority to the Governor, suppose that an occasion arises for the exercise of his authority, judicial or administrative, at a point which is, say, 30 miles inland, and which is to the east of this line: it is difficult to suppose that the view was, "Oh, of course, I have got no authority there, because it is more than a mile from the sea shore." Does not this document, whatever else it does, just like the contemporaneous Statute of 1825, imply a view that “the said Coasts of Labrador,” between whatever termini the jurisdiction of the Governor of Newfoundland for the time being may be measured, is a thickness of land, a depth of land, which at any rate is not exceeded at Anse Sablon by going back to the 52nd degree of north latitude. That is the only point. Perhaps it is convenient just to observe what is common with these Commissions, that on the next page, page 719, in line 5, you find the words “and our will and pleasure is that there shall henceforward be a Council within our said Islands and Territories.”

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: Where is it?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is in the 6th line on page 719. “Territories” is a word that is constantly used for this mainland, your Lordships will find—“Islands and Territories.” In the same way, at line 31, you find the words “to take the usual oath for the due execution of the office and trust of our Governor and Commander in Chief in and over our said Islands and territories, and for the due and impartial administration of Justice.” In the same way at page 720, at line 7, “and give to all Judges, Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs, and other persons holding any Civil Offices or places of trust or emolument within the said Islands and territories.” On the same page, near the bottom, at line 36, you will find: “And it is our further will and pleasure that you shall and may keep and use the Public Seal of our said Island of Newfoundland and its dependencies for sealing all things whatsoever that pass the Seal of our said Island and its dependencies.” You will remember that the dependency of Newfoundland is an expression that you find again and again. Then at line 40 you find “Islands and territories.” On the next page, page 721, at line 10, there is: “And we do hereby give and grant unto the said Sir Thomas John Cochrane full power and authority by and with the advice and consent of our said Council to erect and appoint or set apart convenient Court Houses for the holding the Supreme Court and Circuit Courts within the said Islands and territories.” It cannot possibly have been that the Supreme Court was going to sit on the sands of the seashore. In the same way there are provisions about appointing to benefices in the territories, and so on.

It is perfectly fair to say, in answer to that, where the language used in formal documents may often be large, it may have very little practical application to some portions of the area indicated, and that is quite true.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: There is another passage at the bottom of page 721: “And we do hereby likewise give and grant unto you full power and authority with the advice and consent of our said Council to settle and agree with the Inhabitants of our said Islands and territories, for such lands, tenements and hereditaments as are now or hereafter shall be in our power to dispose of.”

The LORD CHANCELLOR: And just above that there is power to build cities and boroughs.

p. 95

Viscount Haldane.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It would become quite a populous place if all this happened. I am not in the least, I hope, exaggerating this. I quite recognise that in the formal document you may get rather widespread language which, when it comes to the practical business of administration, may come to very little. It was a wild and almost uninhabited place. The number of people who were there might, I dare say, have been counted by hundreds. As a matter of fact, during the last century, for very considerable periods, the actual administration of justice on the mainland has been by Newfoundland, at one time by a Judge of the High Court, and at other times by other judicial officers. It is true that the actual administration has not gone very far inland. It has gone as far as the very inmost end of Hamilton Inlet, for example, which is 120 miles in from the general trend of the Coast. In the same way, when it comes to administration, no doubt it is true that the suppression of crime and the arrest of offenders, and all that, in the nature of things has been very limited, and the area in which it has happened has been comparatively small. That is not the point. The point is that when you examine, as you are required by His Majesty to examine, the Statutes, Orders in Council, and Proclamations, is not the true inference in point of construction that if the occasion arises when jurisdiction has to be exercised in this hinterland, which was at that time quite wild and uninhabited, the authority given to exercise it is given to the Governor of Newfoundland? That is really the point. I think it would be convenient to complete this sketch. I am afraid in some ways it must still be regarded as a sketch, the details of which must be filled up by chronology. I had got to 1825. Your Lordships will be glad to know that whatever has happened since 1825, there has been no further attempt either to enlarge or to diminish by statutory enactment the areas attributed either to Newfoundland or to the Canadian authorities.

Viscount HALDANE: How far can you make use of usage there? If there is a clear expression in a Statute, you cannot merely deal with what they have done on the map.

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I do not think you can. My own view, which I submit most humbly to the Board, is that what one has finally to do is to take the language of the formal documents, and that what has been done under them, though no doubt matters which your Lordships will carefully consider, is an entirely subordinate question. It is quite possible that it has been done in error or misunderstanding. In so far as it has been done by common consent on both sides, and still more in so far as it has been conceded by one side to the other, probably your Lordships would think that a fact of rather more significance; but in the end we come back to the question as to what under the Statutes, Orders in Council, and Proclamations, in the area which is indicated by 45 the words used. All I am anxious to emphasise, even at the risk of much repetition, is that it is no answer to my case to say; Oh, but the thing that people were interested in was a fishery, and they were only bothering themselves about a few ships. That has nothing to do with it. It is an elementary proposition that the particular reason why you pass a particular piece of legislation, or exercise the prerogative—the motive, in other words, of what is done—may be a useful indication, but it does not cut down the proper meaning of the language used; for it may very well be that in an Act of Parliament, though your immediate purpose is addressed to a comparatively limited area, yet with the object of effecting your purpose you do as a matter of fact carve out a larger area, a fortiori in the case where the back land was regarded at the time and for many years afterwards as perfectly worthless. The alternative will have to be considered as to whether really there is any other indication of a narrower sort which the Tribunal can adopt and decide, always remembering that they are not invited to say what they think would be a convenient, or a reasonable, or an average boundary; they are invited to say what these documents say the boundary is.

Viscount Haldane.

Sir John Simon.

Let us take shortly the remaining chronology. In 1840, as your Lordships know very well, the Imperial Statute 3 & 4 Victoria, Chapter 35, was passed, which reunited the two Provinces of Canada, Upper Canada and Lower Canada, after Lord Durham's report. I rather fancy, going through the earlier history, I did not happen to mention the year in which the Province of Quebec was divided into two, but the year, as your Lordships probably recall, was, as a matter of fact, 1791.

Viscount Haldane.

Viscount HALDANE: Then came the reunion and representative government, and finally I think Lord Aitken brought in a responsible government in the 'forties.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is so. It is a point which is very often misunderstood. The passage from representative to responsible government, that all-important stage in dominion development, is not due to an Act of Parliament at all, but it is due to the decision that the composition of the Executive Council, which advises the King's representative, shall be of one political colour on the recommendation of the chief adviser, and shall continue as long as it is able to command parliamentary support.

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount Haldane.

Viscount HALDANE: That is so; but that apparently simple proposition took years to work out under Lord Durham, who was a very remarkable man, and had great tenacity of purpose, and it was not until about 1847 that a responsible government was established.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Your Lordship is quite right. Perhaps one may say that Lord Grey of Reform Bill fame, had as much to do with it as anybody. There is a remarkable book called "Lord Grey's Colonial Policy." He sent to a very large number of His Majesty's Governors the despatches that directed them in choosing their advisers to choose from the body which was able to secure parliamentary support. In the case of Newfoundland you may take it that self-government in that sense began about 1855.

p. 97

Viscount HALDANE: Will you just tell me this, with regard to the status of Newfoundland? It is described as a colony; but in what way is it short of a dominion? It has responsible as well as representative government.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is a dominion, but I have been careful to use language which I believe is approved by Newfoundland opinion. Newfoundland takes great pride in calling itself the oldest Colony under the British Flag, and in no way resent, but rather applauds, the description of it as the Colony of Newfoundland. You will see this case is described as presented by the Colony of Newfoundland.

Viscount HALDANE: It is really a dominion. It first called itself a colony.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Its Prime Minister at this moment is attending the Conference of Dominion Premiers here.

Viscount HALDANE: Is there any technical distinction between a dominion and a colony?

Sir JOHN SIMON: No, my Lord; none.

Viscount HALDANE: Not that I know of.

Viscount Haldane.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: In statutory language there are many instances of the sort, such as the Colonial Boundaries Act, or the Colonial Laws Validity Act, where you have a schedule which shows which are the areas under His Majesty the King which are being dealt with.

Viscount HALDANE: It is a constitutional difference.

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is it. I was saying that in 1840 was the reunion of Quebec and Ontario in the United Province of Canada. You may take it that 1855 is about the year when self-government, not merely representative but responsible government, began in Newfoundland.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: Do you happen to remember what was the name of the Governor before Lord Aitken? He was a well-known man who had great difficulties to contend with.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I will let your Lordship have the name shortly. Then, my Lord, perhaps you will take note of this date. In 1857 there was a Select Committee of the House of Commons on the Hudson's Bay Company's administration.

p. 98

Viscount HALDANE: I think Mr. Gladstone sat on that Committee.

Sir JOHN SIMON: He did, my Lord. It was in that connection, you will remember, that the Arrow smith map was produced which is numbered 26 in the book. It is the one with the very big green area. As your Lordships are good enough to turn to it, I may perhaps tell you one rather interesting and significant fact which came out in the course of the Committee's deliberations. Would your Lordships find on Map 26, just beyond the green, and in Labrador, a place called Naskopi, it is just over the border. One of the things that happened in the House of Commons Committee in 1857 was this. There were people who very hotly criticised the way in which the Hudson's Bay Company had administered their affairs. Mr. Roebuck was, I think you may say, the leader of the critics. You will see the significance of my asking the place to be identified in a moment. The House of Commons Committee behaved, as such Committees not unnaturally do, in this way: that they demanded to have all sorts of explanations from the Hudson's Bay officials as to why this, that, or the other, did not go better; and one of the witnesses they had before them was a very distinguished man whose name is known, not only in connection with Hudson's Bay, but also in connection with British Columbia, namely Sir George Simpson. He was Governor of the Company of Hudson's Bay at the time. One of the things about which he was very much challenged was the failure—so it was alleged—of the Hudson's Bay administration properly to punish a man who was said to have maltreated (I rather think to have killed) a native at Naskopi; and his answer again and again was: "Naskopi is not in Hudson's Bay jurisdiction; it is in the jurisdiction of Newfoundland." What Sir George Simpson said is not evidence, but it is an interesting circumstance that, in 1857, that was one of the matters which came out, and Naskopi acquired considerable importance in the Committee for that reason.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It did not matter to him whether it was in the jurisdiction of Newfoundland or Quebec, I suppose?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It did not, of course.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: The point was that it was not within the Hudson's Bay territory.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is rather this: nobody suggested at the time that it could be anything else. He did insist that it was in Newfoundland. I am not attaching importance to it, but it does fit in, that in 1857, when that map was printed by the House of Commons as the result of the Hudson's Bay Inquiry (and it is rather interesting to notice), there was confirmation that that is where you get the dividing line. Lake Naskopi is the head of the waters that are running down. As a matter of fact, Sir George Simpson did again and again insist: "That is Newfoundland."

Viscount HALDANE: I do not believe anybody knew very accurately where the boundaries were. I remember when the late Lord Strathcona (then Mr. Smith) went out first about this time, he had to go a journey of nearly 1,000 miles on snowshoes to get to his post.

Sir JOHN SIMON: We shall come to some documents in which you will hear the exploits of Mr. Smith; and Mr. Smith in fact is Lord Strathcona.

That inquiry into the affairs of the Hudson's Bay in the year 1857 did not result in any immediate transfer of the Hudson's Bay Company. As your Lordships know, the British North America Act was passed in 1867 while the Hudson's Bay Company still retained its very large area of jurisdiction, and indeed almost of sovereignty. Here we are dealing with very familiar matters. I merely state them so that I may not be supposed to have overlooked them. Under the British North America Act, apart from the union of Canada by bringing into one Dominion four Provinces, you had, in Section 146, provision for the admission, within the Dominion of Canada, of the Colony or Province of Newfoundland, of Prince Edward Island and of British Columbia, as well as provisions which might admit Rupert's Land; that is to say, the Hudson's Bay territory and what was called the North-Western Territory. All that is very familiar. The ancient Colony of Newfoundland has continued to maintain its existence separate from the Dominion. Of course British Columbia came in, and Prince Edward's Island, and ultimately these other areas as well. Then, my Lord, in the next year, 1868, was passed the Rupert's Land Act, which your Lordships had better be reminded of. It is to be found in the red book, the first volume, on page 219. "Rupert's Land Act, 1868. An Act for enabling Her Majesty to accept a Surrender upon Terms of the Lands, Privileges, and Rights of 'The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay,' and for admitting the same into the Dominion of Canada." There is the recital of the letters patent which created the charter of the Hudson's Bay Company in the time of Charles II in the year 1670. Then there is a recital: "And whereas by the British North America Act, 1867, it was (amongst other things) enacted that it should be lawful for Her Majesty, by and with the Advice of Her Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, on Address from the Houses of the Parliament of Canada, to admit Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory, or either of them, into the Union on such Terms and Conditions as are in the Address expressed and as Her Majesty thinks fit to approve." Then: "And whereas for the Purpose of carrying into effect the Provisions of the said British North America Act, 1867, and of admitting Rupert's Land into the said Dominion as aforesaid upon such Terms as Her Majesty thinks fit to approve, it is expedient that the said Lands, Territories, Rights, Privileges, Liberties, Franchises, Powers and Authorities, so far as the same have been lawfully granted to the said Company, should be surrendered to Her Majesty, Her Heirs and Successors, upon such Terms and Conditions as may be agreed upon by and between Her Majesty and the said Governor and Company as hereinafter mentioned: Be it therefore enacted." This is not an Act which does effect the transfer; it only authorises it. Clause 3 says: "It shall be competent for the said Governor and Company to surrender to Her Majesty, and for Her Majesty by any Instrument under Her Sign Manual and Signet to accept a surrender of all or any of the Lands, Territories," and so on, "upon such terms and conditions as shall be agreed upon by and between Her Majesty and the said Governor."

Viscount HALDANE: The jurisdiction of the Hudson's Bay Company extended to a good deal more than Rupert's Land proper; it was a very large part of the North-west Territory.

Sir JOHN SIMON: They claimed, of course, to go right back westwards to the Rocky Mountains; and that map of Arrowsmith with the green area will carry you back to the Canadian Rockies at one point.

Viscount HALDANE: And the boundary on the other side was the river that runs north of Ontario and falls into the Hudson's Bay.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is quite right. On the other hand, when you approach the thing from the Pacific, you have in the meantime British Columbia as one of the independent settlements. Consequently these people meet at a particular point. We know there was a good deal of controversy as to what was exactly the boundary.

This Statute in 1868 authorised the Crown to accept the surrender. It goes on: "Provided, however, that such surrender shall not be accepted by Her Majesty until the Terms and Conditions upon which Rupert's Land shall be admitted into the said Dominion of Canada." That having happened in 1868, I would just remind your Lordships that the actual operation of the powers took place in the year 1870 under an Order in Council of the 23rd of June of that year. You will find it printed on page 221. I do not think that any useful purpose is served by reading this in any detail; it is merely to get the scheme of the dates and facts right. It is an Order in Council of Queen Victoria's Council which scheduled the Address to Her Majesty which had been made by the Senate and House of Commons in Canada. All these things taken together had this result: that that immense green area, the Hudson's Bay territory, passed into the Dominion of Canada. It did not become at that moment any portion of any provinces; it became simply a territory of the Dominion which the Dominion thereafter disposed of. The Hudson's Bay Company were compensated by a money payment, and that is the end of the independent existence of the Hudson's Bay Company as a territorial quasi-sovereign.

p. 101

Viscount HALDANE: It still has rights of trade, and so on.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It has still continued as a most important and prosperous trading enterprise. That Order throws into the Dominion this immense area. Then I think the next thing is that the Canadian Legislature, by the exercise of its powers, formed out of these territories the Province of Manitoba.

Viscount HALDANE: What date is that?

Sir JOHN SIMON: The actual date of the Canadian Statute, I think, was 1870. It is 33 Victoria, Chapter 3, of Canada. It was the same year that the original Province of Manitoba was carried out of, and was a very small part of, the new and hitherto unorganised territories which had been acquired as the result of the cession of the Hudson's Bay Company's land. It was originally a much smaller area than the Province of Manitoba is to-day, and your Lordship may, perhaps, remember that it used to be called jocularly and familiarly "The Postage Stamp State," because it was in the shape of a postage stamp. Having regard to the immense area out of which it was carved, it was, of course, very much smaller than the whole. Since then it has been enlarged and is now, of course, the very important Province Manitoba, of which Winnipeg is the capital, as we know

There was a doubt entertained, apparently, by the authorities, as to whether the British North America Act, 1867, really empowered the Parliament of Canada to establish new provinces in those territories, and I dare say your Lordships recall that there was a further Imperial Statute, which is also called the British North America Act, in 1871. It is printed at page 242 of the book. That Act removed those doubts, and, by Section 2, provided that: "The Parliament of Canada may, from time to time, establish new provinces in any territories forming for the time being part of the Dominion of Canada, but not included in any province thereof, and may, at the time of such establishment, make provision for the constitution and administration of any such Province."

Now, my Lords, I think the next matter which I should like to call attention to arose in 1874, and for this purpose I shall have to trouble your Lordships just to look at Volume V. I think this is the first time we have broken into this volume.

Viscount HALDANE: What page is it?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is about page 2293; but I might ask your Lordships' help to this extent. I should like just to state uncontroversially what it was that happened, before I ask attention to the actual documents, because I really think the documents will then be easier to understand, especially as they are not printed in the right order. If I could so far ask for indulgence, I would really prefer to be allowed to state it for the moment; I really think if I can explain what this is about, it will save a little time.

p. 102

The LORD CHANCELLOR: What we want to know is whether we can look at it. There is no question about that?

Sir JOHN SIMON: No question at all, my Lord.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I see the heading.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Is there anything in the heading?

Mr. MACMILLAN: I do not raise any objection.

Sir JOHN SIMON: There is no question at all. The point is this. Your Lordship will recall that in 1871 the Treaty of Washington had been entered into between this country and the United States; it was in fact the Treaty which is most commonly called the Alabama Claims Treaty. It was the Treaty which was negotiated by Mr. Gladstone's Government and which, amongst other things, settled the Alabama Claims; but besides doing that, that Treaty contained a number of other provisions, some extremely complicated, which had to do with the rights of United States fishermen to exercise fishing rights in various places in this general area; the details do not matter. One of the things which was stipulated for in the Treaty of Washington was that commodities which were for the next fifteen years imported into the United States from either the Dominion of Canada or Newfoundland should not be subject to duty. There was a range of commodities, but the particular one that we are concerned with here was fish. That being the situation, there was a question in 1874, when Lord Dufferin was the Governor-General of Canada, when Mr. Fish was Secretary of State for the United States, and when our Ambassador at Washington was Sir Edward Thornton, as to whether certain consignments which were coming into America were or were not subject to duty. Mr. Fish, the American Secretary of State, addressed an official inquiry to the British Ambassador in Washington, who in his turn communicated not only with the Foreign Secretary here at home, but also with the Canadian Government, to ascertain what was the correct answer to the question. The question was this. Is there any part of Labrador which is neither Canada nor Newfoundland? and the answer was No. That answer was based upon information which passed from the Canadian Government, through the Government at home, to America. Therefore, again, although, of course, this proves nothing, it is a rather interesting instance of how this matter appeared to stand in the year 1874.

Now, my Lords, as I say, the letters are not in the right order, but you will find that the best way to approach the letters is to turn to page 2299, where you get in the first paragraph of Sir Edward Thornton's despatch a perfectly plain indication of what it was that Mr. Fish wanted to know. He is addressing Lord Derby, writing, of course, to the Foreign Office here from Washington. "On the 19th of June last Mr. Fish addressed me a note enquiring whether Labrador formed part of the Dominion of Canada, although he was under the impression that it was politically attached to Newfoundland. He also asked whether any part of Labrador was separated either from the Dominion of Canada or from Newfoundland." Your Lordships may take it—I have this morning examined the Treaty of Washington and I can give you the relevant Articles—that the point of that was that if the thing imported came neither from the Dominion of Canada nor from the Colony of Newfoundland, then it was not protected by the exemption which had been secured by the Treaty of Washington. That being the nature of the question, although indeed Sir Edward Thornton says he does not quite know what the reason for it was, if you look back to page 2293 you will see a little more in detail how the thing was deal with, though I do not think the letters are altogether in a convenient order. The first letter, No. 972, is: "I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 24th instant, and to express my great regret that it has been out of my power as yet to give a positive answer to your question with regard to the political position of Labrador. I can, however, assure you that the delay has not been caused by any neglect on the part of this Legation. From information which I have received this morning I am now enabled to state positively that the whole of Labrador outside the province of Quebec, the boundary of which is laid down in the Imperial Statute, 6 George IV, Cap. 59, is under the jurisdiction and Government of the Colony of Newfoundland, and is actually included in and forms part of the Colony."

p. 103

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Which Statute is that?

Sir JOHN SIMON: That Statute is the Statute of 1825. What he is meaning is this. There was this pink oblong which was cut out and given back and re-annexed to Quebec, but apart from that it is Newfoundland. Then at the bottom of the page:

“Sir, I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of yesterday's date in which you are pleased to state, in answer to the enquiry of this Department, that the whole of Labrador outside the Province of Quebec is under the jurisdiction and Government of the Colony of Newfoundland, and is actually included in and forms a part of the Colony. Thanking you for this information.”

Then on the next page, on the 23rd November, still in the same year, 1874, Sir Edward Thornton is saying this to Mr. Fish: “With reference to my note of the 26th ultimo, I have the honor to enclose copies of a Despatch and of its enclosures which I have received from the Governor-General of Canada, giving more precise details as to the boundary between Labrador and the Dominion of Canada, and the position of the former possession in relation to the latter or to the Colony of Newfoundland.”

Viscount HALDANE: I think you must read this, it is very interesting, but I cannot see how it can bear on the construction of the Statute.

Sir JOHN SIMON: My Lord, I think I have made that concession in very plain terms, and I hope I am not thought to be doing more than I should.

Viscount HALDANE: No.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am quite prepared to accept the view that it is interesting rather than directly probative, but the interesting thing is that what is going to be enclosed is the actual report made to and by the Privy Council of Canada on this matter. That is the interesting thing; it is rather like the maps, in a way. Then he says: “A map showing the exact boundary on the coast and the assumed boundary in the interior, is also enclosed.” Then the enclosure is a Despatch from Lord Dufferin, that is at the bottom of page 2294: “With reference to your despatch of June 20th, and to subsequent correspondence making an inquiry on the part of the United States Government as to the position of Labrador in relation to the Dominion of Canada or Newfoundland, I have the honour to enclose, for the information of Mr. Fish, a copy of an Order of the Privy Council which contains the views of my Government on the subjects.” That puts it very justly, I think. It is only the views of the Government in 1874; it is not in any way estoppel. Then he says that appended is a map. I can show your Lordships the map; I have it.

Now this is what, after deliberation, in 1874 the Canadian Privy Council had got to say. They recite the despatch and then they say at line 10, on page 2295: “The Honourable the Secretary of State to whom this despatch, with enclosures, has been referred, reports that the boundary line between the Dominion of Canada and Labrador is a line drawn due north and south from the Bay or Harbor of Ance au Blanc Sablon, near the Straits of Belle Isle as far as the 52nd degree of north latitude; that Labrador eastward and northward from that point to Hudson's Straits.”

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I do not understand that.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think it must be “Labrador lies eastward and northward.”

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: There is a line of something left out there.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I will have that checked. Then: "That the division-line in the interior separating Labrador from the Dominion of Canada has only been defined as far north as the 52nd degree of north latitude, but it has been assumed that the boundary line in the interior would have taken the direction laid down on the accompanying map, which follows the height of land."

Viscount HALDANE: That might be interesting, because there is a statement that there is a map which follows the height of the land.

Lord Sumner.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am going to show your Lordships the map. "That Labrador, with the islands adjacent thereto, is annexed to Newfoundland, and under the Government of that Island." What is significant—I will not say anything more—is that this is what the Dominion of Canada says: "Attached to the Report of the Secretary of State are extracts from the Imperial Statute bearing on the question, and a map showing the exact boundary on the coast and the assumed boundary in the interior. The Committee recommend that a copy of this Minute with map and extracts from the Imperial Statute, above alluded to, be transmitted to Sir Edward Thornton for the information of the United States Government."

I cannot help thinking, therefore, that "assumed boundary," perhaps even "supposed boundary," may possibly be understood rather as indicating that people did not know where on the ground the height of land exactly was, as distinguished from throwing doubt upon the question as to whether or not it would be a boundary ascertained by reference to the height of land.

Sir John Simon.

Lord SUMNER: Is this a possible alternative? The Crown being entitled to the whole Peninsula of Labrador, however acquired, has at some time or other so dealt with it as that the whole of it is now territory of Canada or of Newfoundland and none remains unappropriated by the Crown, but the Crown has not yet directed what boundary between the two is to be drawn, and that may remain to be delimited possibly as a matter of legal inference from what has been done or possibly under some Act of State yet to be determined.

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think your Lordship is quite right.

Sir John Simon.

Lord SUMNER: In the latter case we might delimit it.

Sir JOHN SIMON: No doubt it would be a short cut, though probably at this time of day there would be some difficulty.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: What does the map refer to?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I will show your Lordship in a moment; may I just finish my reading? What Lord Sumner says is, however, important, and indeed it is a point which I am anxious to make. May I anticipate by saying that it is important for me to show, if I can, that in the disputable area you do get a distribution of the area as between these two. On the other hand, it would be a matter in my friend's favour, and I admit it quite frankly, if he was able to establish that there is a tertium quid in Labrador. The importance of this to me is not merely that the Dominion of Canada took the view that the height of land settled it, but that the Dominion of Canada, the Government here at home and everybody else said: "and that exhausts Labrador." The reason why that was the point was that if it did exhaust Labrador the Treaty of Washington of 1871 would not have been of any use. The Treaty of Washington did not say that for 15 years products of the British Empire should pass in free.

p. 106

May I just give your Lordships the section; I have it here in the Collection of Treaties. The Treaty, which is the Treaty of 8th May, 1871, dealing with the Alabama Claims and with fisheries and with all sorts of things, contains two clauses. One clause is Clause 32. It says it is agreed by the provisions and stipulations that the operation of these articles, including Article 21, shall extend to the Colony of Newfoundland; and when you go to Article 21, it is agreed for the term of years mentioned in Article 33, that was for 15 years, that fish-oil, fish of all kinds, and a number of other things, being the produce of the Fisheries of the Dominion of Canada or of Prince Edward Island or the United States, shall be admitted into each country respectively free of duty. The point of the inquiry made by the Secretary of State for the United States was this: "Is there not a tertium quid? These things from Labrador; that does not tell me that they come either from the Dominion of Canada or from the Colony of Newfoundland, and if there is a No Man's Land, I shall still have to consider whether there is not duty to be paid." Therefore, as Lord Sumner truly says, it was not material for this purpose to determine exactly where the boundary lay. The important thing was to ascertain: Did the boundary on the one side of it give you Canada and on the other side of it give you Newfoundland? You will find that is the precise thing that Lord Derby, writing from the Foreign Office here after communication with Canada, says is the fact.

My Lords, may I just finish my reference to page 2295? The Minute of the Canadian Privy Council annexed or enclosed extracts from Statutes, including the Statute of 1825. Then at the bottom of page 2297, Lord Carnarvon is sending to Lord Dufferin, who was the Governor-General of Canada at the time, that is to say, the Colonial Secretary was sending to the Governor-General of Canada at the time, for his information, despatches. I need not trouble about those two pages. Then on page 2299, Sir Edward Thornton, reporting to Lord Derby, writing to the Foreign Office, says: "My Lord, in the 19th June last Mr. Fish addressed me a note enquiring whether Labrador formed part of the Dominion of Canada, although he was under the impression that it was politically attached to Newfoundland. He also asked whether any part of Labrador was separated either from the Dominion of Canada or from Newfoundland. Without knowing what might be the precise object of this enquiry, I forwarded it to the Governor-General of Canada. During His Excellency's absence from Ottawa, Mr. Watson, H.M. Chargé d'Affaires, received on the 11th of July a telegram" and so on. Then he says he had a further note. Then at line 30 he says: "The latter then at once communicated to Mr. Fish the contents of Mr. Scott's above mentioned telegram informing him at the same time that he would also convey to him the contents of a Despatch which he expected from Lord Dufferin as soon as he received it." Then he describes that there was some delay, and at the bottom of the page says: "It was only on my arrival at Washington that I learned from Mr. Cadwalader that these enquiries had reference to cargoes of fish which were arriving from Labrador and with respect to which the Treasury Department doubted whether they could be admitted free of duty under the Treaty of May 8, 1871"—that is the Treaty of Washington—"as coming either from the Dominion of Canada or the Colony of Newfoundland." Then the last paragraph: "Fortunately Lord Dufferin yesterday paid a visit of a few hours to Washington, when I stated the case to him. In reply His Excellency authorized me to inform Mr. Fish that Labrador is under the jurisdiction of Newfoundland and is included and forms part of that Colony."

Sir John Simon.

Your Lordships see that was not quite accurate, and the very accurate officials of the Foreign Office observed the inaccuracy and corrected it. It was not true that it was all Newfoundland, because there was this distribution between Quebec and Newfoundland. If your Lordships will now observe the language of the document on page 2301, you will see it is most carefully stated and most accurately stated, from the Colonial Office to the Foreign Office: "I am directed by the Earl of Carnarvon to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th instant enclosing a copy of a Despatch from the British Minister at Washington respecting a question raised by the United States Government," and so on. "It appears from Sir E. Thornton's despatch that on the authority of the Governor-General of Canada he has informed the United States Secretary of State that Labrador is under the jurisdiction of Newfoundland and is included in and forms part of that Colony, but I am to point out for the Earl of Derby's information, said to have been given by Lord Dufferin (as it would seem in conversation and without having referred to his Government), does not appear to be altogether correct.” That ought to be: “but I am to point out for the Earl of Derby's information that the information said to have been given by Lord Dufferin.” Then: “The Act 6 Geo. IV. Cap. 59 settles the boundaries between Newfoundland and Canada, on the Labrador Coast, and Lord Derby will perceive on reference to the 9th sect. of the Act, a copy of which I am to enclose, that part only of Labrador belongs to Newfoundland and the rest to Canada. Lord Carnarvon apprehends, however, that the inaccuracy in Lord Dufferin's alleged statement is of no practical consequence so far as regards the particular question at issue, inasmuch as the whole of Labrador belongs either to Newfoundland or to Canada, and the produce of the fisheries both of Canada and of Newfoundland are entitled to be admitted free into the United States under the 21st and 32nd Articles of the Treaty of Washington.”

Sir John Simon.

Now let me at once make the point: I make it both to help the Tribunal and because I do not want to be thought not to have observed it. Inasmuch as we are dealing with cargoes of fish, it is not a very extravagant assumption that the fish would come from either Newfoundland, Labrador or Canadian Labrador; I mean, you cannot get fish from a spruce forest. But at the same time it is really a very striking fact, exactly the same as these maps, there can be no doubt whatever about it, that after the most formal and careful and thorough consideration by all the authorities concerned who might be supposed to have had any possible temptation the other way, they asserted that all the rest of this is Newfoundland. Newfoundland takes no part in the discussion, but the Canadian Government, the Canadian Privy Council, the Colonial Office, the Foreign Office, all do.

Now the map that your Lordship asked about is to be found in our Atlas at No. 32a; there is a No. 32 and also a No. 32a.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Is this the one?

Sir JOHN SIMON: This is the very one.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It says in your Case that it has not been possible to trace it.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It has been traced since, my Lord. We have had the great advantage of the assistance of Mr. Hardy, of the Record Office, and he has found this map actually attached to the Despatch in the Record Office—I mean the thing from which this is reproduced. I can see at once that it may be said: “Well, but it is not quite right.” That, of course, is a perfectly fair comment to make, but it is a most curious thing that, at any rate, whether you should draw the line, as Lord Warrington was rather disposed to draw the line, along the 52nd parallel without allowing that bulge, or whether you should allow the bulge in order to try to get back to the height of land, there cannot be any doubt at all that this is drawn on the principle that the Labrador Coast is between Cape Chidley and Anse Sablon, that is the green thing, and that the additional piece of the Labrador Coast which has been re-annexed to Canada, to the Province of Quebec as it was, in 1825, is the pink bit, and then Rupert's Land. On the map itself you will see "Land" over the yellow. That is the termination of the inscription "Rupert's Land." if you took the whole map.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: "Rupert's" is written in the margin.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, in the way it is done for convenience sometimes to show how it is. Rupert's Land is this other area. It is a very interesting and curious thing.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I see the note in the book is that Labrador extends eastward and northward from that point to Hudson's Straits. It is on page 2295 of Volume V, about line 15.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am very much obliged.

Viscount HALDANE: This certainly shows the real height of land.

Sir JOHN SIMON: There is no doubt of that; that is so.

Lord SUMNER: This is of some importance. In the red book at page 133 there is a small chart which shows very conveniently the exact position at that point. You see parallel 52. The words are that Labrador extends eastward and northward from that point to Hudson's Straits. It does not seem to take you very far in the direction of westward and northward.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I see what your Lordship means.

Lord SUMNER: The north line is on parallel 64. Then you are told it has to go to Hudson's Straits. If the word "extends" is pressed it may be of some importance.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, but may I make my comment in the same connection—I am sure I may? Your Lordship has, quite rightly, of course, called attention to the word, but whatever may be the word it is immediately followed in the same document by this: "Attached to the Report of the Secretary of State are extracts from the Imperial Statute bearing on the question, and a map showing the exact boundary on the coast and the assumed boundary in the interior." I am identifying the picture with the letterpress, therefore I suggest it is not unreasonable to say, though I quite agree eastward and northward is not a very happy expression, in fact you can hardly go either eastward or northward from that point—

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Not to Hudson's Straits.

Sir JOHN SIMON: No, my Lord, you could not go northward to Hudson's Straits from that point. I apprehend that what it really means is that it is not correct to say that the whole of Labrador is in one jurisdiction. That would not be correct because there is a Statute of 1825; but when you have taken out what the Statute of 1825 takes out, which we coloured pink, then though that takes out something which is westward of the line, you will have left what is eastward and northward of it; and that I suggest is not used in a very strict sense. It is not with the accuracy with which the navigator refers to points of the compass.

p. 110

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It must trend towards the north, because you get the sentence: "That the division-line in the interior separating Labrador from the Dominion of Canada," and so on.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think so. That little chart is very convenient, and we will look at it in time, but it is not a very good chart on which to operate for the reason that the line drawn there is drawn after the dispute has arisen, and it does not really represent anything at all. It is a highly controversial chart. I should have suggested, for what it may be worth, though I quite recognise it is only of a secondary order of importance, and quite subordinate to the actual language of the statutes, orders-in-council and proclamations, that really this little incident of 1874 is quite overwhelming to show that the view taken in 1874 is the view which you will find again illustrated in the official maps of the Dominion of Canada in 1890 and 1895.

Viscount HALDANE: It is almost enough for you to say that it indicates a large block of the interior of Labrador.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, that is really the position. Again, in order that your Lordships may have at any rate the chronological data before you, may I tell your Lordships that there are two other subordinate branches of the case about which there is a good deal of material in these volumes. So far as regards the administration of justice in the area which Newfoundland administered there is an important history, which is more particularly important as between these two periods. I will tell your Lordships why these periods are important afterwards. The first period is from 1826 to 1834, and the second period is from 1863 to 1874. You will notice that 1826, beginning the first of these two periods, is immediately after the pink area is re-annexed to Quebec. Before 1826 the provision made for judicial administration on the coasts of Labrador, whatever that expression may mean in connection with Newfoundland, was by means of the issue of what are called surrogate Commissions. That is to say, the Governor of Newfoundland—Graves, for example, or any one of them—not only had the appointment of Governor of the Colony and its dependencies, but he also was Commander-in-Chief of the Fleet of the Newfoundland Station, and had independent 35 but contemporaneous instructions in a separate document from the Admiralty. He therefore filled the two offices, being Commander-in-Chief of the Newfoundland Station—Commander-in-Chief of the Blue, I think it was called—and at the same time he was, under the Great Seal, holding the Commission of the Governor of Newfoundland. It was within his competence to a point surrogates to administer, in any portion of the area he thought right, the judicial jurisdiction with which he was clothed. From 1763, Thomas Graves's time, right down to 1774 there were surrogate commissions issued to naval officers who were more particularly to look after the Labrador Coast.

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: Does this extend to both periods?

p. 111

Sir JOHN SIMON: No. That happened from 1763, and went on with various breaks for some time. But when you come to 1826 a change was made. If your Lordship will turn to Volume 1, page 307, you will find an Act now called The Newfoundland Act. That was an Imperial Act, and was an Act for the better Administration of Justice in Newfoundland. That statute deals with the Island of Newfoundland in the early part, but if you turn to Section 18, at the bottom of page 313 you will find the following passage. It is noteworthy that it comes in the Newfoundland Act. It is an incident, at any rate, of the government of Newfoundland. The section says: "And whereas it is expedient to make further provision for the administration of justice on the Coast of Labrador: Be it further enacted, that so much of an Act passed in the Fifty-first year of the reign of His said Majesty George the Third, intituled an Act for taking away the Public Use of certain Ship Rooms, in the Town of St. John's in the Island of Newfoundland, and for establishing Surrogate Courts on the Coast of Labrador, and in certain Islands adjacent thereto, as relates to the institution of Surrogate Courts, shall be, and the same is hereby repealed; and that it shall and may be lawful for the Governor or Acting Governor of Newfoundland for the time being to institute a Court of Civil Jurisdiction at any such parts or places on the Coast of Labrador, or the Islands adjacent thereto, which, in and by the said Act passed in the Fifty-first year of the reign of His Majesty George the Third are reannexed to the Government of Newfoundland, as occasion shall require; and such Court shall be held by one Judge, and shall be a Court of Record, and shall have jurisdiction, power and authority to hear and determine all suits and complaints of a civil nature arising within any of the said parts and places on the Coast of Labrador, or the Islands adjacent thereto; and the said Court shall be holden by a Judge, who shall be appointed from time to time by the Governor or Acting Governor of Newfoundland, and shall have a clerk and such other ministerial officers as the Governor or Acting Governor shall appoint; and the proceedings of the said Court shall be summary, and such forms of process, and such rules of practice and proceeding as shall be settled by the Chief Judge of the said Supreme Court, shall be followed by the said Court, and no other."

Sir John Simon.

Lord SUMNER: Is the word "parts" correct, or should it read "ports"?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is parts. The word is twice repeated, occurring in line 3 and line 11. It is rather an odd thing that in his effort to describe the statute under which portions of the coast of Labrador came under the jurisdiction of the Governor of Newfoundland the draughtsman of Section 18 had fallen into error. It was not by an Act passed in the fifty-first year of the reign of His Majesty George III that anything was annexed to the Government of Newfoundland. That was done by an Act of 49 George III, Cap. 27, Section 14. You will find that in the same volume at the bottom of page 195. Your Lordships will remember that we went through that yesterday. It is by no means the only example of where, in framing these things, they had not got their references exactly right. There was a statute of the fifty-first year of His Majesty George III which dealt with the Government of Newfoundland, but it is a slip in reference in this particular case. Under the statute I have just read on pages 313-314 you will see that it abolishes altogether Surrogate Courts, and establishes not only a Court, but a Court of Record, with a Judge who is not a mere magistrate. He is what might be called a High Court Judge, a member of the Court of Newfoundland. The name of the Judge appointed was Mr. Justice Paterson. In Volume III, page 1396, you will find the proclamation of Governor Cochrane. You will recall that Sir Thomas Cochrane was the Governor the terms of whose Commission after 1825 I asked attention to a little time back. Here is the Governor's proclamation appointing the times and places for holding what he calls the Labrador Court.

p. 112

The LORD CHANCELLOR: What is the nearest map to this date, do you remember?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Your Lordship wants to see the place Invuctoke on the map. I think sufficiently for the purpose your Lordship could see it in the little sketch.

Mr. MACMILLAN: It is the Eskimo name for Hamilton Inlet.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is not the Eskimo name for Hamilton Inlet; it is the Eskimo name for sea-cow. As your Lordship will appreciate, this is a very modest circuit. It is no good going circuit to the wilds when there is nobody to try. You may take it at once that, not unnaturally, the places which are appointed for holding this Court are places which could be got at without much difficulty.

Viscount HALDANE: Close to the sea.

Sir JOHN SIMON Of course. The place you had better select, because the easiest one to take, is Invuctoke. That is the Eskimo word for a walrus—the same thing as a sea-cow, I am told by one of my Juniors, I do not profess to know myself. Invuctoke is, as my friend said, Hamilton Inlet. You will find in a moment that when Mr. Justice Paterson comes to exercise his jurisdiction he exercises it about a salmon river 120 miles further inland, but the place where he holds his Court, which you may call the assize town, is Invuctoke. I do not suppose it was a very big place. There are one or two things in the proclamation I should like to draw attention to, because I suggest they indicate not any mere jurisdiction on the littoral, but something you might call solid. At the top of page 1397 there is this passage: “And I do authorise, empower and direct the Judge of the said Court of Civil Jurisdiction, hereby instituted, from day to day and from place to place, or for any number of days within the term, session, or continuance of the said Court, to adjourn the said Court, to meet, re-assemble and sit again in the execution and discharge of the duties of the said Court, when and so often as by the said Judge may be deemed necessary or expedient for the due and proper fulfilment and discharge of such duties. And of these presents all Magistrates, the Sheriff and his deputies, all Bailiffs, Constables, Keepers of Gaols, and other officers of the Coast of Labrador, in the execution of their offices about the premises, are desired and hereby required and commanded to take due notice and govern themselves according.” The language is majestic, but I rather imagine if one had occasion to summon the whole regiment of officials they would not have been found to be very numerous. As a matter of fact there are instances where the Judge had to deal with one or two serious crimes where he adopted the convenient expedient of taking his convict on his ship to Newfoundland, where he could be safely confined. The actual commission—I suppose it is as well to mention it—is on the next page. The Act of Parliament created the Court and authorised the Governor to issue the commission, and here is the commission to William Paterson. He is a naval captain, though as a matter of fact he is also Mr. Justice Paterson, and does quite a considerable amount of judicial work, and reports about it for a number of years. It says: “Know ye that We having taken into our royal consideration the loyalty, integrity, and ability of our trusty and well-beloved William Paterson, Esquire, Captain in our Royal Navy and Companion of the most Honourable Military Order of the Bath, have constituted and appointed him the said William Paterson, Judge of our Court of Civil Jurisdiction in and for our Coast of Labrador.” On page 1399 your Lordships will notice that in addition to his being a High Court Judge, he and another gentleman are made Justices of the Peace for the Coast of Labrador. I will give your Lordships one illustration—it will be quite enough, and I have not many others I could give—of the actual exercise of this jurisdiction. In the same Volume, at page 1406, Mr. Justice Paterson having thus received his commission, and Governor Cochrane having proclaimed the places where the Court in its itinerary would sit, you will find the following extract from the records of the Court. Would you observe that it is headed “Rigolet.” That is probably the best known name of a place in the Hamilton Inlet region. Sometimes it is spelled as here, and sometimes with the additional letters “te” at the end of it. I think it is important to see what is this case he is dealing with. The extract is as follows:—“J. O. Brunet & Co. of Quebec by their partners, Joseph Tourzeon, residing at Rigolet, also by petition set forth his complaint, stating that Mr. Joseph Bird of Sturminster, England, by his agent Timothy Craze of Tub Harbor”—I am going to ask attention to Mr. Low's map in a moment, where we shall get these places more accurately —“in this Bay and by the persons employed under him, have for these three years last past interrupted the complainants in their salmon fishery”—this is of a considerable importance because the suggestion against me is that the jurisdiction of Newfoundland on the Coast of Labrador is so limited that really a deep-sea cod fishery is all they are talking about—“at a place called Kinnamnon Brook in this Bay,” etc. I see in this Volume it is called “Kinnamon” Brook, but I believe Kinamou is the proper name for it.

Viscount HALDANE: Is it a large bay?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is 120 miles inland, and Kinamou Brook is at the very head of it. The suggestion made by the Dominion of Canada against me is that I have no right to go there. They want Kinamou and everything else. If they are right, Mr. Justice Paterson had no more right to deal with this than he had to deal with an interference with nets in a Scottish salmon river. The extract continues: “by placing their nets in front of and very near to those of complainants, so as to intercept the salmon coming to them, whereby the complainants allege that they have sustained damages to the amount of five hundred pounds, and praying that process might be issued against the said Joseph Bird and Timothy Craze for the recovery of that sum. The Court complied with the prayer of the Plaintiffs' petition by granting a writ of summons at their suit against Joseph Bird and Timothy Craze in the sum of £500. But as it appeared that the Defendants could not this year be prepared with their evidences to defend the action”—there is a certain leisureliness about litigation in Labrador—“the Court directed that the writ should be made returnable at Rigolet on Monday the 13th day of August, 1827, or at such other time as the Court of Labrador might first sit at Rigolet.” Your Lordships will take it from me at the moment that the case was tried, and I will show you the record of it. You have therefore here a perfectly clear example of the unchallenged exercise of jurisdiction by the judicial authority of Newfoundland at a distance 120 miles further back than any point which the Dominion of Canada in this arbitration is willing to concede to me.

Viscount FINLAY: Can you show me the place on the map?

22 Oct., 1926.

Lord Sumner.

Sir JOHN SIMON: The most convenient map to take is Mr. Low's map in the Newfoundland Atlas, No. 42. Might we just look at Kinamou. Kinamou River runs up from the south, and runs into Hamilton Inlet at its upper or landward end. Here is the actual survey of the official Canadian authority, and as it is as recent of 1895, it may be taken as right. Rigolet, which you see on the map, is where the case was heard.

Viscount HALDANE: And Tub Harbor is a little lower down.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes. So far as the Canadian suggestion is concerned, they say that upon the true construction of the statutes, orders-in-council and proclamations, the internal limit of any jurisdiction that Newfoundland has now, or ever has had, is some 120 miles further towards the east.

Lord Sumner.

Lord SUMNER: This is salt water right up above the mouth of the Kinamou River. I suppose most of the blue is salt water. According to this record the act complained of was done in the bay, or I suppose just at the mouth of the Kinamou River.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think it was done just above Epinette Point.

Lord SUMNER: Although that is a very forcible point, it is with regard to what is a very deep inlet, and it does not carry into the real inland parts.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is so. I have not had a record of a case where he deals with a dispute which is 120 miles back from the general trend of the coastline in the heart of the primeval forest.

Lord SUMNER: Right or wrong at the time when the whole traffic on the Labrador coast was conducted in schooners, as I think it mostly is still, it is quite natural for the fishing people to carry on their operations up to the head of a salt water fiord. But that says nothing about rivers.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Your Lordship is perfectly right. I thoroughly appreciate that. If one is to draw a dividing line as between what you may call the river system and what my Lord has called a fiord, one would have to go, I have no doubt, to Goose Bay or something like that. I have here, and I dare say at some time some of your Lordships would like to see the Admiralty Chart, because one would like to see the nature of the thing—soundings, and so on. This is a very deep place notwithstanding the fact that at Rigolet you have narrows. It is extraordinarily narrow, as you will see, but it widens out again and becomes this very large inlet. Though, of course, the salinity of the water decreases, Lord Sumner is perfectly right that we are here dealing with a salt water fiord.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Sir JOHN SIMON: My Lords, your Lordships were just looking in Volume 3 at page 1406, the record of the Civil Court for the Coast of Labrador, showing that this dispute about the salmon fishery at or near the mouth of Kinnamon Brook was made the subject of process before that Court. On the opposite page, page 1407, you will find the proclamation of Governor Cochrane—it is still Governor Cochrane—for the next year, 1826, in which he appoints various places at which Courts are to be held. Again you will find at line 24, “Indian Harbour, Indian Island, Rigolet, or Ivucktoke otherwise Gross Water, Mullins Cove, Tub Harbour,” and various other places. They are, my Lords, all of them, places that can be reached by water. Gross Water is the name that is given to the interior part of Hamilton Inlet, I mean it is another instance of the situation upon which my Lord Sumner made an observation just now, that is to say, it would be valuable to me, and is valuable to me, as showing the unchallenged jurisdiction right back to the head of Hamilton Inlet, but it does not carry me into the interior country. Again you get “Place or places,” and this time, my Lord, it is perhaps observable that at line 32 it says “Ports or places,” not “Parts or places.” I am not sure how that is. Then on page 1409 you get a rather different kind of document; this is a document recording the work of the Court of General Sessions in Labrador. Apparently at this time, in 1827, one at any rate of the gentlemen, I suppose the Chairman of the Court, was Mr. George Simms. He is making a report which includes this statement: “Timber of very large dimensions is said to abound at the head of Gross Water, on the Kinnamish and North West Rivers.” I daresay your Lordships observe the North West River is one of the great rivers that run into the head of Hamilton Inlet. “Mast pieces from 18 to 26 inches at the partners and crooked ships timber, spruce and birch, sufficiently large to build ships of four hundred tons burthen. Mr. Bird’s establishment intend building two large schooners at Kinnamish the ensuing winter. The following vessels are employed in the cod fishery at the different ports in Esquimaux Bay,” and then it gives a series of details, it seems to me a mere report. I am not attempting to go through every one of these documents at all exhaustively, especially as I want to complete my chronological sketch to-day. At page 1412 you get a record of this Court of Civil Jurisdiction showing that the Court had a view at Kinnamon Brook. “On Tuesday evening the 19th July, arrived at Rigolet, on the 20th July left Rigolet for Kinnamish. Tuesday 22nd reached Kinnamish where the Court viewed the Salmon Brook in dispute between J. O. Brunet & Co. vs. J. Bird, Thursday the 24th July arrived at North West Brook.” It is a kind of account of the Court's peregrination. On page 1414 that carries the matter slightly further; the last paragraph on that page shows that the Court was open—it was prepared to sit at the places there named, but there was no business apparently to be done. It was like opening the Commission of Assize and finding there were no prisoners to be tried. But the Court was prepared to sit at Kinnamarsh, which I think your Lordships take as the same place as one or other of those two. There is no doubt at all there has been a constant claim to exercise jurisdiction quite unchallenged for very many years, at any rate up in that region. Those instances are probably sufficient for this present purpose. What was found was that there was so little business for such a Court to do that, on page 1415, Governor Sir Thomas Cochrane is advising the Home Government, and he is saying, in effect, that he doubts whether the continuance of a branch of the Supreme Court in Labrador is needed; and the result was that in 1834 the Newfoundland Legislature abolished the High Court of Labrador, and that is the end of this first period. Then for a considerable time they relied on subordinate judicial officers, Justices of the Peace and the like. The actual form of the abolition is just a little curious, because what really happened was that it was an Imperial Act of Parliament that established the Court of Labrador, and, therefore, it would have been, perhaps, natural, at any rate at that stage in Dominion development, to take the view that only an Imperial Act of Parliament could abolish it. What happened was that there was an Imperial Act of Parliament passed which expressly delegated to the Newfoundland Legislature authority to deal with that matter if it liked; and your Lordships will find that in 1834 the Newfoundland Legislature, under the powers of an Imperial Act of 1823, abolished the Court of Labrador by repealing the Imperial Statute. Then, my Lords, in the interval between the end of my first period and the beginning of my second, between 1834 and 1863, such administration of justice as was called for was provided in subordinate judicial authority, Justices of the Peace and the like.

Mr. Macmillan.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: By surrogates?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Not formally surrogates, but Justices of the Peace.

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon

Mr. MACMILLAN: I think that is not right, because on page 1424 you will see it says, “The whole Coast of Labrador is now left destitute of a local civil jurisdiction.”

Sir JOHN SIMON: It looks as though it really was for the time being one of those ideal countries where no punishments were needed.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It is only civil jurisdiction.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think, independently, in the book I could show there was, as a matter of fact, the exercise of sonie jurisdiction. It does not matter very much, because when I come on to the beginning of my second period (I gave your Lordships, I think, 1863 as the be—ginning of my second period in 1863, as you will see if you turn on to page 1436 (there are various intermediate documents showing that there were Constables being appointed, and no doubt there was criminal jurisdiction) you get a Newfoundland Act, and it is worth while, perhaps, just to call attention to the title of it. The title of it contains an expression which, I am told by those who are instructing me from Newfoundland, is a very common expression in Newfoundland; it is “the Labrador.” Of course, I cannot enlarge the proper construction of “all the coasts of Labrador” by substituting any other phrase, but this is a very common phrase. It is an Act “to provide for collection of revenue and better administration of justice at the Labrador.” “Whereas it is expedient to provide for the collection of the Revenue and for the better administration of Justice at the Labrador: Be it therefore enacted by the Governor, Legislative Council and Assembly, in Legislative Session convened as follows: I. It shall be lawful for the Governor, by Letters Patent under the Great Seal of the Island of Newfoundland, to institute a Court of Civil and Criminal Jurisdiction at the Labrador; and such Court shall be a Court of Record, and shall be presided over by one Judge, to be appointed by the Governor in Council and shall, over all such parts of the Labrador as be within the Government of Newfoundland, have jurisdiction, power and authority to hear and finally determine all Criminal Prosecutions for Assaults and Batteries, and for Larcenies without force to the person, committed within the limits aforesaid; and all Actions and Suits of a Civil nature” not exceeding, I think, £100. Then in Clause 4 there was to be an appeal from this Court to the Supreme Court in the Island, and in Clause 7 there was statutory authority by which any sentenced prisoner might be confined in any place of security within the limits aforesaid, that means on the Labrador, which the Judge may direct, or may be conveyed to any gaol in Newfoundland. Then in Clause 9, dealing with another subject matter, “It shall be lawful for the Governor in Council to appoint the said Judge or some other competent person to be Superintendent of the fisheries on the coast of Newfoundland and the Labrador, and to appoint the same or other competent person to be a collector of revenue on the Labrador.” I may tell your Lordships that I do not myself attach very much importance, one way or the other, to the material in these volumes on the subject of revenue collection (there is a good deal of material), and for this very simple reason: that, so far as I can see, the nature of the revenue collected was import duties; I should not have expected therefore, that very much light could be thrown on the question of the depth of the country inland by showing that there was an exercise of collection of that sort of revenue; if they had had an income tax it would have been another matter. There is a little material of another sort, but most of it is of that kind. That being the Statute, on page 1439 there was a Statute of the same year (the next chapter, it is 26 Vict. C. 3) providing this, "That the circuit Courts of Newfoundland shall have power to hear and determine all crimes and offences, informations, suits, and actions committed occurring or arising, on all such parts of the coast of Labrador as are within the Government of

p. 118

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon

p. 119

Newfoundland," that is apparently another jurisdiction which would make it easy to deal with Labrador cases in the circuit Courts. I do not think this carries it very much further. Then on the next page, page 1440, you get the actual institution, under the Statutes to which I have just referred, of the Labrador Court. You will observe on page 1440 that the Governor at that time was Sir Alexander Bannerman. He was Governor from 1857 to 1864, and he proceeds to set up the Court to be presided over by one Judge to be appointed from time to time, such Court to be a Court of Record, and so on "And shall be held for such terms and at such times and in such places at the Labrador as the Judge thereof for the time being may from time to time determine." Then there follow in the book (I can save your Lordships' time, and I think even save your Lordships' eyes, by putting it in this way) from page 1443, running on to 1460 or thereabouts, the Reports which were made of the proceedings of that Court, or extracts from them, a Court which was presided over at first by Judge Sweetland and subsequently by his successor Judge Pinsent. Those were the two, first Judge Sweetland and then Judge Pinsent. Perhaps your Lordships would just turn to page 1453, which shows pretty clearly that, at any rate, the salmon fishery was quite as much within the area as any cod fishery: "The salmon fishery was, this year, pretty good in Sandwich Bay and Hamilton Inlet, which are the principal places for what may be called the embayed fishery"; fishery, that is, taking place inside Hamilton Inlet. Then over the page "On the open coast the salmon fishery was not so successful"; apparently in this part of the world it is when you go into the inlets or the mouths of the rivers that you get salmon. Then there is an interesting reference to Mr. Smith: "The Hudson Bay Company have establishments in Hamilton Inlet, N.W. River and Rigoulette," just as they have, your Lordships know, in Winnipeg and other places. "Here we met Mr. Smith," that is Lord Strathcona, "the Deputy Governor of the Company and chief Manager of their business in this quarter; he arrived from Canada in the steamer 'Labrador,' a fine new vessel belonging to the concern. This Company received most of the salmon in the neighbourhood of their establishments, and cut them up and preserved them in small tin canisters for exportation to England and other countries.” If ever anybody is concerned to write a treatise on the history of salmon canning, I suppose this will take a place of honour in the first chapter. It is hardly worth while nowadays for a Judge on circuit in the North of America, I think, to report elaborately that someone has invented the ingenious plan of putting salmon into tins.

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: That shows they had an establishment in Hamilton Bay.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, they had trading establishments. They are great people for having controversies about taxes, like all good business men are. A little lower on the same page there is a very good account of what is happening. He says, “The resident population of
p. 120

Labrador (as distinguished from the people who go there on the fishery in the summer only) from Blanc Sablon, in the Straits of Belle Isle to Indian Harbor Esquimaux Bay, which in the year 1864 was estimated by Judge Sweetland at 2026, may be considered as rather increased since that time. It is difficult for a transient visitor to ascertain, reliably, even the probable number of resident inhabitants, scattered as they are in so many places along this extensive coast; to take personally a census is impracticable. The residents are principally of English origin, including some from Newfoundland, but in Esquimaux Bay, Hamilton Inlet and that neighbourhood, there are several families of Esquimaux and half-breeds, the latter are descendants of European fathers and Esquimaux mothers; these people are occupied chiefly in the salmon fishery in summer and in furring during the winter.” No doubt the business of furring and trapping may not call for a very elaborate judicial organisation or administration, but there cannot be a doubt, I think, that the Newfoundland Government conceived that the Labrador jurisdiction they were exercising was in no sense limited to the deep-sea cod fishery. He gives an interesting account of these people. He says, “They are very docile and well-behaved, and, in their simple way, fond of learning; most of them can read, and some can write—taught by their fathers and by each other.”

Viscount HALDANE: What is the reference to furring?

Sir JOHN SIMON: The one I was giving is at page 1454, line 25. If your Lordship is kind enough to make a note, would you mind adding to it also what is a more important reference on the furring point, page 1448, at the top of the page. There are others, but this is rather an interesting one. I will take 1448 now, if your Lordship would not mind turning back.

This is in the Report of the earlier year, but it is the same thing. "In Sandwich and Esquimaux Bays, the inhabitants disperse themselves for the sake of furring in the winter," that means, of course, they go up into the woods, "and catching salmon in the summer. Very little can be done in the way of an established school." Then he goes on giving a lot of details as to the relief of a certain number of destitute people and so on, and some account about the churches that exist there; there are quite a number; the Moravians have an important mission, and other religious denominations have an establishment there. "The season was wet and cold, so much so that the usual crop of 'greens' could not be obtained; potatoes on the coast did not come to perfection. At the N.W. River at the head of Esquimaux Bay they produce green peas, new potatoes and radishes of immense growth; fresh butter," and so on. It is all very primitive, and is, of course, very unimportant on the point of population, but there is nothing whatever, I make bold to say, in these documents of the class I am dealing with now, which would suggest that the Newfoundland jurisdiction is a jurisdiction which can be in any way limited, artificially limited, in the way suggested; nothing whatever. I had dealt, I think, with page 1454.

Page 1460 is a page which is perhaps worth glancing at. Judge Pinsent is reporting what he did in the year 1869. He describes how he has dealt with some serious cases. At the bottom of page 1461 he says: "I sentenced the offenders to six months imprisonment with hard labour in Her Majesty's Gaol at St. John's." Then he says that he brought the men from Labrador to St. John's in the circuit vessel; so that apparently one of the gentlemen in question started his sentence by having two months on board a ship. He cannot have been very comfortable.

Then on page 1462, at line 18, there is an account given again of the salmon fishery, and in the middle of that page he says this: "I am gratified to be able to state, and I have good reason to believe, that the condition of the resident inhabitants of Labrador will next winter be much better with respect to food than it was last winter. These residents, not having vessels and other means of leaving their own localities, were last summer fortunately obliged to remain home, where they did much better in the fishery than if they had come to Cape Harrison and its neighbourhood; they have consequently been able, generally, to lay in a sufficient stock of provisions for the winter. The census of the resident population of Labrador, from Blanc Sablon to Cape Harrison inclusive, has this summer been taken by order of the Government. The total number is 2,479, comprising"—so and so. Then it goes on: "In this number about 300 Indians and half-breeds of the Esquimaux and Mountaineer races are included. They reside chiefly in the magnificent bay called Hamilton Inlet and that neighbourhood."—This is a little important for me, and it will help your Lordships if I indicate now why it is important.

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

There is an important argument to be considered here in the Canadian case, suggesting that Labrador cannot be regarded as having been exhaustively dealt with by this allocation between Newfoundland and Quebec, because this would be wholly contrary to the policy (of which you may find considerable traces in some documents) of making provision for the Indian population. It is perfectly true that the provisions for what were called the Indian lands, when arrangements were made after the Treaty of Paris in 1763, are quite plain and prominent; but I am going to submit to your Lordships, and I think I can satisfy your Lordships, that the reference to Indian lands in these 18th century arrangements is not a reference to just a few people who are on Hamilton Inlet. It is hundreds and thousands of miles away from the area which is really being pointed to. The area of Indian lands in the 18th century, though not very precisely defined, was a very important tract. There was a distinction drawn between the portion of the territory which you might call the territories of His Majesty, and the territory which you might call Indian lands. The reason for that (if I may tell your Lordships now, because it is very important to have it in mind) was this: during the 18th century, and during the conflicts which may be said to have come to a head at the time of the Seven Years War, but which, as far as the American continent had been concerned, had been spasmodic for some time before that, the English policy had been a policy—and we always prided ourselves upon it—that we were very careful not only to make bargains and treaties with the Indians, but to keep them. The well-known phrase “Bury the hatchet” as a matter of fact comes down from the time when one of these treaties was most solemnly entered into after there had been a controversy with the Indian tribes, and there was a solemn digging of a hole and burying of a hatchet. That is what that comes from.

But all that was on a wholly different area of country, which I can for the moment briefly describe as the area of the Great Lakes. If your Lordships remember Fenimore Cooper, and that sort of delightful literature, those Indian tribes with the splendid names were to be found in that area, very largely in an area which is now the United States. And really the notion that the authorities, when they were engaged in dealing with Labrador, a practically unpopulated region, were as a main object of their policy providing for Esquimaux on Hamilton Inlet, is quite fantastic.

The reason why I call attention to this on page 1462 about the Esquimaux and the Mountaineer races is this, that as a matter of fact these poor people, of whom there were very few and who were very degraded, I am afraid, or at any rate very undeveloped, are described as “residing chiefly in the magnificent bay called Hamilton Inlet and that neighbourhood. Most of them are connected with the Hudson Bay Company. The half-breeds, who have sprung of Europeans and Indians, are docile, decent and intelligent, they speak good English and are fond of learning to read and write. They are employed”—here we are again, Lord Haldane—“in the salmon fishery in summer, and in furring in winter, catching only a little cod in the fall of the year, for their own consumption. On the whole they make out a tolerably comfortable living. In the summer the coast of Labrador swarms with thousands of people from Newfoundland, who engage in the cod, herring and salmon fisheries during the season—and return in the Fall to their own country. They are, of course, not included in the Labrador census.”

Sir John Simon.

That is the picture which seems to me to be drawn by reading these documents as impartially as an advocate can. I am really trying to save the time of the Tribunal by giving them what I think is the fair impression. The picture you get is that this area was an area which from very early times was regarded as principally, and almost exclusively, important as a nursery for seamen and as the site of a most valuable fishery. The fishery was far from being limited to cod, because there was also a fishery in salmon and other fish, for example, seals, which, of course, are found in the bay. This fishing population was migratory, or, rather, was in the nature of an annual visitant; they came in the spring and went away in the winter. That is the method that is employed. But side by side with that, there was a small body of people who were inhabitants in a permanent sense. There is a very curious word which you find used again and again, and which I am told is current in that part of the world: they are called "Livyers," meaning, apparently, people who live there; and these people, the permanent inhabitants, are there in quite small numbers. Naturally, of course, their base of operations is close to the sea water-line, but when their business calls for it they are to be found some distance inland; and there is a body of testimony to which I must call attention at some stage, which goes to show that there are people who are living, and permanently living, in what they always supposed to be Newfoundland jurisdiction, a long way up the various rivers, away altogether from the salt water, some of them living there permanently, some living there for half the year, and so on.

Therefore the problem is to apply to a peninsula which has those general features the language of these documents, statutory and prerogative documents. And, in doing so, is there any reason for denying what unquestionably was the understanding of everybody for a very long time, that one went up to the height of the land?

Now, my Lords, I had got as far as page 1462. Page 1464 is the report for the year 1870. I will try to save time about it, but it is referring again and again to the salmon fishery and so on, and on page 1466 it refers to the schools. In the middle of that page it gives you a list of the schools. They are on a very modest scale.

Then on page 1469 you get the report for the next year, and you get a mention now of a mail steamer. That is on page 1470. On that page, after again referring to the salmon and again referring to education, four public schools—the report says, at about line 25: "The medicines placed by the Government at my disposal I dispensed to all who required them." And then at line 28 it says: "The Mail Service for Labrador introduced by the Government last summer was doubtless of great utility and convenience generally to the merchants and fishermen engaged in the trade and fisheries of that coast; but I know that the mercantile house at Blanc Sablon, the southern extremity of our territory and the Hudson Bay Company at Rigoulette, Hamilton Inlet in the North are dissatisfied that the postal steamer does not call on those places, as they are thus practically excluded from the advantages enjoyed by the rest of the mercantile community.”

Then it is rather interesting to see, on page 1475, that you do get migratory Indians who sometimes come across. In fact, there is a lot of material to show that some of these Indians, whose natural habitat is on the bank of the Gulf of St. Lawrence—they come, for instance, from places like Seven Islands, and Mingan, all in the Quebec territory—travel up the valleys; they make their way over the highlands and then trek or come down to the Labrador coast. Thus you get, for example, in 1873, on page 1475, this sort of report from Judge Pinsent: “This season we went in our vessel where I had not been before, to the N.W. River at the head of the magnificent bay called Hamilton Inlet”—your Lordships see where the North–West River is indicated—for the purpose of enabling Mr. Crowdy to vaccinate the Indians ”—apparently this is one of the blessings of civilisation which Newfoundland has been spreading in that part of the world —“to vaccinate the Indians belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company, who have their principal Labrador establishment there, and where Mr. Connolly, their chief officer, resides. It was owing to his representation and request last year that the Government determined to send a medical man to Labrador, for the purpose of vaccinating the inhabitants. Mr. Crowdy performed the operation on all the Indians here assembled, nearly two hundred men, women and children. These Indians are from Canada and the Mountaineer race—they speak the Indian language and follow the Indian mode of living. It was curious and interesting to see them encamped in their birchrind covered wigwams, at N.W. River, employed in building and repairing canoes and other work, preparatory to their journey into the interior of the country for hundreds of miles, on their annual furring expedition, for which purpose they are supplied by the Hudson's Bay Company. In these journeys all go—men, women and children; they travel by land and water, ascending rivers, crossing lakes and passing through woods and over barrens. They start from N.W. River in the summer and return the following spring with their catch of furs. They are Roman Catholics and are attended by a clergyman who comes down for that purpose every summer. These Indians are quite a different race from the Esquimaux who inhabit the north coast of Labrador, and who generally occupy themselves in catching fish and seals.” Then on the next page he reports that the mail service is improving.

Then, on page 1478, you get the report of another Judge, Judge McNeil, and again there is a great deal about the salmon fishery and the settlers. The idea that the Newfoundland Government is concerning itself with a merely transitory population is really utterly contradicted by these documents, and I do not think it can stand for a moment when they are examined.

Then on page 1480 comes a record which brings to an end my second period, namely, a record that the Newfoundland Executive decided to dispense with a separate Judge of the Labrador Court. They have relied, for a considerable time which follows this period, upon help given by medical missionaries or J.P.'s, and sometimes by other persons, and they have found, in the primitive condition of things, or they have thought, that that was satisfactory.

Then there follows an affidavit, and I think your Lordships may as well look at it now. It is the affidavit of Dr. Macpherson, and it is on page 1481. There is a very great deal of testimony of all sorts and kinds in these volumes. I am not going to offer to read more than a small part of it, but I will read what I think is significant. Here is Dr. Macpherson, who says: "I served as a medical officer on the Labrador"—he is using an expression which is so common—"for a period of nearly 3 years between 1901 and 1904. I went there originally as a medical missionary with Dr. Grenfell and was then employed by the Newfoundland Government to prevent the spread into Newfoundland Labrador of an outbreak of small-pox in Canadian Labrador. In the course of this work I vaccinated many persons in Newfoundland Labrador and made journeys into Canadian Labrador to treat small-pox cases, as there was no medical officer there. After this work I rejoined the Grenfell Mission until my return to general practice in St. John's Newfoundland, in 1904. While on the Labrador, Battle Harbour was my headquarters. I went as far West as Bradore, some 10 miles West of the boundary, between Newfoundland and Canada, and as far North as Rigolet." . . . Now, my Lords, "some 10 miles West of the boundary" means that he has passed from the green into the pink.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, that is what he means by "Canadian Labrador." He says that he thought the disease was creeping up, and he is not only a person who has been dealing with the matter in Newfoundland Labrador, but he says: "I passed the boundary and I went as far as Bradore." Then he says: "I did not go further north, since there was a doctor at North West River, and another with the Moravians at Hopedale." That, you will find, is one of the bays further on. Your Lordship's eye will probably catch that.—"I used to spend both winter and summer on the Labrador. I exercised authority there under a commission appointing me a Justice of Peace. I was also appointed a Commissioner of the Newfoundland Supreme Court. I tried cases alone and in conjunction with Dr. Grenfell. There was never any difficulty in enforcing our decisions, which were accepted without question. I was also empowered by the Newfoundland Government as Relieving Officer to relieve cases of distress at the Government's expense when I thought such a course desirable. I frequently availed myself of this authority, the traders on the Labrador furnishing the necessary supplies at my order and claiming the price from the Government. I relieved Indians and Eskimos when necessary as well as white settlers. I further held the magisterial enquiries, which are equivalent in Newfoundland law to coroner's inquisitions, in the case of deaths in Newfoundland Labrador, when it seemed necessary. In my time the river at Blanc Sablon was generally assumed to be the boundary between Newfoundland and Canadian territories. Accordingly, when I was in 1902 trying to prevent the spread of small-pox, I had the bridge over the river destroyed and stationed a policeman on the Newfoundland side and also put up a notice prohibiting intercourse from the Canadian side. From my experience I should say"—I do not think that paragraphs in affidavits which say that one Government is the friend and the other is not, have anything in the world to do with it.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I do not see what there is in this affidavit. He does not say how far up he went, or anything of the kind.

Sir JOHN SIMON: No, my Lord. I think the last paragraph is a little important, where he says: "I further say, from my experience of the Labrador, that the permanent settlers, who live at the heads of the bays, live in the winter almost entirely on hunting and trapping for furs, and that this occupation takes them, like the Indians, far into the interior. So far as I can see this must always have been so ever since settlers have been on the Labrador, for no other means of livelihood than furring is available for them in the winter.”

Then the next gentleman is Dr. Grieve, and his affidavit appears on page 1483. He is a gentleman who went up to the Northern districts; but there again I think your Lordship's comment is correct; he does not help one about how far he penetrates from the sea boundary.

Lord SUMNER: In paragraph 3 he speaks of travelling with dog teams. He could not travel from Anticosti to Okkak without going a very long distance.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord; I am much obliged. I had not noticed that.

The next affidavit is one by Mr. Berteau. That is important, and, of course, so is the matter to which my Lord Sumner called attention. Mr. Berteau is the Comptroller and Auditor-General of Newfoundland, and he says: “In 1881 I was appointed by the Newfoundland Government Collector of Customs at Rigolet and Magistrate for Labrador, and held the appointment for nine years. During those years the Hudson's Bay Company were the principal direct importers to Labrador, but Nova Scotia traders also visited the coast. We made them all pay duties to the Newfoundland Government. As far as the Hudson's Bay Company was concerned, we collected duties in respect of goods intended for use at Rigolet, North West River, Cartwright, Davis Inlet, Nachvak, or for trading with the Indians in the interior.” Now observe what the contrast was, “but not on those intended for use at Ungava.” You will see, of course, that the Ungava Bay has never been, and we have never suggested it was, Newfoundland territory. Consequently, supposing you have goods calling at, let us say, Hamilton Inlet, and there are goods for Ungava Bay, they do not go inland; they go by sea round about. Then in that event, because they are going to Ungava Bay, they are not required to pay customs duty. I do not suppose that they have any elaborate system with bonded warehouses, but you see the reason: there is a significance in that, because you will observe what the distinction is. Here are your goods coming in. Where are they going to? If they are going to Ungava Bay, they are outside. On the other hand, if your goods are going “for trading with the Indians in the interior,” it is all, as far as we understand it, within the jurisdiction of Newfoundland. “When the goods for the Company were of American origin they were brought from Canada in bond and when they had been landed duty paid I cancelled the bonds. Tobacco and other material from Canada on which excise duty would be payable if it was put into consumption was similarly dealt with. Where the goods were of Canadian production I levied duties on them just as if they were coming into a port in the Island of Newfoundland. 3. On several occasions I went up North West River and up the lakes and streams and saw the Indians who came out each summer. 4. I performed magisterial duties where necessary.” I told you this famous dispute about salmon was settled. Here it is. “I remember determining a dispute between Fortescue, chief factor of the Hudson's Bay Company, and McLean, in relation to the alleged barring by the latter of the River Kinnamish against salmon. I decided after inquiry that Fortescue's claim failed.” I think Mr. Berteau's testimony perhaps is required rather to fill in the picture.

If we might just go on in this volume to pick the matters up, page 1489 shows that as early as 1836 complaint was made by persons settled on the coast of Labrador, which may be summarised by saying they did not believe in taxation without representation. They were saying: You have a Legislature which is composed of persons elected from various constituencies in the Island of Newfoundland; you have not a system by which we who live in Labrador, have votes and members, and that being so, they went so far as to say: You cannot tax us. That was fallacious, but they said, at any rate, “You ought not to tax us.” You will observe here that Governor Prescott, who was the Governor at the time, is being pressed by Lord Glenelg, who was Colonial Secretary, and he says: “The Petitioners protest against the right of the Legislature of Newfoundland, in which they are not represented, to make laws binding on them, and record their belief that they are still under the authority of the King in Council, expressing at the same time their wish to remain so. In this view of their situation the Petitioners are evidently in error. By Statutes 49 George III. C. 27, & 6 George IV. C. 59, as well as by the Royal Commissions to Sir Thomas Cochrane and to yourself, the Coast of Labrador to the Eastward of a line drawn due north and south from the Harbour of Anse Sablon to the 52° north latitude is annexed to the Colony of Newfoundland. The authority, therefore, of the Legislature of Newfoundland to pass laws for the government of the settlers at Labrador”—nothing in the world to do with regulating a cod fishery—“cannot be disputed; but at the same time the claim of those settlers to be represented in the Colonial Legislature demands, and ought to receive, a deliberate consideration.” I cannot help sympathising with the complaint of these people for this reason, that if you look at that Commission, which you did glance at, to Governor Cochrane, in the previous volume, you will find that one of the things he is authorised to do is to convoke a legislative assembly of freeholders and householders within the Island and dependencies, and, as a matter of fact, when it came to the practical business of producing a Legislature, it was not, I suppose, found practicable, owing to the small population, or distance, or what not, and the only people who did sit in the Legislature came from the Island, I think it would be as well to appreciate that in Volume II, page 723, the Commission to Governor Cochrane authorised him to convoke a Legislative Assembly of freeholders and householders within the Island of Newfoundland and its dependencies. That is quite inconsistent with the idea, of course, that the only thing which the Newfoundland Government was doing on the dependencies or the mainland was simply having under its care and supervision a fishery. This complaint being made, it becomes a matter of controversy which does not really lead to much. You will see on page 1491 that there is a memorial at the bottom of the page addressed to the Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies, by merchants engaged in the fisheries on the coast of Labrador. These people are contending that really and truly there is only an Admiralty jurisdiction on the coast and that that is not, therefore, an area in respect of which the Legislature of Newfoundland can exact taxes. It encloses the document which follows, which is on page 1493, and the comment on it is on some pages which follow, and which are not in a very convenient order. On page 1495 Governor Prescott writes to Lord John Russell and acknowledges the dispatch and says: "The Memorial of certain merchants addressed to your Lordship on which my report is now required refers to Lord Glenelg's said letter and impugns His Lordship's reasoning, but until I am better informed I must believe that every part of this Government, in which a large portion of the Labrador Coast is included, is subject to the laws, whether fiscal or otherwise, of the Colonial Legislature—by an early Act of which the Labrador Court which had existed for several years was abolished in June 1834." They were complaining, also, that there was no constant Court there. On page 1496 comes a letter from the Secretary of State, signed, I think, by his representative, one of the officials of the Colonial Office, saying: "With reference to my letter of the 2nd of last March acquainting you that the Memorial enclosed in your letter of the 25th of February preceding, which complained of an attempt of the authorities of Newfoundland to levy duties on the Labrador Coast, would be referred to the Governor of the Colony for his Report, I am desired by Lord John Russell to inform you that the Report which has been lately received from the Governor gives His Lordship no reason to doubt that the Labrador Coast as a dependency of Newfoundland is subject to the same laws, whether fiscal or otherwise, to which every part of the Island is amenable; and that, although from the imperfect machinery of the Collection, some parties on the Coast of Labrador may have evaded the duties, no payment has been exacted that was not strictly due.” A number of documents follow, all of which I have read, but which I think I can save your Lordships the trouble of reading by saying that they reinforce that point rather elaborately, but do not, I think, add anything very material beyond that. On page 1533 you will see an indication in a letter from Mr. Donald A. Smith (who is, of course, Lord Strathcona) reporting to his own Governor—this is a letter between Mr. Smith and the Hudson's Bay Company—that he consents to pay duties on the coasts of Labrador under protest; a very good business to pay duties under protest; he does not give the reason that he wants to pay duties to somebody else. He says: “For the other goods from England and Canada, all of which were landed at North West River, the Jacques Cartier being there at the moment, I declined paying, holding that he and the Judge, who accompanied him to this place, had no jurisdiction at North West River. This he argued for some time, of course, professing to view the matter differently, but finally withdrew without receiving the duties.” If that is traced through, you will find the duties were paid. Protests were made at different times, and, so far as I can see, in the end you find that that particular controversy dropped. Whether that is so or not, there follow some documents which really put it beyond question. Will your Lordship just take these references to three of four of the statements that are included in this volume. On page 1559 you will find an affidavit by a gentleman named Mr. Blake; he is an old inhabitant and he gives a very interesting account of what he has been doing. “I, Thomas Blake, make oath and say as follows:—I live at Mulligan, about 20 miles below North West River”—that is to say, where the North West River comes out, I suppose—“and about 120 miles from the sea coast”—he means the general run of the sea coast—“I was born in Hamilton Inlet about 66 years ago. My father, William Blake, was born and lived and died here in the Inlet. He was 52 years old when he died. His father, William Blake, came from Devonshire, England, as a young man in the pioneer days of the fishing vessels sent out from England to fish on the coast during the summer season. My grandfather, my father and myself have lived in Hamilton Inlet about 140 years. I have gone into the interior about 184 miles from my home and lived there during the winter season trapping and hunting. I come out in the spring and fish for trout and salmon. I have been doing that for over fifty years. We have owned and occupied the land where I now reside during my father's lifetime and my own. Although living so far up the Inlet and in the interior of the country (being about 220 miles from the coast) I have always considered myself a citizen of Newfoundland, as my father did before me. We have been subject to the laws of Newfoundland and have paid revenue to the Customs ever since the first Revenue Collector came on the Labrador. I remember when the Court was held here at Rigolet by Judge Sweetland and afterwards by Judge Pinsent. I paid revenue to the Collector of Customs, or Customs official, that came with these Judges. I have never had anything to do with the Government of Canada, and I have never obeyed or been asked to comply with any of its laws or rules or directions in connection with the interior of the country, the game laws or fishery laws, nor paid any tax or revenue to any official of the Government of Canada. I have always believed that the land that I have resided on, trapped over and used in the interior, was the Dominion of the Government of Newfoundland and always looked to the Governor and Government of Newfoundland as the rulers of the country.”

Viscount FINLAY: Is there any conflict of opinion on these points?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Very little. I must not overburden the Board by reading more than is right; I am selecting out of a rather large body of evidence things which I think will put it most pointedly. Really the answer to your Lordship's question is, I really believe not. We are not able on our side, of course, to offer you proof of so detailed, persistent and thoroughgoing occupation and administration as, of course, you would have in a more developed country; of course not. Indeed, the place is wild, and there is a great deal of it which nobody knows much about even to-day. So far as I know, as against that, there is nothing in these volumes at all to show that the Canadian Government has ever taken an effective part in the jurisdiction, or in revenue matters, or the like, until some extremely belated attempts which, as you will see in a moment, are actually after the dispute has arisen. Since the dispute has arisen, it is wonderful how extraordinarily active the rival Government can be.

That is Mr. Blake. The next one that I thought would be useful is on the next page, Mr. Goudy. He gives an illustration of a very similar sort. This is Joseph Goudy, of North West River. He says: “I am 73 years of age, 70 of which I have lived in this Bay, about 140 miles from the sea coast. I have been a fisherman, hunter and trapper all my lifetime. I have gone into the interior hunting and trapping when I was a young man, but not so far in as my sons go now. There was no necessity then, as fur-bearing animals were much nearer. My sons, Allan aged 36 and Charles aged 34, go in regularly every winter a distance of between two and three hundred miles. They have got a house in there, and stay there all the winter season and come out in the spring; nearly all the young men residing about here, and further on, do the same to my certain knowledge. I own a range of houses and traps for a distance of about 30 miles inland”—traps, of course, for catching the furry animals. “My house, outhouses and gardens, in all about a couple of acres, I have occupied for over 60 years. I have always paid Customs duties to the Government of Newfoundland on all that I bought or purchased. I remember when Judge Sweetland visited Rigolet and held Court there. I also knew Judge Pinsent, and also Mr. Winter, the Collector of Customs, who came with the Court. I have paid duties to the Government of Newfoundland ever since duties have been collected. Although residing up here in the interior of the Labrador, I have always considered myself a citizen of Newfoundland, and subject to its laws and government. It is Newfoundland laws we have to go by. I have never had anything to do with Canada, nor any persons representing the Government of Canada, have never paid any duty to them, and have never obeyed any of their laws or rules and regulations.”

The next one I was going to take is page 1562, the affidavit of Mr. Parsons, now apparently of Montreal. He says: “I spent 25 years on the Labrador Peninsula. I was two years at Cartwright and five at Rigolet.”

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: Where is Cartwright?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is south of Hamilton Inlet.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: In the last affidavit, Goudy talks about land which he had bought and purchased in the interior and paid duty on. It would be very interesting and useful to know whether he bought it from the Government of Newfoundland.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am going to show your Lordship that the Newfoundland Government had been making grants of public land.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: He did not say from whom he bought it.

Sir JOHN SIMON: He does not in fact; but I can show it. The Newfoundland Government to-day is drawing a substantial revenue from the rent of timber limits in this area.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: Was it doing so before the dispute arose?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord. I do not say it was as large an amount as now.

Mr. MACMILLAN: The statement which my learned friend makes with such confidence we traverse with equal confidence.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, but I happen to have the material.

Mr. MACMILLAN: So have I.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I was reading the affidavit of Mr. Parsons. "I then went to North West River and after that to Cartwright for four years. After that I went to the Ungava section of the Peninsula for nine years, being for two years of that time travelling at intervals from Quebec to St. Augustine's. Then I resided at St. John's, Newfoundland, and travelled in the Canadian and Newfoundland Labrador district which covers an area between Blanc Sablon and Port Harrison in Hudson Bay. During the last four or five years I have also travelled in the territory east of Montreal. I was at North West River for the three years 1905–7. The permanent settlers, who subsist principally on furring in the winter, used constantly to go inland hunting and trapping 150 miles or more, and often as far as height of land. There were some 200 or 300 Montagnais Indians definitely attached to North West River and they also travelled far into the interior on their hunting expeditions. Goods supplied to the settlers and Indians round North West River Post were brought up via Hamilton Inlet and duty was paid on such goods to the Newfoundland Government. The Newfoundland Game Laws were enforced against the settlers, and I remember a man residing on the Labrador Coast being fined $100 for killing animals out of season. When I was at North West River lumbermen

p. 132

I myself travelled up the Nascopie or North West River about 40 miles from the Settlement and also went up Goose Bay and some 20 miles along the Hamilton River. In addition I went some 5 or 6 miles up the Kinamon. I should estimate that there were about 1,000 settlers in Hamilton Inlet when I was there. In the fall of the year the tide at North West River was very strong, and the water gets brackish." Lord Sumner will notice that; it has a bearing upon something he said to me.

Then would your Lordship just take two references in Volume II, which are of a similar sort, and then I will pass on.

In Volume II, page 384, there is an affidavit of Mr. William Ernest Swaffield, who apparently is now in Montreal. He is Manager of the Hudson's Bay Company's Fur Warehouse at Montreal. He says in paragraph 1: "I was for 29 years in the service of the Hudson's Bay Company on Labrador. I went to Davis Inlet in 1891 as Post Manager. After 9 years there I went to Cartwright for 5 years in the same capacity. I then went to Rigolet for 7 years and to Cartwright again for 8. During those last 10 years of my service on Labrador I was District Manager of the Labrador District consisting of 4 posts, viz.:—Cartwright, North West River, Davis Inlet and Rigolet." By "4 posts" he means, of course, four Hudson's Bay Company's posts. Paragraph 2: "As District Manager I visited North West River once a year for inspection. I recall that C. S. Porter & Company of New York established a fur trading post at Cartwright in 1916 at North West River in 1917, and at Rigolet in 1919, and that the Revillon Company"—I think that is a company which one knows of by repute as the place where ladies get furs in London—"established a post at North West River over 20 years ago, which they still maintain." Paragraph 3: "I always paid duties to the Newfoundland Government for each of the Hudson's Bay Company's posts in my District, and so to the best of my knowledge, information and belief, did my predecessor. I base this belief on my recollection of the Company's books and the fact that when I took over there was no suggestion that the duties had not been or ought not to be paid. The annual payment for the District ranged between 2,000 dollars and 5,000 dollars." Mr. Donald Smith was a very good business man, but whatever his protest may have been, the duty was paid. Paragraph 4: "About 1911 a census was taken for the Newfoundland Government and a little later I took a rough census of the two Bays, Sandwich and Eskimo, for the Canadian Government. To the best of my recollection there were about 350 people in Sandwich Bay and about 700 in Eskimo Bay." 1911 is after the controversy arose. When I said just now there was really no evidence of Canadian activity in this area, I had in mind the possibility it might be said: "Oh, yes, we took a census." Paragraph 5: "I used to send stores to Mud Lake, a sub-post of North West River, about eighteen miles further up the Bay situate at the entrance of Grand River. Mud Lake is about the end of Salt Water. When the tides come up it 'backs up' the River there in its flow outward." Paragraph 6: "The Indians used regularly to come to Davis Inlet from the interior. Sometimes considerable numbers of them, amounting to not less than about 100, came from Ungava Bay, and I often did 5,000 dollars of trade with them in one season." Paragraph 7: "Indians used also to come out to North West River every Summer and Winter. In the Summer they would camp there for weeks, make their canoes, dress their deer skins, and do other work, and in the Winter they would come out to trade. We opened accounts for many of them and made them advances every Fall against their Winter's catch of fur, and the number of them coming out is increasing in recent years. Our Company has recently bought the Revillon Company post at North West River and that Company had withdrawn from Labrador altogether." Paragraph 8: "During all the time I was on Labrador the Newfoundland Government always prohibited the cutting of timber within a three-mile limit from the sea"—of course, if the Canadians' case is right, that is going three times further inland than they had any right to go—"and forbade the Summer fishermen, the permanent settlers, the Eskimos or the Indians to trap for fur out of season." Paragraph 9: "The permanent residents, who numbered on the average some 3,000, always subsisted on furring in the Winter. Men, women, and children took part in it, and their hunting took many of them as far as the height of land." Paragraph 10: "At North West River the tide in the Fall of the year is brackish and the water too salt to be drinkable." Paragraph 11: "My Company was frequently called upon to relieve distress, and when this happened used to recover the money from the Newfoundland Government. Such relief was given not only to the white settlers but also to the Eskimos when required." Paragraph 12: "The whole of the Hamilton Inlet as far as Goose Bay is navigable by steamers." Goose Bay is, I think, at the extreme west. It is navigable by quite big steamers; I have the soundings to show to your Lordships. "The Newfoundland Government's mail steamers regularly go to North West River." I think for the present purposes that really indicates what I want to indicate on that sort of point. Now I should like to tell your Lordships how the present controversy arose and what is the area and what are the circumstances in which this suggestion that we had been wrong in our view comes up. Let me first get rid of a point which does not on analysis hurt me at all. In 1880, as your Lordships remember, there was an Order in Council (you will find it in the red volume at page 244) which annexes to Canada all British North America except Newfoundland and its Dependencies. "Imperial Order in Council of 31st July, 1880, annexing all British Territories in North America (except Newfoundland and its Dependencies) to Canada." Now it does not carry the matter a step further. I, of course, concede that I am not entitled to succeed in the present contention merely by saying this is No Man's Land, and I should have some of it. If it is No Man's Land it is not my land. But on the other hand, if the construction for which I am contending of the Statutes and Orders in Council is correct, neither does this Order in Council of July, 1880, reduce my rights by one bit. So that neither anything which has been done under the Order in Council—and may I add, and I do it with intention—nor anything that could be done by Canadian legislation, will reduce the area which is annexed to Newfoundland at all. I mention the possibility of Canadian legislation because after this controversy arose, when it was at an acute stage, the Dominion Parliament thought fit to pass legislation in which it purports to define the boundaries of Quebec in terms which I submit obviously invade my area. All I say about it is that in so far as it has done so it is perfectly nugatory and therefore we are ultimately thrown back to the question of what the Imperial Acts of Parliament and Grants effected.

Sir John Simon.

The present controversy may be said to begin in 1888. When I say the present controversy I do not for one moment mean any controversy between the Dominion and Newfoundland. That did not arise until much later. The first thing that happened was that Mr. Justice Pinsent, who I rather think was the son of Judge Pinsent, whose name you have seen, thought it desirable to point out that it was just as well to have this thing cleared up; and if your Lordships will look in Volume II, at page 341, you will see that Mr. Justice Pinsent (the son, not the father) is writing to Governor Blake. It is really a Newfoundland Judge writing to the Newfoundland Governor. He is saying that it would be desirable to have this thing made quite clear. "Sir, I have the honour to bring under your Excellency's notice a matter of no little importance touching the territorial limits of Labrador as a dependency of this colony. Some years ago I submitted the point to Governor Sir John Glover, but either his illness or his removal about that time prevented his giving it much consideration. The matter is one not without importance in its general bearing upon the rights of government, but it comes to be of practical and essential significance when questions of either civil or criminal jurisdiction arise, and they may at any time arise, particularly on the northern circuit of the Supreme Court where I so frequently preside. The case in which the difficulty first became prominent was upon the trial in St. John's of an Eskimo Indian for the murder of his wife on the coast of Labrador. The question of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court was then raised on behalf of the accused, and not without much force, but the locality of the offence was so near the coast that the court overruled the objection. The extent of the jurisdiction of the Government of Newfoundland in Labrador is thus defined by letters patent of the 28th March, 1876." Then he appends the extract from the letters patent which were then current. Then he says: "For the purpose of illustrating the matter clearly, I enclose portion of a map of the Dominion of Canada, published by Canadian official authority, in which all that part of the peninsula of Labrador coloured white is, as it were, allowed to belong to this Government, but if that area is compared with the description taken from the royal letters patent constituting the office of Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the island of Newfoundland and its dependencies, it will be seen that the territorial extent of (Newfoundland) Labrador represents a vast deal more than would be ordinarily intended by the term 'coast,' and, moreover, extends inland and west of the line drawn due north and south from Anse Sablon eight to nine degrees. This Canadian topography is, I think, quite correct so far as the limits of the Dominion territory are concerned, and the remainder of the coast of Labrador would thus quite naturally belong to this Government, but they are not so described and defined in the letters patent or commission of the Governor of this colony, and indeed the description falls very short of covering the whole ground, and when questions of jurisdiction arise the court has to determine in every case whether the particular locality is upon the coast of Labrador or not. The fact is, there are some settlements of importance far inland, e.g., notably in Hamilton Inlet, over 150 miles from the sea coast. The geographical reasons for the division given in the Canadian map are clear enough, as the north-western portion of Labrador, or that which drains into Hudson's Bay and Hudson's Straits, now forms the north-east territory of the Dominion of Canada, and the southern portion, draining into the Gulf of St. Lawrence, is incorporated with the Province of Quebec. At the same time the Canadian authorities are not certain or precise as to their boundary lines, and they are marked, as your Excellency will perceive, 'supposed boundary,' and possibly the course of the North West River, so far as it runs from the 52nd parallel, would, regarded naturally, be the more consistent and definite dividing line. The publication by Canadian official authority of the map in question or some such other may be useful as a definition of the rights of the Dominion of Canada, but it would not have the effect of conveying to Newfoundland British territory not included in its own, and which might, from not being by Imperial authority embraced in either, be a sort of 'no man's land,' over which neither of the colonies could exercise government nor their courts jurisdiction. I have therefore to submit to your Excellency and to Her Majesty's Government the desirability of so defining the territorial boundaries of that part of Labrador intended to be attached to Newfoundland as a dependency of its Government, that no doubt may be left as to the jurisdiction of its courts and the authority of its officers.”

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: I think that is a very practical letter.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Quite, and his attention has been called to it because he has been trying an Eskimo, and the defence, having nothing to say on the merits, I suppose, took exception to the jurisdiction.

Mr. MACMILLAN: With much force.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Certainly with much force; it is sure to be forcible when you are defending a gentleman charged with an offence of that kind.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I do not see what he means by the North West River running from the 52nd parallel.

Mr. Macmillan.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think the map he must have been referring to—in fact, I think we have identified it—is that one in our Atlas, No. 35, which your Lordship looked at earlier in the day, where you called my attention to the phrase “supposed boundary.” I think he must have had this map before him. It is on rather a small scale, and when you look at the map to see what it means, it is on so small a scale that you can hardly see it, but it looks as though it indicated some sort of water channel which cut across the yellow and got into the white.

Mr. MACMILLAN: That is quite a common feature of several of the maps. They did not know the location of the North West River in those days, and they drew it debouching into the Gulf of St. Lawrence. There are several instances of that.

Sir JOHN SIMON: There are, but at the same time I should hardly have thought they would not have known by the year 1878—

Mr. MACMILLAN: In 1888, ten years later.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I was saying I should hardly think that those persons in 1878 who were really devoting themselves to geography would not have found out that there was a North West River in Hamilton Inlet. However, it does not matter. It is rather plainer on this other one. I do not know whether your Lordship cares to see it.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: No, I can see it on this map.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Now, my Lords, that is starting a chase which went on for some time, and, as sometimes happens, I think the cautious, and I dare say acute, judicial view which urges that something quite explicit should be done is not quite the same as the possibly dilatory but certainly vague policy which postpones the precise decision; and from this time forward Mr. Justice Pinsent for some time is pressing the point. At page 346 it is interesting to observe that at any rate Sir John Macdonald, who was Prime Minister of Canada, thought, and very properly thought, that his official map was perfectly right and that there was no difficulty about it. He quotes the Act and he says: “If any maps have been issued in Canada showing other boundaries than these they are inaccurate. The undersigned therefore recommends that this despatch be referred to the Minister of the Interior, with instructions to make full inquiries as to the issue of the said maps and to report as to the best means of correcting any such errors.” You will find in a moment he comes to the conclusion that there is not any error.

Mr. Johnston, a very well-known name in connection with map-making, on page 347 makes a memorandum. If I understand rightly, Mr. Johnston was the Canadian geographer. He was, I think, a relation, at any rate, of the very well-known Edinburgh firm, and I rather think that when Lord Dufferin went out to Canada, he took with him Mr. Johnston, who became Geographer, and there is no doubt Mr. Johnston's views on these matters are quite important. Mr. Johnston made memorandum which he addressed to an official in the Canadian Government. He says: "With reference to the memorandum of Sir John Macdonald hereunder (10th May, 1889) and the despatch of the Secretary of State for the Colonies (9th April, 1889), I find the jurisdiction of Newfoundland in Labrador more fully defined in the 'Imperial Letters Patent' (28th March, 1876)" and so on. Then he says at line 23: "On the sketch map which I have prepared to accompany this memorandum, taken from the maps of British North America, by Arrowsmith, of London, and W. and A. K. Johnston, of Edinburgh, it will be seen that the custom has been to make the boundary of Labrador, southerly, from Cape Chudleigh (at the ocean entrance to Hudson's Strait, along the height of land) to the undefined northern boundary of Lower Canada (now Quebec), thence easterly and south along the said northern boundary of Lower Canada and Anse Sablon. It does not appear that this line was intended by the geographers to represent the boundary of the territory in Labrador under the jurisdiction of Newfoundland, but must probably be the dividing line between Labrador and what was supposed to be Hudson's Bay Company's territory. The name 'Labrador' or 'Peninsula of Labrador,' in its full geographical application, has been generally understood to cover the whole region between the Atlantic Ocean and the east coast of Hudson's Bay, as evidenced by the earliest maps of the country. On the map of the Dominion, published from time to time by this department, the same system of drawing the Labrador line has been followed as on the British maps, but we have invariably taken the precaution to show it in a dotted line with the words supposed or undefined applied to it."

Mr. Johnston there is not quite accurate. They have done so sometimes, but not always. "My impression is that nothing more was intended than a comparatively narrow strip along the coast (coloured pink), which would include the fishing stations, missions, Hudson's Bay Company's posts, etc., and such a strip, probably, is all that is included in Imperial instructions to the Governor of Newfoundland, as indicated in his despatch to the Colonial Secretary, 27th February, 1889. He writes: 'The frontier laid down by the Dominion Government . . . does not correspond . . . with that laid down in my instructions, thus leaving a large tract between the two lines which is under no one.' The so-called neutral tract referred to here, I have no doubt, is that coloured yellow on the sketch map, and which is, beyond question, a part of the 'territorial transfer' made to Canada by the Imperial Government in 1880." Then he quotes Mr. Justice Pinsent. And then he goes on to say: "It is hardly necessary to remark that Canada has not defined any line between the two colonies, either on official maps or otherwise, and, so far as I am aware, the question is now placed before the Dominion Government by the Colonial Secretary for the first time. At present the best maps of the interior of Labrador (as might be expected) are very inaccurate and misleading in their character, being largely made up from the crude sketches of Hudson's Bay Company's officers, supplemented by Indian reports. A map is now, however, being prepared in this department, under my own supervision, which will be ready for the printer in a few weeks, and which will contain the latest and most reliable information in relation to the geography of the Labrador region." What he encloses is something which he has prepared in which he draws a substantial coast selvedge cutting across at Rigolet, but in other respects, as far as I can see, including the backs of the bays; and then, having indicated a sort of watershed, he says of the yellow portion: "Presumed to be part of the 'territorial transfer' made to Canada by the Imperial Government in September, 1880." There is nothing whatever contemporaneous with the Order-in-Council of 1880, so far as I know, which indicates, or indeed suggests, that the motive of the Order-in-Council of 1880 had to do with this area. There were very large areas which no doubt were affected.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Is he right in saying that the wavy line along the heights corresponds with the eastern boundary of the Hudson's Bay territory?

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: I see on the map he says, at the line dividing the green from the yellow: "Watershed: formerly the easterly limits of H.B."

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Is he right in saying that?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think what one can say about that is this. That is certainly the view that is expressed in the House of Commons map of 1857. That is in the Newfoundland Atlas Map No. 26.

Viscount HALDANE: What he is suggesting is that there is a definite transfer to Quebec, but all the rest is undisposed of.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is what he is suggesting.

Viscount HALDANE: That is what his map shows.

22 Oct., 1926.
Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: His map is drawn to accompany his particular despatch. Nobody had ever done it before. I was just going to trace it back by reminding the Lord Chancellor, if I might, that I think it is reasonable to say that the green on Map No. 26 verges on the pink on the height of land. That is by no means limited to that, however. It is to be found again and again in the older maps so far as the Hudson's Bay is concerned. Indeed, it was one of the points that I was seeking to make earlier in the argument. For instance, it is put in an obscure form in some of the quite early ones, and in a more precise form later on. Take Map No. 12. That is a very important map. I am going to call attention to some commentary on it at some time. Map No. 12 is Bellin's map, 1755. Here you have, as you see from the legend: "Les possessions des François sont colorées en bleu; celles des Anglois sont colorées en

p. 139

Lord Sumner.

Sir John Simon.

Lord Sumner.

jaune." He therefore is colouring the Hudson's Bay territory by this verging yellow line, and though one cannot be quite sure, I think there is no doubt that that is intended to be the height of land. Would your Lordship observe the words "Hauteur des terres" on the boundary between the yellow and the blue on the meridian 95?

Lord SUMNER: You notice that to the left of the words "Hauteur des terres" there is also the phrase "Grande étendue de pays entièrement inconnue."

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is quite true, but the two things are not only not contradictory, but, if I may say so with great respect, deal with quite different points. The proposition that my territory goes back to the height of land is a proposition which is neither advanced nor impeded by the further proposition that I cannot tell you on this map how many miles that will be.

The Lord Chancellor.

Lord SUMNER: Oh, no; but it is indicated where the height of land is in a territory which is entirely unknown. If you content yourself by saying, wherever it is when it is found out in this unknown land, that will be the limit to your territory, then there will be no contradiction. He has not found it out.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Quite so. He is a more honest geographer than some.

Sir John Simon.

Lord SUMNER: I thought the point might be of some value to you yesterday in this connection as evidence that in those days, at any rate, it was taken for granted that the height of land was a natural frontier of a country, approaching from the sea. Even although you could not tell where it was, there must be one. Therefore when you get there you will have discovered the undiscovered boundary.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Explore another avenue. Your case is that the Coast of Labrador runs back to the height of land. It seems you may also say that at that point it runs back to the Hudson's Bay boundary. It is the same thing.

22 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Yes.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : That is all there is of Labrador.

Lord Sumner.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes. If you remember, my Lord, I called attention to that view very early in the argument yesterday. Of course, when you have first the Hudson's Bay territory granted—which I asked the Board for the moment to assume meant the territory running back to the height of land—and then you proceed, by the Commission to Graves, to say that the Governor of Newfoundland is to have jurisdiction on the Coast of Labrador beginning at the entrance to Hudson's Straits,

p. 140

it perhaps is worth noting that that is, if I am right, beginning at the point where the Hudson's Bay territory ends, and if it was a question of going back and tracing the boundary, again if I am right, the same height of land serves both purposes.

Sir John Simon.

Lord Sumner.

Sir John Simon.

Lord SUMNER: I think you will find that in the sixteenth and seventeenth century geography "coast" is constantly used merely for that line that you approach from the sea. There were half-a-dozen separate coasts in the Bight of Benin—the Guinea Coast, the Slave Coast, the Gold Coast, the Ivory Coast, etc. There is the Coromandel Coast in Southern India, and there is the Mosquito Coast, and two or three others in the Gulf of Mexico, none of which, as far as I have understood, had any definition involving the proposition that you could not go extending into the interior. And if you come to consider the extension made in the eighteenth century by the American colonists, they claimed the right to proceed across the continent until they came to the sea on the other side as inherent in the fact that they were colonists upon an Atlantic coast.

Sir JOHN SIMON: True. But the last view, of course, is undoubtedly taking the thing on quite a different line. That is disregarding mountains, and it was a bad claim.

Lord SUMNER: It appears to have been the idea that you landed on a coast for the purpose of going into the interior when you were ready to go.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes. May I take up the illustration your Lordships give? We have prepared ourselves—and I have here the assistance of a whole book about them—instances like that for the purpose of showing to what extent the coast, in cases of that sort, really meant what you may call the basin drained as between two points on the coastline. Directly, in answer to the Lord Chancellor, I say that the view that the boundaries of the Hudson's Bay territory were discoverable, I will not say identified, is strongly confirmed by such a map as this. It is true that you find the words “Hauteur des terres” where the land is unknown, but it is material to observe that you get the words “Hauteur des terres” over again when you are getting to much better known land. You get it at the southern point, and I am not sure whether you do not get it a third time. Anyhow, there is no question that the line is drawn with the intention of showing how far the Hudson's Bay territory would extend, if this map indicates accurately the river systems running into Hudson's Bay. There is no doubt about that.

Then the next thing is this. That view prevailed so far as the Hudson's Bay Company was concerned throughout, and here I can give the Lord Chancellor the answer to a question he asked me yesterday which for the moment I was not able to deal with. If you look at the variation of the boundary which on some of the maps is called the boundary of the Hudson's Bay territory as traced by the Commissaries under the Treaty of Utrecht, you will find, when you look at one of the volumes here, that the explanation is this. The Hudson's Bay Company were invited by the British Government to indicate not so much what their boundary was as how much of their boundary they really insisted upon if the French on the other side were difficult, because after the Treaty of Ryswick our position was very weak in this part of the world. The Hudson's Bay Company then propounded a line which no doubt would have given the French settlers much they might have liked on the James Bay part of the area, but compensated themselves by taking more than they were entitled to on the Coast of Labrador. Therefore I think it is correct to say that the view that has prevailed, though I thoroughly agree it has nowhere been said in so many words, is that such a grant as the Hudson's Bay Company had was really a grant to the height of land.

Perhaps I might indicate, before the Board rises for the day, when this controversy of Mr. Justice Pinsent's was carried on. On page 354 of Volume II is a further memorandum of his, and in that further memorandum he says that the Labrador boundary, I think, will be the height of land, or it will be a straight line which joins Cape Chidley to the high waters of the St. John. It is really that view which is illustrated in the little map found in Volume I, which I think Lord Sumner referred to, by which it would almost appear that Newfoundland and Labrador is in the nature of a right-angled triangle.

Then the thing having been left undecided (and hence the inquiry upon which we are now involved), in 1892 there was a Conference called the Halifax Conference, details of which are to be found in Volume II, page 362, when one of the subjects on the agenda as between the Dominion of Canada and the Colony of Newfoundland was the subject. There were a number of other subjects to be discussed, but whatever may have happened about the others, this subject never got dealt with except very perfunctorily. The matter was left as it was until in 1902 the Canadian Government take objection to a grant of timber leases which had been made by the Newfoundland Government to a company called the Grand River Pulp and Lumber Company along Hamilton River, the back behind the Inlet. Canada challenged this, and Newfoundland justified it. There was a good deal of correspondence. Both the Dominion and the Colony indicated their willingness that this matter should be disposed by reference to the Privy Council. The late Mr. Alfred Lyttelton, when Colonial Secretary some years ago, approved, and the interval has been occupied, I suppose, in preparing for trial.

Viscount HALDANE: There is another theory which is put forward in Mr. Johnston's map, and that is that Canada never got any title until 1880, when the Order-in-Council was passed putting the whole of British North America, with the exception of Newfoundland, into Canada.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Quite so. Of course, if it could be said that before 1880 my boundaries were not upon their true application such as

p. 142

I say, and that there was down to 1880 a No Man's Land, I am not for a moment disputing that that No Man's Land was by the Order-in-Council thrown into Canada. My case is that there was not, and that the statutory history, and that the circumstances geographical and historical, combine to show the true conclusion to be reached is that the boundary is a boundary to be ascertained by reference to the height of land.

MORNING SESSION.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I presume, Sir John, you have completed your preliminary sketch.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes. I have covered a good deal of ground. and I hope it may save time now and later on. I think it would be convenient if I were to indicate now the compartments which I have to trouble your Lordships with in rather more detail. This is a case where I believe at this stage it is very easy to move from one branch of the case to another, but it might be convenient if I indicated the compartments I considered I should have to deal with.

I should like first of all to take up the question of the area of the Hudson's Bay territory a little more fully. I have had in mind one or two observations which the Lord Chancellor and others have made about the boundary indicated in the maps, and I think I am now in a position to deal with the remainder of that matter and dispose of it. It is a very important part of the case, I think. Then there is a thing which may, I am afraid, seem a little wearisome, hut it is really necessary. It will be necessary in another compartment to take the early and crucial document—the Commission to Thomas Graves in 1763—and in addition to the Commission itself to read some portions of the instructions which accompanied it, and also to read the documents which are on record and which were drawn up at the time, showing how the Lords of Trade and Plantations, as they were called—the predecessors of the Colonial Office—who looked after both trade affairs and what were called colonial affairs, approached and discussed the question of the redistribution of British land in America. There is a very important series of documents passing between the Secretary of State and the Lords of Trade and Plantations which show that questions like the new boundary for the Province of Quebec, and other things of that sort, were all being carefully discussed before this formal document appeared. A good deal of reliance is placed upon passages in this document by the other side, and I must call attention to them. Then the third compartment of the case, which also arises directly out of that, is the problem of the Indian lands.

25 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

I indicate those three large heads—the Hudson's Bay Company matter, the contemporary documents associated with the formal grants and definitions of 1763, and the Indian lands. I think those three heads will all be found to be of some importance.

I will take the Hudson's Bay Company matter first. Your Lordships have already a very clear view of the Hudson's Bay part of the case in the outline, and a number of things have already been noted in the course of the argument. But what is a little important to appreciate is this. The Hudson's Bay Company by their original charter of 1670 had, as we know, no interior line actually laid down by metes and bounds. That is not to say that the area of the Hudson's Bay Company is not one which by the terms of the definition could be ascertained, and my case is that the Hudson's Bay territory really was a territory that ran up to the height of land, and that there is a great deal which confirms that when one looks rather more closely at the documents. You will find that at a later stage the Hudson's Bay Company itself expounded its view as carrying up to the height of land, and that that view is acceded to by the British Government; and it is very important for me to show that this horse-shoe shaped piece of land round Hudson's Bay coloured green in the Arrowsmith map of 1857 is really defined by some such method, because, of course, it at once gives me a natural boundary at any rate at the Cape Chidley end.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: What number is that map?

Sir JOHN SIMON: The Arrowsmith map is No. 26 in the Newfoundland Atlas. This is the map which your Lordships will remember was ordered by the House of Commons to be printed in 1857 at the time when there was this Parliamentary inquiry. If your Lordships will examine the green area from the point of view of the height of land, you will see that on the eastern side it is plainly so indicated. There is no doubt at all that the green on the eastern side where it marches side by side with the pink of Labrador or with the pink of Canada East or Canada West is drawn in that way.

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Does it say so anywhere on the map?

Sir JOHN SIMON: No; but examining the indications of the rivers, you will see that at every point the rivers determine the colour, green or pink, which is used.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I see what you mean.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is not so entirely on the western side. It is to some extent, but it might perhaps be said that there are some exceptions. I am not quite sure that they are very material.

Sir John Simon.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: It is so with reference to the Chesterfield Inlet and the stream running into it. That seems to be pretty clear.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, I think so.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: It looks like it there.

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Then, when you come a little lower down, there is a large lake, Wollaston Lake. Whether rightly or wrongly, I think it is indicated that there is a draining away from that height of water to

p. 148

Sir John Simon.

the Great Slave Lake in the north-west. My Lord is beating the bounds for the purpose of seeing why the boundary is put there. Then if you come a little further down between the letters "N" and "O" of the word "North" in "British North America," you see there is an uncoloured space which indicates apparently a big lake. and I think it looks as though that was draining north-west through the Slave River into the Great Slave Lake.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: Wollaston Lake seems to have two outlets. It seems to have one on the north and one at the middle of the eastern side.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes. It is what I had in mind the other day when Lord Finlay said to me that there were places in North America where you get very near to that sort of thing.

Viscount FINLAY: The case I referred to was in South America.

Sir JOHN SIMON: In British Guiana.

Viscount FINLAY: Yes, in British Guiana.

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I thought I answered that by saying that there were apparently instances of that here too. When you trace it along between the green and pink, coming down nearer the Rocky Mountains, the same thing seems to be true until you come to the Rocky Mountains, and then it runs along the Rocky Mountains until it strikes the southern boundary, which has nothing to do with the height of land as such. That is the famous boundary of the 49th parallel, which was the subject of the most fierce contest as between the United States and Britain, and which ultimately resulted in the United States establishing that it had got, as from a particular point south of Winnipeg right away to the Pacific, as its northern boundary the 49th parallel. That is not a boundary by reference to physical geography, but a boundary by reference to latitude.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: There is a curious little inlet in the middle of the 49th parallel going round apparently the sources of Milk River, Porcupine River and White Fish River.

25 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I observe that. That is a strong confirmation of the reading of the map. The meaning, I think, is this. As between the United States and Britain the question is whether it is the Stars and Stripes or whether it is the British Flag, and the boundary is the 49th parallel. But far as the Hudson's Bay grant is concerned, the Hudson's Bay grant went up to the height of land and no further. And if there did happen to be, therefore, a point in this part of the world where you got over the watershed before you reached the 49th parallel, it was difficult to see how the title of the Hudson's Bay Company would give them that small portion. I think it confirms the general structure the map.

p. 149

The LORD CHANCELLOR: But Canada would have that island.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: As a matter of fact, the whole thing was solved by the Hudson's Bay territory being thrown into British Canada, and there is an end of it. Then there is another fact which was mentioned, I think, by Lord Haldane, and which it is important to remember in this connection.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Where does the line run along the Rockies? I see it as far as the Rockies. Does it run along the summit of them, or how?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I should not like to say at all.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It is difficult to see.

The Lord Chancellor.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I always feel when one looks at a map first and then looks at the thing in Nature afterwards, one appreciates that the map-maker tends to make the mountains run in a very sharp easy ridge with the kind of appearance rather of a woolly caterpillar crawling along the map, whereas when you come to look at the mountains you always find there is range behind range.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount FINLAY: It looks much easier on the map.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It does. It did in the Alaska Arbitration.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: At the lower end it looks as though it stops short of the mountains. I cannot see where it runs in the intermediate space. It is not very clear.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think I made good my point that so far as this matter is concerned, long after the grant, when this thing was investigated with great minuteness, and the Parliamentary Committee made its report, there can be no doubt at all that they took the view—I will show in a moment how consistent it is with a number of other things—that that was the way in which you found out to what distance back from the water the Hudson's Bay territory went.

There is another point which Lord Haldane happened to mention on Friday, and it is very important. There was, as my Lord truly said, another company at one moment—a rival company—which was called the North West Company. It was not a company which had a Royal Charter. That was not the nature of the North West Company. The North West Company was a company which was formed in Montreal, I think, in the Province of Quebec. A number of gentlemen, mostly Scotsmen, I think—I notice it is very often Scotsmen who make these adventurous expeditions—banded themselves together and got themselves formed into a company called the North West Company of Montreal with the object of trading with the Indians and exploiting the area in what was gradually being discovered to be the Further West. Of course, British Columbia and the Fraser River, and areas of that sort, were very little known at that time, but gradually enterprising people were appreciating how very important the North of America was to the west of Hudson's Bay. Exactly what the geography might be people did not know. Then what happened was this. This, I think, was what Lord Haldane was referring to. There was for a short time an extremely severe struggle between the Hudson's Bay Company and the North West Company. The Hudson's Bay Company complained to the British Government bitterly that the North West Company was invading their preserves. Things got to a very serious pass. The Hudson's Bay Company, which was a quasi-sovereign in this green area, proposed to exercise the powers which its charter gave it of appointing police and magistrates, and setting up an armed force, and by that method keeping the invaders, the North West Company, at bay and, indeed, driving them out. There was bloodshed, and a very serious situation arose. This was about 1815. The thing was ended, I think, in 1821 by the Hudson's Bay Company acquiring the North West Company's interests and rights whatever they might be. The North West Company came to an end, and the result was that this rival of the Hudson's Bay Company, pushing out to the west, was suppressed. That is the reason why, when you come to the later stage, you not only get Rupert's Land mentioned—Rupert's Land being the name that was used for the area the Hudson's Bay Company were primarily interested in—but you also get a reference to North West Territory. The two areas combined—Rupert's Land and the North West Territory—really are the two great areas which may be regarded as running together, which stood outside direct British administration, though, of course, under the British Flag, until the year 1870, and then in the year 1870 they fall into Canada as unorganised areas. That is the nature of the story. I have made my point, that the nature of the area, as far as that Map No. 26 is concerned, and therefore, I suppose, so far as indicated and approved at the time, was by reference to height of land. Would your Lordships observe the legend on the map before you pass from it? It is described in the left-hand bottom corner as “Map of North America drawn by J. Arrowsmith. On this map the territories claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company, in virtue of the charter granted to them by Charles II, are coloured green; the other British territories pink, and those of Russia yellow.” Again, just to remind your Lordships, as I am dealing with Hudson's Bay now a little more in detail, the charter is printed in the second volume at page 367. The nature of the grant, so far as language goes, is vague, but in my submission it did indicate how to arrive at the internal boundary, though it did not state where it was to be found by latitude or longitude. It is "All those seas, straits, hays, rivers, lakes, creeks and sounds, in whatsoever latitude they shall be, that lie within the entrance of the straits commonly called

Hudson's straits, together with all the lands, countries, and territories upon the coasts land confines of the seas" there mentioned. It is on page 368. It may be said that the language there is a little more elaborate, perhaps a little easier to support the contention, but it certainly illustrates what I believe was very common at the time, namely, that the grant was (as Lord Sumner put it the other day) the grant of coastline, and that though you did not know how many miles back the language of the grant would carry you, it might still be that the nature of the grant was one which made that certain which could be rendered certain, because physical geography would answer the question, as and when you needed it, as to how far you went back.

Viscount HALDANE: There was no reference at this time to the height of land.

Sir JOHN SIMON: The words "height of land" are not used, but the really central question in this whole case is when the words "height of land" are not used, but—as, for instance, in Governor Graves's grant—the language "all the coast" (it is plain that that refers to an area; it does not refer merely to a portion of the sea coast or yet a line on the land) what do you mean by "coast"? I should have thought that this idea of going back to the height of land, though you do not say so, was almost inherent in comparatively sparsely populated areas. I should have thought it was so in the highlands of Scotland in the old days, when the chiefs of clans held this area or that area, and you passed from the land of one chief to the land of the other. When one speaks of the Breadalbane country round Loch Tay, one would have thought that that was almost necessarily a thing that went up to the top, as it were.

Lord SUMNER: It depends.

25 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is when you get a conflict between one chief and another. Another instance, oddly enough, which suggests itself is this. If you consult a book like Murray's dictionary, "to coast" is a verb, and "to coast" more particularly in Canada, means to get up to the top of a hill, and, when you are at the top of the hill, to slide down. In fact, you call the operation coasting and you do it with a sledge. "To coast" means that you have to pull up until you get to the place where you get the divide, and then you get the slope down. Keeping to the Hudson's Bay Company, you do find the word "coast" is used, and you find the interpretation, as I put it, is "going back to the height of land."

Viscount HALDANE: Is not it a little striking that the word should be used to include an area a good deal larger than Great Britain?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is all a question of the dimensions of the whole thing. One may put it as an area a good deal larger than Great Britain. It is; but, on the other hand, one may put it as an extremely small part of the whole out of which it was taken, one-fifth of the peninsula, but probably one-fiftieth or one-hundredth of Canada.
p. 152

Viscount HALDANE: It is in connection with the grant of fishing rights.

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It does not seem to follow that because the immediate object and purpose to be served is, as I have already conceded, a maritime purpose, that therefore the interpretation and meaning of the language of the grant does not carry one further. As one may say, a man may only desire to own one field, but that is no reason why he should not acquire the farm; or, again, English law puts upon a grant of a piece of surface the right to the minerals underneath. It may well be that the reason why the grant was made by the Sovereign to some tenant in chief was that the tenant in chief might build a castle on the land, but that does not alter the fact, when you come to the question of who owns the coal underneath, that the man owns the coal who has the surface. It is a mere question of putting the proper legal interpretation upon the language used. Since several of your Lordships have looked again at this charter of the Hudson's Bay, your Lordship will allow me to point out that on page 369 you get the use of the words "Coasts adjacent to the said territories" at line 14, as well as the use of "coasts and confines of the seas," which is on the second line of page 368.

Sir John Simon.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: The coasts there in the line just referred to deals with another matter : "with all other nations inhabiting any of the coasts adjacent to the said territories limits," and so on.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I rather think it is not maritime at all there; I think it simply means neighbourhood.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: In this Map 26, what is the exact meaning of the dotted line which runs east and west?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Your Lordship means near Labrador?

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Yes.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I do not feel any doubt myself, but I am making a submission only, that it indicates a boundary, or a supposed boundary, by reference to the height of land between East Canada (which was Quebec) and what was not East Canada. You will observe, the map being a map of 1857, it brings in the line running due north from Ance Sablon (Ance Sablon is mentioned) to the 52nd parallel. It is true on the map you do not get the 52nd parallel, but you do get the

p. 153

50th and the 55th, and you will see that it is the 52nd; it then proceeds to carve out, by reference to the 52nd parallel, the northern boundary of the Province of Quebec.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: The straight part does that, and then it turns up north.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think the reason for that is, whether they knew the geography or not, that they are indicating what they regard as the way in which the height of land would divide in that area the water that runs into the St. Lawrence and the water that runs into the Atlantic. I have no doubt that that is what they are saying there. May I put it in this way? You see where this dotted line turns up in the pink and strikes almost at right-angles the other dotted line where the pink would run into the green. Imagine that, if your Lordships would for the moment, as the apex of a three-sided pyramid; then one side of the pyramid painted pink and labelled Labrador would slope down to the Atlantic; a second side of the pyramid (also painted pink) would slope down to the St. Lawrence; and the third side of the pyramid painted green would slope into the Hudson's Bay, and I apprehend, whether it is right or wrong, and whether the position put on the map is right or wrong, that there is no doubt that that is an indication following on the idea that the boundary of the Hudson's Bay territory is limited by the height of land. In the same way the boundary between Quebec and Labrador is bound to be limited by the height of land. I am rather strongly supported, am I not, in drawing that inference by the fact that the curious dotted line to which the Lord Chancellor calls attention, when you trace it to its source, undoubtedly does indicate a boundary of the Province of Quebec. You get that kind of indication again and again.

The next thing that I want to remind your Lordships of, or, rather, to develop with regard to the Hudson's Bay boundary is this. There are two important stages in the story of the Hudson's Bay boundary: the first late in the seventeenth century and the second early in the eighteenth, before the conquest of French Canada by the British. One is after the peace of Ryswick and the other is after the peace of Utrecht. In order to understand what it is that happened, we have to bear in mind that the position of Britain when the peace of Ryswick was secured was in this part of the world not very favourable. On the other hand, before we come to the Treaty of Utrecht in 1713, Marlborough's campaign had been fought in the Low Countries and he had won his series of great victories, and the position of British vis-a-vis the French in this part of North America was, I suppose, extremely strong. You will find that reflected very clearly in two documents emanating from the Hudson's Bay Company, because after the peace of Ryswick in 1697, the request of the British Government to the Hudson's Bay Company is: "How much of the territory to which you are really and truly entitled would you, for the sake of peace, be prepared to give up to the French?" They are trying to make terms. On the other hand, when Marlborough had won his victories, Malplaquet and so on, you come to the period before the Treaty of Utrecht, ultimately reached in 1713, when the British position was an extremely strong one, and the position then is: "How much would you, the Hudson's Bay Company, like to get at the expense of the French?" The contrast between the two things shows exactly that whereas there was what you may call the true boundary of the Hudson's Bay to be deduced from this charter, they were bound, in the difficult situation of 1697 and just afterwards, to give something up; whereas after the great and splendid success of Queen Anne they were able to suggest and to put forward a line which was even more than they were entitled to. Both of those two instances have an importance in considering what the boundary really is and how it was treated when it became necessary to divide the rest of the territory. I will take them in turn. As regards the first, the Treaty of Ryswick, I gave your Lordship a reference in the first volume to page 321, where there is an extract from that Treaty. There you get the provision in Clause 7: "The most Christian King"—that is to say, the provision of France—"shall restore to the said King of Great Britain, all countries, islands, forts and colonies, wheresoever situated, which the English did possess before the declaration of this present war; and in like manner the King of Great Britain shall restore to the most Christian King, all countries, islands, forts and colonies, wheresoever situated, which the French did possess before the said declaration of war." You may think that that is a very difficult thing to determine in terms. Then there are to be commissioners authorised to settle it, the commissioners referred to at the end of that first paragraph. Then in Clause 8 there is: "Commissioners shall be appointed on both sides, to examine and determine the rights and pretensions which either of the said Kings hath to the places situated in Hudson's Bay." As a matter of fact, the French Canadians had pushed up and unquestionably had established themselves in very strong force in many parts of the area which Charles II had granted to the Hudson's Bay Company; in fact, they had reached the water, and they had established some very important posts; for example, posts high up on the left-hand side of Hudson's Bay, which are to be found in a map which I shall show your Lordships in a moment. "But the possession of those places which were taken by the French, during the peace that preceded this present war and were re-taken by the English during this war, shall be left to the French by virtue of the foregoing article." Your Lordships see at that date, 1697, the position of this country was by no means strong. Your Lordships, I daresay, remember the fact in history that those who negotiated this regulated peace were very severely criticised by a party in England who were all for what I think is sometimes called the knock-out blow; at any rate, there was a good deal of criticism. The result was that the Hudson's Bay Company were in a considerable difficulty. Then this arose. The English Government got into communication with the Hudson's Bay Company and, as I said just now, they in effect said: "How much will you give up for the sake of peace?" and the Hudson's Bay Company were in so weak a position at that moment that they were actually prepared to give up quite an important part of Hudson's Bay or James's Bay itself. If your Lordship would turn once again to that map which we called No. 26, I will indicate what it was that they were willing to give up. For the sake of peace at that time the Hudson's Bay Company were prepared to give up in James's Bay everything which would have been south of Albany River; they were prepared to say the French, and only the French, shall come up to Albany River, so long as they will withdraw north of Albany River. On the south side the Hudson's Bay Company were in so weak a position that they had to concede what we were willing to concede, that the French should come up certainly as far as Rupert's River, and at one time as far as East Maine River. That was the position then.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount Haldane.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: I have forgotten what it was that put an end to those negotiations. They, of course, ceased after the time of James II. There was some event which made a difference.

Sir JOHN SIMON: The main thing was this. The Commissioners, after the Treaty of Ryswick, never, in fact, got to grips. I do not think they ever sat. The Hudson's Bay Company were communicating to the British Government what they would concede; years were consumed in discussion, because, after all, this was only a small portion of the world at that time, and not a very important portion of the world, and before the thing was ever settled the Marlborough wars began again.

Viscount HALDANE: I think it was the Marlborough wars.

Sir JOHN SIMON: And ultimately England got very much better terms. If your Lordship would take one reference in this connection, still keeping this map open—

25 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: It was always giving up things in the Mediterranean to keep things in North America.

Sir JOHN SIMON: There was a severe attack made on the Government of the day because it was said that they had made a shameful peace. You will see it is reflected in a most material way, if you will turn now to Volume VIII, the central page being 4044. There are one or two earlier pages which lead up to it, but 4044 is the material page, and you will no doubt think it convenient to look at it first. It is, I think, a very curious document indeed.

Viscount HALDANE: What is the document as a whole?

Sir JOHN SIMON: The section is: "A series of miscellaneous documents extracted from the Hudson's Bay Company." This gives you a glimpse of the other point. As I have said, the Treaty of Ryswick was a very unsatisfactory Treaty from the British point of view. As you will see, the Hudson's Bay Company had been asked more than once what they would be content with, and there was a good deal of controversy going on between the British Government and the Hudson's Bay Company. Here is a statement of the limits claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company, 22nd January, 1700, after the Treaty of Ryswick in 1697: "The limits which the Hudson's Bay Company Conceived to be Necessary as Boundaries between the French and them In Hudson Bay (in case of an Exchange of Places)"; that is, if the French are going to give up some posts which they have made far more in the north, a sort of compromise. "And that the Company cannot obtain the whole Streights and Bay which of Right belongs to Them." These are what they would be content with: "That the French be Limited not to Trade by wood Runners or otherwise, nor Build any House Factory or Fort, beyond the Bounds of 53 Degrees or Albany River, Vulgarly called Checkewan, to the Northward on the West Maine or Coast." I am not quite sure that the use of "coast" there is not of some significance. West Maine is the name which is constantly employed in that portion of the Hudson's Bay territory which lies on the west of Hudson's Bay. I rather think it means the west mainland. "West Maine or Coast" shows very plainly what they meant, that the coast was a great area. "2. That the French be likewise Limited not to Trade by wood Runners or otherwise nor Build any House Factory or Fort, beyond Ruperts River to the Northward on the East Maine or Coast. 3. On the Contrary the English shall be obliged not to Trade by wood Runners or otherwise, nor Build any House Factory or Fort, beyond the aforesaid Lattitude of 53 Degrees or Albany River vulgarly called Checkewan South East towards Canada, or any Land which belongs to the Hudson's Bay Company. As also the English be likewise obliged not to Trade by wood Runners or otherwise, nor Build any House Factory or Fort beyond Ruperts River to the South East towards Canada, on any Land which belongs to the Hudson's Bay Company"; and that neither of them is to make war on the other. Then: "Which the French may Verry Reasonably Comply with for that they by such Limitations will have all the Countrey South Eastward betwixt Albany Fort and Canada to Themselves which is not onely the Best and most Fertile part, but also a much Larger Tract of Land then can be supposed to be to the Northward, and the Company Deprived of that which was Always their indoubted Right."

p. 156

25 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: This was only three years after the Treaty.

Sir JOHN SIMON: They were still negotiating. They went on negotiating and nothing happened. The point is that the British Government are saying to the Hudson's Bay Company: "The French have invaded right up to the north." There is a reference here to York Fort. Would your Lordships like to identify where York Fort was? It was a very long way north indeed. York Fort on that map with the green area is on the west just below the letter "h" in "North" in the big inscription North America. What had happened was that the French traders had pushed right up; they had established themselves right up in the very heart of the Hudson's Bay country. Now comes the Treaty. The Treaty is: "You must give us what you took during the war"; and there is this attempt to create a compromise. Here is the Hudson's Bay Company rather wringing their hands and saying: "We will indicate what is absolutely necessary for us if these French people will withdraw at any rate to the 53rd parallel, or thereabouts, to the Albany River or Ruperts River, and let us have a bargain that they will not come further north than that." That is a short way of seeing the situation. After the Treaty of Ryswick, if you look back a page or two you will see that there had been quite a lot of discussion about it.

p. 157

The LORD CHANCELLOR: This was for the use of the Commissioners under the Treaty of Ryswick?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord. Will you look now at page 4033? The Hudson's Bay Company had been complaining most vehemently to the Government. "The state of the case of the Hudson's Bay Company with a narrative of their great sufferings by the French from their invasions ever since the year 1682." They here set out a most elaborate account of how the French had invaded places.

On page 4034, line 7, they are expressing their satisfaction—I think it was a rather modified satisfaction—that the Treaty of Ryswick would enable the Commissioners to settle the boundary. "And this invasion was then disowned by his most Christian Majestie and satisfaction directed, (and the manner of it) by Monseieur Calliere one of the Plenipotentiaryes at the Treaty of Riswicke." On page 4034 they go on saying, for instance at line 35: "That after all that could be said on either side had been heard and examined, the said English Commissioners made their report to his Majesty That it was their opinion that it plainly appeared his Majestie and his subjects had a right to the whole Bay and Streights of Hudson And to the sole trade thereof and that it might be fitt for His Majestie to support the Company of Hudson Bay." Then, at page 4035, line 11, after expressing loyal congratulations to King William III that he should have succeeded to the Throne, "Upon his present Majestie happy accession to the Throne," the Hudson's Bay Company revived their complaints by a memorial. Then they complain of what has been done at Fort Yorke and Port Nelson and various places, and I rather think the thing ends with a demand for compensation for moral and intellectual damage; certainly it is quantified later on.

Then again, at page 4037, the Hudson's Bay Company leave with Mr. Secretary Vernon their statement of their rights under the Charter. It is a very elaborate document, which I am sure your Lordships need not trouble to plough through in detail.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: There is nothing in all this so far bearing upon the extent of their rights inland.

p. 158

Sir JOHN SIMON: Not at all, my Lord; the contrast will be between what is said here and what is said when we come to a more happy period in 1713.

In the same way, at page 4042 they are addressing the Lords Commissioners appointed by His Majesty to treat with the French Commissioners, and they are saying at line 18: "The whole Bay and Streights of Hudson doth of antient right wholly belong to the Crowne of England, and consequently ought to be in the Companies possession as rightfull proprietore of the same." Then comes the document which your Lordships have in mind.

Now if you just carry your eye on over the next few pages you will see what happened is at page 4046: "Gentlemen, Upon consideration of what was this day offered to the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, by yourselves and other members of the Hudson's Bay Company, their Lordships have commanded me to acquaint you with their desire, that the Resolution of your Court may be taken and communicated to them, whether (in case the French cannot be prevailed with to consent to the settlement of the boundaries proposed in your general Court of the 10th July last), the said Court will not think fit to consent, that the limits on the east side of the Bay be extended to the latitude of 52½ degrees, with whatever further that Court may think advisable to propose, in reference to their own affairs, for the more easy settlement of all disputes between the Company and the French in Hudson's Bay." That is to say, if the French will give you what you say is your irreducible minimum, would you not on consideration give them a little bit more.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: On the East Coast.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, it is a difference between the East Main River and Rupert's River or Hudson's River, as it is sometimes called. Then on page 4047, the Hudson's Bay Company to the Lords of Trade, there is a reply to that and they revise their terms in this way: "1st. That the French be limited not to trade by wood runners or otherwise, nor build any house factory or fort to the northward of Albany River vulgarly called Chechechewan on the West Maine or Coast.” There you have it again: apparently when you say “West Maine” or “East Maine,” “Coast” is a synonym. Then comes the second point. In line 22 the words “West Main” should be “East Main.” “That the French be likewise limited not to trade by wood runners or otherwise, nor build any house factory or fort to the northward of Hudson River vulgarly called Canuse on the East Maine or Coast.” I have identified it; it means that the French get a little bit more, the boundary is pushed a little lower down. Then the 3rd and 4th are corresponding clauses, and this time “East Coast” is right, and in other respects I think the matter is the same.

Now, my Lords, that is the first period. As one of your Lordships said, nothing happened. It is wonderful how long these negotiations can go on. Then war broke out again, and now you will see on page 4049 we have reached the year 1709. Now see how important the distinction is. 1706, if I am not mistaken, was the year of Ramillies, 1708 was the victory of Oudenarde, and 1709, though, I think, a little later in September, was the year of the victory of Malplaquet. Therefore by 1709 the Hudson's Bay Company were no longer going to concede things to the French, and now the question was if and when Queen Anne chose to grant peace to the French. For you find that sort of thing was usual. The war was still going on, but they think now is the time to make little preliminary overtures, so they begin addressing the Lords of Trade and saying that when Queen Anne in her clemency sees fit to concede peace to her enemies the French—a thing which did not happen for another four years—they want to have a discussion about what was the boundary of Hudson's Bay.

Viscount Haldane.

p. 159

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: There was negotiation with the King himself and Lord Somers with the authority of the Great Seal. That was over these matters.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It was, my Lord; it was before the formal peace.

Viscount HALDANE: Before the Peace of Utrecht.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, that is right.

Viscount HALDANE: It must have been about the date of these documents.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It would be, my Lord, but do look at the difference in tone. It is the spirit of the thing which is so interesting, and it shows why now the Hudson's Bay Company is making such a very different claim. On page

4049, a letter of the 2nd April, 1709, addressed to Adam Cardonnell, as Secretary to the Duke of Marlborough, Her Britannic Majesty's Plenipotentiary at The Hague. The Peace does not really come for another four years. “Herewith you will receive a Booke of the Transactions between England and France anno 1687 Relating to Hudson's Bay”—that is complaining of very old injuries—“as also a map of the said coasts, which contain not only the whole Bay and Streights of Hudson, which the Company by their charter are Rightfully Entitled to, But likewise and of New France, Quebeck &c. belonging to the French, who have not only for many years been unjustly possessed of Yorke Fort alias Fort Nelson in the said Bay of Hudson but by that meanes may extend their settlements even to halfe that vast Tract of Land belonging to the Company, In their Humble Petition to the Queen they Prey that when ever Her Majestie in her great wisdom shall think fitt to enter into a Treaty of Peace with the French King, that the said Prince be obliged by such Treaty to Renounce all Right or Pretentions to the Bay & Streights of Hudson, to Quitt & Surrender all Ports & Settlements erected by ye French or which are now in Their Possession, as likewise not to saile any Shipp or Vessell within the Limitts of the Companies Charter & to make Restitution of what they Unjustly dispoiled the Company of, in times of Peace amounting to £108,514 19s. 8d. besides Interest amounting to much more than the Principall.”

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I wonder where that comes from; it is not an assessment of damages.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I understand it to be moral and intellectual damage. It occurs again and again; they were very particular even to pennies. They did not get anything. “Sir, you may upon casting your Eye on The Map observe a Line drawne Cross the Grand Lake Miscosinke Twixt Hudsons Bay & Canada, which may serve as a Boundary between the Two Nations. Viz, the French not to goe to the northward of that Line by wood Runners or otherwise or make any settlement from the same towards Hudsons Bay, nor the English in like manner to the Eastward of the said Line towards Quebeck, whereby both Nations may be Limited in Their Possessions, for the future I have not to Enlarge.”

May I just indicate the sort of line this was? It was a line which went round by pretty well the green boundary, but when you got to the Labrador side, instead of coming out at Cape Chudleigh, it came out at a point which is marked Cape Mugford or Grimington Island to Mistassini Lake. You see what they are doing now, if possible a little pushing out. It is also questionable whether the entrance to Hudson's Straits ought to be regarded as Grimington. There has been no document up to the present, so far as I know, which has ever defined the Hudson's Bay area as beginning at Cape Chudleigh, which is at the entrance to Hudson's Straits, and you can imagine a controversy.

25 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Now, of course, the Hudson's Bay Company being in a strong position, and, of course, knowing that the British would not be unwilling to claim all they could, is pushing its boundary down a bit, and the boundary it proposes is to run from Cape Mugford (Grimington Island) in a straight line to Lake Mistassini, and then going on very much as you see it now.

Your Lordships will find a reproduction of that actual map, which is very interesting because it is contemporary, not in the Newfoundland Atlas, but in the Canadian Atlas, the number of it being 24a. Of course it is not very accurate, but you will see there Hudson's Straits and you will see the point there which we have been accustomed to treat, and I think it is the correct point, as the entrance to Hudson's Bay, Cape Chidley, is not the point from which this line is drawn. Cape Chidley is a short distance further to the north-west. Then your Lordships see the line which they draw from Grimington, and they draw it through the Great Lake of Micosink, and what they are saying is:

p. 161

“Now a satisfactory boundary, one which you might press for, is one which will keep the French to the east of this line and will treat everything to the west of it for ourselves.” It is a second illustration of the same thing, namely, that according to the way the wind is blowing, you get the Hudson's Bay Company either conceding that they will have a little less than they are entitled to, or asking for a little more.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: Lake Micosink does not appear to be on Arrowsmith's map.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, it is, my Lord; it is really Lake Mistassini. It is just inside the green on Map 26.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Rupert's River runs out of it.

Sir JOHN SIMON: There is no doubt that in proposing a straight line this straight line is a conventional as opposed to a natural boundary; they are not so very far wrong, but what they are doing is that they are getting a little more than they are really entitled to. Then a very amusing thing happened.

After the Treaty of Utrecht, when it was signed, Commissioners were appointed and there were very considerable discussions, though nothing was ever settled, and the British Commissioner, though these were his instructions, acted very much as some counsel do when they are trying to settle a case. Having got his instructions to settle on certain terms, he thought it was prudent to ask for more than he was authorised to receive. So when the British Commissioners came forward, or one of them, at any rate, he did not propound this line, though it was his instructions to do so, but he drew the line still further to the south and east, and propounded a line which came out at Davis Bay—no doubt a very proper way to conduct the negotiations.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I see the St. Lawrence is called the River Canada.

25 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes. In the early days it was called the Great River of Canada sometimes, and afterwards it was called Hochelaga.

Viscount FINLAY: What does Hochelaga mean?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think it was an Indian word. I am not sure that one would not find it in Longfellow; I will look it up to see. It sounds as though it would have gone into hexameters.

If your Lordships will now turn on a page or two, you will see how the Commissioners dealt with this. At page 4049 is the Hudson's Bay Company's letter. At page 4050 is a Petition supporting it, addressed to the Queen, still in 1709. I pick out two passages only. It is repetition of much the same matter, but there are two things I would like your Lordships to observe. It is petitioning, really, that the thing shall be settled. At the bottom of page 4051, line 37: "But soe it is May it Please your Most Excellent Majestie That the Company found Their Interest not Comprehended in the Treaty of Risewick, which they are far from attributeing to any want of care in That Gracious Prince of this Kingdomes Honour & Trade, and Rather Thinke Their Right & Claime was Then overweyed by matters of Higher Consequence depending in that Juncture, for By the said Treaty They found Their Condition much worse Then it was before." That indicates the attitude at that time. Then at page 4053: "The Premises Considered, when your Majestie in your high wisdome shall thinke fitt to give Peace to those Eenemies whome your Victorious Arms have soe Reduced & humbled, & when your Majesties shall Judge it for your Peoples good to Enter into a Treaty of Peace with The French King, your Petitioners Pray That the said Prince be obleiged by such Treaty to Renounce all Right or Pretentions to the Bay & Streights of Hudson, Quitt & surrender all Forts and Settlements Erected by the French, or which are now in Their Possession, as Likewise not to saile any Shipp or Vessell within The Limitts of the Companies Charter, & to make Restitution"—and here comes the bill. I think I was right, my Lord. I have made a note here that the victory of Malplaquet was won on the 11th September, 1709, and you see that this document was a document which was presented earlier in the year; the war was still going on.

p. 162

Then there was another statement of the same thing, which need not be read, but merely noted, at page 4054. They repeat what they are claiming in 1711. Again there is a Memorial to the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations in 1712 to the same effect, and again enclosing a map. These people did not fail for want of any repetition. Then at page 4057 the Lords of Trade address the Earl of Dartmouth (I think he was Secretary of State): "My Lord, In obedience to Her Majesty's commands, signified to us, we have considered the enclosed petition from the Hudson's Bay Company to Her Majesty, and are humbly of opinion that the said Company have a good right and just title to the whole Bay and Streights of Hudson. Since the receipt of which petition, the said Company have delivered to us a memorial, relating to the settlement of boundaries between them and the French of Canada, a copy whereof is enclosed, and upon which we take leave to offer, that as it will be for the advantage of the said Company that their boundaries be settled, it will also he necessary that the boundaries between Her Majesty's colonies on the continent of America and the said French of Canada be likewise agreed and settled; wherefore we humbly offer these matters may be recommended to Her Majesty's Plenipotentiaries at Utrecht."

My Lords, is it not a little striking—I suggest it is—that the persons who were drawing up these documents plainly thought that the Bay and Straits of Hudson, the subject-matter of the Caroline Grant, certainly did not involve a mere selvedge, but did unquestionably involve a great internal area, exactly how much or where is another thing, but it is plain that when he says they are entitled to the whole Bay and Straits

p. 163

Sir John Simon.

of Hudson he does not mean that they are entitled to sail about in the Bay and land on shore, but they are talking, of course, with regard to a great territory.

Lord Sumner.

Lord SUMNER: This is what strikes me on the documents that you have read to us: that when the scales are turning in favour of the Hudson's Bay Company they do not say, as you might have expected: "Under our Charter we are entitled to land area up to a certain boundary; the French have come inside that boundary: we pray that they should be compelled to evacuate that boundary altogether and respect it in future." What they do claim is a reference to the Bay and Straits and the trade which may be done from the Bay and Straits. The desire is not to observe some natural feature as a territorial boundary, but to restrict the common use apparently of the woods and intercourse with the Indians by, not height of land, but some natural feature such as a river or possibly a parallel of latitude; but I have not yet seen anything except the convertible terms "Main" and "Coast" that seems to suggest that height of land has anything to do with the matter in anybody's mind. That may be possibly because they did not know it.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is a very forcible criticism, of course. I think as we go on you will find that the expression "height of land" is actually used. I will deal with that later. But the way I should seek to put it for your Lordships' consideration would be this. I agree that this great Company does not talk about the height of land, and probably did not know exactly where it was, but my suggestion was that the view which was certainly taken later of the Grant of Charles II really involved that a natural boundary of that sort is implicit in what they are saying and almost was matter of course at this period; that when you spoke of granting people a coast you really meant that you granted them the slope.

25 Oct., 1926.

Lord Sumner.

Lord SUMNER: Might I make a suggestion about this? At this stage in these countries, when you are not dealing with permanent settlements or mining or timber, but with traversing the woods for hundreds of miles, it is not the height of land that matters; it is the portage, and you can see that on some of these maps. The Indians have gone by ways where there have been communications by water from one place to another, disregarding altogether which way the water is running. If you look at Lake Mistassini, that represents a water communication quite apart from mountains altogether. What they no doubt did was to keep careful track of the points at which they could begin a portage and get on to the portage on another river. There was no point in following one of these rivers up to its ultimate source, like you might the springs of the Thames, or anything of that kind. At a certain point they found out by experience that it was no good going any further with it, and then the portage begins to another river.

p. 164

>At present I do not think that the height of land was a feature that much mattered to anybody.

Sir JOHN SIMON: My Lord, I am much obliged. It helps me very much to have that indication. It is right, I think, that we should see how the documents now unfold. I quite appreciate your Lordship is not suggesting that we should not.

Lord SUMNER: It becomes very much stronger as you go along.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, but at any rate your Lordship has to see how this matter stands, because unquestionably the view that is to be taken as to the proper limits of the Hudson's Bay territory has a bearing, whether it is for me or against me, on the question of my own boundaries; and that is, therefore, the reason I want to take these branches of the subject together. I will bear in mind what your Lordship has said, but two or three things do turn up later on, and I know how willing your Lordship always is to see how they fit into the scheme of things.

I had got as far as page 4058, yet another petition. In May, 1713, they were saying this: "That your Petitioners being inform'd that the Act of Cession is come over whereby amongst other matters thereby consorted, The french King obleiges himselfe to restore to Your Majesty (or to whom your Majesty shall appoint to take possession thereof) the Bay and Streights of Hudson Together with all the lands seas sea coasts rivers and places situate in the said Bay and Streights, as also all forts and edifices whatsoever intire and not demolished, Together with gunns shott powder and other warlike provisions, (as mentioned in the 10th Article of the present treaty of Peace) within 6 months after the rattification thereof or sooner if possible it may be done. Your Petitioners doe most humbly pray your Majesty will be graciously pleased to direct the said Act of Cession may be transmitted to your Petitioners, as also your Majestys Commission to Captain James Knight and Mr. Henry Kelsey to authorise them or either of them to take possession of the premises."

On the opposite page Lord Dartmouth, the Secretary of State, writes to the Company and says: “Gentlemen, I have laid your Petition before the Queen who desirs Comeing to any resolution upon the Severall Particulars therein contained”—it must be “who desirs not comeing.”

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I think it is “defers.”

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, I think it should be “defers comeing to any resolution upon the Severall Particulars therein Contained till the Councill of Trade Report their Opinion what is most proper to be done therein. In the meantime I am to acquaint you that her Majesty would not”—I think the word is “Accept” “of a Cession of the Country from the French King, because it belong'd of ancient Right to his Subjects as will appear by your Charter of which I am to Desire you to Send me an Authentick Cobby however it was Necessary to Procure an Order from the French Court for the delivery of the Possession.” I think it is a little important and bears a little on what Lord Sumner has just said to me that these documents certainly show that the view taken was: We are not getting anything from France; what we are doing is, we are recognising the fact that there is, by virtue of the language of the Charter of Charles II, a great area. Then at page 4060 there is a curious glimpse of it from the other side. This is from a French authority to De Vaudreuil, which is a famous name in the history of French Canada; it is directly handing Accadia over: “The King”—that is the French King—“haveing Thought fitt by the Treaty of Peace Concluded at Utrich the 11th of the Last month, to Grant to the Queen and Crowne of Great Brittain Accadia, the Island of Newfound Land & Hudsons Bay to be possessed henceforward in full Right (or Sovereignty) & His Majestie desiring That The Same should be punctually performed he has Commanded me to give you Advice Thereof & Lett you know That his Intention is That you should not obstruct or hinder ye same But on the Contrary That you should Conforme yrselve Thereunto.” Lord Haldane will notice the use of the word “Accadia” there. He said to me on the first day he thought Accadia was sometimes used as the equivalent of French Canada. No doubt it sometimes is, but the more proper use of it was to refer to what we now call Nova Scotia, and this is not a direction to hand over Canada—no one imagined they were going to hand over Canada in 1713—it is a direction to hand over Nova Scotia. Then on page 4061 you get repeated the same thing to the Lords Commissioners of Plantations as we had already to the Hudson Bay Company. Lord Dartmouth is insisting there “The Queen has commanded me to transmit to you the enclosed Petition of the Hudson's Bay Company, that you may consider of it and report your opinion, what orders may properly be given upon the several particulars mentioned. In the meantime, I am to acquaint you that the places and countries therein named, belonging of right to British subjects, Her Majesty did not think fit to receive any Act of Cession from the French King, and has therefore insisted only upon an order from that Court for delivering possession to such persons as should be authorised by Her Majesty to take it; by this means the title of the Company is acknowledged, and they will come into the immediate enjoyment of their property without further trouble.” Some details follow, which I do not think matter very much, both on the French side and the other side, and then on page 4067 you get another representation of the Hudson's Bay Company to the Lords Commissioners asking that the limits be settled by Commissaries, and on page 4071 you get who the Commissaries were. The principal one was a gentleman named Martin Bladen; Mr. Pulteney also had to do with it. The French Commissaries are also named, and they met.

When they met it was necessary, of course, for the British Commissioners to have instructions, and the instructions to the British Commissioners are on page 4075: "Instructions to Commissary Bladen." It is interesting to observe that Commissary Bladen is given the line which the Hudson Bay Company had propounded, that is what we may call the Grimington Line, and those are the terms of his Mandate; but when he comes to deal with the other side in the negotiation he betters his Mandate, as I daresay was prudent. Page 4075: "Instructions for Martin Bladen, Esq., appointed His Majesty's Commissary to Treat with the Commissary or Commissaries to be Appointed by the Most Christian King—Given. Together with those instructions you will receive His Majesty's Commission under the Great Seal of Great Britain, appointing you, the said Martin Bladen, to be His Majesty's Commissary for treating of and concluding with the Commissary or Commissaries on the part of the French King, all such matters and things as are referred to your cognizance and determination by the said Commission," and so on, "It being provided by the 10th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht, that the limits and boundaries between Hudson's Bay and the places appertaining to the French, be settled by Commissaries on each part, 'which limits both the British and French subjects shall be wholly for-bid to pass over, or thereby to go to each other by sea or by land,' you are to endeavour to get," I think the language is a little important, "the said limits settled in the following manner"; then they repeat what was the Hudson Bay demand. "That the same begin from the Island called Grimington's Island or Cape Perdrix, in the latitude of 58½ North, which the Company desire may be the boundary between the British and French subjects, on the coast of Labradore towards Rupert's Land, on the East Main, and Nova Britannia on the French side, and that no French ships, barque, boat or vessel whatsoever shall pass to the Northwestward of Cape Perdrix or Grimington's Island towards or into the Streights or Bay of Hudson, on any pretence whatsoever. And further, that a line be drawn from the South-westward of the Island of Grimington or Cape Perdrix (so as to include the same within the Limits of the Bay), to the great Lake Miscosinke alias Mistoveny, dividing the said lake into parts (as in the map to be delivered to you); and that where the said line shall cut the 49th degree of Northn latitude, another line shall begin, and be extended westward from the said lake, upon the 49th degree of northern latitude; over which said line, so to be described as above mentioned, the French and all persons by them employed, shall be prohibited to pass." That was the nature of the instructions to Mr. Bladen. Now if your Lordships will turn on page 4080 you will see what the boundary was which Mr. Bladen and the other English Commissioners put forward when they met the French Commissaries face to face. It is interesting to notice how much he bettered his instructions. Lord Stair is one of the Commissaries, you will see. It is addressed to M. le Maréchal d' Estrées. Take the second paragraph: "Les Commissaires nommes par Sa Majeste Britannique demandent que lesd. limites soient regles dans la maniere suivante, assavoir que les limites commencerent depuis le Cap Nord de la Baye de Davis," you see, "darts le 56½ degre de latitude," which was springing another degree and a half at least. If you go back, which is the right thing to do really, to the old maps, the effect of it was (perhaps you need not go back to the old map) that they were bringing the boundary down to just about Hopedale; anyhow, it is 56½ degrees. Then after that it goes on as before, you will see—"qui servira de limites entre les Anglois et les Francois sur la Cote de Laboradore vers les terres de Rupert sur le continent d'Orient, et de la Nouvelle Bretagne du cote des Francois," then he goes on stipulating. Then he carries on the line, after that, just as required, to Lake Miscosinke, and carries it on as proposed. I think your Lordships will see clearly what I mean if I may be allowed to turn my book round and draw. The line which the Commissioner was directed to stipulate for was a line which ran up at a certain point to Grimington. The line which they did ask for was a line which ran from that point to Davis Inlet; that is the origin of the line which you see on some of the maps described as the line as laid down by the Commissioners after the Treaty of Utrecht. It is not that it was ever made the subject of bargain or agreement—there never was a bargain—but the maps not unnaturally got upon them the line as put forward by the Commissioner Bladen. Lord Stair was with Mr. Bladen, and on page 4082 you will see that Mr. Pulteney is writing to Mr. Secretary Craggs from Paris, having been in Paris for about six months, and at line 12 he says: "I think there had been two Conferences before I came; at the first of them the Commissions were read, and at the second my Lord Stair and Mr. Bladen gave in a memorial about the limits of the Hudson Bay Company, to which no answer has been made . . . I must own that I never could expect much success from this Commission, since the French interests and ours are so directly opposite, and our respective pretensions interfere so much with each other on the several points we were to treat about; but that the French have not been willing to entertain us now and then with a Conference, and try how far we might be disposed to comply with any of the views they had in desiring the Commission, cannot, I should think, be accounted for, but by supposing they knew we came prepared to reject all their demands, and to make very considerable ones for ourselves." It was not a very hopeful opening for a Conference of Versailles or Paris. You see light thrown on it by the documents on the next page which show that on the French side not unnaturally memoirs were being drawn up which protested that that was a most

25 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

p. 167

25 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

grotesque exaggeration of any legitimate claim. You see M. D'Auteuil is discussing it and is saying it is all the most complete nonsense; and there are a lot of observations and reflections which follow which do not matter. The result of all that was that nothing was ever settled at all; and if you will turn to the Newfoundland Atlas and will kindly look at map No. 14 you will see a very good example of how this line of the Commissioners, which was never in fact agreed at all, a line, as your Lordships now know, deliberately exaggerated by Lord Stair and Mr. Bladen—

Viscount HALDANE: What map is this?
p. 168

Sir JOHN SIMON: No. 14 is an English map, a map by a cartographer called Gibson, which was published in 1763. In fact, it was one of the maps published to illustrate the arrangements made after the Treaty of Paris, some 50 years after the Treaty of Utrecht and just after the Treaty of Paris.

Viscount HALDANE: This shows the boundary between Britain and France.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That was not settled, that is the point.

Viscount HALDANE: That was not settled in the early part of the 18th century, but it was settled at the date of this map.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It was settled very satisfactorily, your Lordship remembers, after the victory of Wolfe and the Treaty of Paris; the French withdrew to the west of the Mississippi.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: There never was a real settlement till after this.

Sir JOHN SIMON: No. But what I want to look at this map for is what you will see at the top of the colour: you will see there "The Southern Boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company's Territories settled by Commissaries after the Treaty of Utrecht." Your Lordships see that inscription. What I am anxious to make plain—and this is rather a puzzle; I remember the Lord Chancellor asked me about it—is that is in fact not the line which the Hudson's Bay Company asked for, or the line which the British Government instructed the Commissioners to ask for, but it is the line which was propounded by Commissioner Bladen and his colleagues in order that he might be quite sure at any rate that he had asked, on the Labrador coast, enough; and if you wanted on this map No. 14, Gibson's map, to draw the line as the Hudson's Bay Company asked for it, what you would do would be this, you would join—does your Lordship see the word “Commissaries” in that inscription “The Southern Boundary of the Hudson Bay Company's Territories settled by Commissaries”?—what you would do is, after “Commissaries,” or perhaps after the word “after,” you would draw the line from the “w” in New Britain to just to the South of Cape Chidley—to the 58th degree instead of the 60th. That was the line which the Hudson Bay Company put forward. You do not get Grimington there, but you get Cape Chidley. Your Lordship may remember perhaps in the Canadian Atlas Grimington Island is a little to the south of Cape Chidley. In fact, the map was so drawn as to make it out that that place would be the proper starting point for the Hudson Straits.

Lord Sumner.

Viscount HALDANE: I see names such as “New South Wales” there.

p. 169

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, that was a name which had been used for some time. There are a lot of indications that the Welshmen had a lot to do with the discoveries in Hudson's Bay. I happen to be a Pembrokeshire man myself, and I was interested to notice that there are two or three names quite well known to me in Pembrokeshire which are actually to be found quite far North in some of the maps. Those names must have been given them by Pembrokeshire sailors. I do not know if the point has ever been made before, but I noted it because I knew the names of the villages. All I am anxious to make quite plain, in answer to the Lord Chancellor and to any others who may have speculated (the Lord Chancellor asked me a question) is that “the Southern Boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company's Territories settled by Commissaries after the Treaty of Utrecht” was not settled; it was not even the line which the Hudson Bay was demanding, but was better than the line they were demanding; and, if you wanted to make it the line as they put it forward, you would have to cross the light yellow, which is there called “Labrador,” from the Lake, not to St. Peter's Haven, but to a point which is a little to the south of Cape Chidley.

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: They alter these names so often that it is very confusing.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Can I help my Lord to identify the name? I think I can tell your Lordship, with the help of my learned friends, most of the synonyms.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Where was St. Peter's Haven on your sketch map?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Will your Lordship take Davis Inlet on my sketch map? Of course they have not got the survey by latitude and longitude quite accurate, but I think your Lordship may take it Davis Inlet was the point to which Commissioner Bladen thought fit to get the boundary; he called it 56½. Of course, I do not suppose at that time they had taken astronomical observations in sufficient detail, but the language he uses indicates that.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: Davis Inlet on the sketch map is a little south of 56, not a little north. St. Peter's Haven, which is marked on that map No. 14, to which the Utrecht line is made to run out, is not marked at all.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: There is no such place marked on Map 14.

Sir JOHN SIMON: You can identify it by putting together several things. May I just put them successively, though they are probably all in your Lordship's mind? Commissioner Bladen put forward a claim to take the line out at the water's edge at the Bay of Davis in 56½ degrees of latitude. That is his claim. In fact, the place called Davis Inlet, which I suppose is the same as Davis Bay, is a little more south than that. If your Lordship takes the parallel 56, you will find it strikes the green just at Davis Inlet.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I expect St. Peter's Haven is not far from where they thought Davis Inlet was.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is quite right.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: I think if you mark the parallel 55 on No. 14 you will find St. Peter's Haven would be about 56½.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Why is this yellow line pushed back? It is said to have been settled by the Commissioners, but that, I gather, was not true; it was put forward by the Commissioners, this line with the inscription along it. As a matter of fact, the Hudson Bay boundary, as I understand on this map, runs along north and south from this Lake. Was that arranged in some way?

Sir JOHN SIMON: No, I do not think that indicates any convention or settlement at all.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: What is this map?

Sir JOHN SIMON: This map is one of the maps of 1763, which was drawn for the purpose of showing what was the result of the Treaty of Paris and the arrangements that had been made under it.

Viscount HALDANE: I understand you to say that this map put things as settled which were not settled till after 1763.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Your Lordship has not quite got my point. This is a map which was published in 1763.

Viscount HALDANE: I know, but it did not show the things as settled then: it shows what had in fact been claimed, but was not settled in 1763.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is not quite so, with respect, my Lord. This map shows, for example, the new Government of Quebec, the lozenge boundary which was carved out in 1763 as the result of the defeat of the French. It shows that in the same way that it shows, for instance, the boundary of East Florida and New Florida .

Viscount HALDANE: The Treaty of Utrecht left the whole of Labrador, except that to the north of a line which was not agreed, to France.

p. 171

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is right.

Viscount HALDANE: It was not till 1763 that Great Britain became possessed of the southern part of the Coast of Labrador.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes; and then no doubt there would have been a little disputing about that, for there would have been British settlements.

Viscount HALDANE: The Hudson Bay boundary was not settled in 1763.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I do not think 1763 is of any significance for settling the Hudson's Bay limit at all.

Viscount HALDANE: Was anything done then about Hudson's Bay?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Not about Hudson's Bay—that is to say, drawing it down on a map and agreeing this and that as the latitude and longitude of the boundary.

Viscount HALDANE: When do you say that was done?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Never. The case I make about Hudson's Bay, if I may summarise it, and it is convenient to do so now, is this: I say on the true meaning of the language of the grant of Hudson's Bay it was a grant to the Hudson's Bay Company of the Bay and the Coasts and the territories; and though, of course, you could not have drawn a map to show how far it went, that really was, in my submission, a grant of the basin. That is what I say. I say that really has been recognised again and again; I give your Lordship as an illustration the House of Commons map of 1857. I point out that at times the Hudson Bay Company had to put up with a smaller claim because they were being pressed by the French, and at another time they endeavoured to make a rather larger claim, as for instance, after the Treaty of Utrecht; but neither the smaller nor the larger claim was ever laid down or agreed or fixed: and when you look at such a thing as this map of 1763, which is designed to show the arrangement made after the Treaty of Paris, you must not be misled, if I may presume to say so, by this dotted line which is inscribed "The Southern Boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company's Territories settled by Commissaries after the Treaty of Utrecht," because it was not settled and, so far as the British Commissioners were concerned, it was not quite the line. That is all I say, and I say it now because when one looks at this map it creates confusion otherwise.

Viscount HALDANE: So that, according to that, really the Hudson Bay Company took as part of its territory land which had not become part of the British Crown.

p. 172

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes. Again and again the internal boundary of the Hudson's Bay Territory has been regarded, not as an ascertained but an ascertainable boundary. Your Lordship recollects, for example, that when the Province of Quebec is enlarged by the Statute of 1774, it is enlarged by saying that it is to have such and such a Southern Boundary, and the Mississippi as a Western Boundary, and it is to go on until you reach the boundary of the Hudson Bay territories. In exactly the same way, when the Hudson Bay Territory is thrown into Canada in 1870, there is an express extension of Ontario, or Upper Canada, so that it actually reaches the sea water in James Bay. I will come to the moment when the Quebec authorities thought they would like to have an extension to James Bay as well, but my point is that though it has never been a thing which you could say had been fixed by latitude and longitude, or traced on the ground, right through the history the Hudson Bay area, in my submission—and I have a few documents coming now to show it—is treated as an area which is a basin, and the explanation of their sometimes departing from that principle, as, for instance, they do in the map of 1763, is not really that anyone suggested that it was not that, but that the situation at the time of the Treaty of Utrecht was one which gave an opportunity for a slight exaggeration of the claim.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: Of course, if their claim, which at the time of the Treaty of Utrecht was a well justified claim, was they were going beyond the basin, they may not have thought they were that far really.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is my point, my Lord. It is convenient, I think, at this moment to do what has already been slightly done—observe how in these maps the words “East Main” or “West Main,” as the case may be, are used. Your Lordships have noted how in the communications between the Hudson's Bay Company and the British Government, in the late years of the seventeenth and the early years of the eighteenth centuries, they speak about the West Main or Coast. Would your Lordships, in this connection, look at one or two maps, not many? Take, for instance, the map which is No. 15.

25 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: No. 14 also is an instance.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes; I have got “East Main” marked there.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: What is No. 15?

Sir JOHN SIMON: In No. 15 your Lordship again will find “East Main.”

The LORD CHANCELLOR: What is the date of No. 15?

Sir JOHN SIMON: The date of it is 1764. That is a rather
p. 173

Viscount Haldane.

important map from another point of view, which I will mention in a moment. A still more interesting one, in some respects, is No. 17. I shall be very grateful if your Lordships will kindly look at No. 17. Here undoubtedly is an exposition which is entirely in my favour, where you not only get “East Main,” but you get what I have not observed on any other map—you get the actual inscription “Labrador Coast.” Your Lordships see the word “Coast.” It is surely very, very striking. Incidentally you get what, no doubt, is a highly artificial and conventional indication, but you do get an indication, of a height of land running from Cape Chidley down and dividing the Labrador Coast and the East Main, though I agree it leaves a very considerable area on either side of the mountain.

Sir John Simon.

Lord SUMNER: It is just like the fifteenth and sixteenth century idea of the mountains of the moon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Your Lordship does not misunderstand my argument; I am sure your Lordship does not. I am not saying the mountains are there, or that is the way they run; but if you are distinguishing between the East Main Coast on the one hand and the West Main Coast on the other, it is a very strong observation that there is a very strong indication, on a map of this kind, that they lie on respective sides of the line.

Viscount HALDANE: It must be borne in mind that the Crown was not dividing everything up. The Crown was making grants out of a territory which was, or had become, British territory, and therefore it may be that the Crown disposed of that.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is quite possible, my Lord. That is an important view of it, and has always got to be carefully borne in mind.

Then will your Lordships kindly look at map No. 20? There you will find the East Main and Labrador very plainly distinguished, and as far as East Main is concerned, which I know has been treated as synonymous with “East Coast,” I get the clearest indication that it is a very substantial piece of territory.

25 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: This is a latish map. It is 1822.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is, my Lord.

Then the next matter touching Hudson's Bay, if I may try again to keep to chronology, is, I think, in 1752. In the year 1752 this important incident occurred: a petition was presented by a number of gentlemen, who were merchants in London, to the Crown (George the Second), asking for a grant of a portion of British America lying on the Atlantic Ocean; they were really asking for what I might call a Labrador grant. Now, if I am right, as long as you did not go up to the height of the land, you would not necessarily invade the Hudson's Bay territory because you made a grant of Labrador coast; but still it would be very natural, before the grant was made, to see whether the Hudson's Bay Company, which was an established company, strongly entrenched and, of course, deeply committed, had anything to say about it.

Now, if your Lordships will kindly turn to page 4098, you will see the way in which the Hudson's Bay Company dealt with an inquiry which was made to them. They seem to me, with all respect, not to have dealt with it very candidly. The geography was not very well known to everybody. They addressed the Lord Commissioners of Trade and Plantations in these terms on page 4098 in Volume VIII. If it is not inconvenient, I will ask your Lordships also to have available one other document which bears upon this, and that is the Report of the Lords of Trade and Plantations on the Petition of Merchants. It is in Volume III, and it is the first document in that volume; your Lordships will find it on page 883.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I have read through this memorial in Volume VIII, and I think we might dispose of that first.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, only that you have to read that document with the other document.

Viscount HALDANE: What are you going to show by this?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am going to show how it is dealt with, my Lord.

If I may say so, Lord Finlay, I have, of course, carefully examined the long article on "Coast" in Sir James Murray's well-known dictionary, and it may be that at some stage your Lordships will desire to have that referred to. I think I am right in saying that your Lordship was rather hoping to look at it at some stage.

Viscount FINLAY: At the moment I was looking for the definition of “Main.”

Sir JOHN SIMON: That I have already looked at also. I will dispose of it now, and it can be checked.

Viscount FINLAY: It is most familiar in reference to the Spanish Main.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I confess that I have been rather under the impression—but I was wrong—that the Spanish Main was a phrase which referred to an extent of sea. It does not refer to that.

Viscount FINLAY: It refers to an extent of mainland, as distinguished from islands.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord. In this connection the word “Main” is used for a continent, or mainland territory, as opposed to islands.

The Lord Chancellor.

Viscount FINLAY: It is an expression which is very familiar in connection with the history of the buccaneers—"the Spanish Main." Their operations were conducted there.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I read carefully through the article in Sir James Murray's dictionary about it, and I am sure that I am right in this. "Main" is, of course, used, in another connection, for the sea; but in the case of "the Spanish Main," or in the case of "East Main," or in the case of "West Main," it is used really for a piece of mainland. In the case of the Hudson's Bay Company, as in the case of the Spanish Main, the contrast may be said to be between islands on the one hand and the mainland on the other hand. In the case of the Spanish Main there were the West Indian Islands, for example Cuba, and then there was the main, and it is the same in the case of Hudson's Bay. Hudson's Bay had a grant of islands in the Hudson's Bay, but the use of the word "Main," in contradistinction to the word "Islands," means the mainland.

Viscount FINLAY: We do not seem to have the Oxford Dictionary here. We have got what is called "The Concise Oxford Dictionary," which you could put into your pocket.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Every Oxford man, I am sure, will deeply resent this.

Viscount HALDANE: I do not know that it would help us very much in this case. Above all, you must consider the purpose with which these words were used.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord. Now I want your Lordships to have two documents available together: one is in Volume VIII and the other in Volume III. This has to do with the Petition of Merchants which I mentioned, who wished to get a grant from the Crown in the year 1752 in respect of a proposed enterprise on the Atlantic Coast. In Volume III it is the first document, and it is on page 883.

The Lord CHANCELLOR: The document in Volume VIII comes three days earlier in point of date than the one in Volume III.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It does, my Lord.

Viscount HALDANE: Which one shall we take first?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I will take whichever one your Lordships have got conveniently. Shall we take Volume III first, although I know that it is three days out of date?

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I do not know really why you should do that, because the document in Volume VIII is the protest of the Hudson's Bay Company, and the document in Volume III is the action taken by the Lords upon the Petition and the protest.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think your Lordship's order is the better.

Viscount HALDANE: Which document are we to look at?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I must apologise for changing my mind; it was only in an endeavour to help some members of the Court. Will your Lordships kindly look at Volume VIII, page 4098? That will be the first of the two documents, if we take them in order of chronology. It is rather necessary that this should be read, and read in connection with the other document, the reference to which I have given.

First of all, taking the document on page 4098, it is a "Memorial of the Hudson's Bay Company to the Lords Commissioners of Trade, 20th July, 1752," and it runs thus: "May it please your Lordships In obedience to your Lordships Orders of the 9th of July Instant signifying unto your Memorialists, that your Lordships have under your Consideration a Petition of several Merchants of London, Praying for a Grant of all that part of America lying upon the Atlantick Ocean on the East part, Extending South and North from 52 Degrees of Northern Latitude from the Equinoctial Line to 60 Degrees of the same Northern Latitude, called Laboradore, or New Britain, not at this time actually possessed by any of his Majesty's Subjects, or the Subjects of any Christian Prince or State; and requiring your Memorialists to inform your Lordships whether they claim any or what Right to the said Tract of Land. Your Memorialists represent to your Lordships that his late Majesty King Charles the Second"—

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Then they quote that.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, using the word "Coasts" and so on. Then it goes on: "That the said Tract of Land called the Labradore throughout its whole Extent, on the North and West sides thereof"—"North and West sides thereof," your Lordships will notice—"from the said 60th Degree of Northern Latitude down to the 52nd Degree lyes on Hudsons Streights and Bay, and forms the Coast thereof"—of course, that is right, the West—"from the first Entrance into the said Streights running all along the South sides of the said Streights, to the Opening into the Bay, and from thence all along the East side of Hudson's Bay down to the Bottom or South End thereof"—that is what we may call the East Main—"and as all the land and territories upon the Coasts and Confines of the said Streights and Bay, together with the sole Trade and Commerce thereof are by the said said Tract of Land called the Laboradore and the Trade thereof”—your Lordships will see that the moment this comes before the Lords Commissioners of Trade, they say, “that is bad reasoning.”

The LORD CHANCELLOR: That is stretching it.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, and they say so at once.
They draw the distinction immediately.

Then it goes on: “That your Memorialists have made and do maintain several Settlements on the said Labrador on the East side of the Bay”—that is true, just as the Hudson's Bay Company to-day has a great store at Winnipeg, but that has nothing to do with sovereign rights.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: No; it is “on the East side of the Bay.” That is right.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, I beg your pardon; so far it is quite right—“and by means thereof, as well as by their Shipping carry on Trade and Commerce with the Natives there, and who come down the Rivers and other Ways”— your Lordships will notice the words “come down the Rivers”—“and other Ways, many days Journey from within the Land to Trade with the Company and your Memorialists have been at very great Expence to Establish and Encrease a Trade there, and particularly within these few years have Expended £10,000 Sterling and upwards in making a new Settlement on the Eastern side of the Bay near the middle of the said Laboradore which they Expect will Command the whole Trade of the said Laboradore, even to the East part”— observe the phrase that is used, my Lords—“even to the East part or Coast thereof.” That is using the expression “East coast” and “East part.” It is going on to the other side. Then it goes on: “and are at a continual great Expence in Supporting the same and have ordered Persons to be sent up into the country to Encourage the Trade thither from persons within the Land, and are in hopes of having some return from thence to Answer such their great Expence, tho' as yet they have Reaped little or no Benefit therefrom. And your Memorialists beg leave to represent to your Lordships that the Laboradore is a most Barren Tract of Land, has few Inhabitants, is Productive of little or no Beavers and of very few other Furrs or Merchandize of Value, Insomuch that your Memorialists cannot but be of Opinion, That whoever Petition for a Grant of Land there, must do it with a view of having an opportunity by means of the footing they will thereby Gain to draw from the said Hudsons Bay Company some of their Trade in those Parts and the Neighbourhood thereof, which it is humbly Hoped will not be Permitted to be done, but that your Memorialists Rights shall be Preserved to them.”

Now, my Lords, that being the protest made by the Hudson's Bay Company—who, you will observe, are not saying anything which is

p. 178

inconsistent with my view, but are saying: “Our rights, as defined by the Charter, are given to us up from the East Main, and we do get into touch with the people on the other side”—just see how it is dealt with.

Viscount HALDANE: I do not know how far their claim would not have carried them.

Sir JOHN SIMON: No, my Lord, I do not, indeed.

Viscount HALDANE: Certainly the whole of what is to-day called Labrador would have come in.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, it would. But just see how it is dealt with by the Lords Commissioners of Trade, who, having thus enquired if the Hudson's Bay Company have got any objection, proceed to put the point exactly. This is the first document any objection, proceed to put the point exactly. This is the first document in Volume III, and it is on page 883.

Viscount HALDANE: That is a reply, from whom?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is not a reply, my Lord; it is the report made by the Lords of Trade, who have now got before them the Petition of Merchants, that is to say, the Petition of these London Merchants, and also the attempt of the Hudson's Bay Company to stop them.

Viscount HALDANE: It is a report on both documents.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord.

Viscount HALDANE: Who makes it?

Sir JOHN SIMON : The report is made by the Lords of Trade, and it is signed by Halifax, Townshend, Stone, and James Oswald, at Whitehall, 23rd July, 1752.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: They did not take long, because the Memorial was only dated the 20th July.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is right, my Lord; it is an excellent example of despatch. But, of course, they had the Petition long before that. They say this: “In obedience to your Excellencies commands signified to us by a letter from Mr. Anyand,” and so on, “we have taken into our consideration a Petition presented to your Excellencies by several Merchants of London, containing Proposals for opening a new Trade and making Settlements upon the Coast of Labrador or New Britain—“upon the Coast,” your Lordships will see—“in North America, between 52 and 60 Degrees of Northern Latitude, and praying that the said Grant of Land may be granted to them and their Associates in perpetuity with the sole Privilege in exclusion of all other His Majesty's Subjects, of carrying on a Trade and Commerce to this Country for any Term or number of years not less than sixty-three. We have also been attended by the Petitioners, and have heard what they had to offer in support of their Petition and by other Persons who appeared to us to be interested or concerned in the subject matter of it, or who might be able to give us any information relative thereto; whereupon we beg leave humbly to represent. That the Questions arising upon a Consideration of this Petition are, First how far the making of a Grant to the Petitioners of this Country, may or may not interfere with any claims either of Right or Possession, which has been made to it by any other Prince or State, or by any of His Majesty's Subjects by virtue of former Grants or Concessions. Secondly How far the End and Object of the undertaking, considered in a commercial Light, may be of national advantage or disadvantage, and Thirdly, whether, supposing it should be thought advisable to comply with this request, the Terms and Conditions proposed by the Petitioners are proper and reasonable. As these three questions appear to us to take in every Circumstance necessary for your Excellencies Consideration, We shall in the course of Our Representation confine ourselves to them, and shall state to your Excellencies in the most full and explicit manner We are able, whatever appears upon the Books of Our Office, or hath occurred to us relative thereto. As to the first Question we beg leave humbly to represent—this is a very interesting piece of contemporary statement—“That the country called Nova Britannia or Terra Labrador, and by some ancient Geographers Estoitland and Terra Corteraelis, lies on the North side of the Gulf and River of St. Lawrence, extending North and North West to Hudson's Streights and Bay, and bounded on the East by the Atlantic Ocean: Some Geographers, indeed, particularly the French, make the Southern Boundary of that Region to be a Line drawn from the Streights of Belle Isle, which divide Newfoundland from the Continent, due west across the said Continent, in order to separate it from the Settlements which that Nation has upon the Northern Banks of the Gulph and River of St. Lawrence. It does not appear that any permanent settlement has hitherto ever been made by any Nation in the Eastern Parts of this Country”—“Eastern Parts,” your Lordships will see—“for as on the one hand the English, who were the earliest navigators to that part of the World were led by the Hopes of discovering a Passage to the East Indies to pursue their Voyages and Searches still further to the Westward, and to which We owe the discovery and Settlement of Hudson's Bay, so on the other hand, the French arrived, and restrained by the Inhospitality and implacable Enmity of the Natives, has not as yet had any settlements to the Northward of the Streights of Belle Isle. The first discovery of this country is said to have been made by some Danes from Friezeland many ages before Columbus's Discovery of America"—I think I have remarked to your Lordships before that on a very early map there are, as a matter of fact, Danish names, so that that seems to be very probable—"these Danes gave it the name of Estoitland, and that it was afterwards visited in the year 1390 by Nicholas and Antonio Zeni, two Venetians, who in a Voyage to the North were driven by Tempest upon this coast. This account is given by Hackluyt in the first Volume of his collection of Voyages; but as he cites no other authority for it than Hearsay, except the simple Testimony of Abraham Ortelius who published a Book of Cosmography called Theatrum Orleis in the year 1520; and as the Account itself and the manner in which it is related carried evident marks of Invention, there is great Room to doubt its Veracity, and indeed it seems to be rejected by all late historians, and particularly by Pere Charlevoix in his History of New France. As little credit ought for the same reason to be given to what is related by some other Writers of a Discovery of this Country by Francis Scanlon a Pole in the year 1477. The first authentic account we have of a Discovery of this Country was of that made by Sebastian Cabot in the year 1497, who had a Commission from Henry the Seventh to make Discoveries to the Westward. In the first Voyage he made in consequence of this Commission he fell in with the Land in Latitude 67 North, from whence he continued his course southward along the Coast of Labrador to Newfoundland and the Baccalaos Island ”—that, I think, means the Cod Islands—“and from thence down to Florida. At his Return to England he brought with him three savages whom it is said he took in Newfoundland; but as that Island is only visited by the Natives from the Continent at certain Seasons of the year, and then only on the Western Coast, it is most probable that he brought them from some part of the Coast of Labrador, and there is the greater Reason to believe this, as Gaslar Corterealis who is said to have visited this Coast in the year 1500, and from whence it has the name of Terra Corterealis, brought from thence a piece of a gilded Sword, and saw amongst the Natives several Toys, and other evident Vestiages of Europeans having been lately amongst them. After this several Voyages were made by the English to these Northern Parts of America, particularly by Martin Frobisher, John Davis, George Weymouth, and James Hill”—I dare say that your Lordships will remember that in the early maps Davis Inlet is indicated as a very big opening, and in some of the early documents it is said that it was not Davis himself, but Weymouth, who penetrated into the inland, that is, the main—“in the year 1576, 1577, 1585, 1586, 1587, 1588, 1602 and 1605; but as the Object of these Navigators was merely to discover a Passage to the Westward, it does not appear that any of them visited the Coast of Labrador, except John Davis, who in 1586, landed in a Harbour in Latitude 56, where he stayed trafficking with the Natives for several Days.”—There was confusion in the early maps. I think your Lordships have already noticed this. In the early maps there was confusion between the place which is merely called Davis Inlet, which your Lordships

Sir John Simon.

25 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

identified this morning, and Hamilton Inlet. There is no doubt that there was confusion between the two.—“This is the first authentic Account we have of any actual Possession being taken of that Country on the Eastern side. The rest of these Navigators pursued their course still further to the Westward giving English names to several places at which they touched. In 1610

p. 181

Henry Hudson sailed through Davis Streights into the Bay which has since been called by all Geographers of all Nations Hudson's Bay, of which he took possession in the name of the Crown of England, and stayed there a whole Winter. Possession was again taken in the name of the Crown of England of this Bay by Sir Thomas Button, who also wintered there in 1612 in a River called Nelson's River in Remembrance of his Captain who died there”—it is close to York.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: And you have the Button Islands?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord. Then it goes on: “In 1631 Captain Luke Fox by command of King Charles the First made a voyage to Hudson's Bay, and amongst other places entered Port Nelson, and finding there a Cross which had been erected by Sir Thomas Button with the Inscription almost defaced and worn out, he erected it again with a new inscription declaring the Right and Possession of His then Majesty King Charles the First, and named the adjacent Country New North Wales”—that is why I said that New South Wales and New North Wales were quite early names on the maps, and they were not put in as late as the eighteenth century. It is as early as this: “Charles the First.” “The Troubles and Civil War, which broke out soon after this, put a stop to any further Undertakings of this sort, nor does it appear that any Voyages were made to this Country from the year 1631 until the year 1667, when Zachary Gilman being fitted out by the Merchants of London sailed thro' Hudson's Streights to the Bottom of the Bay and settled a Trade and built a Fort there, which is called Rupert's Fort in Honour of Prince Rupert who joined with the Merchants in the Adventure.”

Viscount HALDANE: Was that the beginning of the name Rupertsland?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord.

25 Oct., 1926.
Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: The Fort was so called, and they called the rest of the land Rupertsland.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, that appears in the Charter. The Charter was three years afterwards. Zachary Gilman—

Viscount HALDANE: He anticipated it by calling it a fort.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord. He probably thought that it was a good plan to pay a compliment in high places. He gets there in 1667, and very prudently and properly labels it "Rupert's Fort." Then he goes back, and in 1670 the Sovereign grants a Charter to, amongst others, his entirely trusted and well-beloved Cousin Prince Rupert, who joined in the adventure. That is the way these things are done. Then it goes on: "In 1669 another Voyage was undertaken by the same Adventurers, and one Captain Newland entered there making a publick Declaration of His Majesty's Right, and affixing up the Arms of England as a mark of Sovereignty. In 1670 the Adventurers in the aforementioned Voyages were incorporated into a Company by Letters Patents, by which Letters Patents the sole Trade and Commerce of all those Seas, Streights, Bays, Rivers, Lakes, Creeks and Sounds, in whatsoever Latitude they shall be, that lye within the Entrance of the Streights commonly called Hudson's Streights, together with all the Lands and Territories upon the Countries, Coasts, and Confines of the Seas, Bays, Lakes, Rivers, Creeks and Sounds aforesaid, that are not already actually possessed or granted to any of His Majesty's Subjects or possessed by the Subjects of any other Christian Prince or State, with the Fishing of all sorts of Fish, Whales, Sturgeons and all other Royal Fishes in the Seas, Bays, Islets and Rivers within the Premises and the Fish therein taken, together with the Royalty of the Seas upon the Coasts within the Limits aforesaid, was granted to the said Company and their Heirs for ever. In consequence of this Grant the Company in 1672 appointed William Bayley to be Governor of all their Forts and Factories, who established a Trade with the Natives and made Settlements at Port Nelson and other Places. In the year 1682 in time of profound Peace the French sent two Ships from Quebec into Hudson's Bay and dispossessed the English of the Fort and Settlements in Nelson's River. They continued to make further Depredations until the year 1686, when all the Company's Factories and Settlements at the Bottom of the Bay were surprised and taken by a Party of French sent over land from Canada."—This, your Lordships will remember, is the subject of these grievous complaints which we were looking at earlier in the morning.—"In consequence of this Grant the Company in 1672 appointed William Bayley to be Governor of all their Forts and Factories, who established a Trade with the Natives and made Settlements at Port Nelson and other Places. Bottom of the Bay were surprised and taken by a Party of French sent over land from Canada. Upon these repeated injuries and depredations several memorials were presented by the Company to King James 2nd and Complaints having been made to the Court of France they were referred to Commissaries appointed on both sides to meet in London in order to settle such Points as were then in dispute between the Crowns relative to America. This Negotiation however was of very short Duration and the Conferences, the chief object of which was the Redress of the Damages done in Hudson's Bay, were broke off by the happy Revolution, which took place soon after, and before any satisfaction could be obtained or the Points in Dispute adjusted." That explains why the Treaty of Ryswick—

Viscount HALDANE: This appears to have nothing whatever to do with it.

p. 183

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think it was a phrase that was not inappropriate in the mouths of the Lords.

Viscount HALDANE: It merely meant to say that the thing stopped then because of disturbances caused by the change of Government.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord; but still, after all, the Lords of Trade were making a report to the prerogative authority, which, not unnaturally, was accustomed to hearing the revolution described as a happy revolution.

Viscount HALDANE: They liked the term.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord. Happiness, I am afraid, is often a mere incident rather than anything else. "The happy Revolution, which took place soon after, and before any satisfaction could be obtained or the Points in Dispute adjusted. During the War which broke out a few years after between the two Nations the French took York Fort from the Company to which they then gave the name of Bourbon; the Company however recovered this Fort again in 1696, but it was soon after re-taken by the French, and the Peace which was made in 1697 put an End to all further Hostilities."

Then I think I can save your Lordships' time. The report quotes the article in the Treaty of Ryswick which your Lordships saw this morning, and then it says: "In Consequence of these Stipulations, Commissaries did meet at London, but the Peace was of so short a Duration as to prevent their coming to a final Determination upon any of the Points which were the subject of their Conference. It appears upon an Examination of the Memorials and other authentick Papers which were delivered by the Commissaries in support of their respective claims to Hudson's Bay as well in the Conferences in 1687 as those in 1699, that the English

Commissaries insisted that all that part of North America, which comprehended Hudson's Bay, was discovered by Sebastian Cabot in 1497, that this Discovery conveyed a Right to the Crown of England to that Country, that that Right was afterwards established by the Discovery made and the actual Possession taken by the subsequent Navigators at times when no other Christian Princes or States had any Possession or even Knowledge of those Parts, the French in particular not having any Settlements in Hudson's Bay until 1682, and that this Right was further confirmed by the Treaty of Neutrality in 1686, by which it is stipulated that both Nations shall retain all the Dominion, Rights and Preeminencies in the American Seas, Roads and Waters in as full and ample manner as of Right belonged to them. In answer to this it is alleged by the French that this part of North America is called in all ancient Geography the Coast of Labrador, and was so named by the Spaniards who discovered it long before the English. That the Voyages mentioned to have been made by the English were merely the Discovery of a Passage to the South Seas, whereas they could prove an infinite number of Voyages to have been made at that time to the Coast of Labrador by the Normans and Basques, that the Possession taken of Hudson's Bay in 1612 was at a time when the French were in actual Possession of the Country, that the English did not know the Northern Country from the year 1497. That the several Authors who write of Canada give it no Bounds to the North; That all the Northern Bay was comprehended in the Limits set down in a Grant made in the year 1628, by which a Canada Company was established"—

That means La Compagnie de Canada, Cardinal Richelieu's Company. "And that if the English had had any knowledge of the Bay, or any pretention to it, they would not have failed to have reserved their Right in the Treaty of 1632, which restored Canada to France. That although the French had not at that time nor for a long time after any Forts in this country, yet they traded with the Indians and had settlements upon the Rivers which fall into Hudson's Bay, and they produced several Acts to prove the Indians acknowledged the Sovereignty of France before the English ever thought of going thither. The said Commissaries also referred to several Grants, Edicts and Letters Patent of the Crown of France in the years 1540, 1598 and 1627, by which all that part of North America including the coast of Labrador"—you see the ease with which this phraseology is used, "the coast of Labrador"; it cannot possibly mean a seashore—"and the Bay since called Hudson's Bay is granted to certain Companies and private Adventurers. The said Commissaries also refer to several subsequent Grants and Letters Patent of the like nature, from whence they argue an uninterrupted possession and therefore allege that the Treaty of Breda in 1667 and that of Neutrality in 1686 favor their claim. The English Commissaries in their reply to the French Memorials, insist upon the right of the Crown of Great Britain founded upon prior discovery and possession, and although the discovery and possession upon which that right is founded might be made in search of a North West passage, yet that did not hinder that a discovery made and possession taken in such pursuit was rightful and proper. They further alleged that the Grants and Letters Patent cited by the French are of no force, there never having been any actual possession taken.” Then in the next paragraph 24: “That as to what has been alleged of Canada having no bounds to the northward it is plain by all Maps that Terra Labrador and Estoitland are in the North of Canada lying northward between Canada and Hudson's Bay, and they did never hear that the French had laid claim to these two Countries. That as to what had been urged with respect to this country not being reserved in the Treaty of 1632, there was no need of reserving that which was so remote and not so much as known to the French and that the Treaty of Breda favoured the English who were in actual possession before the 1st of January 1665. That as to what had been alleged by the French that the Normans and Basques made voyages to Labrador at the time of the first discovery of this Country by the English, it was not disputed, but that this country was three or four hundred Leagues, distant from the Bay.” That is all recital. Then the Lords of Trade go on to say: “It does not appear that any considerable alteration was made ill the state of things with respect to any part of this country during Queen Anne's War, at the conclusion of which, Hudson's Bay was ceded to the Crown of Great Britain by the 10th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht, which stipulates”—then he sets out the Article in the Treaty of Utrecht. which your Lordships had this morning, of 1713; then in the middle of page 889: “In 1719 Commissaries were appointed by both Crowns in order to settle and adjust the several points in dispute relative to America, which were referred to Commissaries by the foregoing Article, and by the Instructions given to His Majesty's Commissaries they were directed to endeavour to get the limits and boundaries between Hudson's Bay and the places appertaining to the French settled in the following manner.” Then he quotes those instructions to Commissary Bladen and Lord Stair which your Lordships know are to be found in Volume VIII at page 4075.

Sir John Simon.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: There is a phrase there which may be important, from your point of view, at line 22: “Which the Company desire may be the boundary between the British and French Subjects, on the coast of Labradore towards Rupert's Land, on the East Main, and Nova Britannia on the French side.” That is to say, Labrador is divided into two parts.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is right. I am obliged, my Lord. It is also to be found at page 4075. Then over the page, at line 10 on page 890: “A memorial agreeable to the foregoing Instruction was accordingly presented by the British Commissaries, but it does not appear that anything was done in consequence of it.” It looks as though the people who drew this up had not appreciated, when the British Commissaries presented their memorial they had bettered their instructions. Your Lordships remember the point; it is to be found by comparing the page I last gave a reference to with Volume VIII, page 4080: “From the foregoing state it will appear to your Excellencies, that the Right to the Eastern parts of Terra Labrador where the Petitioners propose to make a Settlement, had never been an object of particular dispute or discussion, with any other Prince or State, the disputes with the Crown of France in the years 1687, 1699 and 1719 being solely confined to Hudson's Bay and the Territory dependent thereon.” Now, my Lords, I do with some confidence submit that the people who said that undoubtedly thought that if you took Labrador and the Northern part and regarded it as breaking into two, one part dependent on the Bay of Hudson, the other part, the eastern part, not so dependent, they really were thinking of a natural boundary—I mean provided by the facts of physical geography, which created a complete partition. I do not think it can be doubted. I will read the words again, if I may. I do think this is an important passage, especially in view of what is coming. Your Lordships have in mind what is being dealt with. You have a Petition from the City of London Merchants to which the Hudson's Bay Company object, and here you have the Lords of Trade.

p. 186

with these documents before them, reporting to the Sovereign. What they say at page 890 at line 13 is—

Viscount HALDANE: It is quite important to know what they are reporting on. Were they reporting on the merits of the claims of the Hudson's Bay Company and the other Company respectively, or were they reporting on the general question of whether the Crown could properly make the grant?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is important, but will you excuse me for saying they have been very careful to show what it is. If you will kindly turn back to page 883, they have propounded the question with the greatest possible neatness—in fact, they have propounded three questions, and they say they are dealing with the first.

Viscount HALDANE: I think it is a crucial point.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think so, too. If you will look at page 883, line 26: “That the Questions arising upon a consideration of this Petition are, First”—this is the thing—“How far the making a Grant to the Petitioners of this Country”—that is the City of London Merchants.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: No, that is the country they are asking for.

Sir JOHN SIMON: The Petitioners are the City of London Merchants. A grant of this country is a grant of the Labrador coast in my sense of the term. It goes on: “May or may not interfere with any claims either of right or possession, which have been made to it by any other Prince or State, or by any of His Majesty's Subjects by virtue of former Grants or Concessions.” Then, Lord Haldane, if you will kindly turn over you will see on page 884, line 8, they begin: “As to the first Question”—I am reading what they are saying on the first question; they are saying now the question then is: Whether or not the Petition of the City of London Merchants to get a settlement on the Atlantic coast of Labrador will interfere with the rights of ownership or possession of anybody else; having had this representation from the Hudson's Bay Company and the protest, they go on to say, on page 890: “From the foregoing state it will appear to your Excellencies that the right to the Eastern parts of Terra

Labrador where the Petitioners propose to make a Settlement, had never been an object of particular dispute or discussion, with any other Prince or State, the disputes with the Crown of France in the years 1687, 1699 and 1719 being solely confined to Hudson's Bay and the Territory dependent thereon"—that surely indicates there is this natural partition between the two.—“But it does appear, however, that many of the arguments urged and the proofs offered on both sides in these disputes, do from the nature of them imply more extensive claims, and tend to affect the right to the whole of that part of North America, and it does not appear that these disputes have at any time been finally adjusted or a Boundary Line fixed between his Majesty's Dominions and those of His Most Christian Majesty in these parts. As to that part of the Question which has a relation to any claims of right to this country by any of His Majesty's subjects”—he is now coming to the other half of the first question—“we must beg leave humbly to represent: that the only persons which appeared to us to have any interest or concern therein are the Hudson's Bay Company. We therefore thought it proper to call upon them to inform us whether they claimed any or what right to the tract of land desired by the Petitioners. In consequence of which we have received from them a Memorial, a copy whereof is hereunto annexed, and to which we beg leave humbly to refer.” That is the Memorial which is in Volume VIII at page 4098. You will not find it annexed, Lord Finlay, but it is the one I read before: “Upon consideration of this Memorial”—this is very important for me—“it appears to us, that the Hudson's Bay Company seem to admit that the Eastern part of this country cannot be construed to be within the limits of their Charter, and their chief objection to this undertaking seems to arise from an apprehension that it may in its consequence interfere with and prejudice their Trade.” Then they go on to discuss whether in a commercial sense it would be an advantage to make such a grant.

Viscount Haldane.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: This is the second question.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Now you have the second question. They say it is reasonable—63 years; then they say, on page 891, they “Have not assigned any Western limit to the territory of which they desire a grant, and therefore as the Hudson's Bay Company do, by virtue of their Charter, claim the Coasts, and confines of the Bay, it will be necessary if any grant should be made agreeable to the Prayer of the Petition, that such Grant should have a Western limit appointed, which will not break in upon the Charter and property of that Company.”

Sir John Simon.

Unfortunately nothing was done.

Warrington.

Viscount HALDANE: In effect, that says there is no objection based on any territorial claims of the Hudson's Bay Company. There is no objection in making this grant.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is what they say.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: They do not worry much about the claims of France.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I do not suppose they minded that a bit. The practical thing was, of course, whether two competing Corporations or Assemblies in the City of London were going to fight over it, or whether the one that was in possession, and a very powerful body, in

p. 188

Hudson's Bay were going to prevent the other people getting their grant.

Sir John Simon.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: It does rather look as if the Crown considered they were entitled to the whole of the Peninsula, but the Hudson's Bay Company were only entitled to the western half of it.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is right.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: That is what we have got to settle.

Sir JOHN SIMON: You have. I am not for a moment saying this gets you out of your trouble.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It only takes you a certain way.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It only takes us a certain way. I do think the document is important, not only for my side, but in the history of the thing, because it does show strongly that Hudson's Bay were not unnaturally insisting on the widest possible rights, but the Lords of Trade were saying: No, a grant of coasts and sea. Hudson's Bay, it is quite true, does give you quite extensive territory, but that is quite a different thing from what we called the eastern side. That is what happened in 1752, and one speculates—I can only speculate—whether, therefore, when, after Wolfe's victory, the French definitely withdrew from this area and passed to the west of the Mississippi, so there became a duty in the Government here at home to organise the consolidated area, one cannot help wondering whether this document, amongst others, may not have been in the mind of the persons concerned. The reason I say so is because in Volume VIII, page 4110, there is a curious little document from the Secretary of the Hudson's Bay Company to Lord Egremont. Lord Egremont was Secretary of State. I think in those days his office was Secretary of State for the Southern Department. Your Lordships know the Foreign Office at that time was shared between two Secretaries of State, of which the more important was called the Secretary of State for the Southern Department, and, in fact, the affairs of this area, which are fairly high latitudes, fell within the purview of the Secretary of State of the Southern Department. Does your Lordship notice on page 4110 this little note has been preserved? It is addressed to Lord Egremont by the Hudson's Bay Company. "My Lord. Having this evening received from Mr. Rivers a letter signifying your Lordship's desire to know as soon as possible what are the limits upon the coasts between the Hudson's Bay Company and the Coast of Labrador, I have laid the same before Sir William Baker as Governor of the said Company, who has directed me to present his compliments and acquaint your Lordship he will wait on you thereupon to-morrow morning or at any other more convenient time that shall be appointed."

p. 189

It rather looks as though the interview was verbal. It seems a pity there is nobody who can tell us exactly what passed.

Lord SUMNER: That sentence uses the word "coast" in two separate senses.

Lord Sumner.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It does obviously. I think what was really being considered at the moment was this: They were just preparing to enlarge the Commission of the Governor of Newfoundland. Perhaps your Lordships would contrast the dates. The date of this is the 23rd March, 1766, the date on which the Great Seal was appended to Governor Graves' extended Commission was the 25th April, 1763, the next month. They were considering whether or not, in defining the area of Labrador, which was going to be annexed to Newfoundland, they could describe the area as beginning in the north at some defined point. For instance, they might have said Cape Chidley or they might have said Cape Grimington, but the Charter of the Hudson's Bay Company, your Lordships will recall, described the Hudson's Bay area as beginning from the entrance of Hudson's Straits. Of course the point on the land which corresponds to the entrance to the Straits is necessarily a little ambiguous.

Lord SUMNER: Is the suggestion that a new Governorship was going to be created which, in the mind of the writer, was called the Governor of the Coast of Labrador, just as you might have had a Governor of the Gold Coast, and he wanted to know what were the physical limits between the old Hudson's Bay Company territory and the territory of the new Governorship at a particular point on the seashore?

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think that is what it means.

Lord SUMNER: It would solve a great many difficulties. You would only have to find out what the Governorship of the Coast of Labrador included. It would warrant you saying, in talking about a description of the boundaries of the new Governorship called the Coast of Labrador, you may read it with reference to the administrative convenience and necessities of a large area.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I would put it even a little further. I would suggest this: The Hudson Bay Charter, as your Lordship recalls, does not speak of the point on the seashore as being Cape Chidley or Cape Grimington; it speaks of the area thus granted to the Hudson Bay Company as being everything that is within the Hudson's Straits. Now, your Lordships know there have already been several different versions as to where that would bring you out on the Atlantic seaboard. I do not know whether anyone ever said Cape Chidley up to that time. We know that the Hudson's Bay Company, when they drew their line and offered it to the Commissaries before the Treaty of Utrecht, brought it out at Cape Grimington; there was also another place which Commissary Bladen had suggested. You must understand they were drafting the extended Commission for the Governor of Newfoundland, which was going to appear in another month. That would have tended to clearness. Just as you defined the southern boundary by using the expression “the River St. John,” which was a perfectly defined thing, so you would define the northern limit by saying “Cape Chidley.”

Lord SUMNER: Of course the difficulty is “C. H.” would not know much about it; he is only the Secretary of the Hudson's Bay Company who has got some information from this gentleman, who says it may be in a letter which is not forthcoming.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I agree it is very imperfect. You do, not unreasonably, infer this—that the Secretary of State in March, 1763, would have been glad to know what was the place where the Hudson's Bay boundary touched the seashore at the Hudson's Straits entrance, and if he could have got that, he could have drawn a Commission for Governor Graves which would not only have spoken of the River St. John as being the point drawn this way, but he could have spoken of something with a name as the northern limit.

Lord SUMNER: As far as that goes, it would have been equally appropriate whether it extended to the strip of seashore or whether you go back to the height of land.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I quite agree.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Mr. Rivers, I suppose writing by command of the Secretary of State, had asked the Company to say what were the limits upon the coast, that is, upon the seashore, between the Hudson's Bay Company, that means the territories of the Hudson's Bay Company, and the Coast of Labrador. It is odd that the word “coast” there does appear to be used as meaning the territory of Labrador.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think so.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It must be, as Lord Sumner said just now, the word “coast” there is used in two senses.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think so.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Then, of course, evidently they were preparing the Commission of April, 1763?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think so, yes.

Viscount HALDANE: The matter was in the hands of the Admiralty at this time for the specific purpose of helping the fishermen and seamen. This is more a geographical than a political question.

p. 191

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is quite true. As a matter of fact, it was not the Admiralty who took the main part in 1763, it was the Secretary of State and the Lords of Trade. There are quite a lot of documents, if your Lordships would remind yourselves by looking at map No. 17. I use it merely because it is convenient for this purpose. You can see exactly what sort of enquiry was suggested. I am not suggesting this map was before Lord Egremont; it was not, but it illustrates the point exactly. There you get the thing labelled "Labrador Coast." I am not entitled to use this, of course, as though it was any interpretation on the document, but it shows what it may be supposed they meant.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Those words run along by the sea; it does not come to very much.

Sir JOHN SIMON: No, but it means a substantial area; it does not mean the seashore. On the other hand, there was the Hudson's Bay area, which was known by the terms of the Charter to start from the entrance to Hudson's Straits. Now comes the question: What was the entrance to Hudson's Straits?

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Map No. 17 is obviously drawn after the Commission of 1763.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Is there a map drawn just before which was in use?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Certainly. Take, for example, a map like No. 12, that is a map of 1755. If we conceive Lord Egremont looking at that, you can well understand he was a little doubtful, because you notice the yellow colour is treated as running along the Detroit of Hudson as far as Cape Chidley, but the boundary half yellow and half green strikes Hudson's Bay rather to the west of it. On the other hand, if he compared that with such a map as the Hudson's Bay Company had provided the Government with when they were negotiating, or, rather, settling the details consequent upon the Treaty of Utrecht, he would have found a boundary which ran, not to the west, but to the east of Cape Chidley, so, not unnaturally, he examines the Charter of the Hudson's Bay Company and says: I see by the terms of your Charter that you are entitled to—you are granted all those seas, straits, bays, rivers, lakes, creeks, and so on, that lie within the entrance of Hudson's Straits. Now he is going to frame a Commission to Governor Graves, and one can quite understand for practical purposes, if you could do it,

Lord Sumner.

25 Oct., 1926.

Lord Sumner.

Sir John Simon. especially on the sea-border, it would be a very convenient thing to have got a fixed point.

Lord SUMNER: I suppose, on the Canadian argument, it might similarly be necessary to say: Can you tell me where the Labrador coast

p. 192

ends and Hudson's Bay begins, because clearly when you do get to Cape Chidley the Labrador coast stops, and it goes on again on the other side.

Viscount HALDANE : That is the Canadian case.

Lord SUMNER: It illustrates some of the practical difficulties which arise on both sides.

Lord Sumner. Sir JOHN SIMON: It does. I am only saying it is an interesting thing that just at that time, in 1763, this question should have been asked. As a matter of fact, they did not get a very illuminating answer. I should infer it might be said the Hudson's Bay people would not give up anything; on the other hand, the Government were not going to make a mistake. It is again a significant thing which helps me. The language used in the extended Commission to Governor Graves is an exact copy, or practically a copy, of the language used in the Hudson's Bay Charter, that is to say, the northern boundary is said to be the entrance to the Hudson's Straits, while in the case of the southern boundary you are able to use the much more definite expression "River St. John."

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: In other words, they solve nothing.

Sir JOHN SIMON: In other words, they got out of the difficulty by repeating the ambiguity.

Lord SUMNER: I should think when Sir William Baker, the Governor of the Company, waited on his Lordship, he brought a copy of his Charter with him and said: Up to that point it is all ours.

Viscount Finlay.

Sir JOHN SIMON: The Lords of Trade knew the Charter very well. We have been reading an elaborate document which shows that they had been examining the document in detail just before.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It shows what the Hudson's Bay Company meant by the entrance to the Straits.

Sir JOHN SIMON: They did not get an answer which resulted in complete agreement. The consequence is, when you look at the extended Commission to Governor Graves, instead of fixing on a curious little point like Cape Chidley, or something of the kind, they repeat the expression “Entrance to Hudson's Straits.”

Viscount FINLAY: You observe, of course, the longish account given in the prefatory note to No, 17 of this mountain range delineated with some little hesitation in the map itself.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, I have.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Lord Finlay asked me what was supposed to be the origin or meaning of the word "Hochelaga." My Lord, a gentleman here who is kindly attending from the British Museum Map Department, Mr. de Villiers, has shown me an entry from the British Museum Catalogue from which it would seem that there is an early map, a map of Canada of 1609, a French map, in which there is a small circular enclosure marked "Hochelaga," and that is one of the earliest representations of what is now the town of Montreal.

Viscount HALDANE: Yes, it is the old name for Montreal. The great bank of Hochelaga exists to-day.

Mr. GEOFFRION: It has changed its name because in the United States it could not be understood what they were, so they take a more civilised name.

25 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Mr. Geoffrion.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: It is not wound up.

Mr. GEOFFRION: No.

Viscount HALDANE: Is it amalgamated?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I understand the suspicious citizens of the United States were not sure whether a bank with a name like that could be trusted, and the bank changed its name.

25 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: The Hochelaga Bank is a bank of very long standing: I have heard about it for the last forty years.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think I am right in saying, subject to correction by my learned friend Mr. Geoffrion, that the French Canadians in the old days sometimes used the word "Hochelaga" as referring to the St. Lawrence.

Mr. GEOFFRION: Very early.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It was an Indian name, or was believed to be an Indian name, for the St. Lawrence, but apparently, if you ask where is the place called Hochelaga, the answer is, it was a name given apparently to some settlement or enclosure on the site or near the site of what is now Montreal.

Mr. GEOFFRION: It was Jaques Cartier found when he came to Montreal.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That explains it.

I am going to mention Hudson's Bay in a moment again, but since chronology is really the safest guide here, I will ask leave to make a small departure from strictly Hudson's Bay matters and pass from the year 1763, ten years later, to the year 1773. I now want your Lordships please to turn to Volume III at page 1079. You will find there that a gentleman named Mr. Agnew and some other petitioners—I think they were Scotsmen—appealed to the King's Most Excellent Majesty in Council for a grant on the coast of Labrador. As the petition is quite short, I think it is worth looking at, partly because it illustrates what you mean by the coast of Labrador, but partly also for another and perhaps more important purpose. It is signed, you see, by Alexander Dun for John Agnew and others. Mr. Dun, I see by the documents, in fact, had been out there, and I think he was probably the person who moved his friends, who came, or most of them came, from Wigtownshire in the south of Scotland. “The humble Petition of John Agnew of Sheuchan and Associates in the County of Wigtown, North Britain. Sheweth That your petitioners have particular information that there are several places in the Island of Newfoundland and Coast or Country of Labrador”—you will notice it says “coast or country”—“between the River St. Lawrence and Hudsons Streights where Copper, Copper Ores, and other valuable metals and minerals may be procured which your petitioners conceive will be highly advantageous to Your Majesty's Kingdom if in the hands of proper persons. That your petitioners are willing to hazard a share of their private property in working such mines as now are or hereafter shall be discovered in the Island of Newfoundland and the said Country of Labrador”—they change it, it is simply “the said Country”—“at a certain limited distance not exceeding sixty miles from the sea or flowing of the sea water on any part of the said Coast of Labrador.” That illustrates the relation between these conceptions which I submit is relevant in construing the documents ten years earlier—they treat the Coast of Labrador as a substantial territorial area.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: Yes, but not exceeding sixty miles from the sea.

Sir JOHN SIMON: He is limiting himself to a request for a grant to that extent. It is rather like when the pink oblong was cut out of a greater whole which was called the coast of Labrador in 1825. “Your Petitioners therefore most humbly pray”—

Viscount HALDANE: It is “Labrador within the limits aforesaid.”

Sir JOHN SIMON: Then on the Petition having been presented, the matter, on the next page, came before the Lords of Trade, who were invited to report on it, and the upon it on page 1080: “My Lords, Pursuant to your Lordships Order of the 19th of May 1773, we have taken into our consideration the humble Petition of John Agnew of Sheuchan and Associates in the County of Wigtown in North Britain, humbly praying, that His Majesty would be graciously pleased to grant unto them all mines, minerals, and metals already discovered in the Island of Newfoundland, and on the coast or country of Labrador, between the River St. Lawrence and Hudson's Streights, at a certain limited distance not exceeding sixty miles from the sea, or flowing of the sea–water.”

Then they go on to say: “Whereupon we beg leave to report to Your Lordships, That the proposition contained in the petition, which your Lordships have referred to our consideration, does not in the general view of it appeal liable to objection; we beg leave, however, to observe to your Lordships, that the description of the limits, within which the petitioners propose the Grant to be made to them, appears to us, so far as it regards the Labrador Coast, to be attended with some difficulty”—observe what the difficulties are—“for, as on the one hand the proposing the River Saint Lawrence as the boundary to the south is not sufficiently precise”—it might have carried them right up to Quebec or to Montreal—“so, on the other hand, by extending the Grant northward to Hudson's Streights, they will take in a very large part of what has been already granted to the Hudson's Bay Company, who are intitled by their Charter to all mines and minerals within the territories granted to them: But we see no objection to your Lordships advising His Majesty to grant to the Petitioners all mines and minerals, which either have been or shall hereafter be discovered by them or their Associates within the Island of Newfoundland, and upon the Coast of Labrador between the River Saint John's and the southern limits of the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company.” Your Lordship sees that entirely fits with my construction of the document ten years before, which is the document which extends the jurisdiction of the Governor of Newfoundland to the mainland of Labrador.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: What are the southern limits?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think what is meant is this. I hardly like to trouble your Lordship to look at a map for the purpose. They meant it might be that if you travel near Cape Chidley sixty miles inland you will get over into the Hudson's Bay territory, and so they say that is not a good way to define it. We do not see any reason why you should, and you must not treat our grant as giving you any portion of the Hudson's Bay territory.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I quite follow that. But my difficulty is the word “southern.”

Sir JOHN SIMON: Would the word “south-eastern” be better?

p. 196

Viscount FINLAY: Surely “southern” in a general way indicates the side of the Hudson's Bay territory with which they were concerned.

Viscount Haldane.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I thought that was what it was. I agree that the description “southern” is not quite right, taking it as a point of the compass, but I took it to mean that if you regarded yourself as standing on the divide, you would have an area which was north-west which would be Hudson's Bay territory.

Viscount HALDANE: They did not agree with the idea of the sixty miles.

Sir JOHN SIMON: They give that up. They say sixty miles may be too much in some cases, and, for all we know, it may be too little elsewhere, but so long as we are quite certain that there is no trenching upon the Hudson's Bay horse-shoe, if I may so describe it, they say that is all right. And the other thing that is important is that they say we ought to limit it to the southern boundary, namely, to the River St. John.

Viscount HALDANE: It says “within the Island of Newfoundland, and upon the Coast of Labrador between the River Saint John and the southern limits of the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company.”

Sir JOHN SIMON: May I give your Lordship a reference to a map which I think will show what is meant?

The LORD CHANCELLOR: They must mean the point at Davis Inlet or just about that.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: They start in the preamble by saying the Petition is for “a certain limited distance not exceeding sixty miles from the sea.” It may be all right so long as it is east of the River St. John.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes.

25 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount FINLAY: They follow the coast round from St. John's River until you come to the southern boundary.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think that is the meaning of it.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: It may mean the extreme north of that peninsula.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Might I just refer to map No. 26 with reference to this? I understand the observation made to be this. They say the terms of the Petition are for a grant of land on the Labrador Coast which runs sixty miles inland. It is conceivable there may be places where that would run into the green. Sixty miles from the sea is, therefore, not a good way of talking about it. Neither is it a good thing to say that they want the grant bounded by the St. Lawrence, because how far is the St. Lawrence treated as running up? But they say, if you make the one limit the River St. John, which ten years before they had made the lateral boundary of the enlarged Newfoundland, and if you will say that they are not to go beyond the southern limit of the Hudson's Bay territory, then you are dealing with an area which is not already pre-occupied.

p. 197

Viscount HALDANE: Yes, but they are dealing also with a limited distance not exceeding sixty miles from the sea.

Sir JOHN SIMON: The Petition asked for that, and the Lords of Trade say the Petition is in an objectionable form. They say they think the Petition might very well be acceded to, provided its terms are such that you secure there is no overlap in the two directions they indicate.

Viscount HALDANE: But only on the Coast of Labrador.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Only on the Coast of Labrador.

Viscount HALDANE: Not exceeding sixty miles from the sea.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is perfectly true. I am not for a moment saying that this document shows affirmatively that the Coast of Labrador does go into the height of land. I could not say that. But I think I am entitled to say this is an application to carve out of the total which is called the Coast of Labrador something which is sixty miles deep, and that the only comment which has to be made on that application is: "That is all right; you can perfectly well cut sixty miles off the Coast of Labrador, but we must be quite clear you do not go further than the River St. John in one direction and do not trench on the Hudson's Bay territory in the other direction."

You will find that the Lords of Trade having made that comment, the grant is made. The grant is to be found in Volume III, page 1154.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: There was an Order of the Privy Council.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am obliged to your Lordship. The Privy Council Order is worth noting. It is shown on page 1081. At line 28 you will see they recommend “a draft of a proper instrument to be passed under the Great Seal of Great Britain, containing a grant to the petitioners, their heirs and assigns, of all mines and minerals which either have or shall hereafter be discovered by them or their associates within the Island of Newfoundland, and upon the Coast of Labrador, between the River St. Johns, and the southern limits of the territory granted to the Hudson's Bay Company.”

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: That means the mines and minerals contained in an area of dry land described as the “Coast of Labrador.”

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: And undefined in width.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Whether undefined I am not sure.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: Not in terms defined.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I quite agree—not marked out by metes and bounds. Then, if your Lordships will kindly turn to page 1154, you will find there is a report in respect of the grant, followed on page 1156 by the grant itself. Lord Haldane will see that the point he made just now is made good on page 1156. The thing is carved out of a total piece of territory which is known as the Coast of Labrador, but it is to be sixty miles measured from the margin of the sea.

Viscount HALDANE: That is incorporated in the Order of the Privy Council.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is right. It reads: “Whereas there was this day read at the Board, a report from a Committee of the Lords of His Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council for Plantation affairs dated this day, upon considering the draft of a grant prepared by His Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor-General of all mines, minerals, metals and ores whatsoever within the Island of Newfoundland or upon such part of the sea coasts of Labrador, as lie within sixty miles of low water mark of the open sea, between the river St. John and the southern limits of the territory granted to the Hudson Bay Company unto John Agnew of Sheuchan in the county of Wigtown in Scotland, George Stewart of the county of Wighton and Alexander Dunn, collector of the customs of the Island of Newfoundland Esqre, their executors, administrators and assigns, for the term of nine hundred and ninty nine years, under the reservations and upon the conditions therein expressed and contained.” Alexander Dunn, you will observe, was a Scotsman who had gone into the New World and was collecting customs there, and while pursuing his professional and official avocations he noted that this was not a bad place for him and his friends from Wigtownshire, and he thereupon moved Mr. Agnew and others to join him, and they got the grant.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I do not think so. That is a little instructive, I think, as showing what is meant. In the same way, slightly diverging from the strict Hudson's Bay matter, though having a hearing on it. I ask your Lordships to take one or two references to the enterprise of the Moravian Missionaries, very good people who devoted themselves to trying to Christianise the Eskimos in that area, and who combined, as of course was quite proper, the business of preaching the Gospel with the carrying on of a certain amount of trade. It is a very interesting and striking fact that the Moravians—I think it was called the Unitas Fratrum—on the recommendation of Governor Palliser in the first instance, who was the successor of Graves, and later by other grants, got four separate grants of land, together making the very enormous amount of 400,000 acres. These were grants of land upon the Coast of Labrador, and what is extremely significant is that nobody ever doubted that those grants were grants which were effected within the jurisdiction of the Governor of Newfoundland. If you are going to say that the Coast of Labrador, so far as it is annexed to Newfoundland, is a mere strip, then, of course, these grants to the Moravians become perfectly impossible. It is not left as a matter of inference; it is by the express provision in the documents in reference to the grants to the Moravian Missionaries that these things are done through the Governor of Newfoundland. I venture to think that is a very significant thing as showing the way in which the Coast of Labrador, so far as that description is applied to the area administered by Newfoundland, is to be understood.

The references are these. I could give you many more, but I have picked out the ones really significant. In Volume III, page 932, you will find Governor Palliser—who, as I told your Lordships, was the successor of Governor Graves, succeeding to the governorship in the year following Graves's extended Commission—addresses the Lords of Trade and gives an account of his proceedings to establish friendly relations with the Eskimo Indians. He is reporting in these terms in 1764: "In obedience to the 13th and 14th Article of His Majesty's instructions"—perhaps your Lordships might like to note in the margin that those instructions will be found in Volume II, page 422; they are explicit instructions to Governor Palliser that he is to get, on to the mainland and do these things—"in obedience to the 13th and 14th Article of His Majesty's instructions for endeavouring to conciliate the affections of the Esquemeaux savages on the Coast of Labrador"—the very thing, in my view, which the Newfoundland Governor had to deal with—"without the Streights of Bell Isle, and to introduce a commerce with them; before I left London meeting with a man named Hans Harven one of the Brothers of the Moravian sect who has lived some years amongst the savages of Greenland, and talks their language, which very probably is the same with the Esquemeauxs, and finding in him a strong disposition (to a degree of enthusiasm) to undertake to introduce some knowledge of religion amongst those savages,” etc. I rather fancy that in the eighteenth century enthusiasm in connection with religious fervour had not an altogether good meaning. Your Lordships remember the eighteenth-century tombstone of an old lady who was described as having filled her life with works of piety “without the slightest touch of enthusiasm,” meaning without frenzy or without too much excitement.

Viscount FINLAY: I think the Duke of Wellington recommended the Institution of Chaplains in his army in the Peninsula to attempt to keep down enthusiasm.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord. In the eighteenth century enthusiasm in a religious connection had undoubtedly a rather bad sense. Governor Palliser says that this gentleman, Hans Harven, exhibited a degree of enthusiasm, and I might say that the documents which follow, which are not relevant, rather show that he did. The report of Governor Palliser goes on to say: “and finding in him a strong disposition (to a degree of enthusiasm) to undertake to introduce some knowledge of religion amongst those savages I encouraged him in it, and to come out here, where I have also encouraged some merchants to send a vessel with him to that Coast (having none of the Kings to spare this season) and in case he should be able to converse with those savages,” etc. That was the beginning.

Viscount HALDANE: So far there is no grant of land.

Sir JOHN SIMON: No, my Lord, but it is coming. This gentleman, Hans Harven, went out, and as the result, after about six months, there comes a petition (page 1311) from the Society of the Moravians to the Lords of Trade. It is a petition of the 23rd February, 1765. The petition is in the following terms:—“Sheweth, That the said Unitas Fratrum, desiring to the utmost of their power to propagate the Gospel of Our Lord . . . And that to the same end Jens Haven”—that is the same man as Hans Harven—“one of the above mentioned Petitioners, was sent last summer to Terra Labrador, in order if possible to find out whether the language of the so-called Eskimaux be the same with that of our Indian brethren in Davis's Straits, in which undertaking of his by the favour of the Lords of the Admiralty, and the kindness of Governor Palliser, he was enabled to make some progress, and found to our great satisfaction, that the language was the same, and met with an unusually kind treatment from those savages he came to the speech of. The endeavours of the said Jens Haven having met with so much success, the Unitas Fratrum also perceiving that this undertaking has been agreeable to the Lords Commissioners of Trade and Plantations (who were pleased to express a desire that the Brethren would settle in those parts) have after mature deliberation resolved in the name of God, and Our Lord Jesus Christ, to do everything in their power towards the conversion and civilizing the savage natives of that inhospitable country . . . But seeing the Esquimaux are not only a savage nation but even provoked by the former behaviour of the Europeans in general to such a degree, that even killing as well robbing and stealing is become their ordinary custom . . . Therefore, it is humbly hoped, that the English nation if they on their side ever wish to see the Fishery on that Coast secure from the depredations of those barbarous people by their becoming civilized will not only do all in their power to prevent our Mission among them from being disturbed or molested in any wise, but will also in all respects be inclined to wish well to the same, and readily grant us all needful and proper protection and assistance . . . Your Petitioners beg leave to make the following proposals.” They then propose that a vessel should be sent out, and there are one or two more proposals at the top of the next page. Then on page 1312, line 12, they make this proposal—a modest proposal. “That four different tracts of land on the Coast of Labrador for the use of the Mission be now beforehand allotted and secured to us by the Government . . . And as Terra Labrador is a country where hardly any other Europeans will make a fixed settlement . . . We desire that these four tracts of land in four different parts making altogether 400,000 acres may be granted to us in the above manner.” Of course 400,000 acres is a very substantial amount.

Viscount HALDANE: But you observe it does not follow that these were within the Coast of Labrador. They are petitioning the Crown.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I have observed that, my Lord. I am reading it because I am coming to that answer of the Crown which directs the Governor of Newfoundland to give them what they want. That is the point I want to make. It shows when you have a Governor with a Commission for the Coast of Labrador, it is quite plain that he is the person who is supposed to be able to deal with very large areas of territory. It is enough to read that at the moment.

Now would your Lordship go to page 1298, the second page of the report, which shows that a little later, April of the same year, Hugh Palliser, the Governor, is making an order reciting that “many and great advantages would arise to His Majesty by establishing a friendly intercourse,” and so on. Then at the bottom of page 1297 there is “and whereas I am endeavouring to establish a friendly communication between His Majesty's subjects and the said natives on the Coast of Labrador, and to remove these prejudices that have hitherto proved obstacles to it. I have invited Interpreters and Missionaries to go amongst them to instruct them in the principles of religion, to improve their minds, and remove their prejudices against us.” He is giving orders that everybody is to treat these people fairly, and, above all, not to supply them with strong liquor, the people being the natives. Skipping over one or two unimportant pages, on page 1314, almost at the same date, April, 1765, the Admiralty is directing “that a passage may be ordered in one of the ships of Commodore Palliser's Squadron, for the four Persons therein named, who are appointed by the Society of the United Fratrum, to establish a Mission on the coast of Terra Labrador, and that the Commander of such ship as may be appointed to visit that Coast, may have Orders to give them such Protection and Assistance.” The grant is on page 961.

p. 202

Viscount HALDANE: All that page 1314 says is that a ship shall take them out, and that they shall establish a mission on the coast.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is all. I have not got to the grant yet, but I am coming to it now on page 961, in the year 1766. I venture to think that there is a passage in this document which is really striking.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: There is a great deal which you can pass over.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord; I am going to do that.

Viscount FINLAY: The point of it is that they thought this enormous quantity of territory could be found on the coast of Labrador.

Sir JOHN SIMON: And the Governor of Newfoundland was the person to give it to them. It is said so in terms now. I will not read all this long document on page 961. It is a report. I would like your Lordship to note, to save going back to it, though it is for another purpose, that on page 962, at line 10, there is the definite assertion that it is not merely the cod fishery, but that it is the seal and sea cow fishery, which is also important there. Then on page 963, at line 32, there is: “It is unnecessary for us to trouble Your Majesty with every Circumstance relating to the Mission of the Society of the Unitas Fratrum; it will be sufficient to say, that the Object of it is so commendable in itself and the Conduct of those who went out last Year upon this difficult and Hazardous Service appears by the Report of Your Majesty's Governor to have been so meritorious and prudent, that, independent of Public advantage arising from the Discovery of a Coast hitherto unknown and unexplored”—people knew the littoral, the sea coast, quite well, but they did not know what was inland —“does seem to us to recommend them to Your Majesty's further favour and Protection; and therefore we submit to Your Majesty whether it may not be advisable”—that is the Governor of Newfoundland; I can show it in terms in a moment, but it is, anyhow—“that Your Majesty's Governor should be instructed to allow this Society to occupy such a District of Land not exceeding one hundred thousand acres upon the Coast of Labrador as they shall think best situated.” The first grant they got, therefore, was a grant of 100,000 acres. The Order in Council itself followed upon that, and is on page 1321. This is the Order that is made upon that Report. I must just read the first recital: “Your Majesty having been pleased by your Order in Council of the 20th February last to refer unto this Committee a representation from the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations setting forth that they have had under their consideration a memorial presented by the Earl of Hillsborough, one of Your Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, on behalf of the Society of Unitas Fratrum, stating”—see how it runs—“that the said Society are desirous of prosecuting their intention or establishing a Mission on the Northern Coast of Labrador for the purpose of civilizing and instructing the Savages called Esquimaux, inhabiting that Coast, in which undertaking the Memorialists represent that they have already taken some steps in consequence of encouragement received from the Board in 1765, but that there is a necessity of having permission to occupy such a quantity of land on that Continent as may induce the Esquimaux to settle around the Missionaries”—it is quite plain that the northern coast of Labrador is being referred to really by “that continent” now—“that for this purpose they have pitched upon Esquimaux Bay and praying for a grant on that spot of one hundred thousand acres of land, or about 12 miles square.” Twelves miles square is 144, and I think there are 640 acres to a square mile; so it would come to about 100,000 acres. That is a quarter of the whole grant which they ultimately got. Thereupon they make the grant, and at the bottom of page 1323, line 40, they may choose “any 100,000 acres of land in such part of Esquimaux Bay on the Coast of Labrador as they may find most suitable for their purpose.”

Sir John Simon.

Viscount Haldane.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount FINLAY: I think there were four parcels.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, and this is the first. Then the last sentence of the document, on page 1324: “And the Governor or Commander in Chief of His Majesty's Island of Newfoundland and the Territories depending thereon for the time being, and all others whom it may concern, are to take Notice and Govern themselves accordingly.”

Viscount HALDANE: They are to give them reasonable assistance and support in forming the said establishment, and by proclamation. It is not a grant.

Viscount Haldane.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Forgive me, my Lord; I thought it was.

Viscount HALDANE: Where is the grant?

25 Oct., 1926.

Viscount Haldane.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Am I wrong, my Lord?

Viscount HALDANE: A grant is by the King.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Certainly, my Lord. It could not, I think, at that time have been anything else. The Governor of Newfoundland, under his instructions as they were then, was not like the Governors of some places a hundred years afterwards. It was not within his commission to make grants in the name of the King.

Viscount HALDANE: I have no doubt that that is so.

Sir JOHN SIMON: You had to go to the King.

Viscount HALDANE: The King grants the hinterland, and grants

p. 204

the hinterland apparently quite irrespective of the Governor, who is directed, as the agent of the Crown, to protect it.

Viscount Haldane. Sir JOHN SIMON: I think the true position is this: The Governor of Newfoundland first of all gives these people facilities; he reports that it is desirable that they should be given facilities, and so on.

Sir John Simon. Viscount HALDANE: He has his ships.

Sir Thomas Warrington. Sir JOHN SIMON: I hope your Lordship will not think I am trying in the least to divert your Lordship's mind from that. The Petition is made, and it must be made, to the Sovereign, and, in the light of recommendations which are made by Palliser and other people, it is decided to do it. The grant is then a grant (your Lordship is absolutely right) by the prerogative of the Sovereign here of those 100,000 acres on the coast of Labrador, but I think both this and a subsequent passage will show it was treated from beginning to end as being within the actual area of the Government of Newfoundland.

Sir John Simon. Viscount HALDANE: The Governor is the actual person to give protection to any British subject there; he was the person who had the Fleet.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am not disputing that at all. Just to illustrate why I think it really does come to a little more than that, I will take a later grant. Will you turn to page 1348?

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: It is obvious that it was the Governor of Newfoundland who was to have the administrative authority over the land granted to the Moravians, because he had power to appoint justices of the peace.

Sir JOHN SIMON: They all show it; but really the document on page 1348 is very clear.

25 Oct., 1926.
Sir John Simon. Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: He does not make the grant because the land is not vested in him. If the land is vested in anybody it is vested in the King.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It was at that stage; but when you pass on to the early part of the nineteenth century and the instructions are varied. then it was the Governor who did it. If your Lordship will turn to page 1348 you will find the very thing.

Viscount FINLAY: Whichever way it was done, it comes to very much the same thing.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I wanted to meet the point which Lord Haldane was good enough to raise, because it is an important point, and page 1348

p. 205

Viscount Haldane. is worth looking at from that point of view. The position then was this: you had the Governor of Newfoundland, who at this time was Hamilton, on page 1348, addressing the Rev. Benjamin Kohlneuister, brother of the United Fratrum Society, and saying—we need not trouble about the first paragraph—“Captain Martin's reports to me of the result of your labours are no less pleasing than surprising, and as long as it may please His Majesty to continue me in this Government I shall feel a sincere pleasure in not only communicating but forwarding the views of your Society in every way within my power, agreeable to His Majesty's towards all his subjects, and who has commanded the Earl of Bathurst, his principal Secretary of State for the Colonies, to direct me”—Lord Bathurst, as Secretary of State for the Colonies, is directing him (that is, Governor Hamilton)—“to make a special grant of a considerable accession of territory to the Society of Unitas Fratrum, which has only been delayed for want of an eligible mode of conveyance.”

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: Where was his authority to make any such grant? This is a very nice letter to write to the Rev. Benjamin Kohlneuister, but where was the authority of the Governor to grant territory outside the boundaries of Labrador?

Viscount Haldane.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Forgive me, my Lord, is not your Lordship, in putting that question, a little bit assuming something against me?

Viscount Haldane.

Viscount HALDANE: No. He grants apparently as if he had authority. Where did Lord Bathurst direct him to make a special grant of a considerable accession of territory which might be beyond the coasts of Labrador?

25 Oct., 1926.

Viscount Haldane.

Viscount HALDANE: I am using the word “coast” in the narrower sense, but you are contesting it and saying it is up to the height of land.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am putting a little emphasis on this because I should have submitted that the fact that these things happened was some indication that the true construction of the annexation of the coast of Labrador by Newfoundland was what I am contending for; it is entirely consistent with my contention.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: They did not leave it to the Governor of Labrador; they went to London to get what they wanted, and ultimately London made an Order which is quite logical; they made a grant and directed the Governor to protect the Moravians.

p. 206

Sir JOHN SIMON: This is not a direction to the Governor to protect at all; it is an Order to the Governor to make a special grant.

Viscount HALDANE: I am looking at the other document, and I am asking you: Where was the authority to do more than was contained in that direction? Where was the authority to grant what may have been the property of the Crown?

Mr. MACMILLAN: It is an Order of the Prince Regent in Council, which is referred to on the preceding page.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am obliged. If I do seem not to have been dealing with your Lordship's point, it is not intentional on my part, but I have passed from the first grant to a later one, and I may have been a little obscure. If your Lordship would turn back one page to page 1347, the authority, so far as it is a document, is to be found there in the plainest terms: "Proclamation by Governor Hamilton." Your Lordship appreciates that I have now got to the year 1821. "Whereas His Royal Highness the Prince Regent in Council on the 13th May, 1818"—George III was indisposed at this time—"acting in the name and on the behalf of His Majesty was graciously pleased to authorise that every facility should be given to the Moravian Missionaries in Labrador for extending the beneficial influence which they have had upon the character of the Native Indians, and for spreading still further the benefits of the Gospel and to that end to permit and allow the Society of the 'Unitas Fratrum' to form a fourth settlement"—this is the fourth; I gave you two others, and this is the fourth.

Viscount FINLAY: From the first it was contemplated that there should be four?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It was, my Lord—"on the Eastern coast of Labrador and to occupy during His Majesty's pleasure 'that part of the said Coast to the North of Okkak'"—I can show you that on the map—"which comprehending the Bays of Kangertuksoak and Saglek reaches to the 59 degrees of N. Latitude, provided that the spots chosen by the said Society for its settlements may be such as in no respect to interrupt or annoy the fisheries carried on upon the said eastern coast of Labrador, I, the Governor aforesaid, do therefore hereby make known unto all whom it may concern that the said settlements of the Unitas Fratrum are under His Majesty's immediate protection and do hereby strictly enjoin all His Majesty's subjects to live in amity and brotherly love with the said settlers and the Native Indians inhabiting the country aforesaid, in no wise molesting, or disturbing the said Missionaries or those who shall settle with them; And I do further require that all His Majesty's subjects who shall come upon the coast of Labrador do act towards the said Missionaries and the Esquimaux Indians justly, humanely and agreeably to those laws by which His Majesty's subjects of all classes are bound throughout His Majesty's Dominions. And the said Society of Unitas Fratrum are hereby enjoined to take especial care that spots it shall chuse for its Settlements be such as in no respect to interrupt, or annoy the fisheries carried on upon the said Coast of Labrador." All I am saying is that on four successive occasions, the first of them an occasion in 1766 and two intermediate occasions the dates of which I think I can give if you wish it, and the last, I think, an occasion in 1821, the Unitas Fratrum did acquire very considerable blocks of territory, 100,000 acres in each case, at four different points. Those blocks of territory were to be chosen as they pleased. The first one, in fact, was a square block. It would not appear to have gone beyond anything in the terms of the grant, if they had chosen a narrow oblong which ran further in, but it was a square block. All I am venturing to submit is that while the source of the grant is the Crown, it is plain that in these documents from first to last it is treated as being within an area which is called the coast of Labrador, which is the very phrase "all the coasts of Labrador which are annexed to Newfoundland," and, what is more, that the Governor of Newfoundland is the authority that is directed in that regard.

Lord SUMNER: This grant at Okkak apparently rests upon some coast, where fishing is going on, but it appears to carry you some miles into the interior, at any rate beyond the one-mile strip. It does not carry you far, but it is something for you.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is. I would not trouble your Lordship if I did not think so.

Lord SUMNER: The other settlements may have been further inland or further up an inlet.

Viscount Haldane.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I have no real reason for saying so.

Lord SUMNER: I see they are shown on the map; I see that Hebron is marked. It does not show how far it goes in.

Viscount HALDANE: There are 400,000 acres.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: The 100,000 acres you have referred to is only a part.

Sir JOHN SIMON: 400,000 acres, unless my memory of these things is quite wrong, would be something like 800 square miles.

Viscount HALDANE: I find in the document on page 1247 what is anticipated from the earlier document a direction to protect and look after; that is a very different thing from a grant of the hinterland. It seems to me there are only three parties interested: Canada, Newfoundland, and, in respect of that vast tract in between, the Crown.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Quite possibly. On any view, what I have been calling attention to—I hope not at too much length—appears to me to have a very material bearing, because it does appear quite conclusively to show that all attempts to suggest some quite narrow strip break down on the conduct of all the parties, from the King downwards.

Viscount FINLAY: I think you said that these were square blocks.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It does appear that the first of them is a square block; the first one is described as a square block. It is to be found on page 963.

Viscount FINLAY: What page is this?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is page 1321.

Sir John Simon.

Mr. Macmillan.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Mr. Macmillan, which map are they on, can you tell me?

Mr. MACMILLAN: They are shown on one of the maps in our atlas, I think.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I did not know that they were.

Viscount Finlay.

Sir John Simon.

Mr. MACMILLAN: I am sorry. It is not in the atlas; it is a map which I have seen myself. May I say what we did? We inquired of the Government of Newfoundland what was the extent of those grants which they had made, and they were good enough to supply us with a map on which they show the precise territory. I have that map here, and I can show it. May I do so?

Sir JOHN SIMON: By all means. But I just want to give Lord Finlay the reference. At page 1321, at line 26, your eye will catch the phrase “or about 12 miles square.”

Sir John Simon.

Viscount FINLAY: I had an impression that they failed to comply with the terms of the grant.

Sir JOHN SIMON: From the terms of the document I should have thought that they were given a discretion, but I should not have thought that they would have failed to comply with the terms of the grant if on one occasion they chose a long narrow oblong which went further in.

Viscount FINLAY: It would certainly have been within their discretion to give any shape they liked, but in one case they did give a square block.

Sir JOHN SIMON: My friend Mr. Macmillan has been kind enough to let me see what he says his clients got from the Newfoundland Government when they asked to be informed what were the grants which the Newfoundland Government had made on this coast.

Mr. MACMILLAN: That is what I understood; to the Moravians, of course.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes; the others we are coming to. Here they are, my Lord. It raises an interesting question in geometry as to whether any of these is a square. I should have said myself that one of them was rhombus.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It need not be a square; it is so many square miles.

Mr. MACMILLAN: The furthest north is the last, I am told.

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I do not think it is material to my case to decide exactly where they were or how big they were.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: They go beyond the mile.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Not only that, but my argument, which your Lordships will weigh and give such force to as you think right, goes much beyond that. My argument, is that it shows that "coast of Labrador" is used in the sense in which I submit "Main" or "Coast" is used.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I understand that, but in fact all these grants extend far beyond one mile.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, and it is treated as beyond question that the person who will have authority in these matters will be the person who has jurisdiction over the Coast of Labrador.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: If it has the description "part of the Coast of Labrador," you do not want to go any further, because it is the Coast of Labrador which the Governor has to govern.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: If your Lordship pleases. The only other thing about Hudson's Bay which I have to say to complete it is this: In 1815, owing to the activities of this North West Company which I mentioned earlier in the day, the Hudson's Bay Company considered what course they should take, and they proposed to exercise quasi-sovereign rights in their own area to an extent they had never done before, and they reported their intentions to the Government of the day. The Government of the day I do not think very much liked it. I do not suppose a Government very much likes a subordinate corporation setting out with an army of its own. There was a controversy, and in the course of the controversy the question arose as to what was the extent of

Hudson's Bay territory. One or two letters passed. I do not say they were altogether in favour of my contention, but they are very material, and it is helpful, I think, to refer to them now.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: This happens to the west.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, in 1815. There are two or three letters about that in Volume VIII, page 4114. Your Lordship will be interested to observe that the Hudson's Bay Company was advised by some very distinguished counsel. I have not, as a matter of fact, at the moment, seen their opinion; it would be very interesting to see it, but it comes in a moment. In May, 1815 (the day of the month is not given), addressing Lord Bathurst, who was Colonial Secretary, the Hudson's Bay Corporation write: "That by their Charter granted by King Charles the 2nd bearing date the 2nd May 1669 they are authorized to make Laws both Civil and Criminal for the Government of their Territories in North America, so as such Laws be reasonable and not contrary to the laws of England but as near thereto as may be. That no laws either civil or criminal for this purpose have hitherto been made except such bye laws of the Company as from time to time were found necessary for the Regulation of their Servants and immediate Dependants in their said Territories. But a considerable addition having been made to the Population thereof by a new Colony lately settled there which is likely to increase to a considerable extent it is become necessary that a more enlarged and comprehensive Code should be established for the good government as well of the Company's Servants as of settlers others within their Chartered Limits in North America." I am speculating, but I rather imagine that the New Colony there referred to was probably Fort Garry. "That proposed Ordinances for this purpose have been prepared under the advice of Counsel (a printed copy of which is annexed) and are intended to be sent out to the Company's settlements in Hudson's Bay by the Ships of this Season which will very shortly sail, but your Memorialists are anxiously desirous that such Ordinances should receive the sanction of His Majesty's Attorney & Solicitor General before they acted upon." The delegated power of legislation was rather a queer one. Their legislative power was limited by this: "So that such laws be reasonable and not contrary to the laws of England but as near thereto as may be;" so perhaps it was prudent for the Hudson's Bay Company to ask that the Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General should certify.

25 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Then Lord Bathurst says:
“What are your limits?”

Sir JOHN SIMON: On page 4115 Lord Bathurst says he wants a distinct specification of the limits of the territory within which it is proposed that such ordinances should have effect. Then the answer is on page 4116, on the 8th June, 1815. “Mr. Goulburn having desired that your Lordship should be furnished with a distinct specification of the limits of the Territory within which the ordinances of the Hudson's Bay Company relative to the better administration of Justice are to have effect, I beg leave to transmit a Copy of the Charter granted by King Charles the 2nd from which your Lordship will observe that the grant of the Territory included all lands which lie upon the waters that run into Hudson's Bay. The limits therefore can only be defined by the Height of land which divides these waters from those which run into the Sea in any other direction.”

p. 211

Now I shall be much interested to see (and I have sent, for the paper, which I think is to be found) what was the opinion of Sir Samuel Romilly, Mr. Scarlett, Mr. Holroyd, Mr. Cruise and Mr. Bell, who are mentioned on the next page—a very distinguished team, anyway. “The geographical discoveries which have been progressively made by the Company's Servants for many years past have ascertained with great accuracy the situation of the height of land which is laid down distinctly in most of the recent maps of North America. On the South East of Hudson's Bay it divides the rivers that run into James Bay from various branches of the St. Lawrence. On the South West, it divides the waters of the Saskatchewan & Red River from those of the Missouri & Mississippi & on the North West those of Churchill River from the Athapescow, & other rivers which flow to the Northward into the Frozen Ocean. Within these limits the Governors of the different establishments have always exercised jurisdiction, so far as circumstances required but in consequence of the increasing population of the Country, new rights and varied interests have arisen, which call for a more regular and effectual administration of Justice. For the satisfaction of all persons living within the jurisdiction of the Company, it has been thought advisable to take the opinion of several eminent counsel of the different courts of Law and Equity who concurred in an unanimous opinion that the Company have a complete title to all the Lands within the limit above mentioned and that within these limits their Governor and their Council appointed by the Company, are empowered by the Charter to administer Justice according to the Law of England.” Probably the phrase about the height of land is to be found in the opinion. “A copy of these opinions is enclosed for your Lordships' information. As these questions involve points of Royal Prerogative, we were anxious to obtain the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown in addition to those of Sir Samuel Romilly, Mr. Cruise, Mr. Holroyd, Mr. Scarlett, and Mr. Bell.”

Viscount FINLAY: Who were the Law Officers of the Crown at that time?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I am not sure; probably if one thought a moment one might find out.

Viscount FINLAY: It does not matter.

p. 212

Sir JOHN SIMON: “The high sanction of their opinion would certainly have been a great satisfaction to the persons acting under the Charter,” and so on.

Then there comes back a very cautious letter from Downing Street. May I warn your Lordships that it seems to me at least—I have no reason whatever to say so except from looking at the document—that the date must be wrong and there must be some intervening documents. I have sent to enquire if the next document was the 12th April, 1816. I think it must be 12th April, 1816, because it is referred to in the reply on page 4119, so that I think we ought to see what the intervening documents are. Apparently the Government did not like the idea of the Hudson's Bay Company starting this imperium in imperio. Line 28: “His Lordship has therefore, as a preliminary measure, and with a view to ascertain the extent of jurisdiction which the Hudson's Bay Company can legally claim under their Charter, referred the case to the consideration of His Majesty's Law Servants. As soon as their report shall be received, a communication of Lord Bathurst's views on the subject will be made.” Then follows this sentence, which your Lordships must not overlook: “In the interim his Lordship has only to express his decided objection to the measure announced in your letter of creating an Armed Force for the defence of a Territory, the title to which in the extent to which it is asserted is, to say the least of it, extremely doubtful. Nor can his Lordship believe that, under the circumstances stated, the Company can have any disposition to incur the responsibility of persisting in the measure which you have announced to be in their contemplation.” I infer that in between the two there was a gap, that things had got worse, because this Hudson's Bay Company was extremely vigorous. I rather infer that in the interval the Hudson's Bay Company were saying: “We are not going to make laws, but we are going to enlist an army.”

Then comes the answer on page 4119: “I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Goulburn's letter of the 12th inst. in which he informs me that your Lordship with a view to ascertain the extent of jurisdiction which the Hudson's Bay Company can legally claim under their Charter has referred the case to the consideration of His Majesty's Law Servants, and I have to assure your Lordship of the perfect readiness of the Hudsons Bay Company to afford to them every assistance which their documents may furnish and to facilitate by every means in their power the legal determination of so important a question. I beg leave to recall it to your Lordships recollection that the Directors of the Hudsons Bay Company have in former communications expressed an anxious wish for the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown upon this question, that they might have either the additional weight of their authority as confirming the opinion of Mr. Justice Holroyd"—he had been made a Judge in the meantime—"Sir Samuel Romilly, Mr. Scarlett, Mr. Bell and Mr. Cruise, or that had His Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor differed from those great authorities, that menus might hove been found to bring these Chartered Rights at once before the King in Council."

Sir John Simon.

So they say: “As you do not like the idea of our enlisting a volunteer corps, we will suspend the measure.” I do not at present know—I do not know whether my friends do—whether the advice which may be supposed to have been sought from the Law Officers of the Crown was ever given, and, if so, what the advice was; of course these things are usually confidential. At any rate, there is a Petition on page 4121, which complains very bitterly of what the North West Company had been doing. I am not going to read it—it is very long—but might I ask your Lordships to pick out just two or three passages? On page 4122, line 21, you get an account of the beginning of the North West Company: “That in the Autumn of 1812 a number of Settlers sent by his Lordship”—that is Lord Selkirk, who, you will remember, got the grant some time earlier, in 1811, away up in the district now known as Selkirk—“that in the Autumn of 1812 a number of Settlers sent by his Lordship arrived and established themselves on the Banks of the Red River, and these were followed in the two succeeding years by many others who all settled on the adjoining lands. That the said Settlement was proceeding with every prospect of success when it was assailed first by the several manoeuvres, and afterwards by the open violence of certain partners, agents and dependents of a Canadian Association calling itself the North West Company of Fur Traders of Montreal.” They give an account of how that Association began, and so they say: “Here you have got all his rivalry going on.”

Then on the next page there is a complaint of the aggressions of the North West Company; and then on page 4142, at line 32, you get again the reassertion of the height of land. “Wherefore your Petitioners most humbly pray leave to refer to the said Memorials and documents and to exhibit other evidence in support of this their petition and to be heard by Counsel therein and that Your Majesty will be graciously pleased to declare that, by virtue of the said Letters Patent of His said Majesty King Charles the Second, your Petitioners are the sole and absolute Lords Proprietors of all Lands between the extreme heights from which any waters flow into the seas within Hudson's Streights and the said Seas, and that Your Majesty will be pleased to appoint Commissioners to run a line along the said Heights or will otherwise determine more precisely the said boundary.”

On the next page is a Memorial from the North West Company.

Now, my Lords, the matter, as far as I can see, was not ever settled. I am sure it was not settled by any Imperial Order. I do not see that the thing was carried any further. That is the contention, and it is well worth observation now that, when the thing does come before Parliamentary authorities to consider, in the year 1857, as your Lordships know, this view, which appears to have been the view expressed by Sir 25 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Samuel Romilly, Mr. Scarlett and others, is the view which is perfectly plainly indicated on the map; but so far as regards the North West Territory, as I told your Lordships earlier in the day, the trouble was abated, because in 1821 the Hudson's Bay Company came to terms with this North West Company and took them over. That, so far as I am aware, gives the account of what is relevant in respect of the history of the Hudson's Bay Company, and the end of it is—this is not perhaps very helpful to your Lordships—that without there ever having been a legal decision as to what the limits of the Hudson's Bay Company were inland, in 1870 the Hudson's Bay Company is bought out, its quasi-sovereign rights come to an end, it remained a most important trading organization to do whatever was necessary, Hudson's Bay Company became Canada. So that the whole thing flows together without there ever having been a quite explicit decision on the point.

p. 214

Lord SUMNER: It was bought out without any specification.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes.

Lord SUMNER: What they had was transferred to Canada.

Viscount Haldane.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes; that is, after there had been this House of Commons inquiry, where it is quite plain what the boundary was believed to be. There has never been, unfortunately, from your Lordships' point of view, any actual decision about that. I think that makes it convenient to call attention now to the efforts which have been made quite recently by legislation in Canada, or in Quebec, to enlarge the boundaries from the Canadian side. Your Lordships already have in mind, of course, that nothing which the Dominion of Canada could do, nothing which the Legislative Assembly or Council of Quebec could do, will take away from Newfoundland anything that it has got—that is, of course, quite plain from the language of the Colonial Boundaries Act—but, as I have said all along, if the right view was that in this part of the world there was a No Man's Land, no doubt it is quite true to say that the Order in Council to which your Lordships have referred me more than once, which brings into Canada everything which is not Newfoundland, would mean that the No Man's Land passed to Canada.

Sir John Simon.

25 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount FINLAY: Is there anything in the documents which hints at the existence of such a No Man's Land?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I find very little.

Viscount HALDANE: I think the expression “No Man's Land” is not a very good one; I mean that the British Crown owns the land which is not owned by anybody else, and, of course, the Order in Council would operate on the Crown's title.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Of course, it was a mere familiar expression. May I tell your Lordships what happened, and I think in the time which I imagine your Lordships are going to use to-day, I can call attention to the necessary pages. In 1886, sixteen years after Hudson's Bay Territory had been thrown into Canada, the Quebec Legislative Assembly

p. 215

passed a resolution urging that the Quebec boundaries should be extended. They had this particular ground for urging it; that for reasons which are really rather technical (I will go into them if necessary, I know what they are) the boundary of the Province of Ontario had, after the Hudson's Bay Territory fell in, carried up to James Bay, so that Ontario—your Lordship knows that story very well—

Viscount HALDANE: That was the 1884 Arbitration.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes. The result was, incidentally, that the boundary of Ontario went up to the Albany River and the shore of James Bay; so Ontario was carried up there. The Quebec Council and the Quebec Legislative Assembly in 1886 passed this Resolution urging that the Quebec boundary should be extended. They asked for a new boundary. Now here is the curious thing (I am sure they did not appreciate it at the time), they, in fact, asked for a new boundary in terms which involve a denial of the proposition that the Quebec of 1774 acquired, by the addition of Newfoundland mainland, a mere little strip. Your Lordships remember the contention against me is that once you come to 1774, with the Quebec Act, really it is in virtue of the boundary then traced down, west of the Mississippi up to the Hudson's Bay Territory, that you get this immense Quebec of 1774, and, except for the purpose of clearing away doubt, the addition of the words "And also so much of the coast as was annexed to Newfoundland" would not matter at all. Their case, therefore, is that since they only had from Newfoundland this very narrow strip, it followed that when in 1809 the arrangement was reversed, and Newfoundland got back what it had before. Newfoundland only got back the very narrow strip. Now, if that is the view, it follows that Quebec, from 1809 onwards, was an area which did include already, thenceforward and for ever, all the land which lay to the north-east of the smaller province of Quebec, bounded, it is true, by the Hudson's Bay boundary on one side, but on the other side extending, not, indeed, actually to the salt sea waves, but extending to within a mile of them; and yet—here is the curious thing—the Quebec Legislative Assembly so completely misunderstood the case which was going to be made for Quebec in the year 1926, that when they passed a resolution urging that their boundary should be extended, some of the things which they now want to throw into Quebec were some of the things which, according to this argument, were already there. The page is page 4005 of Volume VIII. I have not got the actual document of 1886 but it is recited in the document on page 4005 sufficiently for the purpose. The actual document on page 4005 is a document of some years later, and it is not a Quebec document, but a Dominion document; it is, indeed, a report to the Privy Council Committee of the Dominion in the year 1894, and it is in these terms (I think this page is very important) : “The Honourable the Commissioner of Crown Lands, in a Report dated the 21st of November instant (1894), sets forth: That the important question of the North and North-eastern Boundary of the Province of Quebec,

although submitted on various occasions to the capital Federal Authorities at Ottawa, remains up to the present unsettled, notwithstanding the fact that the pretensions of the Province of Ontario for an analogous extension of territory have been recognised by the Parliament of Canada and the Imperial Parliament.” That refers to the fact that Ontario had got its boundary up to James Bay. “That as a matter of justice and right, the Province of Quebec is fully justified in persisting, as it does persist, in the views embodied in the resolutions of the Quebec Legislative Assembly of 1886 having reference thereto, copy of which has already been transmitted to his Excellency the Governor-General in Council, and in claiming, as it does claim for reasons similar or somewhat similar to those successfully urged by the Province of Ontario, for an extension to its boundaries, all the territory situate North of the height of land, as far as the Northerly limits held by the French Government at the time of the negotiations preliminary to the signature of the Treaty of Utrecht in 1713, and more particularly the Territory defined in the aforesaid resolutions, as follows”—now this is the resolution of 1886 by the Quebec Legislative Assembly—“All the country bounded on the West by a prolongation of the present boundary line between Ontario and Quebec to the South shore of James Bay, and by the shore line of this Bay as far as the mouth of East Main River, on the North by the right bank of East Main River from its mouth to its source, thence by a line drawn to the Northernmost waters of the Grand River Esquimeaux, Ashuanipi or Hamilton, and by the left bank of this river to its mouth in Rigolet Bay (Hamilton's Inlet) on the East and North-East”—I shall have to trouble your Lordships to trace this on a contemporaneous map in a moment—“on the East and North-East”—I call particular attention to these words—”by the Meridian of the Easternmost point of the source of the River St. Paul or Little Esquimeaux, and again on the East by this same river to the 52nd degree of North Latitude, following this parallel to its intersection by the Meridian of Anse au Blanc Sablon, the present recognised Eastern boundary of this Province.” Now, it will take a little time just to trace that out, but you will find it involves this assertion: it involves the assertion that that parallel, the 52nd parallel of latitude, which your Lordships will remember is the top of the pink in my map, was in 1886 the boundary of the Province of Quebec. Now, if that is so, it follows that it is not true that the Coast of Labrador, which Newfoundland first had, then gave up, and then got again, was a mere narrow strip: but it follows, as your Lordships have already been disposed to infer from the Statute of 1825, that the Coast of Labrador was a thing so deep and thick that the pink oblong only cut out a portion of it, and what was behind the pink oblong, and further away from the sea, was still Newfoundland, and that is the very view which the Legislative Council of Quebec themselves put forward in 1886.

MORNING SESSION.

Viscount Haldane. Sir JOHN SIMON : My Lords, when the Board adjourned last night I was making a submission with reference to the Resolution of 1886 which is to be found at page 4005 of Volume VIII. It was a Resolution of the Quebec Legislative Assembly in 1886, and it was their proposal to enlarge the existing boundary of the Province of Quebec. My comment on it, which I mentioned last night, was that the view here taken by the Quebec Legislative Assembly as to their existing boundary is quite plainly based on the fact that down to that time the boundary of the Province of Quebec was the comparatively limited boundary for which we contend. I think I can make my point most plain if your Lordships will allow me to use my sketch map which your Lordships have. Your Lordships will see that I have my sketch map mounted on a board, and I have had the different coloured sections arranged so that they can be removed piece by piece. I should like to point out to your Lordships what the situation was in 1886, firstly as we contend, and secondly as Canada now contends against us. Canada contends with regard to the boundary of the Province of Quebec—which had been, of course, greatly enlarged in 1774 and had been carried right to the margin of the sea, covering therefore the green and the pink—that when in 1809 the policy was reversed and Quebec lost what had previously been attached to it by annexation from Newfoundland, all that Quebec had to give back to Newfoundland was a comparatively narrow strip running along the edge of the coast.

Viscount HALDANE: And also under the pink.

26 Oct., 1926.

Sir JOHN SIMON: And also under the pink. That is the contention against me as to what happened in 1809.

Viscount HALDANE: Just let us be quite clear about what it means. It means that these lines drawn up to the 52nd parallel to the height of land were not limited to the territory transferred, but limiting the area in which the coast was.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, that is quite right. That happened in 1825. Referring to the pink, the only other alteration, as my Lord has just said, was in 1825, when to a certain extent there was again a retracing of steps, and when there was given back to Quebec an area which was the pink.

Viscount HALDANE: You say there was given back an area, but you mean the coasts within that area were given back.

p. 221

Viscount Haldane.

Sir JOHN SIMON: If your Lordship pleases. That is quite right.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: You may be right, of course, about the meaning of "coast."

Sir JOHN SIMON: I quite follow. Your Lordship has put it more accurately than I did. I want your Lordships see what was the situation in 1886. On the view which is now presented against me and which it is suggested is the consistent view, Quebec would in 1886 have included a very great part of the green. In fact it would have included all the green except whatever small edge of it might be supposed to be included in the expression "coast."

Viscount HALDANE: They may have thought that, but there was another view that it was Crown land until the Order-in-Council of 1880 transferred it to Canada.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I quite appreciate that is an aspect I have to deal with, but for the moment I was directing attention to the view as to what would be the extent of the boundary of Quebec if the case against me is right.

Viscount HALDANE: Yes.

Sir JOHN SIMON: When, therefore, the Quebec Legislative Assembly in 1886 expressed this urgent desire to extend its boundaries, what are these boundaries which it wanted to extend? If the case against me is right Quebec already had substantially all the green. Now if your Lordships will kindly look at page 4005, you will see what is the extension which Quebec asks for. They want to enlarge it so as to make the enlarged Quebec be this—it is at line 25:—"All the country bounded on the west by a prolongation of the present boundary line between Ontario and Quebec to the south shore of James Bay, and by the shore line of this bay as far as the mouth of East Main River, on the north by the right bank of East Main River from its mouth to its source"—I will show your Lordships what is the contemporary view with regard to that—"thence by a line drawn to the northernmost waters of the Grand River Esquimaux, Ashuanipi or Hamilton"—I can show your Lordships in a moment that at that time, it was thought that the head waters of the Ashuanipi would be quite close to the head waters of the East Main River, and therefore a short way across—“and by the left bank of this river to its mouth in Rigolet Bay (Hamilton's Inlet), on the east and north-east by the meridian of the easternmost point of the source of the River St. Paul or Little Esquimaux”—I do not think you will find that on the green of the map before you, but I can show it your Lordships on the contemporary map which was then being used—“and again on the east by this same river to the fifty-second degree of north latitude, following this parallel to its intersection by the meridian of

Sir John Simon.

2 H 2

p. 222

Anse au Blanc Sablon, the present recognised eastern boundary of this province.”

If I now take out my green section from my sketch map you will find marked behind it what is the boundary which Quebec was asking to have as an enlargement of its existing area. It was running, as your Lordships know, along the head waters of the East Main River, then getting across to what were believed to be the head waters of the Ashuanipi, and then carried to where the river reached Hamilton Inlet. I have drawn in pencil a somewhat thick black line perpendicularly showing the meridian of the easternmost point of the source of the River St. Paul or Little Esquimaux as the latest map showed it. Then, striking that, it was to follow the course of that river till it met the fifty-second parallel, and then follow that until it hit the meridian at Blanc Sablon.

If your Lordships will turn to the Map No. 36 in the Newfoundland Atlas, a map of the year 1882, only four years before, you will find I have put substantially correct upon this model the easternmost point of the source of the River Little Esquimaux. Your Lordships will find Esquimaux River marked slightly to the west of Blanc Sablon, with the Hudson's Bay Company's post at the mouth. If your Lordships will carry your eye up that river you will observe it appears to have two sources. I mean to say, it splits. If you take the easternmost point it ends in a sort of lake. That lake your Lordships will find on the 60th meridian of longitude. If I may trace the boundary backwards, what you are told to do is to use the 52nd parallel till you strike the River Little Esquimaux, and you are then to go up the eastern tributary of that river to its eastern source which is in substantial line with meridian 60. You are then to mount straight north till you strike just about where this great river comes into the Hamilton Inlet, and then you are to trace back along that river and ultimately get across to the East Main River. I am far from saying that there is anything conclusive in this case, and least of all in the acts of the parties, but it is a most striking fact that in 1886 after the rather detailed and careful Canadian survey represented in the official map of 1882, you should have the view first of all presented by the Quebec Government to the Dominion, and then in its turn adopted by the Dominion and acted upon, that what Quebec needed was to enlarge the boundaries as you see them on my model (now that I have taken out the green section), by bringing into it first of all, a portion of the brown, which was due to the fact that Quebec had never got the advantage of the Hudson's Bay territory passing into Canada—Ontario had, and Quebec had not—and secondly, a very substantial portion of the green. On the view now presented to me the green, or all but a little portion of it, was regarded as Quebec already.

Viscount Haldane.

Viscount Haldane.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: By this time the claim was against the Dominion of Canada, but in 1884 Ontario had a large acquisition of territory in the north. They refer to it in the resolution. Before that

p. 223

the Hudson's Bay Company had surrendered all its title to the Dominion.

Sir JOHN SIMON: It had done that in 1870.

Viscount FINLAY: So that the Dominion is now the person claimed against.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Quite right. A map which shows that particular thing very well and exactly illustrates Lord Haldane's point is the map next to the one I last referred to in the same book, namely Map No. 35 in the Newfoundland Atlas. You will see the thing exactly. This is the official map published by the Canadian Government in the year 1878. You will notice Ontario is marked there and coloured green. The green of Ontario runs up to James Bay. A very curious thing happened. The Hudson's Bay territory was thrown into Canada in 1870, and when it was thrown into Canada nothing happened for a moment, but by 1878 Ontario had secured that the boundaries of that Province of Ontario, or Upper Canada, were extended northwards so that they struck the seawater in James Bay.

Viscount HALDANE: Can you tell us where Winnipeg is in this map?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is to the extreme left of the green of Ontario.

Viscount HALDANE: What is the name of the lake close by Winnipeg?

Sir JOHN SIMON: The Lake of the Woods. That is just at the north-west corner of the green. Then your Lordship remembers the boundary of Ontario had been defined to run up to and then along the Albany River.

Viscount HALDANE: La Portage was the dividing point.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Then, your Lordship remembers, it ran along the Albany River. I submit respectfully that so far as the conduct by the authorities concerned can be said to have any value, even an illustrative value, this is certainly a very remarkable illustration of the undoubted truth that, instead of regarding the area which the Province of Quebec lost by returning to Newfoundland what was Newfoundland's as being a mere narrow maritime strip, the true view was that Quebec had been thrown back in the position, for example, shown in this map, where, your Lordship recollects, the white represents what is non-Canada. What Quebec is saying is, "Since we have only got this 52nd parallel and the meridian from Blanc Sablon as our present boundary in that part of our Province, surely it is time our boundaries were enlarged, for the boundaries of Ontario have been enlarged."

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: To whom is this sent?

Sir JOHN SIMON: The Resolution carried in 1886 was sent to the Dominion of Canada, because it would rest with the Dominion, of course, to enlarge it.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: How would it rest with the Dominion to enlarge Quebec as against Newfoundland?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It would not.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Is there any consciousness in this Resolution that they are claiming something which they think belongs to Newfoundland?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I do not know how that is, but it is quite certain that they are taking the view that they have not themselves got this boundary. I see the importance of the point your Lordship puts.

Viscount HALDANE: This matter was agitating the Parliament of Quebec because of the great success Ontario had had.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes. After all, one is, I will not say jealous, but a little interested in the successes of one's neighbour. The reason why I say that at the time it was supposed that the head waters of the Hamilton River were close to the head waters of the East Main River, is partly because contemporary maps will show it—I will not delay now, but I could show it by two or three maps about that time—and partly because it is recorded as a matter of fact, and observed upon at page 4009, line 12, where the Dominion authorities comment by saying:—"At that time, if I am not very much mistaken, the sources of both rivers were assumed to be situated, geographically, in relative proximity to each other."

I do not feel justified in occupying too long in what, after all, is illustrative matter. It does not alter the true legal view, but I submit it rather throws strong light upon the suggestion that the Province of Quebec since 1774 has had this very great extension. On the contrary, it is quite plain that the Province was seeking to get something additional in 1886.

Might I mention, before we leave Hudson's Bay altogether, what perhaps might be interesting to your Lordships. You will remember that in the course of the history of the Hudson's Bay Company yesterday, with which I had to occupy your Lordships' attention for a long time, we came to the point in the year 1815 when the Hudson's Bay Company were in communication with the British authorities and were stating that they proposed to pass a code of laws for the area which they administered, and that the question undoubtedly then did arise as to what was the extent of that area. The passage which I was referring to, which will be fresh in your Lordships recollection, is the passage on page 4115, and more particularly on page 4116. I have two pieces of information now, with the necessary documents, which I had not got last night. Your Lordships will remember that on page 4117 there was this passage: "As these questions involve points of Royal Prerogative, we were anxious to obtain the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown in addition to those of Sir Samuel Romilly, Mr. Cruise, Mr. Holroyd, Mr. Scarlett, and Mr Bell." And at a later stage your Lordships will remember there was an indication that the Law Officers of the Crown were consulted. I am now in a position to inform the Board, and have the documents here, that what may be called both sides in the matter did take these opinions, and that the opinions concurred, the advisers of the Hudson's Bay Company being, as you see, Sir Samuel Romilly, Mr. Cruise, Mr. Holroyd, Mr. Scarlett and Mr. Bell, and the Law Officers of the Crown, who were not consulted for some years afterwards but whose opinion was actually before the House of Commons Committee in 1857, being Sir John Jervis, Attorney General, and Sir John Romilly, Solicitor General. It is at any rate a matter of some interest to lawyers that that should be the original opinion of these five eminent persons given to the Hudson's Bay Company, signed by their name; and that here should be the report to the Colonial Office by Sir John Jervis and Sir John Romilly, when the Law Officers in their turn were consulted. When I turn to the report of the House of Commons Committee in 1847, the Committee, you will remember, which authorised the publication of the House of Commons map which showed that green area, I see in that report that they record the fact that they had before them both the views which the Hudson's Bay Company had obtained and the views of the Law Officers of the Crown. I should ask whether I may, for the information of the Board if they think right, call attention to the very short statement which each of these sets of very learned authorities made on the subject, because it shows why it was that in 1857 at any rate, the House of Commons Committee, without any sort of question, took the boundary of the Hudson's Bay Company as being the height of land.

p. 225

Viscount Haldane.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: It is merely an opinion that the height of land was the boundary, and apparently it is founded upon documents and materials, and does not lay down any general question.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: My Lord, it is the advice given as to the true extent of the Hudson's Bay territories, having regard to the language of their charter.

Viscount HALDANE: For the purpose of administering justice?

Lord Sumner.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I most thoroughly appreciate that the view which hereafter your Lordships may be disposed to entertain on this subject is a view which is perfectly independent of, and no doubt of much higher authority than, the views that may have been offered on one side or the other in the middle of the last century; but the point I

p. 226

Sir John Simon.

am making is not this; I am not seeking for the moment to cite to your Lordships these opinions as though they were legal authorities on points of construction, although the names are a little striking, but to show your Lordships that the map in 1857 was not a map which represented simply some unfounded claim, but was a perfectly deliberate laying down of the extent of the Hudson's Bay territory in the light of the consent and agreement of two sets of authorities, one advising the Crown and the other advising the Hudson's Bay Company.

Lord SUMNER: Did this concurrence of the Law Officers of the Crown in the view taken by the Counsel consulted by the Hudson's By Company, ever lead to any recognition by the Crown of the height of land?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think it would have been perfectly open in litigation, or the like, for another view to have been taken. The Crown never followed up these views, or gave anything in the nature of definition. My point, my Lord, is that I want to show your Lordship how very strongly founded I am in the submission which I made, that this area, thus attributed to the Hudson's Bay Company, is an area which was really on both sides and from every point of view recognised as right.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: How is this opinion mentioned in the Report of the Committee?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is mentioned in this way. I happen to have here the Hudson's Bay Company's volume from the House of Lords Library. It arises in this way. The Select Committee, containing some very well-known names—Lord John Russell, Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Lowe, and a number of others—made a report. It was appointed to consider “the state of those British possessions in North America which are under the administration of the Hudson's Bay Company, or over which they possess a licence to trade, and who were empowered to report their observations.”

26 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: What is the date of the report?

Sir JOHN SIMON: 1857. It is the Select Committee of the House of Commons. Its actual terms of reference involved the question of what are those British possessions which are under the administration of the Hudson's Bay Company. The report says this, in paragraph 3: "Your Committee have received much valuable evidence on these and other subjects connected with the inquiry which has been entrusted to them." The previous paragraph refers to the Hudson's Bay material, and then paragraph 4 says: "Your Committee have also had the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown communicated to them on various points connected with the charter of the Hudson's Bay Company." I have before me, my Lord, a copy of the opinion of Sir John Jervis and Sir John Romilly, who were the Law Officers in the year 1850, which was given at the express request of the Colonial Secretary, Lord Grey. I will not, of course, read it unless I am authorised to do so. It is only a couple of sentences which matter.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: What do you say, Mr. Macmillan?

Mr. MACMILLAN: I have no objection at all, my Lord; it is most interesting.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Then I would like to call attention to what it is. Sir John Jervis and Sir John Hominy were invited in the year 1850, or 1849 perhaps—their opinion is 1850—by Earl Grey, who was Colonial Secretary, to advise the Crown as to the extent of the territories of the Hudson's Bay Company, and as your Lordships well know, if I may say so respectfully, those particularly of your Lordships who have held the position of Law Officer, until comparatively recent times the form which an opinion of the Attorney General took when he advised, say the Colonial Office, was not as it is in recent years, merely a straightforward statement, "We are of opinion," so and so; the report began with the recital of the instructions and materials sent to the Law Officers. I think Lord Finlay will remember it was so even in his day, because I can remember seeing some of his. It was done really to record the instructions upon which the opinion was given. The nature of the report made by Sir John Jervis and Sir John Romilly upon this material is this: "My Lord We were honoured with your Lordship's commands contained in Mr. Hawes' letter of the 30th October last, in which he stated that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the copy of a resolution of the House of Commons, that an address be presented to Her Majesty praying that measures may be taken for ascertaining the legality of the powers which are claimed or exercised by the Hudson's Bay Company on the Continent of North America. Mr. Hawes then stated that he was to enclose the copy of a letter from the Chairman of the Hudson's Bay Company, together with a statement and map, prepared under his direction, of the territories claimed by the Company in virtue of the charter granted to them by King Charles II." Then I think there is an immaterial paragraph. Then when we come to their opinion they say this: "In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration and have the honour to report that, having regard to the powers in respect of the territory, trade, taxation, and government claimed by the Hudson's Bay Company in the statements furnished to your Lordships by the Chairman of that Company, we are of opinion that the rights so claimed by the Company do properly belong to them. Upon this subject we entertain no doubt." We have here the material which was submitted, and the material is the other opinion, the opinion of Sir Samuel Romilly and his colleagues. Perhaps it would be interesting to see the originals. The first of the heads of opinion is this: "We are of opinion that the grant of the soil"—

p. 228

Viscount HALDANE: What date is this?

Sir JOHN SIMON: This is the opinion of 1814. "We are of opinion that the grant of the soil contained in the charter is good and that it will include all the country, the waters in which run into Hudson's Bay as ascertained by geographical observation." That is signed—and it is interesting to some of us—by Samuel Romilly, William Cruise, G. S. Holroyd, J. Scarlett, and John Bell.

Viscount HALDANE: That is all the waters that run into the Hudson's Bay?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes.

Viscount HALDANE: Including the East Maine River, I suppose?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes. Would your Lordship care to cast your eye on the originals? (Same handed to the Lord Chancellor.) The position was that the Hudson's Bay Company had been contending (and said they were fortified by the opinion of these eminent persons) from 1814 onwards that that was the extent of their territory. In 1850 Sir John Jervis and Sir John Romilly, being asked by Lord Grey whether they agreed, said they entertained no doubt that that was the proper view.

Viscount HALDANE: No doubt about the powers claimed.

Did they say no doubt about the territory?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think so, my Lord. It was the question they were asked. "Mr. Hawes concluded by stating that your Lordship requested that we would take these papers into our early consideration and inform you whether we are of opinion that the rights claimed by the Company do properly belong to them." Then your Lordship sees that being before the House of Commons Committee, the House of Commons Committee says, in 1857, in paragraph 4, "Your Committee have also had the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown communicated to them on various points connected with the charter of the Hudson's Bay Company." Then they go on to speak of "a territory over which the Company now exercise rights"; and the map which your Lordship knows, of 1857, is the map ordered by the House of Commons to be printed, and its inscription shows that it is for the purpose of showing the territories which the Hudson's Bay Company claims. Without wishing to carry it too far, that does seem rather to show why there was not more controversy about it.

Viscount HALDANE: Never a word to say about the Labrador side of the height of land.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Not a bit.

Mr. MACMILLAN: My Lord, I have asked my learned friend to let me have these papers to-night (I have not seen them before), and he has been good enough to agree.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Certainly.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I did not trouble your Lordship with them, but we have got them all here. Here is Mr. Holroyd's opinion with his signature upon it, and this is the one from Mr. Scarlett. I think I have got them all. There are some rather interesting marks of a financial character upon each of them.

Viscount HALDANE: It would be interesting to know what they paid to Mr. Scarlett.

The Lord Chancellor.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I can only say (I regret it very much, it is a long time ago). I see here is one: "To peruse, Mr. Scarlett, four guineas."

Viscount HALDANE: Times have changed since then.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I do not know, my Lord. I think it would be easy to spend time in elaborating it, but all that I am concerned to say is that it does appear that really this Hudson's Bay area which was, not unnaturally, a thing about which there might have been some doubt, was most carefully considered both from the Hudson Bay Company's point of view and from the point of view of the Officers of the Crown; and the reason why, when you come to 1857, the House of Commons Committee produces this map, without question or doubt is because they have before them two sets of opinions which, taken together, may be thought to be conclusive.

26 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: It comes to this. The House of Commons in 1857 accepted the claim made by the Hudson's Bay Company in the letter of the 8th June, 1850.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes; and they say they did so having before them the opinion of the Law Officers.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: These claims were founded upon the fact that in the charter of the Hudson's Bay Company there is a grant of the rivers and the land upon the rivers.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Certainly, my Lord.

2 I 2

p. 230

The LORD CHANCELLOR: That is what carries you up to the height of land in that case.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think so too, my Lord.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: You have not quite the same words.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I have some words which I will call attention to now. Now I have finished in rather a fragmentary and disjointed form what I have to say on that branch. I have now two other matters upon which I want to address the Board, and then I have finished what I think is necessary. I think it would be possible, forming the best estimate I can, to reach the conclusion of these two matters to-day—I hope so—and if that is the case, if your Lordship will be good enough to give me a short time when you resume for the purpose of submitting some propositions which I have reduced to writing, I shall have finished all I think it my duty to lay before the Board at this stage.

The next compartment which I was going to deal with—and it is a very important one—is the compartment which examined what in fact was done and how the Lords of Trade acted in 1763, as the result of which you get the grant of all the coasts of Labrador and Newfoundland on the one hand and you get the carving out of this lozenge, the Province of Quebec, on the other. I am sure my learned friend will agree with me, because I know that he attaches importance to this too; the documents of 1763 dealing with this matter I think must be admitted by everybody to be of very considerable importance. They do not alter the construction of the grant, but they throw a very close light. The other point which will be found cropping up when we read these same documents—but it is a separate point—is this: it becomes material to consider what was the area which passed by the name of “the Indian country,” which was quite a well-known phrase. I will at once tell your Lordships why it is material. My submission is that when you examine the maps and the documents you will find that the Indian country really means an area, not perhaps very precisely defined, which was round the Great Lakes; that, undoubtedly it was, and it may be also that it included the area which is represented as yellow on my sketch map; that is to say, a certain amount of territory which may have lain beyond the northern boundary of the Quebec of 1763, and which was unorganised. Your Lordships have noticed at any rate on some of the maps there did appear to be such a strip left. My submission is that there is really no ground at all for suggesting that the Indian country, in respect of which some special provision is made, is an area which would invade mine. I quite agree that you cannot draw an exact line, but there is nothing whatever to show that that is what was in the minds of those who dealt with the matter. The importance of it is that there were two views as to what should be done in 1763. Whether His Majesty King George III expressed a personal preference I do not know, the documents speak as though he had been consulted, but his view at first was that it would be a good thing to throw the Indian country into this new Province of Quebec and make it all a sort of British Canada straight off. The other view was that it would be better to have the Province of Quebec a much more limited area, as your Lordships know it was in the end; that there should be an area in which these French Canadians would naturally be found, and that the Indian country which lay round the Great Lakes and the back of the old coast colony, should not be part of Quebec. There were various arguments of a political kind, pro and con, and ultimately the view prevailed that Quebec should be the smaller rather than the larger area, and the Indian country was therefore left outside Quebec.

26 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

p. 231

Viscount Haldane.

Viscount HALDANE: Did the alternative to that adopted involve the sheering of Hudson's Bay?

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: No; it did not touch Hudson's Bay. The thing to remember is that we must put ourselves back in the position, interest and knowledge of the middle of the 18th century in this matter. Of course, the Indian country was a vastly important region from the point of view of the colonists and planters of the middle of the 18th century. They were the people who lived at the back of places like Virginia, Florida, and New England.

Viscount HALDANE: At that time the relations with the Indians were very important.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Very.

Viscount HALDANE: If they went against the French they were an enormous accession to our strength; if they went against us it might have been very serious.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is exactly what I had in mind when I said we must put ourselves back in the atmosphere and the knowledge of the 18th century. The idea that this Indian country had to do with a few Esquimaux up here in Labrador is really quite unhistoric and fantastic. The thing they had in mind was the six nations of the Iroquois and they had treaties with these people, and some of the maps, for instance, the great map of 1755, indicate this Indian country. When George III, in 1763, and his advisers were debating whether he should throw the Indian country into Quebec or not, they were not talking about these frozen areas at all; they were talking about the immensely important areas which in those days were inhabited by Red Indians and are now inhabited by citizens of the United States. That being so, I am going to ask attention to a number of documents in the year 1763. I am afraid it will be necessary to turn to several. Would your Lordship first of all remind yourself, without troubling to turn back to it, that the Treaty of Paris itself became the definitive Treaty quite early in that year, on the 10th of February, and the consequence is that alterations are made in the instructions and commissions in respect of Newfoundland.

26 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

p. 232

Viscount HALDANE: Who was Governor of Canada then—Sir George Murray?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord; succeeded by Sir Guy Carleton very soon afterwards. Murray was the Brigadier, of course. If you take the second volume and turn to page 339, there is a letter from the Secretary of State, Lord Egremont (he was Secretary of State for the Southern Board and he had British North America under his supervision) and it is addressed to the Board of Trade from Whitehall on the 24th March, 1763: "My Lords, The King having judged it proper, that all the Coast of Labradore, from the Entrance of Hudson's Streights, to the River of St. John's, which discharges itself into the Sea, nearly opposite to the West End of the Island of Anticosti, including that Island, with any other small Islands on the said Coast of Labradore, and also the Islands of Madelaine in the Gulph of St. Lawrence, should be included in the Government of Newfoundland, I am commanded to signify His Majesty's Pleasure to your Lordships, that you do forthwith prepare, to be laid before the King for His Royal Approbation the Draught of a New Commission for Captain Thomas Graves, to be Governor of the Island of Newfoundland, and of the Coast of Labradore with the several Islands as above described: And I herewith return to your Lordships the draught of instructions," and so on. Your Lordships may be interested to notice that the 24th of March, 1763, the date of that document, is the day after that letter which you saw yesterday afternoon, the letter on page 4110 of Vol. VIII, which shows that Lord Egremont had asked for an interview with the Hudson Bay Governor in order to get more precise information as to how, as between Hudson's Bay and Labrador, the coast should be regarded as divided.

Viscount HALDANE: Was Lord Egremont at this time the Southern Secretary?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, it was the more important one, as your Lordship knows. So that having done that, as you will see in Vol. VIII, on page 4110, on the 23rd of March, you get this which is very close to the language of the Commission ultimately drawn up, and this is the first thing which happens as the result of the Treaty of Paris. That being so, Graves's Commission is drawn up and passed under the Great Seal. Graves's Commission was dated the 25th April, 1763, and that is to be found in the red volume at page 149.

26 Oct., 1926.

Viscount HALDANE: What sort of island is Anticosti? Is it an inhabited island?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord.
p. 233

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: And the Island of Madelaine I would not find on the map.

Sir JOHN SIMON: You will find it in my sketch map at the very bottom, uncoloured.

Viscount HALDANE: A good way from Anticosti, which is further up.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I do not think Anticosti had a large population.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I do not suppose much. I thought you were asking about now. May I ask if your Lordship is asking how it stood in 1763?

Viscount HALDANE: I would like to know now.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Perhaps I might tell your Lordship that a very well known chocolate manufacturer of France, Monsieur Meunier, acquired the Island of Anticosti.

Viscount HALDANE: Does he make chocolates there?

Sir JOHN SIMON: He acquired it and subsequently sold it again.

Viscount HALDANE: Madelaine you cannot tell us about?

Sir JOHN SIMON: I do not imagine at the time it was anything other than a fishing station.

Mr. MACMILLAN: It is a little fishing station now.

Viscount HALDANE: And probably was even less in 1763.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Quite; I am not suggesting that this area was a very populous place. Your Lordships have already had before you the Commission to Governor Graves at page 149 in Volume I. I am afraid we shall have to make a few references to it. Would it be convenient if I gave your Lordships the reference to the instructions? The instructions which accompanied that Commission (they are instructions under the Sign Manual) are rather more detailed instructions and are to be found in Volume II at page 391, and beyond any question those two documents are very important documents in the case.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Your Lordships have the red volume, page 149, and I must now ask attention in rather more detail to the language of the Commission to Thomas Graves, the date of which is 25th April, 1763. It begins by reciting the earlier and more restricted Commission which is described as appointing “you the said Thomas Graves to be our Governor and Commander in Chief in and over our Island of Newfoundland in America.” The words of the grant or Commission begin at line 23: “Now know you that Wee have revoked determined and made void and by these Presents Do revoke determine and make void the said Recited Letters Patent,” and then: “And Wee reposing especial Trust,” and so on, line 29, “Do constitute and appoint you the said Thomas Graves to be Our Governor and Commander in Chief in and over our said Island of Newfoundland”—now come the new words—“and all the Coasts of Labrador from the Entrance of Hudsons Streights to the River Saint Johns which discharges itself into the Sea,” and so on. I have already called attention to the fact that the language would fit the Hudson's Bay. Over the page on page 150 there is a reference at line 6 to the instructions “herewith given to you.” Then it goes on at line 9: “And Wee Do further give and grant unto you the said Thomas Graves full Power and Authority from time to time and at all times hereafter by yourself or by any other to be Authorized by you in that behalf to administer and give the Oaths”—these are really oaths to attest the loyalty of citizens; and then at the end of the parenthesis on line 17, “to all and Every such Person and Persons as you shall think fit who shall at any time Or times pass into our said Islands or shall be resident or abiding there or upon the Coast of Labrador.” It appears, whatever else it is, to be some indication that the coast of Labrador is a place where people may have been residing. Then the next passage is line 20, going straight on: “And Wee Do by these Presents give and grant unto you full Power and Authority to constitute and appoint Judges and in Cases requisite Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer for the hearing and the determining of all Criminal Causes Treason Excepted”; and then a few lines lower down, “which Justices of the Peace so Authorized may and shall hold and keep General Quarter Sessions of the Peace in such Places as you shall appoint according to the Custom of this part of Great Britain called England and to adjourn such Session from time to time and from place to place as shall be most convenient and necessary for the peace and welfare of Our Subjects Inhabiting there.” Then there is a proviso: “Provided neither you nor they do any thing by virtue of this Commission or the Powers hereby granted contrary or oppugnant to the Act and Eleventh years of the Reign of King William the Third nor any way obstruct the powers thereby given and granted to the Admirals of Harbours or Captains of Our Ships of War or any other Matter or Thing either prescribed by the said Act.” I will call attention to the statute of William III in a moment. It is really a matter which Lord Haldane has once or twice referred to. The scheme was a very odd one. Under the Statute of William III the primary object undoubtedly of the British regime in Newfoundland was in order to encourage the fishery, and by the Statute of William III it was provided that the captain of the first fishing vessel which arrived at any given port or harbour should be the first admiral; that the captain of the second vessel which arrived should be the second admiral, and so on; and that is the meaning of the reference here to “not exercising your powers so as to obstruct the powers granted by the Statute of William III to the admirals of harbours.” I do not think the rest of that page matters, but will your Lordship take the three last words on page 150 and read on: “And all such Justices of the Peace and their Inferior Officers and Ministers whom you or they shall appoint amongst the Planters or Inhabitants Resident and abiding there are strictly required,” to do this, that, or the other.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: If you look back, “there” takes you back to line 28 of the previous page, “the said Island and Coasts aforesaid”; “keeping the Peace and Quiet of the said Island and Coasts aforesaid.”

26 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Whether “coasts” is to be interpreted as implying a very narrow margin or a wide margin, there is no doubt these powers are common both to the Island and the Coast. On page 151 I think I can safely ask your Lordships to go down to the middle of the page, line 20, “which said Oaths and Declaration you shall administer and give or cause the same to be administered and given to all and every the Person and Persons who ought to take the same according to the Laws and Customs of this Kingdom And Wee Do hereby give and grant unto You the said Thomas Graves full power to Erect appoint and set apart one or more convenient Court House or Court Houses for the more orderly meeting of such Justices of the Peace in Order to hold such their Quarter or other Sessions with a convenient Prison adjoining thereto for the keeping of such Offenders.” And the new clause begins at line 30, on page 151: “And Wee Do hereby require and command all Officers Civil and Military and all other Inhabitants of our said Islands and the Coasts and Territories of Labrador and Islands adjacent thereto or dependent thereupon within the Limits aforesaid to be obedient aiding and assisting unto you in the Execution of this Our Commission and of the Powers and Authorities herein contained and in Case of your Death”—of course, there being no means of immediate communication, you had

p. 236

Viscount Haldane.

to provide for it—“in Case of your Death Our Will and Pleasure is that the Person upon whom the Command of Our Ships under your Command shall devolve do take upon him the Administration of the Government of Our said Islands and Territories as aforesaid.” It is enough to submit that whatever might have been the primary object of this extended grant—and I concede from beginning to end that its object was official; there is not the least doubt about it—it is to be observed that the language throughout is language which treats the new area and the island of Newfoundland on exactly the same terms, the truth of the matter being, of course, that at this time the interior of Newfoundland was as worthless, and almost as little known, as was my green area on the coast of Labrador. In both cases the practical object to be served was a quite limited and maritime object; but that is not the question. The question is whether or not the language used in the extended Commission is apt to describe and include as a matter of application, the coast, in the sense which I suggest.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: What does the phrase “adjacent thereto” govern? Does it govern “territories” as well as “islands,” or does it govern only “islands”? It might be either.

Viscount FINLAY: Is that in line 32?

Viscount HALDANE: Yes.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: I think that carries you back to the very beginning, does it not?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord. I think your Lordship is right. “Adjacent thereto” I do not doubt does carry one back to the first page, page 149, at line 34, to the words “other small Islands on the said Coast of Labrador.” It was known, of course, to be a coast.

26 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: Does “adjacent” cover “territories” as well as “islands”? It might be either.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, I see the point.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: I think it refers to both.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I rather think so, my Lord, and I think so because, following the words “adjacent thereto” is “dependant thereupon.” This document again and again describes the new area, the Labrador area, as being a dependency of Newfoundland.

Viscount HALDANE: Yes, the coasts.
p. 237

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, whatever that may be supposed to cover.

Then the new paragraph on page 151 at the bottom is important. That says: "And Wee do hereby declare Ordain and appoint that you the said Thomas Graves shall and may hold Execute and Enjoy the Place of our Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over Our said Island of Newfoundland and all the Coast of Labrador"—now your Lordships will observe the language—"from the Entrance to Hudson's Streights"—which is the same language as was to be found in the Hudson's Bay Charter, so that where the one ends the other begins—"to the River Saint Johns."

Viscount HALDANE: His jurisdiction is not only the island, but the whole island and the territories on the coast.

Sir JOHN SIMON: There is no doubt about that, my Lord. Your Lordship appreciates, as I think I mentioned in the opening sentences which I addressed to this Court some days ago now, I am afraid, that Labrador is a peninsula which is at least five times as big as the thing which I am talking about. There is no doubt at all that the Hudson's Bay Company already had a title to one portion of the coast of Labrador, namely, a portion of it which abuts on to Hudson's Bay. You can go on either side, of course.

Viscount HALDANE: That is East of Cape Chidley?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord; and in the same way, of course, the coast of Labrador, if you regard yourself as passing up the Gulf of St. Lawrence, would not stop at the River St. Johns; it would go on further into the Gulf. But you have here a cutting out, from Labrador as a whole, of a portion. The whole question is: how much?

Now, my Lords, that being the nature of the grant—and I will not ask leave to spend time in discussing it, because your Lordships see the nature of it—you will find that a very important document accompanying it was the instructions; and that document is to be found in Volume II at page 391. I do not think that these instructions are important in great detail, partly because they contain comparatively little new matter, but they do contain some new matter. You will remember that just before your Lordships rose at the short adjournment, we were reading the document addressed to the Lords of Trade, in which they said that they had amended the instructions in view of the extended area now to be governed from Newfoundland.

The instructions on page 391 are passed under the Royal Sign Manual and Signet, as distinguished from a Commission, which passes under the Great Seal, and they are a document which, as your Lordships know, accompanies the Commission of a Governor to this day; there are always the two things. I suppose that if one spoke in the language of constitutional law, one would say that the authority of the Governor, vis-a-vis other subjects of the Crown, or the world at large, is to be found in his Commission. The instructions, constitutionally, perform a slightly different function: they indicate the methods by which, or the qualifications subject to which, the Crown looks to its servant to discharge his duty. Having begun again by calling them “Instructions to Our Trusty and Well Beloved Thomas Graves Esquire Our Governor and Commander in-Chief in and Over our Island of Newfoundland in America, and all the Coast of Labradore,” and so on, the document continues, at line 22 on page 391: “With these our Instructions you will receive Our Commission.” Now I will pick out, if I may, two or three things which seem to me to be material; there are not many of them. It would take a long time to read them all, because there are seventy or eighty paragraphs.

Sir John Simon.

p. 238

On the next page, page 392, there are cited certain passages from the Treaty of Utrecht, which was, historically, of course, the cause of the modifications in all these documents; and the passages recited dealt with a very complicated manner. I will try to state all that it is necessary to remember quite frankly, if your Lordships will trust me so far. The Treaty of Utrecht had this effect, that the French, although of course their empire ceased East of the Mississippi, none the less did retain a certain fishing facility on a portion of the coasts of the Island of Newfoundland. It was the North West Coast, the part which is more or less opposite Belle Isle. There is that recital, that on the coast of the Island, the French were, under the Treaty of Utrecht, to have certain fishing facilities; they were to be entitled to land and dry their fish, but they were not to have that right—if indeed they ever had had it—on the mainland, or at any rate not on the part of the mainland that we are concerned with here. That is recited, and it is one of the reasons why these Instructions take the form that they do take.

Then would your Lordships kindly remind yourselves of paragraph 7 on page 393, to which I had already called your attention, which says: “It is Our further Will and Pleasure that you do, from time to time, as the nature of the Service will allow, visit all the Coasts and Harbours of the said Islands and Territories under your Government, in order to inspect and examine the State and Condition of the Fisheries, which are or may be carried on upon the said Coasts and Islands.”

I quite understand that it may be said, “You see then how very narrow and how truly maritime is the use of the word ‘coasts’”; but, of course, the word “coasts” and the word “islands” go together in in this connection.

Then it goes on: “You shall also use your best endeavours to procure accurate Draughts or Maps of the several Harbours, Bays and Coasts of Newfoundland, and the other Islands and Territories”—“Territories” is a strong word there, because the territories are not on the islands, but they are elsewhere—“under your Government, and you are more particularly to direct the Officer of an Vessel under your Command which may be appointed to visit that part of the Coast of Labradore which lyes between Hudson's Streights and the Streights of Belleisle, to search and explore the great Inlet commonly known by the name of Davis's Inlet, in order to discover, whether the same has or has not any passage to Hudson's Bay, or any other inclosed Sea"—I called attention to some maps, and if your Lordships are disposed to make any sort of note in the margin of maps which should be looked at at some stage, they are the inset to Mitchell's Map

The LORD CHANCELLOR: That is Map No. 9, is it not?

Sir JOHN SIMON: It is Map No. 11 in the Canadian Atlas, my Lord, and there is a little inset which shows this part. Then there is Map No. 9 in the Newfoundland Atlas, which is Senex, and also Map No. 11, which is Bellin. Those are very good instances to show that at this time it was not known. Those maps all illustrate that point, and they do show, as I said before, that whatever else was intended, it was certainly intended that under the authority of the Governor of Newfoundland there should be a penetration through this opening. Of course, it may be said that it still would be done on shipboard, but it was a thing which was known to go at least thirty leagues inland. As a matter of fact, Hamilton Inlet runs up something like 120 or 130 miles.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: Is Hamilton Inlet what is called here the Great Inlet?

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes, my Lord, it really means that. Davis's Inlet, or Davis Bay, is on the map to-day called Hamilton Inlet; but there had been confusion, and what was really referred to by these early explorers as Davis Bay was undoubtedly Hamilton Inlet.

Then the next one is paragraph 8, on page 393, which says: "You are also to enquire and report to Us, by Our Commissioners for Trade & Plantations, whether any or what further Establishment may be necessary to be made, or Forts erected in any part of Newfoundland, or the other Islands or Territories under your Government, either for the Protection of the Fishery, the Security of the Country"—so that it is not limited to fishery, although, of course, that was primary—"or the establishing and carrying on a Commerce with the Indians residing in or resorting to the said Islands, or inhabiting the Coast of Labradore."

26 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Then on the next page, page 394, will your Lordships kindly note incidentally—I will not develop it myself, but I think my learned friend Mr. Barrington Ward may have something to say on the fishery aspect of the matter—that there is a plain indication in paragraph 10 that apart altogether from the cod fishery, other fisheries are important; for instance, it says:

“Whale and Sea Cow fishery may be carried on in the Gulph of St. Lawrence and upon the Labradore Coast.” We shall come across the salmon in a moment.

Then the expression “Islands and Territories” occurs again in paragraph 12, and it occurs again at the bottom of page 395, in the last line of that page, where it says: “If anything shall happen which may be of advantage or Security to Our Said Islands and Territories.”

p. 240

In one of the documents there is an interesting reference to the fact that the Lord Bishop of London had specially addressed the Sovereign and had stated that due provision should be made for the spiritual needs of the population.

Then on page 396 will your Lordships first of all look at clause No. 25, which says: “Whether any person, at his departure out of the said Country, or at any other time, do destroy, deface or do any detriment to the Stages, Cookrooms, Flakes, &c., or to the materials thereunto belonging, which had been possessed by himself or others, and whether they repair the defects, that may be in their Stages or other Conveniences, by Timber fetched out of the Woods, and not by committing any manner of Spoil or Waste upon the Stages already built.” There is no doubt at all that it was intended that this drying operation should be carried out with the use of timber from further back. In the same way he was to ask, in paragraph 33, about rinding of the trees and setting fire to the woods.

Then on page 399 there is a set of interrogatories of the most elaborate kind, which showed that the Governors of Newfoundland would be kept busy, and indeed they were. Governor Palliser sent the most elaborate answers. Just look at the sort of things that were wanted to be known in reference to the islands and territories. It begins about ships and boats, but will your Lordships just look at line 17, where it says: “The Value of Seal Oil and of Furs taken by the Inhabitants last Winter?” and in the same way at line 23: “The number of Inhabitants, and how many have been born or have died there, since the departure of the last year's Convoy”; and at paragraph 41: “In what manner the Inhabitants are subsisted, what Land is there improved? Whether the Country produces such Provisions as they want, and whether they have any number of Cows, Sheep and Swine, or whether they receive any Provisions from Our Plantations in America, of what sorts or kind, and the quantities thereof? Whether the said Inhabitants are wholly supplied with Sail Cloth, Nets and Tackle for their Fishery, and with Woollen, Linen, Leather and other Manufactures for their use and wear from this Kingdom,” and so forth.

Of course, the whole thing reflects what is to be found in a sentence in one of the speeches of the great Lord Chatham some twenty years afterwards, that the view taken of plantations and establishments such as these was that they were a double blessing to the mother country: in the first place they provided a market where it was possible to sell wool, linen, leather and other manufactures, and in the second place they provided things like fish and other things which were needed in the home market. Lord Chatham had a famous sentence upon the double value of these lands.

26 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

In the same way. on page 400, in paragraph 47, you get this: “Whether any Trade is carried on for Beaver and other Furs by the Inhabitants, or by any other who remain in the Country?” and in paragraph 48: “Whether the Houses, Buildings and Inclosures of the Inhabitants are at such distance from the water side as not to hinder or obstruct the Fishermen in making their Flakes, or in drying and curing their Fish?”

Now, my Lords, I do not propose to delay you any longer about that. I make a submission about it which I hope will be thought to be reasonable.

Viscount FINLAY: What are “flakes”? Are they nets?

Sir JOHN SIMON: They built up stages or platforms upon which or from which they dried the fish—they laid the fish out.

Mr. MACMILLAN: They cleaned and stripped and laid them out.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes; it was a sort of table; those were the flakes; and it was that kind of thing at the margin of the sea which the French were anxious to preserve so far as the island of Newfoundland is concerned.

Now my submission about it, to put it once and for all, upon my instructions, is this: I am not in the least disputing that the purpose and motive and governing consideration in all this business was the use of the margin of the sea in connection with fishing of different kinds. But with great respect, that is not the real question. The question is whether or not, when you get annexed to the island of Newfoundland—the whole island, most of the interior of which was quite unknown—an area described in this way, that does not give you what I will show your Lordships is called a natural boundary, and whether that natural boundary is not the height of the land.

Then, next to that, there comes another document on page 406, which is the Admiralty Instructions to Captain Thomas Graves, and the date of that, as your Lordships will see, is the 2nd May, 1763. May I make one observation about Admiralty Instructions, which I think may perhaps make their relation to the other documents a little clearer. In the case of Newfoundland, this rather curious practice was followed, that the man who was appointed Governor and Commander in Chief of the area—whether it was Newfoundland, or whether it was Newfoundland and the Coast of Labrador—was also,

26 Oct., 1926.
Sir John Simon.

by an independent instrument, given the command of the Fleet, the King's ships on the Newfoundland Station; and what is very significant is that even after the Coast of Labrador was transferred to Quebec in the year 1774, so that the territorial jurisdiction would pass altogether from the Governor of Newfoundland, Admiralty Instructions to the Governor of Newfoundland (who from 1774 had nothing but Newfoundland to look after) still continued for the purposes of surveying and controlling affairs on the Labrador Coast.

I rely upon that fact, because it seems to me to show that, as a matter of fact, there were two jurisdictions, not coincident. The jurisdiction which you may call the purely Admiralty jurisdiction is a thing that goes on even after the Coasts of Labrador had been trans—ferred to the Governor of Quebec; and it is therefore very difficult to suppose that the jurisdiction which you may call the territorial jurisdiction is a jurisdiction which is the same thing as the Admiralty surveillance. It is a curious fact that at the very time when Governor Sir Guy Carleton, who was the Governor of the extended area of the Province of Quebec is in express terms given jurisdiction over the coasts of Labrador by transfer from Newfoundland—at that very time the Admiralty instructions to the Governor of Newfoundland that he is to keep the fleet protecting the fishing, go on just the same.

p. 242

Viscount HALDANE: I suppose it was Imperial defence.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Of course, it was. I am only saying, my Lord, it is difficult to think that the two conceptions are not different, one the conception of the administration of the territory, which is called the coast of Labrador, and the other the Admiralty jurisdiction which your Lordship says was defence.

I do not think if that is clearly understood it is necessary to read much. You will notice at the bottom of page 406, in the first paragraph, you get: "And whereas you have received His Majesty's Commission appointing you Governor and Commander in Chief in and over the Island of Newfoundland, the Coast of Labrador front the entrance of Hudson's Streights to the River St. Johns"—then on the top of the page: "Taking care to prevent all illegal trade, during your continuing on that coast." Then in 2; "You are agreeable to an Act of Parliament of the 10th and 11th years of King William the Third," and 4: "And whereas the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations have represented to us, that it is very prejudicial to this Kingdom, that the fishing ships do not bring home from Newfoundland the complement of men they carry out, many of them being enticed away to New England and others left in the country." I cannot help thinking the country there means the Newfoundland area—"for which reason they have desired We should give you

26 Oct., 1926.
Sir John Simon.

directions to signify to the Masters of all British ships at Newfoundland that they take care to bring home the number of men they carry out.” Then 5 deals with foreign ships who are claiming to fish, directing them to take care that foreign ships do not do it except within their rights under the Treaty of Utrecht. Then on page 408 I think your Lordships will find paragraph 7 and on page 409 you will find paragraph 9 to be of some little use; 7 is: “And you are to exert your best endeavours to encourage and support the Whale Fishery, in the Straits of Belleisle and more particularly the Fishery in York Harbour and on the other parts of the Coasts of Labrador and to hinder any trade and intercourse being carried on by any persons whatever other than the Subjects of Great Britain with the inhabitants of that country, which of right belongs solely to His Majesty.” Evidently “that country which belongs solely to His Majesty” is what I may call a territory: “And you are likewise to protect the salmon and seal fishery along the Coasts, and likewise the fisheries carried on by His Majesty's subjects in the Gulph of St. Lawrence, near the Islands of Madelaine &c.”

p. 243

Viscount Haldane.

That answers Lord Haldane's question, the islands of Madelaine were really a fishing ground—“and to settle and guard the Fishery not only at Placentia and Saint Johns, but as far to the northward upon the coasts of Newfoundland, and upon those of the Continent of Labrador”—the expression “Continent” is used several times—“as His Majesty's Subjects shall be employed in catching and drying fish, taking care to prevent the Subjects of France from giving them any disturbance.” Then in paragraph 9: “And in Order that this service may be more effectually performed We have directed the Commanders of the four ships and sloops named in the margin at the beginning of the Instructions.” If your Lordship cares to turn back and look in the margin you will see the names of the vessels were the Pearl, the Tweed, the Terpsichore, the Lark, and one or two others—“carefully to visit the several Harbours, Coasts, and Fishing Grounds, as well those upon the coasts of Newfoundland as those upon the Coasts of Labrador, and to the Northward, with directions to them to prevent the French from drying their Fish.” Then it goes on to talk about making charts.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE: You observe he is not to go beyond the tidal estuary for this purpose. He was not there as a ruler to do what he thinks, but he was to go there. It all points to Imperial defence.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think it does. I do not quite catch the place.

Viscount HALDANE: 8.

Sir JOHN SIMON: “But not to remain there beyond the time necessary for this purpose.” I think that means the French fishermen who have got certain rights reserved to them by the Treaty of Utrecht, who are therefore entitled to make a temporary use of the shore, are not to be allowed to stay there longer than is necessary for such user. May I just tell my Lord Haldane, because I think he will see I am conceding what is in his mind, there is no doubt at all these Admiralty Instructions of which we speak are really mere instructions for the operation of the Fleet. There is not the slightest doubt about it, and in this capacity as in those days it was called Commander in Chief of the Fleet—you might think that was a military title, but it really was a naval title—on the Newfoundland station there can be no doubt whatever in that character these operations were purely from the sea, purely a matter of supervision and regulation and the like. My point, my Lord Haldane, is, those are Admiralty Instructions. Side by side with that, and presumably different from that, is a Commission which does not come to him in his character as Commander in Chief of the Fleet on the Newfoundland station, but on the contrary comes to him in his capacity as Governor of an area; and the most striking thing is, I am sure your Lordships will think it has some significance, I repeat myself, that when you get the transfer of what I may call Newfoundland and Labrador from the Governor of Newfoundland to the Governor of Quebec, you will find the Governor of Quebec gets everything which Graves had in his character as Governor of Labrador, but the Governor of Newfoundland goes on in his character of Commander in Chief of the Newfoundland Fleet supervising the coast just as before.

Viscount HALDANE: You would expect that.

Sir JOHN SIMON: I think you would. It is a most practical arrangement, but it does appear rather to suggest there really was something over and above the care and surveillance of the fishing which was the subject of transfer to Governor Carleton. Now comes the document which I think is the one which perhaps is the most important document for the purposes of arriving at the true construction of the actual Commissions and Instructions immediately concerned. It is the report made by the Lords of Trade on the 8th of June, 1763, to the Secretary of State for the Southern Department recommending what should be done in the rest of the area, which as I have said was now consolidated by the victory of our Arms and by the withdrawal of the French to the west of the Mississippi. They have dealt with the Newfoundland area and the coast of Labrador. Now comes what was, of course, a far more important question as regards population and as regards organised trade than anything in these high latitudes could be. The point was: the French have ceded to us French Canada; add that to whatever British interests already exist in this part of the world; now how are we going to organise and administer this consolidated Empire? If your Lordships will now turn to Volume III, page 903, you will find a document of which a great many passages are of the greatest importance. It is a rather long document, but there is a great deal more in it when one reads it carefully than can be safely extracted in one or two short passages. It is the Report of the Lords of Trade, dated the 8th June, 1763, to the Earl of Egremont at the Foreign Office, as to what they suggest should be done. You will find in this some very striking indications, not only with reference to the immediate area, but in reference to adjoining areas, in support of the proposition that at this time, 1763, the area from the margin of the sea up to the height of land was properly regarded as coast for these purposes. There are very striking examples quite elsewhere on the map. "May it please your Majesty,— Having received Your Majesty's Commands, signified to Us by a Letter from the Earl of Egremont, dated May 5th, 1763, to take into Consideration, without loss of Time, those Articles of the late Definitive Treaty of Peace, which relate to the Cessions made by France and Spain, and to report Our Opinion by what Regulations the most extensive Advantages may be derived from them, and those Advantages rendered most permanent and secure to your Majesty's trading Subjects; And Your Majesty having further directed Us with particularly as to Canada and Newfoundland, after furnishing every Information in our power relating to the Fishery, We should consider the Encroachments made by the French in this Article contrary to the stipulations in the Treaty of Utrecht, and give our Opinion by what Means such Encroachments may be prevented in future, and any inconvenience which may arise from the Vicinity of St. Pierre and Micquelon, may be most effectually guarded against. That in respect to Florida, We should report upon it's Produce, the situation of it's Harbours, and Rivers, with the benefits which may arise from the free navigation of the River Mississippi,—That in regard to the Islands conquered in the West Indies, and Senegal on the Coast of Africa, We should state the means which appear to us most effectual for securing and improving the Commercial Advantages which may be derived from them:—But that upon the whole, it was Your Majesty's Pleasure (as some time would be required to examine and deliberate on the several Points referred to Us) that we should as soon as possible, report to Your Majesty Our Opinions on such of them as appear to Us most pressing, in order that Directions may be given without less of time; In Obedience to Your Majesty's Commands, We have taken the several points referred to us into our most serious Consideration, and are of Opinion that we shall best comply with Your Majesty's Intention and Directions by stating particularly the Advantages which severally result to Your Majesty' Colonies and the Commerce of your Subjects by the Cessions stipulated in the late Treaty, and then submitting Our Humble Opinion to your Majesty of the Means, which appear to us immediately necessary to be put in Execution for securing and improving those Advantages.” Then I can leave out the next paragraph. “The most obvious Advantages arising from the Cessions made by the Definitive Treaty are, The exclusive Fishery of the River St. Laurence”—we must distinguish here between the River St. Laurence and the Gulf of St. Laurence, because they do constantly—“on all the Coasts in the Gulph of St. Laurence and all the Islands in that Gulph. From all these Fisheries your Majesty's Subjects were hitherto entirely excluded; partly by the express Stipulations of the Treaty of Utrecht by which Cape Breton, St. Johns and the other Islands in the Gulph were dismember'd from Nova Scotia and ceded to France, partly by the Claim immediately set up by France to the whole Southern Shore of the Gulph.” That is an echo of the famous controversy which used to be called the Southern Shore controversy. “In consequence of this Claim,” and so forth. It was not till recently it could be enjoyed. Then about Line 10: “We have reason to conclude from the Spirit and Industry which Your Majesty's Subjects have shewn ever since the Reduction of Louisbourg that it will become equally valuable in their Hands, especially when We consider that, the Fishery of the River St. Laurence consisting of Whales, Seals, Sea-Cows, &ca has been in the short period since the taking of Quebec, carried to a much greater Extent by Your Majesty's Subjects, than ever it was by the French, during their possession of Canada.” Then they go on to explain how things have improved owing to the withdrawal of the French. Then at Line 29: “And by their possession of the whole Coast of Labrador.” May I, with great respect, invite your attention to this. If you want to see what the “Coast of Labrador” meant in 1763, it is not very immaterial to see how the Lords of Trade talk about it. “And by their Possession of the whole Coast of Labrador, they not only carried on an extensive trade with the Exquimeaux Indians in Oyl, Furs, &ca (in which they allowed Your Majesty's Subjects no Share) but by the vicinity of the Eastern Part of that Coast, to that part of Newfoundland, (where a permissive right of drying their fish, only during the Fishery Season, was granted by the Treaty of Utrecht) They assumed in some Measure an Exclusive Right to the Navigation in the Streights of Bellisle. These several Encroachments, will, We apprehend, entirely cease, on the one hand, by the compleat Settlement of Your Majesty's Colony of Nova Scotia, according to its true and ancient Boundaries, and on the other by the Annexation of the Labrador Coast to the Government of Newfoundland.” “Annexation” you notice it says, it is a definite transfer of definite territory—annexation—“and by the faithful execution of those Instructions, which Your Majesty has has been pleased to give to Your Governor of that Island.” They say the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon will be a certain difficulty, but they can get over it. I think your Lordships can now pass on to the middle of page 906. This again is an extremely important passage, because it refers to Hudson's Bay. “The next obvious benefit acquired by the Cessions made to Your Majesty is the Fur and Skin Trade of all the Indians in North America. The first of these Articles before the present Cession was enjoyed by the French almost entirely: The only Part left in the Hands of Your Majesty's Subjects, being that carried on by the Exclusive Company of Hudson's Bay, and a very inconsiderable quantity through the Province of New York. This Trade was acquired by virtue of the Possession which they had taken”—that means which the French had taken—“(contrary to the Stipulations of the Treaty of Utrecht).” Now, my Lord—“of all the Lakes in North America, communicating with the River St. Laurence, tho' the circumjacent Territory avowedly belonged to the Six Nations of Indians, acknowledged by the French to be Your Majesty's Subjects in that Treaty, and by virtue of the Claim which they afterwards set up and were suffered to maintain for a long time of forcibly excluding Your Majesty's Subjects from any Navigation in those Lakes.”

Now, my Lords, it is a little difficult perhaps for me to make plain to your Lordships why this passage is so important for me, you will find it in a moment; it is as a matter of fact one of the many indications that the area which passed by the name of Indian Country, which again and again will appear in a moment, as a matter of fact, is an area which is circumjacent territory to these great Lakes. I am going to show your Lordships in a moment a contemporary map which describes this very area in the plainest possible terms as the area so to be attributed. “But this trade which the French with the utmost industry had carried to the greatest extent, by means of numerous well chosen Posts and Forts sufficient as well as to overawe as to supply all the Indians upon that immense Continent, is now fallen intirely and exclusively into the hands of Your Majesty's Subjects and may be secured and communicated to all Your Majesty's Colonies according to the industry of each, by means of these Posts and Forts with proper Regulations for the Trade with the Indians, under the Protection of such a Military Force as may preserve their tranquility, not only against Indian Incursions but be ready for their Defence against any European attack.” That was fur. Then there is an observation about skins which I do not think matters. Then on page 907, at line 14, the new paragraph: “Another advantage attending the late Treaty”—there is a rather interesting use of the word coast coming now: “is the secure settling of the whole Coast of North America, as it's produce may invite, or Convenience for Settlement may offer, from the Mouth of the Mississippi to the Boundaries of the Hudson's Bay Settlements, with the whole variety of produce which is capable of being raised in that immense Tract of Sea Coast, either by the industry of Emigrants from Europe, or from the overflowing of Your Majesty's ancient Colonies.” May I pause a moment. That phrase “Your Majesty's ancient Colonies” had a perfectly definite connotation at the time, it meant a series of Colonies such as Virginia, New England, Maryland—a whole series—which ran down and were bordered on the one side by the Atlantic and on the other side by the Alleghanys, the continuation of that mountain chain. This expression “The ancient Colonies” occurs again and again, as referring to that very broad strip of territory, and what will be very significant is (when we look at some documents in a moment) as a matter of fact these very same ancient colonies are to be found contemporaneously described as the coast of America, between certain points, and they ran back to the height of land as I will satisfy your Lordships. But see how it goes on. They say it will be a great advantage to have the whole Coast of North America because he says “Your Majesty's Ancient Colonies appeared to be over stock'd with inhabitants, occasioned partly from an extremely increasing Population in some of those Colonies, whose Boundaries had become too narrow for their Numbers”; one asks oneself how far back did the boundaries go. You will see in a moment. “But chiefly by the Monopoly of Lands in the Hands of Land Jobbers from the extravagant and injudicious Grants made by some of Your Majesty's Governors, whereby a great many of your Majesty's industrious Subjects were either forced into Manufactures,” which at that period were not looked upon with favour in the Home Country, not being a use which the Home Government favoured, like at a later stage one has heard of a Schedule of Prohibited Industries for Australia; “being excluded from planting by the high Price of Land (A Situation which they otherwise would have preferr'd) or forced to”—forced to do what?—“emigrate to the other Side of the Mountains.” I can satisfy your Lordships if you will examine this document with the contemporaneous map. that there cannot be the least doubt that these ancient Colonies, which are sometimes described as “The Coast” as between one point and another, run back to the height of land as it was conceived, and if you went over the mountain top into the interior, you were emigrating outside of the Colony into the other side of the mountains; “where they were exposed to the Irruptions of the Indians as well as the Hostilities of the French. And though, on the one Hand, Your Majesty's Province of Nova Scotia according to its true and just Boundaries, and on the other, that of Georgia, would have contained many more of Your Majesty's Subjects than were in this disagreeable Situation, and more advantageously for the Trade and Interest of Your Kingdoms, Yet the Hostilities which the French contrived to excite at first, by the Indians in their Alliance, and at last by regular Troops in Nova Scotia, and a Dread of the like Calamaties on the Side of Georgia from the Indians and Spaniards, have hitherto prevented the salutary progress of these new Settlements, and the happy Consequences which otherwise might have been expected from them. We have already mentioned the great Scope and Room which there is for beneficial Settlements, in the Article of Fishery in Nova Scotia. Another great Advantage however, of the late Treaty, producing Strength to Your Kingdom and Riches to Your Subjects, is the future Supply which the new Acquisitions will afford of Naval Stores.” We need not trouble, I think, about that. Then on the next page they deal with the Province of Georgia, with sugar, coffee and cotton, and there is a rather interesting description of Senegal, though, of course, it is purely by analogy. On page 908, at line 29: “The last advantageous Consequence arising from the Cessions which We shall now lay before Your Majesty is that of securing the whole Gum Trade on the Coast of Africa from a Monopoly in the Hands of the French by means of the River Senegal as well as the Acquisition of a considerable Share.” Now the have pointed out the advantages; then they are going to suggest what is to be done; and pages 909, 910 and 911, appear to me to be on the whole the three most important pages in these many Volumes for the purpose of a contemporary exposition. “Having thus stated the most obvious advantages resulting from the Cession made to Your Majesty by the late definitive Treaty, We submit to Your Majesty, as, “Our humble Opinion, that they can only be secured and improved by an immediate Establishment of regular Governments, in all such Places, where planting and Settlement, as well as Trade and Commerce are the immediate Objects. For in order to invite new Settlers to risque their persons and Property in taking up new Lands, as well as to secure the old Inhabitants in the Enjoyment of those Rights and Priviledges reserved to them by the Treaty, such regular Government appears, both from Reason and Experience, of absolute Necessity. And it seems likewise necessary for the same reasons, as well as to secure Your Majesty's Sovereignty and the Publick Tranquility, that a large Military force should be kept up in each Government, 'till by the increase of Inhabitants, each Colony shall be enabled to maintain their own Governments by their own internal Force. But, as no such regular civil Government is either necessary or indeed can be established, where no perpetual Residence or planting is intended ; It will there be sufficient to provide for the free Trade of all Your Majesty's Subjects under such Regulations, and such Administration of Justice as is best suited to that End. Such We apprehend to be the case of Newfoundland, where a temporary Fishery is the only Object, and this We suppose has been the reason, which induced Your Majesty to annex the Coast of Labrador ”—in a moment we shall see what that is likely to mean—“ to that Government ; Such is the ease of Senegal and the Principle upon which we suppose Your Majesty thought proper to put that River and Country under the Administration of the African Committee. And such we apprehend ”—this passage has some importance—“ will be the Case of that Territory in North America which in Your Majesty's Justice and Humanity as well as sound Policy is proposed to be left, under Your Majesty's immediate Protection, to the Indian tribes for their hunting Grounds.” Now, my Lords, it is suggested in the Case against me that my green area is larger than it ought to be because one ought to assume that a considerable portion of it is thus carved out for Indian hunting grounds. My Case is that that is completely to misunderstand both the geography and the history of the period, and that the Indian Country and the Indian hunting grounds will be found in the heart of the Continent of North America, and I think I can establish that. “ where no Settlement by planting is intended, immediately at least, to be attempted ” and so on. Now, at the new paragraph in the middle of page 909 “ We shall defer at present entering into any particulars, as to the number of Troops which it may be necessary to maintain for this purpose. The Number and Situation of the Posts and Forts, and the Regulations proper to be established for a free Trade from all Your Majesty's Colonies into the Indian Country ; ‘ till by further Information from Your Majesty's Commander in Chief of America, and from Your Majesty's Agents for Indian Affairs, We shall be enabled to make a more full and particular Report upon so interesting and important a Subject.” Now the next sentence : “ And We apprehend that no such Delay can be attended with any material Inconvenience, since, if Your Majesty shall be pleased to adopt the general proposition of leaving a large Tract of Country ”—now my Lords—“ round the great Lakes.” If that is a true description, it completely knocks out the idea that my green area is what is being talked about. “ Round the great Lakes, as an Indian Country,” which is a phrase I shall show your Lordships was used again and again with a particular connotation, “ open to Trade, but not to Grants and Settlements, the Limits of such Territory ”—now this is a most striking passage—“ the limits of such Territory will be sufficiently ascertained by the Bounds to be given to the Governors of Canada and Florida on the North and South, and the Mississippi on the West ; and by the strict directions to be given to Your Majesty's several Governors of Your ancient Colonies for preventing their making any new Grants of Lands beyond certain fixed Limits to be laid down in the Instructions for that purpose. And We apprehend that in the mean time the Security of this Trade will be sufficiently provided for by the Forts already erected, and such Garrisons as Your Commander in

p. 250

Chief, may, at his Discretion, think proper to keep in them.” Then, over the page I do not think I need read the first two paragraphs. Now I come to line 11 on page 910. “ Canada as possessed and claimed by the French consisted of an immense tract of Country including as well the whole Lands to the Westward indefinitely which was the Subject of their Indian Trade ”—it is not in this green area at all, it is hundreds, perhaps thousands, of miles away—“ which was the Subject of their Indian Trade, as all that Country from the Southern Bank of the Rivet St. Lawrence where they carried on their encroachments. It is needless to state with any degree of precision the Bounds and Limits of this extensive Country ”—that means the Indian Country—“ for We should humbly propose to your Majesty that the new Government of Canada should be restricted, so as to leave on one hand, all the Lands lying about the great Lakes and beyond the Sources of the Rivers which fall into the River St. Lawrence from the North ”—you observe not “ the Gulf of St. Lawrence,” but “ The River St. Lawrence ”—“ to be thrown into the Indian country, and on the other hand, all the Lands from Cape Roziere to Lake Champlain, along the Heights where the Sources of the Rivers rise, which fall into the Bay of Fundy and Atlantic Ocean, to be annexed to Nova Scotia and New England in such a manner as upon any future directions after particular Surveys have been made shall appear most proper. If this General Idea shall be approved the future Bounds of the new Colony of Canada will be as follows.” Now I would most respectfully invite your Lordships to observe the way in which the Lords of Trade now trace out the future bounds of the new Colony of Canada, because you will find this very striking thing (Lord Sumner made an observation to me two days ago about this, and I think he may be particularly interested) you will find as far as the Lords of Trade were concerned they were undoubtedly tracing a height of land from the high waters of the River St. John. My Lord observed, of course, quite justly, that, if you look at the Map of Mitchell, it did not seem that merely by joining the height of the River St. John to the Lake St. John, you necessarily did so ; but observe the language here used : “ On the South East it will be bounded by the high Lands which range across the Continent from Cape Roziere in the Gulph of St. Laurence to that point of Lake Champlain above St. Johns which is in Latitude 45 Degrees North ” ; that, your Lordships remember, was running along the height of land South of the St. Lawrence.

Viscount HALDANE : I do not want to turn it up, but I would like the reference to Mitchell's Map.

Sir JOHN SIMON : That is No. 11 of the Canadian Atlas. There is another map in the Canadian Atlas which is perhaps even a better one, because I think it is the one that is referred to in a moment here ; but may we continue reading the description first “ which high Lands separate the heads of the Rivers which fall into the great River St. Lawrence from the heads of those which fall into the Atlantick Ocean or Bay of Fundy.” Now that is height of land evidently.

p. 251

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : Where were you reading then?

Sir JOHN SIMON : Line 28 on page 910. “ On the South East, it will be bounded by the high Lands which range across the Continent from Cape Roziere in the Gulf of St. Laurence ”— You will remember that is South of the St. Lawrence, “to that point of Lake Champlain above St. Johns which is in Latitude 45 Degrees North ; which high lands separate the heads of the Rivers which fall into the great River St. Lawrence, from the heads of those Which fall into the Atlantick Ocean or Bay of Fundy on the North West ”— now here is a curious thing—“ on the North West it will be bounded by a Line drawn South from the River St. Johns in Labrador ”—that is a different River, of course—“ by the heads of those Rivers which fall into the River St. Lawrence as far as the East end of Lake Nippissin upon the Ottawa River,” there can be no doubt at all that that was supposed to be indicating a slope ; “ and on the South West by a Line drawn due West to the River St. Lawrence from that point on Lake Champlain which is directly opposite to where the South Line falls in and so cross the said River St. Lawrence and pursuing a North West course along the Heights where the Rivers rise, that fall into the Ottawa River, to be continued to the East End of Nippisin Lake where the North Line terminates.” That is the origin of the description in the Proclamation which your Lordships remember was made a little later in the year, the Proclamation of October 7th, 1763, to which the reference is Volume I, page 153. That is the origin of that lozenge area. I will ask your Lordships, if you would think proper, to let me read down to the middle of the next page before we turn to the map. “ In order however that your Majesty may judge with precision of the Limits of Canada as above described, and also of those We shall propose for Florida, and of the Country we think right to be left as Indian Territory, We humbly beg leave to refer to the annex'd Chart in which those Limits are particularly delineated, and of which Your Majesty will have a clearer Conception than can be conveyed by descriptive Words alone.” We think we know which Chart this is a reference to, as I will show you in a moment. Now will your Lordships observe the language of the next half page, commencing at the top of page 911. “The Advantage resulting from this restriction of the Colony of Canada will be that of preventing by ”—by what ?—“ by proper and natural Boundaries,” that means by the answer which physical geography will give. “as well the Ancient French Inhabitants as others from removing & settling in remote Places, where they neither could be so conveniently made amenable to the Jurisdiction of any Colony or made subservient to the Interest of the Trade & Commerce of this Kingdom by an easy Communication with & Vicinity to the Great River St. Lawrence. And this Division ”—now the language is a little important—“ by the heights of Land to the South of the River St. Lawrence will on the one hand leave all Your Majesty's new French Subjects, under such Government, as your Majesty shall think proper to continue to them in regard to the

2 M

p. 252

Rights & Usages already secured or that may be granted to them ” : that is to say the French Canadians, Canadians whose origin is French, who speak French and have been accustomed to live under the French regime, will have their own seignories and their French law, and they want to have a boundary that will throw them into that area. Then see how it goes on : “ On the Other hand, the reannexing to Nova Scotia all that Tract of Land from the Cape Roziere along the Gulph of St. Lawrence with the whole Coast ”—“ coast ”—“ of the Bay of Fundy to the River Penobscot, or to the River St. Croix will be attended with this particular Advantage, of leaving so extensive a Line of Sea Coast to be settled by British Subjects ”—that will be thrown into Nova Scotia. If I may for the moment seek to demonstrate by the use of my Chart, I would like to show your Lordships what I understand them to be saying in that latter passage. In that latter passage the Lords of Trade are referring to the Gaspé Peninsula at the mouth of the St. Lawrence. What they are saying is: We propose that the boundary of this new British Government of Canada, or Government of Quebec, should run along the heights of land which divide the Rivers that flow North into the St. Lawrence from the Rivers which flow South in this direction, and they say by making the boundary run by the heights of land you will secure two objects. The first is that you will be throwing into your Province of Quebec people of French origin who will naturally want to be in that area, and on the other hand you will be returning to Nova Scotia an area which the French before they were defeated had very largely invaded, and you will be securing that there can be a settlement by British Subjects of the Coast which runs from the corner of Nova Scotia down to, it may be St. Croix or this River, the Penobscot. Your Lordships have, in this very 26 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

document the implicit acknowledgement that the Nova Scotia Coast, regarded as an area of administration, goes up to the height of land, just as the height of land becomes the Southern Boundary of Quebec. You have on the previous page, page 910, a proposal which is not quite the proposal which is adopted in the Proclamation : The proposal that the boundary shall not be a mathematically straight line from the head waters of the St. John to the Lake St. John, but that it shall run to the heads of those Rivers which fall into the River St. Lawrence as far as the East End of Lake Nipissin. and there is left, as your Lordships will see, a very curious conundrum, and certain inconsistencies, I think I must call it, if the annexed chart is the one which is supposed (I will call your Lordships' attention to it now) because when you look at the annexed chart, which was being sent by the Lords of Trade, in order that your Lordships may have a clearer conception than can be conveyed by descriptive words alone, you will find that the proposed boundary of this new Province of Quebec does, it is true, start from something like the head waters of St. John, and does, it is true, pass through Lake St. John, but there does appear to be a certain area to the North of it, which you might still regard, and, if you looked at the map, you would think was still being drained into the St. Lawrence. That area, however (it is not very wide) is undoubtedly an area which the Commissioners seem to have thought might be left unorganised, and it may be that the Indian country, though I am satisfied your Lordships will think that the main Indian country is round by the great Lakes—but it is quite conceivable that the Indian country may have come up to some point here, so far as it is drained into the River St. Lawrence, but what I am contesting is the suggestion that there is any reason at all to suppose that the Indian Country comes into my green. Now the map which appears to be referred to under this description, “ The Annex'd Chart,” is in the Canadian Atlas, No. 27.

p. 253

This map, which is by a cartographer called Bellin, Geographer to His Majesty, is “ a map of North America describing and distinguishing the British, Spanish and French Dominions, on this Great Continent, according to the definitive Treaty concluded at Paris on the 10th February, 1763.” Whether this is the actual document or not, does not appear to be quite certain, but would your Lordships observe, on the lower part of the chart, at the right hand side, just above the words “ Atlantic Ocean,” there is a note that has been made upon the map by my friends representing Canada, I understand : “ This map is the chart which accompanied the Report from the Lords of Trade and Plantations to the King, dated 8th June, 1763.”

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : That was put on for this litigation?

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes.

Sir JOHN SIMON : My friend, Mr. Stuart Moore, seems to have had this compartment more particularly in his mind ; at any rate he has been kind enough to tell me that some few years ago, when the Record Office was visited for the purpose, there was a volume which contained amongst other things, this report of the Lords of Trade, and that at that time there was a map which I understand my friend to say corresponded to this, attached to or bound up with the report from which I have been reading. Apparently the searches at the Record Office have been such that the map is no longer attached to the report, but I will assume that it is the map.

Now, my Lords, just see how very striking, on the face of this map, is what is said on page 911 as to the advantage of a division by the heights of land south of Gaspé. It is the boundary between the pink and the green, and what the Lords of Trade are saying is: “ We draw a line”—your Lordships know Lake Champlain, we might take that in—“ along the heights of land ”—in fact you will see a succession there of eight little molehills, which no doubt represent that—“ and we draw it so that the water flowing into the St. Lawrence is in the pink, and the water flowing into the Atlantic Ocean is in the green” ; and they say “ by drawing it on the heights of land in that way we shall throw into the Province of Quebec the French-speaking population that ought to be in it, while at the same time we shall be reannexing to Nova Scotia all that tract of land from Cape Rozière along the Gulf of St. Lawrence, with the whole coast of the Bay of Fundy, to the River of Penobscot.” Your Lordships will find that it is very plainly shown on the white of the map, just below the Bay of Fundy; or alternatively to the River St. Croix, which is a little bit higher up. They say by doing that, they will leave “ so extensive a line of sea coast to be settled by British subjects.”

I do not think you could have a plainer contemporary proof that when you come to using words like “coast” or “sea coast,” you are really not referring to a mere marge of the sea, but you are referring to what is called higher up on the same page the area with proper and natural boundaries running up ; in other words, the height of land.

Viscount HALDANE : Can you tell me this, which I have been thinking of for some time? Does the height of land always mean the same thing? Is there one height of land running right down through all this?

Sir JOHN SIMON : I think so, my Lord. The only case of doubt—and it is a conceivable case—would be where when you get to the top, you have a crater, for example, which will fill with water and does not drain either way. No doubt that raises a refinement ; but you may put it in the form of a physical experiment. If you imagine yourself presented with a plaster of Paris model which accurately represents the undulations of the surface, and if you then proceed to pour water upon it so that it strikes different points, every drop of that water will find its way down a slope until ultimately it runs off at one edge or the other edge.

Viscount HALDANE : Then the height of land comes down from Hudson's Bay, it comes down to the 52nd parallel ; is there anything physical after that? Where does the chain continue? It comes down to the 52nd parallel of latitude ; you are touching the height of land there. Does the height of land run continuously after that down south?

Sir JOHN SIMON : I think your Lordship may take it that my pocket map indicates by the green colour what would be included within the height of land assuming the water is going to fall into the Atlantic, always remembering that the pink area has been cut out. However, for the moment I was not so much on what happened in 1825 or even earlier.

Viscount HALDANE : I was only asking you for general purposes.

Sir JOHN SIMON : I quite follow, my Lord.

Viscount HALDANE : Then is the height of land a chain that comes right down to the St. Lawrence ?

p. 255

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON : I should not think it is.

Viscount HALDANE : Where does it start?

The LORD CHANCELLOR : It turns the corner, I suppose?

Sir JOHN SIMON : Yes, it turns the corner.

Lord Sumner.

Viscount HALDANE : It goes to the west or both ways.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Yes, my Lord.

Viscount HALDANE : Then how does it get down to the south—the same height of land ? Does it begin again on the south side of the St. Lawrence ?

Sir JOHN SIMON : If you took ship and crossed the Gulf of St. Lawrence you would land at the level of the sea and you would find yourself slowly or rapidly climbing up whatever slope there may be. These are the heights of land on each side and you will continue until you reach what these Commissioners call the proper and natural boundary.

Viscount Haldane.

Lord SUMNER : It depends on the level after reaching the top ; it may descend to another level on the other side. The height of land may be the edge of an enormous plateau with perhaps a very small fall or no escape of water off it, and when you come to decide where the height of land is, one side may say it is the east side of the plateau and the other side may say it is the west side of the plateau. Still, the best thing that you can do is to find out, as you say, where the main division between the water that falls about the plateau will be, so that some goes one way and some goes the other.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Yes, my Lord.

Viscount HALDANE : Then coming south of St. Lawrence you come to Lake Champlain. I know that, because I have seen it. Where does the height of land run there? Does it run through the Adirondacks?

26 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Yes. If your Lordship will take this very map that is open before the Lord Chancellor now, it is indicated, not with absolute precision, but quite sufficiently for the purpose. If you will observe the green area, in substance you may take it that what we now call the Adirondacks and the Appalachees that was undoubtedly regarded, in the middle of the Eighteenth Century, as the limit of the coast. I am going to call your Lordships' attention to a very interesting illustration; I am afraid it may not be possible to do it to-day, but I hope to spend very little additional time on this when you next sit. M. Bellin, who was one of the great map makers, not only drew his map but wrote a commentary, which indeed you were invited to buy when you bought the map ; he tells you that you should buy his commentary, and then you will understand all this. Well, we have got his commentary, and when you look at his commentary it is perfectly obvious that geographers who were speaking of the coast meant something that ran back to the Adirondacks and the continuation of the chain.

Viscount HALDANE : Including Lake Champlain?

Sir JOHN SIMON : No, my Lord, Lake Champlain drains into the St. Lawrence.

Viscount HALDANE : Yes, but it is on your left as you go south, and the Adirondacks are on your right.

Sir JOHN SIMON : That is quite true, but the main range which I am referring to is a range that is rather southerly of that. The point is that the greater part of this green area is what used to be called the Ancient Colonies. I will show you a very important map which simply labels them " Colonies."

Viscount HALDANE : I suppose there is a sort of spur from this height of land which we are speaking of?

Sir JOHN SIMON : If one had to deal with it from the Pacific and you were to consider what was the meaning of " all the Pacific Coast," whatever else may be said, you would have some difficulty in saying that it passed over the Rockies, because there is no doubt that it drains down there. However, we are dealing after all with a particular locus and my only point on this is that when you read this document, which is strictly contemporary, you will find one more illustration of the view that you did not need to inquire, if you wanted a proper or natural boundary, in what degree of latitude or longitude you would find yourself when you got to the interior limit ; because the conception of the age was that the coast was a thing that sloped down to the sea, just as you speak nowadays of coasting down a slope ; and though, of course, it is not so simple as the surface of an inclined plane, as Lord Sumner has said (it may be full of all sorts of irregularities ; behind the first range of hills you may find yourself dropping into a lower plateau before you rise) ; still, broadly speaking, there was a thing which you could always do ; you could draw a line which would go round the rivers, and by that means you could say, now that makes, whatever it is, the Atlantic Coast.

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : They use that ; they do not use “ the height of land.” On page 910 they talk of the land “ beyond the sources of the rivers.” You will see the Indian country is to be the land “ beyond the sources of the rivers which fall into the River St. Lawrence from the north.”

Sir JOHN SIMON : Yes, my Lord.

Sir John Simon.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : And so, later on, “ and on the other hand, all the lands from Cape Roziere to Lake Champlain, along the heights where the sources of the rivers rise.” It is not because it is a line of mountains, but it is where the rivers rise.

Sir JOHN SIMON : It is a water test, really.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : Yes ; it is a short expression.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Let me point out to your Lordships one very curious situation which the colour on this map creates, about which I want to be perfectly frank to the Board. If, on the other hand, you look on the northern side of this proposed area of the Province of Quebec, in the first place it may be said that it is not very accurately drawn because, as a matter of fact, you start the red colour before you reach the head waters of the river St. John. It runs further up, but by this time it is sufficiently true of this map to say that there are some indications that there will be water which is in the white beyond the pink, brought up towards the top of the map which is the pink and which is still running into the St. Lawrence ; but I am not disputing that all. The point is quite clear, because you will find “ land's height.” May I give your Lordships the reference by regard to the meridians of longitude. Will your Lordships take on the map between 75 and 85 degrees ; it is very close to the binding of the book, at the top. If you run your eye down just below the first oblong where the parallel of, I think it is 45, crosses, you will see “ land's height ” and a dotted line. How you explain it may be a question, but there is no doubt at all that this map, if it was the map, did show that there was beyond the pink a certain area which would continue before you reach the land's height.

Lord Sumner.

Sir John Simon.

Sir John Simon.

Lord SUMNER : That is consistent, is it not, with having an intermediate basin which drains into the Atlantic? It does not follow that there is only one height of land.

Sir JOHN SIMON: That is quite true, but I myself have found this a little puzzling ; you cannot expect everything to be plain in a case of this sort.

My Lords, there is one other thing in a map I would ask your Lordships to look at at once. Kindly observe what is meant by the Indian country ; I think it is as plain as possible. I find in the Canadian Case a suggestion, and I think it is a perfectly despairing suggestion, that the Indian country means the Mitchell line ground. The Indian country in the middle of the eighteenth century was a tremendously important thing. We had all sorts of bargains with the Indians. We purchased land from the Indians. There were treaties—I will show a reference on the map—made in 1711, and later dates in that century, with various groups of Indians; and there was a great area which only had been acquired by the Crown of England by a series of treaties and bargains which they had made with, for instance, the six nations of the Iroquois. Those Indians were all round the Great Lakes. That was the area they were in. It is a complete mistake to suppose that they were talking about some unexplored and unimportant area. Let me give your Lordships the reference to another map which shows that perhaps more clearly than any other. It is the next map in the Canadian Atlas, Map No. 28. Here again my learned friends, who have devoted a great deal of ingenuity to this case, have thought fit to put a note on the map. Unfortunately this time their commentary is not, I think, quite so well founded. They have seen fit to print upon the map, merely in order to indicate their view, a note which you will find on the extreme right hand side. “ Note : To accentuate the notation ‘ Indians lands under His Majesty's Government ’ the lettering has been printed in red over the black of the original. On the original the ‘ DS ’ of ‘ LANDS ’ was omitted by the engraver. This error has been corrected in red.” The truth of it is that the inscription, or label, “ Indians,” is not related to the words “ Lands under His Majesty's Government.” The “ Lands under His Majesty's Government ” are in contrast and opposition with the words higher up, namely “ Hudson's Bay Company's lands.” You will see the type is a perfectly different size. “Indians” is an indication that that is where Indians live. It is quite general. But the inscription “Lands under His Majesty's Government,” which is to the south of that, is to be contrasted with an exactly similar use of type of the same size, which my friends have, of course, not reddened or blackened or emphasized. You can see “ Hudson's Bay Company's lands ” was designed to show that the Hudson's Bay Company ever since 1670 had a quasi-sovereignty in the north, and in the south there were lands which were under his Majesty's Government in a more direct sense. It is quite a mistake to suppose that “ Indians ” is an epithet having reference to the word “ lands,” and that the sentence is “ Indians lands tinder His Majesty's Government.” In the English language you do not happen to put the additional “ s ” to an adjective merely because the substantive is in the plural.

There is another thing rather difficult to pick out, and perhaps your Lordships would do it at once. I have had it picked out for me in one map. If you will take the colours of a series of colonies on the Atlantic coast, Nova Scotia which is in blue,

New England which is in green, New York which is in red.
and two or three other small ones, going down to Virginia, you will find if you can pick out the words that that band of colonies is labelled “ Colonies.” There is a big “ C ” which is to the south of the yellow of Virginia. You then see the “ O.” You must go on some way in order to find the “ L,” but you will find it just above “ land ” in “ Maryland.” Then you will find the “ 0 ” is in the green. Then there is an “ N ” just below the “ L” in “ New England.” “England” is spelled “ Englad,” there being no room for the “n.” Then the letter “I” is at the further edge of the green, under the “d” in “ New England.” Then there is the “ E ” in the blue of “ Nova Scotia,” and the final letter “ S ” finishes up the word. The Ancient Colonies of the Crown in the middle of the eighteenth century was this band of ancient plantations. In contrast with that you had the new Province of Quebec which you see indicated in the yellow colour, and you had on the other side the Mississippi. Does your Lordship remember the passage in the book which I had just now, where the Lords of Trade say that the Indian country will be quite sufficiently defined if you regard it as enclosed between the Mississippi and the Hudson's Bay territory on the one hand, and the new Province of Quebec and the Ancient Colonies on the other. It is enclosed between the two. Therefore I venture to hope we have given the quietus to this far-fetched suggestion that the Indians are the people whose hunting grounds are reserved to them by the Lords of Trade in 1763 somewhere in the frozen fastnesses of Labrador. Of course, they were not doing anything of the kind. That being so, I really get rid of the suggestion that my green area is historically neither Newfoundland nor Quebec. There is no tertium quid so far as my green area is concerned, if I have made good my point on the height of land.

26 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Perhaps I might finish the document I had in mind. The document is in Volume III, p. 911. They go on to deal with other places, and the only passage which I think has any incidental value is at page 913, where at line you will notice, in a perfectly different connection, exactly the same implication for “ coast ” is to be found. “ West Florida to comprehend all the Sea Coast of the Gulph of Mexico, extending West ”—from a particular point towards a particular point.

Lord Sumner.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : There is nothing here about Labrador at all.

Sir JOHN SIMON : They had already disposed of Labrador. The only references to Labrador in this document are the references I have given, namely one on page 905, line 39, “ Annexation of the Labrador Coast to the Government of Newfoundland,” and the other at page 909, line 10, where they say “ which induced your Majesty to annex the Coast of Labrador to the Government of Newfoundland.” They are dealing, of course, with a fait accompli, because this document is a document drawn up in the summer, in June, whereas, of course, the

2 N

p. 260

Newfoundland arrangements had all been made, indeed the Commission under the Great Seal and the instructions had been given, and as far as Governor Graves was concerned he was in the saddle.

Lord SUMNER : There is an observation on this, which I think may also arise here. They specify a number of areas—Quebec, and East and West Florida. If I do not mistake they completely describe the bounds all round. There is a complete description of the boundaries right round the area of Quebec, and of East and West Florida.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Yes, that is true.

Lord SUMNER : It looks, therefore, as if the plan was that the new Government should be once and for all entirely and completely described by limits.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Yes.

Sir John Simon.

Lord SUMNER : In the case of Labrador they certainly have not done it by description so completely, but unless we are to suppose for some reason there was an intention to leave the boundary gaping at a certain point the presumption would be that in the case of the Coast of Labrador also it was supposed that the proclamation contained a totally enclosed limit.

Sir JOHN SIMON : I think so.

Lord SUMNER : Then when you come to look for the limit enclosed, you say, “ What is there but such a natural feature as the height of land? ” It is of some importance as negating the idea that at that date it should be deliberately taken as an undefined tract unassigned to any Government, and not governed at all. Of course, “ Indians ” might be an explanation for it, but if you get rid of the “ Indians ” there is no explanation for leaving unassigned at that date to Labrador a space of land on a pattern not pursued in Florida or in Quebec at all.

26 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON : That is entirely my case. Your Lordship has put it for me. Though it is a dangerous thing to embroider a point which has been put by a Member of the Tribunal merely to define it, let me add this. Your Lordship will think it is confirmation. Not only that, my Lord, but if I am to go back and try and find where my Coast of Labrador stops, I have these subsidiary indications. No one suggests that it runs into the Hudson's Bay territory. I hope I have satisfied the Board completely that the Hudson's Bay territory was regarded as running up to the height of land as from Hudson's Bay. I have the fact that Lord Egremont indeed was anxious to make quite certain before he arranged for the enlarged Commission of Governor Graves to be drawn up as to how that was. I have the further fact, which is surely very striking, that when you give me all the Coast of Labrador, you further say that it is to be on the one side as far as the River St. John, and immediately in the same year the adjoining Province of Quebec is described as a province with a boundary which runs up to the head waters of the River St. John, and that it is then to follow some heights of land. I have the fact that on the other side of the St. Lawrence you get the spine of the Gaspé Peninsula indicated, and you are told that the slope on one side comes into Quebec, and you are told the slope on the other side will therefore be left for the persons who are engaged in colonizing the coast of Nova Scotia. Could you have a more complete indication that according to the language of the time the Coasts of Labrador were what I say? And that is entirely consistent with what is done in 1825 when you cut the pink strip out of it, and it is entirely consistent with the view which has been taken as far as we can see by everybody until, as your Lordship says, somebody discovers there is something valuable there.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : It looks as if in those days when they wanted to define a strip of land bordered by the sea they defined it by points which they knew on the sea—not knowing the inland—as Coasts between two points on the sea.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Certainly.

Viscount HALDANE : On the other hand, why did not they say “ Labrador,” instead of the “ Coast of Labrador ”? It is not as though it was a small coast ; it was an enormous territory.

26 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON : The answer may be—your Lordships will consider it at your leisure, I am sure—that Labrador is the name of a peninsula five times as big as anything that I am asking. I am not asking for Labrador. I am only asking for one of the Coasts of Labrador between certain termini. I am not asking for the pyramid.

Viscount HALDANE : To the height of land from the sea.

Sir JOHN SIMON : If your Lordship pleases. May I take it in the form of a pyramid. Would your Lordship imagine it for a moment in the form of a triangular pyramid. I am not asking for the pyramid, but for one slope of the pyramid as between two lateral termini, which is to be ascertained by seeing, if water falls on the pyramid, will it run down to my sea.

Viscount HALDANE : Is there any evidence that the slopes of the pyramid except that on the east were ever called “ Labrador ” ?

2 N 2

p. 262

Sir JOHN SIMON : Certainly, there is overwhelming evidence. There is a lot of evidence to show, for example, that Labrador is a peninsula ; and, for example, that the Coasts of Labrador do not stop, as you go up the Gulf of St. Lawrence, at the River St. John. There is no reason why they should. My area stops there, because it is given me as a terminus.

MORNING SESSION.

Sir JOHN SIMON : My Lords, since the Board last sat to consider this matter, my clients have had an exhibit prepared which I will describe to your Lordships, because I think you will perhaps think it useful to inspect it at once. They have taken the sketch map, showing my green area which I claim, and with the help of the survey of Mr. Low and other modern surveys which give information as to the superficies of the Labrador Peninsula, they have made one of those raised models such as your Lordships have often seen with reference to different parts of the world. Though I quite agree that you can ascertain the general run of the land by inspecting Mr. Low's survey, because he gives heights, this puts the thing in a visible shape which makes it very easy to understand at any rate what we mean.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : How large is this model?

Sir JOHN SIMON : The same size as my little sketch map.

Viscount FINLAY : It is very difficult to get the elevations on a small model.

Sir JOHN SIMON : I think your Lordships will think it is a striking way of presenting the argument.

Lord SUMNER : Are the perpendicular heights and horizontal distance strictly in proportion?

28 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Certainly not, my Lord ; they never are, in any such model. The object is merely to show them. So far as the perpendiculars are concerned, naturally they are very disproportionate. It shows what one means when one says there is an area or slope, as I have called it, which falls within Hudson's Bay area, and there is a slope, or coast, which is the coast of Labrador between particular points.

The Lord Chancellor.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : It is only to illustrate your argument?

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON : That is all. It is not any bigger than the sketch map. If your Lordship thinks it right to have it placed before you here, it would not be, I think, in your way. Could we have the model brought in, my Lord?

p. 267

The LORD CHANCELLOR : Yes. (Model produced.)

Sir JOHN SIMON : Your Lordships appreciate for the purpose of indicating what is meant there is, as there almost must be in such things, an immense disproportion of vertical as opposed to horizontal. (Their Lordships inspected the model.)

The LORD CHANCELLOR : The rise on the Hudson's Bay side is pretty abrupt and comes far inland, but the coasts of Labrador are steep at the sea ; you get what may be almost called a plateau.

Sir JOHN SIMON : You do, my Lord. I think that that is quite a fair remark. Will your Lordship allow me to use a pointer for a moment?

The LORD CHANCELLOR : Yes.

Sir JOHN SIMON : All your Lordships appreciate that when I speak of the Hudson's Bay territory, I mean the area which is bounded by the height of land running so, as your Lordships see. Thus on the model the area that is enclosed there on the Hudson's Bay, within the Hudson's Straits, all drains into that area. Your Lordships see what I mean when I speak of a corresponding area here. It is quite true, as the Lord Chancellor says—and it is an important fact—that you get, at any rate in the northern part, a very sharp rise almost immediately. Incidentally, I think one begins to appreciate why Lord Egremont may very well have wanted to know where it was, in the view of the Hudson's Bay Company, you had the entrance to Hudson's Bay, if he was going to authorise the striking out of a new unit to the west of it. Then your Lordship sees (Lord Haldane in particular was interested in this) why it is that the system of these lakes behind the Hamilton Inlet is a system which does drain into the Atlantic. There was a little difficulty in tracing it on my map, I quite agree, but that is the way it actually goes. Then, of course, the people who used this expression “ coasts of Labrador ” did not know, and indeed until quite recently it probably was not known accurately whether you might find the slope in that sense coming as far as it in fact does, or whether it would come to here. That is necessarily I think only to be discovered when what the Lords of Trade called the natural boundary is in fact tested on the ground.

28 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : Does that projection like a club foot or dog's head appear on any of the maps ?

Sir JOHN SIMON : Yes, my Lord. Your Lordship remembers that there are some maps which do show a very similar bite out of the general boundary.

2 O 2

p. 268

The LORD CHANCELLOR : I do not remember any such turn to the west and down again in any of the maps before your sketch map.

Sir JOHN SIMON : We will test that, my Lord. There is a certain indication, though I agree not quite so pronounced. Perhaps your Lordship for a moment would think it useful to turn to the south of the St. Lawrence.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : Which is the St. Lawrence River ?

Sir JOHN SIMON : This is interesting, because this shows, and shows quite accurately, how the mistake arose when it was supposed that the waters of the St. John River came up further than they really do. There is in fact a slight prominence which means that the St. John River really is a smaller river, and that the high waters really belong to a separate stream ; that is the truth which Mr. A. P. Low discovered. There is another thing your Lordship will notice which is interesting. I am putting the pointer on Lake St. John. It is there. Therefore when you had the Lords of Trade proposing that you should have a line running along the height of land from the head waters of the River St. John along the head waters of the river running into the St. Lawrence, to Lake St. John, they imagined—inaccurately no doubt—that they were in fact tracing a straight line. Your Lordship remembers that some of the maps in the middle of the 18th century showed it. It is not accurate, because there was behind that an area which I am now pointing to which really was still draining into the River St. Lawrence. That is true enough. That is the area which, in my sketch map, is now yellow, and undoubtedly that area fell within the boundary of the Province of Quebec in 1774, and has never come Out of it again.

Viscount HALDANE : Where is the 52nd parallel?

Sir JOHN SIMON : My Lord, that you will find there. (Indicating.) Would your Lordships for a moment look to the south of the river and gulf of St. Lawrence? I venture to think that this model very plainly shows what the Lords of Trade meant when, in 1763, they were considering what ought to be the boundary of the British Government of Quebec and suggesting that it should run “ along the height of land.”

Viscount HALDANE : Is that Cape Chudley at the other end?

28 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON : This is the cape. Your Lordships see what they were doing. Of course this is, as all such things must be, exaggerated vertically. The Lords of Trade were saying : We have Frenchmen on the south side of this waterway and they ought to be thrown into the new Government of Quebec. Therefore they say : Draw the line like this along the top of the height of land, and then you will get the Frenchmen who are on the south of this waterway thrown into the area to which they naturally belong, and they will enjoy the French law, and so

Viscount Haldane.

p. 269

on. Of late, before the British conquest, the French empire had endeavoured to push its way down on the south side, the Nova Scotia side of this slope, and the result is that the British Colony of Nova Scotia has been much restricted. They say : Draw the boundary there, and the result is that you will have a coast as they call it, of Nova Scotia, free for plantation and colonization, meaning from there up to the height of land on that side.

Viscount HALDANE : It is strange that they did not follow the height of land as regards the new Province of Quebec. They drew an absolutely straight line from here to here.

Sir JOHN SIMON : When the Proclamation was made, that is the way it was done, but your Lordships will have noticed—I called attention to it on Tuesday afternoon—the Lords of Trade in their recommendation spoke of that line, not as a straight line joining the head waters of the River St. John to the Lake St. John, but as a line starting from the head waters of the River St. John and then following along the head waters of intervening streams until it ran into the Lake St. John. When the Proclamation was drawn, no doubt because the maps of the period were not very accurate or complete, or perhaps for simplicity's sake, the thing is described, as the Lord Chancellor says, as a straight line. I think it is quite clear very soon, not at once, it was appreciated that there was some country which was to the north of that again, where I am resting the pointer now, which was country not in the Hudson's Bay territory. There was, in other words, a certain corridor here which indeed is the yellow on my sketch map. Of course, I am not at all disputing that that area—I am now moving my pointer more or less over the area in question—painted yellow in my sketch map undoubtedly fell into the Province of Quebec as soon as the Province of Quebec was enlarged in 1774. It is very curious to notice the language which Lord North used in 1774 when he was recommending the Quebec Act of 1774 to the House of Commons. If your Lordship would take the third volume of the book and would turn to page 1124, you will find what Lord North had to say. Let me remind your Lordships of the historical position.

1774, the year of the Quebec Act, was the year of the throwing of the tea into Boston Harbour ; that had happened earlier in the year. Parliament here in Westminster in the year 1774 was, for the greater part of the Session, engaged in considering an earlier Bill, which was called the Bill for the government of Massachusetts. There were those warnings uttered in the House of Commons which are famous in history as to what would happen in connection with Boston and Massachusetts Bay. Later in the year there was brought down from the House of Lords the Quebec Bill. It was a Bill which started in the House of Lords, and, as I see by reading the Annual Register, in the House of Lords it received comparatively little discussion. It is the first few words of Lord North's speech on page 1124. I think nothing could be more striking than his use of the phrase “ two countries.” “ On the Order of the Day, for the second Reading of the Bill ‘ for making more effectual provision for the government of the Province of Quebec in North America.’ ” The situation was that there had been a small area, what I call my lozenge-shaped Quebec, which had existed ever since 1763. I may add that after hearing evidence, as appears from the Annual Register, Lord North (the Prime Minister) is recommending this Bill in the Session of 1774 to the House of Commons. As he had people like Mr. Edmund Burke watching what he was doing, he was explaining why it was that they proposed to enlarge Quebec as they did. See what he said : “ The first thing objected to by the honourable gentleman ”—that, as a matter of fact, was Mr. Townshend, junior—“ is the very great extent of territory given to the Province. Why, he asks, is it so extensive ? There are added, undoubtedly, to it ”—that is my original lozenge of Quebec—“ two countries which were not in the original limits of Canada, as settled in the proclamation of 1763 ; one, the Labrador coast, the other, the country westward of the Ohio and the Mississippi ”—that must be “ the country between the Ohio and the Mississippi ”—“ and a few scattered posts to the west.” If I may again use the pointer, though I do not want to expatiate on the obvious, Lord North is saying this, though with a much less accurate knowledge of geography than we have to-day : The province of Quebec is a province of a lozenge shape, the bounds of which may be described as running up the River St. John to its head waters, then across to Lake St. John, then across to Lake Nipissing, then down across the St. John to Lake Champlain, and so on up along this line here, to Gaspé Point. Here is the House of Commons considering a Bill which the Government has carried through the House of Lords, which is going greatly to enlarge the boundaries of Quebec. The boundary in the new Bill started there, then carried along the same boundary for a time, then got down to Pennsylvania then ran down until it reached the Mississippi, then went up the Mississippi until it struck Hudson's Bay, and they say that is the new province. The effect of that was to do two things : to add to the original lozenge-shaped Province of Quebec two countries ; one of them is my coast of Labrador, and the other is this immense area away down to the junction of Ohio and Mississippi, a large part of which is now to be found in the United States of America. The case against me is : Not at all ; what was added was this great area down in the northwest. No doubt, but the other main thing that was added was something which was not the coast of Labrador, but was a thing which had never been under the government of Newfoundland, under that denomination. In so far as Newfoundland lost anything under the terms of the Quebec Act, 1774, it lost what was no doubt a strip. In substance, what was thrown into Quebec was something which never belonged to Newfoundland before, and therefore was never given back to Newfoundland afterwards. What I find is this, and, I can repeat, after careful inquiry, because they had Governor Carleton there and a number of other people whom they consulted, Lord North after this Bill had been expounded and explained in the House of Lords is saying in the House of Commons “ we are adding two countries.” It is interesting to remember that the phrase “coast or country ” is a phrase we have had more than once already in this very connection. I do submit if Parliamentary exposition counts for anything, and I know sometimes it does not count for much, that at any rate is the strongest possible example of it I was asking your Lordships' attention on Tuesday to a document which seemed so extremely important, the document of the Lords of Trade which you will remember was to be found in Volume III, the same volume that is now before you, at page 903.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : The vigorous opposition to this Bill I suppose related to the large area towards the west, not to its coast.

Sir JOHN SIMON : The main point of contest had nothing to do with that area ; it is about the other. Mr. Townshend and others took objection; but the main contest, your Lordship recollects, was because the Quebec Act was an Act which provided that in this immense area there should be a new system of judicature ; that there should be the French law applied in civil matters, that there should be the English law applied in criminal matters, and that you should set up what was practically a French civilisation.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : Why did the Earl of Chatham call it “ a cruel, oppressive and odious measure? ”

Sir JOHN SIMON : That was nothing to do with area. I think what he meant was : As a matter of fact you are imposing upon a number of people in this immense area, who are really of British stock, a system which is essentially French. We have to remember that the Quebec Act was an Act which dealt with immensely important matters, nothing to do with area. That is the connection in which it is usually discussed by historians, and indeed by lawyers. It is the Act under which the Province of Quebec, whatever its geographical extent may be, acquired a very peculiar position so far as regards its system of law in the British Empire. What I think, therefore, that most eminent Parliamentary critic was commenting on was the fact that you would as a matter of fact be imposing upon people of British stock what was to them a foreign system.

There is an interesting book quite recently published by Professor Coupland, on the Quebec Act, but I do not think the subject of area is very precisely dealt with. I have had some inquiries made and I do not think that aspect of the matter was very prominent. It is a very interesting book.

Viscount HALDANE : I have read it. There is nothing about areas in it.

Sir JOHN SIMON: From the point of view of the historian and the student of institutions, the really important thing undoubtedly is this remarkable provision for most extensive jurisdiction, quite French in character, over a very large area of British America. I am not for a moment saying that the geographical point was the main point.

p. 272

Will your Lordships allow me to read a very short extract from the Annual Register, which I looked at this morning to inform my mind. It is at page 75. Your Lordships know that the Annual Register has this peculiarity, that its paging begins over and over again when you come to a different topic. This is the paging beginning from the beginning of the book in the Annual Register for the year 1774. May I read this passage at page 75 right through ; “ The Session was drawing near to the usual time of recess, and the greatest number of the Members, fatigued with a long attendance on the American Bills, were retired into the country. In this situation a Bill which has engaged a great deal of the public attention was brought into the House of Lords ; ‘ A Bill for the making more effectual provision for the government of the Province of Quebec in North America.’ This passed through that House with very little if any observation. But when it came down to the House of Commons, it met with a very different response. A disposition immediately appeared in that House to criticise it with unusual severity. The party for the Ministry seemed to be a little alarmed at this spirit, partly because, from its easy passage through the House of Lords ; it was not to be expected ; but, particularly, because they apprehended it would create more uneasiness among the people out of doors than any of the former Bills. In this case the passions which had been excited by the disorders in America, did not operate in their favour.” Of course, you see the Boston Tea Party had naturally caused a consolidation of public opinion in this country, but the good people of Quebec had been so well behaved that nobody felt much sympathy with what was said. “ In this case the passions which had been excited by the disorders in America, did not operate in their favour, and as the Act had for a part of its objects establishments touching religion, it was far more likely to give occasion for popular complaint. The Ministry, therefore, found it necessary not to carry things with so high a hand as in the preceding Bills. They admitted that this Bill came down to the House of Commons in a very imperfect state ; and that they would be open to any reasonable alterations and amendments. This plan might be discussed more at leisure than that for regulating the Colony of Massachusetts Bay ; it[sic] that case it was necessary to show a degree of vigour and decision, or all government might be lost and all order confounded. But here they were not so much pressed : for though that Government wanted regulation extremely, yet the people were disposed to peace and obedience. A good deal of time was spent in going through this affair ; great altercations arose in the Committee ; many witnesses were examined. Among these were General Carleton, Governor of Canada ; Mr. Hay, Chief Justice of that Province ; Mr. Mazerés, Cursitor Baron of the Exchequer, late Attorney-General there, and Agent to the English inhabitants of Canada ”—of course, people of British stock were very

unwilling to see French institutions put upon them, and that was the real subject of Parliamentary Debate—“ Dr. Marriot, the King's Advocate-General in England ; Mons. Lolbiniere, a French gentleman of considerable property in Canada. The principal objects of the Quebec Bill were to ascertain the limits of that Province, which were extended far beyond what had been settled as such by the King's Proclamation of 1763 ; to form a legislative Council for all the affairs of the Province, except taxation, which Council shall be appointed by the Crown, the office to be held during pleasure (and His Majesty's Canadian Roman Catholic subjects were entitled to a place in it) ; to establish the French laws and a trial without jury in civil cases, and English laws, with a trial by jury, in criminal ; to secure to the Roman Catholic Clergy, except the Regulars, the legal enjoyment of their estates, and of their tithes from all who are of their own religion. These were the chief objects of the Act. It was said in favour of them, that the French, who were a very great majority of the inhabitants of that country, having been used to live under an absolute government, were not anxious for the forms of a free one, which they little understood or valued. That they even abhorred the idea of popular representation, observing the mischiefs which it introduced in their neighbouring countries. Besides these considerations, it would be unreasonable to have a representative body, out of which all the natives should be excluded ; and perhaps dangerous to trust such an instrument in the hands of a people but newly taken into the British Empire ; ” that does not mean Indians, of course ; it means the original population from Europe : “ they were not yet ripe for English government. That their landed property had been all granted and their family settlements made on the ideas of French law. The laws concerning contracts and personal property were nearly the same in France and England. That trial by juries was strange and disgusting to them. That as to religion, it had been stipulated to allow them perfect freedom in that respect by the Treaty of Paris, as far as the laws of England permitted.”

Then the following passages go on to describe the arguments on one side. Then lower down it says ; “ To this it was replied, that a form of arbitrary government established by Act of Parliament, for any part of the British Dominions, as a thing new to the history of England. That it was of a most dangerous example, and wholly unnecessary. For either the then present form, such as it was, might be suffered to remain merely as a temporary arrangement, tolerated from the necessity which first gave rise to it, or an assembly might be formed on the principles of the British Constitution, in which the natives might have such a share as should be thought convenient.” And they proceeded on that line.

Your Lordships see, therefore, that the Debates on the Quebec Bill were primarily concerned with two questions of whether it was right or not that in an immense area such as this the people of British stock should be put, so far as civil rights were concerned, under the French law, and, secondly, whether the provisions of the Bill touching matters of religion were appropriate. Therefore, I am not suggesting that the main debate was as to areas. What I am pointing out is that one of the objects being that this immense Province was thus being carved out, Lord North, the head of the Government, defending the Bill, says : What we are doing is this. We are making it very big. Why? Because we are adding to what I have ventured to call the lozenge Province of Quebec two countries, one the coast of Labrador, the other the area lying between the Ohio and the Mississippi.

Now, my Lords, I was asking attention on Tuesday to the very important document at page 903 of Volume III, which is a long report of the Lords of Trade ; and I ask leave very briefly, as I have very nearly finished what I wish to say to the Board at this stage, to direct attention to two or three references to the Indian Country in order that I may, I hope, dispose of the idea which I venture to think is quite unhistoric and rather fantastic, that the reservation in respect of the Indian Country had anything to do with my green area here, which is practically uninhabited and which contains a few Eskimos, and a few Indians, who very largely came from across the River St. Lawrence. and had some trade in these parts. “ The Indian country,” as I think one of your Lordships observed on Tuesday, is a phrase which in the middle of the Eighteenth Century was a very familiar phrase. It had reference to an immense and extremely important area. It was used in reference to what was a fixed policy of this country, the policy, namely, of endeavouring to keep on the best possible terms with what were in those days extremely powerful and important Indian tribes. The Indian Country, as your Lordships saw in the map which I asked your attention to in the Canadian Atlas just before the Board rose on Tuesday, was, as a matter of fact, the country round the Great Lakes, and it may be to some extent running up in the area which I have called the yellow area.

Now, my Lords, the passages are these, if I may keep to the point about the Indian Country and give one or two more references on the same very important topic. Your Lordships have already noticed that there is a passage on page 906, at line 27. I am picking these out simply as passages and putting them, together without any argument now. “ This trade was acquired—”

The LORD CHANCELLOR : What trade is he speaking of ?

Sir JOHN SIMON : He is speaking of the fur trade. He is saying : “ This trade was acquired in virtue of the possession which they ”—that is the French—“ had taken (contrary to the stipulations of the Treaty of Utrecht) of all the Lakes in North America ”—by which he meant the Great Lakes, Lake Superior, Lake Erie, and so forth—“ communicating with the River St. Laurence, though the circumjacent territory avowedly belonged to the six Nations of Indians, acknowledged by the French to be your Majesty's Subjects in that Treaty.” I really am satisfied that I can establish to your Lordships that that is the area which is primarily known as the Indian Country. You will see it on maps and all sorts of documents of the time. Primarily it is round the Great Lakes ; it is an immense area indicated in the maps.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : You have read this, have you not?

Sir JOHN SIMON : My Lord, I am merely picking these passages out ; I am not going to read them at length.

Viscount HALDANE : He speaks of “ the exclusive Company of Hudson's Bay.”

Sir JOHN SIMON : He does, my Lord. Then at page 909—the Lord Chancellor truly says we have had this before, but I am not seeking to do more than put the passages together—at line 36 you will see this phrase : “ And We apprehend that no such delay can be attended with very material inconvenience, since, if your Majesty shall be pleased to adopt the general proposition of leaving a large tract of country round the Great Lakes as an Indian Country.” There really cannot, I think, be much doubt as to what that means.

Then the third passage in the document is at page 910, beginning at line 16. “ It is needless to state with any degree of precision, the Bounds and Limits of this extensive Country, for We should humbly propose to Your Majesty that the new Government of Canada should be restricted, so as to leave on the one hand, all the Lands lying about the great Lakes and beyond the Sources of the Rivers which fall into the River St. Lawrence from the North to be thrown into the Indian Country, and on the other hand, all the Lands from Cape Roziere to Lake Champlain, along the Heights where the Sources of the Rivers rise, which fall into the Bay of Fundy and Atlantic Ocean, to be annexed to Nova Scotia.” It is that passage which makes me think that it may very well be that the Indian Country, primarily circumjacent to the Great Lakes, may, for all I know, and I am not contesting it, have included what I call my yellow. That is to say, here is the River St. Lawrence ; of course, I distinguish between the River St. Lawrence and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. It may be that behind the area which has been thrown into Quebec there was a certain strip which ultimately fell into Quebec and is coloured yellow in my sketch map, which might be regarded as one of the outlying parts of the Indian Country.

I think those three passages show the position in this very important document. Now, I ask your Lordships to pass on and observe the way in which these recommendations of the Lords Commissioners were dealt with when they came before His Majesty George III. That is at page 915. Lord Egremont writes back to the Lords of Trade and says : “ My Lords, Your Report, dated the 8th of last Month, having been laid before the King, and His Majesty having taken the same into consideration ; I am, in consequence thereof, to acquaint your Lordships, That the King approves the erecting three New Governments in North America, under the denominations your Lordships propose, of Canada,

2 P 2

p. 276

East Florida, and West Florida ; But, with regard to the limits of these Governments, as described in the Report, and marked out in the Chart thereunto annexed; Altho' His Majesty entirely concurs in your Lordships Idea, of not permitting any Grant of Lands, or New Settlements to be made, for the present, beyond the Bounds proposed by your Lordships ; Yet the King thinks, that great Inconveniences might arise, from so large a Tract of Land being left, without being subject to the Civil Jurisdiction of some Governor, in virtue of His Majesty's Commission, under the Great Seal of Great Britain.”

Viscount Haldane.

Sir John Simon.

Now my friends on the other side, if I may speculate, I think show some signs, not indeed in their Case, it never occurred to them, but in their Counter Case, of arguing that a passage like that refers to the interior of my green. It is quite obvious, I venture to submit, if you read the thing in its due order, that it refers to nothing of the kind. It refers to the Indian country round the Great Lakes which according to the scheme of the Lords of Trade was not going to be included within the Province of Quebec. It affords no ground or basis at all for arguing that the coast of Labrador means anything other than what Lord North thought it meant. The passage goes on : “ And that (besides the difficulties there might be, for want of such a Civil Jurisdiction, in bringing to justice criminals, and fugitives, who may take refuge in that country) their not being included within some established Government might, in time to come, furnish matter of dispute, with regard to the property : And other powers, who might hereafter find means of access to those countries, might take possession thereof, as derelict lands.”

The very fact that he thinks that by some means or other people might get to these countries, shows that he is talking about this area in the heart of America.

Viscount HALDANE : The importance of it is that they seem to say that the view of the King is that it means, do not divide it up completely and entirely, but divide it over the interior of these areas enough to enable someone to keep the peace.

Lord Sumner.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Very nearly that, my Lord. Might I respectfully suggest, as I have read the document through, that it perhaps can be put this way. It is very much what your Lordship has said. The King here is saying : “ You propose a boundary of Quebec and you propose that the Indian country round the Great Lakes shall be left outside the Province of Quebec.” The King is here saying : “ I think it would be a better plan to treat the Indian country as separate from the Province of Quebec.” He says : “ I do not mean by that, that I think you ought to allow the grants of private land and settlements to colonials of the whole of the Indian country.” That, your Lordships appreciate, would have been a very gross breach of the Treaties and bargains that had been made with the Iroquois and these other great native tribes who are round the Great Lakes. He says : “ I am not suggesting you should allow the whole country to be open for colonisation in that sense ; I think it should be within the jurisdiction of Quebec.”

Lord SUMNER: At lines 12 and 13 he says : “ and other powers, who might hereafter find means of access to these countries, might take possession thereof, as derelict lands.” The interior of Labrador is bounded by Hudson's Bay, the Labrador coast, and the interior of Quebec, not to mention ice, an interior of no real value to anybody ; what likelihood was there of any other power taking possession of it or staying there?

Sir JOHN SIMON : My Lord, it is perfectly plain. This document refers to the fact that there was means of access or there might develop means of access to these rich lands which at present formed the middle west of the United States, and on that side the thing was not boxed in : but to say that he was talking about this little green area of mine is really quite preposterous. He goes on at line 14 : “ The King therefore is of Opinion, that, in the Commission for the Governor of Canada, all the Lakes, viz., Ontario, Erie, Huron, Michigan, and Superior, should be included, with all the Country, as far North, and West, as the limits of the Hudson's Bay Company, and the Mississipi ; And also that all Lands whatsoever, ceded by the late Treaty, and which are not already included within the Limits of His Majesty's ancient Colonies, or intended to form the Governments of East and West Florida, as described in your Lordships Report, be assigned to the Government of Canada.” I am going to ask your Lordships, if you will, to turn to Mitchell's Map. If your Lordships would not mind having spread out perhaps one copy of the big map of Mitchell in the Canadian Atlas No. 11, you will see I think exactly what it was that King George III had in his mind and was expressing in this passage. It is such a big map that I hardly think your Lordships will want to have more than one copy. As I told your Lordships, there is a copy of this map—not indeed quite as reproduced in the Canadian Atlas—in the British Museum, which comes from the library of King George III, and we must remember that there are marks on this map which had not been made, and could not have been made, at the time of the document. We are now reading, 1763. For example. there are marks upon it which describe the boundary as described by Mr. Oswald. That was Mr. Richard Oswald, merchant and politician, who was the Commissioner for Great Britain when, in 1872, there was negotiated the Teaty which separated the United States from British soil ; so, of course, that is all afterwards. This map was made by this most distinguished man of science, Mr. Mitchell, in 1755, and it is known to have been the most authoritative map of the period. Now would your Lordships first do something which is always difficult to do to a big map. The bigger the lettering the more difficult it is to see it. Would your Lordships kindly observe in the green area which is to the east and south-east of the Mississippi, you will find across the green area in very big letters “ SIX ” and then “ NATIONS ” and then just below “ OF ” and then “ INDIANS.” As a matter of fact, as Lord Haldane made this point the other day, it had been the policy of the British in the Continent of North America to deal with the Indians on this basis, that they made treaties, that they got cessions of territory and the like, secured them in their hunting grounds, and took particular care to observe very strictly the arrangements they had made. There had been, for instance, a treaty or contract or compact in 1711 ; there had had been another one in 1722 ; there were three or four more throughout the century. There was a very well-known one with the Indians which was called the Treaty of Easton or Easttown ; and it was a fixed policy in North America at that time that in respect of the area, which was at that time a populous area, principally occupied by these very powerful tribes of Indians, the Iroquois and others, you made treaties with them, and this boundary which your Lordships will see is also marked as “ boundary line between the English and French territories,” is a boundary which had more significance in connection with the Indian reservations.

p. 278

The LORD CHANCELLOR : It is not “ Six Nations of Indians,” is it? It is “ Six Nations or Iroquois.”

Sir .JOHN SIMON: I beg your Lordship's pardon, that is right : “ Six Nations or Iroquois.”

Lord SUMNER : There were six separate tribes, but they were all Iroquois.

Sir .JOHN SIMON : There were, my Lord, and then there came to be a seventh and then there came to be an eighth, and there is a very interesting history attaching to this if we had to go into it.

Viscount FINLAY : They were said to be the ablest and most enterprising of the Indians.

28 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Yes, my Lord. Would your Lordship look at the blue which runs side by side with the red, south of Lake Michigan, just under the word “ Boundary ”? You will see this inscription : “ Western bounds of the Six Nations sold and surrendered to Great Britain.”

Viscount FINLAY : Where is that exactly?

Sir JOHN SIMON : I have a little difficulty in saying it by word of mouth, but if your Lordship would take the south of Lake Michigan you will see that running through it is a band of red and blue. It is buried in the blue which is below ; it is in rather small print, but it is there all right. I will read it again ; it begins nearly at the junction of the Mississippi ; if you go to the junction of that line with the Mississippi, it is really the Ohio and Mississippi, you will see “ Western bounds Six Nations sold and surrendered to Great Britain.”

p. 279

Lord Sumner.

It is not the Ohio River ; it is the River Illinois. The thing which will make it quite plain and well founded will be this. You will also see on the light green a note printed just below where you last looked, to this effect :—“ The Six Nations have extended their territories to the River Illinois ever since the year 1672, when they subdued and were incorporated with the ancient Chaouanons, the native proprietors of these countries, and the River Ohio. Besides which they likewise claim a right of conquest over the Illinois, and all the Mississippi as far as they extend. This is confirmed by their own claims and possessions in 1742, which include all the bounds here laid down ” and so forth. There is an immense history about this, but it is really not material. I only want to make the point perfectly clear—and I believe it can be overwhelmingly established from all sorts of communications—that the Indian country, the country that King George III and his advisers were talking about, has nothing in the world to do with the interior of my green area.

Sir John Simon.

Lord SUMNER : Probably it is the case that the political policy concerned has confined itself to Indian country which lay between this country of the old authorities and the line of the Great Lakes which had long been explored from Quebec. But there is another aspect, is there not, in the possible humanitarian motive, even in the eighteenth century, in the interests of the savages themselves. The Esquimaux lived on the caribou, and the caribou was a migratory animal very difficult to follow up. If the interior of Labrador was not left undisturbed the Esquimaux might suffer, just as the Indians ultimately suffered by the extinction of the buffalo, And I think it is a fact that there was an annual movement of the Esquimaux into the interior to try to find the herd, and if they did not find the herd they starved. It may have been that some of the statesmen even in King George III's time might have been somewhat concerned for these people.

Lord Sumner.

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON : I think it is but justice to the memory of those statesmen to say that again and again through this volume you can see whether, as a matter of high policy, or as a matter of humane feeling, there cannot be the slightest question that they wished to provide this Indian country both from their own and the Indian point of view.

Lord SUMNER : I think the Indian country appears to have very little reference indeed to the interior of the Peninsula of Labrador, but at the same time the policy of leaving the country for the Indians may have had some effect.

Sir JOHN SIMON : It may. I rather suspect your Lordships will form the view when you have heard this case out that so far as the Coast of Labrador in my sense is concerned the thing really was of such trumpery importance as compared with these very important matters round the Great Lakes and Quebec, that really, once you have provided for the question of Labrador going to Newfoundland, there was nothing more to be said. Would your Lordships turn to page 28 of the same set of maps for a moment, and note what you have already seen. You have got there, of course, an Indian country vaguely indicated. See how striking it is when you are told that the country in question will be sufficiently described if you say that it is bounded on the west by the Mississippi, bounded on the north by the Hudson's Bay territory, and bounded on the east by the boundaries of the Government of Quebec, which is my yellow lozenge, and your Majesty's Ancient Colonies. " Ancient Colonies " means, your Lordships remember, that band of coast colonies which run down from Nova Scotia, New England, and so forth. That does, as a matter of fact, roughly enclose an area, and you will find in a moment that that is the very language which is used to describe the Indian country in the documents we are dealing with. They say we need not be too precise about its boundaries. It is quite enough to say you will find it shut in between the Mississippi, the Hudson's Bay territory, the new Government of Quebec and your Majesty's Ancient Colonies. That gives you, at any rate, an indication of an area which certainly does not touch the green area I am interested in.

If I may go back to the document, there is very little in this one that matters. It was one of the eases where King George III took one view and the Lords of Trade took another, and in the end the King gave up his view and the view of the Lords of Trade was the view which was adopted. We were reading at page 916. After having spoken of these matters there is a reference at the bottom of page 916, line 35, to the King's decision to appoint the Honourable James Murray to be Governor of Canada, and so on ; and on the next page you will get the phrase " the Ancient Colonies " which occurs again and again. It was a perfectly well understood phrase at that time. It meant those colonies on the Atlantic seaboard. Then a little lower down, line 19, it says : " His Majesty thinks it highly proper, that the Agents for Indian Affairs should correspond with your Lordships, in regard to the Indian Country." That being the view which is communicated to the Lords of Trade by the Secretary of State for the Southern Department, Lord Egremont, as being the Royal judgment, you get the highly respectful reply of the Lords of Trade on page 919. " May it please your Majesty— In obedience to your Majesty's commands contained in a letter from the Earl of Egremont, dated the 14th of July last, signifying to us your Majesty's most gracious approbation of our idea, that that large tract of country "—would your Lordships observe these words—" bounded by the Mississippi and the limits of the Hudson Bay Company on the one hand and on the other by the limits of Canada "—that means the lozenge of Quebec, whatever it is—" East and West Florida and His Majesty's ancient Colonies, should for the present be made subject to no grants of lands nor to any settlements." I attach great importance to the geographical comprehension of what is there said. It seems to me to be perfectly clear, therefore, that the subject matter is something which does not touch my green area at all. In those days the assumption was that if you went up the Mississippi to its actual source you would reach the height of land, and reach a point where you would begin to go down to the Hudson's Bay. Therefore, to trace it to this top of the Mississippi was the same thing the same thin as to strike the Hudson's Bay country. Your Lordships recollect we have already had that in another connection. That gives you, therefore, a complete enclosure on that side. If you run up the Mississippi to its source you will be impinging upon the Hudson's Bay country. The other enclosures are to be the limits of Canada—that is Quebec ; they called it Canada at first—and then, going a little out of the order because East and West Florida is going to the other end, you have East and West Florida, and the gap in the hedge is filled up by His Majesty's ancient Colonies. That is the area they are talking about. They say that is their idea, and they go on to say : “ But acquainting us, that it was your Majesty's pleasure, that it should be put under some civil jurisdiction, by a Commission under the Great Seal of Great Britain, so as to prevent any objection ”—and so on—and then the Lords of Trade take a very good point. This is an interesting piece of politics. This is what they say, if my Lords will let me put it in my own way in a sentence. They say, we quite understand your Majesty's notion, but there is this objection. If we did that, it might be argued hereafter that this immense area of the Indian country was British soil by a title which wa[s] derived from the French. They say that is quite untrue. Our title to it is quite independent of the French. It is really due to a series of contracts, purchases and treaties, made with Indian tribes. That is the reason they do not like the idea. At the bottom of page 919 they say : ‘ We are apprehensive that, should this country be annexed to the Government of Canada, a colour might be taken on some future occasion, for supposing that your Majesty's title to it, had taken its rise, singly from the cessions made by France, in the late Treaty, whereas Your Majesty's title to the Lakes ”—observe the expression “ Lakes ”—“ and circumjacent territory as well as to the sovereignty over the Indian tribes, particularly of the Six Nations,”—the first is geographical, the second is a matter of jurisdiction—“ rests on a more solid and even a more equitable foundation ;and perhaps nothing is more necessary than that just impressions on this subject should be carefully preserved in the minds of the Indians.” etc.

Sir John Simon.

p. 281

Lord Sumner.

Sir John Simon.

28 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Lord SUMNER : It is a subject on which just impressions should be preserved in the minds of the Indians whether the title is derived by cessions and conquest, or whether it is derived from themselves by treaties.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Yes. It goes on : “ whose ideas might be blended and confounded, if they should be brought to consider themselves as under the Government of Canada.” There was this much in it of a more solid kind ; that since the Government of Canada was going to have what one might call a French complexion it might be a matter of most practical politics that these great Indian tribes accustomed to regard themselves as the allies and friends of Britain and who had taken part in the fighting against France, should not be put in a position where it might be supposed they were being grouped with the French element. There was that much in it. Then they give other reasons which do not matter much, and they therefore argue for their own view.

2 Q

Now at the bottom of page 921 you see a striking proof of the fact that it is quite unjust to suppose George III an obstinate man. There Lord Egremont says :—“ My Lords . . . I am commanded to acquaint your Lordships that his Majesty, upon consideration of the reasons therein set forth, is pleased to lay aside the idea of including within the Government of Canada, or of any established Colony, the lands which are to be reserved, for the present, for the use of the Indians.” The phrase three lines from the bottom of the page is “ lay aside.”

Viscount Haldane.

This, though an interesting topic, is really only faintly relevant. The only point that matters is that I should satisfy your Lordships—really it is a matter rather for the other side than for me—that the lands which are to be reserved for the use of the Indians, or the Indian country, or the area surrounded by the Mississippi boundary, the Hudson's Bay, his Majesty's ancient Colonies, and the Government of Quebec, is not my green.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE : Tell me what office Lord Halifax filled.

Sir JOHN SIMON : If your Lordship will turn to the bottom of page 923 there is a note which informs you as to that matter. “ Lord Egremont died suddenly from apoplexy, and the Earl of Halifax temporarily took over the duties of the department, being formally transferred to the Southern Department about September 9th.”

Viscount HALDANE : He was Secretary of State for the Northern Department. I suppose really what he did was this. The Southern Department had been in the hands of Lord Egremont, and the Southern Department was really advising the King, and it was thought necessary that the King should have a Minister who could independently take his instructions.

28 Oct., 1926.
Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON : I may suggest to your Lordship, who knows the practice about Secretaries of State very well ; that it is an illustration of the ancient constitutional principle that any one Secretary of State can sign any document for any other. If I may venture to say so, a former Home Secretary remembers very well that he was probably the last person who ever signed a document for Lord Kitchener, because when the Secretary of State for War was out of the country some other Secretary of State had to sign the document. Of course, it was prepared in the War Department. It is a well known constitutional principle that the King has one Secretary of State who is divided into several persons. I trust you will think I have made good my point sufficiently for the moment, that this attempt to treat the Indian lands as though they had anything to do with my case will be found completely to break down. I have a lot of other material I might give, but I think I have probably done it sufficiently.

p. 283

I will give your Lordships one more reference which perhaps will clinch it. It is at page 1104. That is a document headed “ Proposed Extension of Provincial Limits,” and it is a commentary explaining what you find at the beginning of page 1099, namely a draught of the Quebec Bill.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : About what time is this ?

Sir JOHN SIMON : In 1774. It is the year of the Quebec Act. There is a draught of the Quebec Bill on page 1099, and, then on the following pages, page 1104 and so on, you get a sort of commentary. Will your Lordships look at the bottom of page 1104, line 23. You will see there the official view. “ The King's servants were induced to confine the Government of Quebec within the above limits ”—that is referring back to something which had taken place eleven years before—“ from an apprehension that there were no settlements of Canadian subjects, or lawful possessions beyond those limits, and from a hope of being able to carry into execution a plan that was then under consideration for putting the whole of the Interior Country to the westward of our Colonies”—that means our ancient Colonies—“ under one general control and regulation by Act of Parliament.”

Viscount HALDANE : That seems to be a plan for putting the whole of the west under a new Government.

Sir JOHN SIMON : It was so. If your Lordship reads the earlier documents you will see that is involved. The idea was that Quebec should be my lozenge-shaped area, and that the area to the west of the ancient Colonies, the Indian country, 28 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

the area between the Mississippi, Hudson's Bay, and our ancient Colonies, should be under an administration separate from the Government of Quebec. The only point I am making is that it is treated, as your Lordship sees, as something separate. As a matter of fact, the Indian territories were to be under the administration of a Commissioner for Indian Affairs. There were two Commissioners, the southern one and the northern one.

Viscount HALDANE : Were they local ?

Sir JOHN SIMON : Yes, they were there. It is a very striking fact that the country we are here referring to is put under the jurisdiction of the southern one, which again is a proof that it has nothing to do with Esquimaux dressed up in furs, or an occasional Indian pursuing an animal on the Labrador coast. It has to do with the noble Red Man, the noble Savage, who at that time formed a numerous and very important body in the great interior of America That for the moment will make that point sufficiently, I think.

I have only one other reference which I wish to make in the book, and only one other reference I wish to make to a map, and then if your Lordships will allow me I should like to conclude my submissions here by offering to the Board the summary of submissions which we seek at this stage to make. We have been at some pains to reduce them into order, and I have got them on paper, and if your Lordships think it well, that paper will be available. I have put them into nine short sentences.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE : I think we had better have copies of them.

Sir JOHN SIMON : When the time comes I will offer them to your Lordships. There is one other reference which I wish to make in the book itself. I want to make good this point, though I do not think it is disputed. It is suggested against me that the only thing on the Mainland of Labrador that the Governor of Newfoundland had was the Admiralty jurisdiction and the general looking after the fisheries from what you may call the sailor's point of view. That is the suggestion against me, and it is said that there was not, as I suggest there was, a second and independent thing, namely a territorial jurisdiction over a substantial area going back to the height of land, which I call the Coast of Labrador.

Viscount HALDANE : I think you must not assume that the dilemma which Canada seeks to put on your area is exhaustive. There may be a very large coastal territory under the name of " Coasts." How it is to be drawn may be a question. But that is a very long way from 110,000 square miles.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Certainly. It may be that those who advise the Government of Canada are in this matter like Commissioner Bladen at the Treaty of Utrecht, and are asking for a great deal more than they think they are entitled to or expect to get. But after all, that will come afterwards. I am not for the moment talking about the miles. All I am saying is that my ease is that over and above the naval supervision and all the jurisdiction which attaches to that which undoubtedly was primarily in the jurisdiction exercised by the Governor of Newfoundland, my case, right or wrong, is that there was as between 1763 and 1774 a second subject matter which I may call territorial. Now what happened in 1774 ? What happened was admittedly that the area under the Government of the Governor of Quebec was very greatly enlarged. But the striking fact is that though the area under the government of Quebec was enlarged in that way, which seemed to swallow up my former territorial area, the duty on the part of the Governor of Newfoundland of continuing to watch over the fisheries and stop people trespassing and doing things they should not do, remained exactly the same. That seems a strong reason for saying that there is something quite over and above the mere supervision of the fisheries, a separate subject matter—X I will call it, because it may not be as much as 110,000 square miles—something which is passed to the Governor of Quebec and then is passed back at a later stage to the Governor of Newfoundland.

Sir John Simon.

I think I have stated accurately the effect of the documents. Perhaps I may now give your Lordships a couple of references, and then leave that point. The reference which is perhaps most illustrative for the purpose would be this. Turning to Volume II, page 834, you will find the terms of the instructions to Governor Sir Guy Carleton, which accompanied his enlarged Commission consequent upon the extension of the boundaries of Quebec.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : The document begins at page 820. It is the year 1775. That is after the passing of the Quebec Act.

Sir JOHN SIMON : That is after the passing of the Quebec Act. The result of the passing of the Quebec Act was that you had to enlarge the area of the Government of Quebec, and you had to contract the area of the Government of Newfoundland. Here I am calling attention to the enlargement of the duties of the Governor of Quebec. I merely pick this out as an illustration—there are plenty more. I would like to take page 832, paragraph 30. “ The extension of the limits of the Province of Quebec necessarily calls forth your attention to a variety of new matters and new objects of consideration ; the protection and control of the various settlements of Canadian subjects, and the regulation of the Peltry Trade in the upper or interior country on the one hand, and the protection of the Fisheries in the Gulph of St. Lawrence, and on the Labrador Coast on the other hand, point to regulations, that require deliberation and despatch.” The most important extension was the extension west and south. The other one was comparatively small. Then paragraph 32 says : “ It is our Royal intention, that the Peltry Trade of the interior country should be free and open to all our subjects, inhabitants of any of our Colonies ” and so forth. All that refers, at any rate primarily, to the interior country. Then at page 834, line 37, we have this : “ We have mentioned to you the Fisheries upon the Coast of Labrador, as the main object of your attention ; but the commerce carried on with savages of that coast, and the state and condition of these savages deserve some regard.”

Viscount HALDANE : This is a part of the Labrador Coast which Quebec had got.

Sir JOHN SIMON : This is after 1774 ; your Lordship is quite right. It refers not to the Hudson's Bay area, but to time other area.

Viscount HALDANE : It refers to what Quebec had got.

Sir JOHN SIMON : I do not think it can be disputed, if my argument is accepted as to the boundaries of the Hudson's Bay area, that the effect of 1774 was to make Quebec include everything which was to the south of the line I have just traced on the model. That, I think, is plain.

p. 286

Viscount HALDANE : That is the whole of the Labrador fisheries.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Always limiting yourself to the Atlantic side of Cape Chidley. No doubt that is true. The paragraph says : “ We have mentioned to you the Fisheries upon the Coast of Labrador, as the main object of your attention ; but the commerce carried on with savages of that Coast, and the state and condition of those savages deserve some regard ; the Society of Unitas Fratrum, urged by a laudable zeal for promoting Christianity, has already, under our protection, and with our permission, formed establishments in the northern parts of that Coast for the purpose of civilising the Natives, and converting them to the Christian Religion. Their success has been answerable to their zeal ; and it is our express will and pleasure, that you do give them every countenance and encouragement in your power ” and so forth. In paragraph 39 in the same way there are instructions about the timber. Side by side with that, however, you will find that the exercise of the Admiralty jurisdiction, the general preventing of the incursion of unauthorised persons interfering with the Labrador fisheries, remains with the Governor of Newfoundland. I will give your Lordships an illustration. You will see it in the same volume, Volume II. I could trace this out with a great many instances, but probably these are enough for the moment. Will your Lordships take page 498.

Viscount HALDANE : That is very peculiar, and it may be that there was a division in the Cabinet.

Sir JOHN SIMON : It is not for me to say whether there were divisions in the Cabinet in the middle of the eighteenth century.

Viscount HALDANE : We know there were.

28 Oct., 1926.

Sir JOHN SIMON : But I really think, if I may say so, that the explanation is a different one. I will not go into detail now. I think the explanation is that the Governor of Newfoundland down to a certain point had two things to do. Then in 1774 there is a change, as a result of which he ceases to have one of the two things to do, but he retains the other of the two things.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE : It is very difficult to draw the line.

Sir JOHN SIMON : I have no doubt the point is that somebody does draw it, and here it is at page 498. These are the instructions to Robert Duff, who was Governor of Newfoundland.

Viscount Haldane.

Viscount HALDANE : This was in 1775 ?

Sir JOHN SIMON : Yes. It is exactly contemporaneous with what I last read.

p. 287

Sir John Simon.

Lord SUMNER : These are Admiralty instructions.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes.

Viscount HALDANE : Emanating from the Lord High Admiral.

Sir JOHN SIMON: Yes. I have traced these things very carefully, and I find them carefully co-ordinated. I could give you a series of documents in the third volume showing this was discussed between Lord Dartmouth and the Admiralty, Lord Dartmouth and Governor Carleton, Governor Carleton and Governor Duff. It was all divided up very carefully.

Viscount HALDANE : At that time the Lord High Admiral was independent of the Cabinet. His superior was the King, and only the King. The King said “ I am superior to the Cabinet and my servants, and I will take the advice of which of my servants I think proper.”

Sir JOHN SIMON : On the other hand, Lord Dartmouth was not at the Admiralty, The thing begins, I can assure your Lordship—and if necessary I will give your Lordship the reference in Volume III—with a careful discussion between the Secretary of State and the Admiralty as to what will be the best way to divide it up.

Viscount HALDANE : Most probably. But they were not co-equals.

Sir JOHN SIMON : I have no doubt the Lord High Admiral was a very important person. It was not till long afterwards that he took the humble position of an ordinary seat in the Cabinet. Still, look at the language of it : “ Whereas we have appointed you Commander in Chief of His Majesty's Ships & Vessels employ'd and to be employed at and about the Island of Newfoundland the Islands of Madelaine & Anticosti and upon the Coast of Labrador.” Then they go on to say : “ Whereas you have received His Majesty's Commission appointing you Governor & Commander in Chief in and over the Island of Newfoundland and of the Islands of Madelaine in the Gulph of St. Lawrence, and of all the Forts &

Sir John Simon.

Garrisons erected & established in the said Islands, And also His Majesty's Instructions for your Government therein you are to take particular care"—to do so and so. His own Commission has been narrowed. Then over the page, on page 498, would you kindly note the language used in paragraph 7 ; this is the only point I am making on it. " You are to settle and guard the Fishery not only at Placentia & St. Johns but as far to the Northward upon the Coasts of Newfoundland & upon those of the Continent of Labrador as your command extends." My Lord, his Command extended up to Hudson's Straits, " And to exert your best endeavours to encourage & support the Whale Fishery in the Straits of Belle Isle, the Cod Fishery in York Harbour and on the other parts of the Coast of the abovementioned Continent, as also the Seal, Sea Cow &

p. 288

Sir John Simon.

Salmon Fisheries on the said Coast ; And to hinder any Trade or intercourse being carried on by any Person whatsoever other than the Subjects of Great Britain with the Inhabitants of that Country which of right belongs solely to His Majesty ; and whereas the Coast of Labrador and the Islands adjacent have, by a late Act of Parliament been re-annexed." This is the territorial business, he has lost his territorial area—re-annexed to the Province of Quebec. And His Majesty hath by His Instructions to the Governor of that Province"—which is Governor Carleton, those are the very instructions I have just been reading.

Viscount HALDANE : " Upon the Coasts of Newfoundland and upon those of the Continent of Labrador," you say that is upon the coasts of Labrador.

Sir JOHN SIMON : I do.

Viscount HALDANE : They use the expression " the Continent of Labrador " as contrasted with coast.

Sir JOHN SIMON : I quite accept that. It is not quite, with great respect, the point I am making. The point is you get here apparently a sub-division of what was formerly in a single hand, and all I am urging is that that goes to show you cannot describe the sum total of the Newfoundland connection with, I will not say either coast or continent, but with the green area as being limited to the care and inspection of the fisheries and all these other things, because that goes on just the same : " After you have transferred to the Province of Quebec," that is Governor Carleton at line 10, the page I had previously read in the same volume. " Dated the 3rd of January last signified to him, that the Fisheries on the said Coast & Islands are objects of the greatest importance, not only on account of the Commodities they produce but also as Nurseries of Seamen upon which the strength & security of His Kingdoms depend," and so forth.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : These are instructions to Governor Duff, not as Governor of Newfoundland, but as Admiral of the Fleet.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Your Lordship is quite right. Without turning them up now you might think it convenient to make a note of those references which will show how the two things are knitted together. In Volume III you will find, at page 1147, the letter of the Secretary of State, Lord Dartmouth, to the Admiralty, discussing what should be done. Ten pages on in Volume III, page 1157, you will find the letter from Lord Darmouth to the Admiralty in the following year, April, 1775, about it, and in the same volume, page 1162, you will find Governor Duff in communication with Sir Guy Carleton about it, and in Volume III at page 1163, you will find Governor Duff in communication with the Secretary of State, Lord Dartmouth about it. What the Lord

p. 289

Chancellor says is perfectly just, what it shows undoubtedly is Admiralty instructions. That is quite just. All I am saying is that it rather helps, if I need further help, to show that the persons who were dealing with this matter in the sixties and seventies of the 18th century—when they talk about the coast of Labrador they were not doing what very naturally suggests itself perhaps to some of us to-day, they were not, as a matter of fact, meaning the coast of Labrador for the purposes of territorial jurisdiction.

I have finished with the green books, I am sure your Lordships will be very glad, at any rate, at present. My friend, Mr. Barrington-Ward, who is going to follow me, is going more particularly to address an argument to the subject of fisheries ; that is a compartment which I am very very glad indeed, amongst others, to leave in his hands.

My other reference to you is to a map. I wish your Lordships to take, as a mere illustration, and I think a striking illustration, one of the maps in the Newfoundland Atlas, a map which is made by a well-known cartographer of the time which you have already looked at, namely Bellin, and as was not uncommon when Mr. Bellin, or other people of that sort, made a map, they accompanied the map by some sort of book which you could buy and read at your leisure. Here is the Book. (Producing same.)

The LORD CHANCELLOR : What is the number of the map?

Sir JOHN SIMON : Bellin's map is No. 12 of the Newfoundland Atlas and it was accompanied by a book which we have got from the British Museum.

Viscount HALDANE : What is the date of it?

Sir JOHN SIMON : 1755, map makers always tend to copy one another. I have here, and it is a very interesting book, the volume from the British Museum, and some extracts from it have been printed and are in the Record. It is called “ Remarques sur la Carte de l’Amerique Septentrionale ” between certain degrees of latitude “ avec une Description Géographique de cette Partie de l’Amerique ” and so on “ Par M. Bellin.” It is published at Paris at the Golden Bible in 1755.

Viscount HALDANE : That is not an official document?

Sir JOHN SIMON : Certainly not. If your Lordship cares to look at the note opposite Map No. 12 you will learn all about Mr. Bellin, he was a very considerable person in the French Officialworld.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : We have gone far beyond the rules of evidence in this case.

Mr. MACMILLAN : You notice I have not intervened at all.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE : It is like the construction of a Treaty, you look into everything.

Sir JOHN SIMON : What I am going to say is, I think, a legitimate illustration of the meaning of the expression "The Coasts." That is what I am upon. If you have before you Mr. Bellin's map of 1755, No. 12, you will find that on page 6—I will hand the book, if I may, to the Lord Chancellor, I have made my notes sufficiently for the purpose. (Original book handed to the Lord Chancellor.) He is expounding his map, and he says on page 6 he divides North America into six principal parts, and he says he is going to discuss them in six sections of his book. I am relying now rather on my recollection, but I think that is how it runs. The word actually, I think, is six "articles." The interesting thing is to see how does he break up the Continent of America because these six things put together will make the Continent of North America as he knows it, and as you see it in his map. This is the way he does it. First, Hudson's Bay and the neighbouring country, which would include that part which Lord Sumner observed marked on the map "Unknown" and so on. You notice he has got on his map the Hudson's Bay Territory traced round with a line half yellow and half green, which, as your Lordships observed before, is really running on the heights of land, that is his first area. He cuts that out. Now, secondly, New France or Canada. He gives the two names ; he is going to say in a moment, in the text, something about Newfoundland and Labrador, but it is all included in his second compartment. Now, thirdly, this my Lord is what I should like your Lordships very much to observe. Perhaps Lord Finlay would observe it as the book is within reach of him. He is going on in the third compartment to deal with this : "Les Côtes Orientales de l'Amérique." It is one of his 6 divisions, he is going to describe it :—"depuis l'Acadie jusqu'à la Floride, contenant les pays possédés par les Anglois, entre les Montagnes des Apalaches & l'Océan." There you have a perfectly good contemporary illustration of what I conceive to be, and what such researches as we have made on the maps and otherwise show was constantly done at the time ; he is in terms saying now there is another section on the map which I have marked and he describes it as "The Coasts."

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : It is in the plural?

Sir JOHN SIMON : He says : "Les Cotes," the eastern coasts of America ; if you look at his map you see it is as a matter of fact that yellow area lying between Nova Scotia and Georgia, being in fact what used to be known as the ancient Colony and carrying them back to the height of land which means the Allegany's at the top and the Apalaches further down. I care nothing at all whether the range of mountains is as a matter of fact straight as indicated on that map or not. All I am saying is : How can anybody feel a difficulty in believing that the coast of Labrador between certain points runs back to the height of land when it is perfectly plain in the language of geographers at the time breaking up the whole solid continent of North America into pieces, this, is to be described, just as you describe New France as a unit or Hudson's Bay as a unit, as " Les Cotes Orientale." Then he goes on : " (4) Florida ; (5) Louisiana "—you will notice how striking it is here—Florida is edged pink, a separate area, and then Louisiana is to be found marked in the north west of the pink and lastly " (6) New Mexico and neighbouring countries." Nouveau Mexique is marked there with the great river running down, but the outlet of it is not shown.

Viscount Finlay.

Viscount HALDANE : Do you rely on this as showing that the territory of Labrador extended up to the height of land?

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON : I do, by analogy. I am saying so far as we are at liberty to inform our minds, what in the ordinary acceptation of the term " All the Coasts " meant in that sort of connection. It is not without value to observe that a most distinguished geographer and writer at the time is in express terms saying if you were to take a fretwork saw and were to divide the Continent of North America into six parts and were to take this block, that is : " Les Cotes de l'Amerique," between two points on the sea border exactly as I say, the Coasts of America run back to the height of land between two points.

The Lord Chancellor.

Sir John Simon.

Viscount HALDANE : It does not say to whom the great Continent of Labrador belongs ?

Sir JOHN SIMON : No, for the moment I am only dealing with it as an analogy.

Viscount FINLAY : You are merely dealing with the point that this mode of dividing up the country was a natural system which presented itself as the best way for a geographer.

28 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : It is before the Treaty of Paris.

Sir JOHN SIMON : It is before the Treaty of Paris ; it is 1755. I have nothing to do with political boundaries ; I am merely dealing with nomenclature.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : You have got a rather strong expression on page 26. It says : " Les Cotes de Labrador, Grand et vaste Pays."

Sir JOHN SIMON : I marked it. Perhaps your Lordship would like to take an intermediate one, if you would take page 18 your Lordship will find he refers to Greenland ; he knew nothing about Greenland, but he distinguishes in the case of Greenland. He divides Greenland into two parts, and he says on page 18 that the “ Cote Occidentale,” the

\

p. 292

western coast of Greenland is called New Greenland. Now, if you would look at the map you will see where he writes “ Nouveau Greenland.”

Viscount HALDANE : At this date who would Greenland belong to?

Sir JOHN SIMON : I think at this date it was Danish. Perhaps you would notice on page 27, where he does deal with Labrador, the Lord Chancellor's eye will catch the page, if I remember rightly he says there—he knows a good deal about it—“ Between Cape Charles and St. Augustine the Coast of Labrador is watered by many rivers some of them considerable.” Now if you turn to page 71 there is incidental proof of what was understood by the “ Indian country ” at the time. He really was a very well-informed geographer—this man.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : He says Labrador means “ Terre du laboureur,” which he says was given to it by the Spanish.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Some say Spanish and some say Portuguese.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : The French had the sole rights in this area,

Sir JOHN SIMON : If you turn on to page 71, although this is on a topic which I have already dealt with (it is only an incident), you will find he says : “ On Lake Superior there is a Bourgade of Indians,”—a large town of Indians—“ which has become very large,” and he gives the names of the tribes of Indians, they are extraordinary names including names like Illinois and Hurons. They were established there for trading The whole context in which he uses this expression “ Les Cotes ”—he uses it again and again—goes, I submit, to show really there was not any straining of language at all ; on the contrary it was a perfectly natural thing at any rate at the time to describe “ all the Coasts of Labrador,” without troubling yourself further, as meaning whatever area would ultimately be found, which sloped down to the water's edge. Your Lordship has in mind that expression : “ The natural boundaries ” which occurs in one of the documents I have read.

28 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Now, my Lords, I have occupied your Lordships' patience I am afraid very long, and I wish to make good my word and resist all temptation for saying anything more now, and I will submit, if I may, the propositions or the submissions.

Viscount HALDANE : Have you copies ?

Sir JOHN SIMON : Yes, if your Lordship will allow me, of course, I shall be very happy to read them out and hand in copies. We have taken a little pains about it. You may even find that the 9 propositions can be reduced. They have been checked and I hope they will not be found very wrong. (Copies handed in.)

I have put it in this form, I am conscious, of course, by using these

p. 293

Mr. Macmillan.

phrases I may unwittingly be reviving points of discussion and controversy, but I have tried to put them in language which covers all I am urging. First : “ The document primarily to be construed, which is the root of the title of Newfoundland, is Governor Graves' Commission of April 25th., 1763—‘ all the coasts of Labrador.’ ”

The LORD CHANCELLOR : “ cf.” I take it means “ compare ? ”

Sir JOHN SIMON : “ cf.” is meant to be “ compare ”—“ cf. in the same document the phrase ‘ the coasts of territories of Labrador.’ ” It should be “ or territories ” not “ the coasts of territories.”

The Lord Chancellor.

Viscount HALDANE : It makes a difference, it should be “ or territories ? ”

Sir JOHN SIMON : It really is “ the coasts and territories.”

Viscount HALDANE : It is really “ and.”

Sir John Simon.

Sir JOHN SIMON : “ And ” is right. The expression is to be found on page 151 at line 31. I will not go back on the argument.

Mr. MACMILLAN : My only objection to these statements is that these are not submissions, they contain argumentative matter as well.

Viscount HALDANE : They sum up the argument as well.

Mr. MACMILLAN : I can quite understand submissions and propositions being handed in, that is rather helpful, but I rather resent parts of arguments being put in for emphasis.

28 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : Why ? Sir John is here to argue this, if he likes to put them in writing, so much the better. It really would be impossible to submit points otherwise.

Mr. MACMILLAN : I thought it was a series of propositions my friend was making.

Sir JOHN SIMON : My friend, Mr. Macmillan, no doubt is using “ propositions ” as meaning propositions of law. I did not intend that. There is a good deal more to be said I am afraid, which I have not said, about the contents of this Commission and many of the other things, which are strongly in my favour. Then 2. “ After the area which had thus been annexed to the Government of Newfoundland had been taken away in 1774, and had been ”—I quote the words “ re-annexed to the Government of Newfoundland ”—“ in 1809, it was declared by the Statute of 1825 to be expedient ‘ that certain parts of the said coast of Labrador should be re-annexed to and form part of the Province of Lower Canada ’ and so much of the coast as lies to the Westward of a line drawn due North from Anse Sablon to the 52nd parallel was re-annexed to and made part of the Province of Lower Canada and was thenceforward to be ‘subject to the laws of the said Province and none other.’” Now, my Lord, this is the submission. “ This treats the area transferred as cut out of a larger whole, so that the line of the 52nd parallel which forms the Northern Boundary of the area re-transferred must be regarded as lying within ‘ the coast of Labrador.’” That is the argument on the Statute of 1825. Then thirdly : “ The re-transfer of 1825 necessarily involved a corresponding reduction in the area administered by the Government of Newfoundland, and the language of the Commission to Sir Thomas Cochrane ”—which I called attention to—“ shows that his jurisdiction immediately to the East of Anse Sablon ran inland at least to the 52nd parallel.” If I may illustrate the thing for a moment on this plasticene model, if any occasion arose for the exercise of jurisdiction, let us say 35 miles inland immediately to the east of that meridian which is to run up to the 52nd parallel, can anybody doubt that Sir Thomas Cochrane and his judicial authorities would have the jurisdiction to deal with it. That is all I meant.

p. 294

The LORD CHANCELLOR : He was to be Governor of Labrador from Hudson's Straits to the line drawn north and south of Anse Sablon.

Sir JOHN SIMON : That is right. Against me it is suggested that this is nothing more than a finger post, to which I can only respectfully say it is the longest finger post I have ever heard of to indicate a point.

Viscount HALDANE : It is suggested that that only deals with coasts.

Sir JOHN SIMON : I know. I follow the suggestion. I am merely here to put one side of the argument.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : But it is down to the 52nd degree of latitude.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Which was known at the time (for instance Mitchell's map and the like) to involve a very deep cutting into the land.

Viscount HALDANE : Undoubtedly.

Sir JOHN SIMON : One asks oneself why 52nd? Then 4: “
The most authoritative maps available at the time (e.g. Mitchell, 1755, Canadian Atlas No. 11, Bellin, 1755, Newfoundland Atlas No, 12) indicated that the headwaters of the River St. John would be found approximately in latitude 52 or slightly further north, and consequently the Northern Boundary of the area re-annexed to Quebec in 1825 would reach approximately the apex of the original North Eastern corner of Quebec as defined in 1763.” Might I say on that since Lord Sumner made an observation to me when he inspected Mitchell's map some days ago, while I appreciate the force of what my Lord observed, that the map indicates that the River St. John goes back above the 52nd parallel, I think on re-inspection, my Lord will find he will agree with me in saying that it only indicates it goes back a very short way, for this reason : my Lord, I think, was only looking at the main map, in which case the thing goes off to the north, but in the left-hand top corner there is a smaller map on a smaller scale of the Labrador coast, and you will see if you examine that, and lay the 52nd parallel down across it, as a matter of fact the mark intended to indicate the River St. John begins just about there. Then fifthly : “ It is true that the primary object of the inclusion of a part of Labrador in the Newfoundland Commission was in order to secure that ‘ the open and free fishery ’ (not only cod but also salmon, seal, &c.) might be extended to and carried on upon the coast of Labrador, but it by no means follows that the area annexed to Labrador is limited to a mere fringe ”—it is a submission or proposition in the strictest Scottish sense—“ The motive which causes legislative and executive authorities to resolve to make a change in the law cannot be treated as limiting the effect of the language which is used when they in fact change the law. The grant may well be of an area from Cape Chidley downwards stretching to the height of land, so as to include the seaboard, the administration of which is the immediate reason for the change.”

Sir John Simon.

My Lords, sixthly, “ This conclusion,” I mean this larger interpretation, “ is the more easily reached in reference to an area which at the time and long afterwards was regarded as worthless.” Your Lordships, I think, have my point. It may be that a bibliophile urgently desires, or needs to acquire, one particular volume in a library, and it may be that when he makes his contract of sale and purchase he buys not the book, but the whole library ; you cannot say that he has not bought the whole library, because his object was only to buy one book ; and the probability of his buying more than one book is increased if the rest of it is thought at the time to be worth very little. Then 7, “ The words ‘ coast ’ and ‘ coasts ’ were constantly used in the 16th and 17th and 19th centuries,” I go no further, though I think it could go further, “ to indicate a territory with a defined sea frontage which stretched to the height of land. This language is employed even in cases where it was not known at the time how great a depth in mileage such a description might involve. Certum est quod certum reddi potest.” Then 8. “ Such an interpretation in the present case is confirmed by these three considerations,” I submit. “ (a) It secures that the additional area entrusted to Newfoundland does not trench upon the area already belonging to the Hudson Bay Company, for the height of land running South from Cape Chidley will be at one and the same time the Western Boundary of the one and the Eastern Boundary of the other (b) it explains why the area retransferred to Quebec in 1825, though bounded on the North by the 52nd parallel, was known to be part of the ' coast ' previously annexed to Newfoundland ; (c) it provides a scientific and practical test which enables the actual course of the boundary to be delimited with precision by the application of a prescribed formula to the physical facts, as and when those facts become precisely ascertained." Then my Lords, 9. (I am sorry there should be so many.) " The view contended for by Newfoundland is supported by the official maps and public declarations of the Dominion of Canada right down to the time when the backland was known to be worth having." I said 9, but there are really 10, I had forgotten this one. " 10. No other interpretation leads to the ' location and definition ' of a boundary but at best would involve either a vague or an arbitrary conclusion." I most respectfully submit on behalf of the ancient Colony of Newfoundland, that the considerations which it has been my duty to endeavour to lay before the Committee should lead to the conclusion that the boundary is a boundary to be fixed by reference to the height of land.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Lord SUMNER : There is one small point I notice in one of the Cases, it is with regard to that Island at Anse Sablon ; the question is whether it is an island adjacent to the one coast or to the other ; is there anything you wish to say about that.

Sir JOHN SIMON : That is one of the compartments, it is really a minor compartment, which my learned friend Mr. Barrington-Ward was going to deal with ; and I did not think it was a question which justified the two of us dealing with it.

Lord SUMNER : I only wanted to know whether you had considered that point.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Yes, my Lord. My learned friend Mr. Barrington-Ward has some remarks to add.

28 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : May it please you, my Lords. For some days past have had the pleasure of listening to my learned friend developing the arguments before your Lordships' Board, which, of course, represent the combined consideration of himself and his juniors in this case. What we have tried to do is to supply Sir John with all the assistance that is in our power to enable him to deal, in every compartment, with the case so as to present it as a whole before your Lordships' Board ; and I do not think that I should be serving any useful purpose by trying to improve in any way upon the remarks that my learned friend has already made to you on the various topics which represent the agreed submissions of the Counsel concerned in the case. What I, with your Lordships' permission and approval, propose to do is to deal as concisely as may be, with one or two topics which emerge, such as the minor topic which my Lord Sumner mentioned just now, a point which is, of course, of comparatively minor importance in the case, and generally to conclude and fill in the argument which has already been presented to you, in the detail and with the lucidity, if I may say it respectfully, which my learned leader always commands.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

p. 297

The matter which I particularly want to deal with in the first instance (I am not travelling outside the submissions which have been handed to you) is that which is contained in paragraphs 5 and 6 of this document, if I might just read them again so that you should have them in mind : “ It is true that the primary object of the inclusion of a part of Labrador in the Newfoundland Commission was in order to secure that ‘ the open and free fishery (not only cod, but also salmon, seal etc.)’ I pause there for one moment, just to make this observation : You will find in the Canadian Contention that the only fishery which they say is included by those words is the cod fishery. I shall have to develop that later on, and show that, at any rate so far as Labrador was concerned, the seal and the sea cow and the salmon fisheries loomed much larger than the cod fishery for a considerable and appreciable period of time.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : I do not see how seal and sea cow help you ; I can understand salmon.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Seal and sea cow help me in this way ; they are sedentary fisheries, and certainly with regard to the seal it is a seasonal fishery, and also with regard to the whale, it is a winter one. It goes on : “ But it by no means follows that the area annexed to Labrador is limited to a mere fringe. The motive which causes legislative and executive authorities to resolve to make a change in the law cannot be treated as limiting the effect of the language which is used when they, in fact, change the law. The grant may well be of an area from Cape Chidley downwards stretching to the height of land, so as to include the seaboard the administration of which is the immediate reason for the change,” and, my Lords, the pendant, if I may so call it, to that submission is, “ This conclusion is the more easily reached in reference to an area which at the time and long afterwards was regarded as worthless.” Now, my Lords, that submission immediately arises upon the passage in the proclamation of 1763. I am not going to read anything more than is necessary to your Lordships, if you will be good enough to have in mind the passage in the Proclamation by His Majesty of the 7th October, 1763. It is the first volume at page 153, and I am referring to the passage contained in page

28 Oct., 1926.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

154 at line 14. On that I am going to make three submissions, and then endeavour to assume one and make good the other two. The words are, “ And to the end that the open and free fishery of our subjects may be extended to and carried on upon the coast of Labrador, and the adjacent islands ”—your Lordships will notice these words, “ we have thought fit, with the advice of our said Privy Council, to put all that coast, from the River St. John's to Hudson's Streights together with the islands of Anticosti and the Madelaine, and all other smaller islands lying upon the said coast, under the care and inspection of our Governor of Newfoundland.”

Viscount HALDANE : You notice the words, “ under the care and inspection.”

2 S

p. 298

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : That is why I want to make a remark straight away on that. Your Lordships see that those are words in the recital, they recite something which has happened ; they are not operative word at all. It is not a case of His Majesty saying, “ We hereby place the Coasts of Newfoundland under the care and inspection,” that would raise quite a different question altogether ; it is merely a recital of an event which has happened, and it is common ground between the parties in this case (there is no doubt about that at all) that the real problem is the true construction to be placed upon the word, not “ coast ” but “ coasts,” in the Commission to Captain Thomas Graves. It is very important to bear that in mind. The Canadian Pleadings brought that out very clearly in one of the passages which I can refer to if necessary. Something which is really common ground between the parties is, that the origin of the powers, whatever they were, of the Governor of Newfoundland over Labrador is to be found in the Commission to Captain Thomas Graves. I do not think so far your Lordships have had your attention very much called to the Pleadings, but it is rather significant to notice that that is stated by the Canadians at page 50 of their Case, and conceded by us at page 89 of the Counter Case.

Viscount FINLAY : It was in fact stated.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : It will not take two or three minutes if I may read it, because you get the issue, or it is not an issue, you get the admission clearly defined, and that is the starting point of the argument which I am about to have the opportunity of addressing to your Lordships. If your Lordships would not mind looking back to page 50, it is rather a good summary of the true position on this part of the case. Perhaps I might begin to read at page 49, just to show you how those propositions are put forward ; I think my learned friend Mr. Macmillan, would agree that he has also used the word “ proposition ” in a sense which is the argumentative rather than the legal one. It is convenient to have this. “ Canada's Contention. . . . (1) The Extent of territory within the peninsula of Labrador to-day, subject to the authority of Newfoundland is the ‘ Coast ’ which by the Commission of the 25th April 1763, herein above recited, was as declared by the Royal Proclamation of the 7th October of that year, put under ‘ The care and inspection ’ of the Governor of Newfoundland.” Your Lordships see that quite accurately states, perhaps in better language than I use, the effect of those two documents—“ less the portion thereof re-annexed to the Province of Lower Canada ’—that Act of 1825 is commonly called the Canadian Tenure Act ; I have seen that short title used ; we have called it the 1825 Act.

Viscount HALDANE : It is Section 9.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD: Yes. Then the second proposition is very much in issue. I will just read that by way of finishing this part of the matter. This contention is, ‘ That the ‘ coast ’ so described, is a strip of maritime territory, extending from Cape Chidley, at the entrance to Hudson Strait, to the eastern headland of the Bay or Harbour of Blanc Sablon,” that, of course, raises Lord Sumner's point about Woody Island—“ on the Strait of Belleisle, and comprising, in its depth inland, only so much of the land immediately abutting on the sea, above low water mark, as was accessible and useful to the British fishermen annually resorting to that coast, in the ordinary conduct of their fishing operations, for the purposes of ‘ The open and free fishery,’ extended to that coast by the Royal Proclamation, and carried on there, and for those purposes only.” Of course, my Lords, that is very strongly controverted, and the statements and inferences there contained combated by the ancient colony of Newfoundland. The legal point is very clearly put at page 50, and I entirely accept this. “ The Newfoundland Act, 1809, constitutes Newfoundland's title to whatever rights within the Labrador Peninsula she to-day possesses, but the title which it confers is a title by relation—a title by relation to the Royal Proclamation of 1763, which, with the antecedent Commission, above cited, gives the definition of the extent of territory effected. This is made indisputably clear, by the terms of that Act. By it, such parts of the Coast of Labrador ”—I think that Lord Haldane has said in the course of the case, “ whatever it was ”—

p. 299

Viscount FINLAY : “ By relation ” means, “ by reference.”

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord. “ By it, such parts of the Coast of Labrador as His Majesty by his Royal Proclamation of the 7th October 1763, had been pleased to declare, he had put under the care and inspection of the Governor of Newfoundland were re-annexed ”—you notice the word “ re-annexed,” of course, we stress that word very considerably in the later Statutes. “ The parts of the Coast affected by this disposition, are not otherwise described or defined by the Act than by recital of and reference to,” Lord Finlay sees—“ the Royal Proclamation of 1763.” Then they set out the words again, and say, that is, “ a limitation which explicitly throws the interpreter back upon the languages of the Royal Proclamation. That Proclamation and the Commission of the 25th April, 1763, of which it proclaimed the effect, are, for the purpose of identifying and defining such parts of the Coast, Newfoundland's title. Her rights extend over precisely the extent of coast described in those instruments, less, of course, the part which the British North America (Seignorial Rights) 1825, withdrew,” and it winds up by saying, “ The Newfoundland Act, 1809, dealt solely with the extent of Coast (neither increased nor diminished), which the Legislation of 1763 had put under the care and inspection of the Governor of Newfoundland.” Now, my Lords, that proposition is accepted in the Counter Case of the Colony of Newfoundland, at page 89 ; so we can work from that as an accepted statement of the position. In paragraph 2, on page 89, Newfoundland says this : “ Newfoundland con-ceeds the first proposition advanced in the Canadian case, namely that the extent of territory within the peninsula of Labrador to-day subject to the authority of Newfoundland, is the “Coast” which, by the Commission, of the 25th April, 1763, was, as declared by the Royal Proclamation of the 7th October of that year, put under the care and inspection of the Governor of Newfoundland, less the portion thereof,” taken away in 1825. Then, my Lords, the Counter Case brings out that which my learned friend, Sir John Simon, has done already, and I do not propose to do it again, except to remind you of this, that we do submit “that the Canadian Case lays too much stress on the use of the expression, ‘care and inspection’ in a purely declaratory recital in the Royal Proclamation of the 7th October, 1763. while on the other hand it pays insufficient regard to the plain words of the Commission to Governor Graves, and the Acts of 1774, 1809. and 1825, which make changes in the Government of the Area in question. The Proclamation of the 7th October, 1763, though it created and established four new Governments, including the Government of Quebec, did not profess to effect any change in the pro-vision already made in reference to ‘all that coast’ (i.e. of Labrador) ‘from the River St. John to Hudson's Streights.’ By the Commission to Graves of Newfoundland, dated the 25th April, 1763, that area had been added to his Government. The words ‘care and inspection’ do not occur in the Commission or in the Acts of 1774, 1809 or 1825 already referred to. The Quebec Act of 1774 treated the Commission to Governor Graves as having ‘made’ the area in question ‘part of the Government of Newfoundland,’ while the Newfoundland Act, 1809, described the same area as having been ‘annexed to the Government of Newfoundland.’ Newfoundland submits that the interpretation thus given by the Statutes, is the natural meaning of the language of the Commission.”

Now, my Lords, with that preliminary introduction, in my submission three matters arise on that part of the Proclamation, which I am about to discuss. First of all, the first matter is, what does the term, “Coast,” or to be more accurate, “Coasts,” because it is used in the plural in Graves' Commission, mean in its context, having regard to the terms of the instrument as a whole. That, my learned friend. Sir John Simon, has so fully discussed before you that I do not feel justified in saying anything more about it. You have heard again this morning his submission, and his arguments re-enforced by reference to contemporary maps and books and practice to show that “coast” used in that instrument, at that time, in 1763, would be used in the ordinary 18th Century sense of “all the land lying between the shore and the watershed.” That has been fully discussed, and I do not think I can really add anything to it. One has to bear in mind that that really is the first matter which arises when one is considering the interpretation of this clause. The second matter arising there is the question of what you mean by “ the open and free fishery” ; I want to say something about that in a moment; and another question which arises, of course, is the position of the Governor ; is he merely the captain of a ship at sea, with no territorial jurisdiction

28 Oct., 1926.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

p. 301

at all, or has he vested in him, in addition to his Admiralty jurisdiction, actual territorial jurisdiction over the coasts so entrusted to him, under the terms of his Commission ? Those two matters really can be treated of together. I hope to satisfy you, by as concise an argument as I can, that the true position of the Commander-in-Chief, though the object or motive for sending him out there was one thing, that did not completely cover the whole ambit of his duties and responsibilities in that region. It is perfectly true, and it has been admitted over and over again, that the purpose with which the King's ships were sent out there in convoy of the fishing ships was to create a race of seamen for the Royal Navy. There is no question at all about that ; but I hope to satisfy your Lordships upon the true construction of that clause, that that is not the complete ambit of the duties and responsibilities of the Officer so appointed. I hope to satisfy you, by the facts of the case, that the people who were comporting themselves out there correctly understood his position, and in the fullest sense of the term he was Governor of the Island of Newfoundland and the Coasts of Labrador—in the sense in which the argument so far has proceeded. There is one other question which is a legal one, and I would ask your leave to cite not too many authorities, because in this type of case authority from purely municipal law is not always helpful, but I desire to make this submission : that it is a well known rule of construction, whether it be the preamble to an Act of Parliament or the recital in a deed, that the preamble or the recital cannot amplify or restrict operative words which are in themselves unambiguous, of course, if there is an ambiguity, you may always look to the preamble or recital to see what the words mean.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : You need not cite authority for that.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : If your Lordship pleases. Sometimes one puts a proposition and it is convenient just to have one or two illustrations of it, but I am not going to trouble your Lordships with anything that is considered not necessary ; but there are one or two—in fact a great many books—but I have selected one from each class of case to show that that is well-accepted law.

28 Oct., 1926.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Mr. MACMILLAN : I shall not challenge that proposition.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : I must have stated it correctly, otherwise my learned friend would have done so. My submission is that, applying that doctrine to this clause, the mere fact that in something, which after all is a recital in itself, you get in the first part a motive assigned for a certain course, cannot be used to cut down the language used in the Commission, which has to be read into this Proclamation.

Mr. MACMILLAN : My learned friend is putting it differently now : it “ cannot be read to cut down unambiguous words.”

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : That is the first part of my submission, that the words are not ambiguous at all : that the word “ coast ” has a perfectly clear meaning and has to be understood, putting yourself back, as it were, in the draughtsman's chair in 1763, in the sense that has been contended for ; that it cannot mean anything else. That is the basis of my submission. I submit there is no ambiguity about it at all ; in the 18th Century “ Coast ” means “ Coast ” and nothing more. You cannot say that by reason of the fact that a certain coast is added to a Government for a particular purpose that that is the only duty arising from the Commission granted to the Governor. Now, my Lords, it is often thought with regard to Newfoundland and Labrador, that, from the first, anything in the nature of a sedentary fishery was strongly put down by those responsible for the administration of that part. In my submission, by a few illustrations, I shall be able to satisfy you that that is not so ; that what was objected to was not the sedentary nature of the fishery but the sedentary nature of the inhabitants. So long as the inhabitants there complied with what Sir Hugh Palliser called “ That excellent Act.” nobody had the least objection to them settling and conducting sedentary fisheries either on the Coast of Newfoundland or upon the Labrador; they were encouraged in their possession, always provided that they complied with the terms of the 10th William III. I do not know whether your Lordships have had your attention called to that Statute, or whether you think it is sufficiently in your Lordships' minds to dispense with actually reading it over to you. but the reference to it is page 250 of the First Volume.

p. 302

The LORD CHANCELLOR: It has not been read; it had been recited in some instruments.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : The submission I make to your Lordships, rather, is this: That the subsequent legislation—I am not going to give your Lordships either a historical or academical discussion upon fisheries in general—I can state

28 Oct., 1926.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

the subsequent legislation, because that will not affect the construction of the Proclamation which is now under our consideration ; what happened was that this Act remained in force with a number of existing Acts, Acts providing for annuities, and one special Act, your Lordships may remember, giving effect to that Treaty of Washington, of 1818. which gave France those fishing rights—which remained in force until 1824, when it was entirely repealed, and this view, which I may call the Palliser view, was definitely abandoned. I have the reference to the repealing Statute. it is page 300 in the First Volume. I do not propose to go back to this, so I give you that reference now. The Act of William III. remained in force till 1824 when it was repealed by the Statute at page 300, the 5th George IV. Chapter 51; and though restrictions were still placed upon the persons who could come to fish at Newfoundland, or the Coast of Labrador, or the Islands, the policy was definitely abandoned, the policy which had continuously existed, and been adopted, since the passing of the 10th of William III. What I think would be most convenient would be only to give you illustrative instances of the proposition for which I am contending. My submission, my Lords, is that the persons who engaged in the sedentary fishery there were protected in their possession, always provided that they complied with the terms of the Act ; and, my Lords, once you remember this, that on the Southern shores, there is no doubt at all that sedentary fisheries had existed for a very considerable time—your Lordships will remember one motive for passing the Act of 1825 was to put back into Quebec the people who had established themselves upon this coast—it was no new idea at all : a sedentary fishery. As early as the year 1719, on the Island of Newfoundland itself—I will give you that first of all—a gentleman of the name of Skeffington was protected in his post by having complied with, or not done anything contrary to, the spirit of the Act. I am not going to refer you to very many references, but will your Lordships kindly look for a moment at Volume IV, page 1901, with regard to that.

Just before dealing with that, may I first of all call your Lordships' attention to the Fishing Act. The Fishing Act is in Volume I at page 250, and if I may I will just deal with that first. Your Lordships will see that that Act is headed : “An Act to Encourage the Trade to Newfoundland,” and it recites that : “ Whereas the Trade and Fishing at Newfoundland is a beneficial Trade to this Kingdom, not only in the employing of great Numbers of Seamen and Ships, and exporting and consuming great Quantities of Provisions and Manufactures of this Realm,” and so forth,—I need not read the whole of it—it is enacted that “ it shall and may be lawful for all his Majesty's Subjects residing within this his Realm of England, or the Dominions thereunto belonging, trading or that shall trade to Newfoundland ”—now will your Lordships notice these words, which are very ample :—“ and the Seas, Rivers, Lakes, Creeks, Harbours in or about Newfoundland, or any of the Islands adjoining or adjacent thereunto, to have, use, and enjoy the free Trade and Traffick, and Art of Merchandise and Fishery, to and from Newfoundland, and peaceably to have, use, and enjoy, the Freedom of taking Bait and Fishing in any of the Rivers, Lakes, Creeks, Harbours, or Roads, in or about Newfoundland, and the said Seas, or any of the Islands adjacent thereunto, and Liberty to go on Shore on any part of Newfoundland, or any of the said Islands for the curing, salting, drying, and husbanding of their Fish, and for making of Oil, and to cut down ”—your Lordships will observe this—“ and to cut down Woods and Trees there for building and making or repairing of Stages, Ship-rooms, Trainfats, Hurdles, Ships, Boats, and other Necessaries for themselves,” and so forth, “ as fully and freely as at any Time heretofore hath been used or enjoyed there by any of the Subjects of his Majesty's Royal Predecessors, without any Hindrance, Interruption, Denial or Disturbance of or from any person or Persons whatsoever ; and that no Alien or Stranger whatsoever (not residing within the Kingdom of England, Dominion of Wales, or Town of Berwick upon Tweed) shall at any Time hereafter take any Bait, or use any Sort of Trade or Fishing whatsoever in Newfoundland, or in any of the said Islands or Places above-mentioned.”

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Then there follow a number of provisions for preserving what you might call the amenities, and also the efficiency of the fishing arrangements.
p. 304

As a matter of interest—I do not think I need trouble to go back to it, but your Lordships might like to have a note, just so that you may have it in your minds—the bulk of these regulations go further back, to the year 1634. The reference is Volume IV, page 1719.

Viscount HALDANE : What does that Act do ?

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : These are a series of Regulations made by His Majesty.

Viscount HALDANE : It is an Act empowering Regulations to be made, and the Regulations made, I suppose.

Lord Sumner.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord, but I think these were made under the Prerogative, as far as I know. They were Star Chamber Regulations.

Viscount HALDANE : There was no Statute ?

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : No, my Lord, but it is interesting to note that these provisions about not throwing ballast into the harbours or not burning the woods go back to 1634. I am not going to trouble your Lordships with much of these things, because, it would be only taking up time unnecessarily. It is only a matter of history, just to see where they come from.

Viscount HALDANE : They were created under the Prerogative ?

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord, and they were amplified by further Rules proceeding from the Star Chamber in 1660, the reference to which is in Volume IV, at page 1744. I only mention those in passing, so that in case anything should turn upon them, your Lordships will have the matter in your minds.

Lord SUMNER : One of the provisions is that “ no person do set up any tavern for selling of wine, beer, strong waters, cider or tobacco, to entertain the fishermen, because it is found that by such means they are debauched, neglecting their labours.” That is an early instance of prohibition.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : I suppose that idleness might lead them into bad ways, and make them prone to succumb to the temptations that are mentioned there. Provisions are made about harbours and so on in Sections II and III, and the interesting thing is Section IV. because this shows the whole basis upon which the subsequent administration of these se various Governors was based.

Viscount FINDLAY : What page are you reading from now ?

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : It is page 251 in Volume I, my Lord.

Viscount FINLAY : This is in the Statute ?

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, in the Statute itself. It says : “ And be it further enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That (according to the ancient Custom there used) ”—so that it had previously been there for some considerable time—“ every such Fishing Ship from England, Wales, or Berwick, of such Fishermen as shall, from and after the said twenty-fifth day of March ”—that was in 1685, I think ; that is the 25 March that is referred to—“ first enter any Harbour or Creek in Newfoundland, in Behalf of his Ship, shall be Admiral of the said Harbour or Creek during that Fishing Season, and from that Time shall reserve to himself only so much Beech or Flakes, or both, as are needful for the Number of such Boats as he shall there use.” You see that that is the privilege for being the first comer, so as to make him bestir himself.

Viscount HALDANE : It says that the ship is to be the “ Admiral.” That is a curious expression.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord, and there are things which are still more curious. Even in those days titles were pleasant, and a merchantman, going out and finding himself the Admiral for the season, was not at all likely to be displeased, and I dare say that it might be taken as a little compliment to be a full admiral for, at any rate, the summer season.

Viscount HALDANE : I think it was merely so as to put him under the jurisdiction of the Commander in Chief out there.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes. Your Lordship will see that these various admirals to whom I am just going to refer had a certain limited jurisdiction, with a right of appeal to a captain of His Majesty's ships.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : What proposition are you leading up to now?

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : I thought that your Lordships ought to have before you the principle which my learned friend, Sir John Simon, has fully conceded, that the purpose of these arrangements in Newfoundland was to provide seamen or marines for His Majesty's Navy. If I have sufficiently stated that, I will not go any further with it ; but my point is that that was not the end of it ; there was a great deal more than that. My learned friend, Sir John Simon, pointed out this morning the difference between the

The Lord Chancellor,
Mr. Barrington-Ward.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : I remember all that, and about setting up the Courts, and about the Moravians, and so on ; but for what purpose are you reading this?

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : I thought your Lordships ought to have it before you, as your Lordships' attention had not been called to it before. But if your Lordships have it in mind, I think it does not matter, except perhaps the last Section. The second man who came out was called a Vice Admiral, and the third man was called a Rear Admiral, and they all had a light of appeal in cases of dispute.

Viscount HALDANE : Is there any section that you want to refer to?

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : The last Section to which I desire to call attention is the one on page 256, because that shows that even in Newfoundland, to which alone this Act applies—

The LORD CHANCELLOR : Yes, of course.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Governor Palliser got himself into some difficulties, and I think he was actually impleaded in the Court of King's Bench before Lord Mansfield from exercising powers under this Act in Labrador.

The importance of the last section is this : will your Lordships kindly look at page 256, line no. 6, where it says : “ And whereas some doubt has arisen, whether Oil, Blubber, and Fins, taken and imported by the Company of Merchants of London trading to Greenland, are not liable to the said Duty ; ’ Be it therefore enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That all Whale Fins, Oil, and Blubber, taken and imported by the Ships of the Company of Merchants of London trading to Greenland, were not, nor are intended to be charged or made liable to the Duty of twelve Pence for every twenty Shillings Value of Goods imported, charged in the aforesaid Acts, but that the Whale Fins, Oil, and Blubber, taken and imported as aforesaid ”—now, my Lords, these are the words : “ and also all Whale Fins, Oil, and Blubber of English Fishing, taken in the Seas of Newfoundland, or any of the Seas belonging to any of his Majesty's Plantations or Colonies, and imported into this Kingdom by any of his Majesty's subjects in English Shipping, were, and are hereby declared to be free of the said Duties, as all Fish of English taking.” The point about that, of course, is that when the Canadian contention is put forward that this Act simply related to cod only, and to nothing else, I venture to submit to the Board that it is quite plain that they had in contemplation whales as well as a subject of industry, and that involves a sedentary fishery.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Lord Sumner.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : Whales do not go far inland.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD: No, my Lord, but I am going a little further with it.

p. 307

Lord SUMNER : What do you mean by a sedentary fishery for whales ?

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : I mean that people would have to remain behind there in order to catch whales at the appropriate season of the year.

Lord SUMNER : I understand that there may be a station ashore for the purpose of drying out the blubber, but I should have thought that you followed the whales.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord, but what I mean is that it is rather different from the cod fishery, in which you come out in ships convoyed by ships of war, and you have a season, whatever it is, perhaps from May to September, and then return. This, on the other hand, involves a more or less continuous presence in the place. I will not adventure myself as an expert in the matter, but I only make that comment in calling attention to this Act, not because anything really turns upon it in the decision of this case, but because I thought your Lordships ought to have before you a matter which is constantly referred to in the few documents which I am going to read.

Sir Hugh Palliser, as I ventured to remind your Lordships a few minutes ago, described this as “ that excellent Act—”

Viscount HALDANE : What we rather want to get is the large principles of the thing.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : If I might illustrate from the cases the principles from which I am contending, my submission is this, that both in Newfoundland and in Labrador the Governor was Governor in the fullest sense of the term that the nature of those territories would admit.

28 Oct., 1926.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Viscount HALDANE : He was not, because he had not the authority of an ordinary Governor's commission.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord, he had a commission.

Viscount HALDANE : I said the ordinary Governor's Commission.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : I do not know quite what your Lordship means by that.

Viscount HALDANE : Peace, order and good government is not given to him.

2 T 2

p. 308

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : I know that, my Lord, but he had a Commission, and he had jurisdiction, in my submission, over the whole of the territory, in the case of Labrador so far as it was known, of course ; and the instances which we have collected show you that jurisdiction was exercised and show in my submission conclusively that it did not extend to any strip of the coast at all, but it extended, so far as the nature of the country admitted, over the whole of the country. There was jurisdiction over the trappers and the hunters, and there was jurisdiction over the salmon fisheries, and complete control, both in Newfoundland and in Labrador.

Viscount HALDANE : There are no words to give him jurisdiction over the trappers.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : My submission, my Lord, is that what was done is a fair—I will not say “ test,” but it is proper to be referred to as showing what the framers of the Commission meant.

Viscount HALDANE : It is fair to say that it was only very loose, and whatever he elected to do he was not prohibited from doing.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : I am sure your Lordships will realise that I am going to observe economy of time, and I am going to endeavour not to go into any matters which are not material. Now will your Lordships just look at one or two illustrations of the proposition for which I am contending.

The first one that I wish to put before your Lordships is in the fourth volume, at page 1961 ; and your Lordships will observe that that is as early as 1719. This is valuable as showing that the Home Government were consulted about these matters. That is a case in which Mr. Skeffington, who was an inhabitant of Indian Bay, which is in Newfoundland, petitioned the King, setting forth : “ That your Petitioner hath for about Twelve Years past Improved the Salmon Fishery in two or three Rivers or Brooks to the Northward of Cape Bonavista ; and hath at very great Expense and Labour near fforty[sic] miles up the Country ”—

28 Oct., 1926.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : This is Newfoundland, not Labrador.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord this is Newfoundland ; I am starting with that, because one has to bear in mind that the conditions prevailing in both these territories were substantially the same. It says: “ And hath at very great Expense and Labour near fforty[sic] miles up the Country cleared Lands of the wood, and the said Rivers or Brooks”—I need not read any more of that ; but he most humbly prays : “ That he may be encouraged and protected in carrying on the said Fishery according to the Intention of the Act made in the 10 & 11th of King William the Third for Encouraging the Fishery of Newfoundland.” Then he asks : “ That he may use occupy and enjoy all such houses, Stages and other works made by him for taking and Curing of Salmon.”—It is not only cod, but even as early as that, it is salmon.

Then that was referred to the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, and on the next page there is a letter from a gentleman of the name of Richard West, who has the letters “ L. S.” underneath his name, which I think must mean Legal Secretary, because I do not think it can refer to a seal. It says this : “ In obedience to your Lordships commands, I have perused and considered the Annexed Petition of George Skeffington, and humbly certify to your Lordships, that I am of Opinion that the prayer of it is not Inconsistent with the Act made in the Tenth and Eleventh year of King William, for encouraging the trade to Newfoundland.”

Then your Lordships see that on page 1963 they set out what Mr. Skeffington had represented, and then they say at line 21 : “ We have upon this Occasion discoursed with the Petitioner and others who have appeared in his behalf, and take Leave to observe that the Places where he has begun this Fishery are between Bonavista and Cape John in the North East Part of Newfoundland, which Places have never been frequented by any Fishing Ships from this Kingdom. As the Petitioner is the first who has attempted to sett up a Salmon Fishery there, and as the Prayer of his Petition is no ways inconsistent with the Act for encouraging the Trade to Newfoundland, We humbly offer that His Majesty be graciously pleased to grant the Petitioner for the Term of 21 Years or such other time as His Majesty shall think fit the Sole Fishery for Salmon in the Places called Fresh Water Bay, Ragged Harbour, Gander Bay and Dog Creek between Cape Bonavista and Cape John, where he has already built Houses and other Conveniences for that Purpose, And that he have Liberty to cut Boards and Timber for his own Use in the Parts adjacent to those Rivers Brooks or Creeks for the said Fishery only.”

Viscount HALDANE : All that that means is that in Newfoundland there was nothing in his Petition considered to be inconsistent—

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD :—with the Act ? Yes, my Lord. Now will your Lordships look at the distance, because what applied to Newfoundland must apply to Labrador.

There is no distinction between the two.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : It depends upon what Labrador is. Have you got any similar case in Labrador ?

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord ; I am coming to that next.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : That is what I want.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord. But would your Lordships mind noticing that he has liberty to cut timber in the “ Rivers, Brooks or Creeks for the said Fishery only, provided it be at Six miles distance from the Sea Shoar.” At any rate, he had to go six miles in.

Viscount HALDANE : There were fishery rights established there.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord. With regard to Labrador, there are one or two cases, and if I may I will just give you short references to them. There is a case of Mr. Coghlan in Volume III, on page 1269. He is writing from a place called Fogo, which is in Newfoundland, to the Governor of the day, who was Governor Montagu. I think it will be quicker for me to read it. What he says is this : “ Having already done myself the Honour of writing you at large by this conveyance, being one of My Sealing Schooners called the Advice, I am under the disagreeable necessity of laying before you an Account of some Illegal proceedings which had happened of late at my Settlements on the N.E. Coast of Labrador ; referring to the farther relation of such given by my Agent at that place which I now hand you, and first begging leave to pray you will excuse my troubling you on this occasion, I shall take the liberty of communicating to you the Mode of my first establishing a Fishery at the former Coast, flattering myself that your Excellency, in your wise consideration will judge it equitable to confirm the possession granted unto me by your Predecessor, as you find in every respect I make use of the same to the no small Advantage of supporting so valuable a Nursery to the British Marine.” I submit that if that statement is correct, the submission that I am making to your Lordships is also accurate.

Viscount HALDANE : This is only the coast.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes ; it is a settled fishery on the coast. It is something on the coast which indicates a permanent settlement there. I will not read the whole of this, but just this one other passage, where he goes on to point out, that : “ Early in the Government of my very respected good friend Sir Hugh Pallisser, and by His recommendation I was the first English Subject that settled in the Seal Fishery at Chateaux, so long back as the year 65, and finding it most eligible to pursue the Cod and Salmon Fisheries farther North on the said Coast, I fitted out an armed Sloop to guard against the Esquimaux Indians ”—and then your Lordships see, he says : “ and having Lord Rutherford on board, then

Lieutenant of the Niger, the late Sir Thomas Adams, Commander at Chateaux, the said Sloop proceeded on a Discovery from the former Port to Cape Charles, Alexis, St. Frances, and Porcupine Bays, on the North Coast of Labrador, and on her return encouraged by Sir Thomas Adams, I communicated my intentions to Sir Hugh Pallisser of Settling a Residence at the former places, for the purpose of carrying on a Cod and Salmon Fisheries, in whose answer to me on the occasion

he says ‘ pursue your undertakings on the Coast of Labrador which are highly recommendary to me, and no after Commer, shall dispossess you.’”

Viscount Haldane.

Your Lordships see that that is something very different from a mere casual visit for a season, by somebody who is under a duty to return to England at the close of the season. This is a man who, provided he complies with the Act, is entitled to settle there ; and, I submit, to use the land as far back as he likes, for any purpose that he likes ; and there is no valid reason for saying that his user of the territory, where he is permitted to settle, is limited to one mile or forty milts of the coast. If he is allowed to settle there with the consent of the authorities, he is entitled to exercise any rights, so long as they do not invade the rights vested in other persons.

Mr. Barrington–Ward.

Then he goes on to point out that he has been disturbed in his settlement. I do not think I need read anything further on that page. There is a Report from his Agent showing what had happened, and how people had come and interfered with his salmon fishery. Then at the top of page 1272 he says this : “ and as I ever understood from my first settling on that Coast, that no Person had a right of Possession or residence there but such as were protected annually by Ships fitted out from Great Britain, as also that in Consequence of my having been one of the first settlers on the North part of said Coast, which I explored at a very great expence, my said Possessions were confirmed to me ”—He explored the coast, and could have gone in for any distance.

Viscount HALDANE : Just see what the Governor says. The Governor says : “ I have no jurisdiction, because this has gone to Quebec, but I will send you a Naval Lieutenant to take care that you are not molested.”

Mr. BARRINGTON–WARD : I am very much obliged to you Lordship for pointing that out, because that reinforces the point which was made by my learned friend, Sir John Simon, this morning, that there was all the difference in the world. The Governor knew it, and knew what his position was.

28 Oct., 1926.

Mr. Barrington–Ward.

Viscount HALDANE : Nobody disputes that. The Governor was commanding the local fleet there. He was a sort of policeman.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : May I read what the Governor did say and then comment upon it for a moment. What he did say was this : “ I am to acquaint you that I have been obliged to appoint Lieutenant Schomberg Commanding the Labrador Schooner to be my Surrogate on that part of the Coast of this Island, laying between St. John's and Fogo, not being able to spare a Man of War, as has been customary. I am sorry to hear you are so unhappily circumstanced with respect to your Servants employed on the Coast of Labrador, and particularly so, as that Coast and Islands have by a late Act of Parliament been reannexed to the Province of Quebec ”—“ reannexed,” your Lordships see.

p. 312

It is not put under the care or inspection of anybody, but it is re-annexed—“ which puts out of my power as Governor to render you any Service.” Then he says : “ I have ordered Lieutenant Schomberg to attend you to your settlement.” The Lieutenant went up there and made a very fine order of a very drastic nature, which is on page 1274.

The point that I want to make about that is that here you have in 1775 a perfectly clear case of a settlement on the coast, not limited by metes or bounds, but you have here a gentleman entitled to take as much territory as he wanted, with no prohibition upon his doing so, and he is protected in his possession—that is the interesting thing, because it illustrates the other point as well—he is protected, not by the Governor, because the Governor had ceased to be a Governor.

Viscount HALDANE: He was a naval policeman.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord ; but my submission upon that is this, that if this had happened in 1773, the position would_ have been quite different. Governor Palliser, in the cases with which he dealt, was dealing with them as Governor under his Commission, as the responsible officer for administering the affairs of that territory.

Viscount HALDANE : I do not know whether he was or was not. It may be that all through this there was a great deal of trouble.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Your Lordship will remember that Sir John Simon this morning gave you the references to two Letters in which this subject was most particularly discussed. There was not any confusion about it. When they put the territory of Labrador back into the territory of Quebec, they quite deliberately re-annexed it to Quebec ; they altered all the Commissions and they altered all the instructions, and they discussed between themselves as to how the different powers were for the future to be exercised. Governor Montague, writing there, has that in his mind ; he has been instructed to that effect, that he has no longer any authority over Labrador. In my submission, before that time, he had authority, and so far as this settler in Labrador was concerned, he had a perfect right to settle there, and would have been entitled in the year 1773 to call for the Governor's protection, and not merely from the assistance of some Naval Police.

(Adjourned for a short time.)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

28 Oct., 1926.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : When your Lordships adjourned, I was just dealing with the case of Mr. Coghlan, and I do not want to go back to that. Your Lordships have it in mind now.

But there are one or two other cases which I had selected as illustrating the proposition that the administration of Newfoundland had occupied, so far as the nature of the country would admit it, the whole of that coast, assuming that our definition of that term is accurate.

Viscount HALDANE : Have you any cases dealing with inland ?

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord, I think there is rather an interesting case. There is one interesting document to which I should like to call your Lordships' attention, because it deals with furring, and that is the case of a certain Lieutenant John Cartwright, and I will give your Lordships the reference to it at once. It is in Volume III, at page 1142. That is rather an interesting case, because I think it gives you a view of what the country was like as long ago as the year 1774.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : Is that the date of this document ?

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord ; and I will tell your Lordship how I trace it. The date is the 23rd May, 1774, and the way in which I am able to trace that date is that that letter was enclosed with another letter.

Viscount HALADANE : It refers to the Labrador Fisheries.

28 Oct., 1926.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord. Lieutenant Cartwright was the brother of a certain George Cartwright whose name also appears in these papers, and he obviously was on such terms that he could communicate with Lord Dartmouth at home. This was sent to Lord Dartmouth in a letter of that date, and the reference for the purpose of fixing that is Volume V, page 2250. He says this : “ When Labrador first came into our hands and the arrangements we had spoken of took place, it still required some consideration and prudence to be able to turn this acquisition to the best account. Having already as extensive a fishery in Newfoundland, as we could well occupy, it was not immediately apparent by what means we should avail ourselves of those of Labrador. We there found a few Canadians scattered along the coast in the Gulph of St. Lawrence, and along the Straits of Belleisle, who carried on the seal and salmon fisheries ; and we understood besides, that the french had occasionally fished for cod from a few particular parts. The prospect of meeting other salmon streams along the unoccupied parts of the coast was encouraging, and the sealing posts, affording specimens of a fishery which depended not upon the accident of there being freshwater rivers, and in all probability abounding more in proportion as we should advance towards the north, promised no inconsiderable returns to the adventurer ; but the informations concerning the cod fishery, carried with them no reasons for believing it was worth while to quit the certainties of Newfoundland, for the hopes of better things in Labrador.”

2 U

p. 314

Viscount HALDANE : That is to the North, along the coast ?

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord.

Viscount HALDANE : It is not up the rivers.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Of course, it does refer to the rivers, does it not, my Lord ? Then it goes on : “ Besides, there was ample room in Newfoundland for its improvement.” Then at the bottom of the page he says : “ The protection of the King's Ships in 1764 and 1765, together with that spirit of enterprise which distinguishes the commercial part of the british nation, induced some few to make trial of the cod fishery about Chatteau Bay.” Then at the top of page 1143 it says : “ Thus, then, it was now thought to be seen how we might best begin to avail ourselves of Labrador ; by making its cod fishery an appendage to that of Newfoundland ; and the seal and salmon branches subordinate again to the cod fishery ; and Henley Harbour, defended by Chateau Island, was approved of as a convenient port for mooring the ships and manufacturing the fish.” Then he explains what they did there, and you will find, just a little bit lower down, at line 15 : “ The country likewise produced ”—“ the country,” your Lordships will notice —“ The country likewise produced good samples of fur, besides which there was a traffick opened with the Eskimaux Indians ”—your Lordships see that that is inland —“ and some reason to look for the establishment of a Whale-fishery ; so that, upon the whole, the merchants promised themselves, from appearances, no inconsiderable advantages, as soon as they should be able to effect proper settlements, and be put in a capacity of reaping the benefit of their labours by suitable assistance and protection from government.” I submit that that is a very valuable passage.

28 Oct., 1926.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : It is the first time that you get a reference to a mile from high-water mark. I see that at line 35.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord. “ Experience hath taught us, on the contrary, that the seal fishery is the grand staple of Labrador ; every successive season showing its great importance more and more ; and that the next in rank and consequence is the salmon fishery, as abounding to a considerable degree, and not being subject to much uncertainty ; while the cod fishery is so expensive, and so precarious, except at a few particular stations westward of Chateau, as to make it the height of rashness for anyone to practice it, unless it be in a subordinate way, as employment for the labourers during the intervals in their other occupations.” Then, this is where I think, as the Lord Chancellor pointed out a moment ago, the idea of the mile must come from ; I do not know where else it does come from.

These are proposals for legislation ; “ That all the land backwards through the whole extent of every sealing post, to the distance of one mile from highwater mark, shall be accounted as part of such post and belong in full right to the proprietor ; except that a right be reserved of cutting wood for the use of His Majesty's Ships or Forts ; and a general right of free passage to all through every uninclosed part of the same ; and excepting also that a right be reserved to any cod-fisher of erecting upon and adjoining to the same; every building and work necessary in the cod fishery ; and of cutting wood sufficient for such buildings and works upon the shore, and for fuel ; but nothing more. But the Seal-fisher being the proprietor of the soil, that his necessary works and erections shall not be encroached upon, or interfered with, by those of the cod-fisher, nor he be any way obstructed by him in the execution of any part of his business.”

Then he deals with salmon fisheries inland at line 14, and he says : “ Every distinct river, rivulet, and brook shall be accounted a separate salmon fishery ; and the inferior shall never be esteemed dependent upon the superior except united in the possession and real occupancy of the same proprietor ; so that the minor streams, if unoccupied, may be taken possession of by another, notwithstanding the principal river into which they empty themselves shall be in the hands of a proprietor. But then the proprietors of these lesser streams shall confine themselves in fishing to the same ; and the proprietors of the rivers into which they flow shall not by nets or works of any kind block up the mouths of these lesser streams so as to prevent the salmon from running into the same ; but shall leave a clear passage into them wide enough at least for a skiff to row in and out with room for her oars on each side.” I submit there, that as early as 1774, this, gentlemen, is clearly contemplating an entry into the heart of the country up the various rivers.

28 Oct., 1926.

Viscount HALDANE : It does not say anything about the heart of the country.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD: No, my Lord ; that was my gloss on the effect of that passage. But there is no limitation there as to the user of any rivers in Labrador. I do not think there is anything else on that page that I need read. I am very anxious, as your Lordships will quite understand, not to read anything which is unnecessary ; but will your Lordships kindly look at page 1145, line 10, where it says ; “ That every proprietor of land under the sanction of any of the foregoing clauses shall have the sole right of durring, hunting, and shooting within the same. Second, That in the unappropriated part of the Country, the Furrier shall have a permanent property in all death-fall paths, pit falls, traps and snares; in all tilts, huts, and other works necessary or useful to a furrier which he hath made, raised or constructed, on condition of continuing to occupy the same.”
2 U 2

p. 316

Viscount Haldane.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: Did anything come of this ?

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : No, my Lord.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : This is merely a suggestion by a private person ?

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord, but I am only using it as an expression of the views of a gentleman who was living there as long ago as 1774, which I venture to submit to the Board seems to show that even in that rather early time they were contemplating a general user—that is all—a general user of this somewhat unknown and rather wild country, for furring, fishing and the like.

Now, my Lords, I think I can shorten this part of the matter, if your Lordships will permit me just to give you a reference to two other acts of occupation, without going into them, because they are very long, and are not easy to summarise. Perhaps I may just give your Lordship the two references.

Viscount HALDANE : This is very inconclusive. This is a memorial, and it does not appear what was done with it, or what it was.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Does your Lordship mean the one which I have just read ?

Viscount HALDANE : Yes.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : That was a suggestion by this Lieutenant to Lord Dartmouth as to how this country of Labrador should be administered.

Viscount HALDANE : How the coast should be administered ?

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : No, my Lord, the country.

Viscount HALDANE : Well, the coast.

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : I am saying, the country.

Viscount HALDANE: There is nothing that goes beyond the coast.

p. 317

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : I was treating the matter as showing that the contemporary view of the extent of the territory was that it was not limited to any narrow limits on the sea shore.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : Certainly his suggestions go up the rivers.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : If your Lordship pleases ; that is the purpose for which I used it. I think I have made good the proposition that settlers were not discouraged in Labrador, provided that they complied with the Fishery Act.

Lord Sumner.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : Except that it contemplated going up the rivers, there is nothing else in it except in Line 11, where he talks about furring.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : He talks about marking beaver houses. I suppose that means the erections of the beavers themselves up the rivers, does it not ?

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : I have read that passage on page 1145, line 12 ; that is the right of furring, hunting and shooting. I am submitting that that country not being in any way developed, being entirely wild, that is the only sort of occupation and user that could possibly take place.

Lord SUMNER : I suppose you may say a right of furring naturally implies a pretty wide range of country in which to lay your traps ; the fur-bearing animals are not so plentiful as all that.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : I am obliged, my Lord ; that is the view I am endeavouring to submit to the Board, that, in answer to the suggestion made in the Canadian Case, that we are limited to a mile, I am submitting we are not limited by any metes and bounds except the natural bounds for which my learned leader has contended this morning.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : That was not sent to the Governor of Labrador.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : That was sent home to Lord Dartmouth, His Majesty's Secretary of State for the American Department. For what it is worth, it is evidence of the position at that date. May I give your Lordships the reference to Cartwright & Pinson (it is not a legal case ; they are the gentlemen concerned in the matter) at page 1059, Volume III. It is rather long, and I do not want to go through the whole of it. In Cartwright's Memorial he is praying for a grant of land. If your Lordship would look first at page 1065 he is setting out a number of good reasons why in his view a grant of land should be made to him, and if you look at line 31 on page 1065 he says this : “ Your Lordships ”—that is Lord Dartmouth, who was His Majesty's Secretary of State for the American Department.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : This man is a merchant.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : This is a brother. He is asking this : “ to command that a Royal grant be made to this Memorialist and his heirs of the small tract of the said coast of Labrador which lies between Cape Charles and Cape St. Lewis.” That is what he is asking for. If you would not mind now turning back to page 1059 he says : “ In the Spring of the year 1770 when no British subject in Labrador would venture to reside further northward than Chatteau Bay and the islands immediately adjacent. Your Lordship's memorialist, at great hazard and expense, settled himself in the River Charles on the said coast in order to establish Seal and Salmon fisheries ; to fish for Cod ”—this is important—“ to carry on the furring business ; to open a friendly and commercial intercourse with the Exkimaux Indians with whom we were then upon very bad terms.” What I rely upon there is that it is not only cod fishing ; the first thing he wants to do is seal and salmon, and also to carry on a furring business.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : This again is not sent to the Governor of Newfoundland ; it is sent to the Home Government.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : I submit that that has equal advantages in respect of our contention that at that time both the Home Government and the various Governors knew all about it.

Lord Sumner.

Viscount HALDANE : Knew all about what ? An application for something that might have been inland to some extent ?

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : And knew that in this wild and unexplored territory which they called the coast of Labrador there was furring going on.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : How does that show that the Government granted it to Newfoundland in 1763 ?

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : In my submission, whether it is under Quebec or whether it is under Newfoundland, it is the acts done which are only consistent with the view that the Commission has that interpretation.

Lord SUMNER : What you want it for, surely, is to negative the idea that it was the cod fishing alone that mattered, and among the circumstances is included the fact that furring and salmon up the rivers were objects of gain. That may be some ground for saying we have no reason for limiting “ coast ” to the mere cod-fishing on the coast. That seems to me to be the real point. It does not so much matter whether they got a grant or not, or even whether they went up the rivers or not, but that there was a desire for fur trade and fur catching, and salmon.

p. 319

Viscount HALDANE : The Esquimaux may have come down to the coast ; I do not know.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : My Lord, I was going to read an excerpt from this on page 1062. He deals in this memorial with seal fishing and salmon fishing, and on page 1062, at line 15, he says this : “ The furring business requires a thorough knowledge of the interior part of the country which, on account of the deep snows and the rigour of the furring season is only to be acquired by slow degrees. The country furnishes no other subsistence to the furrier than what his traps provide him, and these require a wide extent of ground to have any tolerable success in order to penetrate to any distance, each furrier (for they all separate and hunt singly) must, at short distances one from another, build himself huts to live in, proof against bad weather, so that he shall never be far from shelter in case of storms. Hence, it is easy to conceive, that to fur that country properly each adventurer should have an exclusive right : and otherwise that it never will be practiced except in a very insignificant manner just around the Sealing Posts, by way of something to do at idle times.” I submit that that does bear out the view that these gentlemen are not limited to cod fishing only ; they were entirely free to engage in any operation which the nature and the character of the country would allow. He deals with the shore whale fishery there and he deals with the Indian trade ; but I do not think I will take up your Lordships' time in reading that. He asks for a grant. He had a good deal of trouble with these people, Noble and Pinson. They petitioned the Lords of Trade, and if you would be good enough to look at the top of page 1069 you will see again this point that I am trying to make. In the way Lord Sumner is good enough to put it for me, it is not cod fishing only in this particular part of the territory ; it is seal and salmon rather than cod. They say : “ Your petitioners now beg leave to assure your Lordships that the cod fishery on that coast cannot be carried on with advantage, unless connected with the Salmon and Seal Fisheries.” Then they ask for conformation of the sealing posts near Cape Charles which they now occupy.

Viscount HALDANE : They heard the other side.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : That is right, my Lord.

Viscount HALDANE: And on page 1070 there is the decision.

p. 320

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Page 1071 we need not trouble about. That is an order directing a draft representation to be prepared, and the draft, as I conceive it to be, is on page 1069. This was after they had the memorials of Cartwright, Noble and Pinson, praying that they be confirmed in the sealing posts, and this is their conclusion : “ Having been attended by several memorialists in person and entered fully into an examination of the Nature and circumstances of the fisheries for seal and salmon in the rivers and bays upon the coast of Labrador, as likewise of the fishery for cod by ships fitted out from Great Britain, it does appear to us from the different seasons proper for these fisheries and the different modes of carrying them on, that they may not only be conducted without interruption and detriment to each other, but that the only method of making these undertakings an object of consideration to the public, or of advantage to individuals concerned in them, will be by thus carrying them on in connection with each other by ships annually fitted out from Great Britain, and as it does further appear to be manifest, that actual residence and continued possession are essentially necessary to the carrying on the seal and salmon fisheries on the coast of Labrador, we beg leave humbly to submit to your Majesty the following regulation as proper for securing the possessions of persons concerned in the said resident fisheries of seal and salmon on the above coast, namely, that such of your Majesty's subjects of Great Britain and Ireland who have taken or shall hereafter take such actual possession in any of the rivers and bays—”

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Viscount HALDANE : “ Rivers and bays ! ”

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord—“ on the coast of Labrador to the north of the Streights of Bellisle, and who have erected or shall hereafter erect houses and warehouses, and have made or shall hereafter make, other establishments necessary to the carrying on the seal and salmon fisheries, shall be protected in such possession, provided such persons do for the future annually fit out from Great Britain one or more ship or ships to be employed in the cod fishery on the said coast of Labrador and provided also, that the greatest care be taken that the proprietor or proprietors of such fishing posts do not claim or occupy a greater extent of the coast within the said bays or rivers, than shall in the judgment of Your Majesty's Governor of Newfoundland or the officer by him deputed, be thought absolutely necessary in proportion to the number of vessels or men employed at the said posts.”

Mr. Barrington–Ward.

Lord Sumner.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : That, of course, is really the important passage, that whatever is done there it is the Governor of Newfoundland who is to settle the details.

Mr. BARRINGTON–WARD : Yes, my Lord.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : Otherwise it would leave entirely open the question whether, assuming this was a British possession, it was under the Governor of Newfoundland.

p. 321

Mr. Barrington–Ward.

Mr. BARRINGTON–WARD : Yes, my Lord.

Viscount HALDANE : It refers to the Governor of Newfoundland.

Mr. BARRINGTON–WARD : The same would apply mutatis mutandis if it was the Governor of Quebec. This is 1773. That document alone gets rid of any idea that the authorities at home did not care anything at all about sealing or salmon fishing ; that all they were concerned with was the cod fishing. They were saying : This is a valuable thing, but it must not interfere with the principles laid down in the Act of William III.

Lord SUMNER : There is a curious expression at line 30, on page 1070: “ Provided also that the greatest care be taken that the proprietor or proprietors of such fishing posts do not claim or occupy a greater extent of the coast within the said bays or rivers, than shall in the judgment of Your Majesty's Governor of Newfoundland or the officer by him deputed be thought absolutely necessary.”

Mr. BARRINGTON–WARD: I should submit that that meant what we have contended for. It is not coast or bays, it is within the rivers as well.

Viscount HALDANE : It may help to get rid of the notion that a mile was enough.

Mr. BARRINGTON–WARD : I can only proceed by stages, my Lord. Of course, naturally in an inquiry of this kind one does not want to take up your Lordships' time in going into too much detail in what, after all, as Lord Haldane said earlier in the day was a question of principle. On this argument it is a pure question of principle. This part I am addressing myself to really is only valuable, in my submission, as showing what people at or about the time thought it meant. In the same way that my learned friend used the atlas, so I use this. Here you have letter after letter—I can read any number of them—which are only consistent with the view that so long as you comply with the Act and fit out your ships you can do as you like, there is no restriction that you must not go somewhere, there are restrictions that you must not do things within a distance from the shore, six miles, and that sort of thing, but there is no restriction preventing any inhabitant in Labrador from going into the country furring, meeting the Esquimaux, and getting as far up as the boundary of Hudson's Bay if he was so minded. That I submit is valuable as contemporary action on the part of the inhabitants, throwing light on what was meant by the term “coast,” and what the term “coast” meant in the various documents. I would like to call attention to one or two matters, unless I have made good my point already, that it was not only cod, because the Lords of Trade went into this question with very considerable care, and at different times different views prevailed.

2 X

p. 322

The LORD CHANCELLOR : As far as I am concerned you have made the point good (subject to what we hear after) that it was not only cod, but it was also seal and salmon.

Viscount HALDANE : I have never doubted it myself.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : It is rather instructive to see that it was not until the 27th of March, 1766, that the Lords of Trade ever had any idea that the cod fishing was any good. I can give the references if necessary, without reading unnecessary matter. The first set of Lords of Trade were told that what was really of value in Labrador was the sealing and the salmon. Would you be good enough to look at Volume III, the 27th of March ? I am cutting out all the intervening part.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : That is page 961, and we have had part of that read before.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Part of that, my Lord, has been read before. Would you mind looking at page 962. I will only read an excerpt from it at line 10. This is where they change their views from those on page 940, if your Lordships would make a cross reference there. I will come back to that in a moment. The new Lords of Trade had just been appointed, only one member of the old board being left, a certain Mr. Rice. They say this : “ It appears to be the opinion of your Majesty's Governor that the greatest Object of commercial Benefit to be derived from this coast is that of a Cod Fishery, more abundant and more advantageous in every respect than that carried on upon the coast of Newfoundland ; and that the Seal and Sea–Cow Fishery which our Predecessors in Office appear in their Representation to Your Majesty to have considered as the principal Object of commercial Regulation in these Territories, neither has been nor ever can be other than a secondary Object of Attention, confined to particular Parts of that Coast, and carried on at a Season when it will not interfere with the other more important Fishery for Cod ; for, although it be true that the French had established several exclusive Posts upon the Coast of Labrador for the purpose of carrying on in the Winter Season a Fishery for Seals and Sea–Cows, and a Traffick with the Savages ; yet the Governor represents, that a considerable Ship, Fishery for Cod was carried on upon the Coast of Labrador by Ships fitted out from the Ports of old France.” Up to that time the Lords of Trade had taken quite a different view. My Lords, I am venturing to do something which I am sure your Lordships will quite approve of, to endeavour not to go into too much of these details. I think I have given your Lordships sufficient to found my proposition that so far as Labrador was concerned all kinds of fishing mere contemplated, and any kind of furring, without any limitation of any kind. Your Lordships will remember one illustration which came in the list of judicial acts. You will remember Judge Paterson some time in 1827 gave leave for a writ to be issued returnable on the 13th of August, 1827, for the trial of an alleged obstruction of the salmon in the big inlet, the Hamilton inlet. That shows judicial acts were being done in the interior country. One also has to bear this in mind, that the regular population there was very much increasing. It is set out in a compendious form in the Counter Case of Newfoundland. I will not go back to the document, because it is not necessary. May I conclude what I want to say.

My submission is that the white population in Labrador always regarded themselves as subject to the laws of Newfoundland, and that they subjected the interior of that country to all the development of what it was capable, bearing in mind that it was not a country which could in any way be made the subject of cultivation. I submit that on evidence that I have given you, of trapping fur-bearing animals, hunting the deer, and later on by something which I shall be coming to in a moment, the granting of timber leases—of course, that is in more recent times—they have effectually used the country which in our submission is subject to the Commission of the Government of Newfoundland.

If your Lordships would not mind looking at page 92 of the red volume, which is the Counter Case of Newfoundland, it is rather instructive just to see the sort of population there was. There are references at the sides but I need not trouble about referring to them. The Case says at page 92, line 11 : “ Moreover as in Newfoundland, so on the Coast of Labrador, though the cod-fishery was always the main, it was never the exclusive object of the Government's interest. There was not from the first any attempt to prevent, fishermen from fishing for salmon in the rivers or from hunting or trapping for fur. Nor was there at any time a rigid enforcement of Statutes or regulations prohibiting settlement. In 1679 1,700 persons were resident in Newfoundland. In 1765 Governor Palliser reported 16,000 as the number of men remaining in Newfoundland during the winter.” Then there is a reference to the Commission of Governor Graves, and then : “ Between the years 1763 and 1809 the resident population of Newfoundland increased, and by the 24th April, 1817, has risen to between 40,000 and 50,000.”

Pausing there for a moment, the reason I cite that is to show that this idea of Newfoundland being empty in the winter is, I submit, wholly illusory and what is true of Newfoundland is equally true of Labrador ; there is no difference in principle between the two ; they are both subject to the same administration ; there are people there to whom the administration is left when the Governor has to leave by reason of having to go home. The Governor, being also Admiral, was obliged to take the King's ships home ; they could not keep them all in the ice ; they would have been destroyed. But his administration was only temporarily suspended, and he left the administration of Newfoundland and Labrador to those Justices of the Peace who, your Lordships heard some days ago, were carrying out their functions in both those countries. Of course, at an early time one gets established jurisdictions in Newfoundland and also Statutes passed creating jurisdictions for Newfoundland as well. For all those reasons I submit that it is no good saying that the Commission of the Governor did not extend in the fullest sense of the term to the administration of that part of the Peninsula of Labrador as well as to the Island of Newfoundland.

Your Lordships know the trouble that has arisen in this case was due to the discovery of those valuable spruce trees in the interior. We shall no doubt hear from my learned friend, Mr. Macmillan, later on, what part, if any, Canada took in developing that industry. It does not come before your Lordships definitely in the evidence, but there is evidence, and I found myself upon it, to show that we were granting timber leases to a number of residents there within the territory. The reference is Volume III, page 1641. If your Lordships will be good enough to look at that page I will give you some illustrations ; I am not going through them all. You will see applications were made as long ago as 1898, before the dispute had arisen, and I think before the Statute passed by Canada purporting to extend its boundary had ever been made law. It is long before the dispute.

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

On the 7th, May, 1898, applications were approved. Your Lordship will see at line 10, A. Le C. Berteau, over 153 square miles on the southern side of the Grand Lac of the North West River. That is right in the heart of the country. Then E. H. Berteau the same ; that is Hamilton Inlet ; I think those are all Hamilton Inlet ; some are on the coast. There are a number ; I am not going to read them all out, but it shows that people were applying for timber allotments, and there were people who approved or did not approve them. If you look at line 32 of page 1642, you will see some were not approved. The point is not whether they were approved or not approved. The deciding authority was the Executive Council of the Colony of Newfoundland.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : Surely that only comes to this, that at that time the Executive Council of Newfoundland assumed that they were the proper authorities ; that is all.

28 Oct., 1926.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : That is right, my Lord. Your Lordship remembers I said just now that the evidence did not come before you in any very convincing way. What I mean is that it is only the fact that we did it, and you will find negatively that the Canadians at that time, as far as I know, never took any objection to it.

Viscount HALDANE ; That is 1898.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord, I took that, because when you get later on, the evidential value gets very considerably less. naturally, once the dispute has arisen. Sir William Macgregor, the Governor, at page 1647, points that out quite clearly in 1906, in approving some Minutes which I need not read, but which you will find in Volume V at page 2257; I am not going to trouble with them ; they are merely recommendations of grants. What Sir William Macgregor says at page 1647 is this : “ I have approved of these Minutes in the usual way, though I have grave doubts as to the desirability of granting leases to cut timber over large areas on the Labrador Coast without a report.” Obviously as late as 1906, for what it is worth, he interprets the area of his jurisdiction in the sense for which we contend. You do not find Canada, as far as I know, making any objection.

I am reminded that perhaps I was not quite accurate in saying that the dispute had not arisen ; it had arisen a little earlier ; but the point I make about it is, whether there was a dispute or not, the only authority you find making any sort of attempt to use this new found wealth is the administrative authority of the Colony of Newfoundland.

Now, on the other point, your Lordship was good enough to say, at one time, at any rate, that you did not want authority for the contention which I was putting forward. It is not a matter which can be elaborated at any great length. It is on page 154 of the red volume. Your Lordship has the point in mind ; I am going back to the Proclamation just to finish this. My submission is as to the meaning, upon ordinary principles of construction, of the word “ Coast ” there ; and may I adopt Lord Finlay's expression, by reference back to Thomas Graves' Commission, that is at page 149, “ and appoint you the said Thomas Graves to be our Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over Our Island of Newfoundland and all the Coasts of Labrador.” I submit one has to read those words into the Proclamation.

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : The Proclamation is only stating there what has been done by the Commission.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : That is right, my Lord ; and therefore the operative words are the words of the Commission. My submission is that it is not a valid argument to say that because the Commission is granted in the language which is used, it must be cut down and curtailed by reason of the purpose for which it is granted. My submission is that any argument founded on this : “ Oh, you have got nothing more than a sort of Admiralty jurisdiction,” is, as a matter of construction, entirely unsound. The jurisdiction that the Governor gets is no more and no less than what is conferred upon him by the Commission over “ all the coasts of Labrador,” and so one is back again on the question which really is the question in this case : What do you mean by the “ coasts of Labrador ” ? In determining that, my submission is that you cannot look at this purpose of the free fishery at all ; it is not wanted.

28 Oct., 1926.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : When the Proclamation says that the territory, whatever it is, is to be put under the care of the Governor, it is doing nothing more than saying that he has been appointed Governor.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD: That is all. Therefore the document which wants construing is the document on page 149, quite free and untrameled from any limitation supposed to be put upon it by the introductory words at page 154. I only want to make the point, but I submit that any argument founded on that is unsound and that the problem still remains, What do you mean by the expression “ the coast of Labrador ” ? That I have told your Lordships already, and I do not propose to say anything more about it.

My Lords, there is a little evidence on the question I have been discussing, and I think possibly I ought to indicate what it is. Perhaps I ought to call attention to one or two affidavits in Volume V, just to show what was happening in the country. Will your Lordships be good enough to turn to Volume V, page 2312. There are a good many of them, but I am not going to read them all ; it is just to give you an idea of what was going on during the last upwards of 30 or 40 years in Labrador. Mr. Finger says : “ I was born on the Labrador and have lived at Nain all my life and my father before me. I am forty-three years of age. I have hunted and fished since I was ten years of age, going in over one hundred miles into the interior. I have been in the interior almost as much as I have been in Nain, spending part of the winter and part of the spring in there. I have always lived under the laws of Newfoundland, and have always recognised the Governor and Government of Newfoundland. I have never had anything to do with the laws of Canada or Quebec, and do not know anything about them. I claim to be a subject of Newfoundland and nobody from any other country has ever interfered with me or objected.”

Then Mr. Kopek, on page 2313, says : “ I am fifty-six years of age. I have lived in Nain all my life and my father before me. I have been in the interior of the country summer and winter, trapping and hunting. I have gone in over a hundred miles, living in snow-houses in the winter and in tents in the summer. Nobody have ever interfered with me or been up there. I have always obeyed Newfoundland laws and have recognized Newfoundland authority as being over us.”

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Viscount HALDANE : He was very fortunate ; nobody meddled with him.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Dr. Grenfell, holding a Newfoundland Commission as Justice of the Peace, frequently administered justice there and he did it very effectively. I do not know how he enforced his sentences, but he certainly did administer justice in that country up till quite recently ; and also—I am not saying this in any captious sense, there is no doubt from the papers in the case and from what we know of Dr. Grenfell, that the work he did has been very beneficial and of value to the nation. Whatever the evidential value may be, I am not going to read that now, because at some later stage, when your Lordship is being put in possession of the Canadian point of view, no doubt my learned friend will call attention to it.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : I see these people lived in Nain, and Nain has a bigish river coming down into it.

p. 327

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : The first one says : “ I have hunted and fished since I was ten years of age, going in over 100 miles into the interior.” That river goes a great deal more than that.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord. Then at page 2314 is a gentleman of better education, but his evidence is none the less valuable. He is Christian Schmidt, the Trade Superintendent of the Unitas Fratrum Mission Store. He says : “ (1) I have been resident in Nain for the past 19 years, and am well acquainted with the habits and customs of the Esquimaux and natives of the Labrador, some of whom, in winter-time, go as far as three hundred miles into the interior for the purpose of hunting, trapping, etc. (2) As far as I know the natives have always obeyed the laws of Newfoundland, and have always considered themselves to be under Newfoundland Jurisdiction.” Another thing he says which is also very important : “ We have never paid duties to any Canadian authorities and have never been required to do so. We have been exempt from duties by the Government of Newfoundland.” That is the very old exemption, your Lordships will remember, of the Moravian Brethren who were exempted from duties in the Eighteenth Century. Then he says : “ So far as I know, the Government of the Dominion of Canada or the Province of Quebec have never made any attempt to claim jurisdiction on this portion of Labrador. (4) Two years ago, when in conversation with Captain Bernier, an Official of the Canadian Government, and Mr. Duncan, a Customs Officer, they stated that ‘ they were willing enough to enforce Canadian laws on the Ungava side of the Bay, but they did not wish to interfere with anything on the Labrador Coast.”

Then the next one, Mr. William Ford, is very much the same. That is on page 2315. He says : “ I am 65 years of age and reside at Black Island. I have been residing on the Coast all my lifetime. My father came from Devonshire, England. He came here at the age of about 16, and lived at Paul's Island most of his life. He has been dead over 30 years. Sometimes he visited England and came out again. He fished, trapped, and hunted on the Coast, and had five or six English servants. He used to go into the interior about 150 miles trading with the Indians. I often went hunting for my father during his lifetime.” I do not think that means hunting for him in the sense of trying to find him ; I think it means hunting as representing him. “ I have been inland over 150 miles hunting deer. I have always recognised the Newfoundland Government and Newfoundland laws.”

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : This man comes from the mouth of the Hamilton Inlet apparently.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes, my Lord, that is right. There are a great many affidavits of that kind which of course cannot be put on one side in so far as they have any evidential value upon the problem that you have to determine. It is their story that up to this extent at any rate you do not find very much Canadian administration ; and it will be interesting to hear how that part of the matter is developed on the other side, but I do not propose to go into it further at the moment. I shall have something to mention to your Lordships a little later on about earlier acts done by the early Canadian authorities, but I do not propose to develop this matter any further.

Your Lordships have there very good evidence of hunting all over the country without any interruption, and if you find somebody fishing and hunting and this going on not only for 100 years but for very nearly 150 or more years, without any sort of protest or objection, without any attempt to set up any rival Government, and you find a particular Government acting in that way; it is an extraordinarily good illustration of the authority which is charged with the administration of that Coast, in a dispute as to whether it is that authority or some other authority which has rights. I quite agree it all comes back eventually to the Commission and on that part of the case I submit that we have clearly made our position good.

My Lords, I had thought at one time of giving your Lordships some evidence about the topography of Labrador, but I think this morning this model has really put before you in as good a form as it could be put with Sir John Simon's exposition of it, the essential features.

I will not take up time by explaining whether a particular letter is “ o ” or “ a,” whether it is “ fiord ” or “ fiard.” I think that is more a matter which would probably come from the other side who are seeking to restrict our boundary. Therefore I do not think I should be justified in reading to you, much as I would like to have done, Dr. Low's report. Dr. Low, as you know, is the eminent Canadian who made his report at the time when he was making that map in 1895. We have had Dr. Low's map referred to so often. It is Map No. 42 of the Newfoundland Atlas. I hope your Lordships will bear in mind when looking at that map, that it is only a quarter map. It is not a complete map. It is the top quarter only. That is the map which forms the subject matter of Map No. 42. In case any of the Tribunal would like to look at Dr. Low's report I have not the slightest objection to reading it, because although it is a document coming from the other side it is one which, in my submission, entirely supports our view. It is to be found in Volume V, page 2590. It is useful to read the report if one wants to understand the map which he then made. With your Lordships' permission, now you have got that explained, it is quite plain how the general lie of the country is. This shows the contours far better than any verbal exposition by Counsel could show them, and taking up time by reading the book I do not think would be justified at this stage. Dr. Low's report is in two parts. There is a geographical report, and a geological report. We are not concerned on the present argument with any scientific evidence. Our argument does not involve any scientific evidence. It is only that your Lordships should have before your minds the picture of this country, which we say was parcelled out in the way it was parcelled out by the Government of the day.

p. 329

I also have refrained, and designedly so, from saying anything about the big arm of the sea which is called by various names—Hamilton Inlet, and so forth. Your Lordships know where that is. Of course, if our argument is correct and we are entitled to have up to the height of land, I need not discuss the question as to the precise character of that piece of water. No doubt you will hear from the other side considerations about it, and at a later stage we shall be able to deal with the arguments so addressed to you, and if necessary, call your attention to the scientific evidence in these volumes.

The only other actual point that I have to deal with is this point which Lord Sumner reminded us of, the point as to the precise position where the line which the Statute requires to be drawn has to be placed. It is partly in Volume III, and partly in Volume VIII. I think I shall be able to deal with the point quite shortly. Your Lordships will also want Map No. 52 of the Newfoundland Atlas before you. Taking Volume VIII, the page in that volume which I am going to consider in a moment is page 3954.

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : Is this a question about Ance Sablon.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Yes. The precise question is this. Under the Act of 1825 your Lordships know that line has to be drawn due north and south from the bay or harbour of Ance Sablon inclusive ; and the problem is at what particular point on the shore do you draw the line. If you want the reference to the Statute I can give it you. The particular section of the Act of 1825 is Section 9, and it is to be found in Volume I, page 210. It is “ So much of the said coast as lies to the westward of a line to be drawn due north and south from the bay or harbour of Ance Sablon, inclusive, as far as the fifty-second degree of north latitude,” etc.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : Then there is a sketch map facing page 3954 in Volume VIII. That is not the line at the head of the bay where the Blanc Sablon River runs.

28 Oct., 1926.

The Lord Chancellor.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : The map facing page 3954 shows the rival contentions.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : There happens to be a river running in at the head of the Bay of Blanc Sablon. Why is it not that ?

The Lord Chancellor.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : The section says “ Ance Sablon inclusive.”

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: I see.

Mr. Barrington–Ward.

Mr. BARRINGTON–WARD : The Lord Chancellor has, if I may say so, anticipated the fence which I am going now to endeavour to surmount.

2 Y

p. 330

The LORD CHANCELLOR : That means in the land to be re–annexed to Canada is included the bay or harbour of Ance Sablon, does it not ?

Mr. BARRINGTON–WARD : Would it not depend to a certain extent upon the history of the matter as to where you put your point ? What is inclusive is all the land the other side of the line, is it not ?

The LORD CHANCELLOR : Surely it is enacted that so much of the coast as lies to the westward of a line to be drawn due north and south from the bay or harbour of Ance Sablon, inclusive, as far as then fifty–second degree of north latitude has to be re–annexed to Canada.

Mr. BARRINGTON–WARD : Could not that be read as leaving open the point from where you draw your line. But when you have once got your point everything to the west of that is included in Canada.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: Where do you draw the line?

Mr. BARRINGTON–WARD : My submission is this. We are, perhaps, like our friend, Mr. Bladen, who has been referred to so much, a little ambitious in asking to have it drawn at Lazy Point. I have consulted with my colleagues in this case about the matter, and with the representatives of the Newfoundland Government, and they would prefer me to argue the case on the basis that the line should be drawn from the River. That is what has been the practice for the last 60 years at least, and I will show you from one or two documents in a moment that the line should be drawn from the River. While you have the map before you, may I refer you to the Woody Island—Isle au Bois. There is nothing to say that the line is to be projected into the sea. It rather seems that the person who wins on the line will get the island on the ground that it is adjacent—because the section says : “ and all other islands adjacent to such part as last aforesaid of the coast of Labrador.”

Mr. Barrington–Ward.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : What you are claiming is from the River ?

Mr. BARRINGTON–WARD: Yes.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : That is from the River that runs in at the top ?

Mr. BARRINGTON–WARD : Yes.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : Do you claim part of the island ?

Mr. BARRINGTON–WARD : Yes, we claim it should be shared in the proportion of two–thirds and one–third. It no doubt could be the subject of adjustment hereafter. That is the submission I am instructed to make.

Mr. Barrington–Ward.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : What about the word “ inclusive ” ?

Mr. BARRINGTON–WARD : I submit “ inclusive ” means every bit of the land lying to the westward of the imaginary line.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : What does that add ?

Mr. BARRINGTON–WARD : It might be almost a contradiction in terms to say a line, which has no parts, might be excluded. My submission is that where you have a phrase like this “ from the bay or harbour of Ance Sablon, inclusive ” it does not necessarily mean that you give them all the bay.

Viscount FINLAY : It cannot possibly mean that. The line drawn shows what point you take, and, of course, all you are to take is included in that.

Mr. BARRINGTON–WARD : I can summarise the dispute. This dispute arose as long ago as the sixties. There is a great deal of correspondence about it, because the unfortunate people living on the bay, carrying on their avocations there, were in this position. It is bad enough to be visited by one tax collector, but to get a visit from two tax collectors and have to pay both, would be extremely unpleasant. There was not much chance for them there, either in the one case or the other, because the tax collector came in a good sloop and on one occasion arrived with the Judge, I think Judge Sweetland. The difficulty arose as to who should be paid. What was settled was this—I think I am stating it accurately—about 1864 or some time of that sort. The Newfoundland customs house is just to the right of this line drawn up the river, and they have collected on that side of the river, and Canada on the other, in cases where it was proper to collect dues. That is the position. The matter arose as long ago 1860. If your Lordship will cast your eye on page 3995, you will see the Governor of Quebec, Sir Edmund Head, wrote to the Duke of Newcastle raising the point and arguing it and referring to a chart. I do not think any useful purpose will be served by my going through this. The Canadian authorities took the opinion of the Attorneys-General for Lower Canada and Upper Canada, at page 3964, and they took the view that that Woody Island was within the limits of Canada. As I say, this dispute went on. I have a great many illustrations of it here. A very practical conclusion was arrived at, and I do not know even now whether in a matter of this kind—it is a minor point—it might not be possible to adjust it.

Lord SUMNER : Do you, on behalf of Newfoundland, attach any meaning to the word “ inclusive,” and, if so, what ?

2 Y 2

p. 332

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : I think it is a word put in for better security only. The draughtsman of the statute had this line drawn inclusive.

Lord SUMNER : As security, you mean, to occupy us for the afternoon ?

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : Oh, no, not for that !

Lord Sumner.

Lord SUMNER : What does it mean ? I can understand it if it means “ including the same.” You are now defining what is to be given to Quebec, and it is to start from this line which starts at Ance au Blanc Sablon inclusive. That might be including the same, that is to say, the bay. But what it means from your point of view I fail to perceive at present.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD: Could it not mean inclusive of the space on which the line is drawn, if it is not in fact drawn ?

Viscount FINLAY : But a line has no dimensions at all.

Mr. Barrington-Ward.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : When I say drawn, I mean actually put on the ground. I submit it might possibly mean that, when you come to do the task—which you have not to do in this case—of putting the defined boundary on to the territory, it would cover the space where that line is drawn.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : It is an imaginary line ; it is not a physical line.

Lord SUMNER : Would you tell me what authority there is in the statute for dividing the island ? I thought islands adjacent were granted as entire islands, according as they were, or not, adjacent to the coast. Is there any authority in the wording of the statute for prolonging this imaginary line to the south so that there may be a partition of the island ?

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : I should not be right in taking up your Lordships' time in trying to argue it. It is not so.

Lord SUMNER : Then what is your contention ?

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD: Let me put it in this way. When the boundary comes to be marked out, the actual physical soil that is used is included in the territory of Canada. It is open to draw the line at any point which is regarded as a proper place, and I should submit the customary practice of the parties should determine that. I quite agree with what Lord Sumner says. I will not attempt to argue any division of the island. It is quite obvious under the construction of the statute, though that might be a very reasonable arrangement, it is not an arrangement which the statute seems to have in view.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : Then you draw the line at the river. Would you then dispute that this island is adjacent to the part annexed to Canada ?

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : I think it would be very difficult to determine. That would be a matter really for physical observation, or perhaps measurement.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : Surely not. Take it on the map.

Mr. BARRINGTON-WARD : My only authority for having any doubt, I think, is confirmed if you look at page 3957. Canada were quite confident it was annexed to them, but the Secretary of State says, at line 21 : “ On referring to this chart ”—that is Bayfield's Chart of 1832-34—“ I cannot say that I think it so conclusive on the question of proximity as it appears to yourself.” I am in that state of mind also. It is very difficult to say. Of course, if your Lordships should be against our contention on the main point as to where the line should be drawn, then cadit quaestio—I could not argue it.

I hope I have not taken up too much of your Lordships' time this afternoon in dealing with this matter. It is always a little difficult when one has had a case exhausted by one's leader, to add anything of use to the discussion. I just want to mention two other things so that your Lordships should not think anything has been forgotten. I told you about the topography. The greater part of two volumes have been taken up with two matters, one known as King's posts, in Volume VII, and another with the religious activities exercised from the Canadian side, in Volume VI. We have carefully considered the matter, and though naturally we should be glad to explain the subject to your Lordships we do not quite see the relevance of either of those matters at the present moment, and in consultation with my learned Leader I was asked to mention them to your Lordships so that it should be realised that every document, so far as anything relevant can be found in these eight volumes, has been brought to the attention of the Board.

Mr. MACMILLAN : My Lords, I am happy at the outset of this case to find myself in agreement with Sir John Simon, all the more so because I am afraid as I proceed our ways will be found to part pretty widely. I agree with Sir John Simon, that your Lordships are not sitting as a Boundary Commission. Your Lordships' task is not to create a new boundary between the Colony of Newfoundland and the Dominion of Canada, but to declare an existing boundary between the Dominion and the Colony. That is, of course, a very broad and important distinction with regard to the task imposed upon your Lordships. It leaves the matter not at your arbitrement as to what you think would be the best boundary, but you are charged with the task of ascertaining what is the existing boundary which exists as a legal entity at the moment, and we are all engaged in the search for that line. It is implicit in certain documents, and from these documents the line has to be extracted.

My Lords, I am further in agreement happily with Sir John that the means for the ascertainment of this existing boundary are to be found in certain specified documents. These documents are the relative Statutes, Orders in Council, and Proclamations which are to be found in the red volume, Volume No. I, on page 149 and the following pages. The question for the Board has been so framed as to make the answer dependent upon the interpretation to be placed upon those documents, and amongst those documents in particular. I think I may say, we are also agreed that the question will have to be determined upon the view taken by your Lordships of five documents : (1) A Commission, Captain Graves' Commission of the 25th of April, 1763, (2) a Proclamation, the Royal Proclamation of the 7th of October, 1763, (3) a statute, the Quebec Act of 1774, (4) also is a Statute, the Newfoundland Statute of 1809, and, lastly, the Lower Canada Act of 1825.

It is, my Lords, upon a sound construction of these documents that the solution of the present problem turns. While your Lordships are not sitting as Boundary Commissioners, neither are your Lordships engaged in hearing a litigation, and I accordingly propose in my address to the Board not to confine myself to replying to the points taken by my learned friend, Sir John Simon, but rather to open the case for the Dominion of Canada as a substantive case. I conceive it will be in accordance with your Lordships' wishes, therefore, that I should not, as one would do in replying in an ordinary litigation, deal with the points that have been taken against me by Sir John Simon, but preferably I should put before your Lordships the substantive case of Canada, and of course incidentally to that I will take up and emphasise the points which Sir John Simon has brought before you and do my best to answer them.

Viscount Haldane.

I think it might be useful if I, in what remains of this afternoon, indicate at once to your Lordships my conception of this enquiry. The task is a task of interpretation. It is a task of interpreting written documents, and as always happens where written documents are under interpretation, what one is in search of is the intention. What do those who used this language mean thereby to effect.

28 Oct., 1926.

Viscount Haldane.

Viscount FINLAY : What does the language they used mean ?

Mr. MACMILLAN: That is true, my Lord, it is putting it the other way round.

Mr. Macmillan.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : What implication is to be derived from that language.

Viscount HALDANE : There is also a distinction to be drawn in the case of diplomatic documents, you have always a great advantage in ascertaining the points from which you start because they are laid down in the books of international Law.

p. 335

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, one is not confined to the ordinary aids.

Viscount HALDANE : At the same time there is a large and intermediate matter to which both rules apply, and the question is always how much one applies to the other, for instance, taking historical considerations into account how far would they impress you.

Mr. MACMILLAN: No doubt. I am sure I have your Lordships' assent to this : primarily the task is, given certain words, what do those words mean.

Viscount HALDANE : Yes.

Mr. MACMILLAN : What is the intention which is to be derived from those words as used by the person who used them.

The Lord Chancellor.

Now, my Lords, may I so to speak give the scheme of what I propose to put before your Lordships, thus : There are two means whereby intention may be ascertained. You may ascertain it first of all from intrinsic evidence, the terms of the documents themselves. What in the present case is the inference to be drawn from the language used in the documents as to the scope of the right conferred thereby on Newfoundland. If the meaning of those documents is intrinsically clear, as we submit it is, then, of course, it is unnecessary to go beyond the documents at all, but if, on the other hand, the language of the documents be found on examination to be obscure or ambiguous or inconclusive then and then only is it legitimate to resort to extrinsic evidence. In the present case it has interested me to note that in my learned friend's address he has confined himself almost entirely to what one may call the secondary class of evidence. His examination of the documents has been comparatively brief, but his exposition of what really is after all extrinsic evidence has been prolonged and detailed.

Sir Thomas

8 Oct., 1926.[sic]

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : Do not you put that too high, Mr. Macmillan, if the document on the face of it is ever so clear, are you prevented from knowing the conditions in which it was signed, and the circumstances existing at its date ?

Mr. MACMILLAN : I would submit that if the document is absolutely clear then you need nothing more.

Viscount FINLAY : You may want to know what the circumstances were for the purpose of seeing whether it is absolutely clear.

Mr. MACMILLAN : No doubt.

Mr. Macmillan.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : But you see, Mr. Macmillan, if the

p. 336

documents are clear, as I understand the rule about extrinsic evidence, then you do not admit extrinsic evidence at all ; it is because there is what English law would call a latent ambiguity, that is to say, the document may appear clear on the face of it, but when you know the circumstances there is doubt.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, you may have to look at the surrounding circumstances to set up the ambiguity. That is perfectly clear.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : I think you were putting it a little too high.

Mr. MACMILLAN : I am quite prepared to take it down a peg if I may. I am anxious to make the distinction between the two classes of evidence which one invokes in interpreting documents, because it is a very important distinction for the present purpose. I think I shall have your Lordship's agreement that the first duty is to see whether the documents themselves decide the question, but if you find the documents to be indecisive, then you may, legitimately, indeed you must, resort to extrinsic aids, but, my Lord, may I say this with regard to extrinsic evidence, that extrinsic evidence is of many kinds and of very varying value. There are certain forms of extrinsic evidence as has already been alluded to by my Lord Finlay, which are of the highest value, there are certain other forms of extrinsic evidence which may be of exceedingly little value, and in the present case it is of some interest to classify the aids which have been provided for your assistance in these documents in the nature of extrinsic

28 Oct., 1926.

Mr. Macmillan.

evidence in the different categories into which they fall. I have attempted to do so in this way. First of all there is the evidence to be derived from the surrounding circumstances at the time when the documents were drawn up. To put the matter in its ordinary colloquial form, I exhort myself to put myself in the position of the authors of these documents. To do so in the present case we have to consider the antecedent history. We have to consider the existing administrative position, and we also have, as part of the material, the preliminary reports and other written documents which led up to the formal executive or legislative acts. All these matters are of importance, they are extrinsic to the documents themselves, but they are all of value as enabling us to put ourselves in the position of those from whom those documents emanated, be they executive or legislative acts ; therefore to gauge the purpose which they had in mind when one is considering the language which they used to effectuate that purpose so ascertained, that class of extrinsic evidence may be of very great importance and may be of very great assistance—evidence of surrounding circumstances—put yourselves in the place of those persons who used that language. The second type of extrinsic assistance which one may get is from what is known as contemporary exposition. The document has come into being, be it a Proclamation or Statute, or some other executive instrument, and the law has always regarded the interpretation which in practice has been put upon the document at the time as of value, probably for several good reasons, the reason that occurs at once is this, that those who were acting on the documents at or about the time, were nearer the position of affairs. They were still speaking the same language, if one may put it so, as the authors, and they had perhaps a better means of knowing the purpose and intent of the document than we have. Looking back at them through the mists of time, the contemporanea expositio has always been regarded as of value, as an aid in the interpretation of written documents, at any rate, if they are of somewhat venerable age. Then the question comes to be : How did those to whom these documents were addressed interpret them by their actions or their writings at or about the time the documents were in existence ; of course, by this time the question is : How were they acted upon ?

p. 337

My Lord, these two classes of evidence are conspicuous in these volumes, and I should be far from belittling their value, but there is a good deal more material before your Lordships, much of which I should suggest is of much less value. There is a considerable amount of material which is not contemporary at all ; it is information as to things done, things said, and things written, frequently many years after the time, not contemporary exposition but exposition long subsequent to the time when the documents came into existence, and that kind of evidence, for which a very large part of these volumes is responsible, is necessarily of very varying value indeed. There may be, here and there, clues to be found that may be worth following up, which may be of some value, but in this matter one must discriminate among the different categories. These three types of evidence, evidence of surrounding circumstances at the inception of the documents, evidence of what was done by way of contemporary exposition at the time, and evidence of the subsequent exposition, by act, word or deed later on, exhaust the three main categories of evidence which can be invoked for the purpose of arriving at an interpretation of these documents. There is always available, of course, another type of aid, I mean the ordinary aids of interpretation which are to be found in dictionaries, in judicial decisions, in arbitration precedents, and, if you please, in general principles of law ; in so far as these may be usefully invoked here, some have been invoked by my learned friend, and again a considerable amount of material of that sort has also been taken out and printed in these volumes. Now, I think, my Lords, I have in these categories, exhausted all the various forms of aid which one may call into play in the task of interpreting these documents ; and my own submission to your Lordships would be this, in the first place : that upon a fair reading of the documents, taken by themselves, it is abundantly plain that the subject matter of those documents was not, as Sir John Simon suggests, a large territory extending inland to the height of land, but was a maritime strip of coast necessary and proper for the pursuit of the fishery industry on the coast of Labrador. My Lords, may I put the problem in its precise legal setting, first of all, and I think I may best do it in this way : if you take the year 1808, at that time, it will be conceded on all hands, the Colony of Newfoundland had no interest whatever in the Peninsula of Labrador ; it had no territorial jurisdiction and no rights of any kind whatsoever. That is conceded.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : That is the year before the Act.

Mr. MACMILLAN: That is the year before the Act of 1809. I choose that advisedly. We start, if I may so put it, with a clean sheet in 1809 ; at that moment when the Act of 1809 was passed Newfoundland had nothing on the Continent. The Act of 1809 gave Newfoundland something, and when one turns—

Viscount HALDANE : Did Quebec run up to Cape Chidley in those days ?

Mr. MACMILLAN : That is our submission. It is not necessary for my case to say so, but that is my submission. The start of the matter, therefore, in logical order, is to be found in Section 14 of the Newfoundland Act of 1809, which is in the red Appendix at page 195.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON: You say that the Act of 1809 gave Newfoundland an interest on the Continent; it is quite true that at that moment Newfoundland had no interest, but it had had an interest, and the Act expressly re-annexes it.

Mr. MACMILLAN: I am sure your Lordship will not anticipate what I have to say. I wish to keep the matter in perfect logical order. What one starts with in 1809 is that at the moment of that enactment Newfoundland was not on the Continent at all ; then one looks at the Act to see what introduces Newfoundland at that stage to the Continent, and that is done in Section 14 ; that does this : it annexes to the Government of Newfoundland certain rights and interests, and it does so, as my Lord is good enough to remind me, by a historical reference; that is how it set about it, and it thus defines what is to be given to Newfoundland. Newfoundland is to have “ such parts of the Coast of Labrador, from the River St. John to Hudson's Straights and the said Island of Anticosti and all other smaller islands so annexed to the Government of Newfoundland by the said Proclamation of the seventh day of October One thousand seven hundred and sixty three.” My Lords will note, first of all, that the annexation is there stated to have been effected by the Proclamation and not by the Commission.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : Was not that an inaccurate recital ? In fact, the first recital in the very section says the Proclamation declared “ that he had put the Coast of

Labrador.”

Mr. MACMILLAN : I was drawing attention to that, my Lord, not in order to make a point upon it favourable to myself, but rather to dicte that at that time the Commission and the Proclamation were regarded really as associated acts, and that, I think, probably the more important public document seems to have predominated in the minds of those who were drawing this Act ; but it is true that before this the Commission of 1763 had confided to the Governor of Newfoundland whatever it had confided to him before the Proclamation was made ; therefore, in one sense it is not accurate to say it was annexed to the Government of Newfoundland by the Proclamation, but the Statute has so chosen to say it.

p. 339

Viscount FINLAY : What is the most convenient reference to that Statute ; it is more than once set out ?

Sir Thomas
Warrington.

Mr. MACMILLAN : The one that I am now reading, which is page 195 of the red volume. It is Section 14 of the Act of 1809, and I was trying, if I could, to keep the thing in precise logical order. One starts in 1809 with no rights on the part of Labrador on the Continent, and then an Act comes along which confers rights, but it does so by, so to speak, a revival of a state of matters which had existed before ; it does not start de novo. This matter has a history behind it, and, in defining what it is to be annexed to the Government of Newfoundland, it does so by referring you to other documents for their contents.

Mr. Macmillan.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : That is the root of the existing title of Newfoundland.

Mr. MACMILLAN : That is really the way to start it, and we start from there, and then, of course, one brings in all the other documents, to which this document refers you for the content of this document.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : It does not very much matter, does it, that the Statute says “ annexed by the Proclamation,” because when you go back to the Proclamation you find what is referred to is that which was comprised in the Commission to Governor Graves ?

28 Oct., 1926.

Mr. Macmillan.

Mr. MACMILLAN: I, personally, do not make very much of it, but I think I am entitled to say this : that the Commission and the Proclamation together seem to have been regarded by the authors of this Legislation as the important document.

Sir THOMAS WARRINGTON : Yes, taken together.

Mr. MACMILLAN : I should not like to put it any higher than that, my Lord. Now, my Lords, that title which I have just read to your Lordships, is described in our Case as “ a title by reference,” that is to say, it is a title which is not itself explanatory or exhaustive, it requires you to refer to certain other documents in order to find out what was the content of the Section. My Lords, I might at this stage clear the ground further by saying this, that when one turns

2 Z 2

p. 340

back to the series of transactions which you find embodied in the documents of 1763, 1774, 1809, and 1825, I humbly submit that the subject matter which was being dealt with in all those documents, statutes, or proclamations, was the same subject matter. I think again I find myself in agreement with Sir John Simon there. Something is being bandied about between Newfoundland and Canada ; what exactly it is that is being bandied about is the question ; but that something was in transaction between those two Governments is undoubted ; and the series of transactions which took place I think one must regard as transactions referable to the same subject matter. I do not think it was a different subject matter, it was the same subject matter. Then, my Lords, if that be the subject matter, one is referred therefore back by this Statute to the Proclamation of the 7th day of October, 1763, to see what, by that Proclamation (and I read Proclamation in its wide sense as including the Commission to which it refers) was annexed to the Government of Newfoundland then, and one turns back, therefore, to the Proclamation, which you will find in the same volume on page 154.

MORNING SESSION.

Mr. MACMILLAN : My Lords, yesterday afternoon I suggested that the proper approach to this question was through the Act of 1809, for this reason: that, immediately prior to the passing of that Act, it is common ground that Newfoundland had no interests in Labrador ; and, therefore, one finds the first Statutory title of Newfoundland in the terms of that Act. I also, of course, made plain that the terms of that Act referred you to earlier documents for the measure of the right which Newfoundland acquired by Statute in 1809. I drew attention to the terms of the Act of 1809, which my Lord Chancellor suggested might have been merely a mis-recital, and very possibly was a mis-recital, because the measure of the right of Newfoundland is to be found in what was annexed to the Proclamation of the 7th day of October, 1763. It is rather interesting to note that that seems to be the view of Newfoundland itself, because I observe in their Pleadings at page 30 they describe the Royal Proclamation of the 7th day of October, 1763, as “ The source of Newfoundland's original jurisdiction on the Labrador.” Frankly, my Lords, I do not think there is much more than a verbal point there, because when you look at the Proclamation, it, in terms, refers you to the Commission, and therefore the proper approach to the question, probably, is by looking at the transaction as a whole, and the record of the transaction is to be found in the Commission and Proclamation. The Commission is at page 149. My Lords, the critical year in this matter is the year 1763, for in that year there occurred all the transactions which constitute the foundation of Newfoundland's Claim. Whether it be the Proclamation that is the source of their rights, or whether, as expressed by my learned friend, Sir John, it is in the Commission—may I just use his exact words—“ In the Commission that you find the actual root of title ”; whether it be in the one or the other of those documents, they are both in 1763, and to that year, therefore, we must look for the ascertainment of this boundary.

29 Oct., 1926.

My Lords, I thought that perhaps your Lordships would find it convenient to have the Calendar of 1763. The sequence of events there is very significant, and, as will appear shortly, I found upon that sequence as being a very pregnant sequence. On the 10th February, 1763, was passed the Treaty of Paris (Volume I, page 330). On the 29th March, 1763, the Instructions to Captain Graves were passed (Volume II, page 391). On the 25th April, 1763, Captain Graves' Commission was issued (Volume I, page 149). On the 2nd May, 1763, Captain Graves' Admiralty Instructions were issued to him, and the text of those Instructions will be found in Volume II., page 406. On the 23rd August, 1763, Instructions were issued to Lord Colvill, which I shall refer to and explain shortly, in Volume VIII, page 4215.

p. 345

Lord WARRINGTON : Those we have not had yet ?

Mr. MACMILLAN: No, we have not had these, these relate to fishery also. Then the next date is the 7th October, 1763, the Proclamation (Volume I., page 153). The last significant date in the year is the 21st November, 1763, when the Commission was issued to General Murray as Governor of Quebec (Volume II, page 756). My Lords now have the sequence of events.

Sir JOHN SIMON : My learned friend is leaving out the Report of the Lords of Trade and so on ?

Mr. MACMILLAN : I am certainly.

Sir JOHN SIMON : They come in the middle.

Mr. MACMILLAN: I wanted to get what you might call the cardinal dates of executive documents of one sort or another. The other documents, to which my learned friend alludes, I shall deal with, of course ; but they were either preliminary to, or subsequent to, the critical documents.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Or in the middle of them.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Or in the middle of them. My Lords, that being the Calendar of events, the first thing that is necessary to appreciate is the situation which had been created by the Treaty of Paris, of 1763. The Government of this country was confronted with an administrative problem of the first magnitude. The result of the Peace was to bring within the ambit of the British Empire the vast interests of France in Canada (I use the very largest terms at this moment, and without any specific definition) and the anxiety of the Government was as to the method of bringing under control these vast new interests. They were interests not merely Continental, but also Maritime. They were interests not merely on the main land, but upon the seas ; and, on both elements, very large new interests had been created in the hands of Great Britain, and it was manifest that the subject had to be taken in hand at once. The dates will show already to my Lords with what despatch the Government addressed themselves to the problem, because the Treaty of Paris was only signed on the 10th February, 1763, and, before the ensuing month had elapsed the Instructions to Captain Graves had already been adjusted and prepared. My Lords, the point I propose to make, and it may be convenient to state it before I take your Lordships to the detailed documents, is this: That the Government addressed itself to two entirely distinct problems ; it addressed itself to these problems in the order of their urgency, and the first problem which the Government took up was a purely fishery problem. It was not until the question of the regulation of the new fisheries which had come into the British hands had been disposed of that the Government addressed itself, in turn, to the question of territorial Government upon the mainland ; and, in order that your Lordships may appreciate the historical sequence, I would ask your Lordships to look at once at Volume II, page 386, where we get the first light shed upon this question. Apparently His Majesty had addressed to the Lords of Trade a letter requesting them to take into consideration certain matters and advise His Majesty upon them. “ In Obedience to Your Majesty's Commands, signified to Us by the Earl of Egremont, one of Your Majesty's Principle Secretaries of State, in his Lordship's Letter of the 8th Instant, We have taken into Our Consideration,” then follows a quotation, no doubt embodying the Commands of his Majesty: “ The Copies of the 5th and 6th Articles of the Definitive Treaty, relating to the Fishery of Newfoundland, & elsewhere in those Parts, and to the Cession of the Islands of St. Peter & Miquelon ; as also an Extract of the 24th Article of the said Treaty, fixing a Time for the Cession of those Islands, and directing Us to lay before your Majesty such Alterations & Additions, as shall appear to Us expedient to be made, to the Instructions given to the Governors of Newfoundland in order to conform them to the abovementioned Stipulations of the Definitive Treaty.” My Lords, the 5th and 6th Articles of the Definitive Treaty, to which the attention of the Lords of Trade was thus directed, are to be found in the first Volume at page 335, and you will observe at once that they are Articles of the Treaty relating to Fishery Matters. The 5th Article of the Definitive Treaty, in the middle of page 335, runs thus: “ The subjects of France shall have the liberty of fishing and drying on a part of the coasts of the island of Newfoundland, such as it is specified in the XIIIth Article of the Treaty of Utrecht ; which Article is renewed and confirmed by the present treaty, (except what relates to the island of Cape Breton, as well as to the other islands and coasts in the mouth and in the gulph of St.

Lawrence): And his Britannick Majesty consents to leave to the subjects of the Most Christian King the liberty of fishing in the gulph of St. Lawrence, on condition that the subjects of France do not exercise the said fishery but at the distance of three leagues from all the coasts belonging to Great Britain, as well those of the continent as those of the islands situated in the said gulph of St. Lawrence. And as to what relates to the fishery on the coasts of the island of Cape Breton, out of the said gulph, the subjects of the Most Christian King shall not be permitted to exercise the said fishery but at the distance of fifteen leagues from the coasts of the island of Cape Breton ; and the fishery on the coasts of Nova Scotia or Acadia, and everywhere else out of the said gulph, shall remain on the foot of former treaties.” Article VI. “The King of Great Britain cedes the islands of St. Pierre and Macquelon, in full right, to his Most Christian Majesty, to serve as a shelter to the French fishermen ; and his said Most Christian Majesty engages not to fortify the said islands; to erect no buildings upon them but merely for the conveniency of the fishery ; and to keep upon them a guard of fifty men only for the police.” My Lords, the Principal Secretary of State having observed the presence in the Definitive Treaty of those two Articles, the 5th and 6th, and observing that they related to the regulation of the fisheries for the future in these waters, transmitted to the Lords of Trade an enquiry as to “ what additions should be made to the Instructions to be given to the Governor of Newfoundland in order to conform them to the above mentioned stipulations of the Definitive Treaty.” That is the inception of the modifications, which you find on Captain Graves' Commission after 1763 as contrasted with his Commission before 1763. They proceed to take up the subject of their remit and say : “ After considering the Subject with that Attention & Exactness which the Nature & Importance of it so highly deserve, We humbly beg Leave to submit Our Opinion to your Majesty both with respect to the Plan of the Instructions, as they are now annually given to the Governor of Newfoundland and to such additional ones as may be thought requisite, from the Provisions, & Acquisitions of the Definitive Treaty.” Your Lordships see the task to which the Lords of Trade directed themselves ; they learned from the Treaty of these important new fishery regulations under the Treaty ; they were instructed to consider how these could be most efficaciously managed in future, and they proceed to advise His Majesty upon the matter. “ The Instructions hitherto given to the Governor of Newfoundland have been principally formed upon the Provision of the Statute of the 10th and 11th of William the Third, for regulating this Fishery ” ; my Lords, that is the Act of 1699, printed in the first Volume, at page 250. I shall have a little to say about it later on, because it really, I think I may say, contains the Code of Law which the Governors of Newfoundland administered. The Instructions, as the Lords say, have hitherto “ been principally formed upon the Provision ” of that Statute, “ for regulating this Fishery and the Method prescribed to the Governor, of annually enquiring into, and reporting the State of the Fishery, is so very regular and practicable, that it rather wants to be enforced than changed, and if it be true, as it certainly is, that the Representations of the State of the Fishery have hitherto been imperfect, that Deficiency has arisen more from Circumstances in the Execution of the Plan, than any Defect in the Plan itself. With respect to the Necessity of any additional Instructions upon which We are directed to give Our Opinion, We beg leave humbly to represent to your Majesty, that Your Subjects employed in the Fishery at Newfoundland, having of late engaged more extensively in the Fishery on the North eastern Part of Newfoundland, upon which Coast the French have also a Right, by the Treaty of Utrecht, to catch and dry Fish during the Season, under certain Restrictions ; The great and extensive Whale Fishery in the Streights of Belleisle, with the other Branches of the Salmon & Seal Fishers, attending the Coast from the Mouth of those Streights to the River St. Lawrence, and the Fishery of the River St. Lawrence itself, of Gaspee, of Canceaux, the Madelain Islands, St. John's & Cape Breton being now annexed to His Majesty's Dominions by the Definitive Treaty ; The general Fishery of Newfoundland, and the Gulf and the Coasts with it, is become a Matter of infinite Extent, and of the utmost Importance; at the same time, that the preventing the French from partaking of the Benefit of these Fisheries (they being permitted to come within three Leagues of the Coasts & Islands within the Gulph) seems to us to make some Additional measure and Additional Instructions in the Execution of the Definitive Treaty, referred to Us, absolutely necessary for the securing the exclusive Possession of these valuable Fisheries to Your Majesty's Subjects." Therefore what the Lords advised was that the scheme for the protection of fisheries and for regulating the fisheries was quite a good scheme. There may have been some defects in the execution of it, but it was an excellent scheme. But it was necessary to make some additional measures and to give some additional instructions consequent on Articles 5 and 6 of the Definitive Treaty of Paris.

“ As to the Concurrent Fishing on the North East Coast of Newfoundland, in case any of your Majesty's Subjects should engage in it, much will depend upon the Temper, Judgment, & Discretion of the Officer of the Navy, who shall be appointed to superintend the Fishery, and who certainly should be instructed to adhere to the due Sense & Execution of the 13th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht with Justice to the Subjects of both Crowns ”—the 13th Article of the Treaty of Utrecht is printed in Volume V at page 2181—“ Upon the Coast of Labrador, it will be impossible to prevent the French continuing to have the full Benefit of their former Commerce with the Indians of the Coast, unless some British Settlement should be made there, or sufficient Cruizers stationed with Instructions to the Commanders to seize all french Ships coming within a certain Distance of the Coast.”—Two methods were contemplated, either that we should have a settlement there, or that we should have an adequate naval patrol of the coast.—“ The same Observation is equally applicable to all the Coast from the Streights of Bellisle to the River St. Lawrence, from thence along the whole Coast of Canada and Acadia, and the Fisheries annexed to these Coasts which lye within the Gulph, the exclusive Possession of all which Fisheries in our Judgment depends entirely upon the Effiiccacy [sic] of whatever Plan shall be now followed, and the additional Instructions which shall be now given by the proper Boards to the proper Officer in the Execution of this great and essential Measure. The Situation of the Islands of St. Peter & Miquelon, so convenient for carrying on an illicit Trade with North America, calls for particular Caution, and it were earnestly to be wished that the Communication between these Islands & Newfoundland could be prevented, from which the Inhabitants of St. Peter will otherwise receive the double Advantage of getting easily & cheaply the Materials for building their Boats, and of circulating french produce & Manufactures amongst the British Fishermen. Majesty's Consideration without in any Degree taking upon Ourselves actually to prepare any Plan for the Accomplishment of Measures, the grounds of which are so very imperfectly before Us, which, if ever They should take place, must be determined with an Attention to other Measures, and make a Part of one general Plan ; The framing which will depend so much upon the united Labour and Experience of different Departments of Government ; and the Execution of which will at last depend upon Orders to be issued from other Offices and to Officers not subject to our Controul."

Sir John Simon.

My Lords, I think I am justified in saying upon that document that the topic to which the Lords of Trade were addressing themselves had nothing whatever to do with territorial government at all. They were concerned to see how the provisions of the Treaty relating to fisheries might best be put into execution, and they were advising what additions or alterations to the existing instructions to the Governor of Newfoundland were requisite to effect that end. They addressed themselves to that matter, and to that matter only ; and you will find, my Lords, that the result of their labours is reported on page 390.

The Lord Chancellor.

It might be well, in passing, lest it should be said that I had omitted anything, to mention that on page 389, there is a letter of the 24th March, 1763, from Lord Egremont, directing the Lords of Trade to make such additions to the draft of Instructions to Newfoundland " as you shall judge expedient, & necessary, to render Them conformable to the new Commission abovementioned." That is in consequence of " The King having judged it proper, that all the coast of Labradore, from the entrance to Hudson's Streights," (and so on, using the appropriate language) " should be included in the Government of Newfoundland."

29 Oct., 1926.

The Lord Chancellor.

Sir JOHN SIMON : It is more than that. Page 389 is a letter which required the preparation of the draft of a new Commission. Look at line 19.

Mr. MACMILLAN : No doubt it is.

Sir JOHN SIMON: A Commission.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : They had recommended that, as one way of preventing the French from getting the trade with the Indians. Labrador, some settlements should be made.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, my Lord ; that was an alternative which was not adopted.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : Is that so ?

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, my Lord, The other alternative was, I think, to station sufficient cruisers there. At least, that is my reading of it, but your Lordships, of course, will judge.

p. 350

The LORD CHANCELLOR : The next document to their first advice is this letter of the 24th March, in which the King states that he had decided that the coast of Labrador shall be included under the Government of Newfoundland.

Mr. MACMILLAN : That is perfectly right, my Lord.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : And then comes page 390.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, my Lord, and with regard to page 390, you have to observe that the Lords of Trade had before them that letter of the 24th March, 1763, the preceding letter, in which the King's instructions as to the inclusion in the Government of Newfoundland of that area, or of those rights, as I shall call them for the moment, had been indicated.

The document says this: "In Obedience to Your Majesty's Commands signified to us by the Earl of Egremont, one of Your Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, in his Letter dated the 24th instant, We have prepared, and humbly beg leave to lay before Your Majesty, a Draught of Instructions for Thomas Graves Esquire, whom Your Majesty has been pleased to appoint Governor and Commander in Chief in and over the Island of Newfoundland and all the Coast of Labradore, from the Entrance of Hudson's Streights to the River St. Johns, which discharges itself into the Sea nearly opposite the West end of the Island of Anticosto, including that Island, with any other small Islands on the said Coast of Labradore, and also the Islands of Madelaines in the Gulph of St. Lawrence"—now you get the operative effect of it—" In this Draught We have added to that lately approved by Your Majesty, the 1st, 3rd, 10th & 11th Articles, and made such Alterations, as appeared necessary, in order to render the Instructions of Your Majesty's said Government conformable to the Extent of his Commission."

Those are the documents which led up to the alterations of Captain Graves's Commission in view of the changed circumstances ; and the main alterations are alterations, as they indicate, or additions, as they indicate, of four new Articles.

29 Oct., 1926.

Mr. Macmillan.

Lord WARRINGTON : Those are the instructions.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, my Lord, those are the Instructions. They precede the date of the Commission, as your Lordships will notice in the calendar that I gave you. I am taking it chronologically as far as I can.

It is interesting to look at the draft of the Instructions, which follows on page 391 and the subsequent pages, in order to see what are the new Articles which have been added. The first new Article is to be found at the foot of page 391, and it is in these terms : “ First : You are therefore to fit yourself with all convenient speed, and to repair to your said Command ”—the expression used, your Lordships will notice, is “ Command,” for Captain Graves—“ and, being arrived, you are to take upon you the Execution of the place & Trust We have reposed in you, and, as soon as conveniently may be, to assemble the principal Inhabitants in the Island of Newfoundland, and in such other places as you shall judge proper or necessary within your said Government, and with all due Solemnity to cause Our said Commission under Our Great Seal of Great Britain, constituting you Our Governor & Commander in Chief as aforesaid, to be read and published.” So far there is nothing very striking in the way of novelty ; the only word to which I would rather call your Lordships' attention is the word “Command ” as descriptive of what his function is.

p. 351

The LORD CHANCELLOR : Of course, he is appointed Governor and Commander in Chief.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, my Lord ; but it is noticeable that his sphere is described as a sphere of command.

Then the third Article at once goes to this matter of fishing, to which their attention had been drawn by the King. It says : “And whereas by the said 5th Article of the Treaty lately concluded at Paris, We had consented to leave to the Subjects of the Most Christian King the Liberty of fishing in the Gulph of St. Lawrence, on Condition that the Subjects of France do not exercise the said Fishery but at the distance of three Leagues from all the Coasts belonging to Great Britain, as well those of the continent as those of the Islands, situated in the said Gulph St. Lawrence, You are hereby required to carry the Stipulations of the said Clause into full Execution, within the Limits of your Government.”

Viscount HALDANE : What page is that ?

Mr. MACMILLAN : That is page 392, my Lord ; and it is Article 3 of the Instructions. That is new matter.

The two other additions are Articles 10 and 11, which are to be found on page 394. Article No. 10 runs thus : “And whereas We have been informed that a very considerable and advantageous Whale and Sea Cow Fishery may be carried on in the Gulph of St. Lawrence and upon the Labradore Coast, it is therefore Our Will and Pleasure, that you do give all possible encouragement to such Fishery, and report to Us, by our Commissioners for Trade & Plantations, your opinion in what way, and by what means, so valuable a Branch of Commerce may be extended and improved. (11) You are also to make a very particular enquiry into, and report to Us as aforesaid, the actual State and nature of the Fisheries carried on by the Subjects of France in every distinct Branch thereof, as well that which is carried on for Morus Verte upon the Banks without the Gulph St. Lawrence, as the dry Fishery carried on at Miquelon and St. Peter's upon the Coast of Newfoundland, from Bonavista to Point Riche, or in other parts of the Gulph of St. Lawrence, and you are to be as particular as may be in Your Accounts of the Number and Nature of the Ships and Boats employed on those different Fisheries, the Number of Men, the Quantity of Fish caught, cured and carried to Market, and, in general, of every other Circumstance that may furnish a precise State of this Branch of the Commerce of France.”

The Lord Chancellor.

Now, my Lords, I respectfully attach the greatest importance to this chapter of the transaction. The question of the regulation of the fisheries was a question which was in the mind of both persons, both of His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State and of the Lords of Trade, and of those who framed the Instructions : and it is of the utmost significance that when the Governor of Newfoundland was—let me try and use neutral language for the moment—given new duties, the only additions which were required to his existing Commission, that is to say the only operative additions which were thought necessary to be made to his existing Commission, related to three topics only, all of which were fishery topics and nothing else.

Mr. Macmillan.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Forgive me, Mr. Macmillan ; you do not mean “ Commission,” you mean “ Instructions.”

Mr. MACMILLAN : I am afraid, Sir John, that I must ask you to extend the same indulgence to me, as I extended to you. In a case such as this, I am afraid I shall be certain to make some mistakes. I did not even venture to challenge some of your own little errors which I thought were not material, but I shall, of course, welcome any correction if I should really go wrong.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : There is also this alteration made, both in the Commission and in the reference to it here, that the Governor is made Governor and Commander in Chief of the Island of Newfoundland and the Coast of Labrador.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, my Lord. Pray do not think that I had omitted that, but I wanted for the moment to call attention to what I have described as the additional clauses. I was not going to pass over that matter. It was necessary then to introduce Labrador, or else it would not have been complete ; but I am thinking for the moment of what was the inception of this matter.

The Treaty had been taken in hand, and the Treaty contained the most important fishery additions. The inception of this matter is this : how can this then be regulated ? And various suggestions are made. Then it is necessary at once to deal with it through the medium of some alteration in the Commission to be given to the Governor of Newfoundland.

Now, what are the topics of concern ? The topics of concern are the fisheries ; and the additions made to his Commission in those three Articles to which I have referred relate to fisheries, and relate to the carrying out of Articles 5 and 6 of the definitive Treaty of 1763. There are other alterations in the Commission. It was necessary, of course, in obedience to what His Majesty had said, and also in consequence of the facts, to introduce Labrador ; and the way in which that is done is this, that at two or three places, in the course of the Commission, they add the words “all the coasts of Labrador ” to “Newfoundland” in the terms of the Commission.

But it surely is of great moment to observe with what purpose and intent that was done. I shall have some comments to make a little later on upon what was the ambit of his duty as the Governor of Newfoundland, apart altogether from Labrador ; but it is manifest that this fishery question, which absorbed the attention of the Lords of Trade at the very outset, and which they thought that they had disposed of in this manner, was a totally different class of subject from the subject to which they proceeded to address themselves when they came to the parcelling out of the Continent of Canada. That was not what they were thinking of at this time at all, and yet the suggestion made by my learned friend is that being minded to do what they were minded to do as they have told us here, they, by these documents, carved out of the Continent of Canada—and I use it in its widest possible extent just now—they carved out of the mainland of Canada a large area, an administrative area, defined by ascertained or ascertainable metes and bounds, and constituted in that way an entirely new governmental territory on the mainland of Canada, comparable to Quebec or any of the other governmental areas which were subsequently delimited with such care, and entrusted the government of the whole territory, through the means of this instrument, to the Governor of Newfoundland, in the same way as they entrusted the whole of the Quebec Territory to the Governor of Quebec.

Your Lordships will see in the sequel how very differently the Lords of Trade and the authorities addressed themselves to the question of the parcelling out of Canada, in contradistinction to the way in which they addressed themselves to the question of the regulation of the fisheries, in the Commission to Captain Graves.

29 Oct., 1926.
Mr. Macmillan.

I am very anxious to make that point, in order that your Lordships may appreciate it in its due proportions. Humbly, it appears to us to be a matter of very great assistance in considering whether or not, before the Government had addressed itself to the question of territorial jurisdiction of the mainland at all, and before they had set the bounds to the Province of Quebec or the other Provinces that were the result of the Proclamation, it had first of all made what was in effect a new provincial Government in Labrador and entrusted its administration to the Governor of Newfoundland.

That is the length and breadth of the claim that is now submitted, namely that this was a complete territorial disposal of this large area, and confided to the Governor of Newfoundland a territorial administration, three times the size of the Island of Newfoundland which was already under his jurisdiction. One would not have thought that that was very probable, nor does it appear from the documents themselves that those who framed them had any such conception as that that was the result of what they had done. These are the documents which precede the issue of the Commission, and the Commission, if your Lordships will have the calendar in front of you, followed very soon after. It followed on the 25th April, 1763. I shall recur both to the Commission and to the Instructions, but you will see that this Commission on page 149, in Volume I, again contains little novelty, except, of course, the addition, wherever it is necessary, to “the Island of Newfoundland,” of “all the Coasts of Labrador,” and the usual phrase which follows ; that is to say, the limits are defined. But so far as the Commission itself is concerned, the formal executive document, as distinguished from the instructions to this gentleman as to what he was to do on these coasts, there is no significant alteration, so far as I am aware, upon the Commission which he had as Governor of Newfoundland, except the introduction at appropriate places of the new limits.

3 B 2

You will find on page 149, in the words of appointment, that whereas in the recital his previous appointment had been that he was to be “Governor and Commander in Chief in and over Our Island of Newfoundland,” it is now stated in this way : “ Our Governor and Commander in Chief in and over Our said Island of Newfoundland and all the Coasts of Labrador from the Entrance of Hudson's Streights to the River Saint Johns which discharges itself into the Sea nearly opposite the West End of the Island of Anticosti including that Island with any other small Islands on the said Coast of Labrador and also the Islands of Madelaines,” and so on.

Then I think you will find that over the page there is another reference to Labrador. That is with regard to all Our efforts and Garrisons Erected and Established or that shall be Erected and Established in Our said Islands of Newfoundland ”—then, of course, there are included the new ones—“ Anticosti and Madelaine,” and it goes on : “ or on the Coast of Labrador within the Limmitts aforesaid.” Then it says that he is to conform to the Instructions : and then I think Labrador is introduced again at line 19, where it says that he is to administer the oath to persons who “ pass into Our said Islands or shall be resident or abiding there,” and then, of course, it was necessary to put in Labrador, and so it says ; “ or upon the Coast of Labrador within the Limmitts aforesaid.” Then you have the words “ the said Island and Coasts,” and then you have a very important direction, which is fundamental to the duty of the Governor of Newfoundland, that he is to conform himself in every way to the Act of 1699, which is the Fishery Act. Then he is given certain powers, and he is to aid “ the Commander of Our Ships of War,” and so on, and to help the various Admirals. Those are not the Naval Admirals, but the Admirals who got their rather quaint title by being first on the scene. He is to help them in carrying out “ the several good Rules and Orders prescribed by the said Act for encouraging the Trade to Newfoundland.” That is the Act previously referred to.

p. 355

Viscount HALDANE : Those are the merchant commanders.

Mr. Macmillan.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, my Lord. “ The Trade to Newfoundland ” is a well recognised phrase ; it occurs constantly ; and that trade is, in our submission, the cod fishing trade carried on by ships which came from the West Coast of England, spent the summer in Newfoundland, and returned with their catch.

Lord WARRINGTON : But this is clear, is it not, that whatever authority he had as Governor of Newfoundland, he had as Governor over “the Coast of Labrador,” whatever that phrase means ?

Mr. MACMILLAN : I think that must be so, my Lord.

Lord WARRINGTON : That is so. Whatever authority, territorial or otherwise, he had in the Government of Newfoundland, he also had over whatever it was that was added to his governorship.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, my Lord.

Lord WARRINGTON : It is exactly the same.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, my Lord ; and perhaps I might just say at once something which may possibly help a little. A certain amount of confusion has I think arisen in this way, that it has been suggested that certain acts by the Governor of Newfoundland on the coast of Labrador in some way or other are inconsistent with my case. Of course, they are not inconsistent with my case, because we accept the position that the Governor of Newfoundland had a jurisdiction on the coast of Labrador which was a real jurisdiction. I will say something about that in a minute or two ; but that he had a jurisdiction on the coast of Labrador is, of course, conceded on both sides here. The whole question is, how far inland it extended. A great many of the acts which have been referred to, and which are not indeed historically recorded in these volumes, are acts which are not in the least significant for our present purpose, because, indeed, the Governor of Newfoundland would have been remiss if he had not done those acts. Therefore we are back again at the question—

29 Oct., 1926.

Mr. Macmillan.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : Of how far in it extended.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, my Lord, exactly.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : It is material to observe how far in the acts were done.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, my Lord ; and that is exactly what I want to bring out. There are, I am afraid, hundreds of pages there, telling your Lordships about acts which have been done ; but when you come to discriminate, and to eliminate those which we admit were proper things for the Governor of Newfoundland to do (that is to say, which were referable to the “ coast,” whatever that means), you will find that those which relate to matters penetrating into the interior of this Province are exceedingly few and far to find. My learned friend, Sir John Simon, mentioned several of them, and I think he rather gave your Lordships the impression that they were samples chosen at random from a bulk ; but in our humble submission they are practically the whole of the instances. I knew them all, and I listened with interest to their being brought out one after the other ; but so far from being samples from bulk. they constituted, I think, practically the whole of the ones that I had also noticed as being significant in any way of a penetration by the Governor—whether legitimate or not is another question—beyond what I might call a coastal jurisdiction.

p. 356

I wanted to make that observation, because one is so apt, I think, to assume here, perhaps against me, that we are seeking to drive Newfoundland into the sea. That is not the position which we take up at all. The whole question is, how far inland does this undoubted jurisdiction, which was a jurisdiction accompanied no doubt with the same powers as the Governor had in Newfoundland territory—how far does it extend ? Therefore, with great respect, it does not dislodge me from my position to say that he had, with regard to what was added at this time to him. the same powers as he had with regard to his original territory of Newfoundland.

But it is significant to observe, in connection with the question of what was the depth inland, with what mind those powers were given to him. It was a new area. whatever it was, but why were those powers given to him, and with what end ? If your Lordships accept the submission that I am making, that the whole purpose of this matter was— as I think I have vouched from the documents—to fulfil and to carry into execution the Fishery articles of the Treaty of Paris, then you get what I venture to think is an exceedingly valuable pointer to the extent of the territory which was confided to the Governor of Newfoundland to be administered by him along with his original jurisdiction of the Island of Newfoundland.

Lord Warrington.

That is, in my humble submission, the real significance of this chapter of the case, and therefore I do not in the least flinch from the fact that the coast of Labrador was added as an adjunct to the Island of Newfoundland ; but it is of the greatest moment to see with what object that was done, and it is also of the greatest importance to see why the Governor of Newfoundland was selected for that. I shall submit later on, when we examine the position of the Governor on these documents, that he was selected because he was just the person, having regard to his existing powers and experience, to whom the carrying out of these provisions of the Treaty might best be confided by this means of giving him a coastal jurisdiction over Labrador. Your Lordships see the scheme upon which I propose to develop this line.

Mr. Macmillan.

p. 357

Lord WARRINGTON : We have not got his original Commission as Governor of Newfoundland, have we ?

Mr. MACMILLAN : I asked for that, and I could not get it, my Lord.

Lord WARRINGTON : It looks as if the only alteration made in the new Commission was to introduce the expression describing the coast of Labrador, whatever that is.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, my Lord. I think I can help your Lordship with regard to that, because I had the same research. It occurred to me that it would be interesting to see whether, as often happens, these people, in putting words in of extension, did so without quite seeing what they were doing. We have one document among the papers. There is a Commission to Francis William Drake, a Governor of Newfoundland, printed in Volume IV, at page 1844. That is the only one that I can find. The date of it is 1750, and it is therefore quite a good date to take. It is thirteen years before this. It might have been better if we could have got the actual one which was recited.

Lord Warrington.

Sir JOHN SIMON : It could be got, I think.

Mr. MACMILLAN : No doubt it could. It would be useful, just to see what the draftsmen had done.

Mr. Macmillan.

Viscount HALDANE : We know the date of the first one.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, my Lord, Graves's first Commission is recited. It was dated the 29th May, " in the first year of our reign,” which would be 1760, so that the date is the 29th May, 1760, three years before ; but I have looked through this one which is on page 1844 of Volume IV, and I cannot find any great novelty in the Commission to Captain Graves after 1760 other than the introduction at the appropriate places of “ Labrador.” I think that is fair ; I would not like to commit myself to it, because I have not had them read over textually, but that is my impression, that it was just a case of taking the existing Commission, and then, where it was appropriate, putting in the words “ the Coasts of Labrador,” with the definition.

Lord WARRINGTON : It merely emphasises the position that whatever authority he had given to him by the Commission over Newfoundland, he also had given to him over “the coasts of Labrador,” whatever that expression means.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, my Lord. I do not think any point will arise between us upon that, because he had undoubtedly some jurisdiction. The limits of it are a different matter, of course.

Mr. Macmillan.

Viscount HALDANE : He must have been there for a very long time. Here is a Commission of 1750.

Mr. MACMILLAN : That, my Lord, is a Commission to William Francis Drake, and not to Captain Graves. That is another Governor, a predecessor, thirteen years before. The general term of office was about three years if I remember aright. It is always, I think, helpful if one indicates just at once what one's point is upon the documents in order if possible to draw attention to what the significance is. In our submission the significance to which I drew attention just now is the concentration in the minds of those people upon a fishery problem, a method of dealing with it, and they selected as a method of dealing with it the invocation of the Governor of Newfoundland, and to that Governor they confided certain new powers and duties with the intention of thereby effectuating the Treaty clauses relating to fisheries. It is for the purpose of measuring the territory which was confided to this Governor under the name of " Coasts " that I think the inception of the whole matter becomes of so much importance, it is for that purpose and it is in aid of that problem, I adduce this historical investigation.

Sir John Simon is good enough to give me a list of the Newfoundland Governors and Captain Drake, whose Commission my Lord has just been looking at was 1750 ; then there intervened four gentlemen, four captains intervened, and then in 1761 comes Captain Graves. Then his Commission had to be altered, it was taken in hand, you can see the very tiring being done, you can see his Commission being put on the Table, and they are saying : What alterations have we to make, and the draftsman is at work. This was the result. Here we are at the very root of the whole matter, what was it that was then done ? The rival contentions, my Lord, emerge almost at once. My learned friend, Sir John Simon, says there was thereby confided to the Governor of Newfoundland a territory extending to what is now called the height of land far into the interior, and he thereupon became Governor in addition to Newfoundland of an area some two or three times in amount including this great territory which was an ascertained or an ascertainable territory confided to his administration and Government then and there, before any of the other administrative areas on the mainland were carved out at all.

29 Oct., 1926.

Viscount Haldane.

Mr. Macmillan.

My submission is, that that is most unlikely. The real intention of the whole matter is : What plan is the best plan for carrying out the Treaty, what plan is the best plan for regulating these fisheries, what plan shall we adopt ? The plan adopted was to put the coasts of Labrador under the jurisdiction of an existing functionary out there selected for the purpose because of his special fitness and proximity to the place, and what was confided to him was a coastal jurisdiction the precise ambit of which is measured by the purpose for which it was conferred.

Viscount HALDANE : There were two things added later ; it was to protect the Moravians ?

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes.

p. 359

Viscount HALDANE : The Moravians would naturally be upon the coast, obviously it would be quite impossible to prevent the Moravians trying to deal with the Esquimaux further in.

Viscount Haldane.

Mr. MACMILLAN : There is a most interesting thing in this case of which your Lordship has heard nothing about at all—that is, the whole question of the ethnographic distribution of population in this area. I shall have to come to that ; it is a most interesting chapter ; it is closely cognate to the Moravians. I propose to give your Lordships chapter and verse for all that a little later on, because there is a most interesting chapter of the case upon that which will require to be really opened new for the first time.

Mr. Macmillan.

You see now the plan that was adopted to effectuate the Treaty of Paris in this matter of the fisheries and the plan adopted was to extend the Governor of Newfoundland's ambit to include the coasts of Labrador. The inference I therefore take from that at once is just this, that was not intended to make him administrator of a vast territory where furring and other native industries of that sort were carried on, and to make him Governor over the Red Indians in the Interior right up to the height of land, that was far beyond anything which can have been in contemplation at that time.

Viscount HALDANE : Just remind us, Mr. Macmillan, of the nature of the title of the Crown to the Island of Newfoundland. It dates back to when ?

Sir John Simon.

Mr. MACMILLAN : It is a very early title, I suppose it was a title by discovery originally. My learned friend is good enough to tell me 1497.

Viscount HALDANE : Then it was an island which was annexed just as any discovered island is.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, The French were on it for part of the time, you find traces of that in the references to Placentia.

29 Oct., 1926.

Mr. Macmillan.

Viscount HALDANE : How did the French surrender it ?

Sir JOHN SIMON : Any rights they had they surrendered by Treaty.

Viscount HALDANE : Which Treaty was that ?

Sir JOHN SIMON : The Treaty of Utrecht. The French were more particularly in the Southern part of the island. Placentia was in the South, it is a very big place. Under the Treaty of Utrecht you will find one of the terms was an acknowledgment of the French ceded in the language of cession that they no longer had anything to do with Newfoundland.

3 C

p. 360

Viscount HALDANE : They gave up their territorial right in Newfoundland and retained fishery rights.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes. May I suggest, if your Lordship is interested in this subject, we have in Volume IV, at page 1667, and the following pages, a sketch of the history of Newfoundland up to 1809. I cannot claim authority for that, it professes to be based on the documents hereinafter[sic] printed and is only therefore of value in so far as it is vouched by the documents printed, but it is like many of the other papers in these Volumes, in the nature of an essay. There are quite a number of interesting essays contributed on both sides which are of exceedingly interesting reading. This is our essay.

Sir JOHN SIMON : It has, in my view, a slightly tendentious quality.

Mr. MACMILLAN : I should not be surprised if it had. I noticed your speech had a very tendentious character.

Viscount FINLAY : Where does it come from ?

Mr. MACMILLAN : It has come from our office, it has been compiled for us by one of the officials. One of the officials of the Government at Ottawa compiled this ; be it tendentious or not, it is at least an attempt to state the history and much of it, I think, can scarcely be regarded as tendentious.

Viscount HALDANE : It is a summary of other documents.

Mr. MACMILLAN : It professes to be that. Pray do not for a moment think I am asking any authority for it beyond this, that it is an attempt by a person conversant with the documents to state the history ; therefore, if your Lordships want the history of Newfoundland, with that caution, that it emanates from us, you will find it there.

Viscount HALDANE : Does this tell us what the size of Newfoundland was ?

Mr. MACMILLAN : Between 40,000 and 50,000 squares

miles.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Round about 50,000.

Mr. MACMILLAN : I had noted this area, if added to Newfoundland, would be about two or three times the existing size of the Island.

Sir JOHN SIMON : It is over twice, but not as much as three times.

Viscount HALDANE : You mean Labrador.

p. 361

Mr. MACMILLAN : The Labrador area claimed on behalf of Newfoundland was about 110,000 square miles, therefore that would be about twice or thrice.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Rather over twice.

Mr. MACMILLAN : It may be appropriate at this stage just to look a little at the definition of the new limits as you find them in the Commission at page 149. I may here again forecast a little of what will be my ultimate position. It is quite manifest that the controversy in this case turns largely upon the ambit of this word " coast " or " coasts." The first thing one notices is that those two words are used indifferently. It is striking that even in this Commission, within four lines, one finds " coasts " and " coast " apparently used as signifying the same thing. I do not know that much comfort can be derived by me in that variation in terminology. Possibly the word " coasts " rather suggests a maritime seaboard, but I do not think a great deal can be made of that. Still, for what it is worth, the " Coasts of Labrador " suggest, I submit, a maritime seaboard ; they have a maritime flavour about them, more pronounceable perhaps than the expression " Coast of Labrador." We do not talk of the " Gold Coasts," if you take an example given against me, or the " Guinea Coast," it is the " Gold Coast," and the " Guinea Coast," the " Cote d'azur" and the " Cote d'or " and so on. I do not think there is very much in that.

Viscount FINLAY : It strikes me that " coast " has rather more of a maritime flavour.

Mr. MACMILLAN : It is a matter of impression. Is not the truth of it this, when one comes down to the realities of it, that the word " coast " is one of those words of ambiguous import, of which there are many in these matters, and you can find examples throughout these books of the use of the word " coast " in the sense I would like it, and quite a large number of examples in the sense in which Sir John Simon would like it. I am trying, my Lord, to poise it as fairly as I can. The word is one of those words of ambiguous use, and, therefore, it is one of those words whose content must be found in its context ; that it is a word apt to describe the area which I maintain it did describe, cannot be refuted. On the other hand, that it can be read to include a relatively large area of land, not necessarily even maritime, is, I humbly submit, quite true. Your Lordships will not hear from me any argument to the contrary. Our submission is that the word being susceptible of more than one meaning, you must derive its content in this case from its context, the context not merely of the documents in which it occurs, but also the surrounding circumstances, and in this case our humble submission will be that you get a remarkably good indication of the way in which that word was used in this case from the purpose of the Commission and from the surrounding circumstances.

3 C 2

p. 362

Viscount HALDANE : You will have to tell us a little about that one-mile line ; I take it that is a mere suggestion, and I presume you are going to tell us about the Hamilton Inlet ?

Mr. MACMILLAN : I am afraid I have many things to tell your Lordships about. I regret that they should be so numerous, but I have endeavoured, to the best of my ability, to arrange the matter in a convenient form, I rather think they will come in their place. The difficulty is here so often you get a side light from another chapter of the case upon the one one is handling at the moment, one cannot be entirely logical, and I have a method which may commend itself to your Lordships as we proceed. I am afraid I am harping too much on this matter, but I cannot over-estimate its importance, because it seems to me we are at the very heart of the problem, we have a certain formula used, and your Lordships are concerned to examine that formula in all its minuteness, to see what is the true meaning and intent of this phraseology which is used. What did those who used that language have in mind ; what was the object they sought to achieve ; what were the circumstances in which they sat down to the table to alter the Commission of Graves ? It was this which I was so anxious to have brought prominently before you, my Lords, in order that you may approach it with an air of reality, and not merely with an air of a draughtsman who was carrying out instructions.

Viscount Finlay.

Mr. Macmillan.

Viscount FINLAY : Does it come to this, that whatever was not comprised within your meaning of the word “ coast ” would not be British territory ?

Mr. MACMILLAN : No, my Lord, far from that, it is Indian territory it is the Crown reservation ; that I hope to make very clear.

Viscount FINLAY : It is vested in the Crown ?

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes.

Viscount FINLAY : They were holding it in trust for the Indians. That is your position.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, until 1774, when the Boundaries of Quebec were extended so as to embrace the whole of Labrador up to the Southern boundary of Hudson's Bay, whatever that means, but there was an extension made in 1774. One of the points in issue is what exactly that extension achieved. Your Lordships will see there is a period from 1763 to 1744 which I have to account for. That this was all British territory, my Lord, after 1763 there is no question at all ; therefore it was a question as I put it, I am afraid more than once, of this : Being confronted with all the problems this area presented, such as problems of administration, how were they to be dealt with, what was the plan of administration which was to be adopted ? As I say, the significant thing is that they addressed themselves, first of all, to Fishery, and then disposed of Fishery in this way. I will come back again on the question of what was the position of a Governor of Newfoundland, just taking him as a functionary, but I have made, to the best of my ability, the first point on this matter.

My Lords, the next matter was this, having disposed of the fisheries, the Lords of Trade addressed themselves next to an entirely different subject, as I submit,. They addressed themselves next to the question of parcelling out the Continent of Canada, which had now become a matter of administration by Great Britain, and you look therefore to the documents which preceded the proclamation, because the proclamation was the document which parcelled out territory in contradistinction to what I suggested before, namely, the regulation of fisheries, and this matter is all later than the fishery matter. Would your Lordships be good enough to turn to what I venture to call a new chapter, Volume III, page 899. This is May 5th. My Lords will always be good enough to look back to the calendar I gave at the beginning ; you notice Captain Graves is now out of the question, he has got his commission and Labrador is disposed of so far as the coast of Labrador is concerned. Here at page 899 you find a very important letter. This is addressed by the Secretary of State, Egremont, to the Lords of Trade, and just as the Lords of Trade had been directed earlier in the year to concerning themselves with the question of fishery arising under Articles 5 and 6 of the Treaty, so now they considered other matters, matters, as I suggest, of territorial administration. “ My Lords, His Majesty having brought the negotiations with France & Spain to a happy Conclusion, and having given the necessary Orders for carrying into Execution the several Stipulations of the late Treaty, is now pleased to fix his Royal Attention upon the next important Object of securing to his Subjects, and extending the Enjoyment of the Advantages, which Peace has procured.” You observe transition embodied in that sentence, he has closed one chapter and is now addressing himself to what I venture to call the problems of administrations of his new territory : “ His Majesty therefore, upon the same Principle of Solicitude for the Interests of His Colonies, which engaged him in a just & necessary War, in support of their Rights, and obliged him to insist on such Terms of Peace as he thought peculiarly calculated for the future Security of that important Object, directs me to transmit to Your Lordships herewith the Definitive Treaty of Peace ; and I am commanded to signify to your Lordships His Majesty's Pleasure, that You do, without Loss of Time, take into your most serious Consideration, those Articles which relate to the Cessions made by their Most Christian & Catholick Majesties, & that You do report Your Opinion. By what Regulations, the most extensive Commercial Advantages may be derived from those Cessions, and how those Advantages may be rendered most permanent & secure to His Majesty's Trading Subjects. The Means of arriving at these desirable Ends, will perhaps be most distinctly pointed out, by considering, separately, the several Cessions stipulated by the Articles of Peace and examining the different Circumstances by which each Cession becomes more or less susceptible of the great Advantages of Commerce & Security above mentioned.”

Mr. Macmillan.

Then comes the questions : “ North America naturally offers itself as the principal Object of Your Lordships Consideration upon this Occasion, with regard to which, I shall first obey his Majesty's Commands in proposing to your Lordships some general Questions, before I proceed to desire you will furnish that Information, which His Majesty expects from your Lordships, with regard to the Northern or Southern Parts of this Continent considered separately. The questions which relate to North America in general, are, 1st. What New Governments should be established & what Form should be adopted for such new Governments ? and where the Capital, or Residence of each Governor should be fixed ? ” My Lords, one new Government in North America had already been fixed according to my learned friend, Sir John Simon ; a very large territory in North America, to wit, the whole territory of Labrador up to the height of land had already been placed under a new Government in North America, and the form of it fixed, which was a considerable addition to the duties of the Government of Newfoundland.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : That was not part of the cession made by the Treaty of Paris as I understand. If Labrador had been ceded at all it had been ceded by the Treaty of Utrecht some years before.

Mr. MACMILLAN : I think not, with great respect. We got this territory certainly under the Treaty of Paris, at least I always assumed so.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : I thought from the answer you gave just now that it was not so.

29 Oct., 1926.

Sir John Simon.

Mr. MACMILLAN : I think what your Lordship has in mind is this, under the Treaty of Utrecht the Hudson's Bay territory was British, but then the Hudson's Bay territory was territory of ambiguous boundary and below that in Labrador it was all French.

The LORD CHANCELLOR :. I have not read this history.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Perhaps I might just say I have before me the relevant Article of the Treaty of Utrecht, which had to do with the Island of Newfoundland. Perhaps I may just read it, it is Article 13 ; I am afraid it is not printed in the book. “ The Island called Newfoundland with the adjacent Islands shall from this time forward belong of right wholly to Britain and to that end the town and forts of Placentia and other places shall be yielded and given up." It was not under the Treaty of Utrecht the Island of Newfoundland was as a whole ceded, most of it was British already, but there was a certain French settlement on the south of it. I think my friend is right therefore when he says this Article of the Treaty dealt with the Island of Newfoundland.

p. 365

Mr. Macmillan.

Sir John Simon.

The LORD CHANCELLOR: There is another Article dealing with the Hudson Bay territory.

Mr. Macmillan.

Sir JOHN SIMON : Certainly, I do not, of course, say the area on the coast of Labrador was as between Britain and France admittedly all French, still it would not be correct to say that Article 13 of the Treaty of Utrecht was dealing with anything but the Island of Newfoundland.

Mr. MACMILLAN : There were undoubtedly disputes as to whether the English had part of Labrador.

Sir JOHN SIMON : That is right.

Mr. MACMILLAN : The position was this I think, that any such disputes necessarily evaporated under the Treaty of 1763 because then France gave up anything it had including any claims it might have.

Sir JOHN SIMON : That is quite right, therefore there was a consolidation, it did not matter from which of two sources anything came.

Viscount Haldane.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Therefore, my Lord Chancellor will take it the territory which on my friend's contention constituted what I may call the Government of Labrador was part of the territory which it was the duty of the Lords of Trade to advise His Majesty how to parcel out.

Mr. Macmillan.

The LORD CHANCELLOR : That is what I understand.

Mr. MACMILLAN : I do not wonder at my Lord asking that because the significance of it is, very great. We were looking at the administration just now of a large area, I suggest to my Lord that here you have a most remarkable contemporary document. It says : Now we have disposed of all those fishery questions, let us consider the question of governing the mainland of Canada, the land which has been confided to us for the first time. The first question is what new Government shall be established.

29 Oct., 1926.

Lord Warrington.

Viscount HALDANE : Is there anything which throws lights on the question whether they were proposing at this time to dispose of the newly acquired territory as a whole exhaustively, or piece by piece ?

Mr. MACMILLAN : This also appears ; there were questions whether the whole should be put under new Governments that were to be constituted or whether there should be portions of them left for the time being until more was seen. You will see that comes out quite clearly in the documents.

p. 366

Lord WARRINGTON : You have got to remember in that part of North America the Hudson's Bay territory had by the Treaty of Utrecht been restored wholly to the British Crown, at least to the Hudson's Bay Company.

Mr. Macmillan.

Mr. MACMILLAN : That is quite right, I will deal with that later on.

Lord WARRINGTON : So that the territory lying to the west was not a new cession by France, they merely retired from what they had during the war possessed.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Anything that belonged to Hudson's Bay was ours already before 1763.

Lord WARRINGTON : The Treaty of Utrecht gave “ all the lands, seas, sea-coasts, rivers and places situate in the said Bay and Streights.”

Mr. MACMILLAN : Let me be exact and I hope also just. My learned friend, Sir John Simon, contended that the Hudson's Bay territory ended at Cape Chidley and followed down the height of land you may remember. He maintained therefore what he got in 1763 was the whole of this area because he said Hudson's Bay was not in this area. I think I put this fairly ?

Lord WARRINGTON : Yes.

Mr. MACMILLAN: Therefore his submission would be this, the whole of that area included no Hudson's Bay territory and was all territory which was placed under the Government of Newfoundland as being territory which at the moment was territory which had to be provided for and was so provided for. Now it is most significant to see up to this date His Majesty has not instructed his Lords of Trade to consider the question of Government at all, he has instructed them most carefully to deal with fishery questions, and to give him a plan for dealing with fishery questions, a plan was devised, fisheries were disposed of, now he asks for advice from the Lords of Trade : How shall I govern my new territories, forgetting apparently, on my learned friend's contention, that he had already disposed of territory more than twice the size of Newfoundland on the mainland and installed the Governor of Newfoundland as the monarch of that area with his Commission and instructions and the complete apparatus of Government so far as more or less primitive territory like that could be governed. His Majesty asks : “ 1st What new Governments should be established and what form should be adopted for such new Governments ? and where the Capital, or Residence of each Governor should be fixed ? 2ndly What Military establishment will be sufficient ? What new forts should be erected ? and which, if any, may it be expedient to demolish ? 3rdly In what mode least burthensome and most palatable to the Colonies can they contribute towards the support of the additional expense, which must attend their civil and military establishment, upon the arrangement which your Lordships shall propose ? Under the first of those heads, viz. What new Governments shall be established ? It will be proper to examine, what privileges are reserved to His Majesty's new subjects by the terms of their Capitulations ; I therefore send your Lordships herewith the Capitulation of Quebec and Montreal.”

29 Oct., 1926.

Mr. Macmillan.

Viscount HALDANE : Before you go into that, it is obvious there were large tracts of territory which were reserved to the Crown. For instance, there were the Indian lands. The Indian lands were not put under the administration of any other power as far as I remember and from what I have been told. The radical title of the Indian lands was in the Crown, and it is to this hour. The system under which the Indian reserves were ultimately set aside was that the radical title remained in the Crown, and was neither in the Dominion nor the Province. At the time you are speaking of huge tracts of British North America must have been left without any administration, but with the title in the Crown. And there may have been other parts left alone for subsequent settlement.

Mr. MACMILLAN : On this very shore of the St. Lawrence there was the very important establishment known as the King's Posts. I will go into that later on. If we are right about that, the King's Posts extended into a considerable part even of the cherished green. But I should have to show that, of course. But whether I succeed in showing that or not, I shall be able to show that there were Indians there under the special protection of His Majesty, and Trading Posts which were known as King's Posts, the revenues of which were obtained by His Majesty, being farmed out. However, that is rather beside the question, except for this. What the Government is engaged on here obviously is this. How are we to govern these extensive new territories confided to us ?

That was the problem. When one looks at this document it is a very odd thing if by anticipation a large portion had already been put under settled government in the hands of the Governor of Newfoundland. The first question the Lords of Trade proceed to examine is shown at page 900. “ Under the first of those heads, viz. What new Governments shall be established ? It will be proper to examine, what privileges are reserved to His Majesty's new subjects by the terms of their capitulations ; I therefore send your Lordships herewith the capitulation of Quebec and Montreal. It may also be a proper object of consideration, how far it is expedient to retain, or depart from the forms of government which His Most Christian Majesty had established in those Colonies ; and in order to furnish your Lordships with those lights, which may enable you to form a just opinion on this head, I send herewith copies of the several reports of Governors Murray, Burton and Gage.” Governor Murray's report your Lordships will find exceedingly helpful on this problem a little later on, because you will see the information they had. Governor Murray's report is printed at page 893, if my Lords wish to Mr. Macmillan. side-note it.

“ The second question, which relates to the security of North America ”—observe in its largest terms—“ seems to include two objects to be provided for ; the first is, the security of the whole against any European Power ; the next is the preservation of the internal peace and tranquility of the country against any Indian disturbances. Of those two objects, the latter appears to call more immediately for such regulations and precautions as your Lordships shall think proper to suggest.”

Viscount HALDANE : That is Imperial defence.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes. The peace and tranquility of the country. “Though in order to succeed effectually in this point, it may become necessary to erect some forts in the Indian country, with their consent, yet His Majesty's justice and moderation inclines him to adopt the more eligible method of conciliating the minds of the Indians by the mildness of his Government, by protecting their persons and property and securing to them all the possessions, rights and privileges they have hitherto enjoyed, and are entitled to, most cautiously guarding against any invasion or occupation of their hunting lands, the possession of which is to be acquired by fair purchase only ; and it has been thought so highly expedient to give them the earliest and most convincing proofs of His Majesty's gracious and friendly intentions on this head, that I have already received and transmitted the King's commands to this purpose to the Governors of Virginia, the Two Carolinas and Georgia, and to the Agent for Indian Affairs in the Southern Department, as your Lordships will see fully in the inclosed copy of my Circular Letter to them on this subject. Having thus executed the King's commands, with regard to such questions as relate to North America in general, I am to signify to your Lordships His Majesty's further pleasure that you do take into consideration the following Queries, which concern some parts of that Continent in particular. The first and most important object is the Fishery, with regard to which your Lordships will furnish all the lights you possibly can in order to skew :—Whether the French had made any incroachments with regard to the Fishery, contrary to what is stipulated, on this head by the Treaty of Utrecht ? How those incroachments may be most easily prevented by such timely precautions, as may most effectually obviate all disputes between the subjects of both Crowns, in those parts and preserve peace and tranquility there for the future ? What inconvenience or disadvantage may arise to His Majesty's Northern Colonies, or to the Fishery in those parts, from the vicinity of St. Pierre and Michelon, ceded to France, under certain restrictions by the 6th Article of the Definitive Treaty ? And by what precautions may that inconvenience be most effectually guarded against, either with respect to our Fishery, or a contraband trade with our Colonies.”

p. 369

Then follows a lot about Florida, and then at the foot of the page there is this : “ Having thus gone through the several points relative to North America, upon which His Majesty desires to have the opinion of your Lordships, the obvious application of most of the same Queries to the other cessions made to His Majesty by the peace, makes it unnecessary to repeat them ”—and then he goes on to ask about Senegal and so on. Then on page 902, among the material handed to the Lords of Trade to enable them to consider what new Governments should be established, and to give answers on this and the other matters they were asked to busy themselves upon, there is Governor Murray's report, which is given on page 893 ante. It was in reply to that letter, which I do not think your Lordships had before you, that the letter printed upon page 903 and following pages was returned by the Lords of Trade, dated 8th June, 1763. These are the Lords of Trade who have already dealt with the question of Labrador, and are now addressing themselves to this second task. “ May it please your Majesty, Having received your Majesty's commands, signified to us by a letter from the Earl of Egremont, dated May 5th, 1763, to take into consideration ”—and so on—“ And your Majesty having further directed us with regard to North America in general, to point out, what new Governments it may be necessary to establish, with the form most proper for such Governments and the places most convenient for the Capitals : what military establishments will be sufficient for that country ; “—and so on—“ And your Majesty having commanded that, particularly as to Canada and Newfoundland, after furnishing every information in our power relating to the Fishery, we should consider the encroachments made by the French in this Article, contrary to the stipulations in the Treaty of Utrecht ”—and then they recite the powers to which I have already alluded, and say : “ In obedience to your Majesty's commands, we have taken the several points referred to us into our most serious consideration, and are of opinion that we shall best comply with your Majesty's intention and directions by stating particularly the advantages which severally result to your Majesty's Colonies and the commerce of your subjects by the cessions stipulated in the late Treaty, and then submitting our humble opinion to your Majesty of the means, which appear to us immediately necessary to be put in execution for securing and improving those advantages.” Those are new means over and above the means already put into execution through the Commission to Captain Graves. “ The most obvious advantages arising from the cessions made by the Definitive Treaty are, The exclusive Fishery of the River St. Lawrence on all the Coasts in the Gulph of St. Lawrence and all the Islands in that Gulph.” I think I am entitled to say, for what it is worth, that there “ Coasts ” has a maritime flavour. “ From all these Fisheries your Majesty's subjects were hitherto entirely excluded; partly by the express stipulations of the Treaty of Utrecht by which Cape Breton, St. Johns and the other Islands in the Gulph were dismembered from Nova Scotia and ceded to France, partly by the claim immediately set up by France to the whole southern shore of the

Gulph under pretence that it had never been made a part of Nova Scotia, but had always been considered as a separate district of New France. In consequence of this claim and of the possession instantly taken of that territory by the French. which till the late war they were permitted to retain, they established their most valuable fisheries in the different and most convenient bays of that country, as well in respect to catching and curing of fish and fitting out boats, shallops and other vessels, as to raising provisions at the cheapest rates. From all these circumstances this fishery upon the Coast of the Gulph and of the Islands in the Gulph of St. Lawrence, well known by the name of La Peche Sedentaire, has ever since been deemed one of the most valuable parts of the French Fishery and we have reason to conclude from the spirit and industry which your Majesty's subjects have shown ever since the reduction of Louisbourg that it will become equally valuable in their hands, especially when we consider that, the fishery of the River St. Lawrence consisting of whales, seals, sea-cows, etc., has been in the short period since the taking of Quebec, carried to a much greater extent by your Majesty's subjects, than ever it was by the French, during their possession of Canada. This claim. and the possession in consequence of it, of the whole Southern Coast of the Gulph of St. Lawrence, from the Streights of Canceau to Cape Roziere, at the mouth of the river, appears to us to have been the chief encroachment made by the French in violation of the stipulations in the Treaty of Utrecht ; but the monopoly of the Fishery which they endeavoured to establish upon this encroachment was greatly strengthened by other circumstances.”

I do not think I need read again till I come to line 30 : “ And by their possession of the whole Coast of Labrador, they not only carried on an extensive trade with the Esquimaux Indians in oil, furs, etc. (in which they allowed your Majesty's subjects no share) but by the vicinity of the eastern part of that Coast, to that part of Newfoundland, (where a permissive right of drying their fish, only during the fishery season was granted by the Treaty of Utrecht) they assumed in some measure an exclusive right to the navigation of the Streights of Bellisle. These several encroachments, will, we apprehend, entirely cease, on the one hand, by the complet settlement of your Majesty's Colony of Nova Scotia, according to its true and ancient boundaries, and on the other by the annexation of the Labrador Coast to the Government of Newfoundland, and by the faithful execution of those instructions, which your Majesty has been pleased to give to your Governor of that Island." They say, as to the fishery we think the purpose has been achieved. We have disposed of that matter, and we think successfully. We have devised a good plan for dealing with that.

Then they go on, on page 906, to say this : " The next obvious benefit acquired by the cessions made to your Majesty is the fur and skin trade of all the Indians in North America. The first of these articles before the present cession, was enjoyed by the French almost entirely ; the only part left in the hands of your Majesty's subjects, being that carried on by the exclusive company of Hudson's Bay, and a very inconsiderable quantity through the Province of New York. This trade was acquired in virtue of the possession which they had taken contrary to the stipulations of the Treaty of Utrecht of all the lakes in North America, communicating with the River St. Lawrence, though the circumjacent territory avowedly belonged to the six nations of Indians, acknowledged by the French to be your Majesty's subjects in that Treaty, and by virtue of the claim which they afterwards set up and were suffered to maintain for a long time of forcibly excluding your Majesty's subjects from any navigation in those Lakes." Those are the great Lakes to the west, Ontario, Huron and so on.

May I go now to line 14 of page 907. "Another advantage attending the late Treaty is the secure settling of the whole Coast of North America, as its produce may invite, or convenience for settlement may offer, from the mouth of the Mississippi to the boundaries of the Hudson's Bay settlements, with the whole variety of produce which is capable of being raised in that immense tract of sea coast, either by the industry of emigrants from Europe, or from the overflowing of your Majesties ancient Colonies. Previous to the late war, nothing is more certain than that many of your Majesty's ancient Colonies appeared to be overstocked with inhabitants, occasioned partly from an extremely increasing population in some of those Colonies, whose boundaries had become too narrow for their numbers, but chiefly by the monopoly of lands in the hands of land jobbers"—and so on. There is no suggestion there that this large area—which, of course, is included in that, because this is a tract of sea coast to the boundary of the Hudson's Bay Settlements, which according to my learned friend is Cape Chidley up in the north—has already been provided for by the previous Commission. It is a problem still, and is not a matter that has been dealt with and disposed of so far as that portion is concerned.

I think I may now pass to page 908, the last paragraph. “ Having thus stated the most obvious advantages resulting from the cession made to your Majesty by the late definitive Treaty, we submit to your Majesty, as our humble opinion, that they can only be secured and improved by an immediate establishment of regular Governments ”—that is the first suggestion of the establishment of regular Governments in North America to deal with the territory.

Lord WARRINGTON : But will you read on.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, my Lord. “ In all such places, where planting and settlement, as well as trade and commerce are the immediate objects.”

Lord WARRINGTON: That is where the new Governments are to be.

Mr. MACMILLAN : Yes, my Lord. “For in order to invite new settlers to risk their persons and property in taking up new lands, as well as to secure the old inhabitants in the enjoyment of those rights and privileges reserved to them by the Treaty, such regular Government appears, both from reason and experience, of absolute necessity. And it seems likewise necessary for the same reasons, as well as to secure your Majesty's sovereignty and the public tranquility, that a large military force should be kept up in each Government, till by the increase of inhabitants, each Colony shall be enabled to maintain their own Governments by their own internal force.” The next paragraph is of very great significance. “ But as no such regular civil Government is either necessary or indeed can be established, where no perpetual residence or planting is intended ; it will there be sufficient to provide for the free trade of all your Majesty's subjects under such regulations, and such administration of justice as is best suited to that end. Such we apprehend to be the case of Newfoundland, where a temporary fishery is the only object, and this we suppose has been the reason, which induced your Majesty to annex the Coast of Labrador to that Government. Such is the case of Senegal and the principle upon which we suppose your Majesty thought proper to put that river and country under the administration of the African Committee: And such we apprehend will be the case of that territory in North America which in your Majesty's justice and humanity as well as sound policy is proposed to be left, under your Majesty's immediate protection, to the Indian Tribes for their hunting grounds; where no settlement by planting is intended, immediately at least, to be attempted and, consequently where no particular form of civil government can be established. In such territory we should propose. that a free trade with the Indian Tribes should be granted to all your Majesty's Colonies and subjects under such regulations as shall be judged most proper for that end ” and so on. “ We shall defer at present entering into any particulars, as to the number of troops which it may be necessary to maintain for this purpose. The number and situation of the posts and forts, and the regulations proper to be established for a free trade from all your Majesty's Colonies into the Indian Country ; till by further information from your Majesty's Commander in Chief of America, and from your Majesty's Agents for Indian Affairs, we shall be enabled to make a more full and particular report upon so interesting and important a subject. And we apprehend that no such delay can be attended with very material inconvenience, since, if your Majesty shall be pleased to adopt the general proposition of leaving a large tract of country round the great Lakes as an Indian country, open to trade, but not to grants and settlements, the limits of such territory will be sufficiently ascertained by the bounds to be given to the Governors of Canada and Florida on the north and south, and the Mississippi on the West ; and by the strict directions to be given to your Majesty's several Governors of your ancient Colonies for preventing their making any new grants of lands beyond certain fixed limits to be laid in the instructions for that purpose.”

p. 372

Then on page 910, line 10 : “ Canada as possessed and claimed by the French consisted of an immense tract of country including as well the whole lands to the westward indefinitely which was the subject of their Indian trade, as all that country from the southern bank of the River St. Lawrence where they are carried on their encroachments.
